Recent press reports show that law abiding people have been demoted or removed from their posts because they have made comments that they believe that same sex marriage is wrong. They have been disciplined because their views are at odds with their organisation's view. I find this trend extremely worrying as the individuals appear to have been, in all other aspects, carrying out their job functions to the required standards. This is a form of censorship which should have no place in a free country. This could be seen as an attempt to limit freedom of speech and as it has happened before the Act is in place it shows a need for clarification in the Bill to prevent such attempts at censorship.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Will there be clarification that OSCR will not use as grounds for de-regulation the fact that an organisation holds the view that same sex marriage is incompatible with its constitution or objectives. Similarly, will there be clarification that local authorities and other public bodies will not discriminate against organisations which do not support same sex marriage eg refusing to hire premises or enter into contracts with such organisations.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Hugh McIntosh
12 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Each religion should have the right to marry or not marry whom they wish, but the law must not discriminate against a minority of its citizens on a matter that might make others uncomfortable but would deny the minority basic freedoms and rights. I don't care what name is given, marriage, civil partnership, whatever, but there should only be one legal term and it should be used in reference to both same and non same sex unions. All benefits must be the same.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Peoples' religious views (or non-religious beliefs) should not impinge on their ability to do their job. If they don't wish to conduct same sex marriage then they shouldn't take a job as someone who can grant a legal marriage (if it only a religious marriage they can grant then there is no problem imo). I mean, for example, I'm a doctor, it's in my job description that I treat all fairly and don't discriminate on grounds of sex, colour, gender, sexual orientation or religious belief. It doesn't matter what my religion says or what I believe, this is the job I signed up for, this is what I'm required to do and so that's what I'll do. If I didn't believe these things then I wouldn't (and shouldn't) be in this job.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

why should one religion being against something ban another (such as Buddhism) from following their religion and supporting and wanting to celebrate a same sex marriage. That takes away my religious freedom so another religion 'doesn't feel awkward'

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
i don't care what it's called but it must have the same rights and have the same name as non same sex unions

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

see previous comments

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

no one should be forces sued for not wishing to perform a religious marrage, but if they are refusing to provide a legal marrage to a minority based on their own self righousness then this should not be tolerated.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Gemma Caitlyn McKay
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM GEORGE MCKENNA

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

George McKenna
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This is an issue of justice and compassion. I am very happy to support LGBT people and, at the same time, help break the cycle of prejudice and discrimination against LGBT people.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I look forward to this introduction, in the hope that there will be simply be 'marriage', not 'same-sex' marriage and 'ordinary' or 'heterosexual' marriage but simply 'marriage'.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I am happy to welcome this. At such an important moment in the lives of two people, it is important to hold a ceremony which is entirely meaningful to the couple, which has been shaped according to their outlook and beliefs.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I am in support of this, either as a ceremony or an administrative exercise. It is important to allow the couple to make the choice which best suits them. To some couples, it may seem superfluous to hold a marriage ceremony having been in a civil partnership for some time. In such cases, an administrative means may be best, if they wish it at all. Others will welcome the opportunity of a marriage ceremony because they feel they have been denied marriage up til now.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

Ministers of the Church are permitted able to conduct marriage ceremonies anywhere because it is the person who is licenced, not the place or building. I think it right that civil celebrants should have that same opportunity. Why should couples choose

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

It is a useful option but, once same-sex marriage is law, I'm not sure how many people will take up this option.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

It would be ludicrous to require a couple, who wish to remain in partnership, to divorce in order for one of them to obtain a GRC.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Ideally, those employed by the state to perform civil ceremonies should be required to do so. That said, as I understand it, doctors in the NHS, who are opposed to abortion, are not obliged to carry out the procedure. I recognise the practical difficulty for the state on administering an opt-out system. An opt-out system maybe viewed as a transition arrangement: I am sure that as time goes on same-sex marriage will be viewed no differently from heterosexual marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is vitally important and the Act should not seek to curtail that.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I whole-heartedly endorse the suggestion that there be a GENDER-FREE form of ceremony. This is particularly important for couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. In my experience, it is also true that some heterosexual couples do not like the overtones of patriarchy which continue to be associated with marriage. 'Husband and wife' is an improvement on 'Man and wife' but, by virtue of order, the law still gives prominence to the male partner. We need to move away from this.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Those opposed to gay marriage don't have to opt in, don't have to allow their premises to be used and will not be forced to participate in any way. Participation should be an individual choice with an opt-out if necessary.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Jennifer McKiernan
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Alan McLay
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I see it as a matter of equality and religious freedom

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I am in a civil partnership and would like this to become a marriage

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I see it as a matter for each faith group to decide whether to offer same sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I would support the retention of civil partnership for any who wish it.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Derek McLean
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
I support equality, and equal marriage is crucial to the equal recognition of same-sex relationships.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
This seems fair.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
Being unable to have my faith recognised in my civil partnership was deeply upsetting.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People are free in this country to express their concerns about any aspect of government or the law. These proposals do not change that. As long as people don't step over the mark into incitement to hatred, freedom of speech is protected as it should be.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

As previous question. In addition, more weight appears to be given to this aspect of the bill than to its positive intentions. Care should be taken to redress this during any publicity around it. For instance, it is far from true that all Christians or churches oppose equal marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jackie McLean
27 June 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Same-sex marriage should not adversely affect anyone; it is a question of equal rights.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Lindsey McLeod
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM ALAN MCMAHON

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Alan McMahon
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition
Cd not oppose such a bill

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
It seems completely unnatural

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition
I feel thr has to be a view that religion and marriage are superior to "belief" and marriage

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I just cannot understand the need for same sex marriage

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

David McMurtrie
13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
As long as it is lawful

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Nik McNicol
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Kat Merican
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I support equality for all, if two people love each other, why should anyone tell them it's not right for them to get married. It doesn't happen with heterosexual couples, so it shouldn't happen at all.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It's a huge step forward to equality and one for the better, leading by example to hopefully show the rest of the world it's ok.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Same sex marriage is nothing to be worried about. It won't cause an apocalypse or destroy the sanctity of marriage, you won't see cats and dogs living together or any mass hysteria. It's just allowing two adults to express their love for one another amongst family and friends.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Everyone has the right to speak their mind, voice their opinion. It's only an issue when a person won't accept another's views and try to ram their own opinion down everyone's throat. There is also the point that some common manners would be a factor, in the end, we are all humans, we're all Homo Sapiens. No matter the colour, beliefs or orientation, we are all the same and we all have feelings.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Stephen Millar
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM MARSALI MILLER

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

They should also be able to take place in religious premises

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Marsali Miller
21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM STACI MILLER

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

A marriage is a contract between two people - that's for those two people to dictate, not their government.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Staci Miller
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

People should have the opportunity to decide rather than make this an automatic change.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Kerri Milner
21 August 2013
Dear Sirs,

Response to Equal Opportunities Committee's Call for Evidence on the “Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill”

In response to the public consultation I note my views as follows;

1) The above bill has been introduced without endorsement by the electorate. Therefore it can only reflect the opinions of a small minority. For practical reasons, many decisions are taken by the Government in that way, with the tacit approval of the electorate. However in such a crucial instance as this the electorate are clearly seen to have been disenfranchised.

2) No contract in law could have an enduring meaning if the Government of the day had the right to chop and change the definition of the English vocabulary at will.

3) Any re-definition of words by Government is breaching the human right of any two people to make a lawful contract between each other. The marriage contract is a case in point.

Gregory C Mitchell
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

However I believe that only the state should conduct all marriages. Religious bodies can then carry out their own ceremonies as they see fit. None of these organisations should have the power to legally marry people.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

As I said I don't think they should have any part to play in the registration of marriage or civil partnership

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
If both parties are in agreement

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

If they don't like same sex marriage then they shouldn't have one !!!!!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe in freedom of speech. I believe in equality and human rights for all. The state must uphold the principles of equal rights whilst allowing for differences and promoting debate

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Vivienne Mitchell
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

It is a basic human right for all persons to love and be loved. I believe that no person should be discriminated against by denying their human right to love and live together in a faithful, loving committed relationship on grounds of sexual orientation or gender identity. For persons with a strong religious belief, civil partnership does not provide an adequate expression of their depth of commitment to a beloved partner. They wish to make their vows 'before God' like any heterosexual couple.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I wish, oh how I wish that this recognition had been possible when I was a young lesbian woman deeply in love and committed to my then partner.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

Absolutely, on the same footing. Personally, I would never want to have my marriage conducted by someone who is opposed to same-sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

I believe in total equality but also that civil partnerships should remain available to all persons who do not wish to have a spiritual/religious dimension to their celebration.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Absolutely - religious places, in nature, hotels - it matters not.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This is terribly important as a basic human right if the two persons love each other.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think they need to be educated primarily. It's usually the older folk (and religious fanatics) who have such concerns.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group
a private individual

Shirley Mitchinson
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I believe that everyone has the right to marry the person they love and want to support and share the same civil rights as heterosexual couples. There should be no differentiation.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I feel that everyone who has a religious belief whatever that may be should be able to celebrate their commitment within the realms of that belief, However I believe that any religious organisation who feels that gay/same sex marriage is not supportable in their premises then they should have the freedom to opt out, it will never stop those believing in what they feel is important to them.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I am in support however I think those already in Civil Partnership should be given the choice to change their partnership to marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

No! There should be no concern about anyone wishing to recognise their love and commitment for another.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Human
Kylie Monsma
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

As a gay woman I am very much in support of it, I don't understand why we are not allowed to marry the person we love just because it happens to be a person of the same sex. Sexual attraction is not something you can switch off...trust me, I tried to for 24 years!!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

As above

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Everyone should be treated equally regardless of religion or sexual orientation!

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Just because its legal doesn't mean you have to do it!! Same sex marriage won't make you gay or detract from straight marriage, it just means all people can be married to the person they love and in time stop people having to be labelled and just be a married couple!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Maria Moody
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Everyone should be allowed to get married. Marriage is between two people it should not matter what gender or sexuality they are it is between those two people not the nation

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither
I don't understand the question

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither
Don't understand

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
It is A good Idea

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither
Don't Understand

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

It should be up to those people in the marriage

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Marriage these days is seen as a joke it is not taking serious like it used to be. I believe that if two people still believe in the sanctity of marriage it should not matter what there sexuality they are. Marriage is about love of two people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I would like to point out that I'am a roman catholic who also believes in same sex marriage I'am sick of hearing about people who say that being gay is not right and that the bible says it is a sin what i think people forget that the bible was written when it was still illegal to be gay times have changed since then and we have to start moving on. I'am a 72 year old woman and can't believe that in 2013 same-sex marriage is still illegal. I hate hearing about people who have been bullied because they are gay I think that legalising same-sex marriage it will show bullys that scottish parliament will not stand for it.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Agnes Mooney
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM CAROLINE MORELAND

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Caroline Moreland
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
I think it's a good step forward in making the people of Scotland equal.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I strongly support same sex marriage, to do otherwise would be discriminatory.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

John-Ross Morland
17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

Everyone should be treated exactly the same, no matter what sexual preference you are.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Very supportive. No one deserves to be treated differently due to their sexual identity.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

As someone who has had a civil partnership, I think it should be down to individuals who want to transfer their CP to a marriage to do so. I know some people who would rather have a new marriage ceremony. I support it, but not desperate for it to become a blanket change without choice.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither
As an atheist, I think if someone wants this, it should be allowed particularly if the religious body is willing. I don't think churches/belief group should be made to perform. If someone is of a particular religion that doesn't agree with same sex marriage/CPs, then I would heartily recommend that person to rethink their beliefs.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Civil servants who do not wish to perform civil marriages should not be allowed to perform any. People who are employed and paid from the public purse have no choice but to follow the government legislation. If they disagree, then they need to be re-employed in an alternative role. Gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender people are tax payers. Their treatment should not be special, but they should be treated exactly the same as everyone else. As for religious groups, I do not think any group or church should be made to perform a marriage if it goes against their beliefs. As mentioned earlier, I would question anyone who is affiliated with such a group who then goes onto complain that they won't perform a wedding ceremony.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

In a secular society, the church would not have the position it currently holds. This is my wish for the future of Scotland. Until then, any person of any religion making negative or disparaging comments about LGBT people should fully expect the same in return. They can't have the security of saying "it's in the bible" and then complaining when their hypocritical leader gets 'Bigot of the Year' award. Ideally, the arguments would be respectful, but that's a two-way street.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Hats off to the Equality Network for all their hard work and their respectful, reasoned debate when in the public domain, often against some fairly harsh comments.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ian Morrison
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
We need full equality for everyone, regardless of sexual orientation.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Fully agree, they should have exactly the same rights as heterosexual couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
In this day and age marriage is no longer a religious act, and people should have the flexibility to choose who should conduct their ceremony, and how.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Religious freedoms should be respected, but also free choice given.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
For existing civil partnerships, it would be very cruel not to allow them to change this easily and inexpensively if they wish to, after so many years of waiting for equality.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
No strong views, but flexibility is always welcome, and a more open market might help reduce the often high costs of a wedding ceremony!

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

Flexibility is good, and this may help some religious celebrants reconcile their views on equality with their religious doctrines.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Civil partnerships for mixed-sex couples would be welcome.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Katie Morrison
17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

For the past twenty years after I took over the reigns of the local Mothers’ and toddlers’ group, the hall generously supplied by the Reverend John Purves of Drumchapel St Andrew's Church, I, with the other mums and dads have watched with pride as our tods now attend various uni’s or colleges, Our community has strengthened especially during worrying times of illness, redundancy and bereavement. It's comforting to know that its' structure, especially its' beating heart is replicated through out the world. While distributing Scotland for Marriage leaflets to eg Clydebank residents and discussing your planned distribution of pro homosexual DVD’S to nursery and primary schools, the worry, anger and stress etched on their faces was painful to watch. Your plans plus the current economic climate has pushed society from breaking point to destabilisation of the country. We watched the rise and rise of UKIP AND NOW WE KNOW WHY. No one voted to redefine marriage at nursery level. No one outside of Mike Russel has seen the DVD'S. No one I know has been consulted on their compilation. Is it because you deem us in some way unworthy despite our 20 years of painful sacrifice spent in rearing of our own children and of those indirectly in the wider community?. It smacks of a cover up and a cruel form of a child abusive, educational experiment on the most vulnerable of our society and without any parental consent or consultation in the wider community. What's the big secret? come clean.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

In Clydebank, young, old, married or single, homosexual or hetero sexual, repeat and repeat and repeat to me; marriage is between a man and a woman! They are representative of the views of at least of the West of Scotland. We parents campaigned vigorously for an end to abuse of any sector of society. This introduction, I feel is a stab in the back! To appease same sex marriage proponents and then unpick and undermine this wonderful pillar of society and knowing full well its' natural progression will be fulfilled and polygamy, etc. will be demanded [already campaigned for in Brazil]: you blaze, what trail exactly?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

[ ], despite having gained a lucrative career in the oil business lived 2 years in discernment before relinquishing it all to complete 5 years seminary study and is now a happy and respected priest. [ ], a fluent Gaelic speaker and art's graduate, gave up guaranteed, fame and fortune on eg Gaelic radio, to train as a Church of Scotland minister. Despite both being very humble men we know they answered God's call at great personal expense to specifically uphold the pillars eg marriage in our society. Are you saying if I believed in same sex marriage I should train as a belief celebrant and conduct same sex unions? This proves how poor your research on marriage is and you propose to redefine marriage on the results of your negligent research. Years of ministerial training and study is vital in the upholding of the structures of our society.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

As you bend over backwards to respect the religious tenets of eg Sikhs and Muslims we the indigenous and Christian people demand we be treated at least with the same consideration if not more! Christian equality predated same sex marriage. Catholic, Anglican and Church of Scotland pioneers in Africa have thriving schools and universities for all, funded, still by us. Marriage is not a one shop stop. Christian marriage requires years of study by the celebrant and a year of preparation by the couple strictly adhered to by us and in African communities. Your arrangements nullifies God's tenets, thousands of years of ministerial study and the cooperation of engaged couples.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Redefining marriage at source especially at nursery level means 2 princes or 2 princesses, which I explained to The afore mentioned is now in Mike Russel's teaching aids for nurseries. How perfectly ridiculous! Since 2 homosexuals who love each other can marry and after campaigning, trailblazed, by afore mentioned Brazilians Mike Russel will have to amend his pro homosexual DVD'S for nursery children and include 3 princesses, or 4 princes or 1 prince and 3 princesses, or any combination you can think of, especially if they "love" each other. Not only do priests and ministers not know their job and you say anyone can perform a marriage ceremony, also parents don't understand marriage when they repeat it 's between a man and a woman and I as an experienced teacher don't know my job when I said redefining marriage means 2 princesses and 2 princes.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

... maintained to the retired chaplain during our meeting that Christian chaplains had well established rights to minister in tax funded hospitals, prisons, etc. Very soon Reverend Brian Ross was sacked from his post as chaplain to Strathclyde police on trumped up charges, The resulting deafening silence of Strathclyde Police was and still is depressing. I observed a Muslim cleric ministering very kindly to a distressed Muslim prisoner as Rev. Ross ministered hundreds of times. Was the Muslim prison chaplain sacked? Is he likely to be? If I or the parents refuse to read 2 princes who fall in love will you sack me or charge the parents with crimes against the state or am I being" perfectly ridiculous"? The Holocaust didn't happen in a vacuum, It is well recorded in every university and validated by the survivors, chaplains, bishops and clergy quickly followed rival politicians to the camps.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation
a faith/belief local group or congregation
another representative body
housewife, mother, active community member

Mrs Betty Morrison
Scotland for Marriage
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Murdo Morrison
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How can any Politian presume to change the meaning of a word which has been clear since time immemorial?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Same sex couple simply cannot have a marriage relationship nor procreate...which seems to us to be a basic function of marriage. They are not currently being denied companionship and their civil rights are already enshrined legally.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

I just do not know what this question means. Are religious celebrants not belief celebrants also

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

No strong view, but there has to be some setting out of boundaries to protect from the sham and absurd, both of which undermine the validity of the ceremony

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

This is near the heart of the concerns. Rights of parents in what children should be taught, the endangering of employment rights for those with conscientious concerns, the lack of opportunity for near relatives to enjoy the rights of civil partnerships, etc. There is a whole can of worms here.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Have we not got the whole situation out of perspective? The National Office of Statistics last November, I think, gave the total of gay, lesbian and transgender people as being 2% of the population. It has all gone over the top. As a profound believer in the equal value of every human being I fear for the future and what prejudices may be developed against LGBT people.

Peter & Marion Morrison
13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Long overdue.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Long overdue.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Marriage is marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Modern and flexible approach.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Modern and accommodating.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

My instinct is that they should grow up and they are swimming against the tide of history. In a generation many who most strongly hold the views of the past will no longer be alive and whilst I respect their views the majority of society should be allowed to modernise with or without them on board.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I better not - GCHQ might be reading this. Will an independent Scotland have an equivalent Spy network?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Hurry up and pass it into law please. :o)

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Craig Morton
23 August 2013
4. How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Overall, Mothers' Union in Scotland is not in favour of this Bill and the redefinition of marriage. However, we welcome the 'opt in' approach for religious and belief bodies, and their celebrants, in solemnising same sex marriages. We also welcome the provision for same sex couples to divorce on the grounds of adultery as the exclusion of this would have been a significant inequality. However, we note the inconsistency of equality in maintaining civil partnerships for same sex couples only. We also maintain concerns about the implications of this Bill on the freedom to express the view that marriage is inherently between a man and a woman and believe this will be eroded over time.

5. How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Overall, Mothers' Union in Scotland is not in favour of the introduction of same sex marriage. Whilst some members welcome the opportunity for all couples to be able make their relationship a legally recognised lifelong commitment, most of our members believe that marriage is inextricably between a man and a woman and that a different word should be used for same sex couples. Many members feel that civil partnerships offer same sex couples the same legal rights, protections and significance of commitment as marriage does for opposite sex couples and that therefore marriage does not need to be redefined.

6. How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Mothers' Union welcomes the opportunity for those of non-religious beliefs to have their marriage solemnised in a ceremony meaningful to them and hope that such ceremonies will support and encourage these couples. However, we are keen that there is clarity and guidance on the interpretation of 'belief' body to help ensure that bodies aren't formed or celebrants authorised for the purposes of solemnising 'sham' or forced marriages.

7. How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither in support or opposition

Mothers' Union is very supportive of the opt in approach and we believe it is essential to maintain this in order to allow religious and belief bodies to solemnise marriages in accordance with their own doctrine. The regulations need to be clear and directive enough to protect individual celebrants who do not wish to solemnise same sex marriages whilst... their governing body has chosen to do so; and we are interested in the effect this may have on recruitment requirements in years to come.

8. How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriage?

Neither in support or opposition

We would query why a same sex marriage converted from a civil partnership should be treated as marriage from the day the couple formed the civil partnership. There may be couples who wish for their civil partnership to be recognised and not deleted from history, and for their marriage to begin on the day of the wedding ceremony. We wonder if this suggests the Government is placing a higher importance on same sex marriage than on civil partnership.

9. How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Mothers’ Union members in Scotland are, on the whole, content with the proposals on allowing civil ceremonies to take place at a venue of the couple’s choosing. This is especially welcome in cases where a couple would otherwise have been put off getting married. Again, we hope guidance on appropriate venues will ensure that the solemnity of marriage is recognised and that 'sham' or forced marriages are prevented from taking place.

We feel there may also need to be clarification on whether those who own (non-religious) premises in which marriages are solemnised will be required to also permit same sex weddings, and whether failing to do so would be unlawful.

10. How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither in support or opposition

Mothers’ Union members in Scotland share a diverse range of feelings about the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships, with some viewing it as akin to a marriage blessing in a church of a marriage solemnised elsewhere; and others believing it to be inappropriate to register civil partnerships on religious premises. Again, we very much welcome the opt in approach and believe this should remain integral to the Bill.

11. How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither in support or opposition

We have no specific comment on those undergoing gender reassignments in connection to marriage. However, there needs to be greater clarity in the wording of the Bill in relation to gender reassignment and civil partnership to prevent any ambiguity - for example "The continuity of a protected Scottish civil partnership is not affected by the issuing of full gender recognition certificates to both civil partners" does not specifically state that a civil partnership WILL be affected if only one partner is gender reassigned. There also needs to be clear reference to the legal consequences of both parties failing to obtain gender recognition certificates in this instance.

12. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Mothers’ Union welcomes the clauses in the Bill that offer protection to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and expression. However, we do have concerns that in practice the freedom to exercise the belief and express the view that marriage is between man and woman only will be limited. As the public and political narrative on marriage changes, it is likely that individuals and organisations who hold to the current definition of marriage will face pressure and challenges to either withhold or change their views; and we are concerned that this may become coercive, for example through employment dismissal, withdrawal of organisational funding or legal action.

13. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Many Mothers’ Union members commented on the importance of being responsible with freedom of speech and highlight the importance for all to consider the impact of their words on others in relation to the issue of same sex marriage. Whilst we strongly oppose homophobic speech, we are concerned at what point it might be considered homophobic or even a hate crime to express the belief that marriage is inherently between a man and a woman. This has important implications for places of worship, the workplace, schools, the media and many other public spaces.

14. Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

A group of Mothers’ Union member in Scotland made the comment that they were "unhappy about any kind of compulsion for registrars, in situ, whose job description has effectively changed by introducing a new meaning for the word 'marriage'." Another member commented on the importance for faith groups to remember the tenets of their faith that encourage love and fair treatment of others.

Rachel Aston
Social Policy Officer
Mothers’ Union
4 September 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Absolutely no protections should be put in place. The religious institution should have absolutely no say on this matter.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Greig Muir
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Love is love no matter the sex of the people. We're all human

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Its our right!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Elizabeth Murray
14 August 2013
THE MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM MUSLIM COUNCIL OF SCOTLAND

The Muslim Council of Scotland (MCS) is grateful to the Equal Opportunities Committee for the opportunity to make further submissions in advance of giving oral evidence.

The Muslim Council of Scotland is a membership-based umbrella organisation, which accommodate and reflect the variety of social and cultural backgrounds and outlook of the Muslim community.

It is an independent body working to promote consultation, cooperation and coordination on Muslim affairs in Scotland. It is a non-sectarian and non-partisan body working for the common good.

At the outset it needs to be said that the Scottish Government (SG) ignored the main issue of introducing same sex marriage despite a large majority to the consultation in 2011 (which received 77,000 responses) two thirds of which were opposed to the introduction of same sex marriage, we are now asked to comment on the Bill itself despite the SG having already ignored the objection to the principle itself.

Principal Objections to the Bill

The Muslim Council of Scotland cannot support the proposal which enables “all couples” to have a civil marriage ceremony. This is not only the views of the Islamic community but reflects the views of the world religions, except for a very few.

Marriage is a sacred institution and not just a contract to live together and is defined as the union of a man and a woman to create the ideal environment for raising children.

The first priority in family life is the interest of the child which is best served where the child grows up in the traditional family with complementary care and support given by both a male father and a female mother. This family structure provides the best care and support which satisfies the needs of the children, which are also different for boys and girls as they grow towards adulthood. Kinship relations are also a major factor for the rest their life. These facts are based on history and supported by scientific evidence.

By forcing a new definition of marriage the Government is interfering in one of the fundamental practices of most faith communities and their way of life.

This Bill seeks to make serious changes to accommodate Same Sex Marriage. The words such as “Mother”, “Father”, “son” & “daughter”, which have been with us since history began can reveal kinship relations and are now at risk of being diluted to no specific relations if changed to accommodate SSM.

To this end we draw your attention to section 1 (2e) of the Bill. Further, we draw your attention to the table on page 27 of the Policy Memorandum attached to the Bill.
outlining how the relationships will be described. We strongly disapprove of these changes and we don’t believe that majority of the Scottish people will approve of this either. We don’t believe that the implications of these changes have been fully explained to or appreciated by the public at large.

On the wider scale, all literature and teachings on marriage will lose their original meaning as intended by the authors, this action would amount to a rewriting of history and cultures.

The assertion that “religious marriage” will be unaffected by the proposal is totally untrue, since fundamentally changing the state’s understanding of marriage means that the nature of marriage solemnised in places of worship would also be changed.

We believe that the Civil Partnership Act 2004 in the UK already gives same sex couples most of the rights and responsibilities of a civil marriage. Taking this further as outlined in the Bill will put an entirely and exceptionally bizarre dimension to the society at large to the detriment of all who oppose it and shattering their civil rights and freedom of expression and religious conscience. We don’t believe much of the assurances given by the Scottish Government, with the best of intention, will be either practical or sustainable.

Equality Issues

Redefining marriage as in the proposed Bill will have serious equality issues for people who oppose same sex marriage. We are seriously concerned that this will inadvertently lead to increasing negative equality implications which impacts throughout various sectors of society, such as employment, health and education. All of this will be highly detrimental to the religious practices of all individuals and not only faith organisations.

Also, we conclude that the Religious organisations not willing to ‘marry’ same sex couples may well lose their charitable status or be excluded from hiring or using public facilities. We are aware of the Scottish Government guidelines and assurances, but we do not believe much of this will be sustainable as it will be out with the jurisdiction of the Scottish Government.

The SG Equality Impact Assessment (EIA) annexed to the Bill, is very biased in favour of the perceived positive implications of the Bill. Little or no mention is made in the EIA of the negative implications of this legislation for people who hold to a religious belief or conscientious objection. Rather it limits the potential negative implications of the legislation solely to the matter of religious celebrants.

Freedom of Expression:

Many concerns were expressed by respondents to the 2011 consultation that freedom of speech could be inhibited if the ‘same-sex marriage’ is introduced.

The SG should state in the Bill that SSM is a controversial issue and amend the Bill to clarify that public discussion or criticism of marriage, as regards the sex of the parties to marriage, would not of itself amount to an offence of stirring up hatred because of sexual orientation or any other discrimination category.

There are many case examples which happened or happening already, some are still in courts, such as: a robust debate about ‘same-sex marriage’ in a public place could lead to a charge of Breach of the Peace, within the context of street preaching.

Impact on Employment

The introduction of this Bill will force many professionals to adopt the new definition in their teaching and work, which may be against their conscience and for those who do not comply, there is a real risk that they may be sacked from their employment.

There is no doubt that this will present limitations, restrictions and controversy on the freedom of religious belief and practice.

Some of the areas of discrimination, to list a few are as follows, registrars; teachers; student advisors; health workers; chaplains and also employers such as charities and businesses.

Further we would add that this would have serious impact and be detrimental to Imams, Mosques Trustees/ Executive Committee member(s), Charity Accreditations, application for funding and use of public places etc. It needs to be stressed that Islam is not the only faith which will be severely affected by this Bill, but majority of the religious organisations here in the UK and worldwide will be in a similar position.

Civil registrars, social workers, teachers etc who oppose same sex marriage may well lose their jobs. At the very least, new entrants to these professions will find it difficult to get a job if they continue to oppose same sex ‘marriage’ or have been vocal about their beliefs in the past.

Given the situation explained above, we are in no doubt that in the long term this will lead to an employment system which will exclude people who oppose SSM from both employment and from contribution to public life.

We would further state that given the religious background of the ethnic minority communities, the fact that unemployment within some groups of ethnic minorities’ communities being as high as three to four times higher to main population; it will give disproportionate impact to different groups of people thus widening the unemployment ratio even further.

Uncertainty of Assurances

The Scottish Government has given various assurances that the civil liberties of those who have a conscientious objection to ‘marry’ same sex couple will be respected. We are of the strong view that whilst the Scottish Government may have the best of intention to address equality; however, it is not realistic or sustainable. The SG will not be able to give safeguards to the majority who oppose SSM as this reality can be seen from those countries that have legalised SSM.
We draw you attention to some of our arguments stated below:

Article 9 (1) of the European Convention on Human Rights, ECHR:
“Everyone has the freedom of thought, conscience and religion: the right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public and private, to manifest his religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.”

Article 9 (2) “Freedom to one’s religion or belief shall be subject to such limitation as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interest of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or the protection of the rights and the freedom of the others.”

Whilst it is understood what Article 9(1) is stating, applying it in context with the controversial issue of ‘Same Sex Marriage’ as proposed in the Bill is going too far and opens up floodgates to the detriment of large majority of Scottish people. The SG is seriously encroaching and negatively impacting the rights of the majority who oppose this change on grounds of conscience or faith.

Further, the interpretation which the SG will take of Article 9(2) is at present a total mystery.

The Lord Advocate has only issued brief guidelines very recently for the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Office. We are in no doubt from these guidelines that it will be a test for the police and the prosecutors resulting in many unfair prosecutions. We would have like to have seen specific and unambiguous protections written on the face of the bill which will safeguard people who support traditional marriage.

It is our understanding that if the member state chooses to make provision in its domestic law for same sex marriage, then as far as the ECHR is concerned same sex marriage is protected by the convention in the same way that opposite sex marriage is protected: the right to marry contained in Article 12 is applicable to both categories so far as the state is concerned.

Whilst we may be prepared to accept that the present Scottish Government will do whatever is necessary to safeguard the interests of the majority of Scottish people, we must not forget that much of this will be out with the remit of the Scottish Government and it will not be sustainable to uphold the assurances given. For example, the Equality Act 2010 is with the UK Government, articles 8,9, 10,12 &14 fall under the European Human Rights Convention ECHR. To this end we further draw your attention to; Lidele v United Kingdom and the written evidence by the faculty of advocates.

As we explained in our response to the Scottish Government, and it forms part of our submission to the Equality Committee, and is attached, the European Court of Human Rights has already ruled in some cases that freedom of expression and manifestation of religion should be of secondary consideration to non-discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation where a clash of rights has occurred.
Moral Fabric Undermined

In summary we would reiterate that the Scottish Government is under no obligation to introduce this controversial Bill and that there is adequate provision already within the legislation for same sex couples.

While the Government brings about equality for same sex couples to marry, it will undoubtedly have a severe negative impact on traditional marriage and the very rights of the individuals being compromised or taken away to their detriment. The Government has a clear obligation to uphold, sustain and protect the moral values of the people. Bringing this Bill with all the inconsistencies in it, will have a serious impact on the moral fabric of the Scottish society and the Scottish Government should be very cautious before interfering with this right.

Introduction of this Bill will be detrimental to the society and many of the safeguards and assurances given by the Scottish Government are unrealistic and we fear that they will not be sustainable.

We therefore oppose this Bill as a matter of principle and for the reasons explained and others included in our response to the SG consultations.

Salah Beltagui
Muslim Council of Scotland
2 September 2013
Appendix A

Faculty of Advocates: Written Evidence from Faculty of Advocates in relation to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

These provisions seek to safeguard Article 9 rights (the rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion). Annex A to the Scottish Government’s Consultation on the draft Bill contained the following statement: “The Scottish Government has made it clear throughout that no religious body and no religious celebrant should be required to solemnize same sex marriage or to register a civil partnership”.

The Faculty is not convinced that this policy intention has been fully implemented in the Bill so far as individual religious celebrants are concerned. The Bill does not contain provisions equivalent to those which appear in section 2 of the Marriage (Same-Sex Couples) Act 2013 (which applies in England and Wales). Section 2 of the 2013 Act provides that a person may not be compelled by any means to undertake certain specified activities, including conducting a relevant same-sex marriage.

Religious celebrants who belong to a religious or belief body which is in favour of same-sex marriage, but who have a conscientious objection to same-sex marriage, might be open to pressure from their religious or belief body to solemnise such marriages. In effect, the pressures that have existed for civil registrars might come to be applied to such celebrants: in Ladele v United Kingdom (2013) 57 E.H.R.R. 8, the European Court of Human Rights held that the dismissal of a civil registrar who declined to solemnise civil partnerships was not incompatible with her Convention rights. Having regard to section 149 of the Equality Act 2010, there may be particular implications for persons employed in the public sphere, such as hospital, prison and army chaplains.

The Faculty notes the joint statement by the Scottish Government and UK Government on amendments to the UK Equality Act 2010. Paragraph 18 of the joint statement suggests that the proposed amendment to that Act will follow section 2(6) of the Marriage (Same-Sex Couples) Act 2013, to provide that a celebrant does not contravene section 29 of the 2010 Act by refusing to solemnise a same-sex marriage or register a civil partnership. It does not, however, appear to be envisaged that the legislation will replicate the other provisions of section 2 of the 2013 Act.

The Bill seeks to offer reassurance by re-iterating, in clause 14, the rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion and to freedom of expression found in articles 9 and 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights. While the express acknowledgement of these rights may be useful, it is doubtful whether express reference to them adds anything of substance since these freedoms are already built into the law by the Human Rights Act 1998 and the Parliament does not have the power to pass a measure that conflicts with them (Scotland Act 1998, section 29).
4. How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In-opposition

The Scottish Government SG intends to proceed with the introduction of very controversial issue of same sex marriage SSM despite of the results of the consultation in 2011 with over 77,000 responses two thirds majority opposing SSM.

By forcing a new definition of marriage the Government is interfering in one of the fundamental practices of most faith communities and their way of life.

The scope of the present consultation is very limited because it seeks views on the detail of the legislation after having already ignored the objection to the principle itself.

5. How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In-opposition

From the Islamic perspective we totally oppose same sex marriage in any shape or form. This view is very clear and straight forward within the teaching of Islam, as is the case with the very large majority of the world religions.

This belief does not and should not be considered a homophobic behaviour.

Marriage is a sacred institution and not just a contract to live together and is defined as "the union of a man and a woman with the interest of the children as the first priority and at the heart of it.

As a matter of principle, Governments do not have the right to re-define marriage and/ or subject the people to such a controversial environment with severe implication for the large majority of the Scottish People.

6. How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

We are not supportive of the proposal to establish ‘belief’ ceremonies because we do not wish to encourage secular marriages, which will cause confusion in defining what is Religious Faith and Secular Belief. There is a clear difference between marriage based on faith with rules that are divine and well tried for centuries and belief contracts which could be introduced by followers at any time with no experience of application.
7. How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

We welcome the opt-in registration arrangement in the Bill. This goes well with the fact that the marriage is the act of worship as acknowledged by the SG in the consultation document.

While the UK Government will amend the Equality Act 2010 to give individual celebrants the right to refuse to solemnize same sex marriage even if their organizations opt in for solemnizing same sex marriages, there is a strong possibility that a claim of a breach of human rights might be taken against a religious organization by an individual celebrant.

This matter may be ultimately determined by the European Court of Human Rights. There is no guarantee that, at some future date, the court will not rule that religion and belief celebrants must either solemnise all ‘marriages’ or cease to marry people altogether.

Although the European Court of Human Rights has made it clear that it won’t impose same-sex ‘marriage’ on nation states, if a country makes it available in some contexts it must be made available on an equal basis. Discrimination in the provision of same-sex ‘marriage’ could be ruled to contravene the Convention.

In summary, while the Government brings about equality for same sex marriage and the definition and meaning this has, it will also undoubtedly have a severe negative impact on traditional marriage and the very rights of the individuals being compromised or taken away to their detriment.

8. How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriage?

In Opposition

As stated before same-sex relations/unions are not accepted in our faith under any name.

This is one of many features of inconsistency in this Bill, This will create a two tier system giving same sex couples more options to register their relationships than is available to heterosexual couples.

9. How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In Opposition

SG has not specifically clarified what they mean by ‘religious premises’. Our concern is that many Islamic mosques/ Islamic centres have halls or spaces either within or linked to the premises which they may hire out.
We agree civil marriages, especially same-sex ‘marriages’, should not be performed on religious premises as, this may force a religious organisations to let their halls for a same-sex civil ‘marriage’ ceremony against their belief.

We require that in any case clear legislation should be made to guarantee the protection of religious premises from being used for SSM and not be subject to litigation based on discrimination of supply of services.

10. How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In Opposition

As stated before same-sex relations/unions are not accepted in our faith under any name.

11. How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In Opposition

No Comment

12. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The SG Equality Impact Assessment (EIA) annexed to the Bill, is very biased in favour of the perceived positive implications of the Bill.

Little or no mention is made in the EIA of the negative implications of this legislation for people who hold to a religious belief or who have a conscientious objection. Rather it limits the potential negative implications of the legislation solely to the matter of religious celebrants.

It does not consider the implications of this legislation for many other faith organizations and others working across the breadth of the public sector. They may find themselves being placed in the position of having to choose between following their religion/conscience or obeying their employer. In the event they chose their religion/ conscience they could be disciplined or even lose their job.

We made it clear that in Islam we cannot support this change in any shape or form, however we outline the following areas in the event the SG does not listen to the Scottish people and the various element of the legislations need to be addressed:

- Civil registrars are likely to be required by their employers to ‘marry’ same-sex couples.
- Teachers may well be asked to teach pupils about ‘same-sex marriage’.
- Local authorities, owing to the public sector equality duty contained in the Equality Act 2010, may well decide that they cannot partner with, let halls to or provide grants to religious organisations which refuse to ‘marry’ same-sex couples.
• Some religious organisations may lose their Charity Status if they refuse to allow same sex marriages in their premise.
• Chaplains working in the public sector could lose their jobs if they preach traditional marriage.
• Those with a religious/ conscientious objection to same-sex ‘marriage’ might find it difficult to foster or adopt children.
• We believe, like other religious organisations, that traditional family structure is the best environment to bring up children.

The introduction of this Bill will force many professionals to adopt the new definition in their teaching and work, which may be against their conscience and for those who do not comply, there is a real risk that they may be sacked from their employment.

Let us not be in any doubt that this will present limitations, restrictions and controversy on the freedom of religion.

Some of the areas of discrimination to list a few are as follows: those employed as registrars; teachers; student advisors; health workers; chaplains and also employers such as charities and businesses.

Further we would add that this would have serious impact and be detrimental to Imams, Mosques Trustees/ Executive Committee member(s), Charity Accreditations, application for funding and use of public places etc. It needs to be stressed that Islam is not the only faith which will be severely affected by this Bill, but majority of the religious organisations here in the UK and worldwide will be in a similar position.

Civil registrars, social workers, teachers etc who oppose same sex marriage may well lose their jobs. At the very least, new entrants to these professions will find it difficult to get a job if they continue to oppose same sex ‘marriage’ or have been vocal about their beliefs in the past.

Given the situation explained above, we are in no doubt that in the long term this will lead to an employment system which will exclude people who oppose SSM from both employment and from contribution to public life.

We would further state that given the religious background of the ethnic minority communities, the fact that employment within some groups of ethnic minorities’ communities being as high as three to four times higher to its white counterpart; it will give disproportionate impact to different groups of people thus widening the unemployment ratio even further.

We believe that the Civil Partnership Act 2004 in the UK already gives same sex couples most of the rights and responsibilities of a civil marriage. Taking this further as outlined in the Bill will put an entirely and exceptionally bizarre dimension to the society at large to the detriment of all who oppose it and shattering their civil rights and freedom of expression and religious conscience. We don’t believe much of the assurances given by the Scottish Government, with the best of intention, will be either practical or sustainable.
13. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Many concerns were expressed by respondents to the 2011 consultation that freedom of speech could be inhibited if the ‘same-sex marriage’ is introduced.

Government should state in the Bill that SSM is a controversial issue and amend to clarify that public discussion or criticism of marriage, as regards the sex of the parties to marriage, would not of itself amount to an offence of stirring up hatred because of sexual orientation or any other discrimination category.

There are many case examples which happened or happening already, some are still in courts, such as:

- A robust debate about ‘same-sex marriage’ in a public place could lead to a charge of Breach of the Peace, within the context of street preaching.
- Distributing religious leaflets or preaching outside a football stadium could be treated as an offence under the Offensive Behaviour at Football and Threatening Communications (Scotland) Act 2012.
- Offensive behaviour under this Act includes behaviour seen to be ‘homophobic’ etc.
- Any other public sector employee who speaks out against ‘same-sex marriage’ may be disciplined at work.
- A hospital Chaplain who preaches in his place of worship against same sex marriage can be disciplined by his employer.
- Similarly a University Chaplain, Prison Chaplain etc

Prosecutorial Guidelines by the Lord Advocate are not subject to consultation and can be easily amended by a future Lord Advocate. For these reasons we would like to have seen these guidelines as part of the Bill since we are already on a fine line to what may constitute criminal offences.

Whilst this Bill may give freedom of marriage to same sex couples, it could be detrimental to traditional marriage and religious communities in general. This could have a detrimental impact on positions that are/ or have been held by individuals due to it being a criminal offence under these changes.

It will also affect their future status in many aspects including employment.

In the circumstances the SG claims that guidance relating to NHS chaplains, current employment law and the European Convention of Human Rights are sufficient to protect freedom of expression, is not sustainable.

The European Court of Human Rights has already ruled in some cases that freedom of expression and manifestation of religion should be of secondary consideration to non-discrimination on grounds of sexual orientation where a clash of rights has occurred. There are also many cases to this effect in USA and Canada.
14. Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

At the outset it needs to be said that the Scottish Government (SG) ignored the main issue of introducing same sex marriage despite a large majority to the consultation in 2011 (which received 77,000 responses) two thirds of which were opposed to the introduction of same sex marriage, we are now asked to comment on the Bill itself despite the SG having already ignored the objection to the principle itself.

The Muslim Council of Scotland cannot support the proposal which enables “all couples” to have a civil marriage ceremony. This is not only the views of the Islamic community but reflects the views of the world religions, excluding a very few.

This Bill seeks to makes serious changes to accommodate Same Sex Marriage. The words such as “Mother”, “Father”, “son” & “daughter”, which have been with us since history began can reveal kinship relations and are now at risk of being diluted to no specific relations if changed to accommodate Same Sex Marriage. To this end we draw your attention to section 1 (2e) of the Bill. Further, we draw your attention to the table on page 27 of the Policy Memorandum attached to the Bill outlining how the relationships will be described. We strongly disapprove of these changes and we don’t believe that majority of the Scottish people will approve of this either. We don’t believe that the implications of these changes have been fully explained to or appreciated by the public at large.

On the wider scale, all literature and teachings on marriage will lose their original meaning as intended by the authors, this action would amount to a rewriting of history and cultures.

The assertion that “religious marriage” will be unaffected by the proposal is totally untrue, since fundamentally changing the state’s understanding of marriage means that the nature of marriage solemnised in places of worship would also be changed.

The Scottish Government has given various assurances that the civil liberties of those who have a conscientious objection to ‘marry’ same sex couple will be respected. We are of the strong view that whilst the Scottish Government may have the best of intention to address equality; however, it is not realistic or sustainable. We draw you attention to some of our arguments stated below:

Article 9 (1) of the European Convention on Human Rights, ECHR:

“Everyone has the freedom of thought, conscience and religion: the right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public and private, to manifest his religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.”

Article 9 (2) “Freedom to one’s religion or belief shall be subject to such limitation as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interest of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or the protection of the rights and the freedom of the others.”
Whilst it is understood what Article 9(1) is stating, applying it in context with the controversial issue of ‘Same Sex Marriage’ as proposed in the Bill is going too far and opens up floodgates to the detriment of large majority of Scottish people. The Scottish Government would be going too far in pleasing and protecting the rights of a minority whilst seriously encroaching and negatively impacting the rights of the majority. Further, The interpretation which the Scottish Government will take of Article 9(2) is at present a total mystery as the Lord Advocate guidelines are not available and none will be made available until after the Bill has been passed.

It is our understanding that if the member state chooses to make provision in its domestic law for same sex marriage, then as far as the ECHR is concerned same sex marriage is protected by the convention in the same way that opposite sex marriage is protected: the right to marry contained in Article 12 is applicable to both categories so far as the state is concerned.

Whilst we may be prepared to accept that the present Scottish Government will do whatever is necessary to safeguard the interests of the majority of Scottish people, we must not forget that much of this will be outwith the remit of the Scottish Government and it will not be sustainable to uphold the assurances given. For example, the Equality Act 2010 is with the UK Government, articles 8,9,12 &14 fall under the European Human Rights Convention ECHR.

The European Court of Human Rights has already ruled in some cases that freedom of expression and manifestation of religion should be of secondary consideration to non-discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation where a clash of rights has occurred.

Also, we conclude that the Religious organisations not willing to ‘marry’ same sex couples may well lose their charitable status or be excluded from hiring or using public facilities. We are aware of the Scottish Government guidelines and assurances, but we do not believe much of this will be sustainable as it will be outwith the jurisdiction of the Scottish Government.

In summary we would reiterate that the Scottish Government is under no obligation to introduce this controversial Bill and that there is adequate provision already within the legislation for same sex couples.

While the Government brings about equality for same sex couples to marry, it will undoubtedly have a severe negative impact on traditional marriage and the very rights of the individuals being compromised or taken away to their detriment. The Government has a clear obligation to uphold, sustain and protect the moral values of the people. Bringing this Bill will have a serious impact on the moral fabric of the Scottish society and the Scottish Government should be very cautious before interfering with this right.

Introduction of this Bill will be detrimental to the society and many of the safeguards assurances given by the Scottish Government are unrealistic and we fear that they will not be sustainable.
We therefore oppose this Bill as a matter of principle and for the reasons explained above. The SG will not be able to give safeguards to the majority who oppose SSM as this reality can be seen from those countries that have legalised SSM.

Muslim Council of Scotland
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM NATIONAL TRANS POLICE ASSOCIATION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
This to me is the most vitally important component of the bill. The present law requires perfectly good relationships to be broken up even temporarily so that one partner can gain their gender recognition certificate. This is surely unacceptable in this day and age, a cruel and unnatural punishment simply for daring to want to reflect your true gender. I transitioned some 25 years ago but still remain married to my partner, I would like a gender recognition certificate, however I have no intention of divorcing my partner simply to get a piece of paper. If a relationship works - why break it? Surely what the world needs is more love and not more strife?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group

Carol Mapley
National Trans Police Association
30 June 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The National Union of Journalists has long supported Equality and same sex marriage is absolutely essential if we are to end discrimination against LGBT people, while providing safeguards for religious institutions who do not wish to conduct such civil ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

It is absolutely essential that 'belief celebrants' are allowed to conduct such ceremonies, to ensure those such as the Humanist Society can celebrate same sex marriages.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

If there was a blanket ban, then that would be inequitable and against the wishes of many religious organisations who wish to be able to solemnise both opposite and same sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

It would be inequitable for only same sex couples to be allowed access to civil partnerships, while opposite sex couples are not. If same sex marriage legislation is enacted, then there has to be a review of civil partnership legislation, to examine whether opposite sex couples are being treated in an inequitable manner.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

Civil marriages - whether same sex or not - should be conducted in any reasonable place, as agreed between the couple and the registrar. There should not be a blanket ban on same sex marriages taking place in religious premises, if the organisation involved is in support of solemnising same sex marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

If institutions agree, then it would be inequitable to oppose this through legislation.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There is absolutely no evidence that the introduction of same sex marriage will harm so-called 'traditional' marriage, just as Civil Partnerships did not lead to the destruction of Scottish society. It is incumbent on the state to legislate for the equality of all. Marriage is a civil contract which binds, through law, couples together - allowing marriage for one section of society and not the other, is patently unjust. Scotland has the opportunity to prove once and for all that we are a fair nation, which values above all else, equality and fraternity and the chance for loving couples to have their union fully recognised by the state.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We already have legislation in place to deal with any comments considered to be inciteful. People should express - and respect - the opinions of everyone in this debate.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Trade Union (NUJ Scotland, Chair)

James Doherty
Chair
National Union of Journalists
8 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

As has been noted elsewhere, it seems that the "spousal veto" clause is bizarre. If the spouse has been happy to live with their partner for two years while they were living in their destination gender, then why is it an issue? It's only practical use would be as a lever for revenge should the relationship sour in the intervening period.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I find the terms chosen to be confusing to the lay reader. The definition of "belief celebrant" is not at all obvious. However, it seems just plain silly to differentiate legally based on religion.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

In truth, I am slightly opposed to the idea that treating people differently due to their sexual orientation is acceptable in a role that is sanctioned by law. The law should be blind to sexual orientation, even if some institutions are not.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I would prefer this to apply to all marriages.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Assuming both parties are in agreement. It should be legitimate grounds for divorce.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't understand why anyone else has a right to veto the marriages of third parties. Therefore, is someone has a concern about same sex marriage, then they simply shouldn't have one.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech must accept a degree of responsibility when the discussion revolves around specific individuals.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

John McCallum
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sandy Nelson
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Hilary Newth
15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM NHS GRAMPIAN

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
This is a positive step forward to promote equality within Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
This is a positive step forward to promote equality within Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
This is a logical step.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
This is a positive step to promote equality.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

This is a positive step.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The Marriage and Civil Partnerships (Scotland) Bill has been designed to respect the views of those who may have concerns about same sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The Marriage and Civil Partnerships (Scotland) Bill will progress equality within Scotland, while respecting free speech, as required by the Human Rights Act 1998.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No.

Are you responding as...

a public body

Nigel Firth
NHS Grampian
26 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

NHSGGC supports and welcomes the bill as a step forward in terms of equality in Scotland and believe it strikes the right balance between the rights of different equality groups.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

We support the rights of LGBT people to have equal rights and believe that the bill, by introducing marriage for same-sex couples, will remove an existing discrimination.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

This seems to reflect the current situation for different sex-couples so should be the same for same-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

We support the opt-in procedures as a way to balance the rights of different equality groups.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

We support the option of being available to change from a civil partnership to a marriage without a going through a marriage ceremony and would support an amendment to the bill which allowed marriages not registered in Scotland to be included (as they are for different-sex marriage).

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

This seems to reflect the current situation for different sex-couples so should be the same for same-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

This option should be available.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

We are concerned with the inclusion of “spousal consent” in the bill for transgender people as it effectively enables the spouse of a trans person to prevent their partner from obtaining gender recognition, unless the trans person is able to obtain a divorce which, if the non-trans spouse is unwilling to cooperate, could take many years. Gender recognition should not be linked to spousal consent in this way.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We support the opt-in and opt out provisions in the bill as a way of striking the balance between the rights of different equality groups, however we would not support opt-out for civil registrars who are delivering a public service.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We believe this is clarified adequately in the bill.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a public body

Jackie Erdman
NHS Greater Glasgow and Clyde
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

We would generally support the Bill on the grounds of addressing equality. Equal marriage can be seen to contribute to addressing the discrimination experienced by many Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender (LGB and T) people. Our primary concern is for peoples health and it is well documented that discrimination has an adverse effect on peoples' health and wellbeing. The following summary was produced by the Royal College of Psychiatrists in response to the Home Office’s consultation on equal marriage in 2012 and reflects well the NHS Highland point of view. “Many health associations around the world support marriage equality on health grounds. These include the American Medical Association, Indiana State Medical Association, American Psychiatric Association, American Academy of Pediatrics, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, American Psychological Association, Australian Medical Association, and the Australian Psychological Society. The ‘minority stress’ experienced by LGB people is an important factor in their health disadvantage. Stigma and discrimination against sexual minorities has been well studied (Ritter, Matthew-Simmons and Carragher, 2012). It is likely that social hostility, stigma and discrimination is at least part of the reason for the higher rates of psychological morbidity observed (King, 2008 and Chakraborty, 2011) as well as elevated rates of suicide (Mathy et al. 2009). Discriminatory policies specifically with regard to marriage equality have been shown to have negative health effects (Hatzenbuehler, 2010). Although the introduction of civil partnerships/unions in many western countries has gone a long way to reduce inequality (King & Bartlett 2006), marriage equality could reduce the discrimination and stress suffered by LGB persons, and lead to greater social inclusion and improved health. Opponents of marriage equality claim it will harm the institution by fundamentally redefining it; yet they produce no evidence in support of such claims. Opposition appears to be based mainly on the grounds of religious belief and practice, and such opposition should have little place in how secular marriage is regarded and defined. Furthermore, there are no health arguments in favour of maintenance of the status quo (denial of marriage equality). The Royal College of Psychiatrists supports the UK Home Office’s Equal Civil Marriage proposals (http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/publications/about-us/consultations/equal-civil-marriage/).

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

We believe addressing inequality between mixed sex and same sex couples can only be positive and same sex marriage seems an appropriate way to achieve this. It seems unnecessary, however to insist that all mixed sex marriage ceremonies must use gender specific language, whereas it would seem more in the spirit of equality and choice to allow individual couples (whether mixed sex or same sex) to decide for themselves. It also seems unfair to not allow couples who have had civil partnership ceremonies abroad to access marriage in Scotland. For many it may be unfeasible to return to the country where the civil partnership took place to have it dissolved.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

This would seem appropriate, as belief and religion are covered similarly under the Equality Act 2010.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

No specific comments on this question.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

The same institutions, whether they are marriage or civil partnership, should be open to both mixed sex and same sex couple in order to promote equality.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

No specific comments on this question, although it would seem appropriate to introduce more choice.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

It would seem appropriate as a means of addressing some of the unequal elements of civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Obtaining a Gender Recognition Certificate can be a very stressful time and anything which could assist in alleviating that pressure would be welcomed. Several transgender individuals in Highland have commented that they very much resented having to divorce their partner when obtaining their certificate. For several people, their partner had been an enormous source of support and it did not feel appropriate to either party that they should be divorcing. It added unnecessary stress to what can be a very difficult situation for the individuals involved. We would also agree with the Equality Network, that as the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. In our view, gender recognition should be available with or without the spouse’s consent, because it is a matter personal to the trans person. It is the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition that should require the consent of both spouses, since that is where both spouses have a direct interest. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. That should be added. We would also like to see the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland that is 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

While freedom of religion and belief should be respected, this should not be at the expense of other peoples’ rights to equality.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

No.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No

Are you responding as...

a public body

Caroline Tolan
NHS Highland
7 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

Civil partnership should be an available option. People may object to marriage for any number of reasons, but should still have the ability for their partnerships to be legal and recognised.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

Provided the ceremony is not disruptive or dangerous, I cannot see any reason why people shouldn't be able to conduct ceremonies wherever they like. Even if it is, say, on a public towpath, on a bicycle build for two, with all the bridesmaids on tricycles

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

A person's involvement with religion is personal. If it is important to the people involved that their partnership involve some religious element, that's fine, so long as the partnership, as far as the law is concerned, is just that, a partnership. Religi
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Absolutely in support. The support of a partner can be vitally important to people in gender transition. To have the risk of their legal partnership nullified by their transitioning is not only to compound the stress of an already not very easy process, i

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

By 'concerns', I assume you mean objections, for whatever reason? Religious concerns are most often cited in anti-same-sex marriage debates. These should be no concern of the law as regards partnerships, or the law may as well be concerned with shellfish and pork, mixed fibres, approaching the altar with a defect in one's eye or foot, &c. Another concern is that the recognition of same-sex partnerships makes the childrens gay. Come on. That's silly. Another concern is that it is unnatural. It isn't. Another concern is that it degrades the validity of 'traditional' marriage. Funny, I've been in a heterosexual marriage for over a decade, and I've never noticed the existence of homosexual partnerships degrading in any way-- apart from homosexual people not having the same legal recognition that I have. That is degrading. My concern about people who have concerns about same sex marriage is the often violent intolerance towards LGBT people shown by people with concerns. People are attacked, physically and psychologically bullied without mercy, told from a young and impressionable age that deities hate them and will punish them eternally, marginalised, penalised, denied opportunities, even in this progressive and civilised society. That needs to stop. I don't care what a person's objections are to same sex partnerships: it is perfectly possible for people not to marry other people of the same sex if they object to it, or to belong to a religious organisation that forbids it, or to be privately disgusted by it, if such is their inclination. Protections for people with concerns should involve education that emphasises difference, humanises people of different backgrounds and orientations, encourages independent thought, and enables them to get over themselves a little. It's always an option to put oneself in a bubble.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Cleodhna Nightshade
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I can see no reason why decent people who want to have the legal advantages of a marriage contract, should be denied this possibility. Religious objections by others are really not relevant, because such beliefs are an individual choice and cannot ethically be imposed on others whose point of view is different. The often cited objection that same gender marriage devalues or dishonours "real" marriages is deeply illogical!

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Religion is a matter of faith, and we all have a right to the faith of our choice, and also the belief celebrant of our choice. It is nobody else’s business!

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

So long as those celebrants who have an objection because of their personal beliefs are not placed under legal pressure to conform to a blanket instruction.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Many people in a same sex partnerships do have strong spiritual beliefs, and would love to have a blessing in accord with those beliefs from a celebrant who shares their faith.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Transgender people often only come to terms with their situation after they have married and had children. Love of their partner may still be real, and if the couple wish to continue together, how would that be any different to them being in a same gender marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't understand the question. If it is about people who object to same gender relationships feeling threatened by those relationships having public approval and acknowledgement, then I don't know how they could be helped, and would urge them to grow up!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Well, it's a fundamental right of everyone in the society we all are involved in creating together. However I do not believe that this right extends to malicious or untrue statements about others which are intended to harm and mislead. It is possible to disapprove of ideas, behaviours and individuals without being destructive. In fact we all have a duty to report or comment upon behaviour of any kind which may harm others, especially in the case of those who need protection, such as children, the elderly and those with special needs.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Brian Nobbs
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I believe it is unnecessary to redefine marriage to include same sex relationships which are already catered for through civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The institution of marriage lies far back in the Judeo-Christian tradition and predates nation and church. It has deep religious as well as functional significance and is intended to formalise the union of a man and a woman and the creation of new life in families. For many Christians the sanctity of marriage, as understood for millennia, is a matter of deep conviction. Its redefinition poses substantial issues of belief and conscience. For them it is most certainly not an issue of discrimination or homophobia as popularly represented. It is a contradiction of their deepest convictions about life and faith.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
The European Convention of Human Rights, Article 2 of the First Protocol, lays down that 'the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure that ... education and teaching is in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions'. Clearly the teaching or promotion of same-sex marriage in schools will conflict directly with the religious and philosophical convictions of many parents. There is clearly a potential conflict between the proposed legislation and religious belief, and contradicts the freedom of Christians and others to have their children educated according to their faith. Same sex marriage is not just a civil matter; it impinges directly on the religious beliefs of many parents and the wider population. Parents currently have the right to withdraw their children from religious education and observance, as well as from sex education, and many parents have deeply-held views about their children being taught about same-sex marriage in the classroom. The law should not undermine these views and protect parents' right to withdraw their children. Many will be unaware what their children are being taught so they should have a legal right to know when such lessons will take place. It is unclear what the practical consequences of this legislation will be for schools and they could be highly disruptive. This conflict goes much wider than what is actually taught in schools. For example, any teachers with religious convictions about traditional marriage will find themselves with an issue of conscience around same-sex marriage, which, if expressed in any way, will be career damaging. It should be noted that while the law requires schools to provide religious education, it also protects, for example teachers who are atheists from being compelled to teach it. Similar provision should be made for teachers, who, for religious convictions or otherwise, do not feel able to teach about same-sex marriage. There will be many public servants in various other professions who may face a similar dilemma. Conscientious objection, which has been long respected in this country, is in significant danger of being swept aside in this matter. Conscience clauses should be introduced in employment and equality laws to allow employees who believe in marriage as it is currently defined, not to be forced to promote or participate in same-sex ceremonies, teach it, or express approval for it. It is imperative that holding to the current definition of marriage must not be used by public sector employers to dispute or question the equality and diversity credentials of existing or prospective employees.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It is important that individuals have the freedom to disagree with same-sex marriage and engage in normal public debate about these matters without being vilified or harassed by legal or employment sanctions. Specific amendments are necessary therefore to protect the right of free speech and debate. These need to apply across the public sector and equality laws, including employment and goods and services. As a minimum, amendments need to make clear that merely discussing or criticising same-sex marriage is not, on its own, a form of discrimination for the purpose of equality law or a breach of public order legislation. Such changes would help those who believe in traditional marriage to feel free to discuss the issue with their colleagues or customers, employees and employers. It would send an important message to those who are quick to label any disagreement with same-sex marriage as 'bigoted'.
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Dr Alastair Noble
23 August 2013
4. How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In-opposition

This is a clash of different Equality Groups Rights therefore the SG is acting insensitively and this may result in negative impact on good community relations between various equality groups.

By forcing a new definition of marriage the Government is interfering in one of the fundamental practices of most faith communities who believe that their accountability is to their creator not the SG in this regard.

The scope of the present consultation is obvious because it is scheduled during the peak summer holiday period when majority of people are on holidays with their children and family.

Despite of the results of the consultation in 2011 which received over 62 per cent responses against SSM and yet the SG intends to proceed with the introduction of same sex marriage. This is a clear undemocratic act by the Scottish Government.

5. How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex Marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In-Opposition

From our community group Islamic perspective we totally oppose same sex marriage in any shape or form. It is a sin for us to go against the commands of God given for all humanity that marriage is "the union of a man and a woman, for the procreation of children to the exclusion of all others".

6. How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Scotland is not a secular State however is a country with majority Christian belief. As a people of the book we do not wish to encourage secular marriages, which will cause confusion defining what is Religious Faith and Secular Belief for our future generation.

7. How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In-Opposition

Even if the Equality Act 2010 is amended, there is a strong possibility that a claim of a breach of human rights might be taken against a religious organization or an individual celebrant. This matter may be ultimately determined by the European Court of Human Rights. There is no guarantee that, at some future date, the court will not rule that religion and belief celebrants must either solemnise all ‘marriages’ or cease to marry people altogether.

We have a great concern that while the Government brings about equality for same sex marriage and the definition and meaning this has, it will also undoubtedly have a severe negative impact on traditional marriage and the very rights of the individuals being compromised or taken away to their detriment.

8. How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriage?

In Opposition

The same-sex marriage is not accepted in our faith under any name.

The two tier system apparently giving same sex couples more options to register their relationships than is available to heterosexual couples. This constitutes ‘more equal’ to some equality groups at the expense of the moral standards held by the majority of people in Scotland.

9. How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

Our concern is that in Islam marriage can be performed in people’s home or any place and this may constitute to litigation based on discrimination to families and groups the various methods people adopt in these ceremonies.

10. How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In Opposition

Our position is that the same-sex relations/unions are not accepted in our faith under any name. therefore within our religious belief there is a requirement for us to adhere to our creators commandment which can not be superseded by this proposed Scots Law.
11. How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Our view is that any interference in nature where people indulge themselves in God’s creation is not accepted in our faith therefore we oppose to this. However in the case of a genuine medical deficiency that could be cured and then legitimate recognition be given with respect that one deserves.

12. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The SG Equality Impact Assessment annexed to the Bill, appears to be very biased in favour of the perceived positive implications for the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) community. However the clashes of Equality rights which have been totally over looked in this process.

Firstly the interest and the right of the child should be the first priority in having a natural stable family life. It is well known fact that the child’s bringing up in a traditional family with male father and female mother is the best for a child.

This Bill seemingly has caused more tension between Equality Groups due to the clash between belief and SSM. This could have been avoided with sensitivity and consideration. One of the main objectives of the Equality Act is Good community Relations.

At work the people of the faith community are put in a dilemma obey your employer or your God if they chose their religion they will defiantly perceived as extremist and homophobic.

WE believe SG does not have the right to re-define marriage and to interfere in people’s religion or faith/belief and divine laws. People have right to practice according to their faith and this Bill clearly causes fear in majority community while they adhere the divine law and marriage practices.

The Same Sex marriage is not only a marriage issue. It has already become part of the Scottish Education and curriculum. I have seen the material and it would concern any Muslim parent. This would influence our children’s young minds and when they are taught by religious bodies and their parents about their belief the children will be confused.

Also there has to be a equal rights for all equality groups at Scottish schools and what is taught regarding equality groups and in the curriculum. There should be education for all children regarding each equality group such as disabled, women, all religious groups etc equal to LGBT. There has to be equal resources and teaching for each equality group same as LGBT so there is a justice and fairness in promoting equality groups within the Scottish schools and teaching.
We as a women going to find it very difficult to guide our children in accordance with our faith while they may be confused therefore SG has to consider resources to help parents as this may cause inter-generational problems.

We believe like other religious organisations, that traditional family structure is the best environment to bring up children. Therefore, we do not agree with the SG claim Annex K.

13. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is a conscious right given to all humanity however as long it does not harm other people if it does then there should be exceptions, fairness and harmony and considerations in each case.

14. Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

More time should be given to community groups for the consultations and facilitation for such consultations. The Bill must not be rushed through. The Scottish Community Groups must be given the opportunity to understand the future implications of the Bill.

Why Scotland is so keen while other countries are taking their time and considering all implications?

The Prosecution Guidelines by the Lord Advocate is not subject to consultation and may be amended in future. For these reasons we would like to have seen these guidelines as part of the Bill since we are already on a fine line to what may constitute criminal offences.

Bushra Iqbal MBE
North Lanarkshire Muslim Women and Family Alliance
26 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM NUS SCOTLAND

NUS Scotland welcomes the publication of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. We believe that extending the right to marry to same sex couples is an important step forward for LGBT equality. Since the introduction of civil partnerships, there has been a welcome growth in acceptance by society of LGBT communities and of the need for LGBT equality. We believe that the introduction of same-sex marriage is an important step for LGBT communities in being fully accepted and having the freedom of choice.

For many LGBT people of faith, same-sex marriage ceremonies would allow them to bring their faith in to their relationship more fully and we believe this is an important step forward in the acceptance of LGBT communities within faith communities.

We are therefore very supportive of the overall principles of the Bill. We do, however, oppose the continued ban on mixed sex civil partnerships. We have outlined some further comments on this and other aspects of the detail of the Bill below.

Opting out of solemnising same-sex marriage

NUS Scotland believes that religious and belief bodies, and their celebrants, should have the option to opt in to solemnise same sex marriage. We believe the Scottish Government’s proposals will allow LGBT people of faith to get married, while at the same time protecting and extending religious freedom by providing the option of solemnising same-sex marriages to religious and belief groups. However, we would ask religious organisations who do not opt-in to performing same-sex marriages to reflect upon the effect that this may have on members of their faith who also are part of LGBT communities.

We welcome the fact that civil registrars will not be given an opt-out of solemnising same-sex marriage in this Bill as published, as we opposed any such opt out during the consultation on this issue. Civil registrars act as agents of the government, and cannot let religious or moral objections determine whether or not they will perform marriage, same-sex or otherwise. The act of solemnising should be determined by the rule of law, not the personal views of the registrar.

Same-sex marriage in education

NUS Scotland raised concerns in response to the earlier consultation on this issue in relation to any changes to education legislation. We believe that education should be inclusive of all learners at all levels, regardless of their sexual orientation, gender identity, or family situation, and taught in a way that is free from prejudice or discrimination. All of our schools will have LGBT pupils and pupils from LGBT families and education should be about promoting equality and mutual respect amongst all pupils.
We therefore welcome the fact that the Scottish Government has agreed that there is no need to make changes to Education (Scotland) Act 1980 in relation to same-sex marriage.

We believe strongly that an open and inclusive education is vital to make all pupils feel welcome and to tackle homophobic and bi-phobic bullying in our schools. NUS Scotland believes the primary education level discussion of same-sex marriage should form part of an appropriate and broader conversation about varied family structures. As children and young people progress in education and take sex education, this education should always be inclusive of LGBT issues, including same-sex marriage.

Converting civil partnerships to marriage

NUS Scotland also raised concerns at the consultation stage that couples in civil partnerships which wished to convert to marriage may be required to have a marriage ceremony in order to do so. We felt that this could be costly, may remove significance and meaning from the civil partnership ceremony already held, and may be a barrier to couples wishing to convert.

We therefore welcome the fact that the Bill as published will now make arrangements for an administrative route for couples to make this change.

Continued ban on mixed-sex civil partnerships

NUS Scotland believes the Bill should end the ban on mixed-sex civil partnerships. Allowing civil partnerships among mixed-sex couples is vital to ensure equality and freedom of choice for those who do not wish to marry.

Maintaining the ban on mixed-sex civil partnerships will also mean that same-sex couples in civil partnerships will be compelled to convert this partnership to a marriage in the event that one of them obtains a gender recognition certificate that would make them legally a mixed sex couple.

NUS Scotland believes that no couple should be compelled to convert to being married unless they wish to, and that it should be for each couple to decide for themselves.

Gender recognition

NUS Scotland supports the Scottish Government’s aim to revise the gender recognition process to ensure individuals who are married or in a civil partnership can gain gender recognition without need to divorce or dissolve their civil partnership. We also believe that these couples should not lose benefits or rights earned while married or in a civil partnership in obtaining gender recognition.
However we do have concerns about the process for obtaining gender recognition, in particular in relation to spousal consent, long term transitioned people, and the age for gender recognition.

Spousal consent

The requirement to have spousal consent to obtain gender recognition has been described as a ‘spousal veto’ as it effectively allows for the spouse of a trans person to prevent them from obtaining gender recognition, unless they are able to obtain a divorce. In circumstances where the spouse is unwilling to co-operate, they may prevent the trans person from obtaining recognition for their gender for many years.

We believe that the rights of both individuals in a marriage or civil partnership need to be balanced and we would support the suggestions put forward by Scottish Trans on how this could be achieved in the legislation. In particular, we believe it is important to ensure that a spouse cannot block a trans person from obtaining gender recognition, but that they remain able to withhold consent for the re-registration of their marriage or civil partnership.

Long term transitioned people

We would also support the suggestion from Scottish Trans in relation to long term transitioned people and the gender recognition process. We believe that the administrative or logistical issues associated with the process should not prevent individuals from obtaining gender recognition. Long term transitioned people may find it difficult to obtain the evidence required by the current process. Previously a temporary arrangement was available for long-term transitioned people to obtain recognition with different evidence.

Lowering the age for gender recognition

NUS Scotland would support lowering the age for gender recognition from 18 to 16, the age at which people in Scotland can marry (without parental permission). Current provisions would mean that where one person in a couple is a 16 or 17 year-old trans person, who has not received recognition for their gender, the couple would be discriminated against compared to other couples, where gender recognition was possible due to their age. For example, a couple who are legally the same sex, but would be mixed sex if gender recognition were available for one partner, would be prevented from marrying in a church which does not conduct same sex marriages.

It is also unfair for young people who have been living as their acquired gender for over the 2 years required by the Gender Recognition Act by the age of 16 to be required to wait for two years to gain recognition for their gender, and for the ability to marry or enter into a civil partnership in accordance with their gender identity. These young people may also be facing discrimination as a result of the sex on their birth certificate not being reflective of their gender.
Gender-neutral ceremonies

NUS Scotland believes that provision should be made in the Bill for gender neutral marriage ceremonies, to ensure couples do not have terms imposed upon them in a marriage ceremony which do not reflect their identity. Currently, ceremonies for legally mixed sex couples require a declaration that the parties are ‘husband and wife’ but legally mixed sex ceremonies are gender neutral.

In circumstances where a person’s overseas gender recognition is not recognised, a ceremony may be treated as mixed sex, and therefore use terminology which is inappropriate. At the same time, individuals who do not live as either a man or a woman, they should not be forced to be called a husband or a wife against their wishes.

Russell Gunson
Depute Director
NUS Scotland
30 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Much of the opposition to same sex marriage originates from religious groups. I am a practising Christian but find nothing in my faith that would in cause me, in principal, to reject the concept of same sex marriage. Firstly, I do not believe that marriage is a sacrament. It is primarily a property contract, the merging of two households into one legal entity, the orchestration of which was appropriated by the medieval church as a means of exercising coercive power over the nobility. Secondly, some Christians object to same sex marriage because they believe it contradicts scripture. However that would, in itself, not justify their opposition to same sex marriage among non-Christians or being undertaken by members of Christian denominations that do not recognise that interpretation of the bible.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of expression is a binary opposition. Speech is either free or it isn't. There is no middle ground and there are no shades of grey.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Neil O'Docherty
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Andrew O'Hara
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I believe that those who feel a need for protection are basing these views on prejudice and nothing else, and should be made to attend classes which break down outdated bigotry and allow all Scots to marry in the venue of their choice.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mark O'Hara-Thomas
15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM ONE SPIRIT INTERFAITH FOUNDATION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

One Spirit Interfaith Foundation welcome the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. We believe and assert that civil, religious and belief-based forms of marriage should be available to both same-sex and heterosexual couples. All people should be able to form a legal union in a ceremony that may be civil, religious or belief based. It is a fundamental right of individuals to make their vows in a context which is representative of their beliefs and traditions, whether those beliefs are religious, spiritual or secular. We are pleased that the draft Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill would enable those organisations and celebrants who wish to provide the service of a religious or belief-based marriage to same-sex couples to do so. Interfaith Ministers and Celebrants in Scotland are enthusiastic about the proposals set out in the draft Bill and would like to conduct same-sex religious or belief-based marriages.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

One Spirit Interfaith Foundation believe and assert that civil, religious and belief-based forms of marriage should be available to both same-sex and heterosexual couples. All people should be able to form a legal union in a ceremony that may be civil, religious or belief based. It is a fundamental right of individuals to make their vows in a context which is representative of their beliefs and traditions, whether those beliefs are religious, spiritual or secular. We are pleased that the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill would enable those organisations and celebrants who wish to provide the service of a religious or belief-based marriage to same-sex couples to do so.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

One Spirit Interfaith Foundation welcome this. Interfaith Celebrants offer services to people of all faiths or none, and are authorised by the Registrar general for Scotland to hold legal marriages. The number of marriages held by Interfaith Celebrants is

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support
One Spirit Interfaith Foundation believe that it is a fundamental right of individuals to make their vows in a context which is representative of their beliefs and traditions, whether those beliefs are religious, spiritual or secular. Interfaith Ministers and Celebrants in Scotland would like to conduct same-sex religious or belief-based marriages. We agree with the opt-in procedure and are pleased that this would enable those organisations and individuals who do NOT wish to conduct same-sex marriage to make that choice.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

We welcome the proposals to change civil partnership to marriage. Interfaith celebrants would be happy to do this as part of a full-scale marriage ceremony and celebration, or as a small, private event. However, the Bill makes this possible only for couples who have registered their civil partnership in Scotland. We would wish to see more discussion to enable couples who have had their civil partnership registered in other parts of the UK also included.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

We agree that this should be possible, although the experience of our celebrants would suggest that Register offices may, at times, find it difficult to offer the flexibility to meet the requests of a couple.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

One Spirit Interfaith Foundation welcome welcome this. We would also welcome discussion on extending this option to same-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The One Spirit Interfaith Foundation is based upon the principle of equality. This is embodied in the Code of Ethics accepted by all ordained interfaith ministers: "We aim to keep our hearts and minds open to everyone, celebrating difference but not separation. We refuse to marginalise people on the basis of age, disability, state of health, race, gender, nationality, religion, sexuality, economic status or any other
We consider that the Bill contains sufficient protection for those who do not support same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

One Spirit Interfaith Foundation welcome the proposals for further consultation regarding the tests that would be applied to organisations wishing to hold heterosexual marriage same-sex marriage and civil partnerships in Scotland and would seek to be involved in these discussions.

Are you responding as...

- a celebrant
- a faith/belief-based organisation

Jane Patmore
One Spirit Interfaith Foundation
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I am pleased that Scotland as a progressive and forward-thinking nation has proactively legislated to reduce and remove discrimination for non-heterosexual individuals.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I am very supportive of this.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I have no opinion on this.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I feel it is important for awareness to be raised regarding the fact that there will not be an obligation to marry a same-sex couple - just as currently a church can decline to marry a heterosexual couple. If objection is on "moral" grounds, I do not feel this has any place in modern society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I do not see how this Bill infringes freedom of speech in any way. Rather, it increases the freedom of those who would be able to marry under the Bill who currently cannot do so, and in so doing does not suppress the freedom of anyone else.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jennifer O'Neill
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I support this as I myself am in a same sex relationship and would love to legally marry my long term partner

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Joanne O'Neill
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
It is a vital step towards a more equal society.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
There should be no protections to prejudice. Religious views should be given no extra standing that non-religious views. School curricula should reflect society and teach comprehensively about relationships and healthy sexual behaviour regardless of gender, without barriers.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech should be applied equally, but incitement of hatred or intolerance should not be accepted regardless of who demonstrates it. Religious freedom of speech should be no different to any other, but should also be subject to the same rules if inciting hatred or prejudice.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Thom O'Neill
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I think that the bill would be a major step forward for equality. I believe most people in Scotland support this updating of the law and/or they support their own friends and family who are in same sex relationships to have those treated equally. If it also included provision for mixed sex civil partnerships it would be better as, ideally, we would have full equality for legally recognised marriages and partnerships regardless of gender and sexuality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I believe same sex marriage should be available for all couples that are interested in perusing it. Personally I am in a very happy civil partnership and am both an aesthest and a feminist and I am therefore happy to be part of a more modern institution separate from historical traditions associated with religion and property. However I know many people who find it heart breaking not to be able to use words like “marriage” in their ceremony, and particularly people who want to be able to have a religious or belief ceremony and are currently unable to do so. I think it is crucial that couples of any gender be allowed to make informed choices between legally recognised partnerships or marriages.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I see no reason for belief and religious celebrants to be treated differently in law and welcome the move in the Bill to ensure they are on the same footing. As an atheist I see no reason to treat some beliefs as recognised religious rights, and others as somehow inferior to these. I would welcome all legal registration of marriages being separated from religious or other celebration ceremonies (as occurs in France and Germany for instance) but as this is unlikely To happen and is not proposed here I fully welcome equal treatment of any belief or religious celebrants on an equal footing.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support
I believe the arrangements suggested are appropriate and accommodate a range of views that may be held by different celebrants. It is right that those belief and religious organisations who wish to conduct ceremonies for both mixed and same sex couples be able to do so. And equally it is fair that those organisations and celebrants who do not wish to conduct same sex marriages be able to opt out. It is right that authorisation is provided/available to accommodate all wishes and views. I understand that a change is needed to section 11(2) Is required to allow belief and religious organisations the option of using gender free versions of the marriage ceremony. I strongly support such an amendment which will be important both for same sex couples and for feminists in a mixed sex couple who may not want to use the "husband and wife" form of words with their historic baggage.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I support this as it will allow those who want to have their relationship recognised as "marriage" the opportunity to bring their status into line with their wishes. I also welcome the right to remain in civil partnerships or to select this form of legally recognised relationship for those of us wanting equal legal rights as partners, separate from the historical traditions of marriage. I believe there is a need to equalise the treatment of those from outside of Scotland to have their civil partnerships changed to marriages if they want to do so. I concur with the Equality Network’s views on this, that the legislation should treat any legally recognised civil partnership equally in terms of availability of conversion to a same sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This seems entirely appropriate and Not an LGBT issue. It also brings civil marriage into line with existing civil partnership law I believe. I am, however, generally unclear on the importance of excluding religious words or practice from civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I am broadly supportive of this as I know that in a few rare cases this may be desirable, for instance where a humanist celebrant is conducting the marriage. Although I think few couples will choose a religious or belief registration of a civil partnership I do think this option would be more important if provision was being made in the law for mixed sex civil partnerships. I believe for mixed sex couples a religious or belief registration of a civil partnerships would offer a more equal and feminist alternative to a marriage.
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This seems appropriate as a transgender persons status and rights should not vary by married status. I understand from the Equality Network that as the bill stands a married transgender person will require their partners permission for a gender recognition certificate and I think that is bizarre. Gender recognition is a personal issue regardless of relationship status and the ability for a legally recognised partner to block, delay or veto such a certificate smacks of the inequalities that once existed around women and divorce law.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the bill is very generous in recognising the views and rights of those who have concerns about same sex marriage. Crudely I think anyone who does not want to be in a same sex marriage shouldn't have one. That is the limit to which it imposes upon anyone else's life. I agree with the Equality Network that civil registrars should not be able to opt out of conducting same sex ceremonies as this is a human rights issue, particularly in small rural communities where a wide range of alternative registrars may not be available to conduct a ceremony. Similarly I think it would be absolutely inappropriate to bring into pace any special protections for those who do not wish to hear mention of same sex marriages in schools. This would be an underhand way of reintroducing section 28/section 2A concepts that were so harmful both to children and those teaching and supporting them. It is appropriate to represent the facts in schools, including marriage or civil partnership of any variety. And, as the Equality Network have stated, divorce is mentioned in schools and this is just as controversial for some people. In general I believe that those opposed to same sex marriage are already more than well accommodated by society. Offering equal rights to same sex couples does not threaten anybody else's rights. Nor does any same sex marriage change anyone's mixed sex marriage. Aside from the more than reasonable celebrant opt outs there is no need for any other form of protection for those opposed to same sex marriage. No gay person is about to try to convert a straight person, nor marry them, nor in any way impose on their life. There is no need to protect a minority of people from those of us who just wish to live our life on an equal and fair footing.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
Are you responding as...

a private individual

Nicola osborne
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM OUR LADY OF PERPETUAL SUCCOUR PARISH

I am a Catholic Priest. Defining marriage to accommodate same sex couples so that they may feel that they are gaining equality of opportunity in laws regarding will not make same sex couples the same as heterosexual couples.

Marriage is the union of a man and woman who join together in love to fulfil that love and in fulfilling that love to be open to giving birth to new life which they promise to nurture and bring up to be good members of this life and society in all ways.

Same sex couples are not open to giving birth to new life. They already enjoy the rights given in civil partnerships to be recognised as partners living together. Their civil liberties are now protected in law. There is no need to redefine marriage to include same sex living partnerships.

The sacrament of marriage or matrimony is for a man and woman. The sacrament cannot be administered to same sex couples. The ultimate purpose of proposals to redefine marriage is contrary to the teaching and belief of the Church. A redefinition of marriage will ultimately be used to coerce the Church to perform celebrations of redefined marriage as an accepted position for the Church and State. This cannot be done by the Church since it would not be a sacrament.

The laws regarding posterity of children adopted by same sex couples will cause great difficulties in the future for the law of the land. Observations from other countries seem to conclude that once marriage is redefined it opens the way to other ways of life to be legalized.

The protections of the law for those of us who oppose same sex marriages will not be strong enough to allow us to live with full protection in law.
There is now a growing discrimination on those who believe that marriage is heterosexual and this is not right.
I wish my views to be known by the government and notice taken of these views.

Parish Priest
Our Lady of Perpetual Succour Parish, Glasgow
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Unless they are a gay couple or have a gay child, as I do, I can understand why they may not fully agree with the changes needed. However, if everyone is seen as equal in the eyes of god, then that should not matter whether they are same sex or otherwise. I just want my son to be happy, if that takes another person of the same sex, then so be it. It is not the norm, I agree and it took a lot for me to get my head round when my son told me, even though I had gay friends of both sexes for many years. However when it comes to your own door, your views are different, well mine were anyway. It does not take away from the fact my love for my son will never change, no matter what sex he chooses, as long as he is happy.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a mother of a gay son

Kim Overton
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

A logical step forward in a free society.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Having been happily married for several decades, I cannot see any reason to deny that state to any loving couple wishing to commit to each other, regardless of the gender of either partner.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

The availability of marriage should be a right for all citizens regardless of the gender of either partner. Beliefs and religion are diverse and personal, the cause of many controversies and confrontations, and should be left out of the debate as far as is possible.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

Any licensed marriage practitioner should be able to decide which ceremonies they will conduct.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Cannot see why there should be a distinction at all.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

The place should not be significant in law.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

Such registration should be optional for the parties involved.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Gender should no longer play a part in marriage legislation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There will always be some people who are offended by the beliefs and practises of others. Is there not sufficient legislation already to protect from physical and verbal abuse? Live and let live.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Trevor Oxborrow
5 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
In support if the couple wishes to convert from one to the other

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither
I feel that civil and religious ceremonies of any kind should be kept separate, but would not stand in the way of those who wish these ceremonies

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the bill as proposed fully protects those religious celebrants who are fundamentally opposed to same sex marriage from having to be involved with such ceremonies. Civil registrars, as civil servants, should not have the same protection.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe that we are all entitled to freedom of speech so long as in exercising that freedom we do not impinge on the freedom of others or incite hatred against anyone.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

- a celebrant
- a faith/belief-based organisation

Louise Park
The Pagan Federation (Scotland)
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
As a Christian Protestant minister, I fully support the Equal Marriage bill in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
As a Christian Protestant minister, I fully support equal marriage between two consenting adults regardless of their genders or sexual orientations, and I fully support religious officials having the freedom of conscience to decide to conduct such marriage ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
As a Christian Protestant minister, I fully support non-religious celebrants being allowed to conduct marriage ceremonies as long as they are properly certified and/or registered with the appropriate government body that oversees such ceremonies (just like religious officials).

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither
I would prefer that all celebrants be allowed to solemnise marriage ceremonies and opt-out if they so wished.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
As a Christian Protestant minister, I fully support straight or gay couples being allowed to enter into civil partnerships; marriage isn't for everyone.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As a Christian Protestant minister, I believe there is no need for "protection" for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage. The supposed need for "protection" is simply fear-mongering.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

Rev. Lindsay Louise Biddle
Parish Church in the Church of Scotland
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

The Scottish Parliament must legislate to remove all discrimination against transgendered persons. The current marriage laws represent a form of discrimination.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Iain Paterson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The bill would mean true equality for Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

As a gay man, I should be able to marry the person I love, just the same a heterosexuals can. If we all truly want Scotland to be viewed as a equal nation then the passing of this bill will demonstrate that.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

There should be a provision for those in civil partnership to change the status to marriage if the couple want to. Allowing this change is again demonstrating fairness and above all equality.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Not everyone is religious and they should be allowed to have their civil marriage in a place of their choice with the support of the registrar, freedom of choice!

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I believe that there might be others in society that have concerns regarding same sex marriage, I think it is only right that there concerns are raised and given assurance that gay people are no different. I do agree that religious organisations should not be forced into conducting same sex marriages in their place of worship.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Hugh Paton
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM DR AUGUR PEARCE

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The Bill is a good Bill. It will right an injustice in Scots law and has probably helped to goad the Imperial Government into righting an injustice in the Law of England and Wales. It does not suffer from the interference in religious group affairs (and b

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

This is for me a matter of my beliefs both in freedom and about marriage. I see the loving union of a same-sex couple as essentially the same as the loving union of an opposite-sex couple, and I want society to treat them as the same. For the law to treat them as the same is an important step towards this. I know that not all believers (which I use to mean individuals driven by any faith or non-religious belief) share my conviction. But believers regarding same-sex relations as wrong, or same-sex unions as essentially different from marriage, have always been free to govern their collective practice accordingly. For the first time this Bill will enable those believers who agree with me to do likewise.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Scotland is a kingdom in which the true religion of Jesus Christ is to be maintained and the Queen's subjects are to be ruled according to the will and command of God revealed in Scripture (Coronation Oath Act 1567). (Although, since there has been no recent coronation in Scotland, this oath has not been taken for some years, the Act's implications for the nation's religious character are quite clear.) But it is also one in which alternative religious and belief positions have long been tolerated without seeing any inconsistency. Equality in practical matters between loyal believers of all types accords with this tolerant tradition, and I support it.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

The Scots approach to this question has long been superior to the English emphasis on the marriage venue. It allows greater flexibility for individual celebrants to follow their consciences and meet a couple's needs. Care needs to be taken not to treat the views of conservative office-bearers in liberal religious groups as more worthy of the law's protection than those of liberal office-bearers in conservative groups: in matters of internal group discipline the law should stay even-handed.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

The law needs to accommodate two types of same-sex couple: (A) those for whom full marriage was and remains the 'gold standard', for whom civil partnership was a useful step along the way, but who did not regard it as marriage so long as the law did not call it so and religious marriage rites were not available; and (B) those who considered either their entry into a civil partnership (or possibly their personal exchange of vows) to be their marriage, and now see the 'conversion' of their civil partnership into a marriage recognised by law as merely a useful formality. The Bill accommodates (better than the English Bill) couples in group (A), by allowing them to marry like anybody else who is not married, albeit not letting the subsisting partnership stand in their way and dissolving it by operation of law at the moment when the marriage is contracted. As amended after the last consultation it also accommodates group (B). I think this is right, though in developing the provision for group (B) through Regulations nothing should be done to impair the option that the consultation Bill gave to group (A). I am still unhappy with the limitation of these procedures to couples whose civil partnership was formed in Scotland. I believe domicile in Scotland, which would be enough to enable the Scottish courts to dissolve on adequate grounds a partnership formed elsewhere, should also be enough for it to be dissolved by operation of law when the partners marry. Otherwise there will be real difficulty for a couple who move permanently from a territory where only civil partnership is available (e.g. moving from Helsinki or Londonderry to Stornoway) and wish to marry in their adopted homeland, but cannot argue that their existing relationship has 'irretrievably broken down'.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

No issue for me here.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

If there were no same-sex marriage I should support this wholeheartedly, as I did the 2010 Alli amendment to the Equality Bill permitting religious hosting of CP registration in England. (I admit that there is an inconsistency between the understanding of hosting religious groups and the word 'civil'. If civil partnerships are to continue I should prefer the word 'registered' to replace it.) Now, I have some sympathy with those who see such partnerships as a temporary expedient and would ultimately like marriage to replace it for all couples. But that must be seen as the view of somebody who would also like all religious groups to facilitate and bless same-sex marriage. Until they do so, there are some groups who will accommodate only civil partnership, and LGB believers who remain in those traditions would find a religiously-facilitated partnership formation better than nothing.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I have no problem with this. But I refer back to the question about 'conversion'. Given the effort to which draftsmen have gone to accommodate a married couple (H and W) when H is recognised as female but wishes to remain in a same-sex marriage to W rather than convert to a civil partnership as the law presently requires, I think the Parliament should recognise that there are likely to be more people in the situation of Australian civil partners M1 and M2, migrating to Scotland and wishing to be married. Neither couple sees civil partnership as adequate when other same-sex couples are married, though both might have seen it as acceptable if marriage were not an option.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

1. EQUALITY LAW, IF IT EXISTS, SHOULD BE EQUAL People can disagree with the whole premise of equality law as it affects individuals and private organisations (including churches and commercial undertakings). In seeking to achieve supposed societal goals, it intervenes in the freedom of these private actors to decide whom they will teach, employ or accept as customers or tenants. For some, the benefits of such freedom outweigh the social detriment of discriminatory decisions. I can at least understand this argument. Once it is accepted, though, that equality law affecting private decisions is here to stay, I think equality must also underlie any exemptions. One 'strand' of discrimination is not more acceptable than another because the victim class is smaller; nor are some sincere convictions a more respectable basis for discrimination than others because they are rooted in religion. Nor should the law distinguish between religious views by the number of their adherents. Hence, to my mind, a religious conviction (e.g. that women cannot represent Christ) should not justify excluding them from positions in religious organisations if a sincere non-religious conviction (e.g. that a woman's place is in the home) does not justify excluding them from positions in secular ones. Likewise, the fact that the believers who would argue today (with the Dutch Reformed and Mormon traditions of earlier times) for the inherent inferiority of the black man are less numerous than those who would still argue (with current Roman Catholicism) for the inherent wrongness of a same-sex orientation should not make one view less - or more - worthy of free manifestation than the other. So long as the law silences (or protects) one conviction, I have no greater problem with it silencing (or protecting) the other.

2. WIDER SOCIETY IS NO LESS ENTITLED THAN RELIGIOUS GROUPS TO FORM A COLLECTIVE VIEW ‘Public morals' is one of the grounds on which ECHR Article 9.2 recognises that proportionate limits may be set to the manifestation of religion and belief. The principal supranational human rights instrument affecting the laws of Scotland and England thus acknowledges scope for a public morality. It rejects the idea that the only morals worthy of respect are religious ones. When Scottish courts impose the concept of 'natural justice' on religious discipline, or regulations balance public concern for animal welfare against traditions of ritual slaughter, these are not instances of illicit repression but of the rule of law. Fair and equal treatment is also now a settled part of Scottish and English societal values. And, if the Bill becomes law, this will be expressed in the fact that all marriages and the resultant family units are equal. Society is entitled to make this known, and to govern its terminology accordingly. I hope both schoolchildren and the media will eventually come to use the words 'married', 'husband' and 'wife' instinctively, regardless of the genders involved in any particular marriage; for me this is not just about the feelings of the couples concerned but also about the normalisation of same-sex relations in daily life, leading to homophobia's increasing social unacceptability. Hence my attitude to teachers whose religious views lead them to deny the status of marriage to the marriage of a same-sex couple. I am happy for them to tell the truth - that a particular faith group would not consider these to be marriages, and (if this be the case) that they personally share that group's stance. But to deny that such marriages are a normal part of Scottish or English life, or that the parties to them believe themselves truly married and that the law (and much of society) concurs, would fly in the face of reality; and, given the school's role of preparing pupils for the wider world, attempting to conceal such reality from them by censoring or excluding otherwise valuable classroom literature would also be an indirect lie. I do not believe that - even in faith-based schools - religious freedom should go that far. It does not worry me that children born into faith traditions, given the full facts about marriage, may grow up with the same convictions as the wider society and rejecting a particular part of their parents' religious belief. I admit my profound disagreement with the views represented (for example) by the 'Christian Institute', the Roman Catholic hierarchy and the Orthodox Chief Rabbi. I hope those views will become less widely held as time passes, even within the Scottish and English communities which carry such religious labels. I note the opinion poll evidence that already the Roman hierarchy does not speak on this point for the majority of Scotland's Catholics.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I have covered this in my answer to question 12.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No.

Are you responding as...

an academic

Dr Augur Pearce
9 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The bill would promote equality for all L.G.B.T Citizens, and grant them the same rights which heterosexual couples have been enjoying for centuries.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Allowing same-sex couples to marry would enhance equality and freedom within our society. Citizens of a truly equal democracy, which is meant to embody the ideal of freedom, should be able to express their partnership in an open, legal context before a legal system which is meant to be objective and unbiased, and hence not based on the ideals of a specific or a few religious groups.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

All beliefs, whether philosophical or religious, are all beliefs nonetheless. One should not have priority or a special significance over the other, especially in law.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I believe the freedom of those of religious groups should be protected. Those religious groups who wish to conduct same sex marriages should be allowed to opt in to do so, and those who do not wish to conduct it under no circumstances should have too.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Many L.G.B.T citizens took part in civil partnerships because marriage at this time was not an option, although this does not speak to all L.G.B.T citizens. So, if desired, they should be able to change to marriage. However, civil partnerships should remain available, not just to same sex couples, but to opposite sex couples as well.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

As long as all parties are willing, it should be allowed.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

As long as all parties are willing, it should be allowed.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

A trans gender individual should be allowed to remain within their marriage when obtaining the gender recognition certificate, if they wish to do so. This is a domestic affair between two individuals, what place does legislation have in getting involved?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I appreciate, like many others who support this bill, that many religious bodies are apposed to it due to their religious beliefs, and we respect this. Under no circumstance should anyone be forced to conduct a same-sex marriage against their will and beliefs. This is because it would infringe on their freedom and rights. However, we would ask the same rights to be bestowed upon us. If two members of the same sex wish to get married, whether that be in a civil or religious ceremony (where the party is willing), they should be allowed to do so. It is not the governments and legal systems place to align itself with a particular belief system of society; it should be objective, impartial and unbiased in its approach to governing it's citizens. All that we ask is to be treated with the same equality as the rest of society, as long as it doesn't force others to conduct which that they do not want too. This does not seem unreasonable to ask. Some religious groups fear that bodies such as the European court of human rights could over rule a Scottish Law, and hence force religious groups to conduct these ceremonies. I think that these religious groups perhaps forget that same sex couples won't want to be married by someone who is against it, and so won't go to such hassle to force them to do so. On more official grounds, if the law could help protect these religious groups rights from other legislative bodies, to reassure them, it should be done. To conclude, I believe the bill promotes the core ideals of democracy; equality and freedom, and so I unwaveringly support it.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe that people should be allowed to say exactly what they want. To limit them is to limit their freedom. Of course, undoubtedly, hate and discrimination would arise from this, but I like to think that society is not completely lost, and that idle preaching of hate, with no logical reasoning behind it, would never be taken seriously. Some would say that hate should not allowed to be preached, and in general I would agree with this. But what is hateful is highly subjective. The sensitive individual would see disagreement as hate, the thick-skinned one would see a outburst of hate as a reasonable opinion. And so I would feel that defining what is hateful in law as extremely difficult.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I believe strongly that civil partnerships should remain available, and should be available to heterosexual couples too. This is all about equality at the end of the day.

Are you responding as...

an academic
an LGBT group
a private individual
A human being.

Blair Pinkett
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Equality can never be a bad thing.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrates on the same footing as religious celebrates?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrates to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Marriage equality should not include a punishment tax so gays can convert their 2nd class civil partnerships into marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't understand the need for these protections. After all, it is solely based in bigotry. Believers ignore countless things in their holy texts, while still hating gays. So they believe based on how they cherry pick their religion. For non believers, there is no justification outside of absolute bigotry that they are against equality for gays. We don't give protections for racists and the like, so why give legal protections to homophobes?! That in and of itself is somewhat homophobic.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

All groups must have equal rights, otherwise you are creating special rights for certain groups. If we are going to allow anti gay groups to spew hate, then the law should also allow hate to be spewed at them even if they are religious.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

There must be a way for those of us who have already paid for a civil partnership to have it automatically turned into a marriage without having to pay even more money. Of course I fully expect this to be a massive cash grab in the guise of marriage equality.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ronald Plushkis
26 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

Its a step towards equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

The opportunities for people to solemnise their commitment towards each other should not depend on the gender of the participants.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

E Porter
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I am very much in support of Scotland becoming a country where equality is paramount and standing up for the underdog.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I believe that love is a beautiful thing, and gay people should be allowed to express that love in an equal way to a straight couple. The arguments about marriage being religious fall flat when you consider how many atheist, agnostic, and non-practicing people get married each year.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jemma Porter
14 August 2013
I am writing as a minister of religion. However, I am not writing so much on behalf of myself and the affect the redefining of marriage may have upon my vocation, or my conscience. I am writing primarily on behalf of children and future generations.

Children are increasingly growing up in today's dysfunctional world not knowing who their mother or father are. Have you ever considered what might be put on a child's birth certificate in the future? A child has a right to know who their natural father and mother are. If this right is in any danger of being lost, or in anyway compromised, the child will be robbed of his/her identity. Once an individual's identity is lost, the potential for anarchy and social disorder may increase, let alone deep unhappiness, depression and mental illness.

I am not entirely against same sex adoption of children, however, I am concerned that by granting same sex marriage, issues around a child's identity will become even further confused, even worse, be lost altogether.

With our concern to extend equal opportunities to vulnerable groups like the gay and lesbian community, which is only right, we must not inadvertently expose an even more vulnerable community of children.

I would argue that same sex marriage blurs the edges of what true marriage is. I am sure that same sex couples can help to maintain a stable and democratic society, but the redefining of marriage to include same sex couples is a step too far. This is going down a road with a blindfold, and future generations may not thank us for the consequences.

Marriage should be respected as between a man and a woman to the exclusion of all others.

Jonny Pott
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Megan Potter
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I believe it will bring more equality to our Scottish society and embed a stable, mutually agreed and mutually supportive relationship as a recognised key element in that society. I also believe that the Bill balances freedom of religion and belief with demands for equality quite well and that it is right not to force religious groups to officiate at same-sex marriage ceremonies if they do not believe in it, while allowing those religious groups who do wish to, to conduct such services.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I believe that it is only right that same-sex couples who declare their love and commitment for each other should be accorded the same legal and civil status as those mixed-sex couples who do the same. This public commitment to a loving and fulfilling relationship which will enhance the other partner is where I would place the definition of marriage, regardless of gender, and as an advance from earlier definitions which made the woman the property of her husband or simply the means to his acquiring land or a legal heir.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

In my experience humanist celebrants have already recognition to conduct mixed-sex marriage ceremonies. I agree that they should not be counted as "religious celebrants" but be able to marry two people of whatever gender, if they choose so to do.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I think that this is appropriate so that religious freedom can be respected and those wishing to opt-in can do so. Furthermore I think it is good to have made provision for individual celebrants to be nominated without the entire religious organisation necessarily being prescribed., as this allows for flexibility and sensitivity to individual beliefs.
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I believe that this should be possible for those who wish to do it, including those who have a civil partnership solemnized in another country before they come to live in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I am in support of this freedom, apart from the restriction of "religious premises". I think that it is up to the owner of the "religious premises" to say if these premises can be used for a civil marriage ceremony and to have the freedom to say yes or no to it, whereas at the moment this seems not so. If a community centre is used for church services on Sundays, are these "religious premises"? What about a former church, now a community centre? Why can't couples have spiritual material in their non-religious wedding service?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I do not see why those seeking civil partnerships should be barred from expressing a religious faith as part of their commitment to each other so I welcome this change in the law.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. I also believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I agree that the Bill is fair to religious celebrants, allowing those with concerns to opt-out and religious organisations with concerns not to opt-in. I also think it is fair that registrars should not be able to opt-out on grounds of personal belief as they are representing the state in their job. As for teachers, I think they too are public servants and must at all times treat their pupils with respect, regardless of personal religious views. Some of their pupils may be gay or may have gay parents. They should be able to impart to their pupils a questioning and open mind, accepting of diversity but respecting equality. Therefore I do not think they should have recognition of "opting out" of teaching the law and equality, although they should be able to say they personally disagree with same-sex marriage without being sacked.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I think there can be freedom of speech without condoning abusive or intimidatory behaviour. Disagreeing personally with same-sex marriage can be freedom of speech but it shouldn't result in restricting other people's freedom to access equal marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Mixed-sex civil partnerships should be allowed as part of the new law.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mrs Rosemary Potter
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Grow up :-)

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Stella Potter
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It is more than past time that this measure should be introduced. The idea that marriage can only be between a man and a woman is based in the notion that marriage is primarily or indeed only about producing children, which is an idea that has been outdated for around 200 years. In addition, civil and religious matters, such as religious beliefs about who should be able to marry, need to be clearly separate - as indeed they are in regard to civil marriage and partnerships already - due to the multi-faith nature of Scotland today, including the large number of people who have no faith or religious belief at all. Finally, for those religions, faith groups and belief groups which actively accept same-sex relationships and same-sex marriage, not to be able to carry out a legal wedding ceremony for same-sex relationships is discriminatory against those groups, and therefore illegal.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

People should be able to marry in a way that is most meaningful to them.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

This is the best way forward, allowing faith groups to choose whether or not to solemnise marriages in the way that accords with their convictions, regardless of what those convictions are.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

As long as each couple has the option to choose whether or not to turn their civil partnership to a marriage, I am fully in support of this option.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

I find this confusing, as surely the point of a civil partnership is that it is civil - i.e. non-religious?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This is way past due.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Those people are entitled to their concerns, but what on earth do they need 'protecting' from? Marriage is a private matter that does not impact upon other people at all, except perhaps for making society less dangerous for all lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people, including those who are not married.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech should be protected, unless it is hate speech, which a lot of the rhetoric against same sex marriage amounts to.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a celebrant
a private individual

Elinor Predota
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The Bill is unnecessary and a distraction from matters which are of importance to the general population such as the economy and health. All the legal rights of marriage are already available to same-sex couples through civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Although the Bill provides a basis for categorising same-sex relationships as marriage, it actually fails to draw same-sex relationships into the same substantive legal framework as marriage. If the commitment obligations are different then the relationship is different and must logically be categorised differently.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The Abortion Act 1967 allows doctors and other health professionals to have an opt-out if they have a conscientious objection to participating in abortions. The same principle should apply to registrars who do not wish to conduct same-sex marriages. Similarly, atheist teachers are not required to lead school assemblies or teach religious education. It is unclear why space for conscientious objection is not given to teachers who, because of issues of conscience based on religious belief, do not feel able to promote same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Parents should have a right (protected in law) to remove their children from lessons where same-sex marriage is being taught. They also should have a legal right to be informed in advance of when such lessons are going to occur.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Susan Preston
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This Bill is necessary in order for Scotland to truly be the equal, progressive country we say we are.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Same-sex couples should be afforded equality in the eyes of the law. There is no reason for this not to be the case and the law of Scotland should be changed to reflect this.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

People should be allowed to celebrate their marriage in any way they deem fit, provided that those organisations asked to carry out the ceremony are in support.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I believe that churches should be allowed to opt in to these laws. I don't think any organisation should be forced to marry anyone (same-sex or otherwise). With regards to those employed by local authorities, I do not think they should be allowed to opt-out on a matter of 'conscience'. They are publicly-funded employees and should represent all citizens.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I believe that those who opted for a civil partnership when a full marriage was not an available option should be given the option to change to a marriage if they so wish.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

So long as the couple and the registrar are in agreement, I see no reason why this would be a problem. This would be the case for all civil marriages rather than just those of the same sex.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I think choice is good. Couples deserve the ceremony that most closely fits with their beliefs. Some churches will not allow same-sex weddings; I think that if they are willing to offer a blessing to same-sex couples, this is progress and should be allowed.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I think that those transitioning gender should be allowed to stay married whilst doing so. This is not an overnight process, so if they are already married, they will be transitioning as such before the gain the Certificate.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think there is very little that would constitute a legitimate concern. I believe in religious freedom, but that is a two-way process. For those who raise concerns re. schools/education; I grew up in a home with heterosexual parents, a heterosexual sibling; 18 heterosexual cousins and countless heterosexual friends and teachers. I was ONLY taught about heterosexual sex and relationships at school. Yet I am a lesbian. Education and understand is absolutely not "promotion". I think fear-mongers should be tacked rather than "reassured".

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People can disagree with homosexuality, same-sex marriage and anything else they like as much as I can support it, campaign for it and hopefully engage in it myself one day. The issue for me is when people are given a platform to air comments that are difficult to describe as anything but homophobic and to justify it through "freedom of speech". Sexual orientation and gender realignment are both legally protected characteristics under the Equality Act 2010, and should be treated as such.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I applaud the Scottish Government for bringing this Bill forward and for taking every day individual citizens like myself one step forward towards being equal in both the eyes of the law and of society. This Bill is timely and necessary and I look forward to celebrating its passing and to celebrating the love and marriage of so many of my friends who just happen to be LGBT. I look forward even more to the day when this isn't an issue any more; but to get there in the future we have to be here now, so thank you.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Julie Price
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Scotland is supposed to be a fair and democratic country. We cannot claim this if we discriminate against any group of people.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

There are no clear reasons for why same sex couples should be treated any differently to opposite sex couples. No law which effects the population should be based on religious reasons.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Again why would people with different beliefs be treated differently? There are no understandable reasons.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

A specific religion should not have control over the entire population. It is up to people to have the choice in a free and democratic country.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Alex Priest
21 August 2013
Legal rights are available to all, whether in civil partnership or marriage.

Marriage can be redefined until the cows come home, but it remains a union between male and female.

How about redefining pregnancy so that men can have babies.

This whole thing is stupid. An apple is not the same as an orange, but they are equal in that they are fruit.

A man is not the same as a woman, but they have equality. Just try to force a priest to conduct a same sex”marriage” THe law of the land would be made to look silly.

John Proctor
19 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM TIMOTHY PUNTIS

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Protections should exist only for celebrants of marriage, when those people are working directly for religious organisations. Otherwise I believe that the law should insist equality of access to goods and services from the private sector vendors, and from secular government agencies. I believe it is reasonable to ask all state employees to fulfil the roles they are employed for, for everyone, even if they have a personal reason not to want to.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is an important, and should be a right. It should not limit the rights and freedoms of other people.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Timothy Puntis
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Alexander Qiu
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
One definition of 'marriage' in the OED is 'intimate union'. Unfortunately there are those who believe the only definition is that in the Bible so they have a problem there.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation
a private individual

Helen Keating
Quakers
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Mark, 12:31 - "Love one another as you love yourselves. There [is] no commandment greater than [this]." If you don't want a gay marriage, don't get one. The only people this bill will affect is gay couples - it's been specifically constructed so that religious organisations which do not wish to recognise gay marriage, don't have to. If they don't have a problem, then how arrogant must one be to think that this affects oneself?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe free speech is an important part of our society, but also think it's important to recognise that many rights clash with others, and that everyone has to accept some limitation somewhere for the good of themselves and society.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Robin Quinn
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

Marriage CAN only be between a man and a woman, and the government simply doesn't have the ability to change that basic biological, historical, societal, familial fact

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
It is impossible in terms of the simple meaning of words

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

The government's silly plans demean marriage for all

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
It is unnecessary and it is unwanted even by the gay community in general

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It will be impossible for the government to protect people; those who will benefit will be solicitors in the many cases that will come before the courts.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It seems that we lost it a long time ago; people who speak against SSM are shouted down or worse

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

David Randall
17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

It's the same rights for both parties so why have a different name for civil partnerships..

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Same sex marriage isn't a bad thing, it affects LGBT individuals only, everyone should be able to get married to the one they love wether they are of the opposite sex or same sex..

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Jason Rankin
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Joe Reilly
14 August 2013
THE MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM THE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF FRIENDS (QUAKERS)

At our Yearly Meeting in York in 2009, British Quakers (Quakers in Scotland, England and Wales) agreed to seek a change in the law so that same-sex marriages can be prepared, celebrated and witnessed in the context of Quaker worship, reported to the state, and recognised as legally valid. General Meeting for Scotland (representing all Quakers in Scotland) is therefore warmly supportive of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

British Quakers have been discussing sexuality and its role in supportive relationships for over fifty years. We see the presence of God in everyone and believe that all committed loving relationships between two people are of equal worth. All couples entering with commitment into loving partnerships should be celebrated in the same way, regardless of sexual orientation. Our experience in recent years is that same sex couples are as capable as opposite sex couples of demonstrating long-term mutually supportive and loving relationships. During the past twenty years, we have welcomed the opportunity to celebrate such partnerships in the context of our worship but the law has prevented us from giving them legal recognition in that same context. We are very conscious that same sex couples feel that they are not regarded as having equal worth to opposite sex couples under the present legal arrangements. We now seek for them complete parity.

Quakers see this as an issue not just of equality but also of religious freedom. We recognise that the religious conviction of some leads them to reject what we as Quakers seek. We believe their religious freedom must also be legally upheld and are pleased that the necessary steps are being taken to ensure this.

We welcomed the Civil Partnership legislation as a first step towards the equality we seek. Our desire for complete parity would lead us to hope that civil partnership may also be made available for opposite sex couples. But that concern is secondary to our main concern expressed above.

Notes

- Quakers are known formally as the Religious Society of Friends.
- Around 1,500 people attend nearly 40 Quaker meetings in Scotland. Our commitment to equality, justice, peace, simplicity and truth challenges us to seek positive social and legislative change.
- Quakers in England and Wales have joined with Reform Jews and Unitarians in exercising significant influence for equivalent legislative change by the Westminster government.

John Phillips
The Religious Society of Friends (Quakers)
30 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The Bill is long overdue but it's heartening nonetheless to see real progress being made. LGBT people in Scotland are still institutionally and socially discriminated against and this Bill will do a great deal to further equality across Scotland, though there remains a great deal still to do.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Given that marriage is not intrinsically religious - the institution pre-dates the three "main" religions of Scotland (Christianity, Judaism, and Islam), and that there is no established church in Scotland (C of S is national, but not established), the religious opposition to same sex marriage is only reasonable in so far as denying members of any particular religion the right to marry a person of the same sex/gender. Other than religious objection, the only opposition to same sex marriage seems to be logically reducible to hetero/cis -sexism - at worst, trans/homo -phobia - and that is not the right basis upon which to legislate. Allowing the majority to control rights matters relating to the minority is not - and this has been proven countless times throughout history - a good idea.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I can't think of any reason to further privilege religious celebrants in Scotland. Belief celebrants should absolutely be on equal footing

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I think it should be opt-out. Obviously there is a fine line for this legislation to tread between respecting the rights of the LGBT community and respecting the rights of the religious community, but at what point do we invoke the harm principle?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
This should be a choice for the Civil Partners in question - it should be an individual, case-by-case, decision for those who want to be married and those who wish to remain CPed.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I cannot fathom a single reason why the two people marrying one another, and whoever is performing their marriage, should not be allowed to choose the location of their own wedding. There are more than enough other laws which would prevent weddings taking place in ridiculous or dangerous places.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Yes, they should be, it's ridiculous that they might not be, what sort of half-cocked equality would you end up with if you kept drawing distinctions between CPs and marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This choice MUST be entirely, autonomously, the choice of the individual who is transitioning. Not their spouse, not their doctor, not the state, and not their parish. The transgender person is the only person who matters in this decision.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Having completed an in depth analysis of same sex marriage in Scotland, and its treatment by the media over summer 2012, I would say that anyone with genuine concerns over same sex marriage could be persuaded out of such concerns were they educated about it. Chiefly moral and religious arguments have been used against same sex marriage and it is clear that while protecting religious freedoms is one of the most important things a state can do, it is never reasonable for any religion or religious individual to force their beliefs and ways of life onto other groups. Moral opposition to same sex marriage is rooted almost entirely in heterosexist and cissexist beliefs and attitudes. Protecting discrimination is not the point of legislations to protect freedom of speech, expression, religion, etc. We need only look toward the current climate in Russia to see how damaging such discriminatory and marginalising beliefs can be. This is the opportunity for Scotland to go further than has Westminster's legislation, to create a more equal society for all.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

JSM'S HARM PRINCIPLE NEEDS TO BE TAUGHT IN SCHOOLS. Freedom of speech does not extend to hate speech. LGBT identities and orientations are not choices. It is not fair that leaders of the Catholic Church can openly call homosexuals paedophiles, beastealers, and/or 'abominations' when the Catholic Church are protected from equivalent offensive bile directed at them.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

It's time to clamp down on homophobia, not homosexuality.

Are you responding as...

an academic
da private individual
da citizen who wants to marry her daughter's other mother.

Gillian Reoch
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Important for Scotland to take its place as a progressive, forward thinking country in the modern world.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Same-sex couples should be able to live, and enjoy the same benefits and legal recognition as any hetero-sexual couple.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Much like the bill in general, Scotland must place belief and faith ceremonies on the same footing, to show that we are a modern country inclusive of all. Allowing religious ceremony to stand above all else is dangerous in a country where there are so many different religious and non-religious groups represented.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

As in Q5, there should be no separation in my eyes, a union is a union and should be recognised equally.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Fully in support - many transgender people receive tremendous support from partners and spouses and should continue to be recognised as such

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Michael Reynolds
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I don't particularly have a problem with some religious bodies opting out of marrying same sex couples. However ideally we'd all be able to marry whomever we wish, within any religious house, or at any location, including civil partnership for heterosexual couples. Within the laws of the land I believe all couples should enjoy the same rights and benefits, including de-facto couples, regardless of gender or sexual orientation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Tara Rhatigan
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

Although where a religious denomination decides as a body NOT to celebrate same sex marriage, I believe that individual ministers/marriage celebrants should have a right to opt in on an individual basis.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
By choice, not compulsion.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
It's barbaric to expect loving couple to have to divorce in such circumstances

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

This should be about freedom of choice and religious protection, however those in state employment providing a service (ie registrars and civil marriage celebrants) must provide a service to all, irrespective of gender combination. There can be no opt out here. There is no opt out for marrying divorcees for example.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech must be protected but so must the law concerning hate crime, abuse and harassment. There is a fine line to be drawn however, freedom of speech must not be used as a shield to hide behind.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I believe that marriage ceremonies must be able to be gender-neutral or specific in their wording, by choice and agreement between the celebrant and the couple. I support the submission (in detail) by the Equality Network on this matter.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jaye Richards-Hill
8 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Nathan Richardson
15 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

One small change I find necessary: the wording "accept each other in marriage" should be available for mixed-sex marriages as well as same-sex, rather than requiring specifically "husband and wife".

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

In general I support providing for both marriage ceremonies and simple conversions. However, the current provisions do leave some people out, that is people who have registered a civil partnership outside of Scotland and live here now: it is important that these people too are allowed to have a marriage ceremony, because otherwise they will have to remain with a civil partnership or go through the painful process of dissolving it just to get married.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Very strongly support - this is extremely important!! However it seems a little backwards that the spouse must agree with the new gender recognition, after all it is not their gender - it makes much more sense that the spouse's agreement should be required for the marriage certificate re-issuing, while the trans* person is entirely responsible for their own gender.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

No civil opt-outs, please!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

School teachers should not be allowed to "opt out" from mentioning same-sex marriage, it is part of life and their duty to educate students that it is an option, whatever their personal views on it.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

There are still some obstacles to gender recognition for trans* people that I would like to see addressed better - firstly the age of gender recognition should be lowered from 18 because this will allow trans* people to launch their adult life as their correct gender and thereby help protect them from discrimination and involuntary outing, and secondly the medical evidence requirements paradoxically make it more difficult for people who have been living as their preferred gender for a long time to have this legally recognised, so there should be an alternate route to recognition recognising the situation of these people.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

C Richter
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage is the lifelong union between one man and one woman. That is what makes it special and unique. Anything else just simply isn't marriage. Trying to redefine marriage is a waste of governmental resources. It undermines the historic legacy of marriage in the past, creates unnecessary conflict in the present and introduces confusing consequences for the future. If this issue is about legal rights and/or equality, then why not introduce a new concept of relationship that is fair for everyone or extend the definition of a civil partnership? Redefining marriage is radical, unnecessary and discriminatory. It is an attack on what many, many people hold dear. Under no circumstance mistake the opposition of the redefinition of marriage to be the opposition of same-sex couples. This issue is not homophobia - it is pro-marriage. As soon as an attempt is made to redefine marriage to include same-sex couples, there is nothing to stop it being further redefined - a union between more than two people, between people and animals, between family members, between children.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

1. Churches and celebrants who refuse to "marry" same-sex couples will be susceptible to litigation. Scottish law can be overruled by the courts of the European Union. 2. People who have a conscientious objection and who work in the public sector may lose their jobs or be unable to work in certain professions if they refuse to endorse same-sex marriage. That is discriminatory. 3. Equality laws have led to nearly all of Britain’s faith-based adoption agencies shutting down. This directly affects the welfare of children. 4. While the law requires schools to provide religious education, it also protects atheist teachers from being compelled to teach it. Similar space should be given to teachers who, for religious convictions or otherwise, do not feel able to teach about same-sex marriage. Anything else is hypocritical. 5. Many parents will have deeply-felt views about their children being taught about same-sex marriage in the classroom. The law should not undermine these views but should protect parents’ right to withdraw their children. Many will be unaware what their children are being taught so they should have a legal right to know when such lessons will take place.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

No person should be compelled to express agreement with a same-sex marriage or be punished for expressing their disagreement with it. This freedom of speech should be protected by law. People who express a disagreement with the redefinition of marriage have a right to express that view freely. The redefinition of marriage from the lifelong union between one man and one woman, rather than the introduction of something new which covers a union between people of the same or different gender, is a direct attack on freedom of speech. In recent years, the vilification of those stating traditional beliefs about marriage has created a climate of fear. Redefinition of marriage can only divide people in a negative way.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual
A husband and father.
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I think it goes against everything marriage stands for

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage should be a heterosexual thing only

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

John Robertson
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

SABRINA ROBERTSON
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Long overdue legislation. Slow to work through parliament.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
LONG overdue.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
There is no place for discrimination in Scotland.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Religion should play no part in politics. Fairness and equality should be more important.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Tony Robertson
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Victoria Robertson
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither
This question is a bit vague.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither
Question is vague.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Why do they need 'protected'? It's none of their business who gets married.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Speech should be free. No censoring.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic

Elaine Robinson
23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM SARAH RODGERS

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Although I am heterosexual I have several gay friends and a daughter and so who are in their teens and early twenties, both of which are bisexual and I believe it is their right to chose who they love, commit to and marry.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

As above

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Marriage should be about love and commitment regardless of sexual orientation. We need to stamp out ignorant old fashioned views and support all society to be the best and happiest that they can and to me allowing same sex marriage is a small step towards that.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sarah Rodgers
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Beverley Roper
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Marriage should be open to everyone

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

James Rose
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I believe that, for both historical and biological reasons, marriage is only the union of a man and a woman. Although it is true that there have been, and are, cultures in which a man may have more than one wife, this is still a case of male and female. I can see no valid reason for this state of affairs which, with all of the flaws of human beings, has stood the human race well, to be altered in any way.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Contrary to the claims of its supporters, genuine polling has shown that there is no public demand for this. At least one poll showed a 55%/38% split against the Bill, and its related concept (with 7% undecided). Where polls have allegedly shown support, it turns out that respondents have been led to believe that the crux of the matter is one of 'equality'. This, of course, is patently untrue. Civil Partnerships which, the public was led to believe at the time would be as much as the homosexual/lesbian minority would ever seek, provides all of the legal equalities with marriage. Indeed, as I have claimed, almost 'ad nauseum', two people in a Civil Partnership have greater legal rights than, e.g., two elderly siblings, or an aged parent and a carer-'child' have! The difference is that, in my examples, the two people do not share a bed!

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Without a religious belief, the Civil Partnership is adequate. I would have no difficulty with "belief celebrants" conducting such a civil ceremony.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

This proposal has the potential to cause division even within specific religious groups. It would also be, in my opinion, "the thin end of the wedge" as one celebrant would be pressurised by the fact that another one was willing to perform these ceremonies.
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

The two are different, and should remain so. One might as well ask about apples being changed to oranges!

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

"Civil Marriage" ceremonies already take place in premises other than buildings dedicated to religious services. This, then, appears to be a "non-question"!

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

This is merely asking that something be prohibited - and then allowed in by the back door!

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

If a person has decided to undergo the relevant surgery that would effect such a physical change, then that person is no longer the person who is named in the Marriage Certificate. That Certificate then becomes null and void.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There are a great number of people who are concerned that their deeply-held views on the distinctiveness of traditional marriage may leave them in the position of being disciplined, or even dismissed, from their employment. Already, there are many well-documented cases that show that this is not an illogical concern. Even parents, who would not wish their children to be taught, in school, that same-gender relationships are equal to heterosexual relationships, would not be permitted to legally withdraw their offspring from such lessons, and could face sanctions if they withdrew them without permission. I, myself, was summarily dismissed from my role as a Chaplain to (the then) Strathclyde Police Force because of my strongly-expressed views in support of traditional marriage, on my personal blog. (www.crazyrev.blogspot.com) Because I was an unpaid volunteer there was, apparently, no action that I could successfully take. However, other Chaplains - Industrial, Hospital, Military, etc; Teachers, Care Staff, etc. - may be forced to expensive, and soul-destroying, litigation because of their personal support of marriage as between, and only between, two persons of opposite gender.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The issue of freedom of speech in this context is crucial because, as noted above, it is the expression of beliefs about marriage that tends to get people into trouble. Aside from a declaratory clause which has no practical impact (Clause 14), the Bill does not deal with this issue. It is my opinion that, given the determination of the homosexual/lesbian lobby to keep pushing this matter as far as they can, together with precedent from the ECHR, no legislative clause would ever provide the desired protection, however sincere the views of those who introduce it.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

This Bill, as has already been proved in other countries in which such legislation has been adopted, would only lead to further demands from increasingly small sections of society (it should be noted that there are many openly homosexual men, some of them with high public profiles, who are also opposed to this Bill). Already, in England, the enactment of the similar Bill in the Westminster Parliament has been followed by a challenge from a millionaire homosexual and his male partner to take the Church of England to court in order to 'force' it to 'marry them. This is in spite of the UK Government's attempts to make the C of E a different category from any other, in terms of the legislation. In other countries, notably The Netherlands, Canada, and the USA, in which same-gender 'marriage' has been legalised, there are already moves - in some cases, successful moves - to further devalue the concept of marriage by the introduction of 'multiple marriage' involving more than two individuals! This is not the future that I wish to see for Scotland! I am also concerned that the proposals of the Bill would not only totally redefine 'marriage', but also 'adultery' which would be confined to heterosexual couples. This would also undermine the concepts of commitment and faithfulness that have undergirded marriage since time immemorial.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

C.Brian Ross
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Karen Rowell
17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Equality and freedom of choice.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
If a couple wish to marry and are denied this commitment we are denying their rights! The word 'Civil Partnership' exposes an individuals privacy.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Projective identification!
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

C Russell
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Lay persons and officials of mainstream religions should be protected from having to take part in any ceremonies that they feel is in opposition to their beliefs.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Sylvia Ryan
11 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Tomas Rychter
11 July 2013
1. Introduction

1.1 The Salvation Army appreciates the opportunity to respond to the Government’s Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

1.2 The Salvation Army is a Christian Church and one of the largest charities in the UK, helping thousands of vulnerable people each day. Our mission statement says that we will 'meet human needs...without discrimination'. Our services are freely on offer to all, regardless of gender, race or sexual orientation. We have an Equality and Diversity Policy which covers all protected characteristics under equality law and which applies to every aspect of our service provision.

2. General Response

2.1 To offer some background to the Salvation Army’s comments we would point out that in our response to Civil Partnerships A framework for the legal recognition of same-sex couples\(^1\) we stated “The Salvation Army recognises that same-sex couples face unacceptable injustices in certain aspects of their lives and there is much in the Executive’s specific proposals that The Salvation Army would support. For instance, individuals should have the right to nominate whomever they wish to act as their 'next of kin' in various situations and provision should be made for that to be done easily and speedily. Disposal of personal assets should also be a responsibility for individuals to decide”.

2.2 However, we have also stated “We agree with the Executive when they state 'Marriage is the basic institution on which family law is based. It brings with it a comprehensive set of rights and responsibilities that has evolved over many years and have equity between parties at the core'. We hold to the principles regarding the importance of marriage and family life and their unique place in society. This opinion is supported by the data contained in Research Findings No 43/2004”.

2.3 Because of this we were persuaded – and it remains the case - that marriage, as traditionally understood, is vital to society's wellbeing and that it should be both protected and promoted and that attempts to equate other relationships with marriage are unhelpful.

2.4 The Salvation Army believes that human sexuality\(^2\) is part of God's creation and as such it is good and to be celebrated. Like the rest of creation and human life, the use of our sexuality can fall short of God's intentions and be misused. We would accept that human sexuality includes a mix of identity, feelings and behaviours that are not always fully understood by the individual

---

\(^1\) Civil Partnerships A framework for the legal recognition of same-sex couples response December 2003

\(^2\) The Salvation Army United Kingdom Territory with the Republic of Ireland Positional Statement on Human Sexuality, revised November 2010
concerned or by society as a whole. Sexual identity is widely accepted to be unchosen by the individual. The Salvation Army believes that it is wrong to discriminate against anyone in the provision of goods and services, and social and pastoral care because of their presumed or declared identity.

2.5 In framing our response to the proposed Bill, we propose making substantive general comments noting that the Bill includes a number of different sections dealing with marriage law, same-sex marriage, civil partnerships and transgender people, as well as comments covering protection for religious and belief bodies and celebrants.

3. General changes to marriage law

3.1 We note that the proposed Bill makes a number of changes to existing Marriage and Civil Partnerships Law, some of them technical in nature, whilst others signposting a significant shift in some peoples understanding of marriage. We note the key points in the Bill are:

- It allows same sex couples to get married, with protections for religious bodies and celebrants who do not wish to take part.
- It puts belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants.
- It introduces the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships.
- It makes provision so that persons in a civil partnership registered in Scotland can change the civil partnership into a marriage.
- It makes provision so that persons who are married can stay married and obtain a full Gender Recognition Certificate, providing legal recognition in their acquired gender.
- It gives the Scottish Ministers power to prescribe in regulations qualifying requirements which religious and belief bodies must meet before their celebrants are authorised to solemnise marriage or register civil partnerships.
- It allows civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere agreed between the couple and the registrar, except in religious premises.
- It makes bigamy a statutory offence.
- It makes provision so that deacons of the Church of Scotland are authorised on the face of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 (“the 1977 Act”) to solemnise opposite sex marriage.

3.2 We note that the proposed legislation directs that re-registration to perform religious marriages (both opposite sex and same-sex) will be required. We welcome this provision noting the requirement for governing bodies of the relevant religious organisations to opt-in (Explanatory Notes, section 68) and the assurances of protection from legal challenges where such bodies do not wish to marry same sex couples (The Bill, section 10 (1D)).

3.3 We further note the Scottish Government will continue to consult with religious bodies over the qualifying requirements to be allowed to conduct religious marriages and will liaise with denominations to determine their wish to be prescribed to conduct marriage ceremonies.

3.4 We recognise that the Bill will “make separate provision in relation to the solemnisation of, on the one hand, opposite sex marriages and, on the other hand, same sex marriage”. (Explanatory Notes, page 6, section 25). We welcome this course of action.

4. Same Sex Marriage ceremony

4.1 The positional statement of the Salvation Army\(^3\) clearly states “The Salvation Army believes that God ordained marriage to be an exclusive and lifelong relationship between one man and one woman which is characterised by mutual submission, respect, self-giving love, faithfulness and openness to each other. It is a holy relationship, sanctioned and blessed by Christ”

4.2 We note the intention of The Government to introduce same sex marriage whilst, at the same time, ensuring safeguards exist in key areas such as: protecting ‘religious bodies and belief celebrants who do not wish to solemnise same sex marriage’. We welcome this, and given our previous comments on what constitutes marriage we would not be able to recognise any other relationship, outside of ‘an exclusive and lifelong relationship between one man and one woman’ as marriage.

4.3 We recognise the Government proposal in respect of arrangements for authorising religious and belief celebrants of same sex marriage. We welcome the assurance that ‘temporary authorisation to solemnise same sex marriage may only be granted by the Registrar General when the religious or belief body of which the person is a member is prescribed’ (Policy memorandum, section 92). We welcome the Government ensuring that this is vigorously enshrined in legislation.

5. Civil Marriages

5.1 We note the commitment of the Scottish Government not to undertake having civil marriage ceremonies performed in religious premises (The Bill, section 19) and are content with the assurances given that there will be no obligation for religious communities to make such provision.

6. Transgender people

6.1 No substantive comment

\(^3\) The Salvation Army United Kingdom Territory with the Republic of Ireland Positional Statement Marriage Positional Statement, June 2011
7. Protection for Religious and Belief Bodies and Celebrants

7.1 We welcome the assurance that ‘For the avoidance of doubt, nothing in subsection (1B)(a) or (1C)(a) (b) imposes a duty on any such body to nominate under section 9 any of its members to be registered as empowered to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex’ (The Bill, section 10 (2) (1D)) and note the requirement that religious bodies will have to opt-in to either conduct opposite sex marriages and same sex marriages and civil partnerships. We are content with this process believing that this, and the proposed changes to the Equality ACT 2010, will ensure that no celebrant or religious body will be forced to act against their will or doctrine with respect of opposite sex and same sex marriages.

7.2 We welcome the requirement that religious bodies will have to opt-in to undertake marriage ceremonies and that no single celebrant will be allowed by the Registrar General to perform a marriage ceremony where their religious body has not opted-in. We are pleased to see it clearly expressed that ‘a same sex marriage can only be solemnised by a civil registrar or a person who is: a minister clergyman, pastor, priest or other celebrant of a religious or belief body prescribed by regulation’ (Policy memorandum, section 91).

8. Freedom of Speech

8.1 We welcome the assurance that freedom of speech will not be affected by this legislation (The Bill, chapter 4, section 14) and that the ‘European Convention of Human Rights to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and expression’ will be upheld.

9. Conclusion

9.1 The Salvation Army is pleased to see that the Scottish Government recognises the rights of religious bodies to bring their deep, religious and philosophical reasons for their beliefs about what the law should be, into public deliberation. The recognition, that in a pluralist society, with a democratic political order, political debate on occasions necessarily requires very difficult conversation. The assurances that the civil liberties of those who have a conscientious objection to same-sex marriage will be respected, is to be welcomed. We would however point out what we feel is an inconsistency, whereby civil liberties for religious bodies are upheld but not so individuals who carry out a civil function whose lives are guided by their religious beliefs.

9.2 The Salvation Army would welcome the opportunity to continue discussing this and related matters with the Scottish Government and look forward to that engagement.

Major Alan Dixon
Assistant to the Secretary for Scotland
The Salvation Army
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
They have nothing to be afraid of. Same sex marriage is an important step forward for everyone in society. It is long overdue.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group

K Singh
Sarbat
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I believe that it shouldn’t matter about someone’s sexuality. People and society has changed. And I still do believe that some people in this society are to obsessed about what other people are getting up to in there bedrooms they have forgotten that people are human beings regardless to whom they fall in love with, and should be credited with the same security and future as their counter parts. People are scared of change and find it hard to embrace change. But for our human race to evolve we need it!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Lgbt are tax paying people and are part of this society. It's time this society sees this. I hope soon we can all come together and people don't have any opinion about how someone else lives their life's. it just becomes part of the normal. Gay people have come so far in even a decade. Let's use be free of the stigma that comes with being different. You can lose your whole family for being gay. Let's start bringing them back together again and heal this rift!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Samantha Sayers
21 August 2013
Redefining marriage is unnecessary and a distraction from matters which are of importance to the people of Scotland, such as the economy and health.

It is not clear what new legal rights, if any, same-sex couples would receive which they do not already have through civil partnerships.

Marriage predates law, nation and church. Since God is its author, it is way beyond the pay grade of any civil leader or politician to alter its fundamental character as an institution of nature for the mutual support of spouses and the begetting and nurturing of children. Although matrimonial law has been tweaked over the years, the law has never fundamentally altered the essential nature of marriage: a lifelong commitment between a man and a woman. The plan to redefine marriage is therefore radical and unprecedented. The state will next try to redefine what a man or a woman is, but again that is way beyond its pay grade. Neither Church nor state nor any human institution can alter these givens of creation.

Same-sex marriage focuses on the rights of adults. But marriage, as it has been understood throughout history, has been about much more than the love between two people. As an institution it incentivises a man and woman to not only commit to one another but to any children their union may create.

Once you start unpicking one aspect of the definition of marriage, it can unravel further. In Canada and in some US states, where marriage has been redefined, attempts have been made to legalise polygamy. In Brazil, a three-way relationship was given marriage-like recognition, and the same is true of the Netherlands.

Deacon Tony Schmitz
Director of Studies, Diaconate Commission
Bishops’ Conference of Scotland
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I fully support equal marriage. I believe all couples, whether heterosexual or homosexual, should have the same rights.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Freya Schofield
16 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Protection is vital

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
vital as long as not generally offensive or violent

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

It does not offer any further equality or civil rights. The only thing hoped for by those who wish to redefine marriage is that someday the sexual acts of some homosexuals will be considered normal or natural, which can never be, and never result in a natural outcome, i.e. children. This prospect of the acceptance of normality is the only real objective expressed in an article by Peter Tatchell, gay rights activist.

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual
A believer in the Bible without convenient interpretation.

John Scott
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

In line with our previous submissions, and in full agreement with the submissions made on behalf of the Bishops Conference of Scotland, we are opposed to this Bill in principle. Once again we express our disappointment that the Scottish Government is proceeding with legislation to which there was overwhelming opposition in the largest ever response to a public consultation in Scotland. We repeat our commitment to recognising the worth of every human being and to respecting the dignity of all people on an equitable basis. We urge politicians to accept that equality is not synonymous with uniformity and to respect the diverse characteristics and the complementary natures of male and female in human life.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

We believe that this legislation is unnecessary, as current arrangements for civil partnerships bestow the same legal rights as Marriage. It is regrettable that State authorities are attempting to impose a re-definition of Marriage which has always been understood as having both a unitive and a procreative function, which are not present within a same sex relationship. We fear that such a significant change may have profound consequences for society, in particular for the nurturing of children by mothers and fathers and for how society views the complementary nature of the sexes. The apparent equality which is being sought by some may lead to greater inequalities in society, particularly for children.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We are not assuaged by the rhetoric of the Scottish Government, claiming that the faith curriculum of Catholic schools will not be changed by this legislation. Such claims offer no legal protection to teachers and parents who are charged with the responsibility of educating children within a tradition of Christian moral and ethical teaching. Recent history demonstrates that political assurances are worthless when Equality legislation is exploited to champion the rights of individuals over the beliefs, traditions and practices of faith communities. Catholic schools are regularly being challenged to justify their teaching, their practices and their very existence by individuals and groups which appear determined to remove the rights of parents to choose faith-based education for their children. This Bill will provide encouragement to such challenges, Parents who sincerely believe that an authentic state of Marriage can only be realised in the union of a man and a woman may be prevented from educating their children in that belief, if schools are obliged to promulgate a revised definition of what it means to be married. This may lead to many parents seeking to withdraw their children from lessons where this new orthodoxy is being advanced. This will have a significant impact on children and on schools. Ultimately it will be children who will suffer by being confused over the new meaning of words such as wife, husband, mother, father.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We are fearful that teachers in all schools may be compelled by their employers’ responsibilities, under public sector equality duty legislation, to conform to a new orthodoxy when teaching about Marriage. We are certain that this will lead to teachers being pressurised to follow their employers’ instructions, despite their own sincere conscientious objections. We urge the Scottish Government to offer greater protection to teachers than their current exhortations to Councils to follow a good employment practice.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
The concerns we are expressing are not narrow in their scope and they do not merely represent our particular ‘denominational’ interests. This issue has huge implications for the common good of society as a whole and we fear that its ramifications are not being fully anticipated. This legislation is another measure which will damage the role of the family within society.

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation

Michael McGrath
Scottish Catholic Education Service
23 August 2013
Background information

The Scottish Catholic Education Service (SCES) is an agency of the Catholic Church in Scotland. It works to support pupils, teachers and parents involved in Catholic schools and to promote an understanding of the value and purpose of Catholic education more widely. SCES works with Head Teachers, teachers and parents and with other Church offices to provide advice, curricular resources and professional development opportunities for teachers. SCES liaises with Scottish Government and all the major education agencies in Scotland. We submitted responses to the two Scottish Government consultations on this issue.

Our views on the Bill in general

We are in agreement with the submission made on behalf of the Bishops’ Conference of Scotland and are opposed to this Bill in principle. In short, we do not believe that the meaning of Marriage, which is a natural and pre-political institution, should be re-defined by Government.

We repeat our commitment to recognise the worth of every human being and to respect the dignity of all people on an equitable basis. However, we hold the view that Marriage should continue to be recognised by the State as a unique relationship, embodying the complementary natures of male and female and ordered towards the procreation of children.

This is the understanding of Marriage which is shared and respected by most people across the world. It is deeply rooted in our culture and our legal system, with its origins stretching back to ancient times. We should pause and carefully think through the ramifications of any re-definition of its meaning.

We recognise that the State already recognises same sex partnerships though the civil registration of Civil Partnerships and that this provision confers all the legal protections associated with Marriage.

For the avoidance of any doubt it is important to emphasise that Catholic schools are inclusive communities which cherish the lives of all their pupils. While teachers in Catholic schools explicitly offer Christian teaching on a range of moral and ethical issues, including the nature of Marriage, they do not judge young people whose family situations may not reflect this teaching.

Unintended consequences of this proposed legislation

a) for teachers in Catholic schools

We have specific concerns that the introduction of this legislation may lead to particular consequences for teaching and for teachers in Catholic schools.

The Scottish Government has offered assurances that the faith curriculum of Catholic schools will not be changed by this legislation. However, recent history demonstrates that political assurances alone offer no protection when Equality legislation is used to challenge practices which are deemed to breach the rights of individuals (cf Catholic Adoption agencies). This suggests a need for specific legal protections to accompany this legislation.

There is every likelihood that Councils, in complying with the Public Sector Equality Duty, will develop corporate policies which will champion the need to “advance equality of opportunity” uniformly at the expense of the protection of religion or belief. Such corporate policies may place considerable strain on Head Teachers and teachers in denominational schools where the content of all religious, ethical and moral teaching is explicitly based on Catholic doctrine.

For this reason it is vital that the legislation, and any subsequent guidance to education authorities and schools, makes explicit the current legislative position that the “denominational authorities” have the right to determine the faith aspects of the curriculum in denominational schools. Further, we urge that specific legal protection be offered to teachers to prevent their teaching of the Christian doctrine of Marriage being challenged as being “discriminatory” or “homophobic”.

Parents who sincerely believe that the true state of Marriage can only be realised in the union of a man and a woman may be prevented from educating their children in that belief. Some legal advice suggests that parents would have their right to have their children educated in accordance with their religious convictions trumped by Equalities legislation were they to object to certain materials or teaching approaches being used to promote beliefs about Marriage which contradict their own.

b) for teachers in non-denominational schools

We are fearful that teachers in all schools may be compelled by their employers to conform to a new orthodoxy when teaching about Marriage, despite their own sincere conscientious objections. We urge the Scottish Government to offer greater protection to teachers than their current exhortations for Councils to follow “good employment practice”.

Conclusion

Our concerns are not narrow in their scope and they do not merely represent our particular ‘denominational’ interests. We believe that this issue has huge implications for the common good of society as a whole and we fear that its ramifications are not being fully anticipated.

John Brown
Scottish Catholic Education Service
25 September 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
AMENDMENT TO THE UK EQUALITY ACT 2010

Introduction

1. This note has been agreed between the United Kingdom (UK) and Scottish Governments.

2. The Scottish Government has made it clear that if same sex marriage and the religious or belief registration of civil partnerships are introduced in Scotland, no religious or belief body or celebrant would have to carry them out. This recognises that a number of bodies and celebrants have doctrinal objections to same sex marriage.

3. Therefore, the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill (“the Bill”) has a number of protections for religious and belief bodies and celebrants. These are outlined in Annex A.

4. However, the Equality Act 2010 (“the 2010 Act”) is a reserved matter for the UK Government. The 2010 Act makes provision on matters relating to discrimination. The Scottish Government concluded that an amendment was required to the 2010 Act to provide further protection in relation to discrimination. Following discussions with the UK Government, the consultation on the draft Bill included draft modifications to the 2010 Act.

5. This note outlines the approach agreed by the UK and Scottish Governments in relation to amendments to the 2010 Act for Scotland as a consequence of the Scottish Bill. In agreeing this approach, the Governments have taken account of:

   - Comments made by consultees responding to the consultation on the Scottish Bill.
   - The approach taken by the UK Government in the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Bill to amending the 2010 Act.

Approach to amending the 2010 Act outlined in the consultation on the draft Bill

6. Annex A to the last consultation outlined the Scottish Government’s approach to the 2010 Act. In particular, the Scottish Government noted that:

6.1 Section 29 of the 2010 Act makes provision about not discriminating when providing a service.

---

1 Section L2 of Part II of Schedule 5 to the Scotland Act 1988 reserves most aspects of equal opportunities.

2 The consultation on the draft Bill is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2012/12/9433

4 The UK Bill is at http://services.parliament.uk/bills/2013-14/marriagesamesexcouplesbill.html The amendment to the 2010 Act is at clause 2(5) and (6). This amendment relates to “a relevant marriage” which is defined in clause 2(4) by reference to marriages in England and Wales and marriages overseas through UK armed forces.
6.2 Schedule 23 to the 2010 Act already has exemptions for religious and belief bodies from equality requirements relating to sexual orientation but these only apply where it is necessary to comply with the doctrine of the organisation or to avoid conflict with the strongly held convictions of a significant number of the followers of the religion or belief.

6.3 There was a need to amend the 2010 Act to provide further protection in relation to discrimination for individual celebrants with religious or belief objections to same sex marriage and the registration of civil partnerships, even if the body to which they belong does not share these objections. As indicated above, the consultation on the draft Scottish Bill included a modification to the 2010 Act accordingly.

Views from consultees

7. Consultees had a number of comments on the proposed amendment to the 2010 Act, including:

7.1 The amendment to the 2010 Act is not yet in place and cannot be guaranteed, as it relates to a reserved matter outwith the control of the Scottish Government.

7.2 There could still be the possibility of claims relating to sex discrimination.

7.3 There could be concerns about the lack of protection being offered to persons such as Church or Mosque elders and Church organists who could be involved or affected if a same sex marriage took place.

7.4 There was a need to protect religious buildings. An example given was of a celebrant from one congregation who had previously solemnised an opposite sex marriage in a building normally used by a different congregation asking to use the building again to solemnise a same sex marriage.

7.5 It was uncertain what protection there would be for religious bodies offering pre-marital counselling and marriage support services.

7.6 The amendment to the 2010 Act on which the Scottish Government had consulted was narrow in that it related to “conflict with the approved celebrant’s religious or philosophical beliefs”. This, for example, excludes the possibility of a religious celebrant refusing to solemnise a same sex marriage in order to preserve the peace of his or her congregation.

7.7 The Scottish Bill does not make it clear that a religious or belief body may only nominate a celebrant with his or her consent and it also does not specify that there is no duty on any celebrant to allow themselves to be nominated and/or to remain registered.
The approach taken in the UK Bill

8. Relevant amendments to the 2010 Act are at clauses 2(5) and (6) of the UK Bill.

9. Clause 2(6) of the Bill provides that a person does not contravene section 29 only because the person:

9.1 Does not conduct a relevant marriage.

9.2 Is not present at a relevant marriage.

9.3 Does not carry out a relevant marriage.

9.4. Does not otherwise participate in a relevant marriage.

9.5 Does not consent to a relevant marriage being conducted.

10. “Relevant marriage” is defined in clause 2(4) of the Bill and relates to marriages in England and Wales and to armed forces marriage overseas. Therefore, same sex marriages in Scotland are not covered by this amendment to the 2010 Act and an amendment for Scotland is required.

11. Some of the terms used in clause 2(6) are specific to marriage law in England and Wales and relate to functions which do not exist in Scots marriage law. In particular:

11.1 Being “present at” is a reference to functions carried out on religious premises by persons working for religious bodies rather than by civil registrars. There is no direct equivalent of this in Scots marriage law.

11.2 “Consent” relates to consenting to a building being registered for the solemnisation of marriage. Again, this is not a feature of Scots marriage law.

12. Clause 2(5) of the UK Bill amends section 110 of the 2010 Act, in respect of a “relevant marriage”. The purpose of this amendment is to ensure that chaplains employed by secular bodies are not vulnerable to claims by colleagues arising under Part 5 of the 2010 Act (work). Such a claim might possibly arise, for example, if a university offers staff the facility of getting married in its chapel, but the chaplain is opposed to same sex marriage and refuses to take part. The amendment stops such a claim arising.
The planned approach in the light of the Scottish consultation and the UK Bill

General

13. The UK and Scottish Governments have agreed that if the Scottish Bill should receive Royal Assent, necessary changes to UK legislation, including amendments to the 2010 Act, would be made by an Order made by UK Ministers under section 104 of the Scotland Act 1998\(^5\).

14. The Scottish Government will not commence provisions of the Scottish Bill relating to same sex marriage and the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships until the amendments to the 2010 Act are in place.

15. The amendments to the 2010 Act will reflect that:

15.1 As well as same sex marriage, the Scottish Bill is introducing the religious and belief registration of civil partnership.

15.2 Under the Scottish Bill, same sex marriage and civil partnership ceremonies can be carried out by religious and belief celebrants.

The Scottish Bill

16. In relation to the Scottish Bill, the Scottish Government considers that a wide range of protections, outlined in Annex A, are in place. These are outlined in Annex A and centre around an opt-in system. In addition, the Bill has a number of “no obligation” provisions, including making it clear that there is no duty under the Bill on a celebrant who is authorised to solemnise same sex marriage or register civil partnership to carry out such ceremonies.

Basis of amendments to the 2010 Act

17. The Scottish Government agrees with points made by consultees that the amendment to the 2010 Act should not be restricted to cases where solemnising a same sex marriage or registering a civil partnership would conflict with the celebrant’s religious or philosophical beliefs. Similarly, the Scottish Government agrees with points made by consultees that the amendment to the 2010 Act should not be restricted to cases of sexual orientation discrimination.

18. Therefore, in line with clause 2(6) of the UK Bill, the amendment to the 2010 Act for Scotland will provide that a religious or belief celebrant does not contravene section 29 of the 2010 Act by refusing to solemnise a same sex marriage or register a civil partnership for the reason that the marriage or civil partnership is a legally recognised union of a same sex couple.

Protecting persons in addition to the celebrant

19. The Scottish Government has considered carefully points made by consultees about protection for persons other than the celebrant who may normally be expected to be present at marriage ceremonies. As noted above, some of the provisions in the UK Bill relate to official functions under English and Welsh marriage law for which there is no direct equivalent in Scotland. As a result, no such protection for Scotland is required either.

20. In addition, the Scottish Government considers that protections for those objecting to same sex marriage and the religious or belief registration of civil partnerships need to be balanced with the rights of LGBT people. For example, the Government would not consider it appropriate to exempt chauffeurs taking people to a same sex wedding or civil partnership from equality requirements or to exempt hotel staff who lay out a room before a same sex marriage or civil partnership takes place there. Similarly, the Government would not exempt secular buildings (eg hotels) from equality requirements.

21. However, the Scottish Government does consider it reasonable to exempt from equality requirements persons who are an integral part of the religious or belief aspects of the ceremony. This could cover, for example, the organist, the choir and the choirmaster who are playing an integral part in the religious or belief ritual of the wedding service: eg at a church. Therefore, the amendment to the 2010 Act for Scotland will, in line with clause 2(6) of the UK Bill, cover persons who play an integral part in the religious or belief aspects of the marriage or civil partnership ceremony.

22. As noted in paragraph 7.5, some consultees asked about protection for religious bodies providing pre-marital courses. The Scottish Government considers that existing protection in this area is sufficient. Under paragraph 2(3) of Schedule 23 to the 2010 Act, a religious or belief organisation does not contravene Parts 3, 4 or 7 of the Act (about services, premises and associations) so far as relating to religion or belief or sexual orientation only by:

- restricting participation in activities undertaken by the organisation or on its behalf or under its auspices; or
- restricting the provision of goods, facilities or services in the course of activities undertaken by the organisation or on its behalf or under its auspices.

23. These restrictions are permitted in relation to sexual orientation only if they are necessary to comply with the doctrine of the organisation or to avoid conflict with the strongly held convictions of a significant number of the followers of the religion or belief.

24. The restrictions cannot be used by an organisation whose sole or main purpose is commercial.
25. The Scottish Government considers that these existing provisions in the 2010 Act already provide sufficient protection against discrimination actions for religious or belief bodies who wish to restrict access to marital courses which they run to opposite sex couples only.

Protection for religious and belief buildings

26. The Scottish Government has considered carefully points made by consultees on protection of religious and belief buildings. As paragraphs 54 and 55 of Annex A to the consultation indicated, paragraph 2(3)(d) of Schedule 23 to the 2010 Act provides that a religious or belief organisation does not contravene Parts 3, 4 or 7 of the Act (about services, premises and associations) so far as relating to religion or belief or sexual orientation, by restricting the use of premises owned or controlled by the organisation. Such restrictions in the context of sexual orientation may only be imposed if necessary to comply with the doctrine of the organisation or to avoid conflict with strongly held convictions of a significant number of followers.

27. A religious or belief body which is against same sex marriage and the religious or belief registration of civil partnership can rely on the existing provisions of the 2010 Act so that premises they own or control cannot be used for same sex ceremonies. However, this protection may not be available where a body has opted into same sex marriage generally.

28. In particular, the current protection may not be available where a minister of religion (or other person or body controlling the use of religious or belief premises) who is a member of a religious or belief body which has opted in advises a same sex couple that they cannot have their marriage ceremony or civil partnership in the premises because the ceremony would be a same sex marriage or a civil partnership.

29. Therefore, the Government intends that the amendment of the 2010 Act for Scotland will provide that a person controlling the use of religious or belief premises does not contravene section 29 of the 2010 Act by refusing to allow the premises to be used for a same sex marriage or a civil partnership.

Gender reassignment

30. The amendment to the 2010 Act on which the Government consulted extended an existing provision at paragraph 25 of Schedule 3. Paragraph 25 of Schedule 3 provides that “an approved celebrant (A) does not contravene section 29, so far as relating to gender reassignment discrimination, only by refusing to solemnise the marriage of a person (B) if A reasonably believes that B’s gender has become the acquired Gender Recognition Act 2004”.

31. The intention was and remains that this provision will be extended to cover the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships as well. Therefore, the amendment to the 2010 Act for Scotland will make this change.
Chaplains working for secular bodies

32. As noted at paragraph 12 above, clause 2(5) of the UK Bill amends the 2010 Act in relation to chaplains working for secular employers. The amendment to the 2010 Act for Scotland will include a similar amendment, covering both the solemnisation of same sex marriage and the registration of civil partnership.

Family and Property Law Team
Scottish Government
June 2013
ANNEX A: PROTECTIONS IN THE SCOTTISH BILL FOR RELIGIOUS OR BELIEF BODIES AND CELEBRANTS

Same sex marriage

1. Section 10 of the Scottish Bill makes amendments to the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 ("the 1977 Act") including amendments on who may solemnise a same sex marriage.

2. Under the proposed section 8(1B) of the 1977 Act, there are three ways in which a celebrant can be authorised to solemnise a same sex marriage:
   2.1 through his or her religious or belief body being prescribed by regulations made by the Scottish Ministers;
   2.2 through being nominated to the Registrar General;
   2.3 through a temporary authorisation granted by the Registrar General.

3. The Scottish Ministers can only prescribe a religious or belief body under section 8 of the 1977 Act, as amended, if the body requests to be designated (section 8(1C) of the 1977 Act, as added by section 10 of the Bill, refers).

4. Therefore, if there is no request, there will be no designation. The Scottish Ministers will only designate religious or belief bodies where it is clear that all of their celebrants wish to solemnise same sex marriage.

5. Where a body has decided that it wishes to solemnise same sex marriage but not all of its celebrants wish to do so, it may nominate celebrants to the Registrar General, under section 9 of the 1977 Act as amended by section 11 of the Bill.

6. Under section 12 of the 1977 Act, as amended by section 12 of the Bill, a member of a religious or belief body may seek temporary authorisation for a celebrant (i) to solemnise specific same sex marriage(s) or (ii) to solemnise same sex marriages for a specific period of time. The Registrar General may only grant authorisation to a celebrant for a specific period of time if the religious or belief body of which the person is a member is either prescribed by the regulations or has nominated members to solemnise same sex marriage.

7. In addition, section 8(1D) of the 1977 Act, as added by section 10 of the Bill, provides that nothing in subsection (1B)(a) or (1C)(a):
   7.1 imposes a duty on any religious or belief body to request to be prescribed by regulations;
   7.2 imposes a duty on any religious or belief body to nominate any of its members to be registered as empowered to solemnise same sex marriages;
   7.3 imposes a duty on any person to apply for temporary authorisation;
   7.4 imposes a duty on any person who is an approved celebrant in relation to same sex marriages to solemnise such marriages.
Religious and belief civil partnerships

8. Section 22 of the Bill introduces the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships.

9. The arrangements for authorising celebrants to register civil partnerships will be along the same lines as the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise same sex marriage.

10. Therefore, under section 94A of the Civil Partnership Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”), as inserted, by section 22(13) of the Bill, a celebrant can be authorised:

10.1 through his or her religious or belief body being prescribed by regulations made by the Scottish Ministers;

10.2 through being nominated to the Registrar General;

10.3 through a temporary authorisation granted by the Registrar General.

11. The Scottish Ministers can only prescribe a religious or belief body if the body requests to be designated (section 94A(2) of the 2004 Act refers).

12. Therefore, if there is no request, there will be no designation. The Scottish Ministers will only designate religious or belief bodies where it is clear that all of their celebrants wish to register civil partnerships.

13. Where a body has decided that it wishes to register civil partnerships but not all of its celebrants wish to do so, it may nominate celebrants to the Registrar General, under section 94B of the 2004 Act.

14. Under section 94E of the 2004 Act, as inserted by section 22(13) of the Bill, a member of a religious or belief body may seek temporary authorisation for a celebrant (i) to register specific civil partnership(s) or (ii) to register civil partnerships for a specific period of time. The Registrar General may only grant authorisation to a celebrant for a specific period of time if the religious or belief body of which the person is a member is either prescribed by the regulations or has nominated members to register civil partnerships.

15. In addition, section 94A(3) of the 2004 Act provides that nothing in section 94A(1)(a) or (2)(a):

15.1 imposes a duty on any religious or belief body to request to be prescribed by regulations;

15.2 imposes a duty on any religious or belief body to nominate any of its members to be registered as empowered to register civil partnerships;

15.3 imposes a duty on any person to apply for temporary authorisation;

15.4 imposes a duty on any person who is an approved celebrant in relation to civil partnerships to register civil partnerships.
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The Scottish Independent Advocacy Alliance supports the Bill as a step towards further equality in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

We believe that the law should treat all marriages as equal and welcomes the Bill as an effort to achieve this.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

The SIAA agrees with the proposals for authorising religious and belief celebrants to solemnise same-sex marriages in civil, religious and belief ceremonies. We believe that religious and belief bodies should be allowed, but not required, to conduct same-sex marriages. While we recognise that unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, we agree in principal with the opt-in process which will allow civil, religious and belief bodies to conduct same-sex marriages if they so choose. We feel that this process will protect and support freedom of religion and belief. We also support the proposed amendment to the Equality Act 2010 which makes clear that in opting out neither the individual religious or belief celebrant, nor the religious body, breach equality law.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Both marriage and civil partnership should be open to all couples and civil partnerships should be able, but not required, to be changed into marriage. The SIAA welcomes the proposed legislation as a significant move forwards, but would like the process for changing a civil partnership into a marriage to be a simpler one. We believe that a civil partnership should be able to be changed into a marriage regardless of where it has been registered and that same-sex couples who are non-residents should be able to come to Scotland to get married, including those who are already in civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

The SIAA agree that same-sex and opposite-sex marriages should be allowed to take place anywhere agreed by the couple and the registrar. This should also include religious premises if the religious premises are willing to host them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

We fully support the Scottish Government’s plans to revise the gender recognition process so that people who are married or in a civil partnership can obtain full gender recognition without needing to divorce or dissolve their civil partnership. Again, we feel that the process should be simplified and disagree with the requirement for a second marriage ceremony. This should be consistent for all applicants who are married or in a civil partnership regardless of being registered within or outwith Scotland.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The SIAA believe that LGBT people are not being equally considered by the proposals in relation to education. Education should be inclusive, regardless of sexual orientation, gender identity or family situation and should promote equality, diversity and actively discourage discrimination. As such, the SIAA would welcome the revision of sexual education in schools to recognise and include all different types of relationships, including same-sex.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

SIAA believes that everyone has the right to free speech and that this should be protected. Through the measures detailed in the consultation we believe it will effectively protect freedom of speech. We feel that the Bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech and that people will remain free to continue to voice their views publicly however also believe that vocally discriminating against LGBT people does not contribute to a society where people are equal and valued.
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

another representative body

Shaben Begum
Scottish Independent Advocacy Alliance
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The congregations of the Scottish Unitarian Association are strongly in favour of the introduction of this bill.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

No matter where it's held, a Civil Partnership is a legal contract between two people. A Religious Marriage, on the other hand, is a covenant made before God, or in the context of a person’s spiritual understanding, publicly committing to a deep and sacred relationship, beyond the bounds of any human-made law. Every couple - opposite sex or same sex - should have the opportunity to enter into the sacred covenant of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Every couple should have the right to be married within the legitimate religious or belief context which they choose.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebranta faith/belief-based organisation
a faith/belief local group or congregation

Rev Maud Robinson
Scottish Unitarian Association
16 July 2013
We are writing to you on behalf of five children and young people's organisations to express our support for the provisions in the Marriage and Civil Partnership Bill for equal marriage in Scotland. We believe that the Bill will play a significant role in advancing equality in Scotland and creating the country our children and young people wish to see.

Young people have clearly shown they feel strongly about this. The Scottish Youth Parliament's 'Love Equally' and LGBT Youth Scotland's 'M.E.2' are examples of youth-led campaigns which have been at the heart of the call for equal relationship laws for same-sex and mixed sex couples.

We draw your attention to the overwhelming majority of young Scots who have declared their support for equal marriage: in the Scottish Youth Parliament’s Youth Manifesto consultation, the Scottish Social Attitudes Survey, in opinion polls and by responding to the Scottish Government’s 'The Registration of Civil Partnerships/Same Sex Marriage', enormous amounts of young people have time and again made clear their support for marriage equality. In line with Article 12 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) children and young people have the right to have their views taken into account on matters which affect them. We also wish to draw your attention to the concept of the 'evolving capacities of the child' embodied in the UNCRC. This recognises the changing relationships between children and adults as they grow up, and focuses on capacity and children's increasing autonomy rather than age alone. It also gives the State a role as facilitator in helping to achieve appropriate protection for the child and in encouraging their participation in decisions affecting them.

We believe the provisions in the Bill will make an extremely positive difference. This Bill will create an equal Scotland for our children, where their rights are not determined by their sexual orientation or gender identity. Laws governing relationships are one of the few remaining areas in law where discrimination remains legal, and removing the restriction on which couples can choose to celebrate their love by getting married is fundamental to promoting an equal Scotland for children to grow up in.

We believe that creating equality for LGBT people in law would help to tackle homophobic, biphobic and transphobic bullying in schools and more widely amongst young people. We are concerned at the high levels of children and young people bullied because of their perceived sexual orientation or gender identity. Research from LGBT Youth Scotland shows that 69% of LGBT young people had experienced homophobic or biphobic bullying in schools and 77% of transgender young people had experienced transphobic bullying. This bullying has a large impact on young people's successes and life chances; 14% of LGB young people had left education as a result of bullying and 42% of trans young people who had experienced bullying... left education. Removing discrimination in law will help to reduce stigma for LGBT children and young people, and promote their wellbeing.

If same-sex marriage were to be legalised, it would be important that: teachers are expected to follow the GTC’s Code of Professionalism and Conduct in regards to commitment to social justice and inclusion; children and young people’s views on their participation in sexual health lessons are taken into account in line with their rights set out in the UNCRC; and, schools are encouraged to use materials that include LGBT people. We are pleased that the face of the Bill as introduced promotes equality and we ask that any amendments made or guidance provided do not weaken this approach.

We urge the Equal Opportunities Committee not to support any amendments seeking to undermine LGBT inclusion in education or wider society. We recommend that Education Scotland develop comprehensive guidance addressing these potential flashpoints, which would provide a means of recourse for schools, pupils and parents where there is a conflict of views regarding the teaching of equal marriage.

We hope the Committee will listen very carefully to the views of young people and those who work with young people. We would encourage the Committee to undertake or commission a Child Rights Impact Assessment on these proposals, as we believe that it will help to make the child’s perspective more visible.

This Bill is a chance to create a happier, fairer, and equal Scotland, and we hope the Committee will support the provisions of this Bill which can make that better Scotland a reality.

Rob Gowans
Policy and Research Officer
Scottish Youth Parliament
22 August 2013

---

4 Registration of Civil Partnerships Same Sex Marriage: Consultation Analysis, Scottish Government p. 7-9
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Erin Scrutton
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I do not feel there is any need for protection unless someone is forcing them to marry someone of the same sex against their will
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Kim Seabrooke
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Not allowing couples of the same-sex to get married only increases the stress that minority groups face in society. Minority stress has been linked to depression, anxiety disorders, excessive drinking, drug taking, self-harm and violence.
Acceptance and recognition by law and by society can only relieve the symptoms of minority stress as same sex couples can enjoy the freedom and rights that heterosexual couples enjoy. Voting for equal marriage rights is a vote for humanity and compassion, voting against it is a vote to hate and ignorance.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The health of minority groups is not included. An inclusion of the high risks of suicide attempts, self-harm and depression rates that LGBT people have, which is associated with the exclusion LGBT people suffer in society through the common practices of a heterosexual world, may change the minds of people who do not understand the challenges of being LGBT.

Are you responding as...

an academic

Lynsey Semple
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ross Semple
24 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This is something that is slowly but surely making its significance and relevance made known around the world. It is about time that Scotland take the right step forward and not remain in the ignorant dark ages.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Two consenting adults who love each other and are willing to make the commitment to be with each other for as long as they live should be able to get married to one another. The fact that both people may be of the same sex is completely irrelevant, as love is not dictated by genitalia, but by the heart. Scotland should be able to proudly be able to acknowledge that love between same-sex couples and mixed-sex couples are equal.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Philosophical belief celebrants should be able to apply to be able to conduct marriages, like humanist celebrants.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Yes, there should be the option to remain as those who only marry mixed-sex couples, or to marry both mixed-sex couples and same-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

SHOULD THEY WANT TO, I believe a couple should have the right to be able to change their civil partnership to a marriage. This should not be a complex procedure.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I have no strong feelings for this, however the added flexibility is welcome.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

The added option would be welcome.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I am absolutely in support of this. I also believe that there needs to be an amendment in the law that allows transgendered persons to apply for the Gender Recognition Certificate without the consent of their spouse, but rather for when re-registering for an update to the marriage/civil partnership.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There is a strong enough protection for religious organisations to not perform same-sex marriages. However civil registrars should not be able to opt out of performing civil partnerships for personal beliefs, religious or otherwise, as they are performing a civil function on behalf of the state. There should be no legal right given to public service providers to be able to pick and choose who they serve.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is no negative effect on freedom of speech by introducing this bill. People would still be allowed to express their opposition to same-sex marriage, publicly or otherwise.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I strongly believe that the bill should also include civil partnerships for mixed-sex couples. I believe both marriage and civil partnerships should be available to both mixed-sex couples and same-sex couples.

Are you responding as...

a private individual
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Not allowing the same rights to someone or someones based on their sexuality is discrimination.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Fantastic- a great leap forward and gives Scotland something to be proud of.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Giving 'civil partnerships' to same sex couples and 'marriages' to opposite sex couples is still promotes inequality based on someones sexuality and is unfairly discriminating against them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jonathan Service
16 August 2013
4. How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In Opposition

Marriage is the exclusive union of one man and one woman for life. This is fundamental to human nature and attempts to redefine it are beyond the competence of any elected body.

The original consultation demonstrated that this is the belief of a very large majority in Scotland, and it is regrettable that elected politicians have chosen to treat us with contempt by ignoring the responses to the consultation which they held.

Another consultation was held earlier this year. The analysis of responses was published at the same time as the Bill. There should have been an opportunity for the Scottish Parliament and the public to consider this analysis before the Bill was published. The timing invites the inference that responses to the consultation were not taken into account.

5. How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In Opposition

Marriage is the exclusive union of one man and one woman for life. This is fundamental to human nature and attempts to redefine it are beyond the competence of any elected body.

When Baroness Scotland moved the Second Reading of the Civil Partnership Bill in the House of Lords on 22 April 2004, she stated that the Government anticipated that the proportion of committed homosexual couples who were likely to take up the opportunity of a civil partnership might be between 5 and 10 per cent. (HL Deb 22 April 2004 vol 660 col392). Since the Bill became law, experience is demonstrating that the Government was right to expect a low take-up rate. As it is proposed to give homosexual couples an alternative form of legal status, the numbers taking up each option must be even smaller. Why is the government proposing to force through a policy which a large majority of the Scottish Electorate disagree with, when so few people are likely to take advantage of it?

In the foreword to “Your Scotland, Your Voice” (2009), Alex Salmond stated:

“I am committed to a new chapter in Scottish politics, one in which the story and the script is written by the people and not just by the politicians.”

Is this an example of how that will work in practice?
6. How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I question the necessity of amending the law to achieve the stated purpose. Those described as “Belief Celebrants” could be treated as “Religious Celebrants” under section 8 or section 9 of the 1977 Act as the Registrar General appears to have sufficient discretion in his interpretation of the term.

7. How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In Support

My response to this question is made without prejudice to my firm belief that marriage is the exclusive union of one man and one woman for life.

My support for the provision is limited to the principle that the default position for religious bodies is that they will not be expected to participate in same sex ceremonies unless they opt in.

8. How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriage?

In Opposition

The proposals will leave same sex couples with two possible forms of legal status for their relationship. At no stage in this or the previous consultation has any justification been put forward for this, nor any explanation of how the two forms of legal status would differ.

No explanation has been offered as to how the rights and responsibilities of a couple in a Civil Partnership will change if they were to enter into a Same Sex “Marriage”. The proposed arrangements for converting a Civil Partnership into a “Marriage” do not appear to require the couple to meet any additional criteria or comply with any additional conditions.

9. How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In Opposition

An essential element of a valid marriage is that the couple give their consent freely and with proper understanding of the commitments which they are making. This requires a setting in which they and the registrar or religious celebrant as the case may be can give their full and undivided attention, without distraction, to the vows which they are exchanging.
From time to time there are press and TV reports of couples marrying during a free fall parachute jump, underwater wearing breathing apparatus or in some other situation where the marriage ceremony cannot have their undivided attention.

For this reason I would retain licensing of premises with a duty on the registrar to ensure their suitability in terms of these criteria.

The time for the fun and celebration is after the ceremony. The ceremony itself is about a serious lifetime commitment “for better, for worse; for richer, for poorer; in sickness and in health.”

10. How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In Opposition

One thing that is clear about Civil Partnership is that it is not a religious ceremony leading to a particular state of life recognised by a religious body.

11. How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In Opposition

My response to this question is made without prejudice to my firm belief that marriage is the exclusive union of one man and one woman for life

The transgender person has changed the marriage or civil partnership in a fundamental way. The person whose gender has not changed must have the absolute right to terminate the existing marriage or civil partnership on the grounds of unreasonable behaviour by the other party.

12. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

My response to this question is made without prejudice to my firm belief that marriage is the exclusive union of one man and one woman for life

Concern has recently been expressed that levels of attainment in Scottish schools are falling behind those in other countries. Schools rely on the assistance of parents in teaching children to read, and young primary school children bring their reading books home each evening. If parents refuse to accept reading books containing homosexual propaganda, a decline in reading attainment will inevitably follow.

Guidance does not provide enough protection for the rights of parents. The Scottish Government must extend the right of withdrawal, which currently only applies to sex education and religious education, to cover all lessons which may endorse same-sex marriage. There should also be changes to the law to put a duty on schools to inform parents of lessons that will deal with the definition of marriage.
The law must ensure that lessons dealing with same-sex marriage must treat it as a controversial issue on which there is no consensus in society, like abortion or a party political matter.

The Scottish Government must make explicit in law that belief in traditional marriage should be properly respected and that those expressing this view, whether pupils or parents, must not be disadvantaged within schools.

To protect teachers, the Equality Act 2010 must be amended to ensure that belief in "traditional marriage" is one that is protected under employment discrimination law. Teachers should not be forced to endorse same-sex marriage in the classroom against their sincere beliefs, and there should be reasonable accommodation for teachers who believe in traditional marriage.

13. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

My response to this question is made without prejudice to my firm belief that marriage is the exclusive union of one man and one woman for life

Section 14 of the Bill, the Scottish Government's attempt to protect free speech, is virtually worthless. It is drafted so narrowly that it only applies to Part 1 of the Bill itself — the technical changes to the law of marriage. Perhaps it is important to use the law to suppress dissent when a government chooses to impose an ideologically driven law in the face of a large majority who oppose it. But the free speech concerns are not with marriage law directly. The problem is the impact of the redefinition of marriage on how other existing laws, particularly public order law, will be applied. In a completely new situation where marriage has been redefined, new protections are needed within public order legislation, to reflect that there are various, deeply-held views in our society about what marriage should mean. If Alex Salmond is going to keep his promise to protect free speech, he has to do far more than is proposed.

As a means of protecting free speech, as well as freedom of conscience, employment discrimination law must be amended to outlaw employers from punishing employees for their views on traditional marriage. The Scottish Government must ensure that the Equality Act 2010 is amended to specifically include beliefs about marriage under the protected characteristic of religion or belief so that such discrimination is unlawful. Already, a police chaplain has been removed from his post because he expressed his personal beliefs about marriage. There will be more cases like this if marriage is redefined.

14. Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Marriage, as traditionally understood, was linked to the procreation of children. Their parents, one man and one woman, were joined in a permanent exclusive union which provided a stable family unit in which the children could be brought up.

I can find no reference to the procreation and upbringing of children in the Bill itself, the Policy Memorandum or the Explanatory Notes which accompany it.
The Policy Memorandum states that the principles behind this Bill are: equality of opportunity; freedom of religion, belief, and expression; and upholding the dignity and solemnity of marriage ceremonies and civil partnership registration in Scotland.

The welfare of children is not mentioned in the Memorandum.

Even before the Bill was introduced, it has become clear that the freedom of religion, belief, and expression of those who are conscientiously opposed to the proposal are being curtailed.

Stephen Shaw
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Frankly, I would be aghast if my son grew up in a country where love wasn’t equal for everyone. He’s under two at the moment. By the time he is old enough to understand, I want him to take for granted that we can fall in love - and live complete, fulfilling lives - with whomever we choose. I want the legal framework to reflect and endorse that position.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I don’t want anyone to be able to opt for bigotry, whether by failing to opt in or by opting out.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

I think it should be a discretionary choice for existing civil partners.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I respectfully suggest that such concerns are unworthy of us as a modern society. Some people had concerns about the abolition of slavery, or Women's suffrage; these people are in the same camp.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Dave Shedden
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

A small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill in order to give the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g) for mixed-sex couples. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the Ôhusband and wifeÕ gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

The bill should be amended to allow couples in a civil partnership registered outside Scotland to marry without first having to dissolve their civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. Provision for simpler medical evidence requirements in the case of long-term transitioned people (transitioned for at least six years) should be added to the bill. The minimum age for applying for gender recognition should be brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. Whilst no teachers should be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, they must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, which is equally controversial for some people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

There should be legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Alison M. Shields
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This bill gives all couples regardless of sexual orientation the right to a state marriage and where appropriate and when the religious organisation wishes to do so conduct ceremonies for the couples they wish to wed. Currently under Civil Partnerships same sex couples have no right to a religious ceremony, they are banned. In my view anyone should be able to have a religious ceremony for their wedding as long as the religious body is willing to do so. This means that all couples in law have the right to practice their religion or faith to the full of their extent if their faith wishes to conduct same sex marriages. Their should be no boundary in law by faith, gender and sexual orientation.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I support same sex marriage as I believe this bring a more just, fair and equal Scotland where people in this country regardless or faith, gender or sexual orientation have the same rights within law.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Religion is a belief in something such as God or in others many God's. If someone has another belief then this could also be argued to be similar to religion.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

As long as a religious body opts-in to preform same sex marriages then I am in support of this. This will give everyone a religious right to get married but also protect religions that wish not to preform them.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This gives all couples regardless of sexual orientation to have a wedding that they can truly call personal.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

Civil partnerships should be changed to civil marriages and if any person wishes to have a religious ceremony they can do this with the consent of the church or religious organisation.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People and religious organisations should be allowed their freedom of speech in support or opposition. This Bill would allow people of same sex to have the choice to have a religious ceremony like their heterosexual counterparts.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Many people refer to this as re-defining marriage. I would disagree as many cultures, religions and faiths have different definitions on marriage. The Government and Parliament's job should be to ensure that people can marry regardless of sexual orientation in a civil marriage and allow this further to religious organisations if the wish to do so.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

William Shirkie
Student
22 August 2013
Legislation for Same-sex Marriage.

The Scottish Parliament is now well experienced in legislating for a range of matters under its devolved powers. However, in proposing to legislate for same-sex unions - and, in the process to re-define Marriage - it is engaging with an issue not simply of law and regulation but of fundamental personal relations and what it is to be human. It will deal with deeply-rooted human realities which will demand the greatest respect and sensitivity. The passions aroused in our society on both sides of the debate are evidence of that. Therefore, I respectfully ask this Committee and the Parliament it serves to consider most carefully the attached statement and its accompanying proposal since they attempt to address one core issue in this matter, namely, the need to respect and safeguard the human rights of all concerned.

May I add one further consideration. The Committee will be aware that legislation on this matter is pending in a number of national Parliaments around the world where it is proving to be as controversial as in Scotland. If it were to legislate along the lines I propose, this Parliament could give a lead in satisfying the human rights of both heterosexual and LGBT couples.
Concerning : Proposed legislation for Same-Sex Marriage.

A belief in the intrinsic worth of every human being is widely shared in Scotland. Each individual, female and male, has the right to be respected and accepted as she/he is. “Acceptance” is a crucially important concept. It goes far beyond “tolerance”. A person who feels accepted enjoys an experience immeasurably richer than one who is simply tolerated - they know themselves to be valued as human beings. Acceptance and valuing are the bedrock of human rights.

Human beings are sexed beings. Their Sexuality, which distinguishes them as female and male, is a key defining feature of their identity. Sociability - the deeply-rooted urge to form relationships with other human beings - is another key defining feature of their identity.

Human beings know that, individually, they are incomplete. Alone, they cannot experience the fullness of what it is to be human; nor can they assure, by natural means, their survival as a species. Heterosexual attraction - the impulse to form relationships across the gender divide - is a powerful expression of their sexuality and sociability.

All human relationships are, therefore, by their nature sexual. They cannot be otherwise. A person’s sexuality impacts inevitably on every aspect of their character, personality and behaviour. It is fundamental to who they are.

Current understandings of Sexuality in our society are, unfortunately, limited, partial and reductionist. Sexuality is seen as synonymous with Genitality - the urge for coital union - which is only one part of our greater sexual reality. That attitude ignores completely the deeper richness and complexity of female-ness and male-ness which remain disregarded and unexplored. When a woman and a man enter into a committed, life-long, self-giving love relationship they go far beyond their genital appetite and reproductive ambition and into the deeper mystery of the other person as a person. They cross the gender divide seeking to experience with each other that human completeness which is denied to them as individuals. For the rest of their lives they engage with the challenge of gender difference and accept the responsibility of parenthood if/when it happens.

Heterosexual relationships long pre-date civilised societies and organised religion. However, for millennia, major religions have recognised in them an image of the Creator and have valued them as sacred. Civil societies, incorporating people of all faiths and of none have recognised them as building blocks of society, sources of social stability and have accorded them a distinctive legal status with attendant rights and a title: Marriage.

Same-sex relationships also have a long history. Two people of the same gender, drawn to each other by a strong inner impulse rooted in their distinctive sexual reality, commit themselves to a life-long love relationship. Society in the past has not given to such relationships the respect and value they deserve nor the appropriate rights and title. For many years, people of the LGBT orientations have struggled to win social and legal acceptance for their distinctive identity and life-style. They have demanded to be recognised as GAY - Good as You - not Same as you. Their Gay Pride celebrations proclaim their wish to be accepted as equal but different in our society.

There are, therefore, two compelling reasons not to call same-sex unions “Marriage”:

* Firstly, insofar as they do not bridge the gender gap and do not have the capacity to produce offspring, same-sex unions are fundamentally different from Marriage. To underline that difference is not to make a value judgement between them, nor to disparage one in relation to the other. It is simply to assert the obvious.

* Secondly, to conflate same-sex relationships with those of heterosexual couples i.e., to give them the title “Marriage”, would be to deny same-sex couples the distinctive identity for which they have struggled. It would deprive them of the transparent legal and public acceptance which has been their cherished goal. Society owes it to them to respect their human rights by according their relationship a fitting, distinctive and dignified legal title with its attendant civil and legal rights.

The effect of that would be two-fold:

* to affirm the traditional dignity, status and title of Marriage;

* to confer a new and honourable legal status and title on same-sex unions.
Proposal

That the status of heterosexual Marriage be formally recognised and affirmed, together with its existing social, civil and fiscal rights.

That legislation be brought forward, as planned, providing for LGBT couples a legal relationship enjoying equivalent rights to those of heterosexual married couples. That that relationship and legal status should bear the title of ............................................

5 September 2013

* See Appendix.
Proposed legislation for Same-sex Marriage - Appendix.

The choice of a legal title - other than Marriage - for same-sex unions will require some care. The word chosen will need to be appropriate and acceptable to the LGBT community whose opinions should be ascertained by means of a consultation. A small-scale, random canvass of people, including couples who might be affected, yielded these suggestions:

- Wed(ded)
- Gayed
- Partnered
- Gaietied
- (Be)trothed

Some affected couples did not want “Marriage”. Others wanted “Marriage”. Others were intrigued by the proposal but relaxed about the title chosen.

If the proposal for a new title were accepted, its choice would be a matter of urgency during the legislative process.
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

My partner and I have spent most of our lives living with laws that discriminate against us as gay men so this Bill is not-before-time.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It is simply a matter of equality. The choices that heterosexual people enjoy should be available to LGBT folk as well.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

People should have that choice. Civil Partnership registered outside Scotland should be recognised.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People's personal beliefs and values change more slowly than do laws. BUT civil registrars and teachers are appointed to provide a public service and so should not able to deny lgbt folk marriage or avoid inclusion of same gender relationships in relationships education.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Everyone has a right to his or her opinion. However, speech and behaviour that seeks to threaten LGBT folk should not be tolerated.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jeremy Slater
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Liam Smart
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Looking at this bill, specifically in relation to Equal Opportunities, it is actually rather sneaky. By creating a new category of same sex marriage, the Bill has the unintended consequence of legislating into existence a brand new form of discrimination. Straight couples will only able to marry, whereas same sex couples will be able to either marry or enter a civil partnership. The effectual result is that straight couples have fewer rights in law than same sex couples. This is logically and legally untenable. If the law is to be changed to allow same-sex couples to marry, then the only just and fair way to avoid equal opportunities discrimination is to make both marriage and civil partnerships available to all couples (gay or straight) at the same time and in the same way. However, the Scottish Government has chosen not to introduce straight civil partnerships at this time because it acknowledges there are major implications for the public purse and there would be a legal requirement to carry out an impact analysis into the costs associated with it. (as well as great social costs for the state due to the likelihood of increased family breakdown, I might add). If the Scottish government proceeds with the bill in it's current form, it is entirely foreseeable, indeed inevitable, that there will be a future legal challenge to the European Court of Human Rights which will result in the discriminatory parts of the bill being struck down and Scotland being compelled to introduce straight civil partnerships. Since the logical and unavoidable consequence of this bill becoming law is straight civil partnerships, the Scottish government is being legally negligent and financially irresponsible in failing to conduct an impact assessment at this time, before the bill is passed. It’s shoddy and sneaky.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

It's not really needed in any legal sense as all the legal rights are already delivered by civil partnerships. It's causing huge division with no practical benefit. Marriage has never been simply a private contract between two people that just governs the relationship between them as individuals. Marriage is about a couple making a lifelong commitment and making a statement to the wider society that a new family unit has been created and that is beneficial to society as a whole, for the raising of the next generation of children.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition
How do you define what a "belief" is, specifically? Who decides? On what basis? If you can't answer those questions in a way that holds together logically, you realise that this is opening up the institution of marriage to mockery and ridicule.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

I think the assumption that lies behind this part of the bill, completely misunderstands and misrepresents what marriage is. It misses the point. Allowing marriages to be conducted anywhere has the obvious potential to undermine and make a mockery of the institution of marriage. Marriage is not about a one day party called a wedding. It's about a lifelong commitment.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Much of the focus, particularly from politicians, is to stress that ministers will be protected. That's misdirection and missing the point. Unless there is absolute freedom of religion, this impact will affect everybody in society, in any job, not just ministers. Over time, as this new right is extended by case law, believing Christians, muslims and Jews will end up being discriminated against in any job, not just excluded from the public square.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

One of the things I find most frustrating about the way that marriage is currently being redefined in Scots law is something that I suspect few people have yet come to realise, but it has deep implications for us as a country. It’s the way that the Marriage and Civil Partnerships Bill is subtly subverting the very nature of the system of Scottish representative democracy. The reason it’s being allowed to happen is because most people do not understand the fundamental meaning of what government is in Scotland, or the type of democracy that we have. Scotland and the UK don’t just have different legal systems. We also have fundamentally different systems of democracy. England is a parliamentary democracy; sovereignty lies with the Parliament. But Scotland is a representative democracy where the sovereignty lies with the people. In the Scottish system, government is merely an association of all the people of Scotland who organise together and delegate certain powers to an institution to exercise on our collective behalf. So, for example, the sovereignty over Scotland’s natural resources like oil or renewable energy, always lies with the people of Scotland, not the state. We, the people, delegate the power to government to administer those natural resources on our behalf. The government is not free to do whatever it pleases with oil because it is only acting as our representative. The same is true with marriage in Scotland. Marriage existed as a social institution long before the state even came into existence. Sovereignty over marriage always lies with the people, not the state. We, the people, just delegate the administration of marriage to the state. The state is not free to do whatever it pleases with marriage because it is only acting as our representative. Legitimate government cannot exercise any authority that has not been delegated to it by the people, who have the authority to begin with. No matter what side of this debate you are on, we can all agree that the right for same-sex couples to marry does not currently exist. If a new right is going to be created, then the only legal authority that is able to grant that new right is the people of Scotland because that is where the sovereignty lies. The Scottish people might very well be willing to delegate their authority to redefine what marriage is to the state, but the only way to tell is to ask them in a referendum. Unless and until that happens, the Scottish government does not have the authority, from out of nowhere, to just grant someone a non-existent right. That may be how things work in a parliamentary democracy, but it’s not how representative democracy works. The irony in all of this is that the SNP government’s blinkered attempt to railroad this bill through is unwittingly undermining the very basis of Scottish representative democracy by acting in a way that resembles the very worst excesses of the Westminster parliamentary system. It doesn’t hold out much hope that politics in an independent Scotland will be anything other than more of the same. That’s a shame. I had hoped it could have been so much more and so much better.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Alisdair Smith
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
If wished.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Amanda Smith
22 August 2013
I am writing to you regarding the timescale for the committee’s consultation on The Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

It only recently came to my attention that the consultation had been launched the day that the Parliament went into recess and it closes prior to the end of recess which also coincides with the Scottish school holiday period. Whilst there may be some precedent for having a consultation during the Scottish school holidays, I hope you will accept that it may exclude people who wish to respond, not least teachers.

I have also had representation from the North Lanarkshire Muslim Women and Family Alliance with concerns about the timescale and also the language barrier which caused them problems with the government consultation on this matter.

In my own case, the timescale causes difficulty due to staff holidays. Therefore, I would be grateful if you could take this as notice that I wish to put in an official response to the consultation but will not be able to do so fully by the 23rd August. Please advise if there is any problem with that.

Given that committee consultation prior to stage 1 is designed to consider as wide a range as possible of views, I would be grateful for confirmation that schools and other groups who have not been meeting over the school holiday period will be given appropriate time to respond if they indicate their desire to do so.

Thank you for your time regarding this matter.

Elaine Smith MSP
15 August 2013
Introduction

I would not normally submit evidence to a Parliamentary Committee in their stage 1 consideration but in the case of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill I feel compelled to do so, particularly since it is being considered by the Equal Opportunities Committee. I would like to draw to the attention of the committee my experience on equality issues over many years.

I served on the Equal Opportunities Committee from 1999, including as Deputy Convener, for 12 years in total and my commitment to equalities and fighting discrimination has been well-documented over those years. I was also a trade union equalities officer and went on to be branch secretary of Unison Highland for nearly a decade. Therefore, when I say that I do not consider the redefinition of marriage to be a simple equality issue I trust that the committee will accept that I have some knowledge of equality matters and I did not come to that conclusion without a great deal of consideration.

One of the main reasons that I feel obliged to submit evidence to your enquiry is that I have personally been at the forefront of the nasty reaction to anyone expressing dissent on the matter of same sex marriage. Whilst I do not wish to give any further credence to emails, twitter remarks and other so called social media comments by including them in this public document I will make those which I have been able to save available privately if the committee would consider it helpful to see some of the remarks. I will comment further on this later in this document.

Given that same sex marriage is being portrayed as a matter of equality, then it is deeply concerning that anyone with an alternative opinion is facing such vilification and bigotry. It may also act as a disincentive to any MSP’s who are having doubts about the legislation itself, or the principle of redefining marriage, to speak out or question the detail. That is concerning in a modern democracy.

I fully appreciate and share the desire of my parliamentary colleagues to ensure that discrimination against LGBT people in our society is eradicated. However, I do not believe that this legislation will contribute to the just fight against homophobia and discrimination for LGBT people and may even exacerbate it by infringing the rights and freedoms of others.

There is a major focus, in the push for this legislation to be enacted, on the rights of a relatively small number of individuals to pursue their desired outcome of entering into a same sex marriage rather than the already existing civil partnership. However, human beings are both individual and social and our social order depends upon cooperation and consideration of the needs and rights of all. The rush to legislate on such a controversial issue may end up with chaotic outcomes which will have a detrimental impact on society as a whole.
Background to the legislation

Overall, I am extremely concerned about the introduction of this legislation in Scotland and feel the whole process has lacked the in-depth consultation that is required with the proposal of such a major societal change. This legislative proposal is extremely radical and controversial as evidenced by the 77,000 respondents to the Government’s consultation: the largest number responding to any consultation to date.

It seems, then, that the proposal by the Scottish Government to re-define marriage, following on from the Tory/Liberal Government position at Westminster, has taken place with unnecessary haste and with no clear manifesto commitment by the SNP, who are in Government, or the two main opposition parties. Of course there are times when emergency legislation is required and as such there may have been no manifesto commitment. However, on an issue such as this which is not an emergency but has far reaching consequences for society it is very unusual for it to be brought forward in this manner.

Due to this there should have been full and frank exchanges of views across the country with the Government holding public meetings as they have on other issues and consideration given to a referendum. Instead, the Government’s written consultation was then quickly followed by a legislative proposal despite the fact that the majority of all respondents opposed changing the law to allow same sex marriage. Whilst any Government for good reasons may not feel obliged to follow the majority verdict on a consultation, it should at least indicate a need for further in-depth engagement rather than a rush to legislate.

This action by the Government also completely disregards the evidence received during the civil partnership legislative process where civil partnerships were considered “separate but equal” by the Equality Network who went on to point out that: “Unlike the Netherlands who introduced same sex marriage in 2001, marriage in Scotland is not entirely secular. Religious celebrants from a variety of faiths conduct legal marriages in Scotland, and even in the Executive’s most recent family law white paper proposals, certain detailed aspects of the proposal for family law still relate to the requirements of religious faiths. There is no doubt that religious organisations in Scotland would wish to have a say in the extension of marriage itself to same-sex couples, and this is something that would require debate and discussion over some period.”
http://archive.scottish.parliament.uk/business/committees/historic/equal/reports-03/eoc03-resp-01-01.htm

Given that the redefinition of marriage is such a controversial matter, which should have been robustly debated throughout the country, it seems curious then that it has been rushed through, seemingly promoted by lobbyists and quangos, and with no opposition party scrutiny of the Government’s proposal.

The tactic of encouraging MSP’s to sign a pledge in support of “Equal Marriage” may also have made it difficult for some to then decide against supporting the legislation even although they would not have seen the detail when signing this pledge nor have considered their own constituents views or the results of the consultation exercise. However, it is of course perfectly legitimate for any member to alter their position.
when the facts change or the detail of legislation raises concerns. Some members signed with the specific condition that they would only support same sex marriage if religious celebrants were not forced into carrying out ceremonies. Given that even the Government seem unable to guarantee that and are seeking further protections from Westminster, as well as the legal challenge proposed against the Church of England, it is difficult to see how that condition can be met by this legislation. I will return in more detail to this issue later.

The committee may wish to consider whether the lobbying tactic of persuading MSP's to sign a pledge some time ago played a major part in this legislation being introduced so rapidly with no opposition scrutiny at an early stage.

Government Consultation

I would like to make some specific comment on the process. The initial Government consultation on the Bill can be easily misinterpreted and more worryingly, misrepresented.

Question 10 of the consultation was the first, and most fundamental, question about same sex marriage and therefore all postcards, standard forms and prepared letters were included in the responses. To question 10, ‘do you believe that the law in Scotland should be changed to allow same sex marriage’, 67% of all respondents said no (or 64% if you only include those currently living in Scotland).

Question 13 of the consultation, which asked ‘Do you agree with the introduction of same sex marriage both religious and civil’ comprised less than half the respondents because responses such as postcards were not included. In this question 68% of people said yes, a result which would have been very different if all respondents had been included.

Postcards not being included in this question meant the responses could be easily misinterpreted. Furthermore, the exclusion of postcards in Question 13 and other questions no doubt disadvantages those who are not computer literate.

Due to the confusing results on the Government’s consultation, apart from Question 10 which was perfectly straight forward, further in-depth public consultation is undoubtedly required to ensure that the clear views and opinions of the Scottish people on this issue are known before recommending support for the principle of such a major societal change.

I was also concerned when I was approached by the North Lanarkshire Muslim Women and Family Alliance who stated that their members found responding to the consultation particularly difficult given the layout and language barrier.

The Government did, of course, carry out a second consultation between December 2012 and March 2013 but only on their specific proposals for legislation. There were 15,064 respondents to this consultation and an overwhelming majority of these were connected to one of the three main campaigns (73%). A further 16% were amended campaign responses. Only 128 responses were from individuals. The significantly smaller number of respondents could indicate that opinions were not sought widely.
Throughout the country on the detail of the Government’s intentions.
http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2013/06/2782

In considering the Government’s evidence, the Committee may wish to reflect on why postcards were not accepted for many questions in the original consultation and whether this was discriminatory to people who are not computer literate or connected to the internet.

Therefore, due to the fact there was no manifesto commitment by the Government or other main parties, and that the result of the initial consultation response was against the introduction of this legislation, the committee may wish to consider whether it would be reasonable for it to proceed without further in-depth consultation.

Given that similar legislation has been passed by Westminster and that within the year we face a referendum in which the outcome could mean a great many legislative changes, the Committee may wish to consider whether it would be prudent to wait and see how the legislation impacts south of the border before Scottish legislation is enacted.

Changing the essential nature of marriage

I believe the redefinition of marriage is unnecessary and is likely to cause problems for society overall. It is not clear what additional legal rights, if any, same-sex couples would receive from marriage that they do not already from civil partnerships. Also, the Government’s proposal involves different types of marriage for homosexual couples as opposed to heterosexual; so it is not ‘equal’.

Turning to the main issues involved in considering the legitimacy of introducing this legislation, the current nature of marriage should be considered. The reason that marriage is restricted in this country to two people is that it is based on one man and one woman in a complementary union for the possibility of the pro-creation of children. While that possibility of children may not be initiated for various reasons in a marriage, the potentiality is the key factor. This is in tune with the Christian basis of marriage since, until recently, Britain was a Christian country rather than the increasingly secular one that it is becoming.

A secular society should be about pluralism, not about overturning Christian values. Indeed, our society actually adopted Christian values because they are in accord with reason. This explains why so many cultures and faiths share those values and recognise marriage in essentially the same way.

The Government have categorically stated that they have “no intention of allowing polygamous marriages to take place in Scotland.” They go onto cite a case which they agree with whereby a judge in the British Columbia Supreme Court outlined the harms polygamy can cause, however they do not explain their objection in in any detail.
http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2012/12/9433/272395

The Campaign organisations seeking legislation to introduce same sex marriage organise under the banner of “Equal Love”. If that is the argument for change, and marriage is simply about love, then there seems no logical reason for discriminating against more than two people who love each other equally if that is the basis for the drive to redefine marriage. If however, it is part of the secularisation of society then evidence should be considered as to whether a further redefinition is inevitable. This has already been the progression elsewhere in the EU: specifically in the Netherlands where same sex marriage was introduced in 2001. Below is a link to an article published in 2005 stating that Holland had conducted its first ceremony to unite three people in a relationship.
http://www.brusselsjournal.com/node/301

Whilst the Government has said that it has no intention of allowing polygamous marriages as part of this legislation which changes the essential nature of marriage, it has not explained in any detail and with research analysis its reasons for taking that position. Further, if the Government is sincere about it support for ‘equal love’ then it appears to have a contradiction on its hands.

On a wider equality issue and with relevance to this legislative proposal, if Christianity is no longer the framework for society consideration must then be given to what is replacing it. This is an issue explored in the recently published book “Divided Scotland: ethnic friction and Christian crisis” by Professor Tom Gallagher, who described himself recently on Newsnight Scotland as a gay atheist.

Professor Gallagher also comments that “anti-Catholicism remains an option that is acquiring respectability of the kind that it never had for almost a century”. The reaction to Catholic objections to same sex marriage seems to echo that statement. Further, he notes that in Scotland the various Christian denominations came to mutual accommodation over issues like education but he ponders what will happen now in secular Scotland. “In a firmly secular Scottish state run along rationalist principles will there be the same pragmatism, or will it be that ‘shouty’ interest groups decide to go for absolute secular primacy along the lines of what happened in post-1789 France?”
www.argyllpublishing.co.uk

Other implications of redefining marriage have included in Spain the removal of “mother” and “father” from birth certificates to be replaced with the terms “Progenitor A” and “Progenitor B”; the proposal in Mexico City of two year fixed term marriages and the attempts in Canada to legalise polygamy.

The Committee may wish to ascertain why “Equal Love” must be constrained to two people. Further, if marriage is to be redefined from the centuries old understanding of one man and one woman complementary with the potential for procreation, then the committee may wish to determine the basis for restricting it to two people.

The Committee may also wish to consider whether a redefinition of marriage will inevitably lead to further changes, not only for society but also for marriage itself. Undoubtedly there will be consequences both intended and unintended if this legislation is enacted.

It may be helpful to the debate if the Committee could consider how marriage has been redefined in other countries, whether it has been restricted to two persons or widened out and what impact that has had on those societies.
Changing civil partnerships to marriage

Having served on the Equal Opportunities Committee when civil partnerships were introduced, I recall that those giving evidence considered such unions to be different but equal. Therefore, given that legal equality has already been achieved by civil partnerships, it is not clear what benefits the change from civil partnerships to marriage would bring to same sex couples. Additionally, same sex couples who have already entered into civil partnerships may not want to enter into marriage and equally may feel that the proposal that they should change their relationship to marriage is diminishing their legal civil partnership.

When civil partnerships were introduced it was intimated by some groups representing LGBT people that changes to the institution of marriage would not be pursued for various reasons and, in some responses it was proposed that a different form of partnership may be preferable. Indeed, some evidence given to the committee was actually against marriage for same sex couples including that of Ali Jarvis representing Stonewall who said: “We have also had feedback from some people that marriage still has connotations of gender and power, with which a lot of people living in same-sex relationships feel uncomfortable—they would prefer a new type of partnership that better reflects their relationships. We are comfortable saying that civil partnership is probably the best answer.”

http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/parliamentarybusiness/28862.aspx?r=1109&mode=html#iob_4899

The Committee may wish to reflect on previous evidence and consider why civil partnerships are no longer considered by the Government to be equivalent to marriage.

Introducing religion into same sex partnerships

Introducing religious same sex partnerships could cause legal problems for churches who do not want to carry out such unions and believe in traditional Christian marriage of one man and one woman. It is not, in my view, the Government’s job to interfere in the operation of churches, which is what this proposal seems to do. Currently, it is my understanding, that those who have entered into civil partnerships can have a religious blessing if it is within the ethos of the institution or church to do so.

One of the main concerns expressed by my constituents is that of how religious celebrants will be treated if the law is changed to allow same sex religious marriage or civil partnerships. I am personally concerned that there will not be sufficient protection for religious celebrants and I think it is inevitable that when this law is enacted there will be legal challenges. Indeed, there are already reports of such challenges being pursued against the Church of England following the enactment of the Westminster legislation.

My concerns are reinforced by the promises given in the chamber by Ministers when same sex adoption was debated and passed at stage 3. Again, I served on the Equal Opportunities Committee during the passage of that legislation. Parliament was assured that Scottish Ministers did not foresee any ‘unintended consequences’ and that, specifically, Catholic adoption agencies would be able to continue their work; I supported the legislation on that basis. There are currently legal challenges pursuing their closure.
The Government themselves have stated that further protection is needed for celebrants opposed to same sex marriage and, as such, believe that the 2010 Act needs to be amended. This is concerning and requires in-depth scrutiny. Several cases in the European Court of Human Rights show that the Article 9 right of freedom of thought, conscience and religion does not provide protection when there is conflict between Article 9 and other rights.

http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/sites/eng/pages/search.aspx?i=001-115811

The Committee may wish to examine why the Government believes that further protection is required for celebrants and what the consequences would be if that was not possible.

The Committee may wish to explore the reports of legal challenges against the Church of England.

The Committee may wish to consider the issue of amendments to the Equality Act 2010.

Protection for those who oppose same sex marriage

The future of marriage in our society should matter to everyone but some people may be uninterested in this legislation as they do not believe it will have any impact on them or they have not considered the possibility of it affecting them.

I previously noted concerns for religious celebrants who do not wish to conduct same sex ceremonies. The potential consequences, of course, would not stop with the ceremony. There are fears for those who may wish to speak out against these proposals and outline their concerns; I will discuss this in further detail later since it appears that anyone speaking out against the redefinition of marriage at the moment has their opinion dismissed by being branded a bigot or homophobic.

The consequences of the legislation will be far reaching and would not just affect religious celebrants but could impact on people right across the country, particularly those with personal religious views. Teachers, local council workers and parents could all fall into categories potentially affected. The possible consequences have been considered by Aiden O’Neill QC and I attach a copy of a document he has produced for the Committee’s interest. Within the document Mr O’Neill advises that it could be within the law for a Catholic school teacher to be dismissed for not teaching about same sex marriage even although it conflicts with their religious beliefs. The Government’s bill as introduced seems to substantiate that. He also claims that an NHS Chaplain could be subject to disciplinary action if he was found to be speaking against same sex marriage outside of work and to his own congregation.

On the specific issue of teachers, there are particular concerns. The Government’s proposal indicates that they would not expect a local authority to take “immediate” disciplinary action against a teacher who expresses concerns about the use of certain educational materials. This then indicates that such disciplinary action could... be taken following “discussion”.

The Government also indicate that they support the right of the Roman Catholic Church to give witness to its faith and further do not have any intention of changing the current position whereby faith aspects of the curriculum in Catholic schools are determined by the Scottish Catholic Education Service. However, that may require specific protection on the face of the bill and also further consideration of how faith schools can remain true to their faith in areas outwith the curriculum.

There is also the issue of parents and what control they have over the information their child receives. I have already been approached by parents with children at non-denominational schools who are concerned about sex education in primary schools. They are aware that they can seek to withdraw their child but are concerned that in doing so their child will then suffer from bullying and be set apart from their peers.

The Government proposal for this legislation is that parents can withdraw their children from sexual health education programmes if they wish. Of course, that assumes that parents will be given full information about such programmes in time to take action. However, the Government has indicated that it does not consider it appropriate to say that issues relating to same sex marriage, same sex relationships and homosexuality should never be raised in primary schools and neither can parents opt their children out of such discussions.

The Committee may wish to consider this matter further with particular regard to the way in which parents would be notified. They might also wish to view some of the books and material already available for use with primary aged children since concerns have been raised about the content by some respondents to the various consultations.

The Committee may wish to consider whether the Government is giving enough protection specifically to Catholic teachers or whether legal challenges could be forthcoming.

The Committee may wish to consider the potential impact on those in society who do not agree with the redefinition of marriage: particularly those who hold that view based on religion or belief.

The Committee may wish to consider inviting Aiden O’Neill QC to give oral evidence.

The impact on freedom of speech

I am deeply concerned about the impact on freedom of speech and freedom of religion even before this legislation is enacted. I would like to take this opportunity to share my own personal experience.

As outlined previously, prior to the summer recess I stated my intentions to vote against the proposals to redefine marriage and because of that I was subjected to a torrent of personal abuse: mostly on so-called social media but also via email. This was particularly regrettable since the Minister responsible for this Bill said he hoped “the debate will be conducted in a good spirit and civilised manner, with respect on all sides”.

Unfortunately, based on my own personal experience, this has not been the case resulting in the debate being shut down with those opposing the legislation, including elected members of Parliament, being branded ‘homophobic’. Indeed, I was personally labelled ‘homophobic’ and ‘bigoted’ when I merely stated my intention to vote against the plans to redefine marriage, a decision in tune with the wishes of the majority of constituents who have contacted me.

It remains to be seen whether the actual legislative proposal can be considered and scrutinised by Scotland’s parliamentarians without the hysteria and bigotry directed at those opposed to the redefinition by some proponents of the bill. On that specific issue I am concerned that the only opportunity for all members of Parliament to debate the issue in the chamber will be at the time of the Committee’s stage 1 report. On such a controversial issue, and given the wide ranging opposition to the proposal, it might have been expected that the Government would have sought a debate to help inform them prior to introducing a bill to Parliament. It is regrettable that they did not take that opportunity to hear from elected members.

Religion and Belief is a protected characteristic within the Equality Act alongside Sexual Orientation but it appears from the same sex marriage debate thus far that currently one characteristic is more protected than the other; with those opposing the change on religious grounds being subjected to intolerant, bigoted and abusive conduct. It seems then that some wish to consider that disagreement with those of a particular sexual orientation is an infringement of the protected characteristic but that logic would then necessarily mean that disagreeing with the views of people of faith is an infringement of their protected characteristic.

The Committee may of course hear evidence from those promoting the bill that some of its opponents have been using language which is offensive or homophobic and I’m sure there are people who would wish to oppose it simply because they do hate homosexuals. That is equally unacceptable. However, the vast majority of people who have contacted me opposing the redefinition of marriage have not been in that category.

The Lord Advocate’s guidance to prosecutors for those who oppose same sex marriage also gives cause for concern and would benefit from separate consultation. The fact that it is required at all seems to suggest that anyone opposing same sex marriage is highly likely to face legal challenges. Therefore, if this legislation is to proceed, including protections on the face of the bill rather than in guidance is necessary to at least attempt to protect freedom of speech and religious belief.

I also note with regret that the Government’s Equality Impact Assessment doesn’t seem to include, under the section on impact on people because of their religion or belief, the genuine fears that people of faith have with regard to this proposed legislation.

The Committee may wish to fully analyse the EQIA and in particular the research cited therein.
The Committee may wish to consider the need for robust protections in more detail and scrutinise the Lord Advocate’s guidance.

The Committee may also wish to consider the current reaction to those opposing the legislation and whether this provides an indication of future actions against those who are opposed if this legislation is enacted.

Equality

I have several concerns about this legislation in general; as I have pointed out I do believe it will have far reaching consequences for many. I am also concerned that the issue is being portrayed as a simple matter of equality which I do not believe it is.

I served on the Equal Opportunities Committee when civil partnerships for same sex couples were considered and the committee were assured at that time that this would bring legal equality and parity with marriage. Indeed, some same sex couples who have entered into civil partnerships may now feel that their relationship is being diminished in the push for “marriage” whereas previously they considered their union to be ‘different but equal’. There is also currently the opportunity for any church, whose ethos allows, to perform a religious service after the civil partnership has been entered into. This already happens with some mixed religious couples who may have a civil wedding but then pursue a religious blessing.

When giving evidence to the Equal Opportunities Committee on 28 October 2003, Tim Hopkins from the Equality Network said “It was clear that people felt that the solution to the big problems faced by same-sex couples and their families was to introduce civil partnership with a similar range of secular obligations, protections and rights as marriage has.”
http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/parliamentarybusiness/28862.aspx?r=1109&mode
=html#iob_4899

Therefore, I do not regard same sex marriage as a simple matter of equality particularly as we already have civil partnerships for same sex couples. Just because something is not identical does not make it unequal. Diversity is important in society and we should be very wary of trying to make relationships conform to identical patterns of state dictated uniformity.

The gay columnist Andrew Pierce said “The truth is that no one has been able to explain to me the difference between gay marriage and a civil partnership. I have asked Ministers and friends. None has an answer. But I do. We already have gay marriage — it’s called civil partnership” He also said “Perhaps the Prime Minister has calculated that anyone who stands up and argues against his proposals will be branded a homophobe and a bigot. Well, Mr Cameron, I am a Conservative and a homosexual, and I oppose gay marriage. Am I a bigot?” He went on to quote the gay Labour MP Ben Bradshaw who said “This isn’t a priority for the gay community, which has already won equal rights with civil partnerships,’ ….‘This is pure politics.’
http://www.respublica.org.uk/item/

The Committee may wish to deliberate on the previous evidence received when the legislative proposal on civil partnerships was being scrutinised and consider what has changed in the intervening period to promote this major societal change.

The Committee may also wish to consider the exact detail of the societal and equality benefits of redefining marriage and compare those to the potential detriments.

Conclusion

The Scottish Parliament has the opportunity to assess how similar legislation impacts our neighbours before progressing. Therefore, the Committee may wish to consider whether it is possible for the Scottish Government to suspend the legislative proposal to determine what impact the Marriage (Same-Sex Couples) Act has south of the border, particularly given the indication of a legal challenge to force celebrants to conduct same sex ceremonies.

Overall, the Committee may wish to consider whether recommending support for this legislation would impact adversely on the existing rights of many Christians, Muslims, Jews and others of different religious persuasions and none, who do not support redefining marriage and whether this legislation is therefore a legitimate way to challenge discrimination in society.

When looking at the Bill in general, the Committee may wish to consider whether or not it is good legislation including consideration of the possible consequences, both intended and unintended, and who they will impact on.

It is the ultimate responsibility of the Committee to thoroughly scrutinise this legislative proposal and fully investigate potential consequences before providing Parliament with a recommendation on whether or not to support the general principles or give qualified support of this legislative proposal at stage 1. That is an extremely serious and responsible duty as the decision of the Committee will have far reaching consequences.

I hope that my contribution may be of some assistance to the Committee in carrying out their vitally important task of scrutinising this controversial legislative proposal and deciding whether it is legislation which would result in too many negative or unintended consequences with a detrimental impact on the existing rights and liberties of others in society.

The reputation not only of the Scottish Government but also of the Scottish Parliament will be harmed if legislation is enacted which later proves to be detrimental to our Scottish social order.

Elaine Smith MSP
30 August 2013
Summary of the Aidan O’Neill legal opinion on gay marriage and liberty of conscience

Concerns about gay marriage and freedom of conscience have largely centred on places of worship and ministers of religion who conduct weddings. But the impact in the workplace, in schools and in other areas of everyday life has been overlooked.

Those details are contained in a legal opinion written by leading human rights lawyer, Aidan O’Neill QC. Mr O’Neill was asked to give his expert advice on a series of scenarios related to legalising gay marriage.

■ NHS CHAPLAIN

A Church of England minister is also the chaplain at an NHS hospital. While conducting a wedding service in his parish church he preaches that marriage is only for one man and one woman. His NHS bosses find out, and he is later disciplined for breaching the NHS diversity policy.

Aidan O’Neill QC advises that under the Equality Act 2010 the NHS managers would have proper grounds for justifying their action, even if the chaplain was preaching in his own church outside work time.

The situation would be the same for any chaplain employed within the public sector, such as armed forces chaplains or university chaplains.

■ TEACHER

A primary school teacher is asked to use a storybook about gay marriage called “King & King”. It is recommended by the local authority and by a gay rights charity. The teacher says using the book would conflict with her religious beliefs about marriage. She is told that she faces dismissal unless she backs down.

O’Neill says “yes”, the school would be within its legal rights to dismiss the teacher if she refuses to use the material.

■ PARENTS

Parents ask for their child to be withdrawn from school lessons on the history of gay marriage, for deeply-held religious reasons. The parents say they have a right to withdraw their child under European Convention on Human Rights. But the school refuses, saying it is under a legal duty to promote equality.

O’Neill says the parents do not ultimately have a right to insist that their child be withdrawn from such history lessons, and the parents “will have little prospects of success in challenging the schools insistence that their child attend” the lessons.

■ FAITH SCHOOLS

Aidan O’Neill was asked about the above scenario in relation to faith schools or religious-ethos State schools.

He said: “If the school in question were a faith school or otherwise one with a religious ethos within the State sector in England and Wales this would make no difference to my answer.”

■ FOSTER COUPLE

A couple applies to be foster carers. They tell social workers they are motivated to care for children because of their Christian faith. On hearing this, the social workers ask them whether they support gay marriage. The couple says they do not, and the social workers halt the application because of equality and discrimination policies.

O’Neill says “yes”, a local authority fostering agency would have legitimate legal grounds for acting this way.

■ PUBLIC FACILITIES

A church hires a council-owned community centre each week for its youth club. The church website states that it will only conduct opposite-sex marriages. Someone complains to the council, and while the church can’t be forced to conduct gay weddings, it is stopped from hiring the community centre.

Aidan O’Neill says “yes”, the council would be within its legal rights to do this.

■ MARRIAGE REGISTRAR

A local authority decides to accommodate the religious beliefs of one of its registrars by not designating her to be a ‘civil partnership registrar’. Other registrars within the local authority’s team are sufficient to provide the service to the public.

Aidan O’Neill says that if gay marriage becomes law, “that kind of adjustment to accommodate a registrar’s particular beliefs would no longer be an option for any employing authority because there would then be only one system of marriage (rather than, as at present, a distinct civil partnership regime for same sex couples).”

■ RELIGIOUS GAY WEDDINGS

The O’Neill legal opinion also addresses whether religious marriage celebrants could be forced to conduct gay weddings against their will. The legal opinion suggests that an outright ban on religious gay weddings could be overturned under European human rights laws.

If a law is passed which allows religious gay weddings for those who wish to conduct them, but doesn’t compel anyone to act against their conscience, that could be challenged under domestic equality laws. O’Neill says that churches, in general, would be better protected from hostile litigation if they stopped holding weddings altogether.

■ ESTABLISHED CHURCH

O’Neill advises on the position of the Church of England. As the established church, it is under a legal obligation to marry any persons who are eligible to marry in England. Even if Parliament passes a law which allows (but does not oblige) churches to host gay weddings, O’Neill advises that the UK Government could be in breach of European human rights laws if it allows the C of E to refuse gay weddings. This is because of the C of E’s unique status as the established State church. O’Neill says the church would be in a safer position if it was disestablished.

■ SEX EDUCATION

The O’Neill opinion also considers the impact of redefining marriage on teaching within schools. It says that the law will require that children learn about gay marriage in sex education lessons. This is because Section 403(1A)(a) of the Education Act 1996 imposes a duty on the Secretary of State to “issue guidance” ensuring that pupils “learn the nature of marriage and its importance for family life and the bringing up of children”. If gay marriage becomes law then “its importance for family life and the bringing up of children” must be taught as part of sex education.
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

Our country has been founded on biblical precepts and to discount Gods word we go against all that holds us accountable.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Not against the same sex couples, God loves us all, but we have boundaries and this is one that is not right.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

It is wrong

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

It would be easy to say it is ok. I believe it is wrong.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

It is wrong!!
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Do not know enough about GRC to comment

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It appaers that marginal groups in society are given more rights. We are labelled wrong just because we have our opinions that have a sound basis to live by THe inspired word of God.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Often held back from speaking out as elements of society twist the content so it seems one is against rather just having opinions. We need to be able to voice concerns without being held to ransom.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

There is always a knockon effect when we allow the laws to determine our behaviour rather than the laws being made to safeguard what is right.

Are you responding as...

a private individual; Christian

Alan Smith
9 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
There is no place for inequality in a modern Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
All religions and none should be treated equally.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
There is a place for both contracts. Some people may not like the historical connotations of the word marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

No one should be forced to conduct a same sex marriage. Safeguards must be put in place for religious groups. Within their community beliefs should be respected but these beliefs cannot be allowed to impact on the wider community in a negative way.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Fiona Smith
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM GARY SMITH

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
This is a weighted question. Religious celebrants are not the norm in modern society. We are all Celebrants with different philosophies.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Let them have their concerns aired in the proper forum of debate with respect and with facts.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

Gary Smith
Humanist Society Scotland
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

SNP Students believe that the right to marry the person you love is a human right that should extend to all Scots.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

SNP Students strongly support the introduction of same sex marriage in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Campaigning body

Fraser Dick
SNP Students
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This is my third contribution to the call for evidence on the Bill. I have contributed as the Rabbi of Sukkat Shalom: Edinburgh Liberal Jewish Community, whose views are incorporated in to the submission of ScoJeC (Scottish Council of Jewish Communities), and I have written a submission on behalf of, and at the request of, the Jewish Gay and Lesbian Group (JGLG). This submission is my own personal response as the only Liberal Rabbi and marriage celebrant working in Scotland. I am strongly in support of the Bill and welcome it as a huge step forward for Scottish society!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

As an openly gay rabbi, who has worked for eight years (part time) for Scotland's first and only Liberal Jewish community, I am delighted that the time is nearing when same-sex couples will be able to publicly and legally enter into marriages. The loving

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I am broadly in support of the proposals in the Bill, although, as I have submitted before, I would have preferred greater freedom of conscience to be given to ministers who wish to conduct same-sex marriages but whose denominations (e.g. the Church of Sc

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I support the proposals, but also strongly urge the acceptance of the alteration put forward by the Equality Network regarding civil partnerships solemnised outwith Scotland.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I strongly support this proposal.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

There are couples, both same-sex and opposite-sex, who are religiously committed but who find the history, language and symbolism of marriage objectionable for various reasons. I do not share these objections but I do respect them, and welcome the possibi

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I rejoice at the growing acceptance of transgender people signified in the Bill, but also strongly support the proposal of the Equality Network that the granting of a Gender Recognition Certificate should NOT be conditional on the permission of the partne

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebranta private individual

Rabbi Mark L Solomon
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

We would only comment on the fact that there is a potential loss of income to Local Authorities in respect of loss of fees for 'certificates of approval' and potential loss of 'ceremony income' due to the increased number of celebrants.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

We are not in a position to comment.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

We have concern about the potential loss of income to Local Authorities as a result of the introduction of 'belief' celebrants. A clear definition of "belief" is required. There should be mechanisms in place to ensure that this system is not unduly abused.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

No comment.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriage?

No comment.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and the registrar?

There will still require to be a short Health and Safety inspection by the Registrar who will also satisfy themselves that the premises (venue) is suitable to hold the ceremony.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

We have concern about the potential loss of income to Local Authorities as a result of the introduction of ‘belief’ celebrants. A clear definition of “belief” is required. There should be mechanisms in place to ensure that this system is not unduly abused.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

No comment.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

No comment

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

No comment

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No comment

Teresa Stone
Licensing and Registration Manager
South Lanarkshire Council
15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM CATH STAINSBY

My objections to same sex marriage are many. People should be free to enter into Civil partnerships if they wish, but marriage should remain between one man and woman.
People should have a right not to participate in any way, if that is their belief.

Receivers, chaplains, registrars should not be forced into taking any part in such so-called "manigis".

People who express disagreement about such unions are already facing problems. Please consider all aspects and amendments are
It is necessary to protect all badminton and each individual's right to free speech and debate.

Parents have definitely a parental right to remove children from lessons where same-sex marriage is being taught, and should be informed when such lessons are going to occur.

All legal rights are available to same-sex couples just now.
Why the need for change?
Please, please consider all peoples and every aspect of this subject.

Cath Stainsby
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
There should be the option for a non-denominational partnership

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
They are unfounded and unfair, the recognition of love between two people should be acceptable to all. Britney Spear’s 24 hour flings does worse!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is no greater right in a democratic world!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic

Stephen James McKelvie
St Andrews Aquarium
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

Religious celebrants are highly qualified specialists in this field, unlike many belief celebrants who have little or no professional qualifications. Moreover, religious celebrants undertake serious and professional pre-marriage preparation with couples, ensuring they are fully aware of the implications of marriage. This is markedly absent in marriages solemnised by belief celebrants. This lack of preparation is bound to effect a couple’s understanding of the bond of marriage, rendering it a less permanent union. The deficiency of professional standards is already visible where funerals are conducted humanist celebrants. Pre and post care is lacking, as well as professional qualifications of celebrants dealing with emotionally charges human experiences.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

I am wholly in opposition to the theory and practice of same-sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

The most important legal rights are already conferred upon same-sex couples who have entered a civil marriage, thus rendering the 'rights' argument for marriage meaningless.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition
It will lessen the solemnity and formality of marriage if this were to happen, and thus lessen the actual bond of marriages conducted in these irregular locations, at least in the mind of spouses.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

Civil partnerships may be registered through belief registration. However, the main religions of Scotland have already stated strong opposition to the very principle of same-sex marriage. This looks like an attempt to 'mimic' marriage through some new 're

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It seems to me that the State is meddling in religious affairs. The main religious groups in Scotland vehemently oppose this Bill. Yet, included in this consultation are questions which undermine that consistent body of opposition. Right thinking people see that the legal rights which should be offered same-sex couples are already given in civil partnerships, and yet the Scottish Government is openly lobbying for this Bill through a rights-based framework. In truth, this Bill seeks to appease a small group within society who seek to achieve not more than social standing as a result of being included in marriage. This, to my mind, provides insufficient reasoning to amend the law in favour of a redefinition, particularly since is confers few new rights. The Government is needlessly incensing a huge group of society, and entire faith communities, which are normally politically and socially stable.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I am concerned that should this Bill go through parliament Catholic school teachers will be forced into endorsing same-sex marriage in the classroom, something which Catholic social teaching expressly forbids them from doing. I also fear that, in time, suits will be brought against religious ministers who either preach against homosexuality in general or who refuse to solemnise same-sex unions.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Michael John Kane
St. Augustine's Church
18 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM ST BERNADETTE’S CHURCH LARBERT

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Marriage is between one man and one woman, for the purpose of begetting and bringing up children. For a marriage to be valid, the couple need to obviously a man and a woman, the marriage is open to the potential of bearing children-which destroys the nonsense of the age argument-they need to be free to marry, ie not married to someone else, they need to be mature enough to know what they are doing, and they commit to be faithful to one another come what may unconditionally, and to support one another and their children, ie to accept the responsibilities of marriage. Same sex relationships therefore can never be classed as marriage and they are inherently closed to the begetting of children. Whatever the claimed intention of this bill, it will clearly undermine marriage itself

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Same sex marriage focuses on the desires of adults, falsely claimed to be "rights". This is at the expense of the rest of society, and especially children, who are entitled to a father and a mother. Already the law is being pre-empted, and adoption agencies have been put under pressure to comply with the new state imposed orthodoxy or close. In the debate in the HoL we have heard some very strange and alarming views expressed about marriage, such as fidelity in marriage is not necessary, only if it is important to the couple themselves. For the vast majority of folk fidelity is an absolute necessity in marriage, both because it is right and for their own and their children's and their spouses security. What do you think a child goes through if one of their parents goes off with another person?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

The agenda driving this legislation appears to be spearheaded by an appeal to homosexual "rights" (wants would be a more truthful word) but is also being quietly orchestrated by those who wish to drive religion and its practice right out of civil life. This question makes that quite clear

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Note that the celebrant is there as a witness to the marriage on behalf of the church and in Scotland, the state. The actual ministers of marriage are the couple, one to another, but for the marriage to be valid, the conditions I have already mentioned must be met. Marriage is something the couple actively commit to, and accept their responsibilities, not a service the state provides to a passive accepting couple. So far as the Church is concerned it is against moral, never mind canon, law for its ministers to preside over a same sex so called wedding

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Civil partnerships are a means of giving homosexual couples legal rights akin to marriage. The reason why marriage attracts certain rights and privileges is because they are required to carry out the duties and responsibilities of marriage, the most significant of which is the raising of children. In the case of same sex civil partnerships, these couples have been granted rights and privileges without the corresponding duties.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

The church recognises marriage as a special state, meeting the conditions as previously stated. Friendship is obviously a good thing, but is not the same thing as marriage. Sexual relations outside of marriage, whether heterosexual or homosexual.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

If a person is validly married then they remain married, even if they go under surgery to change sex. However, it is possible that in some cases the marriage may have not been entered into with the intention of committing for life, eg to test if they really were a particular sex. In that case, one of the validity conditions has not been fulfilled and the marriage therefore has never existed. Not saying this is their fault, but if they were confused as to what they really wanted, then this may well be the case

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

This is a huge issue. Already people and organisations who stand up for real marriage, families and children have been vilified and been removed from jobs and appointments. There is no debate, basically a tirade of abuse from the liberal and metropolitan elite. St Margaret's Families and Children's Society has come under attack over its charitable status, despite the good work it has done over many years, and even the support of the Scottish Govt. There will be legal attacks on the Church (despite the so called protections) over its inability to take part in this travesty, and its position in defence of the family, marriage and children. Same sex marriage will be taught in schools as a state requirement, and teachers who object to it will be disciplined, and parents not allowed to withdraw their children from it. Imagine the feelings of a child from a normal family being taught that same sex couples have as god a relationship as their own parents. Expressing an opinion against same sex marriage will become a "hate crime", liable to legal penalties as well as a tirade of abuse. Conscience will go for nothing, all must comply with the new legislation. Councils will use the Public Sector Equality Act to over enforce the new orthodoxy, and to discriminate against those of their employees who do not accept it. In effect, the whole thing becomes a secular Test Act, under which a person is forced to demonstrate blind loyalty to the state, and its leaders rather than to religion and informed conscience.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

See response to 12

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief local group or congregation

Christopher G Ross
St Bernadette’s Church Larbert
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I support any proposals to bring equality between people and in particular support these moves to allow same-sex couples to enter into marriage. Vigilance is needed to ensure that there is only one institution of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

The current proposals certainly do not put belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants. In particular, they appear to allow only groups of people who have a non-theistic worldview to band together to be recognised for the purpose of cele

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

The current proposed arrangements do not establish equality in the law. (See answer to previous question). The proposals lean too far towards trying to please those who are opposed in principle to all marriages of same-sex couples. It is unreasonable to expect a religious denomination to agree before opting in to the legislation. Some religious groups have a far lower expectation of conformity than the government seems to be trying to impose on them. Those trying to legislate seem to have forgotten that religious celebrants also have human rights. No-one can make anyone conduct any religious ceremony they don't want to conduct without infringing those rights. The human rights of celebrants are the means by which religious people cannot be forced to do a same-sex marriage against their will. The legislation is over prescriptive in this area. The principle that is now well accepted that religious people who object to same-sex marriage should not be forced to conduct them should have a corollary. It also should be the case that religious people who are currently able to celebrate marriages of straight couples should not be prevented in law from conducting same-sex marriages. The legislation in trying to protect the former is in danger of discriminating against the latter.
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I support the idea that Civil Partnerships should be able to be changed to marriages. I believe that this should be possible with the minimal amount of paperwork and at no further cost to the couples involved.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

I support this. It should have happened years ago.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I don't believe there is any call for the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships. I think that this is a contradiction in terms.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Fully supportive of this move - it rights an obvious wrong.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think that the process of moving towards this legislation has concentrated far too much on the "protections" for those who have concerns about same-sex marriage. The government needs to be clear that there is one institution of marriage. The government also needs to be clear that there should be no protection in law for anyone seeking to encourage prejudice and discrimination when working with young people. I am very concerned at the idea of extending "protection" in this area in schools. All who work with children in schools should be expected to teach respect for all who are married. It would be unacceptable to me for teachers to be paid by the state who were teaching that some people who have gone through a marriage ceremony were really not married at all.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I don't believe that people have an absolute right to freedom of speech in Scotland. For example, freedom of speech would be no defence for someone who was accused of encouraging racism in the classroom. Similarly, there are many situations where appealing to freedom of speech is an inappropriate defence when considering attitudes relating to LGBT people.
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
I am the Provost of St Mary's Cathedral, Scottish Episcopal Church, Glasgow

Kelvin Holdsworth
Provost
St Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ryan Stenhouse
21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM LAUREL STEVENS

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
I support this bill as a logical step forward to equality for all.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I support the introduction of same-sex marriage as it makes no logical sense to have separate institutions for couples who wish to make a lifetime commitment based solely on the sex of the partners in the relationship.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
If by this you mean in the way that humanists can conduct legally-recognised marriages, then I think this is a positive thing.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
It seems a reasonable balance has been struck in the bill to protect the right of religious organisations who do not wish to solemnise same sex marriages.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I see no reason to object to a couple changing their civil partnership to a marriage, if they wish to do so.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
As with the previous question I have no strong view on this, but it seems like a reasonable proposal which would probably be welcomed by many couples.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

I support this in principle, as it would be unfortunate if a couple in which one person had transitioned or was transitioning had to divorce despite wanting to stay together. I disagree however with the requirement in the bill for the spouse of a transgender person to give consent before they can obtain gender recognition. This seems something that might prove an unnecessary obstacle to the transgender person.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the bill strikes the correct balance as proposed between protection of the rights of those who wish to have a same sex marriage and those individuals and organisations who oppose it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Laurel Stevens
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

GILLIAN F STEWART
HUMANIST SOCIETY SCOTLAND
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Maroanne Stewart
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I hate the old order, where women are chattles, white men are always right and anyone who doesn't fit into their tiny boxes is deemed lesser. Yes, we have been fighting against this for decades, but there is still some to go. I celebrate difference, individuality and freedom of choice for all.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It's not anyone else's business, who we sleep with or choose to live with. I truly do not understand the sickness behind prejudice.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

They are the same!!!! the only problem with religion is that almost all of them are based upon manipulating the 'flock' with fear of death and judgement. How sick is that!!??

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

Don't think it's the government's business to outline the hows and wheres and who can celebrate - for any union, whether you call it marriage, hand-fasting or whatever. It's time this whole subject leapt forward about two millenia!

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

Don't care, as I have no particular respect for the government having control over us versus the church - neither is very reliable.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

I think any personal celebration should be only in the hands of those who wish to make the promises. Where it happens is their choice, as it only effects their lives.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I still think the difference between civil and religious joining is simply a result of the prejudice, ignorance and archaic attitudes our society. We need big changes in attitudes.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Not our business, anyone who is brave enough and unhappy in their gender enough to change it should be respected snd understood.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

educate them!!!!!!!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

What a wonderful idea!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Derby Stewart-Amsden
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

A complete waste of valuable government time

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I consider the union of one man and one woman to be the bedrock of a safe and secure society. To change this union known as marriage is not desirable or necessary. Same sex couples are adequately provided for and to call a male 'wife' or a female 'husband' diminishes the real meaning of these words.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I am a beliver but not religious and do not know how to answer this!!

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

Not adequate to protect those who do not wish to be involved.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

This is quite unnecessary and demeans the word marriage

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

civil partnerships yes marriage no

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

I think this is probably playing with words.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I would like reassurance that registrars, ministers and teachers will not be penalised for sincerely held views about the sanctity of genuine marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Yes, freedom of speech is being eroded in this country in favour of a vocal minority.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Just to say the changing of an age old custom MARRIAGE will in no way benefit this generation or the next.

Are you responding as...

a private individual
retired health visitor

Margaret Weir Stocks
26 July 2013
Q4. How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

Stonewall Scotland welcomes and strongly supports the Bill. We believe the Bill achieves the balance of furthering equality whilst respecting freedom of religion and freedom of speech.

Q5. How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

Stonewall Scotland welcomes the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. The extension of the legal form of marriage to same-sex couples and the removal of the requirement of married transgender individuals to divorce before gaining legal recognition of their gender is a huge step towards a fair and more equal Scotland. Recent polling by YouGov commissioned by Stonewall Scotland shows that two thirds (65 per cent) of Scots support extending civil and religious marriage to same-sex couples.

Q6. How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

We welcome the fact that the Bill makes it clear that belief organisations will be able to conduct marriages.

Q7. How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Stonewall Scotland supports the proposals for authorising religious and belief celebrants who wish to solemnise same-sex marriage. We believe that the opt-in approach outlined in the Bill is clear, fair and strikes the right balance between protections for religion and belief and furthering equality for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people.

Stonewall Scotland and Stonewall GB have always been clear that we would not support any legal action taken against any religious body or individual celebrants to force them to solemnise same-sex marriages against their wishes.

Q8. How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriage?

Stonewall Scotland agrees that couples should be able to convert their civil partnership to a marriage if they wish to do so. We also agree that on changing the civil partnership to a marriage, the marriage should be regarded as starting on the same day as the original civil partnership.
Stonewall Scotland believes there is no need for a second ceremony, unless the couple wish to have one, and any mechanism to effect this change should be simple and inexpensive.

Q9. How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and the registrar?

This isn’t an issue which specifically affects LGBT people.

Q10. How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Stonewall Scotland welcomes the flexibility this will bring. Some religious bodies may not wish to conduct same-sex marriages but may want to offer religious civil partnership ceremonies to same-sex couples. This proposal would also allow those LGBT people of faith who would prefer a civil partnership rather than marriage that option.

Q11. How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

We strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required to divorce. However, we would also ask the Committee and the Scottish Government to consider some key areas of concern for trans people with regard the Bill as it stands, in particular around the issue of spousal consent and allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years.

Q12. Would you like to comment on the wider issues of protection for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We believe the Bill is balanced and offers robust protections for those who have concerns about same-sex marriage.

It has been suggested that the Bill should allow civil registrars to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. We strongly support the Scottish Government’s position that civil registrars should not be permitted to opt out of delivering a secular, publicly-funded service to same-sex couples.

Stonewall Scotland believes that such opt-outs risk serious wider public policy consequences as registrars and other public servants could then demand the right not to serve couples of different faiths or to decline to preside over mixed race marriages as a matter of conscience too.

In terms of concerns around education and same-sex marriage Stonewall Scotland is clear that whilst the introduction of same-sex marriage may raise questions about sexuality in the classroom it absolutely does not present schools with a new set of challenges or circumstances and as such there is no need for any new legislation.
We support the Government’s proposals not to amend guidance in a way that would allow parents to withdraw their children from any lessons where same-sex marriage or lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender issues were discussed. We believe that the current discretionary exemptions given to parents are more than sufficient. However we also believe that the right of children and young people to receive relevant information is crucial.

With regard to denominational education, Stonewall Scotland understands and respects the need for these schools to be able to teach in accordance with their faith, however we do not believe that there is a tension between this, and a schools responsibility to discussing issues of sexuality in the classroom in a respectful and factual way. Our research Living Together, (2012) found that 92 per cent of people of faith stated that schools should tackle homophobic and transphobic bullying and we know from the faith schools that we work with that many are doing good work to tackle this bullying.

www.stonewallscotland.org.uk/LivingTogether

Stonewall Scotland agrees that there is no need to amend the law to allow schools and teachers to opt out of providing pupils with factual information about the legal existence of same-sex marriages. Stonewall Scotland’s The School Report (2012) highlights the harm done to young people by denying the existence of same-sex relationships; more than half of young lesbian, gay and bisexual pupils feel they are not ‘part of their school community’, half of them feel they are not achieving their best at school and seven in ten skip school at some point.

www.stonewallscotland.org.uk/SchoolReport

We believe that existing employment law and guidance is sufficient and does not need to be amended to provide any specific protections for teachers (or others, such as NHS chaplains) that have concerns about same-sex marriage. The General Teaching Council for Scotland’s Code of Professionalism and Conduct requirements on teachers is clear and fair.

We are clear that issues relating to same-sex marriage, same-sex relationships and homosexuality should be discussed in both Secondary and Primary settings in an age appropriate way. Stonewall’s 2009 research The Teachers’ Report shows that homophobia is commonplace in primary schools in Scotland with 44 per cent of primary school teachers saying children in their schools experience homophobic bullying. Our Different Families primary school resources enables teaching staff to deal with these issues and we believe that recognising the diversity of family life is important for preparing all young people for life in 21st century Scotland.

www.stonewallscotland.org.uk/TeachersReport

www.stonewallscotland.org.uk/DifferentFamilies
Q13. Would you like to comment on the wider issues of freedom of speech?

The Bill gives robust protections with regard freedom of speech. Those who disagree with same-sex marriage will still be entitled to hold that view and express that view publicly. The Lord Advocate’s guidance has been very clear on this issue and is welcome.

Q14. Would you like to comment on any wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

We welcome the Scottish Government’s intention to legalise same-sex marriage and we urge the Parliament to pass the Bill without delay.

Colin Macfarlane
Director
Stonewall Scotland
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I think I'm thick but I see obvious differences between a male and female union and a same sex union. I am wondering if I am the only one to notice this though. As there are differences it is only but right that the differences are acknowledged. We call men men and women women because they are different. We call children children and adults adults because they are different. We call conservatives conservative and nationalists nationalists because they are different. All of these have similarities but that does not mean we call them the same thing. So why is this bill proposing to call two things which are similar but clearly different by only one name? I believe that there is legislation to ensure that male and female are treated equally but that legislation does not say we have to call them the same thing. I believe that the same principle should be used for this bill. By all means treat people equally but that does mean that things which have differences should be given the same name. If we are to continue down that road I suggest that at the next election we don't show any party differences but simply put the candidates name on the voting slip and state politician next to it rather than their chosen party, after they should all be treated equally.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

As above I am not saying my views are better than anyone else's and if same sex couples wan to have a relationship they can but as there are obvious differences these should be acknowledged. We are apparently a multi cultural society and we can embrace differences so if we can do that for culture we should be able to do it for relationships but we still give different cultures different names and that could easily be done in to this bill without meaning someone will be discriminated against. It strikes me that if someone wants to discriminate against a same sex couple they will do so whether the union is called a marriage or a same-age so this bill will not remove discrimination. Same sex couples can already have a civil partnership and the government assured us when these were introduced that it wouldn't lead to same sex marriage but that clearly wasn't true so why should I believe the government now when they say freedom of speech will be protected?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support
How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Any assurances being given by the government are totally worthless. As mentioned earlier the government said when civil partnerships were introduced that it would not lead to same sex marriage. Well that has turned out to be a lie so any assurances being given now are worthless. Even if so called protections are included I feel that some of the militant groups who oppose freedom of religion will take cases to the European court to challenge them. From looking at the replies to the original consultation there are some groups out there who feel anyone with a religious objection to same sex marriage should be silenced.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual
Why is this question even on here? It seems to me that groups get more of a hearing than an individual and that is wrong as my opinion is equally as valid as someone seemingly responding on behalf of a group no matter if everyone in the group has given their view or not.

Andrew Strachan
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I agree with the bill that no celebratant should be made to conduct a same-sex marriage ceremony if he/she does not want to.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Elizabeth Sullivan
27 June 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Josh Sutherland
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think marriage is a contract between two people who promise to care for each other and build a life together. I think gender should have nothing to do with it and prefer the idea that it is an institution that can be wholly separate from religious associations if desired.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Lynsey Sutherland
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Greg Swan
20 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM JOHN R S TAIT

4. How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

Extremely absurd.

The Bill is making a forlorn attempt to change culture and society. Homosexual practice is abnormal and contrary to natural biological function. Same-sex marriage is based on the false and deeply flawed dictum of Kinsey that 'all desires are in-born, natural, morally equivalent and worthy of acceptance and support!'

Unlike any other human activity, sexual conduct is exempt from moral responsibility! Sexual morality is destroyed by the legal insertion of 'sexual orientation' which is taken to mean whatever the courts accept it to mean in every day use!

Genetic determinism is the mistaken belief that all human relationships can be boiled down to DNA so that people are merely 'robots' that are controlled by invisible signals from their DNA sequences! (Science and Nature)

Homosexual object choice is not predetermined by chromosomal tagging or brain functioning. The human male and female do not inherit an organised neurohormonal machinery of courtship and mating; nor do animals.

5. Same sex couples do not qualify for marriage because they are not equal to heterosexual couples. Marriage predates law, nation and church validated by prolonged history. The social experiment of same sex marriage is totally irresponsible. The fundamental human rights of children to Mum and Dad and the integrity of the nuclear family must not be compromised.

Teenagers will not readily forgive amoral authorities for domestic devastation as epitomised by the feral city riots.

6. The convictions of belief celebrants and religious celebrants must be honoured provided they teach that homoerotic behaviour is clearly prohibited in the Christian Bible

7. Marriage celebrants must only be authorised to solemnise opposite sex marriage.

8. Civil partnerships should never have been promulgated and do not qualify for marriage.

9. Civil marriage ceremonies are for heterosexual couples only

10. The sanctity of marriage must be recognised to exclude civil partnerships.

11. A full Gender Recognition Certificate is irrelevant to the permanency of marriage, the lifelong commitment between one man and one woman.
12. Churches and celebrants who refuse to 'marry' same-sex couples must be protected from litigation.

Human rights law has failed to protect faith-based adoption agencies.

The 'Human Rights Act' 1998 confirms the absolute right to have a child educated according to the wishes of the parent. Teachers must be free to teach the facts, namely:

There is no 'gay' gene (Science et al) and therefore homosexual practice is a chosen life style of sexual abnormality, contrary to original design.

There is no biological substrate (Endocrinology) for sexual orientation, a legal euphemism for sexual addiction.

Like all other addictions - alcohol, nicotine, drug abuse, paedophilia - it is an established pattern of habit-tolerance-dependancy-addiction.

Homosexuals may love one another but their domestic arrangements make no difference to the human future.

The law allows doctors and pharmacists a 'conscience clause' with regard to abortions.

Similarly teachers and registrars must be allowed to work to high ethical standards and not be compelled to work against their consciences. Just as the law protects atheist teachers from being compelled to teach religious education, so Christian teachers must be allowed to refrain from teaching same-sex marriage.

A skewed interpretation of the Equality Act must not jeopardise charitable status of religious groups.

There must be protections in equality law to ensure that Christian groups that oppose same-sex marriage are not treated less favourably by public authorities. Legislative change in the same-sex bill must be secured to allow people who hold traditional views about marriage to adopt or foster.

13. Freedom of speech is not addressed in the Government's Bill. Insidious encroaching totalitarianism is being experienced by police chaplins and housing managers. The democratic society in this country that owes so much to our Christian heritage must surely respect the historic and long-standing definition of marriage.

Amendments need to make clear that merely discussing or criticising same-sex marriage is not a form of discrimination for the purpose of equality law or a breach of public order legislation.

Christian ministers must continue to be free to quote the Bible and preach the Gospel. e.g. (1Corinthians 6:9-10)'Neither the sexually immoral nor idolaters nor adulterers nor male prostitutes nor homosexual offenders ..will inherit the kingdom of God.' But there is joyful access for the repentant sinner.

14. Wider issues must include the lessons of history 'They who ignore history live to repeat its mistakes'.

The Health Protection Agency reported an increasing number of people were diagnosed with HIV last year. In particular the number of gay and bisexual men being diagnosed with HIV reached an "all-time high" in 2011.

The legal endorsement of notoriously promiscuous homosexual practice will provoke widespread sexually-transmitted infections. Sub-Sahara Africa where same-sex marriage has been legalised struggles with 53 million orphans from an epidemic of HIV. Aggressive predatory lust for homosexuality or 'sodomy' led to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah and the Roman Empire.

Legislators must be reminded of the highest legal authority:
   (Matthew 16:13) 'Jesus said On this rock of confession I will build my church and the gates of hell will not overcome it.'

   'The farther backward you can look, the further forward you are likely to see.'
   (Sir Winston Churchill)

John R S Tait
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Tesco Bank
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Opt-in, celebrants should not be forced to go against their beliefs but they should be allowed to do it if they want to

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
Some people want civil partnerships and some want equal marriage, they should be allowed both options

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

A private individual

Joe Thompson
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I believe that this bill (and any others like it in the world) will have the effect of further marginalising prejudice based on sexual orientation. If marriage between two people of any gender becomes legal, it will then become normal, and prejudice will be seen as even more undesirable. I also believe that two people who wish to commit to each other in this way should be allowed to do so. It is not so many years ago in some countries when marriage between black and white was frowned upon or was illegal, but for the most part that prejudice is now gone.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

See above. I believe that if two people wish to marry, they should be allowed to do so, and that gender should not be an issue. The purpose of marriage is to seal a commitment with a solemn promise, and gender should not be an obstacle.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Many people are outside a formal or organised religion, but their vows should be given equal status with those taken within a religion. The days when religious people were considered 'better' than those outside religion have gone, and this should be reflected in the status of celebrants.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I am not religious. There are elements of religious dogma which I find distasteful because they are not inclusive. Many in the Western world criticise the status of women in muslim countries, and yet support some exclusivites within some western churches. I would therefore be in favour of any legislation which leans towards inclusivity, which would include any opt in procedures. I would prefer the boot to be on the other foot, so that 'opt out' procedures were the default position.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

I see no purpose in distinguishing between the two. Marriage in its present form can either be religious or civil. See my answer to 6

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I believe that marriage venues should be licensed as such, to avoid ceremonies being trivialised by gimmicky weddings.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

If marriage is inclusive as discussed above, I see no purpose in continuing with civil partnerships - but if people want to register a civil partnership in such a way then that should be allowed.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Transgender people should be allowed to stay married if both parties agree. But transition must NOT be dependent on the permission of the partner; if that were to be the case, and permission was withheld the marriage would be unlikely to survive anyway.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Everyone is entitled to a view, and to express it, But same sex marriage is not going to impact on opposite sex marriage. I am not clear what those people with concerns wish to be protected from. We live in a society which expects its citizens to be tolerant of other peoples beliefs, but does not expect us to impose our beliefs on others - such imposition has been the downfall of many societies.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
Are you responding as...

a private individual

Tim Thomson
15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM AIMEE THORBURN

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

An example; Same sex marriage has been legal in Canada for about 8 years now and the country has neither sank into the sea nor exploded into flame. I think we’ll be ok.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual
A concerned Young Adult.

Aimee Thorburn
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I would say that the bill is a just cause as it is promoting equality for LGBTQ persons and for all other people as it does not just limit a civil partnership to those who identify as LGBTQ.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I feel that those that wish to be joined together through marriage or civil partnership should have the right to do as they wish as it creates a more equal and fairer society for the people of Scotland to live in.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

I feel that if those who wish to officially change their status from a civil partnership to marriage are in every right to do so.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

If persons wish to be married (be it religious or belief) they should be allowed to have a ceremony at whatever venue that the persons agree so long as it isn't performed within a religious ground that wishes not to hold the wedding.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

If two persons do not want to be married or they do not like the label of marriage then they should still have the right to choose between a religious or belief ceremony as with the marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

those who are transgender or go through the process of gender recognition should not have to feel as a lesser due to their stage in gender recognition, allowing the people to stay married allows them to feel more accepted and for people to be more progressive.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Religious leaders should not feel pressured in to allowing same sex marriage at their place of worship.

When one mentions "freedom of speech" it refers to the ability to say something without persecution so long as it isn't harmful to others, I feel that Scotland has been somewhat civil compared to other countries but they abuse the right of speech as they are able to publicly say that LGBTQ marriages are harmful to others. I feel that everyone should be able to speak but when it comes to talking about a group of persons they should be treated as others as it is hateful speech towards people.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

LGBT student

thomas timmins
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Susan Timothy
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I believe in equality.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
I believe in equality.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
I believe civil partnerships should still be a separate option for homo and heterosexuals.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Equality cannot be achieved while whole churches/religions are allowed to refuse to conduct a civil marriage ceremony. Individuals should be allowed to refuse if there beliefs are that strong.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is essential, however individuals should not be able to victimise or grossly offend those who hold differing beliefs.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Darren Tod
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We have seen over the years that so-called protections often do not work in practice. And the European Courts are over-riding UK courts. Also, pressure is often put on folk who take a moral stance to conform to the amoral or immoral "standards" of society. For instance, those who object to involvement in Abortion.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Already, people are being condemned for saying, graciously, that same-sex sexual practice is morally wrong; even though that moral standard has been in force for hundreds of years. So, where will free speech on this issue be in a few years time. It seems that many cannot or will not see that saying that certain practices are wrong (whether practices of heterosexual or homosexual) is not being unloving towards the people concerned. Nor is it discrimination to take a moral stand against wrong as understood in say, the Ten Commandments.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The basic building block of society has for centuries been understood as the Family (husband and wife and children) and this is evidently natural. We in our day are destroying ourselves by our failure to promote and strengthen family life and by our lack of foresight. Other experiments as in Communist states that set aside the family ended in disaster and so will our neglect of family principles and values.

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief local group or congregation
Church of Scotland minister

James Todd
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

Every marriage should be equal, the idea that some marriages are somehow superior because they are part of a religion is blatantly discriminatory.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. When a person has been transitioned for a long time, it can be very difficult indeed to obtain all the medical evidence that is required from people who have only been transitioned two years. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. We therefore believe that a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. The minimum age for applying for gender recognition should also brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The protections are more than adequate.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is already adequately protected in law.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Margaret Tombs
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
This Bill should have been introduced and passed a long time ago. It is ridiculous that this is even up for debate. The love between two human beings is not a political issue. It's a natural attraction.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
It's about time. I'm hoping that this Bill is passed.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither
Here's this thing: not every religion is against Homosexuality. Everyone's only focusing on what the Christians say. What about the other religions? Paganism is not against Homosexuality.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Protections from what? Same-sex marriage isn't going to harm or affect anyone else in the slightest. Legalising Equal Marriage won't cause the world to implode or bestiality to commence.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Rio Tomlinson-Curley
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I believe the introduction of same sex marriage is absolutely essential in our modern society. I want my relationship to be recognised and respected in the same way a mixed sex couple’s relationship and marriage is recognised and respected. I do not want my only option to be a civil partnership. I strongly support the Bill and campaign for equality. I am proud of who I am and the girl I love. I want to feel that pride for my country should this campaign for equality be successful.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ashley Toner
12 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

As a bisexual woman, I could marry a male partner, but could only enter a civil partnership with a female partner - the bill would remove this anomaly and treat both situations in the same way.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I feel it is right that religious organisations that wish to solemnise same sex marriages should be allowed to do so as a religious freedom.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

Yes, but equally those who wish to remain in a civil partnership should be allowed to do so. I would be in favour of civil partnerships being opened up to opposite sex couples who wanted them if they are to remain an option for same sex couples - equality must work both ways.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think it's right that religious organisations will not be forced to conduct same sex marriages, but that those acting for the state do not have this opt-out. I do not feel that same sex marriage will have any negative effect on those who are currently against it, any more than the marriage of two strangers would have an effect on an existing marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Tamise Totterdell
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM STUART TURNBULL

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

The introduction of same-sex marriage through this legislation provides for the legal change required to ensure the social views of the Scottish people (and indeed a growing number of the western nations) are respected. It will provide the legitimacy of same-sex relationships amongst their peers as well as children, in addition to providing solid legal recognition of their relationship status.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

Whilst no faith group should feel obliged to register civil partnerships, and opt-in system should work, allowing those groups who wished to do so the ability to do it.
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

No faith group should be obliged to perform same-sex marriages. State registrars should administer the unions due to their role as public servants, they should serve ALL.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I feel that the introduction of same-sex marriage legislation in Scotland poses little threat to freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Stuart Turnbull
15 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Those with concerns about same sex marriage should not be in a position where they are providing public services or officiating over legal proceedings. There should be room for those who wish to object to do so; however, this should not have an affect on the legality of relationships out with their comfort zones. Views against the issue should not be allowed to appear more authoritative because they original from religious doctrine and should be subject to the same restrictions all members of society must adhere to. Religious opt-outs should not be permitted to hide behind their religious beliefs to preach hate and/or bigotry.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is an important part of our society as a whole. Hate speech that masquerades behind the mask of religious teachings should be exposed for its true nature and appropriate action taken against those producing and printing/distributing this.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Yorath Turner
27 June 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM UNISON

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
UNISON agrees that the proposed legislation will improve sexual orientation and gender identity equality. It will also protect and extend freedom of religion and belief by giving religious and belief groups the right to decide for themselves whether or not to solemnise same-sex marriages.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition
UNISON agrees with the proposal to establish belief ceremonies as a third type of ceremony, alongside religious and civil ceremonies, for getting married in Scotland. The Humanist Society Scotland already carries out more marriages than any religious group.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
UNISON agrees with the proposals for authorising religious and belief celebrants who wish to solemnise same-sex marriage. Specifically, we agree with allowing same-sex marriage in civil, religious and belief ceremonies. We agree that religious and belief bodies should be able to conduct such ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
UNISON agrees with the government that less regulation is needed regarding where civil marriages and civil partnership ceremonies can take place. We therefore agree with the proposal to allow civil marriage and civil partnership ceremonies to take place a

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

UNISON agrees with the proposed approach to ensuring that religious and belief bodies and celebrants do not have to register civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

UNISON agrees with the Scottish Government’s aim of revising the gender recognition process so that people who are married or in a civil partnership can obtain gender recognition without having to divorce or dissolve their civil partnership if they and th

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

UNISON believes in freedom of speech and broadly agrees with the proposed approach. We agree with the guarantee in section 12 of the bill which makes clear that nothing in the part of the bill that introduces same-sex marriage affects a person’s rights to freedom of religion or freedom of speech. We believe that, through these measures, the legislation will provide equality in marriage law and will effectively protect and extend freedom of religion and speech.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

9:UNISON believes in freedom of speech and broadly agrees with the proposed approach. We agree with the guarantee in section 12 of the bill which makes clear that nothing in the part of the bill that introduces same-sex marriage affects a person’s rights

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

another representative body
Trade Union

Eileen Dinning
UNISON
21 August 2013
The United Free Church of Scotland is grateful for the opportunity to comment on this Bill as it is considered by the Scottish Parliament.

We welcome moves by the Scottish Government to update the Marriage Scotland Act with regard to who may solemnise marriages, to address concerns over celebrants profiteering from the conduct of marriages and to take further steps to prevent sham marriages. We note that there is to be a further consultation on the qualifying requirements which should apply to religious and belief bodies which are authorised to solemnise marriages. However we are concerned that the proposed changes will not apply to the Church of Scotland whose ministers solemnise more marriages than any other Church. All other Churches along with other Religious and Belief Bodies will need to reapply to be authorized to conduct marriages but this will not apply to the Church of Scotland. We cannot understand why there is to be this fundamental inequality in how this matter is handled.

1. Church’s View of Marriage

a. The United Free Church always had a 'high view' of marriage and would regard it as 'the voluntary union for life of one man with one woman to the exclusion of all others'. This position was reaffirmed by our General Assembly of 2012 which stated that 'marriage is the union of one man and one woman.' Marriage is intended to be a lifelong commitment between one man and one woman. The Christian understanding of Marriage, as is traditionally stated in the Marriage ceremony, is that 'it is appointed for the well-being of human society, which 'can be strong and happy only where the marriage bond is held in honour'.

b. Indeed, we find that marriage has been universally embraced by diverse societies and cultures from the beginning of the human race as the union between a man and a woman and this has proved to be beneficial not only to the individuals in the union, but to their wider families and to society as a whole. The United Nations Declaration of Human Rights affirms that marriage is between a man and a woman.

2. Concern over the Proposed Changes

a. In the light of the above, the United Free Church of Scotland is opposed to the introduction of Same-Sex Marriage in Scotland. The changes being proposed in this Bill are not only inconsistent with Christian teaching but also go against many centuries of tradition in this country and around the world. The Scottish Government’s proposals would fundamentally change our understanding of marriage in our Scottish society as an institution with defined functions and social purposes and diminish it to being merely an individual’s right or entitlement. Once this precedent is established, marriage would then be subject to reappraisal, review and further change as minority groups seek “equality” for their own views and positions.
b. We should make clear that we accept the right of same sex couples to enter into partnerships recognised by the State and this has been possible for some years through the provision of Civil Partnerships. As a result, we do not consider same-sex marriage to be an 'equality' issue since same-sex couples in Civil Partnerships have all the rights of married couples. This seems to be confirmed in section 9 of the Bill, which refers to two civil partners changing their relationship by marrying. There is reference in the 'Policy Memorandum' page 17, paragraph 105 to 'civil partners (who) change their relationship to a marriage through administrative procedures'. It goes on to state 'The intention is that the effect would be the same as if the civil partners had changed their relationship by undergoing a marriage ceremony'. Such couples would be 'treated as having been married since they registered their civil partnership'. This confirms that the legal status of those in Civil Partnerships is the same as those who are married.

c. In the light of the above, we cannot understand why the Scottish Government (and the UK Government) has chosen to proceed with such contentious legislation and the inevitable upset and division which such legislation causes when it will not change the legal status of same-sex couples who are in Civil Partnerships.

3. Concerns over Freedom of Speech

a. The United Free Church welcomes Section 14 of the Bill dealing with Freedom of Speech in which it is made clear that the Scottish Government is committed to upholding and protecting human rights across society. It is confirmed that the Bill does not intend to affect the exercise
   • of the right in the European Convention of Human Rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion;
   • of the right in the European Convention of Human Rights to freedom of expression;
   • of any equivalent right conferred by the rule of law.

b. However, as with any legislation, it will ultimately be for the Courts to decide on cases which are brought before them in the light of this Bill and no Parliament can give guarantees on what the outcome of such cases will be. We have become aware that in England, the Essex Chronicle of 2nd August 2013 carried a report with the headline 'Gay dads set to sue over Church same-sex marriage opt-out'. It went on to quote the two men saying 'The only way forward for us now is to make a challenge in the courts against the church'. Sadly such cases are likely to become more common in Scotland as well as England if this Bill goes ahead. We appreciate that efforts have been made in the legislation to safeguard the position of clergy and others connected with Churches. However it is clear that there can be no guarantees about the efficacy of these safeguards and it remains to be seen what transpires when such matters are challenged in Court.

c. If this legislation goes ahead then we are not convinced there are adequate safeguards being put in place to safeguard the position of those who do not agree with the introduction of same-sex marriage. This includes not only many people connected with Churches of different denominations, but people of other Faiths and of none. However, our greater concern is over the impact the proposed legislation could have on Christians (and others) who are teachers, social workers etc where the Bill states that no additional safeguards will be introduced. The following was agreed at the United Free Church of Scotland General Assembly 2013:

“The General Assembly urge the Scottish Government to recognise the deeply held religious commitments on the issue of same-sex marriage and therefore to guarantee an adequate protection for freedom of speech and belief to protect the religious conscience of those particularly in teaching and social work with regard to local authorities; and more generally, so that people should not be disciplined for simply expressing their belief that marriage is between one man and one woman.”

4. Definition of Marriage

a. The United Free Church of Scotland shares the concerns raised by the Faculty of Advocates in their response to the Consultation on the proposed legislation in March 2013. As we have indicated above, Marriage has not required a definition previously because there has been a historical consensus about its meaning. However, if this legislation goes ahead, the lack of a definition is likely to cause difficulties within the legal system and confusion in society. We are concerned that in the Bill no attempt is made to define what will be meant by ‘Marriage’ if this legislation is approved. There is also a need for clarification on the difference between ‘Marriage’ and ‘Civil Partnership’.

5. Conclusion

Whilst the United Free Church of Scotland welcomes some aspects of this legislation, we are fundamentally opposed to the introduction of Same-Sex Marriage in Scotland and consider this to be an unnecessary piece of legislation since Civil Partnerships have been in existence for a number of years. We also have concerns over consequences for Freedom of Speech and over the lack of a definition of what will be meant by Marriage in future.

Rev John O Fulton
General Secretary
United Free Church of Scotland
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

We support the introduction of equal marriage throughout Scotland and believe that the equal recognition of same sex partnerships is an essential facet for a fairer and more just Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Popular myth has it that, at St Andrews, a student is more likely to find the love of their life during their time here than at any other UK university. Whether that myth is true or not, the students at St Andrews firmly believe that love, whether between a man and a woman or between two people of the same gender, should be celebrated.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

We support the establishment of equal footing for belief celebrants and religious celebrants, as individuals should be able to fully express their belief or their faith in the form most appropriate for them. This change allows for the advancement of this ideal without any sacrifice to the quality of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

Of particular note, we are discouraged by the Scottish government’s current proposal to defer solely to religious bodies on the recognition of a celebrant’s legal authority to solemnise a marriage. We hope that, in any and all instances where a same sex couple and a minister, clergyman, pastor, priest, or other celebrant of a religious or belief body all collectively ascent to the solemnisation of a marriage within their religion or belief, the Scottish government will use its authority for temporary authorisation under section 12 to provide for all couples within Scotland to be able to solemnise their marriage with the consenting relevant religious or belief celebrant to them. The Scottish government cannot rest on the assertion that this proposed policy would avoid interference with religious doctrine. The proposed policy instead provides a tacit consent to a religious body to impose a contented perspective to its other celebrants. Where the government has gone through extraordinary lengths to affirm a right for religious and belief celebrants to not be compelled to solemnise a marriage against their religion or belief, we hope that the government will similarly apply generous provisions to those that wish to.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

We agree in the expansion of possibilities for a couple entering a civil marriage to be able to celebrate their love and register themselves at a designated place of importance to them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

We see no reason to deny this opportunity to individuals who wish to enter into a civil partnership but also wish to hold a religious or belief ceremony to celebrate their partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

We fully support this provision to ensure the rights of transgendered persons to retain their marriage rights regardless of their point in the process of transitioning their gender.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We are encouraged by the endorsement of the rights and freedoms of individuals advanced by this proposed legislation. We do hope, however, that specific note is taken to affirm that the doctrine of the freedom of speech should never be allowed to supersede the progress towards equal and fair treatment for all of Scotland’s people and that the freedom of speech is not a carte-blanche for an opportunity to discriminate, particularly for those in position of civil authority.
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

another representative body

Teddy Woodhouse
University of St Andrews Students' Association
21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM UNIVERSITY OF WARWICK

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Joseph Jackson
University of Warwick
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Keli Unsworth
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Equality is equality - rights for one human are rights for another. If this bill moves us towards realising that, it absolutely must go forward in spite of those who believe not all humans deserve the same rights.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I'm in support of it, even if I don't expect to ever take advantage of it. To clarify: I'm gay, but even if this bill passes I will probably never marry in the contemporary understanding of the ceremony as, even if I wanted to make a statement of commitment to a partner, ‘marriage’ is tied up in religion, which I've long since left behind me. Opponents to the bill use this against the cause - they claim the change is unnecessary as very few people want it - but the reality is that as things currently stand, I'm not even allowed to make that choice. I want to be able to choose not to get married the same way thousands of straight couples choose not to get married: by choice, not by law. And ultimately, being able to make this choice will merely be a happy side product of something much more worthwhile - that those who are gay and religious will be able to make that statement of commitment in the first place.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

As stated earlier in the questionnaire, I believe marriage is more tied to religion than a civil partnership is, and if I were in a civil partnership I'd not want it to suddenly flip into being a marriage. Again, I'd like the ability to choose for myself whether that happened or not, which would require the option to be available to me, but not for it to be mandatory. Civil partnerships and marriages should be able to exist alongside each other, providing equal rights, rather than in opposition - in action they might be identical but ideologically they are very different statements of commitment, which I could see being very important to people.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Because c'mon, beach weddings are just the best thing.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

A gender change shouldn't nullify a marriage because, quite simply, you marry a person, not their genitals.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't understand what they think they need to be protected from, I only know they think that two people confirming their love and happiness together with friends and family in a ceremony that has demonstrated a remarkable flexibility with regards to its definition both legally and religiously over the course of thousands of years without yet falling apart is something they're not on board with. Perhaps they should be protected from history, as they're standing in its way and it isn't going to stop for them.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ryan Vance
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Scotland has always been a country in advanced development of science, technology, culture, and education. It is adamant that they also become advanced in regards to social aspects; the fact that same sex marriage has yet to become a legally recognised concept is pitiful.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

If two adults are consenting to dedicate themselves to each other and gain the legal rights that come with marriage or civil partnership then their religious views (or lack thereof) should not prohibit them.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Celebrants should only solemnise opposite and same sex marriages if they are in support of these marriages. No celebrant should solemnise a marriage that he or she opposes.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Civil partnership should exist for couples who do not agree with marriage but want the same rights as a married couple, such as the rights of the spouse if the other spouse dies intestate.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

It is shameful and backwards to state that a transgender person's marriage would become null due to the change in their gender; their identity does not inhibit them from dedicating themselves to their marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

If you can't say something nice don't say nothing at all.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Jessica van der Watson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Everyone should have the right to marry who they want

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

They may have concerns but that is their problem
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

na

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

na

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Astrid Waitz-Rainey
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Anyone should be free to marry the person they love.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

As long as no religious organisation or celebrant is made to conduct same sex marriages against their will, I do not see why this is an issue.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The law should allow religious individuals and organisations who wish to conduct same sex marriages to do so, whilst at the same time not punishing those who do not wish to.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Eleanor Walker
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM ZAMANTHA WALKER

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Personally I believe that any couple who wish to marry should be able to do so. Professionally as a Christian minister I know that people want - and need - a way of publicly making a commitment that has legal ramifications, both to affirm their love and to provide a framework for living.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I am still not clear what 'belief celebrants' are. However I am certainly not opposed to celebrants being able to conduct weddings and solemnise marriages.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

They seem well thought out. My only concern is that a lone voice can hold up a denomination unless there is room for congregational/ministerial conscience.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

most gay couples I know who have entered a civil partnership really wanted to get married, but took this step as one that offered legal recognition. In popular parlance some already refer to themselves - or others refer to them - as 'married'.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
as a religious celebrant I have that freedom and do not see why civil ceremonies should not also exercise that freedom.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

It is appallingly cruel that currently transgender persons have to divorce. I will be pleased if this situation is rectified.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I really feel that that this is a dangerous area: why should there be protection for those opposed as they are not the ones who would be marrying or wanting to marry someone of the same sex? When people who were opposed to mixed race marriages were vocal should they have been given "protection'? To me this falls within the same category. Please do not bow down to fear or hatred or dubious theological argument. If there is any protection surely it should be to protect those who are making that commitment. After all marriage is a good thing for society in that two people make a lifelong public commitment.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I think freedom of speech is important but too often it is used as a weapon to assault others from, in this instance, being able to be together. And the vitriol so often displayed is not justified in employing an argument.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Zamantha Walker

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't understand the reasoning behind this question at all. Who exactly needs to be protected and why? Those with concerns about same sex marriage are surely not threatened in any way at all by same sex couples who wish to marry! There is no threat to them as individuals and no threat to society as a whole.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...
a celebrant

Mary Wallace
Humanist Society Scotland
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Nicola Ward
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sarah Ward
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Being a gay women myself, the bill would mean a huge deal to me. It would allow me the chance to celebrate my love for another human being no matter the gender.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I feel it’s important as all should be given equal rights. I should be given the same rights as anyone else no matter their background, sexual orientation, etc. marriage means an even bigger step for the lgbt community and marriage would mean a huge step towards equality and same sex relationships may be taken more seriously.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a public body

Niamh Watson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Giving gay couples the option to celebrate their relationship like equals in society is very important. Homosexuals getting married will not affect the rest of the country in a negative way, just as straight couples getting married does not affect the homosexuals in the country either. In a world which is striving for equality right now, whether it be wiping out racism, sexism etc, seems archaic or contradictory by depriving the homosexual community the opportunity to celebrate their relationship the same way as heterosexuals are able to.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

This is a topic very close to my heart. I am not personally in the mind-set of getting married in the next couple of years but I do hope that when I find someone I wish to spend the rest of my life with I shall be able to celebrate my love for him in a wedding ceremony with my friends and family there. If equality is to be celebrated then marriage equality needs to be put in place too.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I believe religious celebrations or non-religious celebrations should be allowed so long as the church is comfortable with it. I don't believe anyone should be forced to do something they're not comfortable with, but some homosexuals are religious so should be offered the chance to get married in their place of worship.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

I believe both should be available for everyone. Some people don't want to be married and would rather be in a civil partnership. I believe the choice should be available for everyone.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I think this is very important, if someone chooses to go through gender changes and their partner is supporting of them and their choice then I do not see why they should be forced to end their marriage to then start another.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Same sex marriage will affect those of the same sex getting married. It will allow loving couples who haven't been able to celebrate their love for each other in the same way to have the best day of their lives. Couples showing their love and being happy should not affect the other members of the country who have a problem with their relationship.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Oliver Watson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I understand why religious societies have denied gay couples the right to marry. I understand why historic, undeveloped societies have denied gay couples the right to marry. However, we live in a developed democracy with a secular state and a culture of tolerance for different religions and traditional cultures. For us to truly believe that we are a fair, equal and enlightened democracy in those terms, we must make it legal for two consenting adults to marry. Their gender is irrelevant.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

We must face the reality that the traditional religions are not as prevalent in Scotland as they once were. Modern belief systems and philosophies now inform the choices of people of all ages where religion may have previously. With that in mind, the marriage, and marriage remains the legal and cultural bond we value most highly in a relationship between two people, must be something that a celebrant of any belief system can administer.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

Gay and straight couple should have the right to a civil partnership or a marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Cailean Watt
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Overall I think the Bill is good news, however it doesn't provide the option for heterosexual couples to have a civil partnership. Marriage, as a social, legal and religious institution, has connotations that some people in society are not comfortable with i.e the traditional rights, obligations and roles in marriage. Therefore I strongly believe that there should be an option for heterosexual couples to have a civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I think that in a modern progressive country it is only fair and reasonable that we regard all committed relationships between two people as equal and therefore they should have the same recognition by the state.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I think it is absolutely essential that in a progressive country belief celebrants have the same status as religious celebrants. A poll carried out for the Humanist Society Scotland on 18/1/11 should that when asked the Scottish census question, ‘What religion, religious denomination or body do you belong to?’. In response, 42% of the adult population in Scotland said ‘None’. Therefore I believe that the time is right to end religious privilege in Scotland and give full equality to those who wish to officiate ceremonies for citizens that are non religious.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Yes I think this is clear and fair to everyone.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
Yes I think sex same couples should be able to change their civil partnership into a marriage. However I also believe that heterosexual couples should be given the opportunity to have civil partnerships and be able to change their marriage into a civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I agree with these proposals entirely. I think that couples should be allowed the chance to have their marriage recognised at a place which they may hold in special regard or have an affinity with.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I agree that religious bodies who oppose same sex marriage should not be forced to conduct them and should be given exemption. Moreover I do not think registrars working for local authorities should receive the same protection has religious bodies since they are carrying out a duty in a paid capacity on behalf of a local authority and therefore should not be able to discriminate against people because of their own personal beliefs.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Conor Watt
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

This seems like a contradiction to me. If a couple want a religious ceremony then by definition it isn't 'civil'. The only circumstance I can see this applying is where a couple wanted a religious marriage but were refused by the religious organisation

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
These so-called 'protections' just seem like making allowances for people to discriminate. These bullies should be educated, it is the bullied who need protection.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Stewart Watts
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mark Webster
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I support the bill for it is my belief that irrespective of gender those who are in love should have the right to marry under Scottish law and be given the same rights as their fellow scots

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I wholeheartedly believe that this is a fundamental human right and it makes me incredibly sad that I even have to write this passage to declare my support for I am yet to see one reason which is not religious which would give substantial reason behind not passing this bill

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

For me religion and law should never be together for this is how we end up in these sorts of dilemmas, I completely appreciate those who have beliefs one of my best friends is an evangelical pastor but that belief should not be infringed onto mass society

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I think it should be up to each religious body to decide whether they wish to conduct the ceremony though I think to save any heartache for prospective married couples that if the opt in procedure was to be implemented there should be a clear list made available of who this is. Getting married is stressful enough without the extra confusion of if a specific religious body allows it so this must be made clear

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I don't know if whoever is reading this has ever been to a civil partnership but the moment the registrar says I now pronounce you civil partners always make me wince and realise how far back we actually sit on the issue considering countries less liberal in other areas (south Africa for one) has same sex marriage. A civil partnership was a nice idea in terms of bridging the gap of social development but enough is enough loving someone because of their gender should not mean you have to be limited to a lesser state

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

My answer on this is very dependent on the religious part. If you are proposing that the bill would mean a couple couldn’t get married in a religious premise even if the church and the couple agreed then I am against this in terms of allowing same sex couples to marry anywhere in general I think that is only right considering at the moment, in Glasgow at least, most of the marriages take place in park circus and there is very little room to personalise. Your wedding day is supposed to be the best day of your life and I know for me I have horses and would want a cart etc and I certainly wouldn't want to marry in Glasgow city centre just a few minutes from where I live but currently if I had to get married I'd have very little choice

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Kimberley weir
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Stephen Weir
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

All people should be treated equally and with respect and have the same opportunity as everyone else to live a happy life in a committed relationship with all distinctions removed so that one group of people does not get ostracised or made to feel different simply by how they were born.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

The benefits of marriage are plain to see, removing distinctions or offering the choice between a civil partnership and full marriage for LGBT people would enhance the lives of so many Scots and reassure them that they are fully equal citizens.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

A religion is an organised belief system that is not based on any actual documented evidence to support their claims, not one single religion has ever in modern history been able to prove a single supernatural event, thus I don't believe a large group of

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Except I personally believe that anyone of a particular faith should be guaranteed a same sex marriage, why should we force the majority of Muslim, evangelical or Church of England (who can't opt in) to either change their faith or not get a marriage because their religious leaders are bigoted against LGBT people in the majority of cases within these conservative ideologies?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

If people prefer to call their commitment marriage, then so be it, perhaps they will have an additional ceremony enhancing the economy.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

A religious institution is not required to make a life long commitment, speaking inside a church is no different to speaking outside one.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

We should not deny people of a particularly conservative faith civil partnerships in the same way we should not effectively deny them marriages simply because the registrar opts out.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

That's a horrible practise that should be stricken out of the law ASAP for the heart breaking discrimination that it throws on the transgendered, married, community.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

everyone is entitled to a view, however when that view is a negative one about a group of people that is called discrimination. If we are talking about protections for people who hold such views then what about protecting people who believe that believe interracial marriage is wrong? or that all immigrants should "go home"? replace the word gay/same sex marriage with interracial marriage/black rights/womens rights/minority rights and a whole host of other things and suddenly the idea of giving these people "protections" is not so palatable for some reason. Allowing these people protections to opt out of dealing with LGBT people is condoning this discrimination. Can a priest/pastor/Registrar opt out of marrying a black man and white women, no. can they opt out of marrying people for any other reason, no. Why should we afford them this condonement of their discrimination? We shouldn't.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech should be celebrated, it is a crowning achievement as a country which provides checks and balances against tyranny, bigotry, exploitation and corruption. discrimination should be stamped out. free speech can become discrimination when it is used against a person on assumption and prejudice, and not against an idea. This is why one can make any comment about any prophet, book or dogma without fear or reprisal, but turn that same scrutiny against a follower of that prophet, the author of that book (with threatening and unfounded statements) then we can class it is discrimination.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

It is time as a country that we take that step to base every bill and law we make on principles based on secular, equality and reason based arguments.

Are you responding as...

- an academic
- a private individual

Stephen Welsh
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
Neither

This Council supports the proposal providing the proposed rigorous checks on celebrants by the NRS are approved as part of the Bill.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

Support subject to the proposed rigorous checks on celebrants by the NRS are approved as part of the Bill.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

This is a practical solution to the issue.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

It is very important that the local authority, as an employer, is able to make appropriate risk assessments on suitability of the premises and can refuse if premises are not deemed to be safe or fit for purpose. The agreement should therefore be between the local authority and the couple and not an individual registrar as is suggested in this question.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a public body

George Hawthorn
West Dumbartonshire Council
10 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

In respect of the Transgender provisions we fully endorse the submission of the Equality Network and what they have reasonably argued for which ensure both human rights and simple dignity is afforded all parties to the recognition of status.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
No

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group
We are the West of Scotland LGBT Forum

David Thomas
West of Scotland LGBT Forum
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

- a private individual
- Member of LGBT community

Hannah Westbury
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Nikki white
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

keep it as civil partnership so as to retain the term 'marriage' for heterosexual marriage intended to be lifelong

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

the wellbeing of society is enhanced by children being brought up, as the norm, in a monogamous heterosexual faithful lifelong union. It is jeopardised if this is lost, as the Bill proposes

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Those who have a faith position on these things in all walks of life eg education, registrars of marriages, religious leaders, ought to be given protection allowing them to state and explain their position without jeopardising their employment

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Peter White
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ross Whyte
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
no

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

john wilcox
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I think this provision is essential so that modern Scotland provides parity of esteem for same-sex couples and the Scottish State does not imply that same-sex relationships are somehow inferior to opposite-sex relationships by forcibly consigning them to a category made up simply to deny them the right to marry. It is not the place of Scots law to force couples to live by the tenets of a particular religion or to make value judgements about stable, loving relationships between two people.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

I believe that people's beliefs should be able to be freely expressed in their marriage ceremony, whether they are religious, humanistic or something else entirely.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

Organisations should be free to decide whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages. Religious freedom must work both ways, there should be freedom from and freedom to, and the bill gets the balance right. I agree with the Equality Network that a small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the husband and wife gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I think the process provided for this should be simple, and ideally free. Couples should have the option of having a ceremony if they wish (and pay the associated costs), but this should not be compulsory.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I think it is for couples and celebrants to decide where marriages should take place not the Government. I abhor the English system where registration is of locations not people, because it limits freedom of choice unnecessarily.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I do not think this option will be particularly popular but it may allow some religious bodies a degree of doctrinal flexibility, where they cannot reconcile their faith to same-sex marriage but could agree to recognise civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This is one of the key injustices that will be corrected by this legislation. I am however in firm agreement with the Equality Network the spousal veto should operate on the remarriage not on the gender recognition certificate and that the evidence required from long transitioned people should be less in line with the English legislation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I believe that the law as it stands both in terms of statute and the ECHR already provides more than adequate protection for those people who don't believe in same sex marriage. The argument that dissent will be crushed by force of law (rather than by society, which is what has happened to racism and is actually what is happening to homophobia) is, I feel, a straw man erected by opponents of the bill in order to generate opposition to its principles. Any additional provision in the bill would be in the form of a "for the avoidance of doubt" clause, which would by its very nature be redundant and unnecessary. I feel the ambition of those who push for such clauses is simply to get the statute law to agree that their view is a good and valid one to hold, which is not an appropriate thing for the law to do.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

This bill will have no legal impact on freedom of speech. Any chilling effect spoken of by opponents is related rather to society's decreased acceptance of homophobia and increasing realisation that LGBT people, are just normal people and don't merit the stigma which has for so long been attached to them. We don't tolerate racism, why must we tolerate homophobia?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I believe that this bill must include mixed sex civil partnerships in order to create true equality or at least provision for this to be reviewed like the English Act. I also hope that the Scottish Government will petition to Westminster government to equalise the pension arrangements.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Daniel Wilkes
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM SUE WILKINSON

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support and welcome the Bill. It will bring Scotland into line with the new marriage equality provisions in England & Wales.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I strongly support and welcome this, as long as it means that same-sex couples can marry on the same basis as different-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I strongly support and welcome this.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Opt-in procedures seem the right way to balance equality and religious freedom.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

It should be a choice whether to 'upgrade' to marriage or remain as civil partners - and it should be as simple as possible to do the former. Some thought needs to be give as to how couples who are civilly partnered elsewhere will be enabled to marry in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

This would maximise freedom of choice.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support and welcome this. However, a married trans person should not have to get the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. And the age for applying for gender recognition should be in line with the age for marrying.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the Bill strikes a good balance between equality and religious freedom. Civil officials (e.g. registrars, local government officials, NHS personnel) should not be able to opt out. Teachers should not be able to opt out of talking about same-sex marriage on the grounds of personal opposition - they should be required to give factual answers about its availability/legality.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The Bill contains appropriate protections for freedom of religion. Disagreeing publicly with same-sex marriage is fine - as long as it does not constitute 'hate speech', or incite action against gay people in any way.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I would like to see FULL equality in relationship recognition: ie civil partnerships for different-sex couples as well as marriage for same-sex couples. I therefore welcome the Scottish government's commitment to review CP law (paralleling that of the English government). I would also like to see the Scottish government review issues surrounding the definition of adultery, and around inequities in pension provision.

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Sue Wilkinson
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

All marriage should be on an equal footing.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I am concerned, however, that couples in a civil partnership registered outside of Scotland are not covered by this and would like to see an amendment to the bill to allow these couples to marry in Scotland without first dissolving their civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
However, I would like to see a change from the current requirement that the spouse must support the gender recognition in order for it to take place, to a system where gender recognition should be available without this, but agreement from the spouse should be sought for the marriage to continue only.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the protections of religious views in the bill are rightly strong, but would object to similar protections being applied to civil marriage ceremonies where the registrar acts on behalf of the state. I am very concerned that the bill should not allow for discrimination in teaching. There should not be an opt-out for teachers in addressing the subject of same sex marriage. Teachers should teach the facts of the society we live in, not their personal views.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I would like to see greater provision made in the bill for the equality of transgender people in the sphere of marriage and civil partnerships. I would also like to see lobbying of the UK Parliament by The Scottish Parliament to ensure that pension rights are equal for all married couples, irrelevant of gender.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Anna Williams
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

By now we realise that punishing gay people for being gay has not turned us into heterosexuals, nor it ever will.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Not only does it remove the last vestige of discrimination in social status and financial terms, it has implications for children being raised by adoptive or blood parents to know their parents are legally married. There is no more reason to put the stamp of unworthiness upon such children than there ever was to stigmatise children born out of wedlock as "illegitimate".

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Civil Marriage is a secular matter, but if religions or other beliefs want to perform same sex marriages, then so long as the happy couple sign the government’s register, it’s perfectly reasonable to give their commitment equal status.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

They should not be treated with less dignity or respect just because they are a same sex couple.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

If they want it, let them do it. I think there should be a resolemnisation however, as they are different.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

If two people love each other enough to want to swear mutual fidelity in front of a crowd of friends and family, I see no reason to stand in their way.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Same as last answer, if they want to swear mutual fidelity before witnesses, I see no reason to deny them that.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Since the gender will become irrelevant after the bill passes, then this question no long has relevance.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

None of this affects them, unless it is part of their job to conduct such ceremonies. Then I favour redeploying them elsewhere in the same organisation, certainly not dismissal, which would be unfair and provocative.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Aside from obvious legal curtailments like Defamation, Perjury, Fraud, Vilification, Incitement to Crime etc, I believe that people should be able to speak their mind freely on both sides (or more) of the issue."The truth will out".

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I applaud Scotland in general and the SNP in particular for this important and final visionary step to bring to an end the centuries old persecution of homosexuals.

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Derek Williams
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM DAVID WILSON

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

David Wilson
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Fiona Wilson
23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM HANNAH WILSON

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Hannah Wilson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
I'm gay and I want the same human rights as heterosexual couples!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I should be allowed to marry my gf if I want. It's people's human rights!

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
I don't care what the church thinks about same sex marriage and the law should not be based on what the church thinks. If they don't want to marry us, it's fine by me.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Fine by me!

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Human rights! Nothing else to be said!

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Sounds good to me

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It's human rights, you wouldn't like it if the tables were turned. Just cause we're gay isn't going to affect your marriage...and if it does there's a serious problem in your own relationship. Don't blame gays!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Hazel Wilson
13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

patrick wilson
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sophie Wilson
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Humanist celebrants in Scotland can already conduct legally-recognised marriages; I'm happy that the bill clarifies that in the law, and makes clear that other philosophical belief organisations can also apply to conduct marriages.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Section 11(2) of the bill requires a small amendment in order to give bodies that want to the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony (section 11(2)(g)) for mixed-sex couples who would prefer it. This is particularly important where one or both members of a mixed-sex couple is transgender. Those religious bodies that always wish to use the husband and wife gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I do have a concern that couples who are already in a civil partnership can only marry in Scotland if their civil partnership was registered in Scotland. The lightweight administrative procedure for changing to a marriage can only work with civil partnerships registered here in Scotland, but there's no reason why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should not be allowed to marry in Scotland. The bill in its current form causes real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland who want to marry. They will first dissolve their civil partnership in order to do so, but that requires proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down by living apart for a year. It is very unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry. If the country where they registered their civil partnership does not allow same-sex marriage, they would need to dissolve their civil partnership there in a similar way before coming back to Scotland to marry. The practical result will be that the couple will effectively be barred from marrying in Scotland, which is morally wrong.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce, but the bill as it stands requires a number of amendments before it is fit for practice. The bill currently would require a married person to get their spouse's consent to obtain gender recognition. The spouse can thus effectively “vetoâ€”the trans person’s gender recognition â€“ or force the trans person to first apply for divorce. If the spouses have a difficult relationship, the divorce proceedings could take a long time, during which the trans person is unable to access their human right to legal recognition of their true gender. Since a trans person applying for gender recognition must have already been living in their acquired gender for at least two years, obtaining gender recognition does not change the practical nature of their marriage. But it does free the trans person from discrimination by bringing their legal status into line with reality. That should be available with or without the spouse’s consent, because it is a personal matter for the trans person and has no direct effect on their spouse. The only time the spouse's consent is appropriate is for the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition. Therefore, spousal consent should not a requisite for granting gender recognition, but should be required instead for the re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. The bill is also currently missing any provision for a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years, something included in the corresponding English legislation. It can be very difficult for a person who has been transitioned for a long time to obtain all the medical evidence required from people who have only been transitioned two years. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. Hence a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill, as it would assist both applicants and the Gender Recognition Panel.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The current level of protections offered by the bill are plenty. To add more would restrict the ability of same-sex couples to be married in the way that they want. Adding a provision for civil registrars to opt-out of performing same-sex marriages would be entirely inappropriate as they are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state. Public service providers (civil registrars, local government, the NHS, etc.) should never be allowed to pick and choose which parts of the public they are willing to serve. Teachers should also not have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class. Likewise, parents should not be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. Teachers are employed to teach facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements especially in the case of pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, even though the topic is equally controversial for some people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The idea that the bill will limit freedom of speech is laughable. People will still be able to express their disagreement with same sex marriage in public. The case of Smith v. Trafford Housing Trust clearly shows that it is illegal for an employer to take action against an employee simply because they make public statements that they disagree with same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Currently, the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster. Under current rules these schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is a clear case of discrimination. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and I strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Stew Wilson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly believe in equality for all, on the same legal footing, regardless of their ethnicity, religion, gender or sexuality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I am in full agreement. While opponents of this bill have cited freedom of speech and warned that they believe that their Civil Liberties would be infringed by the passing of this bill, I believe that this is a smokescreen and an appalling point of view. A person cannot expect to enjoy freedom if they achieve that by discriminating against others based upon prejudices and not allowing others access to the same legal status purely because they hold irrational beliefs about what is normal and what is beyond the pale.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Please see above.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I am a little concerned at the idea of opt-in in as much as does this mean certain organisations or individuals are allowed to opt-out on religious/personal grounds?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am unsure as to what they require protecting from. Those who have concerns are already protected and currently enjoy a privileged status in society - i.e. legal recognition of heterosexual marriages. No part of the Bill is threatening to take that away. For those who object on personal or religious grounds I think this is dangerous ground. Would we allow a Doctor or Nurse to refuse to treat anyone because of their sexuality, gender or ethnicity? Anyone working with the public who did this would be quite rightly sanctioned. My personal feeling is that a same-sex couple would not ask a Church to carry out a marriage ceremony if they felt the individual or organisation were only doing it under duress.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I've commented on this earlier. I believe in freedom of speech, wholeheartedly. However, freedom of speech comes with responsibilities. If my exercising of my freedom of speech negatively affects individuals in ways beyond merely being offended but instead leaves groups or individuals on lesser legal footings then that is not freedom of speech that we are respecting but the right to have a prejudice or bias upheld.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Andy Wood
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mark Woodsford-Dean
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

1) Will the Bill benefit some people? - Yes  2) Will there be detriments to others - No  3) Bill should become law.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

I support the conscience clause allowing opt-out of individuals who are already approved celebrants, but the opt in procedures deny the conscience of celebrants to conduct marriages if their organisation has opted out, effectively denied them that right.  i.e. the conscience clause only works one way

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

But there should be no cost to the individuals concerned. Having been discriminated against it is adding insult to injury to make them pay to correct an injustice done to them

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Let the the love flow!

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We are in danger of codifying discrimination by allowing the conscience clause to operate in only one way. Sexuality is as intrinsic as ethnic origin, gender and disability (religion, like politics is a choice) The opponents of the bill seem to be demanding in laws relating to sexuality there should be special dispensation for discriminatory language and behaviour. These calls should be resisted

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ross Wright
29 June 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Marriage is as presently defined is for heterosexual couples in a loving life long commitment involving procreation, nurturing any offspring to adulthood. It is the method in nature to ensure the survival of the human race. Homosexual couples have not been selected for this purpose as is clear in the percentage of homosexuals in the human race - approx 2%. It is not clear what new legal rights that same sex couples would receive in marriage as opposed to civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage involves any children which may be born through the union of a man and a woman. It is the care of these children which is paramount. It is not clear what commitment there will be between two men/women in this regard.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

In as much as civil partnerships do not claim to be marriages but are a commitment between a man and a woman to live in a loving relationship with all the protection that the law of the land gives to them. This is equivalent to the protections given to those who are married and changing a title is of no significance

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition
I object to the question. Because it lacks clarity. If you are referring to civil partnerships I am quite happy that they conduct the ceremony anywhere other than religious premises.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I have clear knowledge of a similar situation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Currently a homosexual couple is planning to go to court to force churches to host gay weddings. It is likely that this will be settled by the European Court of Human rights. Any protections attempted by Scottish Law are likely to be overturned. Human rights law has not protected adoption agencies. Article 9 in the European court of Human rights, i.e. the right of freedom of thought, conscience and religion has not provided protection in the face of other rights. Teachers should not be compelled to teach about same sexed marriage and parents should be allowed to withdraw their children when such lessons are being taught. Parents must have the legal right to know when such lessons are going to be taught. Legislation must be put in place to protect people in employment giving them freedom of speech and security of employment and freedom to opt out in procedures concerned with same sex marriage. Police should be thoroughly educated in the legislation which results so that false arrests do not take place because of their ignorance or prejudice. There is ample evidence that this takes place. No one should be prevented from adopting or fostering because they hold to the current definition of marriage and this needs to written into law and must be legislative change.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech must be protected at all costs so that in society people may agree to differ. Education does not thrive where freedom of speech is not the rule. Society becomes totalitarian, corrupt, repressive and controlling. Democracy begins to be akin to a political dictatorship. Freedom of speech must be legislatively secure.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Charitable status must not be removed from charities who disagree with same sexed marriage. This includes religious groups who do so much caring work in society and without whose support social services would not be able to cope, particularly in urban situations. The law should be amended to embody the protection of such charities and secure their charitable status.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ralph Wylie
13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Calum Wyllie
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...
a private individual

Lynzi Young
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

M C G Young
17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The bill grants equality one protected characteristics group of people without taking away any rights from another. Hence, I believe this is a progressive legislation.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
There is room for everyone in this world.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Hristo Zdravkov
22 August 2013
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

51st Report, 2013 (Session 4)

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

Published by the Scottish Parliament on 2 October 2013
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

Remit and membership

Remit:

1. The remit of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee is to consider and report on—
   (a) any—
   (i) subordinate legislation laid before the Parliament or requiring the consent of the Parliament under section 9 of the Public Bodies Act 2011;
   (ii) [deleted]
   (iii) pension or grants motion as described in Rule 8.11A.1; and, in particular, to determine whether the attention of the Parliament should be drawn to any of the matters mentioned in Rule 10.3.1;
   (b) proposed powers to make subordinate legislation in particular Bills or other proposed legislation;
   (c) general questions relating to powers to make subordinate legislation;
   (d) whether any proposed delegated powers in particular Bills or other legislation should be expressed as a power to make subordinate legislation;
   (e) any failure to lay an instrument in accordance with section 28(2), 30(2) or 31 of the 2010 Act; and
   (f) proposed changes to the procedure to which subordinate legislation laid before the Parliament is subject.
   (g) any Scottish Law Commission Bill as defined in Rule 9.17A.1; and
   (h) any draft proposal for a Scottish Law Commission Bill as defined in that Rule.

Membership:

Christian Allard
Richard Baker
Nigel Don (Convener)
Mike MacKenzie
Margaret McCulloch
John Scott
Stewart Stevenson (Deputy Convener)
Committee Clerking Team:

Clerk to the Committee
Euan Donald

Assistant Clerk
Elizabeth White

Support Manager
Daren Pratt
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

51st Report, 2013 (Session 4)

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

The Committee reports to the Parliament as follows—

1. At its meetings on 3 and 10 September and 1 October 2013 the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee considered the delegated powers provisions in the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill at stage 1 ("the Bill")¹. The Committee submits this report to the lead committee for the Bill under Rule 9.6.2 of Standing Orders.

2. The Scottish Government provided the Parliament with a memorandum on the delegated powers provisions in the Bill ("the DPM")².

OVERVIEW OF BILL

3. This Bill was introduced by the Scottish Government on 26 June 2013. The Equal Opportunities Committee is the lead Committee.

4. The Bill makes changes to the law on the solemnisation of marriage and civil partnerships. It makes changes to the law on gender recognition, matrimonial proceedings and other matters as a result of the changes which are made to marriage and civil partnership. The primary change which the Bill makes is to introduce same sex marriage. It does so through amendments to the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 ("the 1977 Act"). The Bill also makes provision for the registration of religious civil partnerships and belief civil partnerships by amendment to the Civil Partnership Act 2004 ("the 2004 Act"); but it does not introduce opposite sex civil partnership.

¹ Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill [as introduced] available here: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Marriage%20and%20Civil%20Partnership%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b36s4-introd.pdf

² Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill Delegated Powers Memorandum available here: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Marriage_and_Civil_Partnership_DPM.pdf
5. The Committee considered each of the delegated powers in the Bill.

6. At its first consideration of the Bill, the Committee determined that it did not need to draw the attention of the Parliament to the following delegated powers:

   Section 4(8) & (9) – meaning of marriage and related expressions in enactments & documents

   Section 9(4) & (5) – effect of marriage between civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership

   Section 10(2)(a)(ii) (new section 8(1)(a)(ii) of the 1977 Act) – persons who may solemnise marriage: power to prescribe religious or belief bodies whose celebrants are authorised to solemnise opposite sex marriage

   Section 10(2)(b) (new section 8(1B)(a)(i) of the 1977 Act) – persons who may solemnise marriage: power to prescribe religious or belief bodies whose celebrants are authorised to solemnise same sex marriage

   Section 10(2)(b) (new section 8(1E) of the 1977 Act) – Persons who may solemnise marriage: power in relation to qualifying requirements for bodies to meet before they can be prescribed so their celebrants are authorised to solemnise marriage

   Section 11(2)(e) (new section 9(2A) of the 1977 Act) – Registration of nominated persons as celebrants: power in relation to qualifying requirements for nominating bodies to meet when putting forward persons to the Registrar General to be empowered to solemnise marriage

   Section 12(2)(b) (new section 12(1D) of the 1977 Act) – Temporary authorisation of celebrants: power on qualifying requirements in relation to temporary celebrants

   Section 16(2) – the marriage schedule

   Section 22(13) (new section 94A(1)(a)(i) of the 2004 Act) – Registration of civil partnership: power to prescribe religious or belief bodies whose celebrants are authorised to register civil partnerships

   Section 22(13) (new section 94A(5) of the 2004 Act) – Registration of civil partnership: power to specify qualifying requirements for bodies to meet before they can be prescribed so their celebrants are authorised to register civil partnerships

   Section 22(13) (new section 94B(3) of the 2004 Act) – Registration of civil partnership: power to specify qualifying requirements for nominating bodies to meet when putting forward persons to the Registrar General to be empowered to register civil partnership
Section 22(13) (new section 94E(4) of the 2004 Act) – Registration of civil partnership: power to specify qualifying requirements in relation to temporary authorisations to register civil partnerships

Section 22(15) (new section 95ZA(1) of the 2004 Act) – Registration of civil partnership: prescribed forms requiring delivery of civil partnership schedule

Section 31 – ancillary provision

Section 32(2) – commencement

Schedule 1 paragraph 1(4) (new Schedule 1B paragraph 2 of the Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973) – jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages

Schedule 2 paragraph 8 (new paragraph 20A of Schedule 3 to the Gender Recognition Act 2004) – registration: change of gender of married persons or civil partners.

7. The Committee also determined that it did not need to draw the attention of the Parliament to the following powers to issue guidance:

Section 15(2) (new section 3(4C) of the 1977 Act) – power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: marriage

Section 23 (new section 88(10) of the 2004 Act) – power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: civil partnership

8. At its meeting on 3 September the Committee agreed to take oral evidence on the Bill from Scottish Government officials.

9. The Committee’s comments and, where appropriate, recommendations on the delegated powers in the Bill which were considered in the oral evidence session on 10 September\(^3\) are detailed below. The first power concerns the proposed administrative procedure for the conversion of civil partnerships to marriage. The remaining powers concern changes to the law on the effect of a change of gender on marriage or civil partnership.

CONVERTING CIVIL PARTNERSHIP TO MARRIAGE

Section 8(1) – change of qualifying civil partnership to marriage

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers

Power exercisable by: regulations

Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure unless textually amending primary legislation when affirmative procedure

---

10. Persons who are in a “qualifying” civil partnership are to be able to marry each other by going through a marriage ceremony under the 1977 Act as amended by the Bill. Section 9 sets out the effect of such a marriage. It provides that the civil partnership ends on the date of the marriage and the parties are to be treated as having been married from the date of registration of the civil partnership.

11. Section 8 proposes that there should be an alternative mechanism for converting qualifying civil partnerships to marriage in the form of an administrative process rather than through the full solemnisation of the marriage. It confers power on the Scottish Ministers to make regulations about this procedure. Regulations can include provision about the application process, the information or evidence to be provided in support of an application and can confer functions in relation to applications and charge fees.

12. Before making regulations under this section the Scottish Ministers must consult the Registrar General. The power includes the power to make ancillary provision and to textually amend primary legislation. Where the power is used to amend primary legislation then it is subject to the affirmative procedure. Otherwise it is subject to the negative procedure.

13. The Committee was concerned that section 8(2)(g) allows the Scottish Ministers to make provision about the effect of a qualifying civil partnership changing into a marriage through this procedure. Given that the Bill itself sets out the effect of converting to marriage through a marriage ceremony the Committee was unclear why Ministers required power to make provision about the effect of an “administrative conversion” and why it was not the same.

14. The Committee probed what was meant by effect in these circumstances. The Scottish Government officials clarified that the effect which could be prescribed was not the effect of being married but the effect of the process of changing from the state of being in a civil partnership to the state of being married.

15. The Committee welcomed this clarification and then sought re-assurance that there would be no difference between the effect of converting a qualifying civil partnership to marriage through a full marriage ceremony or through the proposed administrative route. It also sought an explanation as to why the provisions in section 9 of the Bill could not simply apply regardless of the manner of the conversion.

16. Simon Stockwell, Team Leader, Family Law and Property, Scottish Government responded:

> “In essence, the policy intention is that there should be no difference in effect. It is intended that when changing a civil partnership to a marriage under the administrative route that is established under section 8, the effect will be exactly the same as a marriage ceremony under section 9… there will be no difference. It will not matter whether you marry through an administrative route or in a ceremony; once you are in the marriage, the effect will be exactly the same.”

17. Given this response and the narrow policy intention the Committee questioned why the power in section 8(2)(g) was drawn so widely. Simon Stockwell explained that the power was drawn widely so as to ensure that Ministers were able to do everything they need to do. He further explained that provision may need to be made for specific circumstances such as the treatment of matrimonial property. The Committee notes from the DPM that it is intended that the power in section 9(4) would be used to deal with such situations in relation to solemnised marriages. But the power in section 9(4) can only disapply or modify the general effect of section 9. So that power is more limited in scope than the power in section 8(2)(g) which is not limited by any connection to section 9; despite that being the stated policy intention.

18. Given that the power in section 8(2)(g) is framed widely enough to permit a different approach to section 9 the Committee queried the justification given for the choice of procedure. Such regulations will be subject to the negative procedure if they do not textually amend primary legislation. The Committee asked whether the affirmative procedure had been considered. Simon Stockwell explained:

“Obviously, we considered the possibility of using the affirmative procedure – we considered all the potential procedures – but we concluded that, on the whole, because the process is reasonably straightforward and is mirrored in provisions in the bill, negative procedure would be appropriate except for when we are amending primary legislation. However, I accept that arguments could be made the other way.”

19. The Committee welcomes the Scottish Government’s assurances that the power in section 8(2)(g) is intended to be used to replicate the provision made by section 9 of the Bill (including any delegated legislation under that section). It notes that the Scottish Government therefore intends that persons converting their civil partnership to marriage through the administrative mechanism will be treated in the same manner as those who go through a marriage ceremony under the 1977 Act.

20. Nevertheless, the Committee’s role is to consider the whole range of powers sought and not just the manner in which the Government of the day intends to use them. Here the Scottish Government is clear as to the policy that is to be achieved. There is no suggestion that the policy requires some inherent flexibility beyond being able to deliver that policy fully and effectively.

21. The Committee considers that in such cases powers should be drawn no more widely than necessary, while taking into account the possibility that additional provision may be required to ensure the proposed regulations work appropriately within the framework of the law on marriage and civil partnership. The Committee is also not clear why section 9 could not simply be applied to any procedure established under section 8 if the intention is that there should be no difference between the effect of either route to marriage.

---

22. The Committee therefore invites the Scottish Government to reconsider whether the power in section 8(2)(g) is necessary or is broader than required to deliver the intended policy of replicating the effect of section 9.

23. If the Scottish Government considers that the power in section 8(2)(g) remains necessary then the Committee is of the view that the higher level of scrutiny afforded by the affirmative procedure is merited given the scope of the power and the potential for it to make different effect to that contained in section 9.

EFFECT OF CHANGE OF GENDER ON MARRIAGE OR CIVIL PARTNERSHIP

24. Part 4 of the Bill concerns the effect of a change in the gender of a party to a Scottish marriage or a Scottish civil partnership. The Gender Recognition Act 2004 sets out how persons may have a change in gender legally recognised. This is a two stage process. Where an interim gender recognition certificate is issued the status of the applicant’s gender is not affected but the issue of the certificate triggers other effects. One such effect is to entitle the holder of the certificate or their spouse or civil partner to obtain a divorce or to dissolve the civil partnership.
A person’s change in gender is only legally recognised when a full gender recognition certificate is issued.

25. It is not currently possible for a married person or for a party to a civil partnership to remain in that legal relationship if they change gender and their spouse or partner does not. That is because the nature of the relationship would then be incompatible with the nature of marriage or civil partnership. The Gender Recognition Act 2004 therefore only allows a full recognition certificate to be issued to persons who are not in a legal relationship or where both parties to the relationship change gender at the same time. With the introduction of same sex marriage the change in gender of one of the parties to a marriage would no longer be an obstacle to the legal relationship continuing should both parties agree since a marriage could comprise spouses of the same or opposite gender. Civil partners could not remain in a civil partnership in such circumstances since they would then be of opposite genders. However, it would be possible for them to marry, as indeed it would be as at present.

26. The Scottish Government’s policy is that where only one party to a legally recognised relationship changes gender the couple should be able to remain in a legally recognised relationship if they wish to do so. The Bill makes provision for the possibility of the conversion of civil partnerships to marriage in such circumstances or for the recognition that a marriage has changed from an opposite sex marriage to a same sex marriage or vice versa.
Section 28(1) – renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: regulations
Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure unless textually amending primary legislation when affirmative procedure

27. Section 28 confers power on the Scottish Ministers to make provision about the solemnisation of a “renewed marriage” or the registration of a “renewed civil partnership” following on from the issue of a full gender recognition certificate to one or both of the parties to a marriage or both parties to a civil partnership. Before making regulations the Scottish Ministers must consult the Registrar General. Section 28(2)(h) allows the Scottish Ministers to make provision about the effect of entering into a renewed marriage or a renewed civil partnership.

28. The regulations may include ancillary provision, may apply the 1977 or the 2004 Acts with or without modifications and can amend any legislation. Unless the regulations amend primary legislation (when they are subject to the affirmative procedure) they are subject to the negative procedure.

29. The Committee was not clear what the effect of a “renewed marriage” or a “renewed civil partnership” was to be. As it appeared that the marriage or civil partnership would continue unaffected the Committee was not clear what any change in effect there would be and therefore why there was a need to make provision about the effect of any change.

30. The Scottish Government confirmed that there was to be no change in effect in these circumstances. As Simon Stockwell explained:

“The legal status is that a couple would be regarded as married or in a civil partnership but would not need to go through the marriage or the civil partnership ceremony to achieve that status. The bill already has a provision that states that when a couple undergo gender recognition, their marriage or civil partnership will continue. The legal effect of section 28 is simply to allow them to have a ceremony to reflect their newly acquired genders; it is not meant to change the legal status of their marriage or civil partnership.”

31. The Scottish Government explained that it was important to provide a means by which persons who change gender can obtain legal recognition of their newly acquired gender within their existing relationship. It was also important not to inadvertently disclose that a person has changed gender through the terms of their marriage or civil partnership certificate.

32. The Committee respects and supports these principles, however it does not accept that the Scottish Government has made out a satisfactory case for the power in section 28(2)(h). By contrast with the similar power in section 8(2)(g) discussed above, as the Government points out there is no change in status.

---

Paragraphs 9 and 10 of schedule 2 to the bill already provide for the continuity of a marriage or a civil partnership in such circumstances.

33. It was suggested that when regulations are made under section 28 it may be considered necessary to make express provision for the continuation of the marriage or civil partnership in those circumstances for the avoidance of doubt. If doubt as to the effect is a real possibility then the Committee considers that is a matter of principle which should be addressed directly in the Bill.

34. The question of whether persons should be offered the opportunity to re-register their marriage or civil partnership through the formal route of a ceremony in addition to the administrative mechanism proposed by the power in paragraph 8 of schedule 2 to the bill is a matter of policy for the Parliament and not the Committee. However, it is clear from the Government’s evidence that the ceremony is not intended to have any distinct legal effect. The parties remain in the same legal relationship. This can be distinguished from marriage ceremonies under section 20 of the 1977 Act where persons who have entered into a marriage abroad are treated for the purposes of the new Scottish ceremony “as if they had not already gone through a marriage ceremony with one another”.

35. The Committee therefore is not clear that the need for the power in section 28(2)(h) is justified and invites the Government to reflect on whether it should be removed. If further clarification is required as to the continuation of renewed marriages or renewed civil partnerships then it should be provided in the Bill itself. If amendments to the 1977 or 2004 Act are required to enable those Acts to operate properly then the Committee would be happy to consider those powers further but it remains unclear what further provision about effect is required.

36. If further justification for provision about effect can be given then, in line with its consideration of the power in section 8(2)(g) the Committee considers such a power should be subject to the affirmative procedure.

Schedule 2 (paragraph 6) (new section 5D of the Gender Recognition Act 2004) – change of gender of married person or civil partners: additional circumstances

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: order
Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure unless textually amending primary legislation when affirmative procedure

Provision

37. As noted above, it is not currently possible for parties to a civil partnership to remain in that partnership where one of them changes gender. Sections 4(2)(c) and 5C of the Gender Recognition Act provide that a full gender recognition certificate can only be issued to a person in a civil partnership where both parties qualify for recognition of their change in gender at the same time. This will remain the position once the Bill is in force.

---

38. However, the Bill provides a route by which civil partners may stay in a legally recognised relationship after one of the parties changes gender. If the civil partners convert their civil partnership to a marriage (either before or after the issue of an interim gender recognition certificate) then new section 4C of the Gender Recognition Act provides that a full gender recognition certificate can be issued to the party changing gender provided their spouse consents to the marriage continuing.

39. The Scottish Government intends to provide an alternative procedure to such couples through an administrative route. This is provided in new section 5D of the Gender Recognition Act 2004 which is inserted by paragraph 6 of schedule 2 to the Bill. This section confers power on the Scottish Ministers "to provide for the issue of a full gender recognition certificate in additional circumstances to those specified in section 4(2)(c) or 5C". The power includes the ability to make provision about the effect of issuing a full gender recognition certificate to the applicant.
Subsection (4) specifically explains that this can include provision for changing the civil partnership into a marriage. The power also permits Ministers to modify any legislation. It is proposed that it is subject to the negative procedure unless it amends primary legislation when it is subject to the affirmative procedure.

40. The Committee always considers carefully whether the subject matter of powers is appropriate for subordinate legislation. In relation to new section 5D the Government explains in the DPM that the more streamlined procedures envisaged
"may be detailed and so it is appropriate for them to be included in an order rather than on the face of the Bill". The Committee accepts that detailed technical provisions or administrative procedures are generally suitable for delegation to subordinate legislation. However, the Committee considers that the power in section 5D is not just procedural. It permits Ministers to specify when a full gender recognition certificate can be issued to persons who are in a civil partnership. The route to that may be procedural but the underlying question of when such a certificate can be issued is a significant legal issue.

41. The Committee questioned why the power was available to permit the issuing of a full gender recognition certificate in any "additional circumstances" and whether examples of what was envisaged could be given. In response the Scottish Government indicated that:

"We are struggling with that at the moment...What we are wondering with this power is whether there are simpler ways to allow a civil partner to obtain gender recognition and change to a marriage at the same time."\(^8\)

42. It was clear from the evidence that the difficulties which the Government is currently seeking to resolve result from recognition that the desire for a simpler administrative procedure should not be permitted to undermine the current policy underpinning the Gender Recognition Act 2004. The Scottish Government is considering a number of possible means by which this simpler process could be achieved but has not yet identified its preferred solution.

---

43. The Committee has concerns as to whether a valid case for the delegation of power in the terms set out in section 5D has been met. The Committee notes that the power only has application to circumstances in which one member of a protected Scottish civil partnership is changing gender and the partners wish to remain in a legally recognised relationship. The circumstances in which the power can be used are therefore very specific. Nevertheless, the power allows the Scottish Ministers to set out additional circumstances in which a full gender recognition certificate can be issued. The intention may be that the circumstances are completion of an administrative process which results in converting the civil partnership to a marriage but the power is not restricted to that alone.

44. The Committee considers that the issue of a full gender recognition certificate is such a sensitive and significant matter that it should be regulated by the Parliament in primary legislation. The Committee notes that this remains the case at present and the Scottish Ministers do not currently have executive power to amend those circumstances. The proposed power is therefore unusual.

45. The Committee questions whether it is appropriate for the Scottish Ministers to be given power to specify any additional circumstances in which a full gender recognition certificate may be issued and would prefer that matter to be set out on the face of the Bill. The Committee therefore recommends that the Government bring forward amendments to address this issue during the passage of the Bill.

46. It may be that a way could be found to allow the Scottish Ministers the flexibility to prescribe the steps involved in the administrative process in subordinate legislation but to enshrine the principle that a full gender recognition certificate can be issued following conversion of civil partnership to marriage through the prescribed administrative process in primary legislation. This may address the Committee’s concerns.

47. The Committee recognises of course that the question of whether the powers sought by Ministers should be granted is a matter for the Parliament as a whole to decide. If the Parliament wishes to proceed on this basis notwithstanding the Committee’s concerns, the Committee recommends that the power should be subject to the affirmative procedure as a minimum level of scrutiny. Given that it was clear from the Scottish Government’s evidence there are a number of possible different options available, the Committee considers that a requirement for consultation on a draft laid before the Parliament would also be appropriate.

48. The Committee notes that as presently drafted the Bill proposes that the affirmative procedure should apply where the exercise of the power in section 5D makes amendment to “primary legislation”. We understand this to mean that the affirmative procedure is to apply where amendments are made either to Acts of Scottish Parliament (“ASPs”) or to Acts of the UK Parliament. However, the current drafting does not achieve this effect since “Act” in the context of the Gender Recognition Act 2004 does not include ASPs. If the Government is not minded to accept either of the Committee’s recommendations in paragraphs 45 or 47 then the Committee considers that the Government requires to modify paragraph 12 of schedule 2 to the Bill to apply the affirmative procedure to regulations which make amendments to ASPs. The Committee understands that the Government accepts this would be necessary to deliver the policy intention.
Present:

Christian Allard
Mary Fee (Committee Substitute)
Margaret McCulloch
Stewart Stevenson (Deputy Convener)

Nigel Don (Convener)
Mike MacKenzie
John Scott

Apologies were received from Richard Baker.

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: The Committee took evidence on the Bill at Stage 1 from—

Simon Stockwell, Team Leader, Family and Property Law; Julia McCombie, Policy Officer, Family and Property Law; Francesca Morton, Solicitor, Scottish Government Legal Directorate, Scottish Government.

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill (in private): The Committee considered the evidence it heard earlier in the meeting.
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: Stage 1

10:10

The Convener: Agenda item 3 is stage 1 consideration of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill, and is an opportunity for members to ask Scottish Government officials questions about it. I welcome to the meeting Simon Stockwell, team leader, and Julia McCombie, policy officer, from the family and property law team; and Francesca Morton, who is a solicitor from the Scottish Government legal directorate. I thank the witnesses for coming along to answer our questions, which we will proceed straight to. The first is from Mary Fee.

Mary Fee: I have a brief question about sections 8 and 9 on the change from a qualifying civil partnership to a marriage. Section 8(2)(g) refers to “the effect of a qualifying civil partnership changing into a marriage in accordance with provision” that is made under section 8(1), and section 9 itself is entitled, “Effect of marriage between civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership”.

What is the difference between the use of “effect” in section 8 and section 9? If section 8 does what section 9 says—or, indeed, vice versa—why have both sections been included?

Simon Stockwell (Scottish Government): In essence, the policy intention is that there should be no difference in effect. It is intended that when changing a civil partnership to a marriage under the administrative route that is established under section 8, the effect will be exactly the same as a marriage ceremony under section 9. Our intention is also that any regulations that will be made under section 8(2)(g) will mirror the provisions in, say, section 9. In other words, the policy intention is, as I have said, that there will be no difference. It will not matter whether you marry through an administrative route or in a ceremony; once you are in the marriage, the effect will be exactly the same.

Mary Fee: That was very helpful.

Mike MacKenzie (Highlands and Islands) (SNP): Good morning. The delegated powers memorandum offers examples of consequential changes that might be required to other legislation to accommodate the change in status or to ensure that obligations remain the same, notwithstanding the change. Can you clarify how you envisage that power being used?
Simon Stockwell: Which paragraph of the delegated powers memorandum are you referring to?

Mike MacKenzie: I understand that a number of examples are given in the memorandum; I am simply asking about your general sense of any consequential changes that might be required.

Simon Stockwell: Given that, in broad terms, the rights and responsibilities of civil partners and those of married couples are very similar, much of the debate around the bill relates to people’s ability to say that they are married instead of being in a civil partnership.

However, although the rights and responsibilities in both instances are generally the same, they differ in respect of, for example, pensions. The fact is that married couples can have greater pension rights than civil partners, and our intention is for same-sex married couples to be treated the same as civil partners in relation to pensions. We might, in due course, need to make provision to achieve that policy intention and ensure that civil partners and same-sex married couples are treated the same for pensions purposes. That might require a contrary provision in the bill; after all, we would normally say that married couples should be treated the same whether they are in same-sex or opposite-sex marriage but—as I have said—there are differences, such as in pensions.

Mike MacKenzie: Are you able to point to legislation that is within the province of the Scottish Parliament with regard to pensions, for instance?

10:15

Simon Stockwell: Most provisions in respect of pensions are reserved to Westminster, but the Scottish Government has some executive devolution in relation to pension schemes for the police, the fire service, local government employees, teachers and another group that I have forgotten. The Scottish Public Pensions Agency also has a role in the administration of some small pension schemes, including those of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. We might need to make changes in those areas to ensure that same-sex married couples are treated the same as civil partners.

Mike MacKenzie: There appears to be no limit on the power at section 8(2)(g). Can you explain why that power has been drawn so widely?

Simon Stockwell: The power is drawn widely simply to ensure that we can do everything that we need to do. Clearly, we need to reflect the provisions in section 9. For example, in Scotland the financial provision on divorce is based largely on the matrimonial property that a couple has acquired during the marriage. If a couple should divorce after they have changed a civil partnership to a marriage, we would want to ensure that any property that they acquired during the civil partnership also counted when they divorced, otherwise there could be strange results. If, for example, a couple had bought a house during the civil partnership, changed the relationship to a marriage and subsequently divorced, there might be a risk that that property would not count as matrimonial property for the purposes of Scots divorce law. The intention is to ensure that, in such examples, everything that the couple did during the civil partnership also counts towards the marriage.

Mike MacKenzie: Given the apparent breadth of the power, was any consideration given to applying the affirmative procedure?

Simon Stockwell: Yes. Obviously, the affirmative procedure will apply if we are modifying any enactments. If there are changes to primary legislation, the affirmative procedure will apply. Obviously, we considered the possibility of using affirmative procedure—we considered all the potential procedures—but we concluded that, on the whole, because the process is reasonably straightforward and is mirrored in provisions in the bill, negative procedure would be appropriate except for when we were amending primary legislation. However, I accept that arguments could be made the other way.

The Convener: You said that the intention is that the effect of the two arrangements will be the same. However, I still cannot see why you need to have provisions that would explain the effect of a marriage or civil partnership in the first place, because that is surely a state—a relationship—that does not need to have its effects modified.

Simon Stockwell: I have just given an example. If we were just to say that the qualifying civil partnership is a marriage, a question would arise about the matrimonial property regime, for example. Section 9(1)(b) says:

"the civil partners are to be treated as having been married to each other since the date on which the qualifying civil partnership was registered".

That will ensure that the matrimonial property regime covers the period when they were in the qualifying civil partnership. We would want to do something similar in respect of civil partners who change under the administrative route in section 8, in order to ensure that any property that they had acquired in the civil partnership would count if they should divorce later on.

The Convener: So, it would be fair to say that the effects that you want to legislate on are the effects of the change from one state to another, rather than the state from which they came or the state to which they go, because, surely, the effect of being married is the effect of being married.

Simon Stockwell: Yes, the effect of being married is, indeed, that you are married. However, what does that mean in terms of being in the marriage? When does it date from? Are there other provisions to which we need to make specific reference in order to ensure that a couple is granted full rights and responsibilities?

The Convener: It is about the effect of the transformation from one to the other.

Simon Stockwell: Yes—it is about the effect of becoming married.

The Convener: I am grateful for that clarification.

Margaret McCulloch: Good morning. There are three parts to my question. Can you explain the legal implications of a renewed marriage ceremony or renewed civil partnership ceremony? What status would a renewed marriage or civil partnership have, and are they to be understood as new legal concepts?

Simon Stockwell: The legal status is that a couple would be regarded as married or in a civil partnership, but would not need to go through the marriage or the civil partnership ceremony to achieve that status. The bill already has a provision that states that when a couple undergo gender recognition, their marriage or civil partnership will continue. The legal effect of section 28 is simply to allow them to have a ceremony to reflect their newly acquired genders; it is not meant to change the legal status of their marriage or civil partnership. There would not be any obligation on a couple to undergo a renewed marriage or civil partnership ceremony; it is one option that would be open to them, if they wished to take it up, after they had acquired gender recognition.

To an extent, we are borrowing from provisions that are already in place in the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977. From memory, I think that section 20 of that act allows a couple who married overseas, but whose marriage is of doubtful validity, to have a second marriage ceremony in Scotland.

The situation that we are discussing is not quite the same; we are saying that the couple will continue in their marriage or civil partnership. However, we are borrowing the broad concept that they could, if they wanted to, have a second ceremony in Scotland to reflect their acquired genders. Their status would be that they would simply continue to be married or in the civil partnership, as they would have been before they entered into the renewed marriage or civil partnership. Their status would not change.

That is one way of enabling a couple to get a revised marriage or civil partnership certificate that reflects their newly acquired gender. Obviously, they would have married or entered into the civil partnership in their previous genders. The new provision will allow them to have a marriage or civil partnership certificate that reflects their acquired genders.

One of the key things that we are trying to do in the bill generally in respect of transgender people is to avoid outing them inadvertently. With the provision and other provisions in the bill, we are trying to ensure that any certificates that a couple has are as close as possible to other certificates that are held by married people or people in civil partnerships, in order to avoid outing transgender people as trans.

John Scott (Ayr) (Con): We are interested to know about the power at section 28(2)(h) to make provision “about the effect of entering into a renewed marriage or ... partnership.”

Can you explain—perhaps you already have; I am not entirely sure—to the committee the intention behind that power? What sort of provision will it be used to make?

Simon Stockwell: The intention was to address any requirement to make provision for the effect of having a renewed marriage or civil partnership. That was the sort of area that we were looking at. We have continued with key stakeholders to discuss use of section 28. At the moment, our thinking is that we might not need to use section 28(2)(h) because—as I said earlier—the effect of a couple’s entering into a renewed marriage or civil partnership will be that they will continue in their marriage or civil partnership. We might need to say that in regulations, if we make any, for the avoidance of doubt.

I do not think that we need to make specific provision beyond that, in terms of the effect of entering into a renewed marriage or civil partnership, because the effect in practice will be that the couple would simply continue in their current relationship.

John Scott: Is it envisaged that the power in section 28(2)(h) might alter a person’s legal status?

Simon Stockwell: We do not intend to alter people’s legal status. Once a person has acquired their full gender recognition certificate from the gender recognition panel, they will be legally recognised in their acquired gender and can then have a renewed marriage or civil partnership. We would not be changing their legal status by any provision made under that power.
John Scott: Given the potential significance of the power, was consideration given to applying the affirmative procedure at all times and not just when the primary legislation is to be modified?

Simon Stockwell: Yes—we considered the possibility of applying the affirmative procedure but, in general terms, the provision is mainly about the ceremony that people will need to go through for a renewed marriage or civil partnership. Traditionally, where the issue just relates to the ceremony that a couple has to go through, such changes would be subject to the negative procedure. I understand, however, that the committee might take a different view. I made the same point in response to Mr MacKenzie’s question.

John Scott: Was consideration given to providing in the bill detail on, or clarification of, the status of a renewed marriage or renewed civil partnership?

Simon Stockwell: We did not necessarily consider doing that in the bill. We have tried to provide explanatory material in the delegated powers memorandum. In broad terms, what we are doing in this respect is similar to what we are doing elsewhere in the bill in relation to changing civil partnerships to marriages. There are two routes for that—an administrative route and a ceremony route. In this case, the couple are not changing and are staying in their relationship, but it is a similar concept in that, again, there will be two routes for recognising their acquired gender. They can either have a renewed marriage or civil partnership ceremony to reflect their acquired gender, or there is provision elsewhere in the bill so that changes can be made to marriage and civil partnership certificates through the administrative route. We follow a similar concept throughout the bill. The circumstances vary, but the concept is the same.

John Scott: It is pretty fundamental.

Simon Stockwell: I accept that any provision that has the effect of changing somebody’s legal status would be fundamental. Yes.

John Scott: You argue, however, that the provision will not change their legal status, and that is your justification for not putting it in the bill.

Simon Stockwell: Yes. There is no intention here to change people’s legal status. Other provisions in the bill allow people to change a civil partnership to a marriage and there are provisions in respect of gender recognition that go into considerable detail on how a couple can acquire a full gender recognition certificate and stay in the marriage or civil partnership. Those are pretty fundamental principles in the bill. Gender recognition is a major feature in the bill because it is very important for the number of people whom it affects.

We have quite a lot of detail elsewhere in the bill on those issues; I am not sure that we would necessarily accept that we need more. There is already quite a lot of detail on what the regulations provide for.

John Scott: Many thanks.

The Convener: I would like to pursue John Scott’s point a little. It is just possible to look at all the detail, all the transformations and all the options and to draw the conclusion that, because there will be different ways of doing things, there will be different states. If there are actually only two—or arguably three, if we include being single—why do we not just say so? Why do we not make it clear in the bill that there are only those states and that, regardless of how people get between one and the other, they are the same? I just wonder whether it might be worth saying that.

Simon Stockwell: That would have been an alternative approach. It depends, obviously, on our view of how best to do it. As I said to Mr Scott, in general, for such changes, we have provided two routes—the administrative route and the ceremony route—and provision is made within sections of the bill to reflect that.

However, on the high-level policy, I am happy to say that we will not have different types of civil partners or marriages, depending on what route they have gone through. The message is that, once people are married, they are married. In that respect, it is similar to what happens with marriage ceremonies. People can have a religious ceremony or a civil ceremony, but once they are in the marriage, they are married. It does not matter how they got there. It will be the same in this case.

The Convener: Right. Our last set of questions comes from Stewart Stevenson.

Stewart Stevenson (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP): My questions are on changes to the Gender Recognition Act 2004, and particularly on paragraph 6 of schedule 2 to the bill, which inserts new section 5D into the 2004 act. First, what circumstances are covered by the phrase “additional circumstances”? It might not be possible to give a definitive and complete list, but some examples might be of modest help.

10:30

Simon Stockwell: Yes, Mr Stevenson. We are struggling with that at the moment. Currently, the bill includes a couple of ways in which a civil partner can obtain gender recognition and change the relationship to a marriage.
Civil partners who are undergoing gender recognition need to change their relationship to a marriage, because we are not introducing opposite-sex civil partnerships. The exception to that is if both civil partners change gender at the same time. They can stay in their relationship because they are staying in a same-sex relationship.

Stewart Stevenson: I will pick up on that immediately. They can stay in their civil partnership as distinct from their relationship.

Simon Stockwell: Yes, indeed. That is quite right.

Stewart Stevenson: "Relationship" is an informal word that you are accidentally using.

Simon Stockwell: That is quite right. They could stay in a relationship even if they did not stay in a civil partnership.

What we are wondering with this power is whether there are simpler ways to allow a civil partner to obtain gender recognition and change to a marriage at the same time. The consultation paper set out one option, which was that a civil partner would apply to the gender recognition panel for gender recognition, obtain an interim gender recognition certificate in the normal way, use that certificate to get married, and thus have the change to the marriage status there and then. They would use the interim gender recognition certificate, which would show their acquired gender rather than their previous gender. There are arguments against that, the most pressing of which is whether it would give an additional status to interim gender recognition certificates that we would not want to give them. However, that is one potential use of the power.

A variation on that is to allow the couple to get married with the acquired gender after they have received the full gender recognition certificate, but that certificate would not be signed off formally until they got married. There is an argument against that as well, as it raises questions about the nature of the full gender recognition certificate.

We are going through similar options, but the aim of the power is really to see whether we can devise a procedure that would enable somebody in a civil partnership to obtain gender recognition and change to marriage in fewer steps than the current number, given that we are not introducing opposite-sex civil partnerships.

Stewart Stevenson: That leads neatly to my next question. Given that the complications that we are struggling with seem to derive from the impermissibility under the legislation for people who become of opposite gender to remain civil partners, was there a drafting or legal difficulty that inhibited the provision in the bill or elsewhere of civil partnerships of people of opposite genders, or was that a policy decision?

Simon Stockwell: Obviously, the policy is that the bill is not introducing opposite-sex civil partnerships. The cabinet secretary has announced a review of civil partnerships, in which that option and other options in relation to civil partnerships will clearly be looked at. Given that that is the general policy in relation to opposite-sex civil partnerships, we would not want a situation in which a person in a civil partnership could somehow claim to be in an opposite-sex civil partnership. The provisions reflect the fact that there is currently no intention of introducing opposite-sex civil partnerships.

Stewart Stevenson: For clarity, Mr Stockwell, you are not suggesting as an official that you would be unable to provide in a reasonable way for legislation that allowed civil partners to be of opposite genders. In other words, at this stage, the issue is purely a policy issue rather than an issue that lies with practical difficulties.

Simon Stockwell: In my experience, Mr Stevenson, parliamentary draftsmen can do anything, so if the policy was that we wanted to introduce opposite-sex civil partnerships, I am sure that they could produce provisions within the usual timescale. It is a matter of policy that we are not introducing opposite-sex civil partnerships, rather than a matter of drafting or law.

Stewart Stevenson: Right. That is helpful.

John Scott: My question is about that issue. As it is a matter of policy, I am not sure that we can stray into it, although the convener said earlier that he would not be too sore on those of us who strayed into such questions.

Simon Stockwell: I am happy to answer your question, Mr Scott.

John Scott: By not introducing opposite-sex civil partnerships, are you in some way disadvantaging those of opposite sex who wish to enter into civil partnerships?

The Convener: That is quite clearly a policy decision. To be fair to Mr Stockwell, I do not think that he is required to answer that question in the context of this committee. We might well find that he will be required to answer it in another committee, but it is not an issue for us. My point was that we need to understand the policy if we are to understand the detail of the questions that we have before us.

Simon Stockwell: The simple answer is that the cabinet secretary has announced that there will be a review of civil partnerships that will look at them in the round, whether it be opposite-sex civil partnerships, stopping new entrants into civil partnerships or any other variation in relation to partnerships. That is the simple answer to the question.

Stewart Stevenson: Has the cabinet secretary given a timetable for the review? In particular, is there an expectation that the review could be completed prior to the deadline for lodging stage 3 amendments for the bill?

Simon Stockwell: No, it will not be completed by then.

Stewart Stevenson: We already know that it will not be.

Simon Stockwell: It will not be. That is not the intention. We have begun the process and the cabinet secretary has written to ask the other party spokespersons for their views on the terms of remit of the review. We intend to publish the terms of remit fairly soon, but the bulk of the work during the next six months will concentrate on this bill, and the review will start in earnest once the bill has been passed.

Stewart Stevenson: Thank you.

The Convener: Thank you. As there are no further questions, I think that that is it. I thank the witnesses for their time.

Simon Stockwell: Very grateful, Mr Don.

The Convener: The committee will suspend for a couple of minutes to allow people to draw breath.

10:36

Meeting suspended.
WRITTEN SUBMISSIONS TO FINANCE COMMITTEE

East Ayrshire Council
Glasgow City Council
National Records of Scotland
Scottish Borders Council
South Lanarkshire Council
Stirling Council
West Dunbartonshire Council
Please note that in respect of the above noted, and having reviewed the content of the memorandum I do not have any concerns over the financial aspects of the Bill in relation to this Council.

Craig McArthur
Head of Finance
East Ayrshire Council
Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?

1. A response was submitted in March.

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?

2. In preparation for the proposed change we have a transitional arrangement in place where by existing Licences are renewed with a nil fee, Grant (New) Applications still pay the fee.

3. The fee charged is a very small part of the overall income to the Licensing Service and a very small part of the Council’s overall income.

4. Changes proposed through the Bill would require additional training for Registrars but advice and guidance would be available from the National Records of Scotland so we do not foresee any additional costs to the council.

5. Once the change has been implemented then it would allow Registrars to be on an equal footing to other ceremony officiates. It would mean therefore that Registrars would be able to conduct ceremonies at a wider range of venues than those currently on offer.
Consultation
Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. NRS officials work closely with Scottish Government colleagues leading on the Bill and contributed to the drafting of the consultation papers.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. Yes, NRS provided estimates of the likely financial impact in the relevant areas concerning NRS interests.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. No additional contribution was necessary because we had the opportunity to contribute in the drafting of the consultation paper itself.

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?
4. Yes, NRS provided the estimated costs totalling £200k

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?
5. Yes.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. Yes, NRS estimates that the costs can be met from existing resources.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?
7. Yes.

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?
8. Yes.
Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. Yes, there will be future costs associated with the provisions contained in section 8 of the Bill, should a new administrative procedure be introduced that would allow parties to a qualifying civil partnership to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Work is underway to establish how such a procedure might work, but it is not possible to predict any associated costs at this early stage.
FINANCE COMMITTEE
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL FINANCIAL MEMORANDUM

SUBMISSION FROM SCOTTISH BORDERS COUNCIL

Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. We did not participate in the earlier consultation as we had no objections or concerns relating to the proposals.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. N/A

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Timescales offered to digest and respond to the consultation were indeed sufficient.

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?
4. Any financial implications within Scottish Borders Council relating to these changes within the Civil Partnerships and Marriage Bill have been accurately reflected within the FM.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?
5. Estimated costs set out in the FM do appear to cover all aspects.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. Legal and Democratic Services confirm there will be no structure change with the loss of income which currently stands around £3k per annum. They will adjust general budget pressures and being a small authority there is a core staff requirement which will not reduce as a result of this change.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?
7. Due to the nature of the change there is no previous example available to accurately estimate costs and does show levels of uncertainty accurately.
Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

8. It would be useful to have more information available regarding the management and responsibility of administering the changes for registered Civil Partnerships changing to a religious version. There is no clear direction if this will be handled by the Local Authority or National Records of Scotland.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these?

9. No.
FINANCE COMMITTEE

MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL FINANCIAL MEMORANDUM

SUBMISSION FROM SOUTH LANARKSHIRE COUNCIL

Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. Yes, we did. No, we did not comment on the financial assumptions. Due to the limited number of approvals and temporary approvals issued, the financial impact on the Council will be less than £5,000 per annum. However, it should be noted that with ‘celebrants’ being extended to include ‘belief’ organisations this could also result in a reduction of income from ‘ceremonies’.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. Only in respect of the removal of ‘approvals’.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Yes

Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?
4. Yes, but on the assumption that there will be no costs associated with any necessary upgrades to the ‘FER’ system

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?
5. We cannot comment for other Local Authorities. In respect of South Lanarkshire impact will be as above

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. With the abolition of Civil Marriage Approvals and the extension of venues where marriages can take place the registrar will still have to carry out some kind of Health and Safety inspection to ensure that the premises/venues are suitable. A charge will require to be made for such a visit. This would not apply to premises which are already licensed under different legislation, eg hotels. This will go some way to recouping the stated loss of income.

7. If the ‘FER’ system needs upgraded to reflect the changes in legislation it is presumed that this cost will, as is usually the case, be met by National Records of Scotland.
8. There could be a further impact on income derived from ‘ceremonies’ due to the effect of permitting representatives from ‘belief’ organisations to carry out ceremonies.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?

9. With the exception of responses to question 1 and 6 would appear to reflect costs affecting South Lanarkshire Council. However, there could be hidden IT costs due to any potential FER upgrades.

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonable captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

10. See response to Q6 above.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

11. Not known at this time.
Consultation

Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?

1. I passed on my comments regarding this Bill but not in respect of the financial assumptions made.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?

2. N/A

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?

3. Yes

Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?

4. Possibly, however I’m not sure the following has been taken into account:

   The additional cost of a license has often put off potential wedding parties from having a civil marriage and they tend to book a Humanist Celebrant instead. As well as this, several venues within our local authority area refuse to purchase a license for civil ceremonies and encourage their wedding parties to book a Humanist Celebrant instead, as they regard this as still offering a ‘non religious’ ceremony without the added expense of a license. Given this information, as well as the saving made by staff being relieved of carrying out a licensing function, I am hopeful that the abolition of the licensing fees will result in an increase in civil ceremonies, therefore helping to maintain the fees received by Local Authorities.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?

5. As far as I’m able to comment, they appear to be a reasonable estimate.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?

6. As far as I’m able to comment, I am content that any costs our organisation incurs with the Bill can met.
Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?

7. I am unable to comment

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

8. Purely from a Local Authority point of view, I believe the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill. I am unable to comment on Scottish Government or NRS costs.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. As with any changes, we should always be prepared for costs that may not have been anticipated.
Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. No

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. Not applicable

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Yes

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?
4. Yes

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?
5. This seems a reasonable estimate but given the number of variables which are likely to impact on these figures it is impossible to comment on their accuracy without further detailed analysis."

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. Yes

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?
7. It is a reasonable attempt at doing so, however the "pent-up" demand may be significantly higher than anticipated.

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?
8. Yes
Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. These may be but difficult to calculate until any such future legislation is drafted.

10. One further specific comment would be that the statutory fee for same sex marriage and for the transfer an existing civil partnership to a same sex marriage should be the same as the statutory marriage fee.
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing (Alex Neil) moved S4M-08327—That the Parliament agrees to the general principles of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

After debate, the motion was agreed to ((DT) by division: For 98, Against 15, Abstentions 5).
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: Stage 1

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): The next item of business is a debate on motion S4M-08327, in the name of Alex Neil, on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

16:58

The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing (Alex Neil): The Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill will make a number of changes to the law on marriage and civil partnership, but the centrepiece is obviously the legalisation of same-sex marriage, which will allow all people in Scotland who love each other the same opportunity to have their marriage recognised in the eyes of the law. That will create a more tolerant society in Scotland and will mean that there are genuine equal rights in respect of marriage across the entire community.

The bill provides that married transgender people will be able to obtain gender recognition and stay married, thereby removing the need to divorce. That provision will make a huge beneficial difference to the lives of transgender people and their spouses. I will turn later to the detail of the bill and, in particular, to the points that the Equal Opportunities Committee’s report raises.

Before doing so, I will give a brief general overview of the provisions in the bill. The bill contains a number of changes to marriage law that have been planned for some time, and some other changes to ensure that marriage ceremonies in Scotland continue to be carried out with due solemnity and dignity.

The bill also provides greater flexibility on where civil marriage ceremonies can take place; it will permit civil marriage ceremonies to take place at any location that is agreed between the couple and the registration authority, as long as that place is not religious premises.

The bill also clarifies the position of belief celebrants and puts them on the same footing as religious celebrants. That is a welcome change that acknowledges the role that humanists, for example, play in solemnising marriage in Scotland.

The bill will increase flexibility in relation to civil partnerships and will allow the religious or belief registration of civil partnership where the religious or belief body is happy to take part.

While providing greater freedom and flexibility for couples generally, the bill will also ensure that marriage procedures in Scotland remain rigorous. For example, the bill clarifies the offence of bigamy, and a number of other provisions in the bill show that we in Scotland will not tolerate sham or forced marriages, which are real problems in Scotland today, so I pay tribute to registrars and others across Scotland who are vigilant in tackling those issues.

The bill will extend the normal notice period for marriage and for civil partnership from 14 days to 28 days. That reflects the reality of the length of time it can take to check that a person is eligible to marry or to enter into a civil partnership. It will also be a deterrent to sham marriages. The bill will allow district registrars to require specified nationality evidence when a couple is seeking to enter into a marriage or a civil partnership. Such information may be needed for a variety of reasons, for example for statistical reasons. Again, requiring such evidence could combat sham and forced marriages.

The bill will also empower ministers to make regulations on qualifying requirements for religious and belief bodies to meet before their celebrants can be authorised to solemnise marriages or to register civil partnerships. Scotland has a rich diversity of religious and belief bodies that can solemnise marriage. That is very welcome, but it also means that we need to make certain that the dignity and solemnity of the ceremonies are upheld. The qualifying requirements could cover such issues as the requirement not to carry out ceremonies for profit or gain and the requirement to have an awareness of forced and sham marriages.

We will consult widely with religious and belief bodies and with others before we make any regulations. I know that religious and belief bodies share our determination to ensure that marriage ceremonies remain dignified. Equally, though, the state must not interfere with the internal workings of religious and belief bodies, so we need to ensure that a reasonable balance is struck.

Chic Brodie (South Scotland) (SNP): What provisions are there in the bill to avoid situations in extremis that may occur when one party challenges the other, which could possibly force action that is contrary to article 9 of the European convention on human rights?

Alex Neil: I will go into detail on such issues later when I discuss the recommendations from the Equal Opportunities Committee.

I have already referred to same-sex marriage. Respect for religious beliefs and views has also been at the heart of our work on same-sex marriage and we have consulted twice. We have not consulted more on any bill that has passed through Parliament than we have consulted on this measure.

There has also, of course, been detailed examination of the bill at stage 1 by the Equal Opportunities Committee, led initially by Mary Fee and now by Margaret McCulloch.

Alex Johnstone (North East Scotland) (Con): Can the minister clarify at this point exactly how he intends to deal with the issue of the 4,100 consultation submissions that were—through no fault of his—apparently lost?

Alex Neil: We have found the submissions and we will put them on the website. As Alex Johnstone said, they were not lost through any fault of the Scottish Government. There was a technical hitch on the part of the people who submitted those 4,100 submissions.

I know that the detailed examination of the bill by the Equal Opportunities Committee has been challenging, so I pay tribute to all the members of the committee—in particular Margaret McCulloch and Mary Fee, who have been the two conveners of the committee during that period.

Throughout the consultations and the stage 1 process, the Government has acknowledged the diversity and strength of religious beliefs. In the foreword to the first consultation, my predecessor Nicola Sturgeon emphasised that "This Government believes in religious tolerance and the freedom to worship."

We recognise—although we disagree with them—that some people of faith sincerely believe that marriage should be between, and only between, one man and one woman. There is a vigorous and respectful debate on same-sex marriage in many religious bodies, as there is across society and in Parliament. Some religious and belief bodies wish to solemnise same-sex marriage, and the bill provides a balanced and fair package.

Richard Lyle (Central Scotland) (SNP): As the cabinet secretary knows, my wife and I adopted our daughter some 30 years ago. Would he agree with me that because my wife and I do not support same-sex marriage we would not be allowed to adopt today, or that questions would be asked of our suitability to adopt or even to foster? Where are the equal rights of people like us?

Alex Neil: Believing in or opposing same-sex marriage is in itself no barrier to adoption. I am happy to write to Richard Lyle to clarify the law on adoption in relation to same-sex marriage.

Murdo Fraser (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con): The cabinet secretary will know that a Roman Catholic adoption agency is currently having its charitable status threatened because it does not recognise same-sex couples. What guarantees can he give us that, if the bill is passed, faith groups and service providers that do not recognise same-sex marriage will not, similarly, have their charitable status in any way questioned?

Alex Neil: That matter is currently under legal appeal. Therefore, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on that particular example. I am happy to clarify such matters more generally, either during tonight’s debate or by writing to Murdo Fraser.

The bill establishes an opt-in system for religious and belief bodies in relation to same-sex marriage and civil partnerships, and makes it clear that there is no duty to opt in. The bill will impose no duty on any person who is an approved celebrant to solemnise same-sex marriages or to register civil partnerships. In addition, the United Kingdom Equality Act 2010 will be amended to protect individual celebrants who refuse to solemnise same-sex marriage from court actions claiming discrimination. Same-sex marriage will not be introduced in Scotland until the amendment to the 2010 act has been secured—as I believe it will be. We have reached agreement with the UK Government about the amendment to the Equality Act 2010, and we have published a detailed statement on what is planned.

As we have indicated, the amendments that will be made will also cover other persons who play an integral part in the religious or belief aspects of the marriage or civil partnership ceremony. They will protect persons who control use of religious or belief premises and who refuse to allow those premises to be used for same-sex marriage or civil partnership ceremonies.

Jamie Hepburn (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP): At present, the state dictates what the position of each religious denomination should be on the matter: it explicitly does not allow them to marry people of the same sex who wish to enter into a marriage. Does the cabinet secretary agree with me that the Government’s approach is to empower religions to make a decision and that, in that sense, it is about the freedom of religion?

Alex Neil: Absolutely; a number of religious organisations and churches are very much in favour of the proposed legislation—the Quakers being a good example. Until now, they have not been allowed to carry out same-sex marriages, and they want to be allowed to do so.

We have carefully considered the need for wider protections across society as a whole. The issues are challenging ones, and we have to respect religious beliefs while ensuring that there is no discrimination against lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender communities or individuals.

We need to avoid interfering with the employer-employee relationship. We need to balance parental rights in areas such as education with the right of the child to receive a full and comprehensive education. Therefore, the protections that we are introducing more generally are a mixture of legislation and guidance.

The bill has provision at section 14 that makes it clear that the introduction of same-sex marriage will have no impact on existing rights to freedom of speech, thought, conscience and religion. In addition, the Lord Advocate has issued prosecution guidance that makes it clear that “criticism of same sex marriage or homosexuality is not in itself an offence”, and that “Views expressed or comments made in relation to same sex marriage in ways which do not incite hatred or violence towards a particular person or group” of people “and which do not cause or intend to cause public disorder will not be the subject of criminal prosecution.”

Moreover, the vigorous debate on same-sex marriage during our consultations and while the bill has been with Parliament shows that freedom of speech is very much alive and well.

John Mason (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP): Does the cabinet secretary agree with the Queen’s counsel who told the Equal Opportunities Committee that legally the guidance will have no binding effect?

Alex Neil: I do not agree at all. The guidance is from the chief prosecutor to every prosecutor in Scotland. In my view, to say that it will have no impact is absolute nonsense. Of course it will have an impact—it says what will and will not be prosecuted in Scotland. I think that that is the right approach.

With regard to education, after seeking views on updating the guidance on the conduct of relationships, sexual health and parenthood education, we have received around 60 responses and are currently considering the points that have been made by those who have commented on the draft guidance. We have said that, where teachers have concerns about educational material that they might be asked to use, they should raise those concerns with the school or the local authority. We believe that to be the right local approach; after all, such detailed issues are best discussed and resolved at local level, rather than being dealt with through our trying to dictate from the centre. There is also existing guidance reflecting the professional standards that teachers have to meet when giving classes. Similarly, we have indicated that we are opposed to a legislative opt-out from same-sex marriage for civil registrars, and that any issues or concerns should be dealt with at local level by employers.

Turning to the Equal Opportunities Committee’s stage 1 report, I note that the committee has asked us to take account of stakeholders’ views on matters such as protection of celebrants. We will, of course, do that. That we have kept an open mind throughout the bill process is, I believe, shown by the balanced package that we have put forward.

As for the committee’s other recommendations, we will consider the point about the distinctions between religious marriage and belief marriage. As the committee noted, we considered those points following the second consultation, but coming up with designations that please everyone is not a straightforward matter. The committee has suggested that couples in a non-Scottish civil partnership should be able to change their relationship to a marriage in Scotland. Although we need to respect non-Scottish jurisdictions as well as to ensure that we do not cause confusion with regard to a couple’s civil status, we will consider in detail the point that the committee has raised.

We have also written to a number of religious bodies to seek their views on a change to gender-neutral marriage ceremonies. However, we have concerns about the committee’s recommendation on spousal consent. It is spousal consent to decide to stay in a marriage—and it takes two to stay in a marriage. As the committee has noted;

“spouses of people seeking gender recognition may find themselves in circumstances that are very difficult to face”.

That said, we will consider the point further with the aim of balancing everyone’s rights.

On long-term transitioned people, we will seek to lodge an amendment at stage 2 to introduce provisions similar to those that were added to the UK legislation in the House of Lords. Finally, we will respond in detail with regard to lowering the age at which applications can be made to the gender recognition panel. We need more medical and psychological evidence of the potential effect of any possible change, but I recognise the points that were made in evidence to the committee and acknowledge the need for the Government to give further thought to the issue.

In conclusion, I strongly urge my fellow MSPs to vote for a bill that will make sensible improvements to marriage and civil partnership law, that provides greater flexibility for couples who are seeking to get married or enter into a civil partnership, and which will introduce same-sex marriage, which will further promote equality and diversity in our society while respecting the views of those who do not wish to take part.

I believe that the bill’s provisions will improve our society in Scotland and make it much more civilised in its treatment of LGBT people. I look forward to the debate and ask my colleagues to support the bill’s general principles at the vote at 8 pm tonight. [Applause.]

I move,

That the Parliament agrees to the general principles of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

The Presiding Officer: I remind people in the gallery not to applaud.

17:15

Margaret McCulloch (Central Scotland) (Lab): I welcome the opportunity to speak on behalf of the Equal Opportunities Committee, following our stage 1 report on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

Before I introduce the report and speak about our conclusions, I extend my thanks to the clerks, all my committee colleagues and the members of the other committees that considered the bill—the Finance Committee and the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee. I also thank everyone who responded to our call for written evidence and all those who took part in oral evidence sessions in September and October. All of us on the committee recognise the validity, strength and sincerity of the views that we received on this clearly emotive issue. I am personally grateful for the sensitive and respectful way in which those views were presented by witnesses and then considered by committee members. I hope that the wider debate about same-sex marriage will proceed in the same dignified way.

The committee noted the differing views that were expressed in evidence on the meaning and purpose of marriage. We considered evidence from faith groups and from LGBT people on the perceptions and understanding of marriage, and we heard from a number of witnesses about rights-based arguments and social attitudes.

Margaret Mitchell (Central Scotland) (Con): Will Margaret McCulloch give way?

Margaret McCulloch: No—I do not have time. I have a lot to get through on the report.

Some witnesses emphasised the concept of complementarity between men and women. The Catholic parliamentary office, on behalf of the Bishops Conference of Scotland, wrote:

“The complementarity of male and female, and their unique role in the transmission of life, underscores the reality of marriage as a natural social environment for the birth and growth of every person.”

John Deighan, from the Catholic parliamentary office, described complementarity as the “inherent essence” of and “rational basis” for marriage. However, John Phillips, who was representing the Religious Society of Friends—the Quakers—gave a different perspective. He said:

“For us, the crucial thing is the complementarity between two individuals who are making a committed relationship with each other.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 5 September 2013; c 1382.]

Tim Hopkins, from the Equality Network, said:

“Our view is that the bill is about love—and marriage is about love. I think if you ask most married couples what their marriage is about they will say that it is about love, a commitment to each other and, if they have children, their family. All those things apply to same-sex couples, as well.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 5 September 2013; c 1382.]

Colin Macfarlane, from Stonewall Scotland, says that the bill is “about much more than the complementarity issue”

and that it is

“about how gay people are viewed in society and about being equal in the eyes of the law.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 5 September; c 1382.]

Indeed, we gave a great deal of consideration to equal recognition, human rights and public attitudes. Dr Kelly Kollman highlighted to us the "transformative" power of rights-based arguments in the debate.

I am aware that many of the responses to the Scottish Government’s consultation did not favour the bill. That point was made to the committee in written and oral evidence from John Deighan. However, Ross Wright from the Humanist Society Scotland commented that a consultation "not a referendum". Professor John Curtice, from the University of Strathclyde, advised that we "should not look to consultations as a way of understanding the balance of public opinion”, but that we should instead look to

"the structure of public opinion"—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 19 September; c 1516.]

and technical issues with bills and proposals. There was a huge amount of diversity as well as depth in the views that we received, so I hope that the whole range of opinions is adequately reflected in the report.

The committee also noted varying views among stakeholders on the approach that the bill takes to protecting celebrants of faith, as well as the freedom of religious organisations to conduct legal marriages that are in keeping with their own doctrines. We heard differing views on the opt-in approach for religious and belief celebrants, on protections for service providers and on concerns about attrition. In our report, we asked the Scottish Government to consider that range of views during the amending stages of the bill.

Under the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977, there are two types of marriage ceremony: civil and religious. Since 2005, humanist celebrants have been authorised under a provision of the 1997 act that was designed for temporary authorisation of religious celebrants. The bill would retain two categories, but would redefine non-civil marriage ceremonies as "religious or belief" ceremonies, to capture a wider range of beliefs and to put religious and belief celebrants on the same legal footing.

Ephraim Borowski of the Scottish Council of Jewish Communities considers that there is a distinction between religious and belief ceremonies, and so believes that belief ceremonies should form a third category. The committee notes the Scottish Government’s explanation for why the bill retains two ceremony categories, but we have sought the Scottish Government’s views on an amendment to the bill.

The committee took a range of evidence on civil partnerships, including evidence on the difference between marriage and civil partnerships, the treatment in the bill of civil partnerships that have been registered abroad, and the future of civil partnerships in Scotland. We note that the Scottish Government plans to consider issues relating to reform of civil partnerships, including civil partnerships for opposite-sex couples, in its forthcoming review.

Should same-sex marriage be introduced, there would be a procedure for converting civil partnerships into marriage. We believe that couples who enter into civil partnerships abroad, who would have to dissolve their partnerships before marrying here, should have similar rights to that procedure as couples whose civil partnerships have been conducted in Scotland.

The committee noted the Scottish Government’s position that it has struck the right balance regarding gender-neutral ceremonies, and that allowing such ceremonies could cause problems for denominations that might not want to use gender-neutral marriage declarations. However, we believe that it should be possible to allow gender-neutral language, which is why we call on the Scottish Government to reconsider its position.

We note evidence that calls for the requirement for spousal consent to be removed from the gender recognition process. The spouses of people who seek gender recognition may find themselves in circumstances that are difficult to face and we have not received specific evidence from their perspective. However, we believe that the non-transitioning spouse’s personal choice is sufficiently protected by the automatic grounds for divorce that are triggered by his or her partner seeking gender recognition. We also believe that the requirement of spousal consent for gender recognise, also known as the spousal veto, is unnecessary and should be removed.

We have drawn two further conclusions regarding gender recognition issues that were raised in evidence. First, we have welcomed the Scottish Government’s willingness to consult on difficulties that are faced by long-term transitioned people, in particular around evidence requirements, with a view to amending the bill at stage 2. Secondly, we have noted representations that were made by the Scottish Transgender Alliance about lowering the age at which a person can secure gender recognition. We accept that it may not be possible to deal with those issues effectively in the bill, but I feel nonetheless that it is important to highlight them to Parliament.

The committee took evidence on how the bill could impact on other areas of life, including the education system and chaplaincy in public services. We heard from John Brown, from the Scottish Catholic Education Service, and Michael Calwell, from the Family Education Trust, who spoke about the conflict between different views of marriage and the implications that they fear it could have for teaching in schools. However, when asked whether the bill would have an impact on how teachers teach in the classroom, Stephen McCrossan of the Educational Institute of Scotland said:

“I do not think that the bill will have a significant impact on the way in which teachers teach in the classroom. We simply see the bill as another strand in equality and diversity, promoting equal opportunities and challenging discrimination.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 26 September 2013; c 1534.]

On behalf of the committee, I draw Parliament’s attention to the views that were expressed regarding the relationship between the bill and public services, and to the recommendations that were made by the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee, which we note and support.

To paraphrase Robert Louis Stevenson, we agree to differ, for agreeing to differ is a form of agreement, rather than a form of difference. The majority of the committee supports the general principles of the bill and recommends that Parliament approve the bill at stage 1. A minority of the committee does not support the bill. Those members either disagree in principle or are not convinced that adequate protections are in place. However, we are unanimous in supporting the right of individual members to decide on the bill as a matter of conscience.

On a personal note, I know what my conscience tells me; I associate myself with the majority view that is expressed in the report. I back the general principles of the bill and I hope that there is a majority in favour of equal marriage when we vote at decision time tonight.

17:25

Jackie Baillie (Dumbarton) (Lab): I am pleased to participate in this stage 1 debate on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. At the outset, I commend the Scottish Government unreservedly—not something that I do terribly often—for its work on the bill. I also commend the members and clerks of the Equal Opportunities Committee for their diligence in scrutinising the bill at stage 1. I associate myself with the cabinet secretary’s remarks about Mary Fee, the former convener of the committee, and Margaret McCulloch, the current convener.

Undoubtedly, there has been a volume of evidence in favour of and against the bill, and the committee's stage 1 report is a comprehensive record of that evidence and the process of the committee's consideration. The report notes that the majority of the committee supports the general principles of the bill, but the convener was right to remind us that the decision will be a matter for individual members, as I believe that all parties have agreed that there will be a free vote. Ultimately, it is a matter for each of us in the Parliament.

I therefore recommend that all members read the stage 1 report. I know that it is long, but it helps to set out the arguments and, where there are concerns, the scope for amendments. I will come on to consider some of those concerns. For me, though, the bill is about equality, fairness, social justice and the values that were instilled in me by my parents, my community and society. For many of us, the bill is also about how we see ourselves as a nation and how others see us. It is about the values that we hold and whether Scotland is indeed a confident progressive nation where equality is truly valued.

Most members will have received a considerable volume of correspondence on equal marriage, both for and against. Many of the arguments are detailed and the views are passionately held. Some members even received emails as we were walking into the chamber, never mind late last night. I thank people for giving their time and energy to inform the debate.

It is true that attitudes in Scotland are changing. The Scottish social attitudes survey in 2002 showed that 41 per cent of people were in favour of same-sex marriage and 19 per cent were against. In the same social attitudes survey, but this time in 2010, the proportion of people who were in favour of same-sex marriage had risen to 61 per cent. A shift of 20 per cent in opinion on any issue in such a short space of time is, frankly, astonishing. If we begin to unpack the detail, we find that support for equal marriage can be found in those who are religious, in people from across all income groups and all geographic areas of Scotland. The support cuts right across our country and right across our society.

In the survey, 55 per cent of those who identified themselves as Catholic supported same-sex marriage and 21 per cent were opposed. Among Scottish Presbyterians, 50 per cent supported same-sex marriage and 25 per cent were against. Of those living in the most deprived areas, 67 per cent support same-sex marriage, while the figure for those who live in the most affluent areas is 63 per cent. Frankly, it makes no difference whether someone lives in urban or rural Scotland, because support for same-sex marriage is roughly the same and consistently above 60 per cent. There is no doubt about current public attitudes.

I read with much interest the evidence to the committee from Professor John Curtice, whom many members will know better for inhabiting television studios in the wee small hours of the morning, sharing his wisdom on elections and voting behaviour. He described to the committee a cultural shift in Britain over the past 30 years. According to Professor Curtice, in 1983, 62 per cent of the population believed that same-sex relationships were mostly or always wrong. That figure has dropped to 28 per cent, which is quite extraordinary. His explanation for that shift is that it is young people who increasingly support same-sex marriage. The Equality Network backs that up and tells us that support for same-sex marriage is highest among those who are under 55. I, like many in this chamber, take it as a compliment that the then president, Cavaco Silva, signed it off and there have been same-sex marriages ever since.

Interestingly, when I asked one Portuguese friend, who is quite religious, about the legislation he said, “It is about love. There should be no difference whether it is a man or a woman or they are the same sex; it is whether they love each other that really matters.”

When the Parliament passed a law on civil partnerships, we took a huge step forward. Same-sex couples had the legal rights associated with marriage. However, I recognise that that, for some, falls far short of marriage in which their love and commitment is fully recognised. The Equality Network talks about a gold standard; for me, it is a matter of equality and fairness.

For a host of reasons, I believe that equal marriage is an idea whose time has come and I will support the general principles of the bill. That said, very few in this chamber are deaf to the concerns that have been raised. The principal area of concern appears to relate to the protections put in place by the Scottish Government. It is the case that no religious or belief body can be forced to perform a same-sex marriage. It is also the case that celebrants will not be forced to perform a same-sex marriage if it is against their beliefs. I agree. Those are matters of doctrine and belief that are properly for the church and not the state.

Mark McDonald (Aberdeen Donside) (SNP): Will the member give way?

Jackie Baillie: I will in a second.

Religions can and do refuse to marry people. That is a matter for them; it is not proposed that that will change.

Mark McDonald: The member has just made my point, which is that churches are already able to choose who they marry.

Jackie Baillie: I am never keen to give up time to the member, but I am glad that we are in agreement.

I welcome that point because it is important. However, I acknowledge that some people are concerned that even those protections might be challenged in the courts. I therefore very much welcome the arrangement between the Scottish and UK Governments to amend the UK Equality Act 2010. The 2010 act contains provisions about not discriminating when providing a service, with exemptions for religious and belief bodies that apply in certain circumstances. The Scottish Government has rightly sought the protection to be more comprehensive by asking for a further amendment that would help to allay fears about challenges being brought on grounds of discrimination. It is helpful that an agreement has been reached with the UK Government on that point.

Concerns have also been expressed about whether it would affect someone's employment if they held views that were opposed to same-sex marriage. The example most often cited is that teachers would be somehow forced out of their job if they refused to teach about same-sex marriage because they were fundamentally opposed to it. I think that we all acknowledge that teachers deal with difficult situations every day in schools. In the main, they do so sensitively—they balance their beliefs with the needs of the child or children before them. It would be wrong to put something in the bill when education circulars and guidance have served us extremely well in the past.

Existing legislative provision allows parents to withdraw their children from religious education. Existing guidance allows parents to withdraw their children from sexual health education. I welcome the Scottish Government's proposal to update that guidance to reflect the introduction of same-sex marriage. Faith aspects of the curriculum in Catholic schools will continue to be a matter for the Scottish Catholic Education Service. However, it is important for the Scottish Government to review any suggested impact on education, to make doubly sure of the position. Like many other members, I have received thoughtful letters from teachers who support the proposal and teachers who are concerned about how to deal with same-sex marriage, so updated guidance will undoubtedly be helpful.

I have no doubt that amendments will be lodged with the aim of respecting the right of those who, as a result of their religious beliefs, take the traditional view of marriage as being between a man and a woman. Concerns have also been highlighted about freedom of speech. I note that the Lord Advocate has published guidance on the matter, which refers to provisions in the European Convention on Human Rights and the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union on the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, along with freedom of expression. However, concerns remain. It is right for the Parliament to explore the subject again and ensure that the arrangements are robust.

The committee has also asked the Scottish Government to look again at the gender recognition provisions in the bill and at policy areas such as gender-neutral language and spousal consent for gender recognition. I have not had time to explore in detail all the issues that the committee raised but, Presiding Officer, you will have the fortune—or misfortune, depending on your view—to hear from me again in the closing speeches.

I hope that members will support the bill's general principles at decision time. We and the Scottish Government have work to do to improve the bill and make it more robust. We must have adequate protections that genuinely address people's concerns, but it is time for change. It is time to support equal marriage.

17:37

Ruth Davidson (Glasgow) (Con): The debate is not easy and it was never going to be. When areas of love meet the law and when belief, commitment and faith collide with legislation, the waters will always be difficult to navigate. I therefore commend all the contributors to the debate in the past months and years who have sought to make thoughtful comments, to elevate the ideas and to temper the language. People have displayed a respect for beliefs that differ from their own and have recognised that those beliefs are just as sincerely held. I hope that that temperance will continue this evening, to demonstrate that, although this may be a fledgling Parliament, it has maturity.

It is precisely because of the nature of the debate that I believe that the bill is a matter of conscience. That is why, like members of other parties, Scottish Conservative members have been given a free vote.

Today, I speak on behalf of only myself. I have no doubt that this could be the most personal speech that I will ever make in the chamber. I hope to explain why I support the broadest principle of the bill—the principle of extending marriage.

I believe in that principle because I believe in marriage. I believe that marriage is a good thing. I saw the evidence of that every day growing up in a house that was full of love. My family had the stresses and strains that are common to all, but there was never any doubt, question or fear in my mind that our togetherness was in any way insecure.

The bedrock of that stability and security was my parents' marriage. That stability helped me and my sister to flourish and have confidence that we could be whoever we wanted to be. After more than 40 years of marriage, my parents still love each other. I look at what they have and I want that too, and I want it to be recognised in the same way. That recognition matters.

Presiding Officer, from childhood, you have known without even thinking that if you found someone you loved and who loved you in return, you would have the right to marry them. The same unthinking right to marry extends to the cabinet secretary, the Labour Party leader and the Liberal Democrat leader. I want that right to extend to not just me but the thousands of people across Scotland who are told that the law says no and that they cannot marry the love of their life. They are not allowed and, unless we change the law, they will never be allowed.

It does matter. It matters that a whole section of our society is told that they can have the facsimile of civil partnership but they cannot have the real thing. It is not for them. Their love is something different and something less. Their commitment is denied.

I do not want the next generation of young gay people to grow up as I did, believing that marriage is something that they can never have. With this bill, we have the opportunity to change that, and to change the attitudes and stigma that being lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender can still evoke, and that can cause so much harm.

Jamie Hepburn: I thank Ruth Davidson for giving way during her very eloquent contribution; I am enjoying it very much. She spoke about the next generation. I am the father of two very young children. I do not know what their sexual orientation will be, but if they grow up and have a same-sex attraction, and if the Parliament fails to pass the proposed legislation that is before us today, what would the member suggest that I should say to them in future if they want to be married? How does she think that I could look them in the face and say that this Parliament missed the opportunity to give them that right?

Ruth Davidson: I would hope that their father would have helped to vote them that opportunity. Talking about the next generation is important because it is those people we must think about.

Last year, the University of Cambridge conducted a huge body of research called “The School Report”. The researchers spoke to hundreds of LGBT pupils from across the UK who were open about their sexuality. The majority said that they were the victims of homophobic bullying and that it happened to them in their schools. More than half of the respondents deliberately self-harmed. Nearly a quarter had attempted to take their own life on at least one occasion.

These are our children and they are made to feel so much guilt, shame and despair. We have an opportunity today to make it better for them. At the moment, we tell these young people, “You are good enough to serve in our armed forces. You are good enough to care in our hospitals. You are good enough to teach in our schools. But you are not good enough to marry the person you love and who loves you in return.” We tell them that they are something different, something less, something other, and that the dream and gold standard of marriage does not apply to them. They do not get to have it. That apartheid message, that “same but different” or alien quality, and that otherness is reflected in every hurtful comment, slander, exclusion and abuse, whether it takes place in the school playground, on the factory floor, or in the local pub.

That is why the bill matters to those people who will directly benefit from it, such as those couples who are eager to commit their relationship in marriage and who should be allowed to do so. More than that, it matters to the future nature of our country. We have an opportunity today to tell our nation’s children that, no matter where they live and no matter who they love, there is nothing that they cannot do. We will wipe away the last legal barrier that says that they are something less than their peers. We can help them to walk taller into the playground tomorrow and to face their accuser down knowing that the Parliament of their country has stood up for them and said that they are every bit as good as every one of their classmates. They will know that their Parliament has said that they deserve the same rights as everyone else.

I believe in marriage. I believe that it is a good thing and something to be celebrated, and I want everyone in Scotland to know that marriage is important to them. I support the principles of this bill.

The Presiding Officer: We now move to the open debate. I have 20 members who wish to take part in the debate. I am absolutely determined that those who have already indicated their wish to take part will be heard. The debate is unique because it is a free vote and I want as many voices as possible to be heard. To allow everyone to get in who has already indicated that they wish to speak, I can allow the first number of speakers to have six minutes, and thereafter, speeches will be five minutes. The Presiding Officer will tell you when that change occurs.

17:44

Marco Biagi (Edinburgh Central) (SNP): Thank you, Presiding Officer. I apologise for not noticing earlier that we were running slightly ahead of schedule.

As is becoming clear to everyone, the bill that we are debating is different from the bills about which we debate policy or the intricacies of law. Speaking personally, as Ruth Davidson did, I can only feel that the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill is much more immediate and more fundamental, and that it deals with the question of my civil rights. After consideration, I concluded that my remarks, too, ought to reflect that.

It will not come as a surprise to anyone that, when I was young and my classmates started to notice girls, I started to notice boys. I was afraid. I looked at our society and I did not see myself looking back, whether in our institutions, such as marriage, in what was regarded in public debate at the time as good and moral, or even in how our society portrayed itself in fiction, in which any representation of same-sex attraction made the subject matter adult, to be ranked alongside pornography and violence. When all that I saw or knew of gay people was Julian Clary, Kenneth Williams or Graham Norton, I—a boy from a chip shop in Dunbartonshire—did not see myself. I could only conclude that I was different from normal and that what I was was less deserving as a result.

Today, this chamber can add a new tile to the great interlocking mosaic of our society that has been built up steadily, one piece at a time, since the Wolfenden report of 1957. Same-sex marriage will not be the last piece to be added to that mosaic. The bill is not the finished article, not least for the transgendered, but today we can further build a picture of our society that generations of young people to come can look at and see themselves in. People of faith, whether gay or straight, must see themselves in that image, too, because it would be perverse to expand the freedom to express sexuality only at the cost of the freedom to practise faith. Both are fundamental cornerstones of a humane society, and the dichotomy between them is a false one.

Amending UK equality laws puts beyond doubt any concern that churches could be forced to hold same-sex marriages by domestic law. Anyone can speculate about hypothetical European challenges, but the ECHR includes specific protection for freedom of religious practice. I quote:

“There would ... be a quite a hurdle and a strong protection under article 9 if churches can prove that they are not part of the state.”

“...The Church of Scotland is not and has never been a department of the state”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 19 September 2013; c 1495, 1494.]

Those are not my words, but those of Aidan O’Neill QC, when, as legal adviser to the campaign against the bill, he gave evidence to the Equal Opportunities Committee. If the Kirk is not classed as a department of state, which faith would be? The Equality and Human Rights Commission and Karon Monaghan, who is a human rights law specialist, formed part of the consensus that the protections were strong and that the freedom of religion was genuine.

However, we do not have to speculate. Nine countries in Europe have already legalised same-sex marriage and not one has seen churches being forced to hold such marriages. That fact was confirmed to the Equal Opportunities Committee not once, not twice, but three times over by different witnesses.

Above all, we must not be drawn by the remote and hypothetical challenge to religious freedom to such an extent that we overlook the very tangible, very real and very much on-going violation of personal freedom that is the exclusion of people of same-sex attraction from expressing their love through marriage, which is the institution that our society considers to be the paragon of commitment.

Civil partnerships were a welcome step, but they remind me of the ladies degrees that were offered before women were admitted to Scotland’s universities on an equal footing for the first time in 1892. Those degrees were progressive for their time—they opened the door—but who today would argue that a women-only degree was a substitute for allowing women to study on the same terms as men? Civil partnerships are “separate but equal”, which is always separate and never equal. They are not enough.

If we were to surprise everyone and to vote down the bill today, who would we be to continue to infringe the freedom of those progressive faiths such as Scotland’s Quakers and Scotland’s Unitarians that sincerely consider same-sex ceremonies to be part of their understanding of what marriage is and should be?

Alison McInnes (North East Scotland) (LD): Is the member aware that last month marked the 50th anniversary of the publication of a book called “Towards a Quaker View of Sex”? That book said:

“Surely it is the nature and quality of a relationship that matters: one must not judge it by its outward appearance but by its inner worth. Homosexual affection can be as selfless as heterosexual affection, and therefore we cannot see that it is in some way morally worse.”

Does the member agree that that conclusion, which was unprecedented for its time, is still significantly more advanced and progressive than some of the views that some people have expressed during the debate on the bill?

Marco Biagi: I very much agree with the sentiment that was expressed, although I speak up for Unitarians, who have also been performing same-sex blessings since the 1950s. There is plenty of progress all round.

If we were to vote down the bill, who would we be to say that the understanding of the sacrament of marriage held by other faiths that do not share that view should be allowed and the views of the Quakers and Unitarians should be forbidden unless we somehow believed that same-sex relationships were intrinsically different, wrong and worthy of legal proscription?
I cannot bring myself to believe that any member subscribes to that view, but I will tell members a secret: I did once. The shame of those days has now given way to a shame that I fought those feelings for such a long time. Sadly, I know too many who still fight them—people young and old whose lives are a daily denial. I do not have to imagine how it feels to live like that because I remember it.

When I came out, I stopped looking at those around me and wishing that I was the same as them. Instead, I started to wish that I had the same rights as them—the same right to love, marry and dream of what might be.

The bill grants people throughout Scotland that right and the freedom to be true to their faith and to their love. I implore all members to join together and endorse it. For all those people, young and old, what a sign that would be.

The Presiding Officer: I remind members that the debate will be really tight if I am to get everybody in. I urge them—beg them, in fact—to keep to their time limits.

17:51

Mary Fee (West Scotland) (Lab): The debate is truly historic and long overdue. I am delighted to take part in it as a supporter of LGBT rights. It will also come as no surprise that I will be saying “I do.”

I pay compliments to the Equality Network, the Transgender Alliance, Stonewall Scotland and all the equality groups that played their part in the campaign that now results in the Parliament making its first vote on the bill that will make marriage equal in Scotland. The debate has often been contentious, particularly when played out in the media, and I am sure that all members will be sincere and courteous in their deliberations.

The Scottish Parliament was established to promote the values of social justice and tackle inequality. Since its inception, it has acted against social and moral inequality by repealing section 28, levelling the age of consent, allowing same-sex couples to adopt and foster, and introducing legislation to ensure that LGBT people are protected under hate crime laws. It is only right that we extend to LGBT citizens the rights and freedoms that many of us take for granted each day.

I ask the opponents of the bill who comment that civil partnerships were introduced for LGBT people whether the suffragettes were happy when the Representation of the People Act 1918 was introduced, allowing women over 30 to vote. No, they were not. They fought for a further decade to enfranchise all women and equalise the voting ages of men and women.

Lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender couples who wish to marry should be able to do so. They should not be told that they must accept the current two-tier discriminatory system. Adapting our marriage laws will end that discrimination with no impact on any other marriage.

Our society has become increasingly liberal since 1999, and attitudes towards the LGBT community are changing, even if it sometimes feels as though they are doing so at a snail’s pace. Support for equal marriage is at an all-time high, and my vote will represent the majority of correspondence that I have received from constituents in West Scotland.

Although it is widely recognised and documented that attitudes are changing, the levels of stigma and discrimination towards LGBT people remain unacceptably high. Like many, I believe that same-sex marriage will help to tackle and reduce prejudice.

I will address the specifics of the bill and the Equal Opportunities Committee’s stage 1 report. Changes still need to be made and it is likely that amendments will be lodged that improve the opportunity to increase equality. However, I welcome the consideration of the Scottish Government and the Equal Opportunities Committee to report on issues such as gender recognition difficulties faced by long-term transitioned people and civil partnerships performed in another country.

The committee report also raises questions about the meaning and purpose of marriage. Those who are against the bill argue that the complementarity of a man and a woman is the basis of marriage, but that suggests that the basis of marriage is really about procreating. As we know all too well, the ability to create a child does not automatically create a perfect parent or, indeed, an ideal family unit. It seems that some people are living in a different society from the rest of us, and outdated values give no justice to the children of today.

As I said earlier, we have become more liberal. The number of single-parent families is increasing, and they are becoming more accepted as the norm. Suggesting that marriage is the basis for a stable environment for raising a family adds to the stigma that many single parents feel and it does no service to the tremendous work and support that many single-parent families do and give every week.

Marriage is a commitment between two loving and consenting adults; whether to have children after being married, or indeed before or never, is a decision solely for the couple, no matter how the family is created. The legislation allowing same-sex couples to adopt, which came into force in 2009, was long overdue, but it gave the right to offer a child a safe, stable and loving home.

Having been married for 36 years and having raised two children, I strive to understand how introducing the bill takes anything away from my marriage. I agreed with the First Minister, for probably the first and perhaps the last time, when he stated at the Scottish Government Cabinet meeting in Renfrew last year:

“I personally struggle to see whose freedoms are being infringed by the move towards this legislation.”

It is right that freedom of thought, freedom of religion and freedom of speech are protected. However, at what point does one person’s freedom override the equality of others? As many supporters of the bill have said, there are enough safeguards for people to express their view, as long as it is not seen to be hateful or discriminatory.

The bill is a step, if not a leap, towards ensuring equal rights for all Scots. I hope that it will add to the important and crucial work carried out to tackle inequality and discrimination. I look forward to casting my vote in support of the bill.

17:57

John Mason (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP): I am very grateful to have the opportunity to take part in this debate today.

Clearly, we are dealing with a sensitive subject, and there has been a certain amount of strident language in the media from people at both ends of the spectrum. However, it was encouraging that in committee there was a generally reasonable tone from both committee members and witnesses. That tone was important because, whether Scotland is devolved or independent, we must be able to disagree among ourselves in a civilised way. I believe that that is what this Parliament is for.

We do not all need to be the same as each other and we do not all need to agree on one point of view. I want what I hope we all want, which is a pluralistic and inclusive Scotland that is made up of a wide variety of people and groups, and in which people of different backgrounds and orientations, and people with traditional faiths or none, can all belong and feel at home.

I think that we have to note as well that Parliament therefore needs to tread wisely if it is to keep all the people of Scotland on board.

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): Does the member accept that, as well as some people on both sides of the argument having strong feelings on it, there are an awful lot of people out there who are just puzzled that we have not got over this already?

John Mason: There are people puzzled because we have not got over it already, and there are people puzzled about why we are looking at it when they think that there are other things that are more important.

We need to deal with this subject sensitively—I think that Ruth Davidson gave us a tremendous example of that—as we are talking about personal relationships. We have people who have a relationship with a partner whom they love and who want the right to marry them; we have people in a loving marriage relationship who feel that the proposed changes could devalue that relationship; and we have people like me who have a relationship with Jesus and want to show our love for him. Let us all accept that and try at least to tolerate a range of views.

There are two main arguments against the bill: one is on the principle that marriage is between a man and a woman and the second is about whether adequate safeguards are in place for those who disagree.

The latter is a concern that comes on top of the feeling of some religious people that they are being increasingly marginalised in society. On the first, the argument is that the word “marriage” has had a recognised meaning for a very long time. Some would argue that Parliament cannot or should not change that meaning. By widening the meaning, it dilutes the value.

John Lamont (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con): Will the member take an intervention?

John Mason: No. I am sorry but I have to get on.

From a personal perspective, I have a lot of sympathy for that argument. However, that raises the question of how much my faith as a personal position should decide how I vote on an issue such as this. Coming from a Baptist perspective, I believe strongly in the separation of church and state. While state has responsibility for restricting some actions and behaviour, it cannot ultimately impose values on people.

For me, therefore, the crucial arguments are around the protections for those who disagree with same-sex marriage, whether they are denominations, celebrants, or public sector or other workers. We have assurances from the Scottish and Westminster Governments that all is safe and full protection is in place. However, there remain a number of concerns.

First, the Equality Act 2010 does not say that all protected characteristics are equal; nor does it say how conflicts between different characteristics are to be decided. As a result, the courts have to decide which rights are most important. The perception among many religious people is that religion and belief often come at the bottom of the pile.

Secondly, the European Court of Human Rights can trump the UK and Scottish Governments. We heard at committee that the ECHR will not get involved if there is no such thing as same-sex marriage but, once same-sex marriage is permitted, will it switch to making it compulsory for churches and others to take part?

If churches are considered to be providing a public service, the courts could act against them for providing that service only to some and not to others. That is effectively what has happened with adoption agencies. At the time that adoption by same-sex couples was permitted, well-meaning assurances were given that no agency would be forced to take part. However, we now have the situation where the Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator states that an agency cannot be a charity if it refuses to take part. Will permission turn to compulsion in a few years’ time? That is the concern of many of us.

We looked at that issue in committee and received different legal views about what might happen in future. Members might have seen in the Equality Network’s briefing that Karon Monaghan QC said that it is “inconceivable” that the European Court would overturn the protections. However, that is only one half of the story.

The other half is what Aidan O’Neill QC said, which was:

“If marriage is extended to same-sex couples, it will become a human rights requirement that there be equality of treatment and regard. In a sense, that is what is important about the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill—it shifts the position in that regard.”

He went on to say:

“Therefore, I think that the Equality Act 2010 leaves open the possibility of conflict”.—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 19 September 2013; c 1500-01.]

Not for the first time, we get a variety of legal opinion from a variety of legal experts. There is doubt whether the protections in place are robust; there are certainly no guarantees.

In a similarly controversial area, namely abortion, there is specific provision for national health service workers to be able to choose whether to take part. That seems to me to be a reasonable compromise. The NHS as a whole provides the service, but individuals are given reasonable accommodation. If the bill is to go forward, I would like to see similar increased protection for the individual conscience and belief of public sector and other workers.

I do not seek to impose Christian values on what is an increasingly secular society; nor do I seek to restrict the rights of anyone in society. I seek equality for each person in society, but I remain unconvinced by the assurances given and therefore I will vote against the bill.

18:03

Elaine Smith (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab): A week past on Saturday, as the constituency member for Coatbridge and Chryston I hosted the Conforti Institute’s intercultural dialogue conference here, which included delegates from home and abroad, gay, straight, Catholic, humanist, Protestant and pagan. They all recognised that we have to share this planet for the short time that we are here and that, while we may not all agree on issues such as same-sex marriage, we can surely disagree in a respectful fashion. Indeed, Alex Neil asked that the debate “be conducted in a good spirit and civilised manner, with respect on all sides.”

Since I indicated that I did not intend to support the redefinition of marriage, my religion has been disparaged, I have been branded homophobic and bigoted, I have been likened to the Ku Klux Klan and it was suggested that I be burned at the stake as a witch.

The irony is that I spent 12 years serving on the Equal Opportunities Committee, when we removed section 2A, permitted same-sex adoption and introduced civil partnerships. No one accused me of homophobia then—indeed, quite the opposite.

Most of the people who have engaged with me on the issue are not homophobic. They have the sincerely held beliefs that marriage means one man and one woman as the social construct that forms the basis of family life and that, by altering that reality, the state will fundamentally affect our society with as yet unknown consequences.

Catholics and other Christians who believe that marriage is a sacrament cannot support the redefinition. Of the 77,000 respondents to the Government’s consultation, which is the biggest response ever, 67 per cent were against redefining it. Those people need a voice in the Parliament tonight.

As we have heard, amendments to the Equality Act 2010 will be sought to try to protect the clergy from legal action. That clearly recognises that court cases are likely, but those protections should be for everyone. Freedom of worship and freedom of religion are two different things, and both need to be protected. Section 14 of the bill could be amended to give wider protection, but I am not convinced that that would be unassailable. In evidence, Alex Neil said:

“Sometimes, it depends on the judge.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 3 October 2013; c 1597.]

Previously, we were given promises by ministers that they did not foresee unintended consequences of same-sex adoption and that Catholic adoption agencies specifically would be able to continue their work. I was in the chamber then and voted for the legislation on that basis. We now know that that is not the case, and the closure of agencies means that many children will suffer as a consequence.

The problem with the threat of legal challenges is that the churches cannot afford to fight them, even if they ultimately win. Both the Catholic church and the Church of Scotland have therefore stated that they may be forced to separate religious ceremonies from state ceremonies. The consequence of that would be that thousands of heterosexual couples would need to get married in a registry office and then seek a religious blessing so that a few same-sex couples would have the full ceremony in a church. Those who support the bill and think that it will have no impact on them and most of us who just want to live and let live need to understand that they may be directly affected.

The Minister for Parliamentary Business (Joe FitzPatrick): Will the member take an intervention?

Elaine Smith: I do not have time.

There are wider implications and consequences, both intended and unintended. Aidan O’Neill QC’s legal opinion says that parents with children in faith schools could be affected, and teachers, chaplains, registrars and other public sector workers may be subject to disciplinary action.

Despite Government promises, no additional measures have as yet been included to safeguard freedom of speech and religion. The Lord Advocate’s guidance to prosecutors for those who oppose same-sex marriage also gives cause for concern and suggests the expectation of legal challenges.

As the constituency MSP for Coatbridge and Chryston, I have been approached by hundreds of constituents who have asked me, either individually or as part of the numerous local religious organisations, to vote against the bill. It does not seem that many members will speak against it, but MSPs have a responsibility to ensure to the best of their ability that they are not introducing legislation that will have consequences—albeit perhaps unintended—that will negatively impact on society.

Some members may believe that, as a result of signing a pledge, they must support the bill. Indeed, it is worrying that the director of the Equality Network claimed in Holyrood magazine a few weeks ago that “Over two-thirds of MSPs have now signed the Equality Network’s ‘Equal Marriage Pledge’ committing themselves to voting in favour of same-sex marriage.”

It is important to clarify that signing a pledge and voting for legislation are two very different things. Members signed that pledge before they set eyes on the legislation or before they scrutinised the proposal. The bill may well have detrimental consequences for many people, and their representatives need to be clear about that when they vote.

The committee report deals with the oral evidence, but it seems to be silent on the vast amounts of written evidence, including mine. In my submission, I cited Professor Tom Gallagher, who is a gay man who lives with his partner of 31 years and is the author of “Divided Scotland: Ethnic Friction & Christian Crisis”. He had hoped to give oral evidence, but he was not called. He would like his remarks to be put on the record. He said:

“The arrival of gay marriage only benefits a small group of activists, who have the ear of part of the media, the civil service & of politicians who naively think there are a few votes in it for them. Some gays and lesbians feel they have been hijacked by these campaigners. Many more are bound to be upset by the hurt caused to un-bioged fellow citizens as they see one of mankind’s most important social structures—marriage—become a battleground in schools & almost certainly the courts. This is no liberation for gay Scots: instead it creates unnecessary distrust between them and a large swathe of the population.”

Patrick Harvie: Will the member take an intervention?

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): The member is in her last minute.

Elaine Smith: In conclusion, my considered view is that, while attempting to tackle a perceived inequality, we will create the conditions for discrimination and legal action against many of our citizens. In perhaps striving for an enlightened position that makes everything for the best in the best of all possible worlds, the bill will bring consequences that will have a detrimental impact on our fragile society.

I hope that MSPs have not been bounced into voting yes because of the fear of being branded homophobic, because they signed a pledge or because they have not reflected on all the arguments presented to the Government and the committee.
The Deputy Presiding Officer: You must draw to a close, please.

Elaine Smith: I have no doubt that the majority of MSPs who vote for the bill will do so with good intentions, but unfortunately, as Karl Marx pointed out in “Capital” with regard to unforeseen consequences, the way to hell is paved with good intentions. I will be voting no this evening.

18:10

Kevin Stewart (Aberdeen Central) (SNP): First, I would like to thank all those folks who took the time to write to me and let me know their views on the issue. An overwhelming majority of those of my constituents who have corresponded with me have said that I should vote in favour of the bill today.

I would like to read part of an email that I received. It says:

“As a gay teenager I cannot state strongly enough the impact that marriage equality would have on me personally, and the wider community. The majority of the political spectrum in Scotland stand by the principle of equality. I ask only that you adhere to it now.”

That email made me think of my teenage years. I became a teenager the year after homosexuality was decriminalised in Scotland, I was a teenager at the time of section 28 and I was a teenager at the time when some horrendous things were said about HIV being a “gay plague”. Society seemed to me to be hostile towards gay people.

At that point, I decided to play it straight, or at least to try to. I denied my sexual orientation throughout my teens and most of my 20s. I only told some of my close friends at the tail end of my 20s that I was gay. I did not tell my parents that until I was 39, which is something that I really regret and feel guilty about. I kind of slighted them, because their reaction was the same as it had always been in life—unequivocal love.

I believe in traditional marriage. I think that it has served me well in terms of the parents that I have, the grandparents that I have, and had, and my brother and sister. It has served people so well that I believe it should be extended to all people. I think that that is only right.

On religious tolerance, I have great respect for all views and I can understand why some folk have taken the stance that they have taken. However, Mr Mason talked about religious folk feeling marginalised. I think that we have to take account of folk who have felt marginalised for oh so many years, and actually get this right here today. [Applause.]

I have absolutely no malice for those who intend to vote no or abstain today, but I urge them to think of their children and grandchildren, who may well turn out to be lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender. We should give them the right to share the happiness and love and the trials and tribulations of marriage. I urge members, please, to support the bill today.

18:14

Jim Hume (South Scotland) (LD): This is one of those historic days not just for the Parliament but for Scotland as a whole. The past years have seen a massive change in the perception of same-sex couples. It has been legal for some years now to be openly gay, whereas in previous generations people were at risk of persecution and conviction. Gay people can now serve openly in the armed forces and, of course, we are proud of all who are brave enough to do so to keep us safe at home. Same-sex couples can now adopt and have the joy and the responsibilities that that brings.

This is not just another bill. It is a reform that demonstrates that our Scottish society values everyone, whatever their sexuality and their relationships.

I will not argue that all Scotland or even all members of this Parliament think that we should allow same-sex marriage, but I think that Scotland is changing. In 2002, 41 per cent of the Scottish people agreed that same-sex couples should be allowed to marry, and just eight years later the proportion had risen to 61 per cent. The Equal Opportunities Committee’s call for evidence attracted 1,300 responses, and 75 per cent of respondents were positive about equal marriage—a clear majority. There is clearly growing support for equal marriage. If my bulging in-box is anything to go by, by far the majority are in favour of equal marriage. There is no unanimity of course, but there is a clear majority in favour.

It will not surprise members that Liberal Democrats will support the bill as it goes through the Parliament. Our constitution says:

“The Liberal Democrats exist to build and safeguard a fair, free and open society, in which we seek to balance the fundamental values of liberty, equality and community, and in which no one shall be enslaved by poverty, ignorance or conformity.”

We made equal marriage our party policy in 2010. I think that we were the first major party to do so. We submitted a positive response to the consultation, in which we said that Scotland can prove to the world that it is one of the fairest and most equal places in which to live.

The progress that we have made, for example by allowing gay people to serve in the forces, makes it more difficult to accept that there should be any barrier to a religious body that is willing to do so marrying two people who have religious beliefs and who feel strongly enough to want to accord their relationship the sanctity of marriage.

I emphasise that the religious body must be willing. I know that there are concerns that religious bodies, whatever their denomination, might be forced on human rights grounds to marry people whom they do not want to marry, but I simply do not buy that. I am aware of churches that would not marry opposite-sex couples, for example because the couple were not regular attenders. I know of no case in which such a couple would take a church to court; they would simply go to a church that was happy enough to sanctify their relationship. I cannot envisage a same-sex couple having any joy in taking a religious body to court on human rights grounds. It is worth noting that the Scottish Human Rights Commission support the bill.

The bill makes clear that no religious body will be required to solemnise a same-sex marriage and that even if a religious body opts in, individual celebrants will be under no obligation to marry a same-sex couple. We believe in freedom of expression, which extends to religious bodies, whether they want to opt in or out of equal marriage.

I mentioned the Liberal Democrats’ support for liberty, fairness and equality and said that we will support the bill. It is worth noting work that is going on elsewhere in the UK. Under the Protection of Freedoms Act 2012, a previous conviction for a homosexual act can be deleted. There has been a change to allow gay men to give blood and there has been an end to deporting gay asylum seekers to countries that would torture them for being gay. The UK Government encourages sports organisations to sign up to its sports charter, which calls for an end to homophobia and transphobia. There is also the UK Government’s Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013. I am sure that members—at least some of them, anyway—will applaud the positive difference that Liberal Democrats in coalition have made on equal rights for all.

I am proud to be a member of the Scottish Parliament while the bill is going through, albeit that we are not the first country in Europe to legislate for equal marriage. Westminster is ahead of us, and Belgium, France, Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands, Spain and Iceland have legislated, as have 16 of the 50 states of the United States of America. The bill’s progress today will prove that Scotland is a fairer and more equal country, in which we can all be proud to live.

18:19

Joan McAlpine (South Scotland) (SNP): I will vote for the bill, because I think that it is underpinned by tolerance, recognition and respect. It is about the fundamental human right to love and to express that love publicly, in a declaration of commitment that cannot be dismissed as second class or second best.

The bill is a mark of how far we have come on the issue of equality in a relatively short period of time. It is only a few decades ago, in my own lifetime, that homosexuality was criminalised, and people lived double lives and lived in fear of exposure, blackmail and sometimes even imprisonment. We should never forget that such hazards remain very real in other countries where human rights are denied on the basis of sexuality and often gender.

The language that is used by a small number of people outside the chamber in the wider debate on equal marriage has on occasion become polarised. We have heard the preposterous allegation that gay unions are tainted, and similarly we have seen those who have asked for reassurances in respect of their religious beliefs dismissed as homophobic. That language is not helpful, and I do not think that it reflects where the majority of the population stand on the issue.

I support equal marriage in principle, but one of my reasons for speaking in the debate is personal. Like many people of my generation, I did not, when I was growing up in a very religious Roman Catholic family in a small Scottish town, know anyone who was gay. My first encounter with homosexuality was in 1975, when Thames Television broadcast “The Naked Civil Servant” in which John Hurt portrays Quentin Crisp. Although it was a breakthrough in the sense that it was a sympathetic film, it gave a stereotyped and almost caricaturish portrayal of homosexuality as outrageous and eccentric: something that was outside the mainstream. However, within a few years of that film, everything had changed. Suddenly we all knew someone in our own family or wider circle of friends who was openly gay. In my case, my cousin and close childhood friend Cal came out at the age of 18, and through him I formed many firm friendships with gay men in particular that have lasted a lifetime.

It is perhaps not surprising, given my age and liberal outlook, that I was happy to accept my friend’s sexuality. What is more significant is that the older people in our family, who had very strong religious beliefs and grew up in a far more socially conservative age in the 1950s and 1960s, also accepted his sexuality. I am not saying that it happened overnight or that there was no awkwardness—or that there were not aunties whispering in private, “I just wish he’d meet a nice girl”—but there was public acceptance. There were joint invitations and Christmas cards, and family gatherings, and over time—as in many, many families—having a gay couple was utterly unremarkable. It was mainstream.

When my cousin Cal died of cancer at the age of 50 three years ago, we grieved as a family, and his male partner was treated with the same consideration and sympathy as any heterosexual partner who had suffered such a loss would have been. The family saw the devoted nursing care that he gave to Cal in his last weeks, and at the funeral he was the chief mourner.

That is not to say that the older members of the family, in their 70s, 80s and 90s, had abandoned in any way their strong religious beliefs, but, just as they said a silent prayer at the humanist funeral, they had reached an accommodation with the partnership that was based on love, and loyalty and basic human decency.

That is why I believe that those harsh voices speaking out against the legislation are not typical of lay members of the Christian church-going population. The vast majority of religiously observant people—even those in churches that are officially against equal marriage—will accept this change in practice, just as they have accepted their gay friends and family members. They judge people on the basis of their character, not their sexuality. They ask, “Are they kind, loyal, generous and fair?” and “Are they a good son or daughter?” That is what matters to most of us.

I welcome the fact that the Equality Act 2010 will be amended to further protect individual celebrants who do not wish to carry out same-sex marriage but who belong to a religious body that has opted to do so. That is about tolerance. Just as I do not believe that those with religious views opposing equal marriage should dictate the law, I do not believe that the law should impose my values on religious denominations.

I conclude by reflecting on Margaret McCulloch’s comment when she spoke for the committee earlier that the committee would “agree to differ”. As we move forward, I think that society as a whole will agree to differ, and in doing so they are agreeing to respect difference: difference in sexuality. That is a mark of our tolerance.

This piece of legislation is about the journey that we have made as a society. Although we have heard a lot today about marginalisation and alienation, and people feeling bullied and excluded, my personal experience is that the bill will bring the law into line with real life and real families. We are actually a much more tolerant society than this debate has sometimes given the impression we are.

18:24

Alex Johnstone (North East Scotland) (Con):
I have heard many of my colleagues who are in the chamber today being asked why they got involved in politics. The most common answer is that they got involved in politics because they wanted to change the world. My most usual answer is that I got involved in politics because I thought that the world was changing too fast and I wanted to slow it down a bit. Perhaps that is the definition of conservative with a small c.

When I look at the proposals contained in the bill I see some specific issues that I hope to have time to address later, but I also see a general principle, which is to change the way in which we view marriage and to extend that to a greater, more complete range of people in our society. That is a principle that, at heart, I believe to be sound. My problem, however, is with the effect on the overall balance of our views on marriage and with why we have chosen to act in this way at this time to the exclusion of other possibilities.

I view marriage as an important cornerstone of our families and our society as a whole. During my lifetime, I have seen society begin to fall apart. I have seen families in instability, and I have seen individual children raised in difficult circumstances as a result. That is why I would argue that one of the priorities of the Parliament should be to strengthen families, to find ways to reinforce marriage and to reverse the trends of half a century and more in order to gain that stability. That is why I worry that we are making this policy a wrong priority at the wrong time.

During the conduct of its inquiry, the Equal Opportunities Committee, its members and all those who came before it treated the whole issue with a very high degree of mutual respect and maturity. The evidence that was given and the debate that took place were of the highest standard, and I commend the report that the committee produced. However, during its preparation and while we were taking evidence, I found that I had to dispute one or two issues.

Professor Curtice spoke about the level of public support. True enough—opinion polls indicate that support for the change is growing rapidly in society. I believe that similar polls also indicate that that is largely because people no longer have the care to commit to a particular policy. It may not be that people care more; it may be that people actually care less.

We have spoken about the redefinition of marriage. Other members have mentioned traditional marriage as a key element of what we have discussed. I believe that traditional marriage can be undermined by the proposed change. As a result, I ask the minister to say something either during the debate or before stage 2 about the other proposals that he has brought forward, such as the forthcoming review of same-sex civil partnerships. Is there any way that, during that process, he can consider how we might lend a hand to those people within families who require support to enjoy greater stability?

Elaine Smith raised the issue of tolerance. She was concerned that, once she had made her opinion public, she had suffered as a result. I have found that there is an extent, within the broader argument, to which that can happen—I have had some interesting emails—but that is just a measure of the passion that people hold within the debate. We need to promote tolerance through the debate, and we must ensure that it does not become a one-way street. It is important that that tolerance continues.

There is a requirement to protect the freedom of those who disagree with the change in legislation, whether they be religious bodies or staff in our public bodies, particularly teachers in our schools. I am worried that if we get this wrong we will create a situation that has certain parallels with the debate on section 28, which resulted in teachers, parents and pupils facing some very difficult circumstances.

John Finnie (Highlands and Islands) (Ind): Will the member give way?

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I am afraid that the member is in his last minute.

Alex Johnstone: I am sorry—I am coming to a conclusion.

Although I will not support the bill as a whole, I am prepared to support a number of proposed amendments to it. However, I am concerned about proposals to lower the age at which the gender recognition process can begin. I will seek further information on the matter and will most likely oppose any change in the Government’s policy in that respect.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: You should be drawing to a close, Mr Johnstone.

Alex Johnstone: I understand the equality and diversity arguments that are contained within and surround the bill, but I want to ensure that we also achieve stability and security in our families and our society and I believe that, by broadening the bill’s perspective, the Government could achieve so much more.

18:31

Nigel Don (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP): I am grateful to the Equal Opportunities Committee for its careful consideration of the bill and the report that it has produced. Of course, for those who are not on the committee in question, it is only when we get to see the stage 1 report that we get a sense of the issues that have generated discussion and the areas of detail that need to be addressed.

The committee heard a great deal of evidence that same-sex couples feel that they are discriminated against; indeed, the same point has been very well and movingly articulated by members this evening. That view has to be respected—and I do respect it. However, I ask members to bear with me while I take a slightly different tack from what has come before and see where it takes us.

It seems to me that what is being proposed is not very different from a civil partnership. The present differences between civil partnerships and marriages are helpfully outlined in paragraph 214 of the report and essentially relate to pension rights and international recognition. However, revising the law on marriage is not the only way of dealing with such issues. Of course, pension rights are reserved and can be worked through only in co-operation with the Westminster Government, and it is clear that a significant amount of work needs to be done to resolve the matter. International recognition is important, but I simply point out that a couple in a civil partnership who wish to move abroad ought to be in a position to marry there, if that is desirable, and I am not convinced that it is our duty to accommodate every nuance of other jurisdictions’ law in our own.

Patrick Harvie: Will the member give way?

Nigel Don: The member must forgive me if I make some progress. I will come back to him if I can.

Having been around for millennia, the traditional view of marriage has worked rather well as the basis of family relationships in societies around the world. In the Christian faith, it is not just a practical policy but also hugely symbolic—and I want members to understand that. Jesus’ death and resurrection are central to the Almighty’s redemptive purpose for his people, while the church—that is, his people—is described as the bride of Christ many times in the Bible. The differences between the two parties could hardly be clearer; equally, their complementarity is evident from the fact that it is those very people—the Christian church—who demonstrate the outworking of Christ’s love to each generation. That is why the so-called traditional view of marriage actually matters to the Christian church. Some will say that marriage is only a word—and they would be right. However, words have meaning and I am in no hurry to change the meaning of a word in our law when so much has been attached to it in our literature and liturgy.
Much of the evidence given to the committee relates to protections for those who do not want to have to celebrate same-sex marriages. I hope members will understand from what I have said that such views can be held without any feelings of homophobia; indeed, concern has also been expressed about the position of teachers.

I note first of all the general belief among witnesses that the proposed protections are strong but, secondly, the doubts that remain about the robustness of those protections, particularly in the context of European law and how that might develop over time. What is clear is that if the bill is enacted substantially as drafted the meaning of marriage will have been radically altered.

The cabinet secretary says that he will not regard his marriage as having been diminished by what is proposed. I understand his view and, indeed, hold a similar view about my own relationship with my wife. However, I remind members that a set is not defined by its present population but by its boundaries. What is being proposed will change marriage as an institution—and that will alter the context for everyone in the future. As Mr Spock would have put it, “It’s marriage, Jim, but not as we know it.”

Joe FitzPatrick: I respect the right of everyone of a religion to hold their views, but does the member acknowledge that the current legislation—the law—discriminates against me and other LGBT people in Scotland?

Nigel Don: I would prefer to acknowledge that it distinguishes, because heterosexual and homosexual relationships are dealt with differently. It seems to me—I had hoped that the member would have picked this up—that those differences are what we should address. Those issues of pension rights and international recognition should be dealt with. My concern is that we are focusing on this one word, and I hope that, from what I have said previously—I encourage members to read it in the Official Report—members recognise that there are reasons for being concerned simply about that word.

Patrick Harvie: Will the member give way?

Marco Biagi: Will the member give way?

Nigel Don: I will give way to Patrick Harvie.

Patrick Harvie: It is interesting that the member seems to place great emphasis on the value of that word in relation to his own marriage, whereas in discussing the merits of civil partnership he talks about not an essential difference, but a technical one. Why should those of us who place value in that word and to whose lives its cultural meaning is relevant not also enjoy the freedom to express it?

Nigel Don: I am absolutely clear that they can, and I think that they will. I am asking members to understand that there are reasons why, within a biblical theology, people in the Christian church feel that that word has another meaning—that is all. That is the historical position.

Kevin Stewart: Will the member give way?

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The member is in his last minute.

Nigel Don: Gosh! My speech is going to have to be shortened.

The future of civil partnerships is already under review. I wonder why we are in such a hurry to change the meaning of marriage at the moment, when many of the issues—some of which were picked up in the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee—could have been much more easily dealt with had we rationalised civil partnerships across same-sex and opposite-sex relationships. I encourage the minister to consider whether it might be better to do that before we implement the bill because, had that been done, it might have reduced some of the problems.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Sadly, we now have to move to five-minute speeches.

18:37

Drew Smith (Glasgow) (Lab): Members bring a range of experiences, ideas and beliefs to the chamber, but it is always worth reminding ourselves that, although they might not always seem to do so, our debates and judgments affect how real people live their lives, the opportunities that they have and their sense of the value that society places on them.

The issue of equal marriage rights was raised with me during the 2011 election campaign, when I strongly supported the references to it in my party’s manifesto. Nevertheless, I had perhaps not thought through the reasons why I felt that way about it—my response was instinctual. I was first asked my views on the issue a few days after the election and, over time, I have found myself being asked about it more and more often. As I thought more about it and listened to others expressing their views, I came to understand my own feelings about it a bit more clearly. In the course of the wider debate that led up to the introduction of the bill, I remembered someone whom I had not forgotten but the extent of whose influence on the view that I had thought was instinctual I had not realised.

Like the majority of the Scottish population, I strongly support the provisions of the bill. I have also, at various times, pressed the cabinet secretary—and, indeed, his predecessor—to hurry along. Therefore, I am very pleased that we have got to this point and hope that we will follow the example of England and Wales and the many other countries that have created equal marriage. I believe that marriage rights are an issue of equality, and I feel strongly that the current position of civil partnerships, which I supported at the time and was proud of my party for having taken the lead in introducing, is not quite enough. Although there is little difference between civil partnerships and marriage in terms of legal rights, the fact that civil partnerships preclude the right of gay people of faith to commit themselves to each other in a religious service is discriminatory. I hope that one of the major achievements of the bill will be to remove that discrimination.

Equality does not mean that everything must be the same; equally, difference should not be imposed on identical things. Same-sex relationships may be different from opposite-sex relationships, but are all relationships not different and unique? Do they not all share the same basic principle: love for another human being and a desire to commit to spending your life with that person? I do not think that the state has the right to draw a distinction between human partnerships that human beings do not draw themselves, and to me that is fundamentally what the bill is about and why I support it.

In 2000, this Parliament repealed section 28—section 2A—which it did in advance of the rest of the UK. Looking back, we can see that the repeal of section 28 was a victory for equality, but it did not come without cost, just as the years of various discriminatory laws did not come without cost and just as that cost still exists in many parts of the world, as Joan McAlpine rightly highlighted. There are members in the chamber who will have celebrated that victory and they might also recall some of the pain of that debate: the things that were said that can never be unsaid and the people who pushed ahead and, in my view, have never been properly recognised for their efforts.

When section 28 was debated by the Parliament, I was still at school—a religious school—and I recall what was said. I recall talking to classmates about the leaflets that were going through our parents’ doors, the newspaper headlines and the things that were said on the school bus.

I mentioned that I thought of someone in the context of this debate. I remember a girl—a young woman—in my year at school, who one evening appeared on the TV news, which was rather unexpected. She spoke out and, to many of us, she became the first person we knew to come out. She did it by asking a very simple and powerful question: what right do others have to make a judgment about me and my life or to make a distinction about who I am and what I am? That was in the context of the section 28 debate.

There are many things that I could say about the detail of the bill, and others are rightly saying them. I celebrate the fact that this may be the last major legal change required to remove discrimination against lesbian, gay and bisexual people from our law, and I am very privileged to be in this place, at this time, to support it. I will follow the amendments at stage 2 and I will support efforts to improve the bill. It is probably not the last major piece of legislation for transgender people, but it is a significant step on the way.

I will oppose any change to the bill that could threaten a new section 28, however well intentioned people may be on that issue. I do not want a situation in which there is a campaign to come back to the bill because of a section that is inserted at stage 2.

I do not know whether the woman that I mentioned has sent one of us an email asking us to support this legislation or if she has put her activism behind her.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: You must close, please.

Drew Smith: However, I will vote tonight for her, as much as for any of the other good reasons—and I thank Ruth Davidson for giving a voice to those reasons. It is thanks to that woman and many people I have met in the course of this campaign that a generation of people will be able to grow up, fall in love and get married, not with the world not caring who they get married to, but with the world recognising the partnership that they make rather than differentiating their relationship.

I am very grateful to support the general principles of the bill.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Again, my apologies: we have to cut the debate back to five-minute speeches.

Christian Allard (North East Scotland) (SNP): I thank Mary Fee, the previous convener of the Equal Opportunities Committee, who welcomed me to the committee when we first considered the bill. A few months later, I welcomed Margaret McCulloch as our new convener.

Before I come to the detail of the recommendations that we made in our report, I thank all the members of the committee for their warm welcome and for the way that we worked together on the bill. I echo the words of Alex Johnstone and John Mason when I say that we agreed to disagree and then moved forward.
We made a couple of recommendations on registration of celebrants. The first came from the evidence of Ephraim Borowski of the Scottish Council of Jewish Communities, who addressed the definition of non-civil marriages, particularly in the context of humanist marriages. We feel that it is important to reflect the distinction between religious ceremonies and belief ceremonies, which is why we ask the Scottish Government its views on the suggested amendment on the redefinition of non-civil marriages.

Ross White of the Humanist Society Scotland gave evidence and commented on the Church of Scotland’s preferential status in law. We ask the Government to clarify its view on the claim that the Church of Scotland has a privileged status in marriage law.

A lot was said about the Government’s forthcoming review of civil partnerships and we heard the cabinet secretary today reassure us that the review will come soon. We note the Scottish Government’s plan to consider issues relating to civil partnerships, including opposite-sex civil partnerships.

To understand better the reasons behind the bill, we did a fair bit of travelling when taking evidence. Believe me, the international perspective was always there. Under the bill, same-sex couples who have entered into a civil partnership in another country will have to dissolve their partnership before being permitted to marry here in Scotland. The committee feels that such couples should be able to convert their civil partnership to a marriage, just as couples whose civil partnerships were conducted in Scotland will be able to do.

The Scottish Government believes that allowing gender-neutral ceremonies could cause problems for denominations that might not want to use a gender-neutral marriage declaration when marrying an opposite-sex couple. We kind of disagree, and we would like the Government to reconsider. It should be possible to allow a choice of gender-neutral or gender-specific language for marriage declarations.

Professor John Curtice told us how much public opinion has changed regarding attitudes towards same-sex relationships. I am pleased that a lot of our work was to recognise the change of gender for married persons or civil partners, as I feel that attitudes towards transgender communities have not yet changed as much as I would like. James Morton of the Scottish Transgender Alliance told us about his proposal for an amendment to the bill to make sure that a spouse cannot stop his or her partner’s gender recognition. James said that for someone to have their gender identity legally recognised and respected by their Government is a human right and something that no one should be able to stop.

We considered how spouses of people seeking gender recognition might find the process difficult, although an important point is that we have not received any evidence from their perspective. After long consideration, we came to the conclusion that the non-transitioning spouse’s personal choice is sufficiently protected by the automatic grounds for divorce that are triggered by his or her partner seeking gender recognition. In the report, we ask for the requirement for spousal consent for gender recognition to be removed.

We received evidence about lowering the age requirement to change gender. James Morton said:

“Transgender people aged 16 or 17 will remain discriminated against under the bill as drafted”.—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 5 September 2013; c 1391.] We do not think that we have enough evidence on lowering the age requirement, which is why we have asked the Government to provide a detailed response on the issue in advance of stage 2.

To conclude, I would like to share a thought about how the world has moved on. As members must know by now, I was raised on a chicken farm in Burgundy in France. I clearly remember the day my father told me about one of his regular customers, a farmer who lived in the remote village with his partner. I was struck by the way that my father spoke about this couple, with great respect and in a friendly tone. I disagree with Elaine Smith, who talked about a small group of activists, because I would not consider that couple, deep in rural France, to be a small group of activists. I wonder what happened to them, and I wonder how much those two farmers—those two men—would have liked to get married, like every other farming couple in rural France many decades ago.

18:48

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): Thank you, Presiding Officer, for the privilege of taking part in this debate. I also thank several of the speakers who have given a very personal take on the issue—Kevin Stewart, Marco Biagi and, in particular, Ruth Davidson. In 10 years as a member of the Parliament, I have never so enthusiastically applauded a Conservative speech. I am always open to a new experience, of course.

Members might be a little surprised that my personal circumstances place me in what I regard as impeccably neutral territory on the issue: I am single, I am bisexual, I have no idea whether I will have a long-term relationship with a man or a woman in future and I have no idea whether I would want to get married. Certainly, I do not personally regard marriage as a gold standard; I regard it as one of the many options on family status that people will make a choice between on the basis of their values and not the values that we would impose on them.

The arguments that we have heard against the bill have been many and varied. Some have been frankly spurious and silly, such as the one that goes, “Well, you know, you can get married already, just to somebody of the opposite sex.” I cannot believe how frequently I have heard that nonsensical and demeaning argument.

Some arguments have been mischievous. There have been deliberate attempts to whip up ungrounded fears about ministers in the Church of Scotland being dragged off by the police, taken to the courts and prosecuted for refusing to marry same-sex couples.

Some of the arguments against the legislation have simply been curious, such as the view that, from the starting point of religious freedom, the law ought to tell churches who they may not be allowed to marry. It seems to me that the argument for religious freedom must be in favour of what the Government is trying to achieve with the bill, which is to permit but not compel.

Some arguments against the legislation are serious and we should not ignore them—quite the contrary. There has been serious opposition to pretty much every step that has been taken in the equalities story over many generations. Certain voices have opposed every step towards LGBT equality, from decriminalisation onwards. Those serious arguments absolutely must not be ignored but must be confronted and defeated because they assert, whether in religious or other terms, the lesser worth, dignity, status or value of LGBT people and our relationships. Those arguments should be and deserve to be defeated. In more than 20 years of volunteering, working or campaigning on many of those issues, I have in all honesty never heard a coherent moral argument in favour of the view that same-sex relationships are of lesser worth or status or that they are morally wrong. I have heard many such arguments rooted in homophobia but none in a coherent moral case.

Some of the arguments that I have heard fall under the heading “I'm not homophobic, but”. That amounts to someone saying that they are not homophobic but they are concerned that one day they might need to treat LGBT people as though they were their equals. On that basis, we have heard demands for so-called protections to be built into the legislation—protections from the indignity of having to treat other people as equals. If we look at the evidence that we heard on the call for those protections, were we to give in to the demands, that would amount to a rolling back of 10 or 15 years of legislative and cultural progress towards equality. We should hold the line against those demands absolutely.

I was proud of Scotland’s Parliament—not as an MSP but as a citizen—not only when it repealed section 28 but when it held the line against the forces of social conservatism and homophobia and did not give in to the demands for concessions. We should be equally proud today and over the months to come not only of passing the legislation but of holding the line against demands for amendments that would weaken the principle of equality. We should also listen seriously to the calls for amendments on issues that members have mentioned, such as the spousal veto, overseas civil partnerships, gender neutral language and gender recognition for younger people. If we do that, we will deserve the pride of many Scottish citizens when we pass the bill at stage 3.

18:53

Jim Eadie (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP): The bill before us concerns an issue that is deeply close to my heart, as it is for other members and for our fellow citizens who have joined us in the gallery this evening.

Ruth Davidson was right to say that the debate is a sign of the growing maturity of the Parliament. The bill is about marriage, but its passage into law will also represent the culmination of decades of struggle for equality for lesbians and gay men, as well as bisexual and transgender people.

Let us not forget that, as recently in our history as 1980, homosexual relations between two men remained illegal, while the very concept of relations between two women did not exist in law. In truth, to be lesbian or gay in Scotland—I can speak only from my experience—was to inhabit a cold and inhospitable place. To come out at that time was to face rejection from friends, family and work colleagues; it was also to risk opprobrium and, in some cases, violence. There were precious few positive role models in the media or in our communities, and it seemed that the further one travelled from metropolitan Glasgow or cosmopolitan Edinburgh, the harsher and the colder that climate became.

Many people chose to leave Scotland rather than stay to face the discrimination and prejudice that were, sadly, a hallmark in much of Scottish society at that time. Thankfully, the culture and temperature have changed. To have had this debate even 10 years ago would have been unthinkable. I believe that, in time, the passage of the bill will enjoy widespread acceptance in our society.
The challenge for those of us who make our laws is not to do what is popular—to stick our finger in the air and see which way the wind is blowing—but to represent our constituents, to listen to the voice of our conscience and to do what is right. I believe that the bill is right and that it commands the public’s support.

In the years since 1980, much progress has been made towards equality through employment legislation, the lifting of the armed forces ban, an equal age of consent, adoption rights and this Parliament’s introduction of a law to outlaw hate crime. However, the struggle for equality has not yet been won. That is why the bill and the debate are so important to so many of us.

In the context of the debate, the most significant change has been the introduction of civil partnerships, which have undoubtedly enhanced the lives of many same-sex couples across the country by conferring on them many of the rights that married couples enjoy. However, a civil partnership is a legal contract; it is not marriage.

My constituents have written in their hundreds to urge me to support the bill and I have been moved and humbled by their testimony. One woman wrote to say:

“I am a practising Catholic who is a strong supporter of same-sex marriage and would very much want my voice to be heard”.

One man urged me to support the bill to end what he called “government supported prejudice against gay people as second class Scots.”

Another constituent contacted me to say:

“I simply cannot understand what harm it does to anyone if two other people decide to get married. What possible grounds can there be to object to the legislation”? The reason cannot be freedom of religion, because the bill enshrines protection for denominations that oppose same-sex marriage on the ground of theology. At the Equal Opportunities Committee, I asked:

“Has your denomination been compelled to perform same-sex marriage in any of the countries that have introduced same-sex marriage?”

and the Catholic Church’s representative said:

“The Catholic Church has not.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 5 September 2013; c 1432.]

Let us be clear: no synagogue, mosque, temple or church—whether of the Catholic or reformed tradition—will be forced to conduct same-sex marriages. The bill will not undermine freedom of religion. We will enhance freedom of religion by allowing faiths that recognise same-sex marriage as part of their understanding of God’s love for all people to conduct such ceremonies.

The objection to the bill cannot relate to the need to protect traditional marriage, as marriage has evolved over time. Today, who would defend the subjugation of women in marriage as expressed in the 18th century by a Lord Justice Clerk, Lord Braxfield, when he said that “in law a wife has no person”?

Traditional marriage has evolved to recognise the rights of women and allow divorce and it has always evolved to reflect social mores.

The objection to the bill cannot be that it represents an attack on marriage. On the contrary, how can that be the case when it will meet the desire of thousands of loving couples to be brought within the ambit of marriage? Contrary to what Alex Johnstone said, the bill will strengthen marriage.

Scotland is no longer the cold and inhospitable place that I described. Tonight, we have the opportunity to take a further significant step as a society to recognise that love is love, whether it involves a man and a woman, a man and a man or a woman and a woman.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: You should draw to a close, please.

Jim Eadie: The bill offers a state and social affirmation of the right of two people who love each other to proclaim that love before the world. This is a wonderful opportunity for the Parliament to signal to the world the type of country that we want Scotland to be—one that is open, tolerant and generous to all.

The time for equality in Scotland has arrived.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: You must close, please.

Jim Eadie: The time for marriage equality is now.

18:59

Elaine Murray (Dumfriesshire) (Lab): I am pleased to speak in the stage 1 debate on the bill. I am not a member of the Equal Opportunities Committee, but I have opposed discrimination that is based on people’s sexual orientation since I was a student, which was about 40 years ago. That was in the bleak and inhospitable place that Jim Eadie just spoke about, where sex between men was still illegal, where lesbianism was not recognised because—apparently—Queen Victoria did not think that it could happen, where same-sex partners rarely dared to express their affection publicly, where coming out to the family was a major difficulty for many gay people, and where the popular terminology that was used to describe gay people was derogatory and offensive. I found all that to be totally abhorrent, as were apartheid and racial segregation, which existed at the same time.

I have had many representations on the bill from constituents, many of whom have been supportive and many who oppose the bill. To constituents who have asked me to vote against the bill because it redefines marriage, I apologise, but I do not agree with their arguments, and I will explain why. To those who told me that they will not vote for me—well, that is their prerogative.

The view that marriage is solely the union of a man and a woman for procreation is outdated and simplistic; there has always been a lot more to marriage than that. For monarchs and powerful families, marriage created and cemented alliances. For others, it represented respectability and the division of labour and responsibilities between men and women. Until recently, as Jim Eadie said, women were the possessions of their husbands. Marriage signified that the woman belonged to the man so that no one else could have a sexual relationship with her and the man could be sure that the children were his.

In these more egalitarian times, marriage is a public declaration of love and of the intention that the relationship will be permanent. It might or might not involve children. If it does, those children might or might not be the biological children of both or either of the parents. Many of us—myself included—have been married more than once; indeed, my oldest lad was at my second wedding. Many other people have stable long-term relationships and bring up their families without feeling the need to be married. Many families consist of one parent bringing up their children with the support of relatives and friends.

The bill will enable people of the same gender who want to make that public declaration of love and permanence in a religious ceremony that reflects their faith to do so. I also support the Government’s proposal for an opt-in process and I welcome the assurances that have been given. However, some of my constituents’ representations have expressed concern about possible discrimination against people of faith. The cabinet secretary talked about circulating letters to certain members; I wonder whether he could circulate that information to all MSPs so that we can offer reassurance to constituents who have been in touch with us.

Other members have reflected on how far we have come in the past 40 years. If someone had told me 40 years ago that a Conservative Prime Minister in the UK Parliament would promote equal marriage, I simply would not have believed them. I am proud of Scotland’s journey, I am proud that more than 60 per cent of Scots now agree with equal marriage, and I am proud that three quarters of those who responded to the committee’s consultation also agree.

As a young woman, I read books that described the experiences of gay people, including Radclyffe Hall’s “The Well of Loneliness” and Gore Vidal’s “The City and the Pillar”. They were stories of tragedy, but the story of being LGBT today should no longer be a tragedy.

I remind people who say that civil partnerships should be enough of the 1976 hit by the Tom Robinson Band “(Sing if You’re) Glad to be Gay”, which, despite its cheerful title, spoke of police harassment, beatings, and insults, and ended with—I will not say the word—the b’s “are legal now; what more are they after?”

Well, like most people, they want equality.

I will support the bill at stage 1 and I hope that it makes its way through Parliament into legislation. It will not mean the end of discrimination against LGBT people, but it will be an expression by this Parliament of the will to treat people equally and not to discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation or the sexual identity that a person is born with.

When I was young, people used to think that being LGBT was a choice, or something their mum or their school did, but people are born that way. A person who is born LGBT does not make the choice to be that, any more than I made the choice to grow to only five foot one. [Applause.]

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): Ms Murray, can you bring your remarks to a close please?

Elaine Murray: It is just part of the glorious diversity of human beings. Legislation should treat people equally and not discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation or gender identity, any more than on the basis of gender, race or faith. The Government is getting that balance right. I am pleased to support the bill, and I am so proud of the progress that we have made in Scotland during my lifetime.

19:04

Linda Fabiani (East Kilbride) (SNP): That description “of the glorious diversity of human beings” from Elaine Murray just sums everything up. That was great.

I am pleased to take part in the debate today because I feel that it has been a long time coming, although that might be a mark of my own frustration about things. I looked back at the debate that took place during the passing of the 2004 legislation for civil partnerships, and at that time, I asked:

“How can anyone sit here and say that it is equality if same-sex couples are not allowed to manifest their faith in the same way that mixed-sex couples can?”—[Official Report, 3 June 2004; c 8935.]

even if the minister is happy to carry out the ceremony? I still feel that way. I just cannot get my head round the idea that some people should be treated differently from others; it just very, very wrong.

However, it may well be that, although I saw civil partnerships as a temporary solution that ought to be quickly overtaken, it was right at the time that that step was taken, so that we could move on. The figures that Jackie Baillie cited on how social attitudes have changed perhaps indicate that it was correct to introduce civil partnerships.

I have been struck by the amount of personal testimony that has been given; members have been extremely brave. No one need get their notebook out—I am not about to say anything stunning—but I would like to illustrate how time moves on and attitudes change. Thirty-odd years ago, my standing up and saying, “You know what? I’m not married. I live in sin,” might have been as stunning as saying the things that we have heard from neighbours and from other people I met for a couple of years because I was ashamed of it. According to social mores at the time, a child’s parents getting divorced was extremely shocking.

What we are doing today is extremely important and represents a natural step forward. I hope that we get to the point—when I am no longer here—when someone, in the course of explaining to Parliament something that had been taboo for many years, says, “You’ll never guess what. It’s not that long ago that same-sex marriages were something that people found it really difficult to talk about. People found it hard to say that they were in a same-sex relationship because that was what was right for them.” To me, the issue is just about equality—straight, simple equality. It is about accepting people the way they are. Why cannot everyone just accept people the way they are if they are not hurting anyone else? It is extremely simple.

That brings me on to the spousal veto. I had intended to talk about it more, but I am aware that other members want to speak. I was pleased to hear the minister say in his opening remarks that he would look at the spousal veto on legal gender recognition, whereby the spouse of a person who has been through the whole process can still prevent them from having their gender legally recognised. That must be looked at, so I am glad that the minister said that he would do so.

I would like to give due recognition to everyone who has worked so hard for same-sex marriage. There is a great wee book called “Six Reasons to Support Equal Marriage” by the Equality Network. What struck me when I looked through it was how happy everyone in it looks—it is such a happy document—and when we were standing outside in the wet mud getting our photographs taken earlier today, it struck me how happy everyone is that the bill is going ahead. Let us not lose that sentiment. We should be extremely happy that we are moving forward in such a way.

It is true that we still have a way to go, but what we are doing today is very good for Parliament and—in the longer term, even though some may not feel that way now—for everyone in it. It is also very good for Scotland, and we should celebrate that.

19:08

Margaret Mitchell (Central Scotland) (Con): In this important debate about same-sex marriage—which is more often referred to as equal marriage—it is worth taking a moment to set the debate in context. The Equal Opportunities Committee is the lead committee for consideration of the bill and it has the formal remit of considering and reporting on matters that relate to equal opportunities, which include the prevention, elimination or regulation of discrimination between persons on the grounds of, among other things, gender, marital status, race, disability, age, sexual orientation and religion.

The proposition that is before us today is that the belief that is traditionally, if not exclusively, held by members of the Christian faith and other religions—that marriage is a relationship between a man and a woman—discriminates against same-sex couples and therefore the law must be changed to allow equal marriage. That is a dangerous distortion of equality. Equal opportunities celebrates diversity. In that context, equality is not about seeking to make everyone the same but is, in essence, about elimination of discrimination and concentration on fairness and diversity. Equal marriage sets two equality strands—sexual orientation and religious belief—in competition with each other.

Mark McDonald: Will Margaret Mitchell give way?

Margaret Mitchell: My view is in the minority and, if Mark McDonald does not mind, I will use the time that is available to me to develop it coherently.
The decriminalisation of homosexuality in 1980 was an important milestone in tackling the historic discrimination against LGBT people, but same-sex couples in stable and loving relationships still had no legal rights vis-à-vis their partners for many years. If one partner was hospitalised, the other had no legal right to be given any information about their illness or care because they were deemed not to be a relative. The Civil Partnership Act 2004, together with the inclusion of same-sex cohabiters in the Family Law (Scotland) Act 2006, ended that terrible injustice. Provision was made to recognise legal rights to, for example, inheritance and property ownership for same-sex couples.

The point is that discrimination has been addressed, as I have described. In seeking to go further and to redefine marriage, the Government is blurring the distinction between state or civil provision, in which it has a role to play, and religious belief and teaching, in which it does not.

Furthermore, people who believe passionately in the sanctity of marriage between a man and a woman have felt empathy with the LGBT community and have supported and campaigned to eliminate discrimination against it. They did so because that is the fair and right thing to do, despite warnings and fears being voiced that marriage would be undermined. Those same people now find that there is little reciprocal empathy and, sometimes, little tolerance for their views.

With the attempt to redefine marriage, the pendulum has swung too far. Passing the bill will do nothing to address the totally unacceptable abuse of LGBT individuals, which still exists and includes, for example, instances of homosexuals within the Asian community being forced into heterosexual marriages.

However, if the bill is passed, people who oppose same-sex marriage and who already feel inhibited in expressing that view will, ultimately, be more apprehensive about expressing their religious beliefs—regardless of the well-intentioned proposals for safeguards.

There is nothing remotely fair about seeking to dismiss and diminish the deeply held convictions and religious beliefs of thousands of people in Scotland who attend church, temple or mosque, who work hard to do their best for their families and who go about their everyday business without imposing their views on anyone else. That is why I will vote against the bill.

19:14

James Dornan (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP): We are all hugely influenced by our early experiences. I was fortunate in mine: I come from a conscientious, working-class, Irish Catholic family steeped in social awareness and was taught from an early age that perceived difference mattered not a jot and that we were all Jock Tamson’s bairns.

That maxim has stood me in good stead over the years, and that is why I will support the bill at decision time. It is not because I have had a number of emails that say I should support it. If anything, on balance, I have probably had more against it than for it. I will vote on the basis of what I believe to be right and because of some personal experiences.

This is a huge step for the Parliament and for Scotland. We have talked about the bill being a good thing for the Scottish Parliament, but I think that it is a good thing for the country. We pride ourselves on our values of equality, fairness and social justice, as Jackie Baillie said earlier, and I think that the bill is a perfect example of those.

We have talked about safeguards and the bill has safeguards for celebrants, both religious and belief celebrants. We are not forcing anyone. The bill is about religious freedom, because it will allow certain religions to opt in or to opt out: they do not need to do same-sex marriages and nobody is forcing anyone. I have two sons who are both married and neither of them will feel less married if my brother can get married to his partner. That kind of argument is ridiculous.

I am a bit older than some of the earlier speakers who gave very eloquent speeches, such as Ruth Davidson, Marco Biagi and Kevin Stewart. I remember what it was like for people who were gay when I was growing up, although we did not really know who they were, because they were in the shadows. My brother Michael was 15 when he came out, but the situation was so bad in Glasgow and Scotland at the time that he never came out to us. He waited until he was 17, then he went down to London and started a new life. He met a guy and went over to Portugal with him. He had to do that because of the Scotland that we lived in at the time, yet people say that we should not be moving on.

The bill is a good thing. There are no losers in this; there are only winners. I completely understand that people have different views. I completely understand that people with a religious perspective might have concerns about the bill. The interesting thing for me is that Michael was more religious than me and kept his faith much longer than I did, even though he was being discriminated against by his church. Religion should not be a barrier to accepting the bill, which is highly important legislation.

Michael created a life for himself outwith his homeland. He is in Portugal with his partner of 39 years. I am delighted to say that I phoned him up last night and said, “Michael, guess what I’m doing? I’m going to use you in a speech in the Parliament tomorrow.” He said “Oh, again. Right.” So, he is comfortable with it.

He told me a wee while ago that he was thinking of getting married. He and his partner have been together for 39 years, which is a fairly long engagement, but they have decided that now is probably the time to get married. I suspect that part of the reason for that is that none of us is getting any younger, so they are looking to make sure that everything is right for when one of them goes, and so on. It is great that they are getting married but, unfortunately, they have to do it in Lisbon.

I hope that any member of my family, or anybody I know of a younger generation who is homosexual—gay or lesbian—will be able to get married in Scotland. I do not know whether the party whip is in the chamber. He is. Hello, Joe, I will speak to you. I will be looking for that day off to go to Lisbon to see my brother getting married. It would be much easier if he was getting married in Glasgow or Edinburgh. The bill is a great thing.

When I spoke to my brother last night, I said to him that I was going to use him in this speech and he said to me, “Oh? Okay. Coincidentally, James, I’m going in tomorrow to sign the papers so that we can organise the day that the marriage gets celebrated.” His marriage is coming soon and same-sex marriage will be coming soon in this country. I am confident that we will vote yes tonight and I am confident that when we get to stage 3 the bill will become law. Scotland will be a much better place for it.

19:18

Anne McTaggart (Glasgow) (Lab): As an MSP representing the large, diverse and multicultural region of Glasgow, I believe that it is part of my duty to tackle prejudice, intolerance and discrimination in all forms, not only because prejudice impacts on the lives of those who experience it, but because it holds us back as a nation.

The passing of the bill will have both legal and symbolic significance for LGBT people and their families, who are often on the receiving end of prejudice and discrimination. As Ruth Davidson said in her eloquent speech, recent research tells us that one in four young people who identify as gay, lesbian or bisexual have seriously contemplated or attempted suicide. That figure is a disgrace in modern Scotland. I truly believe that by eliminating some remaining differences, we can remove the stigma that affects so many of our young people.

As has been mentioned, access to civil partnerships was a huge, commendable step forward, but it ensured that a division between same-sex and mixed-sex couples carried on into the 21st century. I believe that opening up the institution of marriage would achieve true legal equality for the first time. I recognise that equality does not mean that we all have to be the same, but in my view it means sharing the institution of marriage with those who have suffered discrimination, oppression and persecution for centuries.

I also believe that the principle of equality should be extended to heterosexual couples who would like their relationship to be recognised in a different way. I have argued that civil partnerships should be extended to mixed-sex couples who choose to celebrate their relationship in a civil or secular ceremony outside of traditional marriage. As a consequence of denying heterosexual people access to civil partnerships, we are, once again, segregating couples based on their sexual orientation. That is outdated and it is something that the bill should seek to remove fully from our society.

I recognise that the proposal of same-sex marriage is challenging to many people of faith and to some of our religious organisations. I have Christian values and I understand the view that marriage is an institution specific to the relationship between one man and one woman. Although I do not share that view, I passionately believe that those who hold it should be free to express it. That is why I am reassured to note that no religious organisation will be forced to perform same-sex marriages against its will and that religious freedoms will be protected by the bill.

Attitudes are changing. In Parliaments throughout the world, greater recognition for same-sex couples is high on the agenda. We should not be left behind on the issue and I look forward to being part of the Parliament that brought this long overdue legislation to the people of Scotland.

19:22

Richard Lyle (Central Scotland) (SNP): Presiding Officer, I thank you for the opportunity to take part in the debate.

I have been contacted by a large proportion of my constituents about the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill, the majority of whom are opposed to the bill. My constituent Ronnie Mathieson questions why we are redefining a word—marriage—that once meant one thing to mean something different. He suggests that all previous literature, text books, records, legislation, poetry, plays, songs and so on will have to be dated and have footnotes to explain the change of Scottish terminology. He suggested in an email to me that there already appears to be a legal challenge to the watertight safeguards in the similar English legislation. Will this bill be watertight? I do not think so, and many others repeat that observation.

I heard from my constituent Mrs Morris, who is concerned that people who do not support same-sex marriage will suffer in the workplace. Other constituents, such as Ms Young, have concerns that ministers of religion could be prosecuted for refusing to marry same-sex couples.

I asked the cabinet secretary about adoption earlier. I had a letter from my constituent Anne McCool, who said:

"I would ask you to look very carefully at the introduction of safeguards for people who believe in the existing definition of marriage. There is a danger that foster carers or adopters may be classed as unsuitable because of their opposition to same-sex marriage. The government's suggested solutions for fostering guidance is not good enough. I would be grateful if you would highlight the following concerns.

(A) That a clause be inserted in the Bill that views on the nature of marriage should not be considered during the approval process for foster carers and adopters

(B) That a statutory safeguard should be introduced into the Children and Young People (Scotland) Bill to ensure that people think about same-sex marriage does not influence decisions on their applications to be adoptive parents."

As I said earlier, 30 years ago I was an adoptive parent and, because of my views, I do not think that I would have passed.

Margaret McCulloch: Will the member take an intervention?

Richard Lyle: No. I do not have time.

My wife’s minister, the Rev Derek Hughes, recently emailed us stating that, as the bill stands, it will place supporters of traditional marriage in conflict with equality laws. He went on to say that, at the very least, amendments need to be introduced to the bill to protect ministers, chaplains, teachers and registrars, among others, who will find themselves in an uncomfortable situation when forced to choose between their deeply held religious views and the proposed new law.

In light of that, many of my constituents feel that the section of the bill that is meant to be designed to protect those who speak out against same-sex marriage is not fit for purpose and should be amended to specify clearly that it is not against the law to criticise same-sex marriage.

Rest assured that, when the bill is passed, it will be tested to the limit. Adoption will be tested, and people who want to adopt will be questioned on their views, as I suggested earlier.

I remind members about the response to the specific question in the Scottish Government’s consultation on whether same-sex marriage should be allowed. Some 64 per cent of responses from within Scotland said that it should not be. Furthermore, the Scotland for Marriage petition, which opposes the redefinition of marriage, has recently passed the 53,000 signature mark. That demonstrates the enormous strength of feeling on the issue. Based on the figures that have been given to members, Scotland does not support the bill.

The Presiding Officer: I am sorry, but you need to start to wind up.

Richard Lyle: I know that the bill will be passed eventually, but that does not prevent me from voicing my constituents’ concerns. I intend to vote against the bill, conscious of the fact that I have stood up for my constituents and presented their views.

The Presiding Officer: John Finnie is the final member to speak in the open debate. You have four minutes, please.

19:26

John Finnie (Highlands and Islands) (Ind): Thank you, Presiding Officer. I apologise to you and the cabinet secretary for missing the opening remarks.

I am a member of the committee that put together the report, which reflects a wide range of views. It is very important that all voices are heard.

My colleague John Mason, who is also a member of the committee, talked about the importance of the bill in negative terms, if I heard him correctly. For me, there is little more important than equality and fairness and, for that reason, I fully endorse the bill.

A number of members have talked about changed attitudes. That is reflected in attitudes to gender, disability, race and sexual orientation. As a police officer who commenced work in the mid-1970s, I learned laws about homosexuality that seem bizarre and are totally unacceptable nowadays.

The Equality Network’s recent briefing says that marriage equality “matters to LGBT people”. That is very apparent, and we have heard powerful testimonies from Ruth Davidson, Marco Biagi, Kevin Stewart, Jim Eadie and other members.

I have received many communications from people of faith and I hope that I showed that I was respectful of their views. Those views were clearly individual ones. There were individual
I am sure that the faith groups recognise that attitudes have changed, not least to things such as mixed-race marriages and divorcees. If members check the Official Report, they will see that Professor John Curtice talked about the “liberalisation of attitudes even among regular worshippers.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 19 September 2013; c 1518.]

It is clear that there is no requirement to marry same-sex couples and that protection is afforded to faith groups by article 9 of the ECHR. I, for one, commend the legislative co-operation with the UK Government on aspects of that. I hope that faith groups will participate at some future point, and I commend the humanists, Quakers, Unitarians, liberal Jews and others.

Not much has been said about registrars; I thought that more would have been said about them. They are public servants and should complete public duty. We would not tolerate people saying that they would not participate in conducting a mixed-race marriage so, frankly, they need to get on with it.

There has been a lot of talk about the nature of communications. Unlike Margaret Mitchell, I have not found opponents to be inhibited in any way in their contact with me. I have received individually written letters, mass postcards and personal representations. Some people have strange obsessions with physical acts. I found reading about some of them to be very uncomfortable. Like many others today, I got a communication that started, “Dear Frequent Sinner”. Uniquely, however, when I tried to explain things to someone in the range of other parliamentary work, I got back, “Nice work, Satan.” It is important to recognise that there are genuine, strongly held views on both sides and that those remarks are not representative of all the faith organisations.

Other members have touched on the issues that the Scottish Transgender Alliance raised; time will not permit me to go into them. I commend the cabinet secretary for his comment that he will think further about those issues. There are a number of issues and they are challenging to discuss, not least the age aspect, but I was reassured by what I heard from the cabinet secretary at the Equal Opportunities Committee and I look forward to those issues being addressed.

The future will not be without challenges, but it must be without prejudice. The bill will make Scotland fairer and more equal and, I hope, an enlightened and inclusive nation. Equality in love, and the opportunity for that love to be publicly displayed via marriage, must trump intolerance and inequality, and that will happen if we support the general principles of the bill tonight.

19:30

John Lamont (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con): Few matters in politics today have evoked such emotive engagement as the issue of same-sex marriage. Engagement has taken place at all levels and indeed across all parts of Scottish society. It has taken place between constituents and their elected representatives, between those elected representatives and, of course, between the people of Scotland. Wherever that engagement has taken place, we have found passionate, profound and deeply held views on all sides of the debate.

I speak today as a Church of Scotland elder as well as a Conservative. I therefore understand the anxiety that the proposals for same-sex marriage are causing churches and religious groups across Scotland, but I also understand and share the desire for religion to remain relevant in our modern, 21st century, progressive society. Religion is not, after all, afraid of change. It has responded in the past to changing conditions and standards, and the religions that many of us celebrate and enjoy in our lives today are products of the environment that they operate in.

We do not even have to go back as far as Leviticus and its proclamations on footballs made of pig skin, beard trimming and bowl-shaped haircuts to prove that point. In the New Testament, Mark is seemingly unequivocal in his opposition to divorce, as is Timothy in his prohibition of the wearing of pearls and gold. Religion has moved on from those times. Indeed, it has done so repeatedly, time and time again, and when it did it was right that the state recognised and facilitated that evolution. That is a point that I would like to stress.

I have heard opposition to the same-sex marriage proposals on the basis that they represent an unjustified and unwarranted interference in the affairs of religion by the Government, or by the state. That could not be further from being the case. If religions do not want to embrace this gradual tide of change, they will not be forced to do so. If anything, the bill will give religions greater freedom and greater autonomy by allowing them to pursue the agenda and the pace of change that they believe to be right when it comes to same-sex marriage.

If the change is no change, that would be, in my view, a sad state of affairs. I believe that our country, our society and our religions would be worse off for that, but I recognise that it is a religious and not a political decision. Our role as politicians here today is limited to deciding whether we should enable that process of change, whatever it may be, to occur. I believe that such change is not only right but inevitable. Religion and the church do not exist in a vacuum. Indeed, they cannot if they are to remain relevant in our society and to continue to act as a credible force for good in our world.

That is why I urge those who oppose the proposals that we are debating tonight to seriously and critically examine the reasons for their opposition to same-sex marriage and to ask themselves whether they want their religion, their church and their society to fail to embrace change, the time for which has surely come.

Patrick Harvie: Will the member also acknowledge that most marriages that are conducted in Scotland are already civil or indeed conducted by the Humanist Society, and so even those who have concerns about the impact on religion should be supporting the bill because of the opportunity for people to have civil marriages on the basis of equality?

John Lamont: That is my point. The bill allows the religions and the churches to opt in or opt out as they require and as they want, and to develop at their own pace.

It remains my view that the proposal is about consistency more than it is about equality. Marriage is permitted for one set of individuals, and there has to be a very good reason if we are to exclude another set of individuals. I believe that, in order to be consistent, and because society accepts same-sex relationships, there is no good reason to exclude them from marriage—certainly not on the basis of what sex the person whom someone falls in love with happens to be.

When I travel around my constituency and visit schools or meet young constituents, the idea of opposition to the bill is met with what I can only describe as bafflement. My experience has been that the younger generation supports the proposal's aims in overwhelming numbers. If religion does not evolve, and if the state does not allow it to evolve when it wants to do so, we risk excluding those younger voices from a tradition that is woven intrinsically into the basic fabric of our society. In his eloquent speech in the debate on same-sex marriage in the House of Lords, the Earl of Courtown warned of the danger and implored his fellow peers to "allow the next generation not to reject the traditions of yesteryear but to build the traditions of the future."—[Official Report, House of Lords, 3 June 2013; c 1042.]

His words are as true here as they were in Westminster.

Our society has found itself at similar crossroads before now. In the past 20 years we have debated, passionately and often robustly, section 28, the lowering of the age of consent, gay adoptions and civil partnerships. In each case, I am proud that our progressive democratic tradition eventually prevailed. Today, we in the Scottish Parliament have the opportunity to add our voices to that tradition and the privilege of contributing to our society's progress.

I will vote for the bill. It is the right thing to do for our country, it is the right thing to do for our church, and it is the right thing to do to strengthen the wonderful institution of marriage.

19:36

Jackie Baillie: In the main, this has been a good and mature debate. I was struck by many of the speeches, as I am sure that many members were. Some members spoke from a very personal perspective and others made humorous speeches. I have no time to mention them all, but I will attempt to cover some of the territory.

Ruth Davidson was right when she said that marriage is a good thing—I have been married for almost 30 years, and I keep telling myself that it is a good thing. She was right to talk about the value of extending marriage as an institution. She made a personal and powerful contribution to the debate, which should give us all pause for thought. What we do tonight matters for the future nature of our country and for our young people.

Marco Biagi talked about how he felt as he grew up. I know the area where he grew up, and it can sometimes be pretty unforgiving. He talked about how he was made to feel different and somehow less deserving. His testimony of his personal journey richly informed our debate.

I will disagree with Mary Fee, which is always a dangerous thing to do. She said that attitudes are changing at a snail's pace. I think that she is wrong. Society's attitudes are changing much faster than we are able to keep up with them. In the 2002 Scottish social attitudes survey, 41 per cent of people were in favour of same-sex marriage. By 2010, a mere eight years later, 61 per cent favoured same-sex marriage. A 20 per cent shift in opinion, on any issue, in such a short time is hugely significant.

John Mason talked about the importance of tolerating different points of view. Our debates in the Parliament are often robust, and rightly so, but we need to move forward together. His concern, which is shared by some people inside and outside the Parliament, is that the protections are not sufficiently robust. I might well think that they are sufficiently robust, but I know that the cabinet secretary will want to look at the matter, so that we are assured that the provisions that he makes with the UK Government to amend the Equality Act 2010 are indeed sufficiently robust.

However, I am mindful that in the 10 European countries that I listed earlier—the Netherlands, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Norway, Sweden, Iceland, Denmark, France, and, most recently, England and Wales—which have all passed same-sex marriage laws, no religious or belief body or celebrant has been forced to conduct a same-sex marriage. I accept that same-sex marriage legislation was introduced only recently in England and Wales, but no such claim can be made of the other countries. Same-sex marriage legislation was passed in the Netherlands in 2001, in Belgium in 2003 and in Spain in 2005—I could go on, but just in the countries that I mentioned the laws were passed 12 years ago, 10 years ago and eight years ago respectively, which is quite a period over which to be able to judge whether the protections are sufficiently robust and whether any church or celebrant has been forced to do something.

John Mason: I take Jackie Baillie’s point with regard to marriage specifically, but will she accept that some of the assurances for adoption agencies have proved not to be solid over time?

Jackie Baillie: Many countries are moving in the direction of wanting to ensure that there is more equality and are taking appropriate steps forward, but ultimately it is a matter of equality. Of course we need to ensure that protections are in place, but that does not remove the need to ensure that we operate as an equal nation.

Some members, such as Elaine Smith, Richard Lyle and Margaret Mitchell, have spoken against the bill. I respect their right to hold a different view, but I think that they are—quite simply—wrong. Margaret McCluskey spoke about agreeing to differ, and Joan McAlpine rightly picked up on that theme.

Our society is actually quite mature. We do not always agree with one another—one needs only to look at the chamber to see the truth of that—but we can walk out of the chamber and still work together.

Bob Doris (Glasgow) (SNP): Will the member give way?

Jackie Baillie: I will in a moment.

Joan McAlpine was right to reflect that our society will do just that. We are tolerant of one another, and we come to accommodations with one another—that is life, and that is how we live it.

I am happy to give way to Bob Doris.

Bob Doris: I have listened with interest to the vast majority of this afternoon’s debate. Does Ms Baillie agree that the debate is not about the competing interests of traditional and modern views of marriage? The reason why I will vote yes this evening is that this piece of legislation allows everyone’s views of marriage to be reflected in statute in Scotland.

Jackie Baillie: I could not agree more. Jim Eadie, like Bob Doris, set out—in a very powerful speech—how the bill will expand freedom for belief organisations that want to marry same-sex couples, and how it will strengthen marriage. I agree completely with Bob Doris, which must be a first for him.

Drew Smith and Patrick Harvie spoke about repealing section 28 and our pride in doing so; I thank Drew for making me feel old and reminding me that he was at school then. He is right to remember that the repeal of section 28 was not without consequences—often serious—for members of the LGBT community, as they had to deal with some of the hysteria and homophobic bullying that surrounded it. We need to ensure that that does not happen again.

James Dornan mentioned the bill’s ability to strengthen marriage and spoke about the experience of his brother Michael; we all look forward to receiving our invitations to the wedding in Lisbon, now that we know about it.

The debate has been extraordinarily interesting. Elaine Murray and Patrick Harvie remarked on how extraordinary it was that there was agreement across the chamber—indeed, Patrick noted that it was probably the first time that he has applauded Ruth Davidson with such enthusiasm. That may well be true for many of us. It is not often that I find myself in complete agreement with Alex Neil and Mark McDonald—and even, for goodness’ sake, Kevin Stewart; it must be a truly historic day.

Elaine Murray was right to remind us about the glorious diversity of human beings, even those whom she described as being vertically challenged. We are all different, and that is what makes us all so interesting. Whatever that difference is, we should be tolerant of one another, but we should respect and celebrate our difference, because that is the tapestry of our nation.

For me, and for many members on all sides of the chamber, the legislation is about equality, fairness, social justice and values that I believe we all share. I know that some may be hesitating tonight, but I ask them to think for a moment. What if your son or daughter is unsure about their sexuality? What if they have a same-sex partner? Do you really want to deny them the opportunity to marry? I hope not.

I urge all members to support the general principles of the bill to ensure that the next generation can marry the person they love.
The Presiding Officer: I call on Alex Neil to wind up the debate. Cabinet secretary, you can continue until 7.56 pm.

19:44

Alex Neil: That will not be a problem, Presiding Officer.

I begin by reminding the Parliament what the Equal Opportunities Committee said in its report. The committee hoped that members of the Parliament would “approach the Stage 1 decision with the same dignified tenor as our evidence sessions and with due respect for a diversity of views.”

Everybody who has spoken has tried to live up to that ideal, and I think that this has been one of the most powerful debates that the Parliament has ever held. It is a real tribute to the Parliament.

We have heard some wonderful speeches, from Ruth Davidson and many others, some of which have been very powerful indeed, putting the case for the bill. There have also been powerful speeches putting the case against.

I will begin by dealing with two fairly fundamental points that have been raised by those who do not feel that they can vote for the bill tonight. First, I emphasise that there are essentially two aspects to marriage: there is the religious aspect and there is the state law aspect. What we are dealing with tonight is the state law aspect of marriage. We believe that the state should recognise marriage between same-sex couples as well as between mixed-sex couples.

The bill does not in any way interfere with any religious or belief body's approach to marriage. Indeed, there is only one way in which it even touches on it, and that is that churches and other religious organisations such as the Unitarians and the Quakers will now be able to have same-sex marriages, which they want to carry out, carried out on their premises under their religion. Those marriages will now be recognised by the state. Beyond that, the proposed legislation has no other impact on marriage as carried out by, defined by, exercised by or recognised by such bodies.

Secondly, we are not redefining marriage. I refer to Mary Fee’s point, and I have heard the First Minister say this—and many of us would agree: the bill does not in any way redefine our marriage. It does extend the eligibility for marriage, which is the key point of the proposed legislation. People in Scotland who have been ineligible for marriage will now be eligible for marriage and for that marriage, and the love that it represents, to be recognised by the state and by those religious bodies—and only those religious bodies—who want to recognise those marriages out of their own choice.

Jamie McGrigor (Highlands and Islands) (Con): I thank the minister for his usual magnanimity in allowing me an intervention.

I wish to put down a marker in this debate. A substantial number of my constituents in the Highlands and Islands have expressed to me their concerns that sections that are designed to protect teachers, parents, ministers, foster parents, registrars and public sector workers who hold what I could call traditional views will not be strong enough and that they might be open to legal challenge, including at European level.

What specific guarantees can the minister give that legal safeguards will be watertight? My constituents are very anxious for that reassurance. Can the minister give it to them?

Alex Neil: Absolutely. Let me explain exactly why.

We are giving four sets of guarantees. First, there are the guarantees in the proposed legislation itself. Probably the biggest single guarantee is that, in order to carry out same-sex marriage, any religious organisation, belief organisation or celebrant has to opt in. It is their decision to opt in, and they obviously cannot be forced to opt in.

That is the case not just for the organisation. As the bill states, if, for example, the Church of Scotland changed its mind and agreed to recognise, participate in and carry out same-sex marriages, but its own celebrants—its own ministers—did not wish to do so, those ministers would still have the right not to opt in.

The rights of the organisation, religious body or belief body, as well as those of the individual celebrant, are absolutely guaranteed under the bill, which is totally compatible with the European convention on human rights. If it had not been, the Presiding Officer would not have approved it as competent proposed legislation.

Secondly—and on top of that—there are the amendments that we have agreed with Jamie McGrigor’s own UK Government. Maria Miller and I have been working very closely on this matter, and we have agreed amendments to the Equality Act 2010 that will underline all the relevant protections for those who take a different view or do not want to participate in same-sex marriages. In fact, some aspects actually go slightly further than the protections that were built in during the passage of the UK legislation.

The third protection is in relation to education. My friend the Cabinet Secretary for Education and Lifelong Learning is at this very moment consulting on the legislation’s impact on educational guidance. He will announce the outcome of that consultation within the next two to three months.
The final protection is the Lord Advocate’s guidance to all prosecutors in Scotland, which has already been published and which absolutely, explicitly and unequivocally guarantees the rights of those people who are opposed to the principle of same-sex marriage and those who do not wish to participate in or carry out such marriages.

In short, we are providing not just one but four sets of protections specifically for this legislation. I believe that to be a very reasonable balance between extending the freedom and rights of those who are entitled to marry and extending and guaranteeing protections for those who disagree with the policy and do not wish to carry out same-sex marriages.

Annabel Goldie (West Scotland) (Con): Like John Lamont, I speak as an elder of the Church of Scotland and I propose to vote for the bill this evening.

I am concerned about the level of protection afforded to, say, an individual celebrant from a religious community that has opted in but who chooses to opt out. As I read it, the relevant amendment to the Equality Act 2010 says that a person controlling the use of religious or belief premises will not contravene the act by refusing to allow the premises to be used for a same-sex marriage or a civil partnership.

However, we might be talking not about a person within the Church of Scotland but about a collective entity such as a congregational board. It might also be that, after a request to participate in a same-sex marriage is declined, a subsequent request to use the church premises for a reception is also declined. Is that also covered by this protection?

Alex Neil: Yes, it is and I must also inform the chamber that I intend to issue the legal text of the proposed amendments to the 2010 act before the completion of stage 2. Obviously, we have to agree the legal text with the lawyers in London as well as the lawyers here, but if members look at the protections in our bill alongside the text of the amendments to the 2010 act, they will see that the protections are unequivocally unchallengeable with regard to the individuals and the churches in question. Indeed, the protections extend to organists, who are essential to a church ceremony. If an organist turns round and says, “I refuse to play the organ at a same-sex marriage ceremony”, they, too, will be protected from any prosecution. This is the most comprehensive set of protections imaginable for any piece of legislation that we have ever introduced.

As a result—and I thank Jackie Baillie for emphasising this point—I think that we have achieved a balanced package. On the one hand, we are extending the freedom and rights of those who wish to engage in same-sex marriage and, on the other, we are putting in place all these protections for people who are either against it in principle or who do not want to participate.

Hanzala Malik (Glasgow) (Lab): Will the cabinet secretary give way?

Alex Neil: Of course I will.

The Presiding Officer: As briefly as possible, please, Mr Malik.

Hanzala Malik: What protection can you guarantee if someone challenges our decision in the European Court and we lose?

Alex Neil: We are very clear that there is no chance of a successful appeal to the European Court. Apart from anything else, the European convention on human rights does not give someone the right to same-sex marriage in the first place. There are also other reasons, which I do not have time to go into tonight, why we are absolutely sure that any appeal to the European Court would not be successful.

In summary, I believe that the bill is—as Jackie Baillie and others have said—a balanced package that allows freedom and rights to be exercised by those who at present cannot exercise them, without in any way diminishing or threatening the rights and freedoms of those who take a different point of view.

More importantly, as many speakers have pointed out, it is not the text of the bill that matters but the message that it sends out about 21st-century Scotland. We are joining those 16 states in America, those nine European countries, our friends south of the border and all the other countries, including South Africa, that have already passed legislation to provide a modern framework of legislation relating to marriage that recognises the equality of all our people. As Rabbie said, we are all Jock Tamson’s bairns, and all the bairns are entitled to exactly the same treatment throughout our law, now including marriage law.

This is a historic day for Scotland. Future generations will look back and congratulate the Parliament on passing this progressive piece of legislation. [Applause.]
The Presiding Officer: The next question is, that motion S4M-08327, in the name of Alex Neil, on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill, be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Baillie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baker, Richard (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Campbell, Roderick (North East Fife) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
The result of the division is: For 98, Against 15, Abstentions 5.

Motion agreed to,
That the Parliament agrees to the general principles of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

[Applause.]

Meeting closed at 20:10.
Background

1. The Committee reported on the delegated powers in the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill\(^1\) on 2 October in its 51st report of 2013.

2. The response from the Scottish Government to the report is reproduced at the annex.

Scottish Government response

Section 8(2)(g) – change of qualifying civil partnership to marriage

3. Section 8 provides for the conversion of a qualifying civil partnership to marriage in the form of an administrative process rather than through a full marriage ceremony.

4. The administrative process will be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers. Section 8(2)(g) allows Scottish Ministers to make provision in those regulations about the effect of a conversion through an administrative procedure. Section 9 of the Bill sets out the effect of converting a qualifying civil partnership to marriage through a marriage ceremony.

5. In oral evidence to the Committee, the Scottish Government stated its intention that the effect of either of the aforementioned routes to marriage should be exactly the same.

6. In its stage 1 report, therefore, the Committee questioned why the power at section 8(2)(g) was necessary. The Committee considered that, given the Government’s stated intention that there should be no difference in the effect of either route to marriage, section 9 could have been applied to both types of converted marriage.

---

\(^1\) Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill [as introduced] available here: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Marriage%20and%20Civil%20Partnership%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b36s4-introd.pdf%20Bill/b36s4-introd.pdf)
7. In its response, the Government indicated that it would lodge amendments at stage 2 which would remove the power at section 8(2)(g), confirming that the powers at section 9 could be applied to both types of converted marriage.

8. The Government also confirmed that it would bring forward amendments which would set out details of the effects of changing a civil partnership to a marriage through the administrative route on the face of the Bill rather than through subordinate legislation.

Section 28: renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate

9. Section 28(2)(h) allows Scottish Ministers to make provision about the effect of entering into a renewed marriage or a renewed civil partnership following on from the issue of a full gender recognition certificate (which legally recognises a change in gender) to one or both of the parties to a marriage or both parties to a civil partnership.

10. In oral evidence to the Committee, the Scottish Government clarified that a renewed marriage or civil partnership ceremony is not intended to have any distinct legal effect and that the parties involved would remain in the same legal relationship following such a ceremony. In its report therefore, the Committee invited the Scottish Government to reflect on whether the power was necessary.

11. In response to the report, the Government agreed that the power at section 28(2)(h) is unnecessary, and committed to bringing forward amendments at stage 2 to remove it.

Schedule 2 (paragraph 6) (new section 5D of the Gender Recognition Act 2004): change of gender or married person or civil partners: additional circumstances

12. Persons who wish to change gender may do so by applying for recognition of their new gender under the Gender Recognition Act 2004. A person’s change in gender is only legally recognised when a full gender recognition certificate is used under that Act. New sections 4(2)(c) and 5C of the 2004 Act introduced by the Bill will provide that a full gender recognition certificate can only be issued to a person in a civil partnership where both parties to the partnership qualify for recognition of their change in gender at the same time. This is because if only one party to the partnership changes gender the parties will be of opposite sex; and members of the opposite sex cannot form a civil partnership.

13. However, the Bill provides that if the civil partners convert their civil partnership to a same sex marriage prior to the change in gender of one of the parties, a full gender recognition certificate can be issued to that party provided their spouse consents to the marriage continuing.

14. New section 5D of the 2004 Act, which is inserted by paragraph 6 of schedule 2 to the Bill, is intended to provide for this process to take place via an administrative route rather than a formal ceremony. This will be set out in subordinate legislation but the power to issue a full certificate is not restricted to the specific circumstances of administrative marriage. Rather the power allows the Scottish Ministers “to provide for the issue of a full gender recognition certificate in additional circumstances to those specified in section 4(2)(c) or 5C. The power includes the ability to make provision about the effect of issuing a full gender recognition certificate to the applicant. Subsection (4) specifically explains that this can include provision for changing the civil partnership into a marriage.

15. The Committee was concerned that, although the power may be intended to make provision for the issue of gender recognition certificates following conversion to a marriage through an administrative procedure, it is not restricted in this way. In its report therefore, the Committee questioned whether it was appropriate that Scottish Ministers could determine any additional circumstances in which a full gender recognition certificate could be issued. In other words the Committee considered that the power was too widely drawn and in particular greatly exceeded the scope required by Ministers to deal with the issue in question.

16. At a broader level of principle the Committee considered the issue of gender recognition certificates to be a matter of significance and sensitivity which requires a high level of parliamentary scrutiny and consideration. The Committee therefore questioned whether Ministers should be given the power at all and stated that it would prefer that the Parliament dealt with the matter in the Bill.

17. However, in reaching this view the Committee also recognised that it may not be possible for the Government to resolve the practical difficulties which it alluded to in its evidence within the legislative timetable which the Government had set. Therefore if the Government was not able to resolve the matter by amendment during the passage of the Bill the Committee recommended that a very high level of scrutiny be applied to the powers. It recommended that the power be subject to the affirmative procedure in all cases and that there should be a statutory requirement for consultation on a draft instrument.

18. In its response to the Committee, the Scottish Government stated that it did not intend to set out these details on the face of the Bill. It did commit, however, to consulting further with stakeholders in order to determine whether the process could be streamlined.

19. The Government also stated its intention to lodge amendments at stage 2 which would require Ministers to carry out a public consultation on any draft orders made under section 5D. Further details of the intended consultation are set out in the Government’s response to the Committee’s report which is reproduced at the annex of this paper.

20. Finally, following a recommendation by the Committee, the Scottish Government agreed to lodge amendments at stage 2 which would make all orders under section 5D subject to the affirmative procedure.

Conclusion

21. Members are invited to make any comments they wish on the Bill at this stage. Given the Scottish Government’s commitment to bring forward amendments, it is probable that the Committee will have a further opportunity to consider the Bill after stage 2.
Recommendation

22. Members are invited to note the Scottish Government's response on the Bill and to make any comments they wish at this stage.
Correspondence from the Scottish Government, dated 12 November 2013:

Section 8(2)(g): change of qualifying civil partnership to marriage

1. The Government agrees with points made by the Committee at paragraph 21 of the report. As the Committee indicates, the Government’s intention is that the effect of changing a civil partnership to a marriage through the administrative route will be the same as changing a civil partnership to a marriage through undergoing a marriage ceremony. Therefore, the type of provision contained in section 9 can also be applied in relation to marriages established under procedures set up under section 8.

2. As a result, the Government will lodge amendments at Stage 2 to remove section 8(2)(g) and to make provision in the Bill itself on the effect of changing a civil partnership to a marriage through the administrative route.

Section 28: renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate

3. As the Committee indicates, the renewed marriage or civil partnership ceremony is not intended to have any distinct legal effect. Paragraphs 9 and 10 of schedule 2 to the Bill provide that the continuity of marriages and civil partnerships are unaffected by the issuing of a full gender recognition certificate.

4. Therefore, the Government agrees that the power in section 28 to make provision through regulations about the effect of entering into a renewed marriage or civil partnership ceremony should be removed. The Government will lodge amendments at Stage 2 accordingly.

Schedule 2 (paragraph 6) (new section 5D of the Gender Recognition Act 2004): change of gender or married person or civil partners: additional circumstances

5. The Government does not consider it can accept the recommendation at paragraph 45 of the report. We have had discussions with stakeholders on additional procedures that could apply to establish a more streamlined procedure for persons in a civil partnership to obtain a full gender recognition certificate. These discussions will continue further and, in addition, the Government would wish to consult more widely.

6. However, the Government does agree that the power is significant. Therefore, following paragraph 47 of the report, the Government will lodge amendments at Stage 2 so that all orders made under the new section 5D are subject to the affirmative procedure. As the Committee itself noted, this means that the potential amendment outlined at paragraph 48 has been superseded.
7. The Government will also lodge amendments so that there is a statutory requirement for the Scottish Ministers to carry out a public consultation in relation to a copy of a draft order made under the new section 5D. The Government intends to make a specific commitment to consult the Gender Recognition Panel on draft orders (in addition to the existing requirement to consult the Registrar General for Scotland) and to consult such other persons, or groups of persons, as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate. This latter group would include bodies representing persons seeking gender recognition and would also include bodies representing family lawyers.

8. Consultation on draft orders would follow usual Scottish Government practice for public consultations. This means that:

- The consultation will be published on the Government’s website.
- There will be a minimum of 12 weeks for the consultation period.
- The responses will be published on the Government’s website (subject to any confidentiality requests and to redacting any defamatory or offensive comments).
- An analysis of the responses will be published.
- A report on the consultation will be published.
Present:

Richard Baker          Bruce Crawford (Committee Substitute)
Mike MacKenzie         Margaret McCulloch
Stuart McMillan (Deputy Convener) John Scott
Stewart Stevenson

Apologies were received from Nigel Don (Convener).

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Scottish Government’s response to its Stage 1 Report.
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: After Stage 1

11:15

The Deputy Convener: Agenda item 7 is consideration of the Scottish Government’s response to the committee’s stage 1 report on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. Members have seen the briefing paper and the response from the Scottish Government. Do members have any comments?

Members: No.

The Deputy Convener: Are we content to note the response and, if necessary, to reconsider the bill after stage 2?

Members indicated agreement.
Introduction

1. This paper provides the Government response to the Stage 1 report by the Equal Opportunities Committee of the Scottish Parliament on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. The Government is also taking this opportunity to update the Committee on some issues arising.

Protections and freedom of expression

General

2. As requested by the Committee at paragraph 206, the Government will take account of views expressed by consultees in relation to protections and freedom of expression. The Government does consider that we have the balance right in relation to furthering the rights of LGBT people and protecting those people and bodies with religious beliefs and faith who have expressed concerns about same sex marriage.

Equality Act amendment

3. Separately, the Government is providing the Committee with a draft of the planned amendments to the Equality Act 2010, and an accompanying Explanatory Note, on protection of religious and belief celebrants and others.¹

Education guidance

4. The Committee drew the Parliament’s attention to the views expressed as regards the relationship between the Bill and public services, including educational matters. On education, the Committee will be aware that the Government recently sought views on draft guidance on relationships education.²

5. We had just over 60 responses from organisations and individuals, primarily organisations.

6. The two main areas that attracted attention are:

6.1 Paragraph 10 on teachers, children and young people not being made to do something against their conscience.

6.2 Paragraph 16 on parental right of withdrawal from specific lessons on sexual health education.

¹ The statement agreed between the UK and Scottish Governments on the amendments to the Equality Act 2010 is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Resource/0042/00426318.pdf
² The draft guidance is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2013/09/7899
7. Officials have met with everyone who requested a meeting, including:

- Steven McCrossan, Equalities Officer at the Educational Institute of Scotland.
- Michael McGrath, Director of Scottish Catholic Education Service.
- Members of the Sexual Health Promotion Specialists within the NHS.
- Members of the Executive Leads for NHS Health Boards.
- Scottish Marriage Care.
- LGBT Youth Scotland.
- CARE Scotland.
- Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People.

8. We are starting to analyse the responses. We will discuss the responses and possible changes to the draft with colleagues in Education Scotland and Health Scotland. We will go back to key stakeholders in the New Year to discuss potential changes to the draft.

Registration of celebrants

Religious and belief marriage

9. The Government has considered the point raised by the Scottish Council of Jewish Communities (SCoJeC) on references to religious and belief marriage. As recorded in paragraph 208 of the Committee’s report, SCoJeC suggested that references in the legislation should be changed from “religious or belief marriage” to “religious marriage or belief marriage”. The Government outlined the reasons for the current approach, which was adopted following the consultation on the draft Bill, in the Policy Memorandum for the Bill. As paragraph 209 of the Committee’s report summarised, paragraphs 19 and 20 of the Policy Memorandum said that:

- In some cases, it can be difficult to determine whether a body is a religious body or a belief body. This suggested that it would be logical to have a religious or belief category.
- A number of those responding to the consultation on the draft Bill suggested that it would be confusing to have three categories, which was a further reason for having two categories rather than three.

10. More detail on points raised on this issue by those responding to the consultation on the draft Bill can be found in the analysis of responses.

11. The Humanist Society Scotland (HSS) have commented to the Government on the potential change to the Bill to refer to “religious marriage or belief marriage”. HSS have concerns with this approach as it could be seen as implying that there are

---

3 The Policy Memorandum is at http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Marriage%20and%20Civil%20Partnership%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b36s4-introd-pm.pdf

4 The analysis is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2013/06/2782/5 – see paragraphs 4.10 to 4.16 for the comments on belief ceremonies.
legal differences between a “religious marriage” and a “belief marriage”. HSS also consider that there should be a specific reference to belief celebrants in the Bill, in the same way as there are references to religious titles such as minister and priest.

12. The Government considers that it is difficult to reach a designation which suits all religious and belief bodies. The Government’s view is that the current designation in the Bill strikes the right balance and ensures respect for religious and belief bodies. Any changes might be contentious and it is unlikely that any changes would be agreed by all. Under these circumstances, therefore, the Government is not planning any amendments to the Bill in respect of the designation of religious or belief ceremonies.

Other points

13. The Government is continuing to consider other points raised by SCoJeC and the Church of Scotland in evidence given to Committee. In particular, SCoJeC raised issues about celebrants recognised by different branches of Judaism (where there are different views on same sex marriage) and about the temporary authorisation of celebrants. The Church of Scotland have suggested that the Bill should be amended so that celebrants are “recognised” rather than “authorised”.

Different branches of Judaism

14. SCoJeC drew attention to section 10 of the Bill which inserts new section 8(1B)(a)(i) into the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977. One potential concern is that a celebrant “recognised” by a body will not be protected. SCoJeC gave the example of an Orthodox Rabbi recognised by a Liberal Jewish community as entitled to solemnise same sex marriages on their behalf, even though the Orthodox Jewish community by which the Rabbi was employed was firmly opposed to the celebration of same sex marriage. SCoJeC noted the same issue could arise in relation to the registration of civil partnership.

15. The Government considers the proposed amendments to the Equality Act 2010 will protect the celebrant. A key aim of the amendment is to provide that a religious or belief celebrant does not contravene section 29 of the 2010 Act (on discrimination in the provision of services) by refusing to solemnise a same sex marriage or register a civil partnership for the reason that the marriage or civil partnership is a legally recognised union of a same sex couple.

16. In addition, section 10 of the Bill inserts section 8(1D) into the 1977 Act. Section 8(1D)(c) provides that the Bill does not impose a duty on any person to apply for temporary authorisation to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex. Section 8(1D)(d) provides that nothing in the Bill imposes a duty on any person who is an approved celebrant in relation to marriages between persons of the same sex to solemnise such marriages. Section 94A(3) of the Civil Partnership Act 2004, inserted by section 22(13) of the Bill, makes similar provision in respect of civil partnerships.

17. We have also considered this scenario from the perspective of a religious body. If an Orthodox Rabbi chose to solemnise a same sex marriage on behalf of a Liberal Jewish community even though the Orthodox Jewish community is opposed to same sex marriage, we consider that that would be a matter between the Rabbi and the Orthodox Jewish community which employed him.

Temporary celebrants

18. On temporary authorisation, SCoJeC have raised a point about a same sex couple who wish a Rabbi from abroad to solemnise their marriage. Such a Rabbi would probably be authorised under section 12 of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977. SCoJeC noted similar issues could arise in the registration of civil partnerships.

19. Section 12 of the Bill amends section 12 of the 1977 Act. SCoJeC have noted the requirement (in what will become section 12(1C) of the 1977 Act) for a person seeking authorisation to be “a member” of a body either prescribed by regulations so its celebrants can solemnise same sex marriage or of a body which has nominated members to the Registrar General to solemnise same sex marriages. SCoJeC have noted that some small bodies or bodies based abroad may not be prescribed and may not have nominated members.

20. Authorisations under section 12 of the 1977 Act fall into two categories. Under section 12(1)(a), the Registrar General may authorise a person to solemnise “a marriage or marriages specified in the authorisation”. Section 12(1)(b) covers authorisation of “marriages during such period as shall be specified in the authorisation”.

21. The requirements in new section 12(1C) apply only to authorisations for a period under section 12(1)(b) of the 1977 Act. They do not apply to authorisations to solemnise a specified marriage or marriages under section 12(1)(a) of the 1977 Act.

22. This means that under the Bill as drafted, a Rabbi from outwith Scotland who wished to solemnise a marriage or marriages in Scotland could seek authorisation under section 12(1)(a) of the 1977 Act even though he or she is not a member of a body prescribed to solemnise same sex marriage in Scotland or of a body which has nominated members to the Registrar General to solemnise same sex marriages. Similarly, section 94E(1)(a) of the Civil Partnership Act 2004, inserted by section 22(13) of the Bill, makes similar provision on the temporary authorisation of religious or belief celebrants to register civil partnerships.

23. The Registrar General’s usual practice when a celebrant seeks authorisation under section 12(1)(a) is to ask for letters of support from the body of which the celebrant is a member. He proposes to continue in that approach following the introduction of same sex marriage and the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships.

---

5 In this regard, the Scottish Government notes that the fourth bullet of paragraph 92 of the Policy Memorandum could have been clearer. The Government apologises for any confusion caused.
Recognising or authorising celebrants

24. The Church of Scotland have suggested that it would provide greater protection from legal challenges if celebrants were “recognised” to solemnise marriages (and register civil partnerships) rather than “authorised”. The Government is considering this point further but, as indicated to Committee when we gave oral evidence, our initial view is that the proposal would not make a practical difference\(^6\).

The status of the Church of Scotland

25. The Committee asked for the Government’s view on the opinion expressed by the Humanist Society Scotland that the treatment in marriage law of the Church of Scotland affords it a privileged status.

26. There are a variety of ways in which celebrants can be authorised to solemnise marriage. The Church of Scotland is named in the 1977 Act which means that its ministers\(^7\) are automatically authorised to solemnise opposite sex marriage. This reflects the Church’s status as a national Church. Other celebrants are authorised through belonging to a religious body prescribed in regulations; through being nominated by a religious body to the Registrar General; or through being granted temporary authorisation by the Registrar General.

27. When a religious or belief marriage ceremony takes place, it presumably does not matter to the couple how the celebrant was authorised.

28. The system of authorisation in the 1977 Act is replicated for the solemnisation of same sex marriage and the registration of civil partnerships except that the Church of Scotland is not named in the Bill in respect of the solemnisation of same sex marriage and the registration of civil partnerships. This reflects that the Church of Scotland has indicated that it would not intend to take part in the solemnisation of same sex marriage and the registration of civil partnerships. If the Church of Scotland should subsequently decide to take part – and any such decision would be entirely a matter for the Church of Scotland – celebrants could be authorised by, for example, being nominated by the Church to the Registrar General.

29. The Bill does allow Ministers to introduce qualifying requirements for religious and belief bodies to meet before their celebrants can solemnise marriage. The key aim of the qualifying requirements is to ensure that marriages are conducted in a dignified and solemn manner – not for profit or gain – and to tackle sham and forced marriages. As noted in paragraph 69 of the Policy Memorandum, the qualifying requirements will not formally apply to the Church of Scotland in relation to opposite sex marriage given their position in the 1977 Act.

\(^7\) And, in future, by virtue of section 18 of the Bill, deacons.
30. However, although the Church of Scotland disagree with the Government on many aspects of the Bill, they share the Government’s determination to tackle forced and sham marriage and they agree that marriage ceremonies in Scotland should be carried out with due solemnity and dignity. Therefore, the Government would intend to work with the Church of Scotland – and other denominations - when we consider the details in relation to the qualifying requirements. The Church of Scotland carry out the largest number of religious marriage ceremonies in Scotland and the Government would certainly want to listen to their practical knowledge and expertise in this area.

Civil partnerships

31. The Committee recommended at paragraph 247 that if same sex marriage is introduced, couples in civil partnerships registered outwith Scotland should be able to change their relationship to marriage.

32. The Government has carefully considered this issue, which is not straightforward. The Government does consider that any changes in this area would involve persons in a non-Scottish civil partnership marrying in Scotland to change their relationship (i.e. under section 7 of the Bill) rather than using the administrative route (i.e. under section 8 of the Bill). It would not be possible to use the administrative route as the original paperwork for the civil partnership would not be held in Scotland.

33. On the one hand, the Government recognises the points raised about the difficulties a couple resident in Scotland might face if they are in a civil partnership registered outwith Scotland; wish to change their relationship to a marriage but the jurisdiction where the civil partnership was registered has not made arrangements so that civil partnerships can change to marriages. The Government appreciates the points made about the potential need to dissolve the civil partnership (even though the relationship has not broken down); about potential succession issues if one of the couple should happen to die between dissolution and marrying; about potential immigration issues and about the potential impact on transgender people.

34. On the other hand, the Government has concerns about the possibility of a couple having two civil statuses (i.e. married and in a civil partnership), and the potential confusion this could cause for the couple themselves. If the Bill were amended to allow persons in a non-Scottish civil partnership to change that relationship to a marriage by marrying in Scotland, we would not be able to make any provision on how the relationship would be regarded in the original jurisdiction: that would be a matter for the home jurisdiction.

35. There is no guarantee that jurisdictions outwith Scotland would recognise that the civil partnership has changed to a marriage.

---

8 Written evidence to the House of Commons when the UK Bill was going through outlines issues which can arise when a couple have two civil statuses: http://www.publications.parliament.uk/pa/cm201213/cmpublic/marriage/memo/m18.htm
36. It is also not clear how such a marriage would be recognised within the UK. For example, if a couple in a civil partnership from Northern Ireland changed their relationship to a marriage in Scotland and then moved to England or Wales, the UK Government might face a difficult choice as to whether to recognise the relationship as a Northern Ireland civil partnership or a Scottish marriage. (There may also be a question of whether the UK Government would recognise the relationship as a civil partnership or as a marriage for reserved purposes in Scotland).

37. The couple might also be committing bigamy depending on what the legislation where they entered into their civil partnership provides. (It does appear that they would not be committing bigamy under Scots law).

38. In addition, if the couple subsequently divorced in Scotland, it is uncertain if that divorce would be recognised in the home jurisdiction if the home jurisdiction continued to recognise the original civil partnership rather than the marriage. It is also possible to imagine a scenario, if a couple split up, of a divorce action taking place in Scotland and an action to dissolve the original civil partnership taking place in the home jurisdiction.

39. The Scottish Government also needs to consider the views of the home jurisdiction. This is a challenging issue. The wishes of the couple and the views of the home jurisdiction may be different. Both are entitled to be heard. If the Scottish Government should allow marriages to take place in Scotland of persons in non-Scottish civil partnerships and the other jurisdiction objected, that might, at least in theory, raise issues about the general recognition of Scottish marriages outwith Scotland.

40. As indicated in oral evidence to Committee, the start date for any marriage established by changing a non-Scottish civil partnership might be different to the start date of the original civil partnership. In particular, civil partnership legislation was commenced in the UK on 5 December 2005. As a result, it seems unlikely that we could recognise any period in an overseas same sex relationship that was before 5 December 2005.

41. There would also be a need to consider whether Scotland should be prepared to allow all same sex civil partners from anywhere in the world to marry here or just those who are ordinarily resident here. On the one hand, allowing all civil partners from across the world to marry here would appear to be the most liberal regime in the world and might raise concerns from overseas jurisdictions. On the other hand, introducing a residence requirement would be unusual in Scots marriage law.

42. A further policy option might be just to change non-Scottish civil partnerships to marriages when a couple resident in Scotland are unable to do so in the jurisdiction where they recognised their partnership. It does appear that, generally, a couple wishing to change their civil partnership to a marriage would be best doing so in the home jurisdiction for the civil partnership, where possible, as this would avoid the potential complication of two civil statuses. Another potential policy option would be for Scotland to change civil partnerships to marriages when the other jurisdiction was content for this to happen.
43. Given the issues outlined above, the Government has lodged an amendment to the Bill which would allow Ministers to extend by Order the category of civil partners who could change their civil partnership in Scotland by having a marriage ceremony here. This would enable civil partners in a partnership registered outwith Scotland to marry here. The Order-making approach will enable the Government to consult fully and to consider the issues in detail. Any such Order would be subject to affirmative resolution procedures. The Government would intend to consult in 2014 on whether or not to make such an Order and, if so, who it should cover. This consultation will form part of our work on the review of civil partnerships. Regardless of whether or not an Order is made, the Government would intend to report to Parliament on the outcome of the consultation.

Change of gender of married persons or civil partners

Gender-neutral marriage declarations

44. The Committee recommended at paragraph 279 that “it should be possible to allow a choice of gender-neutral or gender-specific language for marriage declarations” and called on the Scottish Government to reconsider its position. Following this recommendation, the Government wrote to the Scottish Churches Parliamentary Office, the Muslim Council of Scotland and SCoJeC to seek views. The standard terms of this letter is attached at Appendix A.

45. A response by the Free Church of Scotland is at Appendix B and a response by the Muslim Council of Scotland is at Appendix C.

46. The Free Church of Scotland has said that “the proposed amendment, which would introduce the option for gender neutral language in marriage ceremonies, is frankly ridiculous and insulting to all who hold a traditional view of marriage.”

47. The Muslim Council of Scotland have said that in Islamic marriages “the declaration has to be gender specific, husband and wife, and cannot be gender neutral. If the government is to go ahead with the EOC recommendation then it must be clearly emphasized that there is no obligation on any religious body or celebrant to use the gender neutral terms”.

48. The Humanist Society Scotland have advised us that they support the option of gender neutral marriage ceremonies.

49. The United Reformed Church have advised us that “the option of using non-gender specific language for a marriage service is welcome from the point of view of the URC Church & Society Committee whose watchword throughout about marriage vis-à-vis the proposed legislation has been ‘permissive-not-prescriptive’”.

50. The Salvation Army have said that as the proposed change does not affect the wording that their celebrants would use they see no need to raise objections.

---

9 The remit for this review is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Resource/0043/00434010.pdf
51. The perspective of the national team of the Baptist Union of Scotland, who are responsible for the list of Baptist Ministers authorised to conduct weddings, is that of being against the use of inclusive language. They feel it is a further step in undermining the very nature of marriage of being between one man and one woman. The national team have indicated that as with all Baptist comments this is simply the view of that particular group and other Baptists will hold a contrary position.

52. The Government notes the concerns expressed by some bodies. The Government considers that no religious body should be required to use gender neutral marriage declarations. Therefore, the Government has lodged an amendment to the Bill so that so that religious and belief bodies who are nominating celebrants to the Registrar General could choose to use the following types of marriage declarations in opposite sex marriages:

- Declarations which refer to “husband and wife”.
- Declarations which refer to marriage and the couple being married.
- Either or both of these types of declarations.

Spousal consent

53. The Committee said at paragraph 280:

“...We note evidence calling for the requirement for spousal consent to be removed from the gender recognition process. We accept the Scottish Government’s view that, whilst the non-transitioning spouse has at least two years to take action, it may be the application to the panel that makes a non-transitioning spouse consider his or her options. We realise that spouses of people seeking gender recognition may find themselves in circumstances that are very difficult to face and that we have not received evidence from their perspective. However, we believe that the non-transitioning spouse’s personal choice is sufficiently protected by the automatic grounds for divorce triggered by his or her partner’s seeking gender recognition. We therefore believe the requirement for spousal consent for gender recognition is unnecessary and should be removed”.

54. The Government does not consider this to be a straightforward issue. Our comments are outlined below.

55. First of all, the spousal consent is to staying in the marriage, not to the applicant receiving gender recognition. This can be seen in the definition of “statutory declaration of consent” added to the Gender Recognition Act 2004 by paragraph 2(c) of schedule 2 to the Bill. This definition is:

“in relation to the issuing of a gender recognition certificate to a person, means a statutory declaration by the person’s spouse that the spouse consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate”.

---

10 As outlined in the letter at Appendix A, the 1977 Act only lays down legislative provision on marriage declarations in cases where bodies nominate celebrants to the Registrar General.
56. Where the spouse does not consent to the marriage continuing, the applicant receives an interim Gender Recognition Certificate (GRC). This can then be used to divorce. It has been suggested that such divorces can take a long time. However, the Scottish Government has considered this issue. Statistics we have from 2010 to 2012 show:

Simplified Divorces

The mean average for a simplified divorce was found to be approximately 38 days. The majority take around 30 days.

We have examined the time taken on one divorce on the ground of the issue of an interim GRC. This took 27 days.

Ordinary Divorces

The mean average for an ordinary divorce was found to be approximately 240 days. The majority take between 50 – 100 days.

For both simplified and ordinary divorces there were some cases which took much longer than the mean which has skewed the data. (Of course, there may be good reasons for a divorce taking some time, such as a dispute about the welfare of the children or about financial provision).

57. The Government considers that, as the Committee indicates, the non-transitioning spouse will often be protected by the provision in the Gender Recognition Act 2004 which lays down that the applicant for gender recognition has to live in the acquired gender for 2 years to be successful in an application to the Gender Recognition Panel (GRP). However, the Scottish Government does not consider that this will always be the case, for the following reasons:

57.1 As the Committee mentions, it may be the application to the GRP that makes a non-transitioning spouse consider his or her options.

57.2 The applicant for gender recognition and the non-transitioning spouse may separate but not divorce and so the non-transitioning spouse may not know about the application to the GRP.

57.3 The parties to the marriage may have different perceptions of the two year period of living in an acquired gender.

57.4 There is no guarantee that a non-transitioning spouse choosing to divorce would wish to use the basis of unreasonable behaviour. Most divorces in Scotland are on the basis of two years' non-cohabitation.

---

11 In Scotland, divorce under simplified procedures can be obtained where the basis of the divorce is non-cohabitation or the issue of an interim GRC; there are no claims for financial provision and no children under 16. More information is on the Scottish Court Service website at http://www.scotcourts.gov.uk/taking-action/divorce-and-dissolution-of-civil-partnership.

12 http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2012/12/9263/5 See figure 8.
57.5 It is possible to apply to the GRP on the basis of having changed gender in the law of a country or territory outside the UK (section 1(1)(b) of the 2004 Act refers). In these cases, the requirement to live in the acquired gender for two years does not apply\(^{13}\). It is likely that the spouse in this scenario would want the marriage to continue but we cannot guarantee that.

57.6 Once the Bill allows married people to apply to the GRP and obtain a full GRC, there may be applications from married persons who have been waiting for the marriage bar to be removed. This means spouses may need to consider if they want the marriage to continue after the full GRC is issued – a decision they cannot take now given the current legislation.

57.7 A similar point arises in relation to the planned reintroduction of “fast track” for long-term transitioned people.

58. The question then arising is what the non-transitioning spouse is being protected against. Under the Bill, the continuity of a marriage is not affected by the issuing of a full GRC: see paragraph 9 of schedule 2 to the Bill. Therefore, once a full GRC is issued, any marriage changes legally from opposite sex to same sex (or, in future, it may change from same sex to opposite sex, given that persons in a same sex marriage will, of course, be eligible to apply to the GRP).

59. Therefore, if spousal consent is removed it is possible that the spouse of a person who has received a full GRC could be in a same sex (or opposite sex) marriage without wanting to be in a same sex (or opposite sex) marriage. The implications of that are unclear. In many cases, the non-transitioning spouse may just accept the situation especially as he or she may have known for some years that the other spouse was transitioning. However, the Scottish Government does not consider that we can guarantee this will always be the case. There may be cases of non-transitioning spouses who, as outlined above, are not protected by the two year period and who may not want to be in a same sex or opposite sex marriage.

60. Given the points set out above, the Government considers that there is a need to ensure that the non-transitioning spouse should be involved in a decision about the marriage continuing. That is why the Bill is drafted the way it is just now.

61. The Government is aware of a potential amendment to the Bill proposed by the Scottish Transgender Alliance. This amendment would enable a transgender person who does not have the consent of their spouse to apply to the sheriff court for a full GRC.

62. This Government considers that to ensure a non-transitioning spouse would be involved in a decision about the marriage continuing, the non-transitioning spouse would have to be notified if an application were made to the sheriff for a full GRC after an interim GRC had been issued.

---

\(^{13}\) Information from the GRP on the process is at http://www.justice.gov.uk/tribunals/gender-recognition-panel/overseas-application-process
63. Notification would ensure that he or she knows what is happening in relation to the marriage. Notifying the non-transitioning spouse would also enable him or her to offer views on what is proposed. For example, if the spouse is content for the marriage to become same sex while he or she considers whether or not to stay in it, notification would give the non-transitioning spouse a chance to say so.

64. Therefore, the Government is considering lodging an amendment. This would allow an application to be made to the sheriff for a full GRC. However, to ensure a balance of rights, the sheriff could only grant the application where there is a good reason to do so such as where the sheriff considers that the non-transitioning spouse is deliberately delaying divorce proceedings in an unreasonable way (this might also have the benefit of concentrating minds) or the sheriff considers that there are other good reasons for granting a full GRC.

65. The Government intends to lodge an amendment to the Bill along similar lines to the provisions at Part 2 of Schedule 5 to the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013. This would allow long-term transitioned people, in certain circumstances, to obtain gender recognition through providing alternative evidence to the GRP.

66. In preparing an amendment, the Government has had to bear in mind that the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill is about marriage and civil partnership, rather than about gender recognition more generally.

67. Therefore, the Government’s current thinking is that the amendment would relate to persons:

- who are or have been in a marriage solemnised in Scotland or in a civil partnership registered in Scotland;
- have been living in the acquired gender for at least 6 years before the commencement of relevant provisions in the Scottish Bill (The provisions are designed for those who could have used the previous “fast-track” at section 27 of the Gender Recognition Act 2004 but did not do so because of the current requirement to divorce before obtaining a full GRC. Section 27 has now “sunsetted” and is no longer available);
- are still living in the acquired gender when the application is made;
- intend to continue to live in the acquired gender until death;

---

14 Under the Bill, the non-transitioning spouse is notified by the GRP only when he or she has agreed to stay in the marriage: see inserted section 3(6E) to the Gender Recognition Act 2004, as inserted by paragraph 3 of schedule 2 to the Bill.

15 Schedule 5 to the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013 is at http://www.legislation.gov.uk/ukpga/2013/30/schedule/5/enacted

16 This would include marriages solemnised and civil partnerships registered overseas by UK consuls or through the armed forces where the couple elected Scotland as the relevant part of the UK.
• have or have had gender dysphoria or have undergone surgery for the purpose of modifying sexual characteristics;

• who are ordinarily resident in Scotland.

68. In addition, the amendment could give Ministers an order making power so that medical treatment, or certain types of medical treatment, could be accepted as evidence. This would continue to include having undergone surgery. The Government would intend to consult in 2014 on whether or not to make such an order and, if so, what type of order should be made.

Age for gender recognition

69. The Committee asked for a detailed response on representations about lowering the age requirement for gender recognition.

70. The Gender Recognition Act 2004 provides at section 1 that an applicant to the GRP must be at least 18. When the application is made on the basis of living in the other gender (rather than having changed gender under the law of a country or territory outwith the UK), the applicant, to be successful, must have lived in the acquired gender for at least two years.

71. The Scottish Government considers that the following points support the current minimum age of 18:

• The advice when the Gender Recognition Act 2004 was going through Parliament was that most adolescents would reach sexual maturity at the age of 16 (this also being the age of consent to sexual intercourse). With that in mind, the age for applications was set at 18 because that was the earliest age at which a person who had begun living in their acquired gender would meet the two year requirement after having reached sexual maturity.

• Some children may well be capable of making decisions about their gender identity before 16. However, we believe it is better to have a clear minimum age which applies to all rather than to allow variation. This ensures that the law is easy to understand and apply.

• It could be difficult for a child to show that between the ages of 14 and 16 they had been living full time and exclusively in their acquired gender (the Panel look to things like drivers' licences, household bills and passports with the person's gender appropriate name on it).

72. The Government accepts a number of points made in evidence to the Committee, such as:

• It may be possible to use other documents to show that a person has been living in an acquired gender for 2 years.

• It is possible in Scotland to marry at 16 (or enter a civil partnership at 16) without parental consent.

• If the bill as drafted is passed, someone who enters into a marriage when they are 16 would have to wait until 18 to get their GRC and would then need to take steps if they wished to re-register the marriage in the acquired gender.
• The Age of Legal Capacity (Scotland) Act 1991 assumes generally that a person has legal capacity at 16.

73. A clinician working at Sandyford Services in Glasgow\(^\text{17}\) has advised that he works with under 18s referred to Sandyford from across Scotland with gender issues.

74. Of the 57 cases he has been working with in the last year (Nov 12 - Oct 13), 25% were aged 15 at the time of referral, and 31% were 14 or less. While some of these young people are still in the early stages of thinking about their gender and transitioning, others are much further down the line and have already been doing this for some time, taking on the identity of their perceived gender and going on to formally change their name, attending school/college as such, and very much living as that person in all aspects of their life. The clinician has advised that with respect to discussions around the GRC, a number of young people he works with will have been living in the acquired gender for at least 2 years well before they become 18.

75. The Government has also looked at the report by the Irish Gender Recognition Advisory Group\(^\text{18}\). This recommended a minimum age of 18. Paragraph 5.4 says:

"There is evidence in the literature and from other countries – notably the United States and Germany – that under-age children with parental support are undergoing treatments to support their desire to live in the opposite gender. From a strictly medical point of view, early – pre-puberty – treatment simplifies the eventual full transition to the other gender. Bodily characteristics may be modified by the administration of treatments that block the undesirable hormones – for example, boys who wish to become females will not develop the typical male bodily characteristics if treated with male hormone blockers. This would increase the eventual likely success of the transition to female.

However, mental health professionals advised the Group to exercise great caution if considering reducing the minimum qualification age. There is evidence from the literature that minors who desire a gender change frequently change their minds as they reach adulthood. One mental health professional advised that the living in role period should be extended to possibly three years for persons aged 18 years at the time of application".

76. The Irish Children’s Ombudsman is arguing against a minimum age of 18 and says that there should be provision in Ireland for a gender recognition mechanism for those under the age of 18.\(^\text{19}\)

---

77. The Scottish Government can see merit in the arguments in favour of reducing the age at which a person may apply to the GRP. However, this is a difficult area. Children and young people are a vulnerable group and children and young people who are uncomfortable with their gender identity may be particularly vulnerable.

78. Changing one’s legal sex is a particularly significant decision. Before granting a GRC, the GRP must be satisfied that the applicant intends to live in the acquired gender until death. We understand that a small proportion of people who undergo gender recognition may later wish to revert to their originally allocated sex. We have no evidence at the moment about whether a 14 year old is more or less likely than a 16 year old to wish to change back to his or her originally allocated sex.

79. Clearly, the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill is about marriage and civil partnership rather than gender recognition. The Government has not consulted on changing the minimum age for applying to the GRP. The Government considers that it would need to do so and would need to obtain more evidence from medical professionals, the GRP, transgender groups and others of the benefits and dis-benefits of being able to apply to the GRP at age 16.

Delegated powers

80. The Government has responded to the report by the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee. In summary, the Government has:

- Lodged amendments to remove section 8(2)(g) of the Bill and clarify that persons changing their relationship from a civil partnership to a marriage will have the same rights and responsibilities regardless of whether they change through having a marriage ceremony or through the administrative route.
- Lodged an amendment to remove section 28(2)(h) of the Bill. As indicated in paragraph 58 above, provision on the continuity of a marriage following the issue of a full GRC is made through paragraph 9 of schedule 2 to the Bill. Similarly, provision on the continuity of a civil partnership following the issue of a full GRC (where both parties are transitioning) is made through paragraph 10 of schedule 2 to the Bill.
- Lodged an amendment so that all orders made under section 5D of the Gender Recognition Act 2004 (as inserted by paragraph 6 of schedule 2 to the Bill) are subject to affirmative resolution procedures.

---

20 The Government’s response can be found at http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_SubordinateLegislationCommittee/20131126Papers.pdf [Paper DPLR/S4/13/30/3]

21 As indicated in paragraphs 31 to 41 above, these rights may have to be more limited if persons in a non-Scottish civil partnership should be allowed to change their relationship to a marriage by getting married in Scotland as there will be limits about what we can provide about the non-Scottish relationship.
Consultation responses

82. The Government has noted the terms of paragraph 2 of the Committee’s report. We are pleased that the Committee is satisfied with the Government’s position on consultation responses collected by Scotland for Marriage which were not successfully transmitted to the Scottish Government. The Government received the responses on 13 November. We will keep the Committee informed of the outcome of our consideration of the points made.

Scottish Government
December 2013
APPENDIX A: LETTER BY SCOTTISH GOVERNMENT ON MARRIAGE DECLARATIONS

18 November 2013

MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
MARRIAGE DECLARATIONS

Introduction

1. I am writing to see the views of your members about a possible amendment to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill suggested by the Equal Opportunities Committee. The amendment would relate to marriage declarations for opposite sex marriages. Given Parliamentary timetables, I would be grateful for views by close on Friday 29 November: I apologise for the rush.

2. The Bill and accompanying documents are at http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/parliamentarybusiness/Bills/64983.aspx and the Committee’s Stage 1 report is at http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_EqualOpportunitiesCommittee/Reports/eoR-13-05w-rev2.pdf The points on marriage declarations are at paragraphs 251 to 254 of the report and the recommendation is at paragraph 279.

Background

3. As you know, there are four ways in which celebrants can be authorised to solemnise marriage:

• Church of Scotland Ministers (and, in future, deacons, by virtue of section 18 of the Bill) are directly authorised by virtue of section 8 of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 (the 1977 Act) itself.
• A number of religious bodies (for convenience, a list is attached at Annex A) have been prescribed by a Statutory Instrument made under section 8 of the 1977 Act so that their celebrants can solemnise marriage. (In future, by virtue of the Bill, Ministers will have the power to prescribe belief bodies as well).
• Religious bodies (and, in future, by virtue of the Bill, belief bodies) other than the Church of Scotland and those prescribed by regulations may nominate celebrants under section 9 of the 1977 Act to the Registrar General for approval.
• The Registrar General may grant temporary authorisations under section 12 of the 1977 Act.

4. The Bill retains this system for opposite sex marriage. A separate and similar system is established for same sex marriage (the main difference is that the Church of Scotland celebrants will not be directly authorised by the 1977 Act to solemnise same sex marriage).

5. In relation to celebrants nominated to the Registrar General under section 9, section 9(2)(b) of the 1977 Act provides that the Registrar General shall reject a nomination if in his opinion the marriage ceremony used by the nominating body “is not of an appropriate form”. Section 9(3) then makes provision that “a marriage ceremony is of an appropriate form if it includes, and is no way inconsistent with:

“(a) a declaration by the parties, in the presence of each other, the celebrant and two witnesses, that they accept each other as husband and wife; and

(b) a declaration by the celebrant, after the declaration mentioned in paragraph (a) of this subsection, that the parties are then husband and wife.”

6. This declaration is only in the legislation in respect of bodies who nominate celebrants to the Registrar General. The aim of the declaration is to ensure that the couple agree (in the presence of each other, the celebrant and two witnesses) to marry each other and the celebrants then declares the couple to be married.

7. The Scottish Government is aware that the Church of Scotland has made its own provision on marriage declarations. Bodies that are prescribed by the Statutory Instrument made under section 8 of the 1977 Act so that their celebrants can solemnise marriage will also have made their own provisions. Celebrants who are authorised on a temporary basis under section 12 are advised by National Records for Scotland that they should follow the declarations contained in section 9(3) of the 1977 Act.

Changes made by the Bill and suggestion for further changes.

8. Section 11(2)(g) of the Bill introduces a new form of marriage declarations for same sex ceremonies. These are:

(a) a declaration by the parties, in the presence of each other, the celebrant and two witnesses, that they accept each other in marriage; and

(b) a declaration by the celebrant, after the declaration mentioned in paragraph (a), that the parties are then married.

9. The suggestion from the Committee is that these declarations should also be made available for opposite sex couples.

10. The Government considers that there may be merit in this proposal. The particular point raised at the Committee relates to transgender people. In addition, there may be other couples who would not wish to use “husband and wife”. There may, for example, be a view from some couples that this is not in line with gender equality.

11. Equally, though, the Government recognises that some religious bodies and couples would wish to use the terms “husband and wife” in marriage declarations.

12. Therefore, the Government is considering whether to lodge amendments to amend section 9 of the 1977 Act so that religious bodies who are nominating celebrants to the Registrar General could choose to use the following types of marriage declarations in opposite sex marriages:
• The “husband and wife” declarations at section 9(3) of the 1977 Act.
• The gender neutral terms at section 11(2)(g) of the Bill.

13. The body could choose to use either or both of these types of declarations, as it saw fit.

14. In addition, it is anticipated that any amendment would ensure that the declarations by the couple and the celebrant do not have to follow the same form. That is, a body may wish to use the term “husband and wife” in the declarations made by the couple getting married but gender neutral terms in the declaration made by the celebrant (or vice-versa). The Government sees no objection to bodies choosing to do this.

15. There would be no obligation on any religious body to use gender neutral terms.

16. If an amendment were made to the Bill in respect of religious bodies who are nominating celebrants to the Registrar General, the Registrar General would intend in due course to reflect the terms of the new provisions when issuing guidance to temporary celebrants.

Conclusion

17. I would be grateful for your views and the views of your members on this potential amendment. I am happy to discuss with you and with any of your members.

LIST OF RELIGIOUS BODIES CURRENTLY PRESCRIBED BY STATUTORY INSTRUMENT SO THEIR CELEBRANTS ARE AUTHORISED TO SOLEMNISE MARRIAGE

• Baptist Union of Scotland.
• Congregational Union of Scotland.
• Episcopal Church in Scotland and other Anglican Communion Churches
• Free Church of Scotland
• Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland
• Hebrew Congregation
• Methodist Church in Scotland
• Religious Society of Friends
• Roman Catholic Church
• Salvation Army
• Scottish Unitarian Association
• United Free Church of Scotland
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
MARRIAGE DECLARATIONS

I am writing in response to your letter of 18 November to SCPO. We are grateful for the chance to comment on the proposed amendment on marriage declarations.

The Free Church of Scotland believes that the proposed amendment, which would introduce the option for gender neutral language in marriage ceremonies, is frankly ridiculous and insulting to all who hold a traditional view of marriage.

The Free Church believes that marriage is the union of one man with one woman and we would not, under any circumstances, use gender neutral language in a marriage ceremony. We are completely opposed to this further dismantling of the marriage ceremony to the lowest common denominator. The idea that a celebrant could use gender specific language and the man and woman being married could use gender neutral language is yet another example of the utter confusion that the Marriage Bill is creating.

We are told the recommendation from the EOC is being proposed to meet the needs of transgender people who wish to marry. We can safely assume that this is a tiny group of people whose perceived desires are being catered for in the legislation. We would ask that the government would make equal provision in the legislation for the freedom of speech and conscience of public sector workers, teachers and all others for whom the introduction of same sex marriage is contrary to their religious or personal beliefs.

Yours faithfully
APPENDIX C: MARRIAGE DECLARATIONS: RESPONSE BY THE MUSLIM COUNCIL OF SCOTLAND

We, MCS, note points in your letter of 18 November 2013 and welcome the opportunity to give our views on the EOC recommended amendment.

We have the following comments to make:

1- An Islamic marriage can only be between a man and a woman and the procedure is consistent with the conditions mentioned in your letter item 5.

2- The aim of the declaration is to ensure that the couple, a man and a woman, agree (in the presence of each other, the celebrant and at a minimum of two witnesses) to marry each other and the celebrants then declares the couple to be married as husband and wife.

3- The declaration has to be gender specific, husband and wife, and can not be gender neutral.

If the government is to go ahead with the EOC recommendation then it must be clearly emphasized that there is no obligation on any religious body or celebrant to use the gender neutral terms.
16 December 2013

Dear Douglas

MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
AMENDMENTS TO THE EQUALITY ACT 2010

1. As you will be aware, the Scottish Government has agreed with the UK Government that, as a consequence of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill, amendments are required to the Equality Act 2010 (“the 2010 Act”)\(^1\). These amendments are designed to protect religious and belief bodies, celebrants and others carrying out religious and belief functions at marriage and civil partnership ceremonies.

2. I now attach draft amendments along with a draft Explanatory Note. These amendments will form part of an Order under section 104 of the Scotland Act 1998 to be taken forward at Westminster after the Bill completes its passage in the Scottish Parliament, assuming that the Bill is approved by Parliament. Please note that the drafting could change before the section 104 Order is laid at Westminster.

3. The draft amendments would protect the following from court actions claiming discrimination:

   - An employee of a secular body (e.g., a chaplain at a university) who would normally carry out marriages for other employees but refuses to officiate at a same sex marriage or a civil partnership because the couple are same sex.
   - A celebrant who refuses to register a civil partnership because the celebrant reasonably believes that one of the parties has changed gender. (There is existing provision in the 2010 Act ensuring that an approved celebrant does not have to carry out a marriage where he or she reasonably believes that one of the parties has changed gender).
   - A celebrant who refuses to solemnise a same sex marriage or register a civil partnership because the marriage or civil partnership is between a same sex couple.

---

\(^1\) The statement agreed between the UK and Scottish Governments is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Resource/0042/00426318.pdf
• Other people who refuse to participate in a religious or belief aspect of a marriage or civil partnership ceremony because the marriage or civil partnership is between a same sex couple.
• A religious or belief organisation and persons in the organisation who decide that premises they own or control should not be used for same sex marriages or the registration of civil partnerships because these are same sex relationships.

4. The Scottish Government is considering, with the UK Government, whether the amendments also need to cover cases where a denomination opts in, makes it clear that some of its celebrants will not take part and there is then a legal challenge against the denomination (rather than the celebrant) about some of its celebrants not taking part.

5 I am happy to answer any questions arising.

Yours sincerely

SIMON STOCKWELL
Family and Property Law
PART 1
MODIFICATIONS OF THE EQUALITY ACT 2010

1 Modifications of the Equality Act 2010

(1) The Equality Act 2010 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 110 (liability of employees and agents), after subsection (5B) insert—

“(5C) A does not contravene this section by refusing to solemnise a relevant Scottish marriage for the reason that the marriage is the marriage of two persons of the same sex.

(5D) A does not contravene this section by refusing to register a relevant Scottish civil partnership for the reason that the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

(5E) Subsections (5C) and (5D) apply only if A is an approved celebrant.

(5F) Expressions used in subsections (5C) to (5E) have the same meaning as in paragraph 25B of Schedule 3.”.

(3) In Schedule 3 (services and public functions: exceptions)—

(a) before paragraph 25 insert—

“PART 6ZA
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP: SCOTLAND”,

(b) in paragraph 25, after sub-paragraph (2) insert—

“(3) An approved celebrant (A) does not contravene section 29, so far as relating to gender reassignment discrimination, only by refusing to register the civil partnership of a person (B) if A reasonably believes that B’s gender has become the acquired gender under the Gender Recognition Act 2004.

(4) In sub-paragraph (3) “approved celebrant” has the meaning given in section 94A(4)(a) of the Civil Partnership Act 2004.”, and

(c) after paragraph 25A insert—

“PART 6B
SAME SEX MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP: SCOTLAND

25B Same sex marriage and civil partnership: Scotland

(1) An approved celebrant does not contravene section 29 only by refusing to solemnise a relevant Scottish marriage for the reason that the marriage is the marriage of two persons of the same sex.

(2) An approved celebrant does not contravene section 29 only by refusing to register a relevant Scottish civil partnership for the reason that the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

(3) A person does not contravene section 29 only by refusing to participate in a religious or belief ceremony forming part of, or connected with, the solemnising of a relevant Scottish marriage for the reason that the marriage is the marriage of two persons of the same sex.
(4) A person does not contravene section 29 only by refusing to participate in a religious or belief ceremony forming part of, or connected with, the registration of a relevant Scottish civil partnership for the reason that the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

(5) In this paragraph—

“approved celebrant”—

(a) in relation to solemnising a marriage, has the meaning given in section 8(2)(a) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977,

(b) in relation to registering a civil partnership, has the meaning given in section 94A(4)(a) of the Civil Partnership Act 2004,

“relevant Scottish civil partnership” means a religious or belief civil partnership within the meaning of section 94A(4)(b) of the Civil Partnership Act 2004,

“relevant Scottish marriage” means a religious or belief marriage of two persons of the same sex within the meaning of section 8(2)(a) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977.”.

(4) In Schedule 23 (general exceptions), in paragraph 2, after sub-paragraph (9) insert—

“(9A) An organisation does not contravene Part 3, 4 or 7 only by refusing to allow premises owned or controlled by the organisation to be used—

(a) to solemnise a relevant Scottish marriage for the reason that the marriage is the marriage of two persons of the same sex,

(b) to register a relevant Scottish civil partnership for the reason that the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

(9B) A person (or an association of persons) does not contravene Part 3, 4 or 7 only by refusing to allow premises owned or controlled by the person (or the association) for the purposes of an organisation to be used—

(a) to solemnise a relevant Scottish marriage for the reason that the marriage is the marriage of two persons of the same sex,

(b) to register a relevant Scottish civil partnership for the reason that the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

(9C) In sub-paragraphs (9A) and (9B), “relevant Scottish marriage” and “relevant Scottish civil partnership” have the same meaning as in paragraph 25B of Schedule 3.”.
EXPLANATORY NOTES TO THE PROPOSED MODIFICATIONS TO THE EQUALITY ACT 2010 DESIGNED TO PROTECT RELIGIOUS AND BELief BODIES, CELEBRANTS AND OTHERS

Introduction

1. These Explanatory Notes have been prepared by the Scottish Government to assist the reader of the draft modifications to the Equality Act 2010 ("the 2010 Act"). These draft modifications are designed to protect religious and belief bodies, celebrants and others who do not wish to take part in the solemnisation of a religious or belief marriage or the registration of a religious or belief civil partnership on the ground that it is of a same sex couple.

2. As the proposed modifications are reserved, the intention is that amendments to the 2010 Act will be included in an Order under section 104 of the Scotland Act 1998 ("the 1998 Act"). Section 104 of the 1998 Act gives UK Ministers the power to make consequential changes following an Act of the Scottish Parliament. The draft Order will be laid before the UK Parliament at Westminster.

3. The attached draft amendments to the 2010 Act follow the publication of a detailed statement agreed between the UK and Scottish Government on the intended approach.1

The modifications

4. Article 1(2) inserts new subsections (5C) to (5F) into section 110 of the 2010 Act.

5. Section 110(1) of the 2010 Act makes an employee, or an agent for a principal, personally liable for unlawful acts they commit in the course of their employment, or under the authority of a principal, for which their employer or principal could also be held liable.

6. New subsections (5C) and (5D) provide that an individual cannot be held personally liable under the 2010 Act for a refusal to solemnise a same sex marriage or register a civil partnership where the reason is that the marriage or civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

7. New subsection (5E) provides that this protection only applies to an “approved celebrant”. By virtue of new subsection (5F), the definition of “approved celebrant” in new paragraph 25B of Schedule 3 to the 2010 Act (new paragraph 25B forms part of these draft modifications) also applies to the amendments made to section 110 of the 2010 Act. The definition of “approved celebrant” covers religious and belief celebrants of marriages and of civil partnerships.

Example

A chaplain employed by a university is asked to solemnise the marriage of an employee of the university with a person of the same sex. Although his religious body has opted into marriage of same sex couples, he refuses because he does not wish to marry a same sex couple. This is lawful. The university makes alternative arrangements by finding an alternative chaplain to solemnise the marriage.

8. Article 1(3) adds provisions to Schedule 3 to the 2010 Act. Schedule 3 to the 2010 Act has a number of exceptions to the general requirements in the 2010 Act in relation to the provision of services and the exercise of public functions.

1 This statement is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Resource/0042/00426318.pdf
9. Paragraph 25 in Schedule 3 already has an exception in respect of an approved celebrant not having to solemnise a marriage if the celebrant reasonably believes one of the parties to the proposed marriage has acquired a gender under the Gender Recognition Act 2004. The new paragraph 25(3) extends this protection to celebrants who register religious or belief civil partnerships, following their introduction. The new paragraph 25(4) defines approved celebrants to mean religious and belief celebrants.

10. The new paragraph 25B(1) and (2) provide that an approved celebrant does not contravene section 29 of the 2010 Act by refusing to solemnise a marriage or register a civil partnership because it is of a same sex couple. “Approved celebrant” is defined in new paragraph 25B(5) so as to mean a religious or belief celebrant. This provision protects religious and belief celebrants who do not wish to solemnise same sex marriage or register a civil partnership, even though their religious or belief body has opted in.

Example

A religious body opts into the solemnisation of marriage of same sex couples but makes it clear that it respects the views of those within the body who do not wish to take part. One of the body’s ministers does not approve of same sex marriage and does not wish to solemnise such a marriage. This would be lawful. The religious body arranges for an alternative minister to conduct the marriage ceremony for the same sex couple.

11. The new paragraph 25B(3) and (4) provide that a person does not contravene section 29 only by refusing to participate in a religious or belief ceremony forming part of, or connected with, the solemnising of a marriage or the registration of a civil partnership because the ceremony is between two persons of the same sex. In this context, “religious or belief ceremony” refers to a religious or belief activity which forms part of the marriage solemnisation or the civil partnership registration.

Examples

An organist who usually plays hymns at wedding services at a church does not wish to play at a wedding service of a same sex couple. This would be lawful because he is carrying out a religious ceremony (i.e. activity) which forms part of the marriage service.

A commercial photographer is asked to photograph a wedding of a same sex couple. It would be unlawful sexual orientation discrimination for her to refuse because she does not approve of marriage of same sex couples. This is because she is not carrying out a religious or belief activity.

A volunteer flower arranger who usually decorates the place of worship for wedding services refuses to do so for a wedding of a same sex couple because she does not approve of such marriages. She is not carrying out a religious or belief activity but her refusal would nonetheless be lawful because she is not considered to be providing a service to the public or a section of the public, so it is not covered by the 2010 Act. If a commercial flower arranger asked by a same sex couple to decorate their wedding venue refused to do so because he does not approve of marriage of same sex couples, this would be unlawful sexual orientation discrimination. This is because he is not carrying out a religious or belief activity and the service he provides is to the public and so is covered by the 2010 Act.

14. Sub-paragraph (9A) provides that a religious or belief organisation does not contravene Part 3 (services and public functions), Part 4 (premises) and Part 7 (associations) of the 2010 Act by refusing to allow premises it owns or controls to be used for same sex marriages or the registration of civil partnerships because these are same sex relationships.

Example

A religious or belief body which has opted in to same sex marriage and the registration of civil partnership decides a particular building should not be used for the solemnisation of same sex marriage or the registration of civil partnership because the local congregation disagrees with same sex relationships. This would be lawful.

15. Sub-paragraph (9B) provides that a person or association of persons does not contravene Parts 3, 4 or Part 7 of the 2010 Act in certain circumstances. These circumstances are a refusal to allow premises, which the person or association owns or controls for the purposes of an organisation, to be used for same sex marriages or the registration of civil partnerships because these are same sex relationships.

Example

A local church committee decides that its building should not be used for the solemnisation of same sex marriage or the registration of civil partnership, even though its religious body has opted in, because it disagrees with same sex relationships. This would be lawful. It is for the religious body to make its own arrangements on who decides how local premises should, or should not, be used.

16. Sub-paragraph (9C) provides definitions of “relevant Scottish marriage” and “relevant Scottish civil partnership”. These relate, respectively, to a religious or belief same sex marriage and a religious or belief civil partnership.

Scottish Government
December 2013
1st Marshalled List of Amendments for Stage 2

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

Sections 1 to 6       Schedule 1
Sections 7 to 27      Schedule 2
Sections 28 to 33     Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 4

Alex Neil

1 In section 4, page 4, line 18, after <married> insert <or in a purported marriage>

Alex Neil

2 In section 4, page 4, line 19, after <marriage> insert <or purported marriage>

Alex Neil

3 In section 4, page 4, line 20, after <marriage> insert <or purported marriage>

Alex Neil

4 In section 4, page 4, line 25, at end insert—
   <( ) may make different provision for different purposes,>

Alex Neil

5 In section 4, page 4, line 27, at end insert—
   <( ) may modify any enactment (including this Act),>

Alex Neil

6 In section 4, page 4, line 28, after <is> insert <(except where subsection (9A) applies)>

Alex Neil

7 In section 4, page 4, line 28, at end insert—
   <(9A) An order under subsection (8) which adds to, replaces or omits any part of the text of an Act is subject to the affirmative procedure,>
Section 5

Alex Neil
8 In section 5, page 5, leave out lines 20 to 22

After section 6

Alex Neil
9 After section 6, insert—

<Reset: abolition of defence

(1) Any rule of law under which a wife who receives or conceals goods stolen by her husband does not commit the offence of reset ceases to apply.

(2) Subsection (1) applies only in relation to things done after the day on which this section comes into force.>

Section 7

Marco Biagi
10 In section 7, page 6, line 1, leave out from <qualifying> to <5(6)> in line 2 and insert <civil partnership>

Marco Biagi
11 In section 7, page 6, line 4, at end insert—

<( ) in subsection (5), after paragraph (ii)(c) of the proviso (inserted by section 3(2)(c) of this Act), insert “; or

(d) if no such certificate has been issued only by reason of the fact that the parties to the intended marriage have registered an overseas relationship which is treated in Scotland by virtue of Chapter 2 of Part 5 of the Civil Partnership Act 2004 as a civil partnership between them.”.>

Marco Biagi
12 In section 7, page 6, line 6, leave out <qualifying>

Marco Biagi
13 In section 7, page 6, line 9, leave out from <“qualifying”> to end of line 20 and insert <civil partnership means—

(a) a civil partnership registered under the law of any part of the United Kingdom; and

(b) an overseas relationship which is treated in Scotland by virtue of Chapter 2 of Part 5 of the Civil Partnership Act 2004 as a civil partnership.”>
After section 7

Alex Neil

14 After section 7, insert—

<Power to modify meaning of “qualifying civil partnership”>

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify the meaning of “qualifying civil partnership” given by section 5(6) of the 1977 Act (as inserted by section 7(3)(b) of this Act) so as to include civil partnerships registered outside Scotland.

(2) An order under subsection (1)—

(a) may make different provision for different purposes,
(b) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,
(c) may modify any enactment (including this Act),
(d) is subject to the affirmative procedure.

(3) Before laying a draft of an order under subsection (1) before the Scottish Parliament, the Scottish Ministers must consult the following persons on a copy of the proposed draft order—

(a) the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland, and
(b) such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.>

Section 8

Alex Neil

15 In section 8, page 6, leave out lines 37 and 38

Alex Neil

16 In section 8, page 7, line 6, at end insert—

<( ) may make different provision for different purposes,>

Marco Biagi

17 In section 8, page 7, line 13, leave out subsection (7) and insert—

<(7) For the purposes of this section a “qualifying civil partnership” is a civil partnership which—

(a) was registered in Scotland, and
(b) has not been dissolved, annulled or ended by death.

(8) A civil partnership which was registered outside the United Kingdom under an Order in Council made under Chapter 1 of Part 5 of the 2004 Act is to be treated for the purposes of subsection (7)(a) as having been registered in Scotland if—

(a) the parties to the civil partnership elected Scotland as the relevant part of the United Kingdom under the Order, and
(b) details of the civil partnership have been sent to the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland.

Section 9

Alex Neil

19 In section 9, page 7, leave out lines 16 to 19 and insert—

(A1) This section applies where civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the 1977 Act)—

(a) marry in accordance with that Act, or

(b) change their civil partnership into a marriage in accordance with provision made under section 8(1).

(1) Where this section applies—

(a) the qualifying civil partnership ends on the date on which—

(i) the marriage was solemnised, or

(ii) the change took effect, and>

Marco Biagi

18 In section 9, page 7, line 16, leave out <civil partners in a qualifying> and insert <two persons in a>

Marco Biagi

20 In section 9, page 7, line 18, leave out <qualifying>

Marco Biagi

21 In section 9, page 7, line 21, leave out <qualifying>

Marco Biagi

22 In section 9, page 7, line 21, at end insert <under the law of any part of the United Kingdom or the date on which the persons are treated in Scotland by virtue of Chapter 2 of Part 5 of the 2004 Act as having formed their civil partnership.>

Marco Biagi

23 In section 9, page 8, line 3, leave out <qualifying>

Marco Biagi

24 In section 9, page 8, line 7, leave out <qualifying>
Section 10

Alex Neil

25 In section 10, page 8, line 30, leave out <after “marriage” insert “between”> and insert <for “marriages” substitute “marriage between”>

John Mason

38 In section 10, page 9, line 29, insert at end—

<( ) For the avoidance of doubt—

(a) no religious or belief body may be compelled by any means (including by the enforcement of a contract or a statutory or other legal requirement) to—

(i) make a request referred to in subsection (1C)(a);

(ii) nominate under section 9 any of its members to be registered as empowered to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex;

(b) no person may be compelled by any means (including by the enforcement of a contract or a statutory or other legal requirement) to apply for temporary authorisation under section 12 to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex.>

Section 11

Alex Neil

26 In section 11, page 11, line 6, after <sexes”,> insert—

<( ) in paragraph (a), for the words from “witnesses,” to “wife;” substitute “witnesses—

(i) that they accept each other as husband and wife;

(ii) that they accept each other in marriage; or

(iii) either or both of sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii);”,

( ) in paragraph (b), for the words from “subsection,” to “wife,” substitute “subsection—

(i) that the parties are then husband and wife;

(ii) that the parties are then married; or

(iii) either or both of sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii);”>

After section 14

John Mason

39 After section 14, insert—
<Protecting expression of belief in marriage between persons of different sex

For the avoidance of doubt, a belief in marriage as a voluntary union between one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others for life is a belief worthy of respect in a democratic society.>

Siobhan McMahon

40 After section 14, insert—

<Same sex marriage: protection for district registrars

(1) For the avoidance of doubt, nothing in this Act imposes a duty on a person mentioned in subsection (2)—

(a) to solemnise a marriage between persons of the same sex,

(b) to be present at or participate in a marriage between persons of the same sex, where the reason for not carrying out an activity mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) is that the person holds the belief mentioned in subsection (3).

(2) The person is a district registrar or assistant registrar appointed under section 17 of the 1977 Act.

(3) The belief is that marriage may only be between one man and one woman.>

Siobhan McMahon

41 After section 14, insert—

<Protection of freedom of expression: public authority employees

(1) A public authority must take steps to ensure that, in carrying out its functions, the belief of an employee of the authority mentioned in subsection (3) is respected.

(2) For the avoidance of doubt, where a public authority offers services, no employee is under a duty to—

(a) provide such services,

(b) assist in the provision of such services, where the reason for not so providing or assisting is that the employee holds the belief mentioned in subsection (3).

(3) The belief is that marriage may only be between one man and one woman.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (1), a public authority is a body listed in schedule 1 to the Freedom of Information (Scotland) Act 2002.>

Siobhan McMahon

42 After section 14, insert—

<Protection of freedom of expression: public authority functions

(1) For the avoidance of doubt, a public authority must not—

(a) withhold a service or the use of a facility from a person,

(b) terminate the provision of a service to, or the use of a facility by, a person,
(c) alter the terms on which a service is provided, or a facility is used, to the detriment of the person,

where the reason for taking the action mentioned in paragraph (a), (b) or (c) is that the person holds the belief mentioned in subsection (2).

(2) The belief is that marriage may only be between one man and one woman.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (1), a public authority is a body listed in schedule 1 to the

Richard Lyle

43 After section 14, insert—

<Protection of freedom of expression: adoption and fostering>

(1) For the avoidance of doubt, the views of a relevant person on whether marriage may be between persons of the same sex may not be considered—

(a) by an adoption agency when considering whether to approve a person as an adopter under or by virtue of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007,

(b) by a court in coming to a decision relating to the adoption of a child under or by virtue of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007,

(c) by a local authority when considering whether to approve a person as a foster
carer under the Looked After Children (Scotland) Regulations 2009.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1) a “relevant person”—

(a) under paragraph (a) and (b) is a prospective adopter,

(b) under paragraph (c) is a prospective foster carer.

Richard Lyle

44 After section 14, insert—

<Same sex marriage: protection of charitable status>

In section 8 of the Charities and Trustee Investment (Scotland) Act 2005 (public benefit), after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) For the avoidance of doubt, a disbenefit is not incurred or likely to be incurred by the public in consequence of a body holding a belief as mentioned in subsection (2B).

(2B) The belief is that marriage may only be between one man and one woman.”.

Richard Lyle

45 After section 14, insert—

<Protection of freedom of expression: threatening or abusive behaviour>

(1) The Criminal Justice and Licensing Act (Scotland) 2010 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 38, after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) For the avoidance of doubt, any discussion or criticism of marriage which concerns the sex of the parties to marriage must not be taken of itself to be an offence under subsection (1).”.
Richard Lyle

46 After section 14, insert—

<Protection of freedom of expression: offensive behaviour at regulated football matches>

(1) The Offensive Behaviour at Football and Threatening Communications (Scotland) Act 2012 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 1, after subsection (5) insert—

“(5A) For the avoidance of doubt, any discussion or criticism of marriage which concerns the sex of the parties to marriage must not be taken of itself to be an offence under subsection (1).”.

Alex Johnstone

47 After section 14, insert—

<Indemnification of losses arising from certain legal proceedings>

(1) This section applies where any relevant legal proceedings are brought against a person (“person A”) by or on behalf of another person (“person B”).

(2) The Scottish Ministers must indemnify person A against any net financial losses incurred by person A as a result of the relevant legal proceedings.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), person A’s net financial losses are to be calculated by—

(a) adding together—

(i) the amount paid by person A in respect of person A’s own legal costs in connection with the relevant legal proceedings,

(ii) any other costs incurred by person A as a direct result of the relevant legal proceedings, and

(iii) any sums which person A has been ordered to pay to person B as a result of the relevant legal proceedings, and

(b) subtracting from the total obtained under paragraph (a) any sums which person B has been ordered to pay person A as a result of the relevant legal proceedings.

(4) In this section, “relevant legal proceedings” means any legal proceedings arising from a claim that person A has discriminated against another person by virtue of person A holding or acting on the belief that marriage may only be between one man and one woman.”.

Section 21

Alex Neil

27 In section 21, page 16, line 8, at end insert—

<( ) In subsection (1), before paragraph (a) insert—

“(za) an action for declarator of marriage;”.

>
After section 21

John Mason

After section 21, insert—

CHAPTER

REVIEW OF SAME SEX MARRIAGE

Review of effect of same sex marriage

(1) The Scottish Ministers must, before the end of the 5 year period, review—

(a) the effects of the introduction of marriage of persons of the same sex (“same sex marriage”),
(b) the operation of the provisions on same sex marriage in this Act,
and lay before the Scottish Parliament a report of the review.

(2) The review must, in particular, consider—

(a) the operation and effect of section 8(1D) of the 1977 Act (inserted by section 10(2)(b) of this Act),
(b) the operation and effect of section 14 of this Act,
(c) any court proceedings relating to the operation or effect of any provision relating to same sex marriage.

(3) In carrying out a review under this section, the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after the report has been laid before the Parliament, publish the report in such manner as they consider appropriate.

(5) In this section—

“court proceedings” includes proceedings of—

(a) an employment tribunal within the meaning of section 1 of the Employment Tribunal Act 1996,
(b) an Employment Appeal Tribunal within the meaning of section 20 of the Employment Tribunal Act 1996,
(b) the European Court of Human Rights,
(c) the European Court of Justice,

“the 5 year period” means the period of 5 years beginning with the day on which any provision relating to same sex marriage comes into force.

Schedule 2

Alex Neil

In schedule 2, page 42, line 13, leave out <Registrar General for Scotland> and insert <following persons on a copy of the proposed draft order—

(a) the Registrar General for Scotland,
(b) the Gender Recognition Panel, and
(c) such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate>

Alex Neil
29 In schedule 2, page 42, line 20, after <spouse> insert <or civil partner>

Alex Neil
30 In schedule 2, page 42, leave out line 31

Alex Neil
31 In schedule 2, page 42, line 37, at end insert—

<(< ) Regulations under sub-paragraph (1) may in particular make provision for fees to be payable in respect of things done under the regulations.>

Alex Neil
32 In schedule 2, page 42, line 37, at end insert—

<(< ) Regulations under sub-paragraph (1) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.>

Alex Neil
33 In schedule 2, page 43, line 31, after <20A> insert <of Schedule 3>

Alex Neil
34 In schedule 2, page 43, line 33, leave out from <which> to <Act> in line 34

Section 28

Alex Neil
35 In section 28, page 30, leave out lines 29 and 30

After section 29

Alex Neil
36 After section 29, insert—

<Form of register of marriages

In section 54 of the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965 (regulations), after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) Regulations prescribing the form of a register of marriages under section 32 may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.”>
Section 31

Alex Neil

In section 31, page 31, line 28, at end insert—

<( ) An order under subsection (1) may make different provision for different purposes.>

Section 32

John Mason

In section 32, page 32, line 2, at end insert—

<(2A) The day appointed for the provisions for the marriage of persons of the same sex to come into force must be a day after the day when amendments to the Equality Act 2010 to give effect to the amendments mentioned in subsection (2B) have been or are being brought into force.

(2B) The amendments are—

(a) in section 10 (religion or belief), after subsection (3), insert—

“(3A) For the avoidance of doubt, the protected characteristic of religion or belief may include a belief that marriage may only be between a man and a woman.”,

(b) in section 149 (public sector equality duty), after subsection (9), insert—

“(9A) Compliance with the duties in this section requires ensuring that a belief that marriage may only be between a man and a woman is respected and that no person may suffer any detriment as a result of holding or expressing such a belief.”>
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

1st Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the first day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Operation of rules of law concerning purported marriage

1, 2, 3

Powers to make subordinate legislation: power to make different provision for different purposes, consultation, procedure etc.

4, 5, 6, 7, 16, 28, 32, 34, 36, 37

Abolition of spouse’s defence to charge of reset

8, 9

Changing civil partnerships to marriage: civil partnerships registered outside Scotland

10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24

Note: amendments 18 and 20 in this group are pre-empted by amendment 19 in the next group

Power to provide for effect of changing civil partnership into marriage or of renewed marriage or civil partnership following change of gender

15, 19, 35

Note: amendment 19 in this group pre-empts amendments 18 and 20 in the previous group

Corrections and other minor amendments

25, 27, 30, 33

No power to compel religious or belief bodies to carry out same sex marriages

38
Language used in marriage declarations
26

Effect of holding belief that marriage is between persons of different sexes: general 39, 43, 44

Effect of holding belief that marriage is between persons of different sexes: public sector employees and services
40, 41, 42

Holding belief that marriage is between persons of different sexes not to constitute commission of certain offences
45, 46

Indemnification of losses arising from certain legal actions
47

Review of effects of introduction of same sex marriage
48

Appeals against issue of gender recognition certificate
29

Registration of qualifying Scottish marriages and civil partnerships: power to charge fees
31

No commencement of same sex marriage provisions until certain amendments to Equality Act 2010 in place
49
Present:

Christian Allard  Marco Biagi (Deputy Convener)
John Finnie    Alex Johnstone
John Mason    Margaret McCulloch (Convener)
Siobhan McMahon

Also present: Alex Neil, Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing and Richard Lyle

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 1).

The following amendments were agreed to (without division): 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 14, 15, 16, 19, 25 and 26.

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division)—
38 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
39 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
40 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
41 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
42 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
43 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
44 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
45 (For 2, Against 4, Abstentions 1)
46 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)

Amendment 10 was moved and, no member having objected, withdrawn.

The following amendments were pre-empted: 18 and 20.

The following amendments were not moved: 11, 12, 13, 17, 21, 22, 23, and 24.

The following provisions were agreed to without amendment: sections 1, 2, 3, 6, schedule 1, and sections 7, 12, 13 and 14.

The following provisions were agreed to as amended: sections 4, 5, 8, 9, 10 and 11.

The Committee ended consideration of the Bill for the day, amendment 47 having been moved but not disposed of.
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

09:01
The Convener: Item 2 is day 1 of the committee’s stage 2 consideration of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. I welcome to the meeting Alex Neil, the Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing, and his officials. The officials are not permitted to participate in the formal proceedings. Richard Lyle will join us later to speak to his amendments.

Everyone should have a copy of the bill as introduced, the first marshalled list of amendments and the first list of groupings of amendments. We will not go beyond chapter 4 of part 1 today. There will be one debate on each group of amendments. Any amendments that we do not reach this morning will be dealt with at our next meeting, on 16 January.

For each debate, I will call the member who lodged the first amendment in the group to speak to and move that amendment and to speak to all the other amendments in the group. All other members with amendments in the group, including the cabinet secretary, if relevant, will then be asked to speak to them. Members who have not lodged amendments in the group but who wish to speak should indicate as much by catching my attention or the attention of the clerks.

After the debate on each group, I will check whether the member who moved the first amendment in the group wishes to press it to a vote or to withdraw it. If they wish to press it, I will put the question. If a member wishes to withdraw their amendment after it has been moved, they must seek approval to do so. If any member objects, the committee will immediately move to the vote on the amendment.

If any member does not want to move their amendment when it is called, they should say, “Not moved.” Members should also note that any other MSP—by which I mean not just a committee member—may move the amendment. If no one moves it, I will immediately move to the next amendment on the marshalled list.

Only committee members are allowed to vote. As voting in any division is by a show of hands, it is important that members keep their hands clearly raised until the clerk has recorded the vote.

As the committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed to each section of the bill, I will put the question on each section at the appropriate time.

We now move to consideration of amendments.
Sections 1 to 3 agreed to.

Section 4—Meaning of marriage and related expressions in enactments and documents

The Convener: The first group of amendments is on operation of rules of law concerning purported marriage. Amendment 1, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 2 and 3.

The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing (Alex Neil): Amendments 1 to 3 were lodged at the suggestion of stakeholders, and I will explain why. Section 4 ensures that references to marriage in existing legislation generally refer to both opposite-sex and same-sex marriage. In addition, section 4(6) ensures that, when being married or having been married is relevant to the operation of a common-law rule, any such rule will apply equally to opposite-sex and same-sex marriage.

It was suggested to us that section 4(6) needed to be extended to refer to “purported marriage”. In particular, that could be relevant in relation to marriage by cohabitation with habit and repute, which is the last form of irregular marriage that is still recognised in Scotland. Marriage by cohabitation with habit and repute has largely been abolished in Scotland, but we still recognise cases in which a couple erroneously believe themselves to have been married overseas and, after one of them dies, it transpires that the marriage was not valid. We proposed the complete abolition of such recognition in the consultation on the draft bill, but consultees raised concerns and, as a result, we did not proceed with the proposed abolition.

The amendments ensure that the concept of marriage by cohabitation with habit and repute in certain overseas cases extends to any same-sex marriages. Having decided to keep the concept, we need to ensure that it covers same-sex marriages and opposite-sex marriages.

I move amendment 1.

Alex Johnstone: I take the opportunity to ask the minister to explain in greater detail the meaning of the word “purported” and to indicate clearly that there is no possibility that an interpretation of the word might take the effect of the amendments beyond what is intended.

Alex Neil: The word “purported” refers only to the description that I gave. It is recognised in law for when people think that they have been married overseas and the surviving spouse of someone who has died still believes that the marriage took place. The definition that I gave when I moved amendment 1 is tightly worded.

The Convener: As there are no other questions, I ask the cabinet secretary to wind up.

Alex Neil: I do not think that that is necessary. In the interests of time, I waive my right to wind up.

Amendment 1 agreed to.

Amendments 2 and 3 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

The Convener: We move on to powers to make subordinate legislation—power to make different provision for different purposes, consultation, procedure etc. Amendment 4, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 5 to 7, 16, 28, 32, 34, 36 and 37.

Alex Neil: I will explain why we lodged the group of amendments, all of which are fairly technical. First, I will deal with amendments 4 to 7. Section 4 ensures that references to marriage in existing legislation generally refer to opposite-sex and same-sex marriage. The bill contains an order-making power to enable ministers, when necessary, to make contrary provision. In some cases, ministers might need to amend primary legislation and make different provision for different purposes. For example, we might need to use the powers in relation to devolved matters in public sector pensions and, when doing so, we might need to make specific provision to ensure that the spouses of transgender people do not lose out when their spouses acquire a new gender.

Amendment 4 will ensure that any order under section 4 may make different provision for different purposes. Amendment 5 will ensure that an order can amend primary and secondary legislation. Amendments 6 and 7 will ensure that any order to amend primary legislation is subject to the affirmative procedure, which is in line with usual practice.

Amendment 16 relates to regulations on the procedures for the administrative route for changing civil partnerships that are registered in Scotland into marriages. When the administrative route is used, the couple’s identity may need to be checked. The amendment allows different provision to be made for different purposes so that the regulations have the flexibility to apply different procedures to identity checks when the couple now live outwith Scotland.

Amendments 28 and 34 relate to the order-making powers in proposed new section 5D of the Gender Recognition Act 2004, which paragraph 6 of schedule 2 to the bill will insert. Those powers relate to establishing a more streamlined procedure for persons in a civil partnership to obtain gender recognition.

The amendments follow comments by the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee.
Amendment 28 extends the current consultation requirement in relation to any order and inserts a more detailed procedure. Amendment 34 ensures that the affirmative procedure will apply to all orders that are made under proposed new section 5D of the 2004 Act.

Amendment 32 amends the regulation-making power on the registration of marriages and civil partnerships following the issue of the full gender recognition certificate. The amendment ensures that regulations can make different provision for different cases or circumstances. For example, different provision might be needed when the person who is receiving the full gender recognition certificate was married or entered a civil partnership in Scotland but was not born here.

Amendment 36 amends section 54 of the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965, on regulations about matters such as the form of registers for marriages. The amendment ensures that regulations that prescribe the form of a register of marriages may make different provision for different cases or different circumstances.

Amendment 37 amends the order-making power at section 31 of the bill on ancillary provision so that an order under that section can make different provision for different purposes. That might be needed for cases in which persons who married or entered a civil partnership here now live outwith Scotland, for example.

I move amendment 4.

Amendment 4 agreed to.

Amendments 5 to 7 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Section 4, as amended, agreed to.

Section 5—Same sex marriage: further provision

The Convener: Group 3 is on abolition of spouse’s defence to charge of reset. Amendment 8, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 9.

Alex Neil: Amendments 8 and 9 remove the existing provision on reset and abolish the defence that currently exists in certain circumstances for wives. Reset is a crime that relates to the handling of stolen goods. Currently, a wife cannot be charged with reset for receiving or concealing goods that have been stolen by her husband unless she makes a trade of the crime and has taken an active part in the disposal. That defence for wives appears to come from the view that a wife has to cherish and protect her husband and it appears to be based on an old-fashioned view of the relations between the sexes.

Originally, we considered that we should just not extend the defence to cases in which two women get married but, on reflection, it seems to be more sensible and straightforward to repeal the defence altogether. In case anybody is relying on the defence, the repeal will take effect only from the day after the relevant provision in the bill comes into force.

I move amendment 8.

09:15

The Convener: Do members have questions?

Alex Johnstone: I have a quick one, for my own comfort. Is it true to say that, in such a circumstance, a straightforward defence of lack of knowledge or implication could be used? I want to ensure that we do not simply incriminate wives by repealing the law.

Alex Neil: The assumption is fair.

Marco Biagi: I welcome amendment 8. I think that we were all surprised by the anachronism when we read the bill. I am glad that the initial approach has been changed and that we are getting rid of the provision entirely.

Amendment 8 agreed to.

Section 5, as amended, agreed to.

Section 6 agreed to.

Schedule 1 agreed to.

After section 6

Amendment 9 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Section 7—Marriage between civil partners in qualifying civil partnerships

The Convener: The next group is on changing civil partnerships to marriage—civil partnerships registered outside Scotland. Amendment 10, in the name of Marco Biagi, is grouped with amendments 11 to 14, 17, 18 and 20 to 24. If amendment 19, in the subsequent group, is agreed to, amendments 18 and 20 will be pre-empted and cannot be called.

Marco Biagi: The bill will allow people who are already in civil partnerships to replace their civil partnership relationship with a marriage. However, that applies to people whose civil partnerships were registered in Scotland. Amendment 10, in the name of Marco Biagi, is grouped with amendments 11 to 14, 17, 18 and 20 to 24. If amendment 19, in the subsequent group, is agreed to, amendments 18 and 20 will be pre-empted and cannot be called.

Marco Biagi: The bill will allow people who are already in civil partnerships to replace their civil partnership relationship with a marriage. However, that applies to people whose civil partnerships were registered in Scotland. During the consultation and the committee’s deliberations, we were made aware of a couple from New Jersey who are now resident in Scotland and who had registered, in their home jurisdiction, a domestic partnership, which is recognised here as a civil partnership. Such couples would be excluded from replacing their civil partnership with marriage, even though they are resident in Scotland. The amendments in my name would give people with foreign civil partnerships the option of marriage here.

I am glad that the Government has taken a similar view and has lodged amendments that have the same flavour. The changes to the bill—that is, to primary legislation—that I propose represent a do-it-now approach, whereas the Government’s proposal on order-making powers is a do-it-later approach. I am well aware that it can be wise to delay so that we get things right, so I look forward to hearing what the cabinet secretary will say about his approach.

I want to cover a few aspects of the amendments in my name. I think that the concern about the order-making approach is that an order might be incomplete; it might include requirements about residence in Scotland or exclude people who have the option of replacing their civil partnership with a marriage in their home jurisdiction. The Government response to the committee suggested both examples. I have difficulty with the idea of making someone go back to their home jurisdiction to replace a civil partnership with marriage.

Similarly, we offer marriage and divorce to anyone in the world, regardless of their residence, so I would be concerned if there were an exception in terms of civil partnerships. I hope that the cabinet secretary will address that and tell us what he intends to do if the committee agrees to amendment 14 and the order-making approach.

It would be important for changes that were made under an order-making power to come into force at the same time as the rest of the bill, so that the couple from New Jersey who live in Scotland could get married at the same time as the same-sex couple from Scotland who live next door.

As the bill stands, a same-sex couple who have a civil partnership under Irish law who came here would not be able to get married, whereas a couple from Poland, who cannot have a civil partnership in their home jurisdiction, could come here and get married. That seems to be an arbitrary distinction, which we should address. Anyone can marry and anyone can divorce, but we have no guarantee of recognition by other jurisdictions of same-sex marriages that have been conducted in Scotland. To use the Ireland and Poland example again, should the Irish couple be able to get married here, they could go back to Ireland, and their relationship would be recognised as a civil partnership; the Polish couple could get married here and go back to Poland, where their relationship would not be recognised.

There are inevitably complications with anything associated with the cross-border recognition of same-sex marriages. There will be people who are not in foreign civil partnerships who live in Scotland and get married here, and who then have issues with recognition when they go abroad. That is another area that the Government has addressed, and about which I hope the cabinet secretary will talk when he has his moment.

We have two options for finding a solution. Let us ensure that we do not get into greater complexity just for the sake of it, and that we find the most efficient solution. We have just taken up a very efficient solution to get rid of reset: rather than create an extra exception, we got rid of it entirely. If, however, greater complexity is needed, I am open to the cabinet secretary’s arguments, so I hand over to him to make the case for his approach.

I move amendment 10.

Alex Neil: As Marco Biagi has just said, his amendments relate to couples who are in civil partnerships that have been registered outside Scotland changing the relationship to marriage. Amendment 14, in my name, relates to exactly that issue. As it stands, the bill will create two ways for a couple who are in a civil partnership that is registered in Scotland to change their relationship to a marriage. The couple will be able to have a marriage ceremony or to change the relationship through an administrative route, the details of which will be laid down in regulations.

The committee took evidence to say that couples in civil partnerships that have been registered outwith Scotland should be able to change their civil partnership to a marriage here, and recommended that that be made possible. The Government has great sympathy with that suggestion, but a number of detailed points need to be considered. First, couples in civil partnerships that are registered outwith Scotland could not change their relationship to marriage through the administrative route because, quite simply, we do not hold the original paperwork.

On the detailed points that were made to the committee, we agreed that it would be odd to have to dissolve a relationship that had not broken down in order to change that relationship to a marriage. On the other hand, we are concerned about the risk to the couple themselves of having a dual status of being in a civil partnership and being married. There is no guarantee that other jurisdictions will accept that a civil partnership has been changed to a marriage in Scotland, so the couple might be married here but in a civil partnership elsewhere.

John Mason: Will the minister give way?
Alex Neil: Could I finish this introduction? I will then take questions.

It is not clear how such a marriage would be recognised in the United Kingdom. For example, if a couple in a civil partnership from Northern Ireland changed their relationship to a marriage in Scotland and then moved to England or Wales, the UK Government might face the difficult choice whether to recognise the relationship as a Northern Ireland civil partnership or as a Scottish marriage. In addition, if the couple subsequently divorced in Scotland, it is uncertain whether that divorce would be recognised in the home jurisdiction, which might continue to recognise the original civil partnership.

It is also possible to imagine a scenario in which a couple split up, with a divorce action taking place in Scotland and an action to dissolve the original civil partnership taking place in the home jurisdiction. The Scottish Government needs to consider the views of the home jurisdiction. The wishes of the couple and the views of the home jurisdiction may be different, and both are entitled to have their views heard. If Scotland were to allow marriages of persons in non-Scottish civil partnerships and the other jurisdiction objected, that might—at least in theory—raise issues about the general recognition of Scottish marriages with Scotland. There is also a need to consider whether Scotland should be prepared to allow all same-sex partners from anywhere in the world to marry here, or just those who are ordinarily resident here.

One option might be just to change non-Scottish civil partnerships to marriages when a couple who are resident in Scotland are unable to do so in the jurisdiction in which they registered their partnership. A couple wishing to change their civil partnership to a marriage would be best doing so in the home jurisdiction for the civil partnership, where possible. That would avoid the potential complication of having two civil partnerships.

Our approach to addressing the complex issues that I have just outlined is amendment 14, which will allow ministers to extend by order the categories of civil partners who could change their civil partnership in Scotland by having a marriage ceremony here. That will enable civil partners in a partnership that is registered outwith Scotland to marry in Scotland. The order-making approach will enable the Government to consult fully and to consider all the issues in detail. It will also give us the opportunity to discuss the issues with other relevant jurisdictions. Any such order would be subject to affirmative procedure. The Government will consult in 2014 on whether to make such an order and on whom it should cover.

I stress that if we decide after we have consulted that all civil partners should be covered, then the power in the order will be wide enough to allow us to do that. The consultation will form part of our work on the review of civil partnerships. We will give the consultation priority next year, given the evidence that has been presented to the committee and the points that the committee has made. Regardless of whether an order is made, the Government will report to Parliament on the outcome of the consultation.

For those reasons, I invite Marco Biagi to seek to withdraw amendment 10 and I invite the committee to support amendment 14.

The Convener: Thank you, cabinet secretary. John Mason has a question.

John Mason: I tried to intervene on the matter during the cabinet secretary’s speech. This is not an area of which I have detailed knowledge, but as I understand it Marco Biagi’s argument is that there will always be inconsistencies and that there will always be cases in which a relationship is recognised on one side of a border but not on the other. The cabinet secretary seemed to argue that we want a much tidier solution, but I am not entirely convinced by his argument that a tidy solution is possible. Will it always be the case that some relationships will be recognised in some jurisdictions but not in others?

Alex Neil: First, this is a very complex issue that requires further consideration so that we get it right. It clearly requires further consultation not just in Scotland but with jurisdictions outwith Scotland.

Secondly, I have some sympathy with John Mason’s point that looking at every possible scenario in every country of the world would be difficult to do, so from that point of view the area might never be totally tidy. However, I think that it could be a lot tidier than it is at present.

In terms of volume, we know that most issues will be cross-border issues within the United Kingdom and, next, they will be issues with Europe and transatlantic jurisdictions. Very few cases will involve African or Asian countries. We never know what laws will be passed in any other country in the world, the vast majority of people whom the legislation will affect will be from UK, Europe, and north Atlantic jurisdictions. It is important that we take the time to get what we propose as right as we can.

Christian Allard: I would like reassurance about the consultation that you have spoken about. Can we ensure that transgender communities are involved in it? We heard from James Morton of the Scottish Transgender Alliance about particular issues regarding civil partnerships in Scotland.

Alex Neil: The consultation will be very wide. In fact, we will consult widely with the committee as well. My task all along with the legislation has been to take people with us, if we can.

I know that some of the principles that the legislation contains are somewhat controversial, but we have moved on and are now looking at the practicality of how we apply the principles that were approved at stage 1. I hope that we can maximise the consensus throughout Scotland, including all the various interest groups and the committee.

09:30

John Finnie: Good morning, cabinet secretary. My colleague Marco Biagi used a couple of phrases to describe our options. The first was “do-it-now”, which would be my general preference, given that we are dealing with the situation now. He also referred to people going home; given the association of the phrase “go home” with a pernicious campaign by another Administration, that does not seem to be an attractive option, if it means that people whom we would welcome in Scotland would have to return home. I accept that there are administrative difficulties in that regard.

My inclination is that we should do what we think is right. Given the range of people whom you would require to consult, and given that there are some countries in Europe in which the approach to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people is not at all positive, can you give an undertaking that the general policy approach on the matter will be, as far as possible, to enable all same-sex couples with foreign civil partnerships to marry in Scotland?

Alex Neil: Absolutely, and that is why I need time to get the approach right. It is very tempting to do it now, but if we get it wrong, we will defeat the purpose that you just outlined in your last sentence, which is to ensure that we maximise the opportunity in law for most of the people who wish to convert to be able to do so. That is why a further period of consultation is required. The objective is not just to allow the conversion, but to ensure that we minimise barriers, either in terms of interaction with other jurisdictions or our own internal law, for those who wish to convert their civil partnership to a marriage.

John Finnie: Can you help me on the process, cabinet secretary? If we are going to do it, does it matter what the other jurisdictions say, or is the consultation about the administrative arrangements that will be associated with facilitating the change?

Alex Neil: Let me clarify. The purpose of consulting other jurisdictions is not that they will dictate to us what we are going to do. That is not what we mean by consultation.

There are two broad areas in which we need to consult. The first concerns other jurisdictions’ interpretation of any change in the law in Scotland, because we want to ensure that we do not do something in our law that makes it more difficult for people from elsewhere to achieve their objective of converting a civil partnership into a marriage.

Secondly, we want to identify whether other jurisdictions have plans to change in the immediate future their laws in any way that might impact on the changes that we would make through primary legislation in Scotland. If we identify changes in other parts of the UK or elsewhere in Europe that are relevant to what we are doing, we can ensure that we try to accommodate them and ensure as widely as possible that we take down any barriers to achieving our objective, which is to allow people in Scotland to convert their civil partnership to a marriage.

John Finnie: I am trying to imagine what might hold up that process.

Alex Neil: There are loads of things. I have given examples of what might hold up the process, including couples marrying or having civil partnerships from elsewhere in the UK or in Europe where the law is applied differently with regard to recognising couples in Scotland who have lived outwith the country for a period, or who have not been here for a long time but have a civil partnership here and want to convert.

As I outlined in my introductory remarks, it is a very complex issue, but my objective is exactly the same as Marco Biagi’s: to maximise the opportunity not just for a civil partnership to be converted to marriage but for that to be widely recognised, and not to create unforeseen or unnecessary difficulties either in Scotland or elsewhere for couples who want to do that. I am just asking for time to consider the complexities, to consult more widely—including with the groups that Christian Allard mentioned—and to come back to the committee to see whether, between us, we can get it right. I intend to do that quickly.

The Convener: I have concerns about people who have been living in Scotland and are in a civil partnership, but who were not born here or did not have their civil partnership conducted here. They may have been living here for 10 or 15 years, and might not have the financial means to go abroad to be married.

Concern has also been expressed that people who are in civil partnerships here who want to get married would have to live apart for a year before they could do so, which would cause all sorts of problems. The issue certainly needs to be tidied up, but could it be tidied up and a decision made before the bill is passed?

Alex Neil: I point out the distinction between the bill being passed and its implementation. I do not think that it is realistic to say that we could get the complexities sorted out before stage 3 without substantially holding up the bill’s progress, which I do not want to do. However, I can give the committee a commitment that if we get the order-making power in place we will complete the process and lay the orders before the committee for approval before we implement the bill. As I have said, I give the committee an absolute guarantee that it will be done quickly. I do not want the matter hanging around for months or years on end.

The Convener: So, do we have your definite assurance that you will reach a decision on this?

Alex Neil: Absolutely.

The Convener: I call Marco Biagi either to wind up or to indicate whether he will press or withdraw his amendment.

Marco Biagi: I will wind up first, given that everyone else has spoken.

I note that there were no direct attacks on the competence of my amendments and that all the comments related to implementation. However, I am a bit worried about the cabinet secretary’s remark about consulting jurisdictions. Even if the consultation looked only at Europe, we would still be talking about a great number of jurisdictions. I quite deliberately cited the example of Poland, which has a constitutional ban on same-sex marriage. The fact is that we are never going to have our same-sex marriages recognised over there, so the problems that I mentioned are going to happen.

I realise, though, that the real issue is the overlapping set of laws in the UK. Nevertheless, a strong part of me says that neither Northern Ireland nor any other UK jurisdiction should have a veto over Scottish domestic legislation. I have sympathy for John Finnie’s comments in support of my amendments and acknowledge that, whatever we do, we are just not going to reach an entirely clean solution. The area that I am really looking at and with regard to which I was slightly disappointed by the cabinet secretary’s initial comments—although I have been reassured by his later remarks—is the desire to maximise in Scotland the availability of registration of marriage for people in foreign civil partnerships. There is a general feeling that the original comments about residents going back to their home jurisdictions might not be appropriate, and I think that the cabinet secretary has listened to what we have had to say on the matter.

On that basis, I am content to seek to withdraw amendment 10.

Amendment 10, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 11 to 13 not moved.

Section 7 agreed to.

After section 7

The Convener: Amendment 14, in the name of the cabinet secretary, has already been debated with amendment 10.

Alex Neil: Before I formally move amendment 14, I want to make it clear that I have listened to and take very seriously members’ comments and am therefore happy to come to the committee with a draft consultation and timescale early in the new year to reassure members about our intentions.

The Convener: Thank you.

Amendment 14 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Section 8—Change of qualifying civil partnership into marriage

The Convener: Group 5 is on power to provide for effect of changing civil partnership into marriage or of renewed marriage or civil partnership following change of gender. Amendment 15, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 19 and 35. If amendment 19 is agreed to, I will not be able to call amendments 18 and 20, from the previous group, because of pre-emption.

Alex Neil: The amendments follow the report by the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee. The DPLRC suggested that it is unnecessary for regulations to make provision on the effect of a couple in a civil partnership changing their relationship to marriage through administrative means, and we agree with that. The legal effect for the couple will be the same regardless of whether they use the administrative route to change their civil partnership registered in Scotland to a marriage or whether they go through a marriage ceremony. Amendment 15 will remove the reference to the regulations on the administrative route making provision on the effect of using that route. Amendment 19 will extend section 9, which is on the effect of changing a civil partnership to a marriage, so that it covers those who make the change through the administrative route as well as those who make the change through having a marriage ceremony.

Section 28 empowers the Scottish ministers to make regulations on renewed marriage and civil partnership ceremonies following gender recognition. Section 28(2)(h) currently allows any such regulations to make provision on the effect of entering into a renewed marriage or civil partnership. The DPLRC suggested that the power for the regulations to make provision on the effect of entering into a renewed marriage or civil partnership is unnecessary. Again, the Government agrees with the DPLRC’s recommendation. Entering into a renewed marriage or civil partnership is not intended to have any distinct legal effect. Paragraphs 9 and 10 of schedule 2 to the bill already make provision that the continuity of a marriage or a civil partnership is unaffected by the issuing of a full gender recognition certificate. Accordingly, amendment 35 will remove section 28(2)(h) on regulations making provision on the effect of entering into a renewed marriage or civil partnership.

I move amendment 15.

Amendment 15 agreed to.

Amendment 16 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Amendment 17 not moved.

Section 8, as amended, agreed to.

Section 9—Effect of marriage between civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership

Amendment 19 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Amendments 21 to 24 not moved.

Section 9, as amended, agreed to.

Section 10—Persons who may solemnise marriage

09:45

The Convener: The next group is on corrections and other minor amendments. Amendment 25, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 27, 30 and 33.

Alex Neil: These amendments relate to relatively minor matters. Amendment 25 corrects a minor drafting error. Section 8(1)(a)(ii) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 is being amended by the bill. That section refers to “marriages” rather than “marriage”, and the changes that the bill makes need to reflect the terminology in the 1977 act. With amendment 25, the changes made will reflect that terminology.

Amendment 27 relates to declarators of marriage: a court judgment that a valid marriage exists or existed between two parties. Such cases are rare but take place. Since April 2009, two cases have been initiated in the Court of Session, both in 2010-11. Section 21 clarifies the jurisdiction of the sheriff court in relation to declarators of marriage. It does so by amending section 8 of the Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973. Amendment 27 is a minor consequential amendment. It adds declarators of marriage to a list in section 8(1) of the 1973 act.

Amendment 30 will remove paragraph 8(2)(a) of schedule 2 to the bill. The Government has now concluded that the particular minor amendment that that paragraph makes is unnecessary.

Schedule 3 to the Gender Recognition Act 2004 makes provision on registration matters in Scotland following the issue of a full gender recognition certificate, or GRC. Under the 2004 act, the registrar general for Scotland is required to make an entry in the Scottish gender recognition register in relation to the person’s birth after receiving a copy of the full GRC. The bill currently extends that requirement to cases in which the applicant is in a marriage or civil partnership registered in Scotland. However, that is unnecessary. If a person receiving a full GRC was born in Scotland, the registrar general will continue to receive a copy of the certificate under the existing provisions of the 2004 act. If the applicant is in a civil partnership that is registered in Scotland but was not born here, there will be no Scottish birth entry to update.

Amendment 33 also corrects a minor drafting error. Paragraph 12(3) of schedule 2 to the bill provides that any regulations that are made “under paragraph 20A are subject to the negative procedure.”

Amendment 33 clarifies that as a reference to paragraph 20A of schedule 3 to the 2004 act.

I move amendment 25.

Amendment 25 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on no power to compel religious or belief bodies to carry out same-sex marriages. Amendment 38, in the name of John Mason, is the only amendment in the group.

John Mason: Section 2 of the United Kingdom Government’s Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013 provides that nobody, including a religious organisation, can “be compelled by any means … to—

(a) undertake an opt-in activity, or

(b) refrain from undertaking an opt-out activity.”

Those activities are defined in a table in section 2 of that act and include similar things to those in proposed new section 8(1D) of the 1977 act that section 10 of the bill would insert, such as religious bodies giving consent or authorising their celebrants to be involved in same-sex marriages.
Proposed new subsection (1D) states that no duty is imposed by other specific subsections. The Westminster protection is broader than that, referring to no person being “compelled by any means (including by the enforcement of a contract or a statutory or other legal requirement)”.

The aim of the amendment is not to remove the “nothing … imposes a duty” terminology but to bolster it by putting in the additional protection of not being “compelled by any means”. That is to give further protection for religious liberty and the rights of conscience of those groups and individuals who do not wish to participate in same-sex marriage.

The phrase “by any means” should cover, for example, the hire of public premises being made conditional on a religious body being a prescribed body that was able to conduct same-sex marriages. That is not currently covered by the limited terminology that no duty is imposed, and it would help to prevent a scenario occurring in which a religious organisation was refused the hire of a public building because it had not registered to carry out same-sex marriages.

I move amendment 38.

Alex Neil: I do not consider that amendment 38 is necessary, and I would appreciate John Mason agreeing to withdraw it.

Let me explain why. Throughout the process, the Government has recognised that religious bodies will have concerns. In our first consultation, we sought views on the best way of protecting religious and belief bodies that do not wish to take part in same-sex marriage. Following that consultation, we indicated that an opt-in system would be established so that religious bodies would have to apply to take part.

In addition, the bill already contains provision—in section 10—that makes it clear that it does not impose a duty to opt in and that it does not impose a duty on a person to apply for temporary authorisation. The bill even makes it clear that a person who is an approved celebrant for same-sex marriages will be under no duty to solemnise same-sex marriages. We have also agreed with the UK Government an amendment to the Equality Act 2010 to protect individual celebrants from discrimination actions. Considerable steps have been taken to protect bodies and celebrants, and I believe that that approach has been supported in the evidence that the committee has received.

Our view is that it is best to tackle the issue in the way that we have done in the bill. It is the bill that establishes same-sex marriage in Scotland. We have established an opt-in system and have said that the bill creates no duty to opt in. As a result, the approach that the bill takes to protections directly mirrors the approach that is taken on the establishment of same-sex marriage. Adding more provisions on that could cause confusion. In particular, it is not clear what is meant by the use in amendment 38 of the phrase “the enforcement of a contract or a statutory or other legal requirement”.

Including those words in marriage legislation might suggest that religious and belief bodies have a statutory role in marriage ceremonies beyond the role that they have under the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977.

I suggest that amendment 38 is unnecessary, given the comprehensive protections that are already in place to protect religious bodies and celebrants. If it were agreed to, it could cause confusion. Therefore, I invite John Mason to seek to withdraw it. I will be happy to meet him and others to discuss further the protection of religious bodies and celebrants, if that would be helpful.

John Mason: I thank the cabinet secretary for his comments, but I am afraid that I remain unconvinced by his assurances. He repeatedly emphasised the wording “the bill”. In a sense, that is exactly what concerns me and others in relation not just to amendment 38 but to a number of amendments. The issue that concerns some of us is the way in which other organisations might use their position in future. The specific example that I gave related to a local authority that did not wish to hire out premises to a church because that church did not toe the line on same-sex marriage.

I am not reassured by what the cabinet secretary said. I think that the bill needs to contain extra protection, because a considerable risk is presented to bodies that do not always agree with the local authority. In many cases, there is a good relationship, but occasionally that is not the case. Therefore, I feel compelled to press amendment 38.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 38 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 38 disagreed to.
The Convener: The question is, that section 10, as amended, be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Alex Johnstone: No.

John Mason: No.

The Convener: The dissent of Alex Johnstone and John Mason is noted. However, the only way to oppose any section in a bill, procedurally, is to lodge an amendment to leave out that section.

Section 10, as amended, agreed to.

Section 11—Registration of nominated persons as celebrants

The Convener: We move on to section 11 and to the language used in marriage declarations. Amendment 26, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Alex Neil: Amendment 26 follows a recommendation by the committee. When a body nominates celebrants to the registrar general to solemnise opposite sex marriage, the body has to show that the marriage ceremony that it uses is of an appropriate form. At the moment, a marriage ceremony is considered to be of an appropriate form as long as it is not inconsistent with declarations set out in the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977. Those declarations currently refer only to husband and wife. The committee recommended that gender-neutral declarations should be available as well.

We carried out a short consultation with religious and belief bodies on whether gender-neutral declarations should be available as well. In brief, the Free Church of Scotland and the Baptist Union of Scotland were wholly opposed, the Muslim Council of Scotland said that there should be no obligation to use gender-neutral declarations, the Salvation Army said that the change would not affect it, and the Humanist Society Scotland and the United Reformed Church were in favour.

Amendment 26 provides choice. If a religious or belief body wishes to use only gender-specific terms, that is fine, as is a decision by the body to use only gender-neutral terms. Similarly, a body would be free to use both types of terms if, for example, the terms used vary depending on the language that couples themselves want to use in their ceremonies.

I move amendment 26.

The Convener: No member has any points or questions to raise, so I invite the cabinet secretary to wind up.

Alex Neil: I shall forgo that right, convener.

Amendment 26 agreed to.

Section 11, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 12 to 14 agreed to.

09:59
Meeting suspended.

10:06
On resuming—

After section 14

The Convener: The next group is on effect of holding belief that marriage is between persons of different sexes. Amendment 39, in the name of John Mason, is grouped with amendments 43 and 44.

John Mason: Amendment 39 would make quite a short addition to the bill. It would insert the heading “Protecting expression of belief in marriage between persons of different sex” and the following section:

“For the avoidance of doubt, a belief in marriage as a voluntary union between one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others for life is a belief worthy of respect in a democratic society.”

It is a simple statement that I do not think that anyone could object to.

The purpose of the amendment is to reflect the extremely high level of public concern about same-sex marriage. We need to make absolutely certain that, should the law be changed, those who hold to the current definition of marriage will be fully protected. That goes beyond the frequently cited issue of preventing churches or religious celebrants from being required to marry same-sex couples. It is a wider issue.

It is, perhaps, difficult for some to appreciate the strength of deep personal conviction with which a great many people hold to the view that marriage can only be between a man and a woman. Belief in the current definition of marriage has been the mainstream, prevailing view in our society for centuries and is a key part of the faith of many Christians, Muslims, Jews and others. It is the hallmark of a democratic society to show tolerance and respect for those whose views may differ from the state’s position.

Paragraph 97 of the policy memorandum states:

“Many people and organisations hold the view that marriage can only ever be between a man and a woman. The Government has made clear its respect for this view.”

The director of Stonewall Scotland, Colin Macfarlane, told the committee that not believing in same-sex marriage does not make an individual homophobic.
“in any way, shape or form.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 5 September 2013; c 1397.]

Likewise, the committee’s stage 1 report states:

“We recognise the validity of perspectives on all sides of this issue ... We recommend to members of the Parliament to approach the Stage 1 decision with the same dignified tenor as our evidence sessions and with due respect for a diversity of views.”

The concept of respect for different views has come up a lot of times, and is something that I personally believe in strongly.

However, that view is not universally shared, and a lack of respect for those who disagree with same-sex marriage has been evident. For example, our own Deputy Presiding Officer, Elaine Smith, was verbally attacked and vilified for expressing her opposition to same-sex marriage, and I have to say that I have had some experience of that myself.

Should the redefinition of marriage be agreed by Parliament, it is vital that individuals and organisations who do not agree with the new definition feel free to express that disagreement without fear of reprisal. By agreeing to amendment 39, Parliament would be sending the strongest possible signal that intolerance of those who continue to believe in the previous definition of marriage will, itself, not be tolerated.

Amendment 39 expressly states

“a belief in marriage as a ... union between one man and one woman ... is a belief worthy of respect in a democratic society.”

I understand that that is key wording that is used by the European Court of Human Rights. Among other things, it will provide reassurance for public sector employees who believe in traditional marriage and put on a statutory footing assurances that the legislation will not penalise those who believe that marriage is only between a man and a woman.

In July last year, the Deputy First Minister said:

“our overriding concern will be to respect the variety of views that exist on this issue”.

I hope, therefore, that the committee and the Government will back amendment 39.

I will briefly address amendments 43 and 44, to which Richard Lyle will speak. Those amendments deal with specific issues. Amendment 43 deals with fostering and adoption, and amendment 44 deals with charitable status. They seek to clarify issues. I know that we will be assured that the amendments are unnecessary, but a lot of doubt remains because we have in the past had assurances that have, over time, not held water. If amendments 43 and 44 are not accepted, the danger is that that would send a message that it would be acceptable to discriminate against, for example, Christian parents who have traditional views, who could be prevented from fostering and adopting. Similarly, there is a risk that the Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator would start removing Christian and other religious groups from the charity register, as it has done before.

I move amendment 39.

Richard Lyle (Central Scotland) (SNP): As many members know, I have personal experience of how the system works. My wife and I adopted our daughter 31 years ago. Unlike in the TV soap operas, we did not wait two weeks; we waited six years. We had a weekly visit from a social worker, and I remember what the social worker asked us on those visits. Eventually, we got a six-week-old baby.

Should same-sex marriage become law, there is a real danger that prospective foster carers or adopters might be wrongly deemed homophobic if they reveal their opposition to same-sex marriage and therefore unsuited to the role of adoptive parent. I suggest that possible adopters are entitled to equal rights.

In paragraph 126 of the policy memorandum, the Government says that it will consider amending existing fostering guidance

“to make it clear that a would-be fosterer should not be rejected just because of his or her views on same sex marriage.”

That is welcome, but it does not go far enough. It also suggests that the Government is aware of the dangers. It is my experience that that consideration needs to be enshrined in law and not just detailed in a letter to agencies.

In his reply to a written question, the cabinet secretary stated:

“It would not be appropriate for prospective and current foster carers who oppose same sex marriage to have their suitability to foster children questioned just because of opposition to same sex marriage.”

He went on to say:

“opposition to same sex marriage is not by itself sufficient to make a person unsuitable to provide foster care.”—[Official Report, Written Answers, 12 November 2013; S4W-018023.]

I do not know whether that answer will reassure prospective foster carers who have strong views on same-sex marriage, as I have, but if that is the Government’s position, it should have nothing to fear from amendment 43, and I invite the cabinet secretary to support it. I trust that all members of the committee will agree that it would be a terrible injustice for everyone concerned if otherwise suitable foster carers or adopters were turned down because of their views on marriage. The legislation should therefore include a provision that states that views on the nature of marriage cannot be taken into consideration during the process of approving prospective foster carers or adoptive parents.

Childless couples who wish to adopt and therefore have to go through various emotional concerns are worried about the bill, and I believe that we should alleviate their fears. I therefore ask members to support amendment 43.

10:15
The aim of amendment 44 is to ensure that an organisation’s charitable status cannot be removed because that organisation believes in traditional marriage. Scottish civic society is teeming with charitable organisations, as John Mason has said, which, due to their religious ethos, could be uncomfortable with same-sex marriage. Many such organisations have publicly said so. The loss of their charitable status could lead to their closure, which would have a hugely detrimental impact on the vulnerable people who rely on the services that they provide.

Despite previous ministerial assurances regarding the future of Catholic adoption agencies, the Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator is currently in the process of removing charitable status from St Margaret’s Children and Family Care Society, because St Margaret’s gives preference to married couples. I know the society well, as we applied to adopt through it 30 years ago, although, unfortunately, it did not have any children at the time.

That which politicians currently say will not happen may very quickly become normal practice if there are no robust legal protections in place. Amendment 44 would simply ensure that OSCR could not consider an organisation’s position on same-sex marriage when assessing its charitable status. If, as it seems, it is not the Government’s intention that a body’s charitable status should be at risk because of its views on marriage, it should support amendment 44, which would put the matter beyond doubt.

I invite the cabinet secretary to support amendment 44, and also amendment 43.

The Convener: If members have any questions to ask, the cabinet secretary can answer them in his winding-up speech.

John Finnie: John Mason talked about a deep personal commitment to his faith, and I do not doubt for one second that that is entirely the case for him and for a number of people who would support amendment 39. I hope that, likewise, he will recognise that there are also a number of people—including me—with a deep personal commitment to equality and social justice. That is how I see the line in relation to the proposed legislation before us.

John Mason spoke about vilification. I join him in condemning anyone, on either side of the debate, who has been responsible for that. I have received what I would describe as intemperate communications directed to me, too, and such things are not at all helpful in our democratic process. Perhaps it shows people’s strength of feeling, but it should not be condoned—we should all be civil to one another.

I am grateful to the several organisations that have provided briefings, and I will quote one of them, from the Equality Network. I choose that organisation because it is an umbrella group. I will read some of the comments that it has made.

The Equality Network contends that amendment 39 “is discriminatory, would undermine general freedom of speech rights, and is ill-defined.

It is discriminatory because it singles out a belief that marriage can only be between a man and a woman as being worthy of particular respect. This discriminates against people who hold other views”—

I include myself in that, obviously—

“for example that marriage can be between people of the same sex—surely that view is equally worthy of respect in a democratic society? The introduction of same-sex marriage is intended to give same-sex couples the same status as mixed-sex couples, but this cannot be achieved if it is written into the bill that a belief in mixed-sex marriage only is worthy of respect.

The amendment would undermine general freedom of speech rights because if a particular belief is enshrined in legislation as being worthy of respect, there is a presumption that the Parliament intends that all other beliefs are less worthy of respect. The belief that marriage can only be between a man and a woman may be interpreted by the courts to be deserving of a higher level of respect than other beliefs, because the amendment singles it out for mention as worthy of respect. But surely all other beliefs that a person may hold, whether that be about nuclear weapons, income inequality, divorce, or any other subject, are equally worthy of respect in a democratic society?”

Significantly, the briefing further describes the amendment as being

“also ill-defined because it does not specify what ‘worthy of respect’ means. What are the practical consequences intended to be, in law? What would the enforcement mechanism be?”

I respect John Mason’s right to lodge his amendment 39, but I will certainly be opposing it strongly.

The Convener: Marco Biagi wishes to comment. Any other member may comment, too. The cabinet secretary will then address those points, if applicable, and then John Mason will wind up.
Marco Biagi: Is it not the right of the cabinet secretary, under standing orders, to speak straight after the mover of the lead amendment?

The Convener: No. The cabinet secretary just has the right to speak in the debate.

Marco Biagi: Okay. I just wanted to make sure that I did not offend the cabinet secretary by speaking before him.

Alex Neil: Never.

Marco Biagi: I take a view that is very similar to that of John Finnie. I have been appalled by many of the things that have been said by people who claim to be on the same side as me in the debate. I have also been appalled by many of the comments that have been made to me by the other side. Yesterday, for example, I received an email in which I was asked:

“Would you vote to allow ritualised child sacrifice to allow the Church of Satan to be true to its faith?”

We do not get anywhere by saying that one side is better or worse than the other. Both sides in the debate have views that are worthy of respect. That is why I agree with John Finnie in saying that to single out and cover only one belief in the bill would send out a difficult message to society in general and, potentially, to the courts.

On Richard Lyle’s amendment 43, on adoption and fostering, and amendment 44, although I understand where he is going—that opposition to same-sex marriage is not a homophobic perspective—I would be concerned about the amendments’ unintended consequences. For example, when an adoption agency is trying to find a place for a child who has spent previous time—perhaps a long period—with a same-sex couple and is looking to move them to another family who might object to those arrangements, I would be concerned that that would become a material consideration. I appreciate what he is trying to do in protecting the generalities of the situation, but the specifics are difficult. I am sure that the cabinet secretary will address more generally how the views of prospective adoptive parents are already broadly protected in this area.

I, too, will oppose the amendments in the group.

The Convener: I ask the cabinet secretary to confirm in his response that the bill does not interfere with religious or belief organisations and that they have the option to opt in.

Alex Neil: Absolutely—as per my previous contribution. First, I absolutely agree that people should not be vilified for holding any point of view on either side of any of the arguments on the issue. Everybody is entitled to their point of view. If you look at the package of measures around not just the bill but the amendments to the Equality Act in 2010, you will see that in the changes that will be announced by the Cabinet Secretary for Education and Lifelong Learning to any requirement for change to the guidelines on education and in the Lord Advocate’s guidelines on prosecution, the Government has sought to take a very balanced approach and to accommodate the extension of freedom, or of rights, for same-sex couples while protecting the rights of religious organisations and celebrants. I will not support anything that disturbs that balance because it is very important.

I do not consider that amendment 39 is necessary. There is nothing in the bill that could stop persons expressing the belief that marriage is between one man and one woman. That is, of course, a belief that is worthy of respect in a democratic society. Section 14 makes it clear that existing rights to freedom of speech are unaffected by the introduction of same-sex marriage. I am concerned about an amendment of the nature of amendment 39. If we were to put provisions in the bill that purport to increase freedom of speech protections, that would raise questions about whether other areas where there are no specific legislative provisions, such as abortion and divorce, should be included.

It is not entirely clear what “belief worthy of respect” would mean in law in any case. The suggested provision could mean different things to different people. For example, the provision could be taken to mean that a belief could not be criticised in any way. I am sure that that is not the intention; nevertheless, it could be interpreted in that way.

On amendment 43, I do not consider it necessary or appropriate to amend the law on adoption or fostering following the introduction of same-sex marriage. It is already the case that views on same-sex marriage cannot in and of themselves disqualify anyone from becoming a foster carer or an adoptive parent. It is the welfare of the child that is absolutely essential.

Potential foster carers and adopters are assessed on their ability to provide safe, loving and nurturing home environments for children. That has always been and will continue to be the case. The assessment process is designed to ensure that decisions on suitability are not made on the basis of one view, characteristic or experience but must consider carers’ whole ability to meet children’s needs. Views on same-sex marriage are likely to be irrelevant and should not prevent prospective adoptive parents or foster carers from being successful in their applications; indeed, that is already set out in law. Again, I do not think that amendment 43 is required.

I also do not think that amendment 44 is required. Nothing in the bill would adversely affect an organisation’s charitable status as a result of its beliefs on marriage. Given that, under section 14, freedom of speech is not affected by the introduction of same-sex marriage in Scotland, religious and belief bodies are entitled to hold views and preach or express them freely, provided that that does not constitute a public disorder or incite violence, as outlined in the Lord Advocate’s prosecutorial guidance on same-sex marriage.

Decisions on charitable status are for the Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator, but the bodies in question must act within the law. Charities may express views on any matter in furtherance of their charitable purposes and, in doing so, should not jeopardise their charitable status. On that basis, it is extremely unlikely that a church, say, could lose its charitable status by speaking out against same-sex marriage. OSCR has advised that where charity trustees express views on behalf of the charity—for example, in relation to same-sex marriage—that are unconnected with the charity’s purpose, that would be an issue of trustee conduct rather than one of charitable status.

Finally, an amendment to the Charities and Trustee Investment (Scotland) Act 2005 in respect of views on same-sex marriage might have unintended consequences. For example, it could cast doubt on the ability of a charity to express a view on other issues and might result in our having repeatedly to amend the 2005 act to make provision for each issue.

On that basis, I urge the committee to oppose these amendments.

John Mason: I thank everyone who has contributed to the debate.

I very much share John Finnie’s view about the commitment to equality. I think that that is what we are all trying to achieve here, and I welcome the comments that we should all be civil in the way in which we conduct the debate.

It has been claimed that amendment 39 is discriminatory in highlighting only one belief and not referring to other equally valid beliefs. However, that is the current position in the courts, which tend to discriminate among the protected characteristics in the Equality Act 2010 and favour certain characteristics over others. Although I agree with Marco Biagi’s point that we cannot say that one side is better than the other and that all should be treated equally, I simply note that one of the faults of the 2010 act—as it happens, I sat on the committee that considered that legislation and which also discussed this very point—is that at the time the Government refused to say that all the protected characteristics were equal. For that matter, it also refused to put them into a hierarchy.

Nevertheless, the experience before and since the passing of the 2010 act has been that in practice the courts create a hierarchy. In a sense, they are forced to do so because when faced with two conflicting protected characteristics they have to choose one over the other. It might be disputed by others but some of us feel that under the Equality Act 2010 the religion and belief protected characteristic is put at the bottom of the pile and other characteristics are put higher up. In short, we are not starting from a position of equality or with a level playing field. People of a religious persuasion feel that they are being discriminated against and the point of my amendment is not to cover everything but to create a little bit more balance—

Marco Biagi: Will you take an intervention?

John Mason: Absolutely.

Marco Biagi: I appreciate that there can be a difference between feeling and reality in such situations, but are you arguing that that is the feeling or that it is the reality? If you are arguing that it is the reality, are you able to substantiate that argument with reference to cases that have gone against religious interests?

10:30

John Mason: The obvious example is the Lillian Ladele case. The issues that it raises are covered to a greater extent by some of the other amendments that deal specifically with public sector employees. In the Ladele case, an individual employee’s conscience was given no room for manoeuvre against the overriding alleged responsibility of a local authority, despite the fact that the local authority had the freedom and the ability to provide a service flexibly. That is the type of case—it is not the only one—in which it seems that, when there is a conflict between different protected characteristics, the religion and belief characteristic is at the bottom of the pile.

The cabinet secretary mentioned the Lord Advocate’s guidelines, but we had two Queen’s counsel before the committee who, while they took quite different views on a number of issues, agreed that the Lord Advocate’s guidelines carry very little weight. I agree with the cabinet secretary that balance is important, but that is exactly the point of my amendment: it tries to bring a bit more balance to what is inherently an unbalanced situation.

I press amendment 39.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 39 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.
Siobhan McMahon: The bill does not protect civil registrars who do not wish to officiate at same-sex marriages. The Scottish Government claims that, as registrars conduct a civil function, it is not appropriate to allow them an opt-out on conscientious grounds. However, a scenario in which a long-standing member of staff is required to do something against their conscience that has never previously been part of their job is surely one in which employees should be protected. Registrars face having their job transformed around them and, since the Scottish Government is responsible for that transformation, it is incumbent on it to provide protection for those who are disproportionately affected.

There are other areas in which, in a free society, conscientious objections are respected. The right of doctors to refuse to participate in an abortion is an example, as is the right of conscientious objectors not to fight in times of war and the right of atheists not to participate in religious observance in schools. Public bodies are able to fulfil their duties while respecting the conscientious objections of all their employees. If there is no disruption to the carrying out of a civil function, why should there not be scope for conscientious objections to be respected?

It is perfectly clear that reasonable accommodation could be made to the effect that a registrar would be able to opt out of solemnising same-sex marriage as long as the service provision was not unduly disrupted. The bill should therefore contain a specific conscience clause that requires local authorities to allow civil registrars to opt out of performing same-sex marriages, as my amendment 40 proposes.

With regard to amendments 41 and 42, the important principle of reasonable accommodation should be prioritised in assessing how to fulfil the public sector equality duty that is contained in the UK Equality Act 2010. The public sector equality duty places on public authorities a duty to have regard to the need to eliminate discrimination, advance equality of opportunity and foster good relations, which includes the need to tackle prejudice.

Many organisations such as churches and religious charities are at the forefront of tackling social problems in their area—for example, by working with the homeless or providing food banks. It must be made clear that the PSED should not be used to deny religious organisations that are known to be opposed to same-sex marriage the ability to provide public contracts or to hire public buildings, as many churches do. Public bodies should seek to make reasonable accommodation for religious groups in order to facilitate those organisations to maintain their ethos.

That principle has not been implemented to date—as is exemplified in the case of the Catholic adoption agencies—and there is concern that churches that do not marry same-sex couples may be targeted by overzealous officials and public bodies. For example, a local authority may claim that it would be in breach of the PSED if it were to give a grant towards the cost of a community project to, or to enter into a contractual relationship with, a local church if that church were unwilling to marry same-sex couples. Similarly, public sector employees may find themselves being asked to act against their consciences if they believe in traditional marriage. Nobody who works in or seeks a career in the public sector in Scotland should have their equality and diversity credentials or their suitability for employment disputed merely because they hold the existing view of marriage, whether expressed or not.

The aim of the amendments is, therefore, to ensure that public authorities continue to operate in partnership with bodies that hold to a traditional belief in marriage and accommodate their employees who may hold such views. Surely, that is reasonable and right in a free society.

I move amendment 40.

Marco Biagi: Again, I just want to give my view rather than ask a question. There are extensive protections of freedom of speech at the very highest levels of legislation, including in the European convention on human rights. We have heard extensively from a legal panel how strong those protections of freedom of expression and freedom of religion are.

It is interesting that Siobhan McMahon mentioned the example of atheists in schools. Although protection exists for children to be opted out of religious observance by their parents, there is no equivalent protection for teachers, who may have to be present during religious observance. That is a better parallel to draw in this context, and the situation is best dealt with by management within schools. It would be a foolish headteacher who made an atheist teacher supervise religious observance if they had substantial objections and were incredibly uncomfortable there.

I understand that there is now also protection of private views on same-sex marriage arising from case law involving a case in which someone lost their job as a result of their views against same-sex marriage. I do not recall the exact case, but it was in England and the case was pursued under the Equality Act 2010.

John Mason cited earlier the case of Lillian Ladele. She was one of four people who took a group action, and one of her colleagues who had been forbidden to wear a crucifix at work, which denied her right to free expression, had her claim upheld. That protection exists. She was reinstated because the crucifix was not felt to contravene any policy and was not thought to be something that the employer could reasonably restrict. The protections exist, and the picture is more mixed than we have occasionally heard about here.

I suggest to Siobhan McMahon that nothing in the bill can override the Equality Act 2010. Although my interpretation of the Equality Act 2010 differs from hers, she should remember that equality is reserved to the UK Parliament and is not a function that we can override. Therefore, if her problem is with the Equality Act 2010, her problem lies elsewhere and her amendments will not have the effect that she seeks. Perhaps if she joined others on the committee in wishing to have those powers in Scotland, she might have greater luck with her amendments.

John Mason: I speak briefly in support of amendments 40, 41 and 42.

Surely, the public sector—frankly, any employer—should be willing to give a bit of flexibility. Marco Biagi supported that when he suggested that a headteacher has the flexibility to determine which teacher he or she would put in a particular class if somebody might be “incredibly uncomfortable”. That is exactly the point. Most local authorities, for example, have such flexibility because they have a number of staff in a particular department.

That also applies in the national health service in the context of abortion. The NHS provides abortions—some of us agree with that; some of us disagree—but there is flexibility for individual employees for whom that is a matter of conscience. There is a bit of movement in that regard, which seems to work pretty well, and there seems to be no good reason why we should not provide such flexibility in the bill.

That is not to override the Equality Act 2010. As I was trying to say earlier, the act leaves quite a lot of open space, in that the protected characteristics are neither put in a hierarchy nor said to be all equal. By making comment in that area, we would seek not to override but to supplement the Equality Act.

Employees have all sorts of beliefs, and a reasonable employer will make provision for reasonable accommodation, but of course one or two employers might not be keen to do that.

John Finnie: I will be brief, because we covered the matter at stage 1 and went round all the potential anomalies that could arise. I say simply that I expect public and civil servants to do their duty. I will not support the amendments in the group.

John Mason: Do you agree that it is right that staff have flexibility in relation to abortion?

John Finnie: Are you equating legislation that brings about equality with abortion?

John Mason: The same argument would be that all public sector employees—all nurses—should take part in abortions because that would be equality.

The Convener: If there are no other comments from members, I will make a brief comment. I am concerned about the proposed approach, which I think stigmatises the group that we are trying to protect by suggesting that marriage for same-sex couples is so terrible that registrars should be able to refuse to take part in it. That undermines the bill’s intention, which is to provide same-sex couples with equality.

Alex Neil: I do not support amendment 40. A civil registrar is a public servant who provides only a public function—that distinguishes them from a religious celebrant, who acts in a religious capacity. The registration of civil partnerships by civil registrars in Scotland has worked well. Over the past eight years around 4,800 civil partnerships have been registered. There is no reason to expect that the solemnisation of same-sex marriage by civil registrars would not work just as well.

Civil registrars in Scotland are employed by local authorities and it is for each local authority to decide how best to provide services for the registration of marriage. We would expect a local authority to handle with sensitivity a registrar who objected to same-sex marriage on the ground of religion or belief. It would be best for any such discussions to take place locally, rather than have the Scottish Government or Parliament try, at national level, to cut across the employer-employee relationship. Amendment 40 is therefore not only unnecessary but represents unwelcome interference in a civil function. I invite Siobhan McMahon to withdraw amendment 40.

John Mason: Will you give way?

Alex Neil: May I finish? The Government cannot accept amendment 41, which is drawn extremely widely. The Government is concerned about the potential ramifications of the proposed approach. Subsection (1) of the proposed new section that would be inserted by amendment 41 provides:

“A public authority must take steps to ensure that, in carrying out its functions, the belief of an employee of the authority mentioned in subsection (3)— which is that marriage may only be between one man and one woman—

“is respected.”

It is unclear what public authorities would need to do to comply with subsection (1). For example, it is not clear what an employer should do if another employee of the public authority or a person who received services from the authority indicated that he or she did not respect the view that

“marriage may only be between one man and one woman.”

Another employee or person receiving public services might, in a democratic society, take a different view on marriage. That is why it is often necessary to balance competing rights and views, as the bill tries to do. Proposed new subsection (1) appears to place one set of opinions above another. We do not think that that is right.

Subsection (2) of the proposed new section raises even more problems. Again, its application looks very wide. It seems to provide that a public sector employee would be able to opt out of providing or assisting with any service on the ground that the employee held the belief that

“marriage may only be between one man and one woman.”

That suggests that a public sector employee could refuse to deal with correspondence or a request on any subject from a couple in a same-sex marriage. Such an approach would seem to lead to discrimination against LGBT people. As I have said, the Government cannot accept that.

10:45

The better approach is that which we have taken in the bill. We provide protection for religious bodies and celebrants who do not wish to solemnise marriage because of clear religious concerns that relate to a religious function. The bill includes a section that makes it clear that freedom of speech is unaffected by the introduction of same-sex marriage. We are giving our public authorities the freedom to take their own commonsense decisions on how their services should be provided. That will allow them to take account of religious beliefs that their employees hold without placing them in a legislative straitjacket. A legislative straitjacket that could lead to discrimination would be inadvisable.

The purpose of amendment 42 appears to be to specify that a public authority must not withhold a service or the use of a facility from a person because of that person’s belief that

“marriage may only be between one man and one woman.”

We do not believe that the amendment is necessary. I am happy to place it on the record that a person or body that believes that “marriage may only be between one man and one woman” should not on the basis of that belief alone suffer detriment when using a public authority’s service or facility.

The scenario was previously presented of a local authority refusing to let publicly owned buildings to churches that believe that marriage should be between one man and one woman. The Government considers that a local authority that acted in such a way would be at risk of a successful claim for discrimination being made against it.

The public sector equality duty in the Equality Act 2010 means that public bodies cannot discriminate when the act says that that is unlawful. If a public sector body discriminated against a person or body because their religion or belief is that marriage should be between one man and one woman, that would be unlawful discrimination. Given that, I do not consider that amendment 42 is necessary.

Another reason for opposing amendment 42 is that it would have wider implications. As I have said, there is a danger in singling out views on same-sex marriage. People and bodies might have strong views on a wide variety of issues. I remember that when I was in primary 7—that was a long time ago—a teacher refused to dance the twist because of her religious beliefs. We cannot build every eventuality into the legislation. If we mention only views on same-sex marriage in legislation, questions will be asked about whether people can suffer detriment because of other views. It is clear that we want to avoid that.

I understand the concerns that religious bodies have expressed. As well as making it clear that people who oppose same-sex marriage should not be denied public services or the use of public facilities, we have made it clear that religious bodies that oppose same-sex marriage will continue to be eligible for grants and public services. As I have said, any public services that are provided through public money must in principle be available to all. However, the views of a body that provides a service are irrelevant as long as the service is provided to everybody without discrimination.

There is also a risk that amendment 42 could amount to regulating discrimination and could stray into the reserved area of equal opportunities.

For all the reasons that I have given, I invite Siobhan McMahon to withdraw amendment 40 and not to move amendments 41 and 42.

Siobhan McMahon: I appreciate the cabinet secretary’s comments. They are helpful, but I am trying to achieve such a position in law, so I will press my amendments.

The convener said that she is concerned about people being stigmatised. I, too, am concerned about that, which is why I lodged the amendments. If we are talking about equality, we should think about both sides when we discuss the issues.

I appreciate John Mason’s comments. The intention is to supplement provisions rather than take anything away.

I agree that it might well be foolish for teachers to do what Marco Biagi described but, given that that happens, we must have more protection in the bill. I will press my amendments.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 40 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 40 disagreed to.

Amendment 41 moved—[Siobhan McMahon].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 41 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 41 disagreed to.

Amendment 42 moved—[Richard Lyle].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 42 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 42 disagreed to.

Amendment 43 moved—[Richard Lyle].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 43 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Against
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 44 disagreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on holding belief that marriage is between persons of different sexes not to constitute commission of certain offences. Amendment 45, in the name of Richard Lyle, is grouped with amendment 46.

Richard Lyle: Although section 14 of the bill is intended to provide reassurance regarding freedom of expression, I believe that it falls short of fulfilling the pledge that was made in a Government press release dated 25 July 2012, that the “legislation will be accompanied by important protections for freedom of speech”.

Section 14 simply refers to “nothing in this Part affecting the exercise of free speech. In other words, it applies only to the bill. The concerns about free speech do not necessarily arise with the bill directly, because they relate to the impact of the redefinition of marriage on how existing public order law will be applied. The Lord Advocate’s new guidelines on hate crimes may be insufficient because, although opposition to same-sex marriage would not be a sole ground for prosecution, it could be a factor. Protection for something as fundamental to a democratic society as free speech should not be reduced to being in guidance; it should be in legislation.

It must be recognised that, in a completely new situation in which marriage has been redefined, the effectiveness of existing rights could be reduced. What is needed to protect free speech is clear protection within public order legislation. There are clear precedents for free speech clauses in legislation at both Westminster and Holyrood. The incitement to religious hatred offence that Westminster created in legislation in 2006 includes a robust free speech clause; likewise, the Scottish Government included a free speech clause in section 7 of the Offensive Behaviour at Football and Threatening Communications (Scotland) Act 2012 to protect religious debate in the light of the threatening communications offence. I suggest that the same principle should apply to the redefinition of marriage. In order to protect free speech and debate, free speech clauses should be included in public order legislation.

The committee should also note that the issue was considered sufficiently important to merit inclusion in the recent Westminster legislation on same-sex marriage. The UK Government’s Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013 adds a specific subsection to the English offence of incitement to hatred on grounds of sexual orientation, making it clear that disagreeing with same-sex marriage does not breach that law. My amendment 45 is designed to ensure that similar Scottish offences contain proper regard for freedom of speech. I ask the committee to support my amendments.

I move amendment 45.

The Convener: Do members have any questions?

John Finnie: I would like to comment on Mr Lyle’s amendments. To single out a particular area is not helpful for criminal law or indeed the criminal justice system. Context is everything, and before a prosecution took place, criminal intent would need to be shown. I therefore think that what Mr Lyle proposes is completely redundant; you would have a list as long as your arm if you were to single out areas in that way. Criminal intent has to be shown, so Mr Lyle’s amendments are redundant and I will oppose them.

The Convener: I now invite the cabinet secretary to speak.

Alex Neil: The Government does not support amendments 45 and 46 because we think that they are unnecessary. Criticism of same-sex marriage is, in itself, an offence and the bill will not change that situation. People can freely express that they are opposed to same-sex marriage provided that they do not incite hatred or intend to cause public disorder. That was made clear in the Lord Advocate’s prosecutorial guidance. To be frank, I find it unbelievable that people say that that will have minimal impact when, in effect, it contains instructions to prosecutors in Scotland.

Where there is a prosecution under section 38 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 or section 1 of the Offensive Behaviour at Football and Threatening Communications (Scotland) Act 2012, it would be for the behaviour that the person adopted rather than for their expressing their views on same-sex marriage. It would not be appropriate to make a person immune from prosecution if the motive for any actions that would otherwise be criminal happens to be opposition to same-sex marriage.

Amendment 45 provides that “any discussion or criticism of marriage which concerns the sex of the parties”— whether they are for or against same-sex marriage—

“must not be taken of itself to be an offence under” section 38 of the 2010 act. The amendment is therefore unnecessary. The offence in the 2010 act requires “Threatening or abusive behaviour” that is intended or “likely to cause ... fear or alarm”.

Therefore, simply expressing a view on same-sex marriage would not by itself amount to an offence.

Similarly, amendment 46 seeks to ensure that “any discussion or criticism of marriage” at a regulated football match “which concerns the sex of the parties to marriage”—whether the speaker is for or against same-sex marriage—“must not be taken of itself to be an offence under” section 1(1) of the 2012 act. Again, the amendment is unnecessary. The offence in the 2012 act requires engagement in offensive behaviour that “is likely ... or ... would be likely to incite public disorder.” Simply expressing a view on same-sex marriage would not by itself amount to such an offence. On those grounds, the Government opposes amendments 45 and 46.

11:00

The Convener: I invite Richard Lyle to wind up and press or withdraw amendment 45.

Richard Lyle: I intend to press amendment 45. I am exercising my free speech in regard to the points that have been raised in committee today. With the greatest respect to the cabinet secretary, I believe that the Government has not fulfilled its pledge to ensure that the legislation is accompanied by important protections for freedom of speech. I therefore press amendment 45.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 45 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)

Against

Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 46 disagreed to.

The Convener moved—[Richard Lyle].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 46 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)

Against

Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 46 disagreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on indemnification of losses arising from certain legal actions. Amendment 47, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is the only amendment in the group.

As members know, the Presiding Officer has determined that the potential costs associated with amendment 47 are such that they would cause the bill to require a financial resolution under rule 9.12 of standing orders. No such resolution is currently in place. I intend to allow the debate to proceed and I will ask Alex Johnstone to wind up the debate. However, I will not ask him whether he is pressing or withdrawing the amendment today. That will be held over to our second day of stage 2 consideration of the bill. Whether I am able to put the question on the amendment at that final point, if Alex Johnstone presses it, will depend on whether a financial resolution is in place at that time.

Alex Johnstone: I begin by expressing my gratitude to the members of the legislation clerking team who assisted me in drafting amendment 47, which facilitates—today, at least—the opportunity to debate the principles that lie behind it.

It is not like me to ask the Government to spend money. In this case, I console myself by telling myself that amendment 47 is an amendment of last resort—that is a more comfortable position for me to find myself in.

The amendment seeks to create a duty on the Scottish Government to use public funds to indemnify those who suffer financial loss from any discrimination claims against them that result from the bill. The Government has gone out of its way to reassure people who have concerns about the bill and who oppose same-sex marriage that they have nothing to fear and that nobody, other than perhaps several registrars, will be forced to act against their conscience. If that is so, the minister should have nothing to fear from deploying his hefty financial resources as insurance for those who are worried about finding themselves in court. If the Government is confident that its assurances are correct, surely the financial resources that are at its disposal will never be required.

Amendment 47 would provide invaluable peace of mind for the clergy and for others who are witnessing the long-standing definition of marriage being redefined around them. Looking at some of the material that has been made available to us, I suggest that the ending of what the Government sees as one form of discrimination might in effect create a whole new class of discrimination and that, regardless of what happens to my amendment, it is reasonable to expect some form of challenge to materialise in the courts. Christian and other religious groups as well as individuals with strongly held views fear that the legal system will be used to trample them underfoot.

The letter that I received from the Presiding Officer makes it clear that my amendment cannot be agreed to by the committee without a financial resolution being in place. Whatever happens, there might well be challenges and, where they materialise, there is always a risk that the Government might not be able to make its views stand up in court. As a consequence, I believe that the bill carries a financial risk and it would be responsible for the Government to put a financial resolution in place. In conclusion, I ask the cabinet secretary whether the Government will at this stage consider the need for a financial resolution on the bill.

I move amendment 47.

Alex Neil: We are certainly making history this morning. Alex Johnstone has just asked me to spend public money.

The Government asks the committee to reject amendment 47. We assume that its major purpose is to protect religious bodies that do not wish to solemnise same-sex marriage and to protect others who hold beliefs that are against such marriage. The Government has recognised the concerns of religious bodies and celebrants with regard to same-sex marriage by establishing an opt-in system for those who wish to take part. The bill also contains provisions that make it clear that it does not create any obligations to take part, and we have agreed with the UK Government that amendments should be made to the Equality Act 2010, for example, to protect individual celebrants. More generally, we have put in the bill a provision to put beyond doubt our view that freedom of speech is unaffected by the introduction of same-sex marriage.

Given that context, I will explain why the Government opposes amendment 47. First, we have put in place robust protections. As has been shown in evidence to the committee, it is clear that religious bodies and celebrants are not going to be forced to marry same-sex couples. It is also clear that freedom of speech will continue to exist, which means that there is no need for the amendment.

Secondly, it appears that the amendment is very wide. It could open a Pandora’s box by extending to the Scottish ministers a requirement to indemnify commercial service providers who face a discrimination claim after refusing to provide a service to a same-sex married couple on the basis of a belief that a marriage is between a man and a woman. At the moment, if a letting agency refuses to let a flat to a same-sex couple, that could be discrimination. In the future, that couple could be married. It would appear that, under the proposals in the amendment, if the letting agency did not let the flat to the couple because it believed in traditional marriage, the agency would have to be indemnified by the Scottish ministers against any discrimination claim. Refusing to provide such a service to a same-sex couple would be discrimination.

Thirdly, the amendment could lead to inequality of arms, which is a technical phrase used by lawyers in court cases. A defender in an equality case could hire a top Queen’s counsel, knowing that the Government would have to pay, whereas the person who raised the action would not be in the same position. As a result, the legal support that was available to the two sides in the case might be different, which is a position that I do not find fair or just. Also, the Government is being asked to sign a blank cheque with the possibility of some of the money being used to support outright discrimination.

In summary, the Government opposes amendment 47 on the grounds that there is no need for it given the robustness of the existing protections, and that it could support people who have been carrying out blatant acts of discrimination. It could also lead to inequality of arms in court cases and would require us to sign a blank cheque.

Finally, I am happy to answer the question whether the Government will lodge a financial resolution in respect of the amendment. I will discuss the matter with colleagues in Government. However, given that the protections are robust, we do not see a need for the amendment, and we have concerns about its potential discriminatory nature. I therefore think that it may well be unlikely that we would wish to lodge a financial resolution, and I ask the committee to reject the amendment.
The Convener: I ask Alex Johnstone to wind up but not to press or seek to withdraw his amendment.

Alex Johnstone: I acknowledge the views that the minister has expressed and accept that the nature of the amendment is such that it is drawn extremely widely. Its purpose was to facilitate the discussion that we have had. In my view, it is conceivable that a more specifically drawn amendment might be lodged at a later stage. I believe that the key issue at this stage has become that of a financial resolution, and the minister has given a commitment that that will be properly considered in due course.

I conclude by saying that, as I said previously, I believe that the bill, once it has completed its course, will inevitably lead to a small number of cases that are similar to the cases that have been used as examples when we discussed other amendments this morning. Consequently, I am confident that legal costs will be incurred as a result of the legislation and that, should a case be brought in which the Government is challenged and defeated, the costs will fall to the Government. Consequently, I believe that it would be appropriate to have a financial resolution on the bill.
15 January 2014

Dear Douglas

MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND BILL EDUCATION GUIDANCE RESPONSES BY SCOTLAND FOR MARRIAGE

1. This letter provides the Committee with an update on the draft education guidance and on the responses by Scotland for Marriage which did not reach us.

Education guidance

2. As the Committee will be aware, the Government sought views last year on draft guidance on the conduct of relationships, sexual health and parenthood education in Scottish schools. The draft guidance is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2013/09/7899

3. Education colleagues have met bodies on request and met a further body (the National Parent Forum of Scotland) on 14 January.

4. As we have previously indicated, the two main areas which have attracted attention are:
   - Paragraph 10 on teachers, children and young people not being made to do something against their conscience.
   - Paragraph 16 on parental right of withdrawal from specific lessons on sexual health education.

5. The Government is now considering the detailed points by those who responded to the consultation and by the bodies we have met. It is going to take us a couple or months to consider the details of the points made.

6. At the moment, we are aiming to issue the final guidance towards the end of March 2014.
Responses by Scotland for Marriage

7. As you will recall, the Government agreed to analyse responses to consultation on the draft Bill which were organised through Scotland for Marriage but did not reach us.

8. We will double-check the exact figures. However, our initial tally is that 84% of these responses followed the standard text prepared by Scotland for Marriage, which we have already seen and have taken account of. The figures (which, as indicated, we will double-check) are:

- Total responses: 4,253
- Standard responses: 3,592 (84%)
- Non-standard responses: 661 (16%)
- Blank non-standard responses: 19 (around 3% of non-standard responses).

10. Annex B of the analysis also showed how many of the responses through organisations which we received followed the standard text prepared by the various organisations. Annex B is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2013/06/2782/10

Of the 2,371 responses we received through Scotland for Marriage, 1,955 (82%) followed the standard text. This is in line with what we have found for the additional responses.

11. We are now proceeding to analyse the non-standard responses and will write to you again shortly.

Yours sincerely

SIMON STOCKWELL
Family and Property Law
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

2nd Marshalled List of Amendments for Stage 2

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

Sections 1 to 6                                   Schedule 1
Sections 7 to 27                                   Schedule 2
Sections 28 to 33                                   Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

After section 14

Alex Johnstone

47 After section 14, insert—

<Indemnification of losses arising from certain legal proceedings

(1) This section applies where any relevant legal proceedings are brought against a person (“person A”) by or on behalf of another person (“person B”).

(2) The Scottish Ministers must indemnify person A against any net financial losses incurred by person A as a result of the relevant legal proceedings.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), person A’s net financial losses are to be calculated by—

(a) adding together—

(i) the amount paid by person A in respect of person A’s own legal costs in connection with the relevant legal proceedings,

(ii) any other costs incurred by person A as a direct result of the relevant legal proceedings, and

(iii) any sums which person A has been ordered to pay to person B as a result of the relevant legal proceedings, and

(b) subtracting from the total obtained under paragraph (a) any sums which person B has been ordered to pay person A as a result of the relevant legal proceedings.

(4) In this section, “relevant legal proceedings” means any legal proceedings arising from a claim that person A has discriminated against another person by virtue of person A holding or acting on the belief that marriage may only be between one man and one woman.”.>

Section 21

Alex Neil

27 In section 21, page 16, line 8, at end insert—

<( ) In subsection (1), before paragraph (a) insert—
After section 21

John Mason

48 After section 21, insert—

<CHAPTER
REVIEW OF SAME SEX MARRIAGE

Review of effect of same sex marriage

(1) The Scottish Ministers must, before the end of the 5 year period, review—

(a) the effects of the introduction of marriage of persons of the same sex (“same sex marriage”),

(b) the operation of the provisions on same sex marriage in this Act,

and lay before the Scottish Parliament a report of the review.

(2) The review must, in particular, consider—

(a) the operation and effect of section 8(1D) of the 1977 Act (inserted by section 10(2)(b) of this Act),

(b) the operation and effect of section 14 of this Act,

(c) any court proceedings relating to the operation or effect of any provision relating to same sex marriage.

(3) In carrying out a review under this section, the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after the report has been laid before the Parliament, publish the report in such manner as they consider appropriate.

(5) In this section—

“court proceedings” includes proceedings of—

(a) an employment tribunal within the meaning of section 1 of the Employment Tribunal Act 1996,

(b) an Employment Appeal Tribunal within the meaning of section 20 of the Employment Tribunal Act 1996,

(c) the European Court of Human Rights,

(d) the European Court of Justice,

“the 5 year period” means the period of 5 years beginning with the day on which any provision relating to same sex marriage comes into force.>

Schedule 2

Alex Neil

50 In schedule 2, page 37, line 38, after <with> insert <this Part of>
Alex Neil

51 In schedule 2, page 38, line 3, at end insert—

<(  ) in the definitions of “full gender recognition certificate” and “interim gender recognition certificate”, for “5 or 5A” substitute “4C, 5, 5A or 5D”.

Alex Neil

52 In schedule 2, page 38, line 9, leave out from beginning to <certificate,”,> in line 13

Alex Neil

53 In schedule 2, page 38, line 32, at end insert—

<(5) A consular marriage in relation to which the relevant part of the United Kingdom is Scotland is to be treated for the purposes of this Act as having been solemnised in Scotland.

(6) In subsection (5)—

“consular marriage” means a marriage solemnised in accordance with Part 1 of Schedule 6 to the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013 and any Order in Council made under it, “relevant part of the United Kingdom”, in relation to such a marriage, means the part of the United Kingdom determined in accordance with paragraph 1(2)(b) of that Part of that Schedule for the purposes of the marriage.”.

Alex Neil

54 In schedule 2, page 38, line 40, leave out from beginning to <Scotland,> in line 43

Alex Neil

55 In schedule 2, page 39, line 2, leave out <of consent by the applicant’s spouse> and insert <by the applicant’s spouse that the spouse consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate (“a statutory declaration of consent”)>

Alex Neil

56 In schedule 2, page 39, line 4, leave out from second <the> to end of line 7 and insert <no such declaration by the applicant’s spouse is included.>

Alex Neil

57 In schedule 2, page 39, line 17, leave out <for subsections (2) and (3) substitute> and insert <—

( ) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The certificate is to be a full gender recognition certificate if the applicant is neither married nor in a civil partnership.”,

( ) in subsection (2) (as substituted by paragraph 3 of Schedule 5 to the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013)—

(i) after first “is” insert “also”,

3
(ii) paragraph (a) is repealed,

( ) in subsection (3) (as so substituted)—

(i) in paragraph (b), at the beginning insert “subject to subsection (3C)(b),”,

(ii) in paragraph (e), at the beginning insert “subject to subsection (3C)(c),”,

( ) after subsection (3B) (as so substituted) insert—>

Alex Neil

58 In schedule 2, page 39, line 18, leave out <(2)> and insert <(3C)>

Alex Neil

59 In schedule 2, page 39, line 18, after <is> insert <also>

Alex Neil

60 In schedule 2, page 39, leave out line 19

Alex Neil

61 In schedule 2, page 39, line 26, leave out <(3)> and insert <(3D)>

Alex Neil

62 In schedule 2, page 39, line 30, at beginning insert <subject to subsection (2)(b),>

Alex Neil

63 In schedule 2, page 39, line 38, at beginning insert <subject to subsection (2)(c),>

Alex Neil

64 In schedule 2, page 39, line 40, leave out <(3A)> and insert <(3E)>

Alex Neil

65 In schedule 2, page 39, line 43, leave out <(3B)> and insert <(3F)>

Alex Neil

66 In schedule 2, page 39, line 43, leave out <(2)(c)> and insert <(3C)(c)>

Alex Neil

67 In schedule 2, page 40, line 36, after <consent> insert <(within the meaning of section 3(6D)(c)(i))>

Linda Fabiani

68 In schedule 2, page 41, line 20, at end insert—
Married person with interim certificate: issue of full certificate on application to the sheriff (Scotland)

(1) A person may make a summary application to the sheriff for the issue of a full gender recognition certificate where—
   (a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person, and
   (b) the person is a party to a protected Scottish marriage.

(2) The sheriff must grant an application made under subsection (1) if the sheriff is satisfied that—
   (a) the applicant was a party to a protected Scottish marriage at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,
   (b) the applicant is still a party to that protected Scottish marriage, and
   (c) the application was made within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.

(3) If an application is made under this section, the sheriff must give the applicant’s spouse—
   (a) notice of the application, and
   (b) if the sheriff grants the application, notice of the issue of the full gender recognition certificate.

(4) For the avoidance of doubt, where an application has been granted under subsection (2), the applicant is to be treated for the purposes of section 1(1)(b) of the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 as a person to whom an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued.”

Alex Neil

In schedule 2, page 41, line 38, leave out <4(2)(c)> and insert <4(3C)(c)>

Alex Neil

In schedule 2, page 42, line 13, leave out <Registrar General for Scotland> and insert <following persons on a copy of the proposed draft order—
   (a) the Registrar General for Scotland,
   (b) the Gender Recognition Panel, and
   (c) such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate>

Alex Neil

In schedule 2, page 42, line 20, after <spouse> insert <or civil partner>

Alex Neil

In schedule 2, page 42, leave out line 31

Alex Neil

In schedule 2, page 42, line 37, at end insert—
Regulations under sub-paragraph (1) may in particular make provision for fees to be payable in respect of things done under the regulations.

Alex Neil

In schedule 2, page 42, line 37, at end insert—

Regulations under sub-paragraph (1) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.

Linda Fabiani

In schedule 2, page 42, line 37, at end insert—

Regulations under sub-paragraph (1)(a) must provide that where a full gender recognition certificate has been issued to a person under section 4E, the marriage must not be registered unless the person’s spouse consents in writing to that registration in the form prescribed by the regulations.

Alex Neil

In schedule 2, page 43, line 11, leave out <4(2)(b)> and insert <4(3C)(b)>

Linda Fabiani

In schedule 2, page 43, line 11, leave out <or 4C> and insert <, 4C or 4E>

Alex Neil

In schedule 2, page 43, line 19, leave out <4(2)(c)> and insert <4(3C)(c)>

Alternative grounds for granting applications

PART 2

ALTERNATIVE GROUNDS FOR GRANTING APPLICATIONS FOR GENDER RECOGNITION CERTIFICATES

Introductory

The Gender Recognition Act 2004 is further amended in accordance with this Part of this schedule.

Alternative grounds for granting applications

In section 2 (determination of applications), after subsection (3A) insert—

“This section does not apply to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.”.

After section 3B insert—

This section applies to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with this section.
(2) The Panel must grant the application if satisfied that the applicant complies with the requirements imposed by and under section 3D and meets the conditions in subsections (3) to (6).

(3) The first condition is that the applicant was a party to a protected Scottish marriage or a protected Scottish civil partnership on or before the date the application was made.

(4) The second condition is that the applicant—
(a) was living in the acquired gender six years before the commencement of section 27 of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Act 2014,
(b) continued to live in the acquired gender until the date the application was made, and
(c) intends to continue to live in the acquired gender until death.

(5) The third condition is that the applicant—
(a) has or has had gender dysphoria, or
(b) has undergone—
(i) surgical treatment, or
(ii) such other treatment as the Scottish Ministers may by order prescribe,
for the purpose of modifying sexual characteristics.

(6) The fourth condition is that the applicant is ordinarily resident in Scotland.

(7) Before making an order under subsection (5)(b)(ii) the Scottish Ministers must consult the following persons on a copy of the proposed draft order—
(a) the Gender Recognition Panel,
(b) such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.

(8) An order under subsection (5)(b)(ii)—
(a) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances,
(b) may amend any enactment (including this Act).

(9) The Panel must reject the application if not required by subsection (2) to grant it.

Evidence for granting applications on alternative grounds

11D In section 3 (evidence), after subsection (9) insert—
“(10) This section does not apply to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.”.

11E After section 3C (inserted by paragraph 11C) insert—
“3D Evidence for granting applications on alternative grounds: Scotland

(1) This section applies to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.

(2) The application must include either—
(a) a report made by a registered medical practitioner, or
(b) a report made by a registered psychologist practising in the field of gender dysphoria.

(3) If the application is based on the applicant having or having had gender dysphoria—
(a) the reference in subsection (2) to a registered medical practitioner is to one practising in the field of gender dysphoria, and
(b) that subsection is not complied with unless the report includes details of the diagnosis of the applicant’s gender dysphoria.

(4) Subsection (2) is not complied with in a case where—
(a) the applicant has undergone or is undergoing treatment for the purpose of modifying sexual characteristics, or
(b) treatment for that purpose has been prescribed or planned for the applicant, unless the report required by that subsection includes details of it.

(5) The application must also include a statutory declaration by the applicant that the applicant meets the conditions in section 3C(3) and (4).

(6) The application must include—
(a) a statutory declaration as to whether or not the applicant is married or a civil partner,
(b) any other information or evidence required by an order made by the Scottish Ministers, and
(c) any other information or evidence which the Panel which is to determine the application may require,

and may include any other information or evidence which the applicant wishes to include.

(7) If the applicant is married, the application must include a statutory declaration as to whether the marriage is a protected Scottish marriage.

(8) If the applicant is married, and the marriage is a protected Scottish marriage, the application must also include—
(a) a statutory declaration of consent (within the meaning of section 3(6D)(c)(i)) by the applicant’s spouse (if the spouse has made such a declaration), or
(b) a statutory declaration by the applicant that no such declaration by the applicant’s spouse is included.

(9) If the application includes a statutory declaration of consent by the applicant's spouse, the Panel must give the spouse notice that the application has been made.

(10) If the Panel which is to determine the application requires information or evidence under subsection (6)(c) it must give reasons for doing so.”.
Membership of Panels determining applications on alternative grounds

11F In schedule 1 (Gender Recognition Panels), in paragraph 4, after sub-paragraph (3) insert—

“(4) But a Panel need not include a medical member when determining an application under section 1(1)(a) for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.”.

Alex Neil

75 In schedule 2, page 43, line 28, leave out from beginning to “5D(1),” in line 29 and insert, after “section” insert “3D(6)(b),”.

Alex Neil

33 In schedule 2, page 43, line 31, after <20A> insert <of Schedule 3>

Alex Neil

76 In schedule 2, page 43, line 33, after <section> insert <3C(5)(b)(ii) or>

Alex Neil

34 In schedule 2, page 43, line 33, leave out from <which> to <Act> in line 34

Section 28

Alex Neil

35 In section 28, page 30, leave out lines 29 and 30

After section 28

Alex Neil

77 After section 28, insert—

<Grounds of divorce: interim gender recognition certificate followed by full certificate

(1) The Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1)(b) (issue of interim gender recognition certificate as ground on which decree of divorce may be granted), at the beginning insert “subject to subsection (3B),”.

(3) After subsection (3A) (as inserted by section 5(3)) insert—

“(3B) Subsection (1)(b) does not apply where, under the Gender Recognition Act 2004, the Gender Recognition Panel issue a full gender recognition certificate to the person to whom the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.”>
After section 29

Alex Neil

36 After section 29, insert—

Form of register of marriages

In section 54 of the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965 (regulations), after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) Regulations prescribing the form of a register of marriages under section 32 may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.”.

Section 31

Alex Neil

37 In section 31, page 31, line 28, at end insert—

( ) An order under subsection (1) may make different provision for different purposes.

Section 32

John Mason

49 In section 32, page 32, line 2, at end insert—

(2A) The day appointed for the provisions for the marriage of persons of the same sex to come into force must be a day after the day when amendments to the Equality Act 2010 to give effect to the amendments mentioned in subsection (2B) have been or are being brought into force.

(2B) The amendments are—

(a) in section 10 (religion or belief), after subsection (3), insert—

“(3A) For the avoidance of doubt, the protected characteristic of religion or belief may include a belief that marriage may only be between a man and a woman.”,

(b) in section 149 (public sector equality duty), after subsection (9), insert—

“(9A) Compliance with the duties in this section requires ensuring that a belief that marriage may only be between a man and a woman is respected and that no person may suffer any detriment as a result of holding or expressing such a belief.”.
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

2nd Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- a list of any amendments already debated;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the second day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Review of effects of introduction of same sex marriage
48

Applications for gender recognition certificates by long-term transitioned persons
50, 74, 75, 76

Further minor amendments and corrections
51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 67

Meaning of “protected Scottish marriage”: consular marriages
53

Successful applications: when full gender recognition certificate to be issued and when interim gender recognition certificate to be issued 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 69, 71, 73

Issue of full gender recognition certificate by sheriff where spouse has not declared consent to marriage continuing 68, 70, 72

Appeals against issue of gender recognition certificate
29

Registration of qualifying Scottish marriages and civil partnerships: power to charge fees
31
Grounds of divorce: interim gender recognition certificate followed by full gender recognition certificate 77

No commencement of same sex marriage provisions until certain amendments to Equality Act 2010 in place
49

Amendments already debated

Powers to make subordinate legislation: power to make different provision for different purposes, consultation, procedure etc.
With 4 – 28, 32, 34, 36, 37

Power to provide for effect of changing civil partnership into marriage or of renewed marriage or civil partnership following change of gender
With 15 – 35

Corrections and other minor amendments
With 25 – 27, 30, 33

Indemnification of losses arising from certain legal actions
On its own – 47
Present:

Christian Allard
John Finnie
John Mason
Siobhan McMahon

Marco Biagi (Deputy Convener)
Alex Johnstone
Margaret McCulloch (Convener)

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 2).

The following amendments were agreed to (without division): 27, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 33, 76, 34, 35, 77, 36, 37.

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division)—

48 (For 2, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
49 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)

Amendment 47 (previously moved) was, no member having objected, withdrawn.

The following provisions were agreed to without amendment: sections 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 32 and 33, and the long title.

The following provisions were agreed to as amended: section 21, schedule 2, and sections 28 and 31.

The Committee completed Stage 2 consideration of the Bill.
The Convener: The second item on the agenda is stage 2 of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. This is our second meeting at stage 2. I welcome Alex Neil, the Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing, and his accompanying officials. Officials are not permitted to participate in the formal proceedings.

Linda Fabiani has joined us to speak to her amendments. Everyone should have with them a copy of the bill as introduced, the second marshalled list of amendments and the second list of groupings of amendments. There will be one debate on each group of amendments. I remind the committee that members who have not lodged amendments in the group but who wish to speak to them should indicate that by catching the attention of me or the clerk.

Only committee members are allowed to vote, and voting in any division is by a show of hands. It is important that members keep their hands clearly raised until the clerk has recorded the vote. The committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed each section of the bill, so I will put a question on each section at the appropriate point.

After section 14

The Convener: We start with amendment 47, which was debated at our previous meeting. As members know, the Presiding Officer has determined that the potential costs that are associated with this amendment are such that they would cause the bill to require a financial resolution. No financial resolution has been lodged. Under rule 9.12.6(a), the question on the amendment may not be put even if the amendment is pressed.

I will allow the cabinet secretary to make a brief comment if he wishes to do so.

The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing (Alex Neil): Thank you, convener, and happy new year to everybody here.

It might be helpful if I say a few words on why the Government has not produced a financial resolution as a consequence of amendment 47.

Alex Johnstone noted on day 1 of stage 2 that it was not like him

"to ask the Government to spend money."—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 19 December 2013; c 1736.]
I said on day 1 that it was unlikely that we would wish to lodge a financial resolution. Clearly, we need to take care in how we spend public money. Amendment 47 would give rise to potential costs, given that, as Alex Johnstone acknowledged, the amendment “is drawn extremely widely.”

In addition, and as we have made clear, the protections in the bill, and in the associated amendments to the Equality Act 2010, for religious bodies and celebrants are robust. Therefore, we have not lodged a financial memorandum.

I hope that that is a reasonable explanation of the Government’s position.

Alex Johnstone: I note the cabinet secretary’s comments with interest, but believe that there are still issues to be discussed. I therefore reserve my position in order perhaps to bring the matter back at stage 3. Consequently, I seek the committee’s leave to withdraw amendment 47.

Amendment 47, by agreement, withdrawn.

Sections 15 to 20 agreed to.

Section 21—Sheriff court jurisdiction in relation to declarator of marriage

Amendment 27 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Section 21, as amended, agreed to.

After section 21

The Convener: The first group is on review of effects of introduction of same-sex marriage. Amendment 48, in the name of John Mason, is the only amendment in the group.

John Mason: As is clear from the heading of the amendment—“Review of same-sex marriage”—it calls for a review, after five years, to see whether things have gone as expected.

Our previous understanding of marriage as a lifelong exclusive commitment between one man and one woman has been the norm in Scotland for centuries. The bill, which changes the definition of marriage, must therefore be considered radical whether or not one supports it. For many people, marriage is seen as a key foundational building block of society. Many people are unhappy about the definition being changed and have real concerns about what its implications might be—for example, in relation to civil liberties, on which many amendments have focused. For those reasons, there should be a commitment to review the legislation after five years.

Amendment 48 is not a sunset clause in the sense that the change would last only for five years—that is not the point. The point is that we should review what has happened and consider the implications and any tidying up that needs to be done to address the bill’s impact. If its impact has been minimal, a review would still be worth our while.

If, however, the legislation proves to have had severe negative effects, as some of us fear—for example, on the civil liberties of those who believe in traditional marriage—the review would serve as a means of addressing those effects.

I move amendment 48.

Alex Neil: I do not agree with amendment 48. The Government supports post-legislative scrutiny of legislation. We have, for example, recently responded to an inquiry by the Justice Committee into the effectiveness of the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003, and a parliamentary debate took place last week to discuss the outcomes of that inquiry.

I do not support amendment 48 for a variety of reasons. First, the amendment could be perceived as a sunset clause, and that is not the right thing to do. We cannot allow people to have same-sex marriages and then remove that right a few years later.

Secondly, amendment 48 concentrates only on some aspects of the bill. We will also wish to consider, in due course, the positive outcomes that the legislation will bring. The bill will allow same-sex couples to get married, and will improve the rights of transgender people. It will allow religious and belief bodies that want to solemnise same-sex marriage the opportunity to do so while protecting those that do not. So when we consider the impact of the legislation, we will want to look at its impact as a whole. I agree that we will need to monitor for impacts on civil liberties. I do not think that there will be any such adverse impacts, but monitoring is sensible. Equally, however, we will need to monitor whether there are positive outcomes; for example, a reduction in discrimination.

I suggest that amendment 48 is unhelpful. It would lay down specific requirements on what a review should consider, which could cut across what Parliament, the Government or others may want to do when considering the impact of the bill. I therefore do not support amendment 48 and invite the committee to reject it.

John Mason: I am a little disappointed that there is no sign of movement from the cabinet secretary. He says that something that is not a sunset clause “could be perceived as a sunset clause”.

However, I wonder where we would go with any legislation if we did not look at what the wording said, but instead considered what the perception of it might be. Although I accept that perception is important, as I said in my opening remarks, amendment 48 is not a sunset clause. Clearly it is not. Nobody is suggesting that, if the bill is passed, it should not continue. I am simply suggesting that there should be a review.

I take on board the cabinet secretary’s point that a review should perhaps be wider than the focus of amendment 48, but he or anyone else could have lodged an amendment to that effect. Perhaps we can consider that issue at stage 3. In reality, Parliament has not been good at reviewing legislation. That has partly been due to lack of time and committees’ other commitments. I think there is widespread agreement in Parliament that we should go back and review our work more, especially legislation that we have passed, to examine its impacts. Such a review may well be for good reasons, or to pick up any problems. I press amendment 48.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 48 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)

Against
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 48 disagreed to.

Sections 22 to 27 agreed to.

Schedule 2—Change of gender of married persons or civil partners

The Convener: The next group is on applications for gender recognition certificates by long-term transitioned persons. Amendment 50, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 74 to 76.

Alex Neil: Amendments 50 and 74 to 76 relate to persons who are long-term transitioned to an acquired gender. Persons who are acquiring a new gender can apply to the gender recognition panel for a gender recognition certificate. Section 3 of the Gender Recognition Act 2004 makes provision for the evidence that should normally be submitted, including evidence that relates to the diagnosis of gender dysphoria.

Section 27 of the 2004 act made provision for alternative evidence requirements for persons who had been long-term transitioned, but that section has now terminated, as a sunset clause, and no longer applies. The amendments are designed to reintroduce alternative evidence requirements for some long-term transitioned people.

Amendment 74 will make amendments to the 2004 act in order to make provision on the detailed procedure. Under the procedure, applicants can submit just one report, rather than the usual two. Because the bill that we are considering is about marriage and civil partnership, the applicant must be, or have been, in a marriage or civil partnership that was registered in Scotland.

The provision concerns persons who are long-term transitioned, so the applicant must have been living in the acquired gender for six years before the commencement of section 27 of the bill, which will introduce the schedule on gender recognition. The applicant must have, or have had, gender dysphoria, or have undergone surgery to modify sexual characteristics, or must have undergone other treatment, as laid down by an order made by Scottish ministers. The order-making power reflects the fact that some applicants may not have had surgery. Surgery may not have been available, or may not have been advised for medical reasons. Treatments may vary, so the order-making power will enable ministers to seek views on exactly what forms of treatment might be acceptable as evidence under the new procedures. Amendment 76 will ensure that any such order will be subject to affirmative procedure.

The amendments also contain an order-making power for ministers on any further information or evidence that applicants should provide under the new procedure. Amendment 75 will ensure that the order-making power is subject to negative procedure, and will make a technical change to the bill to reflect the fact that all orders under section 5D of the 2004 act, on streamlined procedures for civil partners to obtain full gender recognition certificates, will now be subject to affirmative procedure.

Amendment 50 is a consequential amendment that reflects that there will, in the future, be two parts to schedule 2 to the bill, because amendment 74 will introduce a new part 2 to the schedule.

I move amendment 50.

Amendment 50 agreed to.

09:45

The Convener: The next group is on further minor amendments and corrections. Amendment 51, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 52, 54 to 56 and 67.

Alex Neil: Amendments 51, 52, 54 to 56 and 67 relate to the change of gender of married persons or civil partners. They are, for the most part, technical amendments that will tidy up our provisions so that they dovetail appropriately with the provisions in the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013.

The 2013 act introduced same-sex marriage in England and Wales. It also made other changes, some of which extended to Scotland. The committee considered, and Parliament agreed to, a legislative consent motion to allow Westminster to legislate on devolved matters. However, when we introduced the bill, we could not take it for granted that the then Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Bill would be passed. As a result, there are currently some overlaps and inconsistencies between the two pieces of legislation.

Amendment 51 is a minor technical amendment. Currently, a gender recognition certificate may be issued under sections 4, 5 and 5A of the 2004 act. However, should the bill be enacted, it will also be possible for gender recognition certificates to be issued under new sections 4C and 5D of the 2004 act. Amendment 51 therefore reflects that, in the future, gender recognition certificates may be issued under more provisions in the 2004 act than is the case now.

Amendments 52, 55 to 56 and 67 relate to the provisions on statutory declaration of consent in paragraph 2 of schedule 2 to the bill. Amendment 52 will remove the definition of the term “statutory declaration of consent”. The 2013 act inserted a definition of “statutory declaration of consent” into the 2004 act, which will also extend to Scotland. However, it is slightly different from the definition in the bill. Amendment 52 will therefore remove any confusion that might arise as a result of there being two definitions of “statutory declaration of consent” that would both apply to Scotland.

Amendment 54 will remove proposed new section 3(6D)(b) of the 2004 act, which would be inserted by paragraph 3 of schedule 2. The provision would require an applicant to the gender recognition panel to provide a statutory declaration on where the marriage was solemnised. That is unnecessary, as the 2013 act already makes similar provision, which extends to Scotland.

Amendment 55 is a consequence of amendment 52. It will slightly expand proposed new section 3(6D)(c)(i) in the 2004 act to clarify that the statutory declaration that is referred to is a statutory declaration of consent by the applicant’s spouse that the spouse consents to the marriage continuing, or a statutory declaration that no such declaration by the applicant’s spouse is included in the application. The amendment will bring our provisions in the area more into line with the 2013 act, and will keep consistency in the application process for the gender recognition panel.

Amendment 67 is also a consequence of amendment 52 and is a minor technical amendment. It will ensure that the reference to “statutory declaration of consent” in proposed new section 4C(7) in the 2004 act refers to the updated definition as amended by amendment 55.

I move amendment 51.

Amendment 51 agreed to.

Amendment 52 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on meaning of “protected Scottish marriage”: consular marriages. Amendment 53, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Alex Neil: Schedule 2 to the bill amends the Gender Recognition Act 2004 to enable marriages that are solemnised in Scotland to continue when one or both parties change their gender and both parties wish to remain married.

The amendments to the 2004 act define a marriage solemnised in Scotland as “a protected Scottish marriage”. That definition includes a marriage solemnised overseas through UK consular services when the couple elect Scotland as the relevant part of the United Kingdom. Schedule 6 to the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013 introduces new provisions in relation to such consular marriages.

Amendment 53 amends the interpretation section of the 2004 act. That ensures that marriages that are solemnised under the new provisions in schedule 6 to the 2013 act are, for the purposes of schedule 2 to the bill, included as having been solemnised in Scotland, as long as the couple elected Scotland as the relevant part of the United Kingdom.

Finally, schedule 2 to the bill will continue to cover UK consular marriages when the couple elected Scotland and that took place under the current provisions of the Foreign Marriage Act 1892. Despite the rumours, I was not around at the time of that act being passed.

I move amendment 53.

Amendment 53 agreed to.

Amendments 54 to 56 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.
The Convener: The next group is on successful applications: when full gender recognition certificate to be issued and when interim gender recognition certificate to be issued. Amendment 57, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 58 to 66, 69, 71 and 73.

Alex Neil: Amendments 57 to 66, 69, 71 and 73 are designed to ensure that the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013, which was passed at Westminster, and this bill work effectively together.

In particular, schedule 5 to the 2013 act extends to Scotland. Schedule 5 amends the Gender Recognition Act 2004 and relates to persons who are in a marriage solemnised in England and Wales or overseas, or who are in a civil partnership registered in England and Wales. Schedule 5 extends to Scotland, as people in such marriages and civil partnerships may now live here. Therefore, schedule 2 to the bill and schedule 5 to the UK act both make provision extending to Scotland in respect of transgender people. The amendments in this group are aimed at ensuring that the provisions fit together.

Amendment 57 makes various changes to amendments to the 2004 act. The first change is that the bill no longer replaces section 4(2) and (3) of the 2004 act. That is already provided for by paragraph 3 of schedule 5 to the 2013 act, so there is no need for the bill to provide for that as well.

The second change is to add a new section 4(1A) to the 2004 act. That provides that an applicant to the gender recognition panel is to receive a full gender recognition certificate, or GRC, if the applicant is neither married nor in a civil partnership. The third change is consequential on that second change.

The fourth change is to amend for Scotland new section 4(3) of the 2004 act, as substituted by the 2013 act. New section 4(3) of the 2004 act currently lays down that an interim GRC will be provided if the applicant is in a marriage that is not a marriage that is registered in England or Wales or overseas, or if the applicant is in a civil partnership that is not registered in England or Wales. The changes will ensure that a person in a marriage that has been solemnised in Scotland who has spousal consent to stay in the marriage and a person in a Scottish protected civil partnership whose partner is transitioning on the same day can receive a full GRC.

Amendments 62 and 63 make similar changes. Amendment 62 will ensure that a person in a marriage that has been solemnised in England or Wales or overseas who has spousal consent to stay in the marriage can receive a full GRC. Amendment 63 will ensure that a person in a civil partnership that is registered in England or Wales whose partner is transitioning on the same day can receive a full GRC.

Amendments 58, 61, 64 and 65 just change the numbers of sections that are being added to the 2004 act to ensure that there is no duplication of section numbers that were added by the 2013 act.

Amendments 59 and 60 are consequential on amendment 57, and amendments 66, 69, 71 and 73 are consequential on amendment 58.

I move amendment 57.

Amendment 57 agreed to.

Amendments 58 to 67 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on issue of full gender recognition certificate by sheriff where spouse has not declared consent to marriage continuing. Amendment 68, in the name of Linda Fabiani, is grouped with amendments 70 and 72.

Linda Fabiani (East Kilbride) (SNP): Amendments 68, 70 and 72 implement one of the recommendations that the committee made in its stage 1 report. It recommended that "the requirement for spousal consent for gender recognition is unnecessary and should be removed."

It also noted that

"the non-transitioning spouse’s personal choice is sufficiently protected by the automatic grounds for divorce triggered by his or her partner’s seeking gender recognition."

Amendment 68 would enable a trans person who married in Scotland to obtain legal gender recognition without needing first to get written consent from their spouse. It would also ensure that the spouse had the right, at any time, to seek a non-contestable divorce on the grounds of the trans person’s gender recognition.

The right to legal gender recognition is an established human right that it should not be possible for another person to block. The rights of the trans person and their spouse must be balanced in the bill. As the bill stands, I do not believe that the right balance has been struck. Removing the requirement for written spousal consent for gender recognition will correct the balance and will ensure that trans people have the personal autonomy to which they are entitled.

There are many circumstances in which a married person may act in a way that has an effect on their spouse but in which there is no legal requirement to first obtain the spouse’s written consent. The trans person’s decision to start living as the other gender and, later, their decision to undergo gender reassignment surgery have a huge impact on their spouse, but there is no legal requirement for them to obtain spousal consent before taking either of those steps.

In contrast, the later issuing of a gender recognition certificate is the final administrative step of recognising the transition that has already taken place. It is an extremely important step for the trans person’s practical rights, because it means that their legal gender comes into line with their lived gender, but the practical effect on their spouse is minimal compared with that of the earlier steps of transition. It is therefore disproportionate to require the spouse’s written consent to be obtained.

As transgender equality develops around the world, an increasing number of European countries are treating legal gender recognition as an entirely personal administrative process. Of the nine European countries outwith the United Kingdom that have same-sex marriage, not one has a spousal consent requirement for gender recognition; and none of those countries has been subject to a human rights challenge because they do not have a spousal consent requirement. I believe that that illustrates that my amendments comply with the European convention on human rights. In fact, it is more likely that the bill could be challenged for infringing the rights of the trans spouse if the spousal consent requirement remains in the bill. It would be disappointing if we missed this opportunity to develop our laws in line with best practice.

10:00

Amendment 68 would insert new section 4E into the Gender Recognition Act 2004 and provide that a trans person in a Scottish marriage who does not have written spousal consent for their gender recognition and who therefore obtains only an interim gender recognition certificate from the UK gender recognition panel may then apply to the sheriff court to convert the certificate to a full certificate, which would bring their gender recognition into effect. The application would have to be made within six months of the issue of the interim certificate.

The route of an application to the sheriff court is proposed because the gender recognition panel operates on a UK-wide basis and it would be difficult for the panel to operate different rules for Scotland. Amendment 68 proposes a Scottish solution to the problem, and it would remove the need for spousal consent only for Scotland.

Amendment 68 would not require the sheriff to hold a hearing; in fact, that would be a very bad thing because it could turn the process into an expensive, slow and adversarial one. The role of the sheriff would be purely administrative in converting the interim certificate to a full one. The sheriff is well placed to do that because converting an interim certificate to a full one is exactly what the sheriff does at present in cases where a person with an interim certificate obtains a divorce.

Amendment 68 would also require that the sheriff notify the trans person’s spouse that the application for the full certificate has been made and that it has been granted. That would allow the spouse to apply for a non-contestable divorce if they wished to end the marriage. The amendment specifies that their right to do that would continue indefinitely, so they could take as long as they liked to decide.

Amendment 70 would provide that, when gender recognition is granted under the provisions of new section 4E of the 2004 act, a revised marriage certificate that showed the marriage as a same-sex marriage would be issued only with the spouse’s agreement. That would give the spouse the space to decide whether to seek to end the marriage without updated documentation related to the marriage being in circulation first.

Amendment 72 would ensure that the continuity of the marriage would not be affected by the issue of the full gender recognition certificate. That would mean that the spouse’s financial, parental and other rights associated with the marriage would not be affected in any way by the gender recognition.

I believe that these amendments would correct an imbalance in the bill and help to ensure that the bill delivers equality for transgender people and others. I ask the committee to support my amendments.

I move amendment 68.

Marco Biagi: I speak in support of this group of amendments, which as Linda Fabiani has pointed out would implement a recommendation that the committee came to unanimously in our stage 1 scrutiny.

The decision to transition gender is an intensely personal one. I have heard testimony not only from people who have transitioned but from the spouse of a trans person. I would not want to see that intensely personal decision become one that another person has a right to veto.

Marriage can lead to all kinds of changes. When you marry someone, all kinds of unforeseen circumstances can come up. The singling out of one particular change of circumstance, substantial though it is, is an unhelpful message when there are so many other things that could change as well.

Linda Fabiani’s amendments would provide very strong protections, including non-contestable divorce that would be available for ever. There is also the two years during which a trans person would have to live in the other gender before seeking the certificate, which would ensure that the partner would be aware of what was happening and would not be surprised by it. The amendments also seek to introduce the additional protection of the notification and the inability to get the new marriage certificate updated with the new details without consent.

As Linda Fabiani said, nowhere in Europe is the system proposed in the bill seen as necessary. If I was to get married, I would not want in any way to feel that I was owned by my spouse or that my spouse had any kind of veto over my personal life.

There are two separate strands in the procedures that we are talking about. There is the legal process of marriage to the other person, and then there is the very separate, personal and individual question of gender, and we must keep those two legal processes separate. That is why I will back the amendments.

John Finnie: I share the views of the two previous speakers, and I will support Linda Fabiani’s proposal, which was delivered in a very measured way and which shows that there are protections such as the automatic right to divorce and consent being required before the original marriage certificate can be redrawn.

If someone wants to reassign their gender, it is essentially a human right. The timetable of likely events as laid out by Linda Fabiani shows that all sides have been considered and the proposal is proportionate. The words that I would use that people would understand are “not fair”. The situation is not fair as it stands and the amendments would introduce a measure of fairness, so I hope that members will support it.

Alex Johnstone: I agree in principle with the amendments, and I wish to support that principle. However, I seek some reassurances in a key area.

My concern is that the removal of spousal consent for gender transition might, in certain cases, lead to problems. We know that there are such things as long-term estrangements and we are, of course, talking about marriage legislation, so the assumption would be that, when gender transition is taking place, a divorce will also take place. The amendments could create a situation in which gender transition taking place without a parallel arrangement relating to marriage could result in a gender transition taking place without the consent or the knowledge of an estranged spouse.

Alex Neil: I agree that Linda Fabiani introduced her amendments in a measured and comprehensive way, but I have to be honest and say that they do not reflect the Government’s preferred approach.

The bill removes the requirement for transgender people to divorce before obtaining a full gender recognition certificate, or GRC. In future, when both spouses wish to remain married, the gender recognition panel will be able to issue a full GRC. The Government does not consider that to be a spousal veto, as such. Instead, the bill ensures that both parties can stay in the marriage when it changes from being an opposite-sex marriage to a same-sex marriage, or vice versa. We are balancing rights, and we have tried to do that throughout the bill.

We agree that the issues are not straightforward. We accept that, other than England, most European countries that have gender recognition legislation and same-sex marriage do not have the same provisions on the spouse consenting to stay in the marriage. Also, in most cases, the fact that the applicant has to live in the acquired gender for two years before applying to the gender recognition panel protects the non-transgender spouse from a sudden change in circumstances. Generally, the non-transgender spouse has time to decide what to do. However, as we outlined in some detail in our response to the committee’s stage 1 report, that might not be true in all cases. As a result, amendments 68 and 72 do not reflect the Government’s preferred approach.

There are some drafting points in areas such as divorce. Also, on a substantive point, under amendment 68 the sheriff is given no discretion at all: as the amendments stand, the sheriff would have to issue the full GRC. As a result of amendment 72, the continuity of the marriage would be unaffected by the sheriff issuing the full GRC. Therefore, the marriage would change from opposite-sex to same sex, or vice versa, even when the non-transitioning spouse has not consented to the change.

Amendment 70 relates to the proposed regulations on registering marriages following gender recognition and seeks to provide that both spouses would need to consent to this registration. I appreciate the rationale behind this amendment, but, as it is in line with what we intend the regulations to provide, it could be argued that it is not really necessary. The regulations will run along those lines anyway.

In conclusion, amendments 68 and 72 do not reflect the Government’s preferred approach and, if they are agreed to, we will need to lodge further amendments at stage 3 to ensure that the proposed new procedures work effectively. That said, I am not suggesting that if the committee decided to agree to the amendments we would try to reverse them; instead, we would simply lodge the consequential amendments that we think would be required to ensure that the new provision worked properly.

Linda Fabiani: A number of interesting comments have been made. I say to Alex Johnstone that, as there would be a non-contestable right of divorce, I do not think that the spouse would be disadvantaged in any way if the couple have been apart for a long period of their marriage.

I think that amendment 68 strikes the balance very well between the rights of the two spouses. The committee identified that such a balance has to be struck and, indeed, the evidence from other countries makes the case. I have listened to and I take on board the cabinet secretary's comments, and I am glad that he clarified that there would be no desire to reverse these amendments.

Alex Neil: If they are agreed to.

Linda Fabiani: Of course, cabinet secretary.

If the amendments are agreed to, I would be happy for the Scottish Government to tidy up the wording at stage 3. I therefore press amendment 68.

Amendment 68 agreed to.

Amendments 69 and 28 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on appeals against issue of gender recognition certificate. Amendment 29, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Alex Neil: I have only very short introductory remarks to make on the amendment.

The bill provides that, when an applicant to the gender recognition panel secures a gender recognition certificate by fraud, their spouse may apply to the Court of Session to have the certificate quashed. However, as the bill stands, that right is not available to an applicant’s civil partner. Amendment 29 seeks to correct that and to extend the right to civil partners to apply to the Court of Session as well.

I move amendment 29.

Amendment 29 agreed to.

Amendment 30 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on registration of qualifying Scottish marriages and civil partnerships: power to charge fees.

Amendment 31, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Alex Neil: Amendment 31 relates to the regulation-making power on the registration of marriages and civil partnerships following the issue of a full gender recognition certificate.

The amendment makes it clear that fees could be charged to applicants in respect of registration. Fees are generally charged for registration purposes. However, I recognise the sensitivities of charging fees in this area. The Registrar General’s staff and the Scottish Government will discuss the issues with stakeholders representing transgender people before making any regulations in respect of fees. Indeed, my officials have already had some preliminary discussions with stakeholders representing transgender people on procedures generally in this area. We will continue those discussions if and when the bill is passed.

I move amendment 31.

Amendment 31 agreed to.

Amendment 32 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Amendment 70 moved—[Linda Fabiani]—and agreed to.

Amendment 71 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Amendments 72 to 75, 33, 76 and 34 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Schedule 2, as amended, agreed to.

Section 28—Renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate

Amendment 35 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Section 28, as amended, agreed to.

After section 28

The Convener: The next group is on grounds of divorce: interim gender recognition certificate followed by full gender recognition certificate. Amendment 77, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Alex Neil: Amendment 77 amends the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976. Under the 1976 act, there are two grounds for divorce in Scotland. One is the irretrievable breakdown of the marriage, which can be demonstrated through a number of routes. The other is the issue of an interim gender recognition certificate, or GRC.

The purpose of amendment 77 is to amend the 1976 act so that a divorce cannot be obtained on the grounds of the issue of an interim GRC where the gender recognition panel has gone on to issue a full GRC. That situation can arise under the new section 4C of the 2004 act, as inserted by paragraph 5 of schedule 2 to the bill.

The scenario here is that the panel issues an interim GRC, within six months both parties consent to the marriage continuing, and an application is then made to the GRP for a full GRC. Given that both spouses have consented to the marriage continuing following gender recognition, it would not be appropriate for the issue of the interim GRC to be used in such cases to obtain a divorce. Amendment 77 amends the 1976 act accordingly.

If a spouse subsequently wishes to end the marriage, divorce on the grounds of irretrievable breakdown would continue to be available.

I move amendment 77.

Amendment 77 agreed to.

Section 29 agreed to.

After section 29
Amendment 36 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Section 30 agreed to.

Section 31—Ancillary provision
Amendment 37 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

Section 31, as amended, agreed to.

Section 32—Commencement

The Convener: The next group is on no commencement of same-sex marriage provisions until certain amendments to Equality Act 2010 in place. Amendment 49, in the name of John Mason, is the only amendment in the group.

John Mason: Amendment 49 relates to the UK Equality Act 2010, which is a major player in the debate that we are having. The amendment ensures that the commencement of the same-sex marriage elements of the bill would be conditional upon the Equality Act being amended to specify that the protected characteristic of religion or belief includes the belief in marriage as presently defined and to make clear that compliance with the public sector equality duty requires ensuring that no one should suffer any detriment as a result of holding or expressing the view that marriage is between a man and a woman. That is necessary because many of the concerns about the bill stem originally not from the bill but from how it will interact with the Equality Act, which is of course Westminster legislation.

The committee discussed earlier in its consideration of the bill the fact that although the Equality Act lists a number of protected characteristics, it neither says that they are all of equal value nor ranks them in any particular order. That has left it open to the courts to interpret that list of protected characteristics as they see fit. It is certainly the feeling of some people that that has meant a hierarchy, with religion and belief somewhere near the bottom.

Government ministers—both the cabinet secretary and his predecessor—have indicated that the concerns of those who do not favour same-sex marriage should be properly addressed. In order to address those concerns, it is not only this bill that requires to be amended but the Equality Act itself.

I know that the Scottish Government has been working with the UK Government to prepare amendments to the Equality Act but I think that that has related mainly to religious bodies and celebrants who do not wish to take part in the solemnisation of same-sex marriages. However, concerns with the Equality Act go beyond just the issue of celebrants and what happens inside religious buildings. The wider issue relates to ordinary people, especially perhaps to those who work in the public sector. The Equality Act is meant to protect such people against discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief. However, the feeling is—as I have said already—that if cases go to court, religion and belief are treated as less important and so protection for such people is less.

That is why the Equality Act needs to be amended to specify that the protected characteristic of religion or belief includes the belief in marriage as presently defined, thereby making clear that beliefs about marriage are covered by the religion or belief ground of discrimination law.

Similarly, the public sector equality duty that is contained in section 149 of the Equality Act puts public authorities under a duty to have regard to the need to “eliminate discrimination ... advance equality of opportunity” and “foster good relations”, all of which, on the surface, we would certainly welcome, including the need to “tackle prejudice”.

Although in theory the Equality Act, including the public sector equality duty, protects religion or belief just as much as it protects sexual orientation, in practice the local authority can choose which rights are more important in the event of a clash. I believe, therefore, that we need a further amendment to the Equality Act to make it clear that compliance with the public sector equality duty requires ensuring that no one should suffer any detriment as a result of holding or expressing the view that marriage is between a man and a woman.

Ultimately, nobody in the public sector in Scotland should have their equality and diversity credentials—and, presumably, their suitability for employment—disputed merely because they hold to the existing view of marriage. That is why amendments 48 and 49 are needed.

The cabinet secretary stated in response to a written question:

“public sector appointments should be based on merit and not on any views which applicants and staff may have on same-sex marriage.”—[Official Report, Written Answers, 12 November 2013, S4W-17756.]

Accepting that the proposed changes be made to the Equality Act 2010 is an opportunity to put that position beyond doubt.

I move amendment 49.

Alex Johnstone: Following on from what John Mason has said, right through the stage 1 inquiry, I and others expressed concern that, although we fully accept that those who promote and support this legislation do so on the grounds of furthering equality and tolerance, there is a concern that, in doing so, the rights of others are being infringed. In terms of how we apply equalities legislation, although we talk about this bill on its own, it must be taken in a broader context. I believe that amendment 49 gives us the opportunity to consider the legislation in that broader context and ensure that, as we progress towards the objective of the promoters of the bill, we do not do so at the expense of the liberty and freedoms of others. That is why I will support the amendment.

John Finnie: I think that John Mason said a number of commendable things. We should always have ordinary people at the forefront of our deliberations, rather than becoming involved in some sort of academic parliamentary exercise. It is commendable that John Mason feels that there is a need to tackle prejudice. The sensitive matters that we have discussed have been areas of great prejudice over the years.

John Mason seems very concerned about a hierarchy of equality characteristics. I do not know whether he wants things to be more uniform, and I do not know whether he wishes to intrude into judicial decisions. It seems to me that he wants preferential treatment and a blank cheque with respect to people whose views many would find unacceptable. For that reason, I will not support the amendment.

Alex Neil: I do not support amendment 49. First, the amendment involves amending the Equality Act 2010, which is reserved. Therefore, it might give rise to competence issues. In any event, I do not consider that the suggested amendment to the protected characteristic of religion and belief in the 2010 act is necessary. There is nothing in the introduction of same-sex marriage in Scotland that would mean that that protected characteristic does not cover the belief that marriage is between one man and one woman, and an amendment of the type that is proposed could raise questions and cast doubt about which other beliefs are covered under the protected characteristic.

In addition, section 14 of the bill makes it clear that existing rights to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and expression are unaffected by the introduction of same-sex marriage. Similarly, I do not agree with the proposed amendment to section 149 of the 2010 act, on the public sector equality duty, which is a duty to have due regard to the need to “eliminate discrimination ... advance equality of opportunity” and “foster good relations”, rather than a duty to achieve a particular result.

The effect of the amendment is unclear. It could be very wide reaching and is capable of being interpreted in many ways. It is unclear what public authorities would need to do to comply with the new subsection (9A) of section 149 of the 2010 act. As a result, it casts doubt on how a public authority would perform its duty under the public sector equality duty. The suggested amendment seems to go beyond the duty to have due regard and would require public authorities to ensure that there is respect for certain views, and no detriment. Achieving that might, quite simply, not be possible. The duty would be very onerous, and local authorities and other public authorities do not have the power to guarantee what is proposed. An amendment in this area could cast doubt about whether other beliefs are covered under the public sector equality duty.

We are aware of concerns from religious bodies that a local authority may use the public sector equality duty to prevent a church that is against same-sex marriage from using a local authority community centre. However, we consider that a local authority that uses the public sector equality duty to refuse to let premises to a body on the basis of the religious beliefs of the body risks a successful claim of discrimination.

Given that I do not support the proposed changes to the 2010 act, I also cannot support an amendment that would ensure that provisions on same-sex marriage in the bill must come into force the day after those suggested amendments to the 2010 act have been brought into force. Therefore, I do not support amendment 49 and invite the committee to reject it.

10:30

John Mason: The issue of hierarchy, which I mentioned in my speech and to which Mr Finnie refers, is very much the key to all this. The basic problem is the weakness in the Equality Act. As I have mentioned before, I was a member of the committee that scrutinised that act and the subject was discussed at the time, was expected to be a problem and has since proven to be a problem. The Equality Act is a very good act in many areas but it does not deal with the question whether all protected characteristics should be equal or whether there should be a hierarchy, and some of us feel that a hierarchy has been created by the courts because the courts were given too much freedom by the act.

We are now moving into the same territory with the bill. Because certain powers are reserved, we cannot fully encompass the protections that the cabinet secretary would like to give, and we know the weaknesses of the Equality Act. I am certainly not asking for a hierarchy with religion and belief at the top of it; I am just suggesting that, given that there is a hierarchy, religion and belief should not be at the bottom of it. I accept that my proposal is an untidy way of doing things, but that is because this Parliament has limited powers.

The concern is that a public authority such as a council might be particularly zealous in pursuing one angle of its public sector equality duty and that that could be used against people of a religious persuasion. I do not for a minute question the good intentions of the cabinet secretary and others who think that the bill is robust at the moment, but I am afraid that I and others are not convinced. Therefore, I press amendment 49.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 49 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)

Abstentions
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 49 disagreed to.

The Convener: The question is, that section 32 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)

Abstentions
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 2, Abstentions 1.

Section 32 agreed to.

Section 33 agreed to.

Long title agreed to.

The Convener: That ends stage 2 consideration of the bill. I thank you all very much.
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

CONTENTS

Section

PART 1
MARRIAGE
CHAPTER 1
SAME SEX MARRIAGE

1 Marriage of related persons
2 Objections to marriage
3 Preliminaries to marriage
4 Meaning of marriage and related expressions in enactments and documents
5 Same sex marriage: further provision
6 Jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages
6A Reset: abolition of defence

CHAPTER 2
MARRIAGE BETWEEN CIVIL PARTNERS IN QUALIFYING CIVIL PARTNERSHIPS

7 Marriage between civil partners in qualifying civil partnerships
7A Power to modify meaning of “qualifying civil partnership”
8 Change of qualifying civil partnership into marriage
9 Effect of marriage between civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership

CHAPTER 3
SEOLEMNISATION OF MARRIAGE

10 Persons who may solemnise marriage
11 Registration of nominated persons as celebrants
12 Temporary authorisation of celebrants
13 Religious or belief marriage: further provision

CHAPTER 4
SAME SEX MARRIAGE: PROTECTION OF FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION ETC.

14 Same sex marriage: protection of freedom of expression etc.
CHAPTER 5

OTHER CHANGES TO MARRIAGE PROCEDURE

15 Power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: marriage
16 The Marriage Schedule
17 Marriage outside Scotland: evidence of dissolution of former civil partnership
18 Religious marriages: solemnisation by Church of Scotland deacons
19 Places at which civil marriages may be solemnised
20 Second marriage ceremony: form of endorsement

CHAPTER 6

SHERIFF COURT JURISDICTION IN RELATION TO DECLARATOR OF MARRIAGE

21 Sheriff court jurisdiction in relation to declarator of marriage

PART 2

CIVIL PARTNERSHIP

22 Registration of civil partnership
23 Power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: civil partnership
24 Recognition of overseas relationships
25 Dissolution of civil partnership: evidence

PART 3

MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP: OTHER PROVISION

26 Bigamy

PART 4

CHANGE OF GENDER OF MARRIED PERSONS OR CIVIL PARTNERS

27 Change of gender of married persons or civil partners
28 Renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate
28A Grounds of divorce: interim gender recognition certificate followed by full certificate

PART 5

REGISTRATION SERVICES

29 Provision of certain information to district registrars
29A Form of register of marriages

PART 6

GENERAL PROVISIONS

30 Interpretation
31 Ancillary provision
32 Commencement
33 Short title
Schedule 1—Jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages
Schedule 2—Change of gender of married persons or civil partners
  Part 1—Applications by married persons and civil partners
  Part 2—Alternative grounds for granting applications for gender recognition certificates
  Part 3—Consequential amendments
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision for the marriage of persons of the same sex; to make further provision as to the persons who may solemnise marriage and as to marriage procedure and the places at which civil marriages may be solemnised; to make provision for the registration of civil partnerships by celebrants of religious or belief bodies; to make provision about gender change by married persons and civil partners; to make a minor correction in relation to registration information; and for connected purposes.

PART 1
MARRIAGE
CHAPTER 1
SAME SEX MARRIAGE

1 Marriage of related persons

(1) The Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 ("the 1977 Act") is amended as follows.

(2) In section 2 (marriage of related persons)—

(a) for subsection (1) substitute—

"(1) Subject to subsection (1A), a marriage between persons who are related to each other in a forbidden degree is void if solemnised—

(a) in Scotland; or

(b) at a time when either party is domiciled in Scotland.

(1ZA) For the purposes of subsection (1), a person is related to another person in a forbidden degree if related to that person in a degree specified in Schedule 1."

(b) in subsection (1A), for the words from the beginning to “paragraph,” substitute “A person who is related to another person in a degree specified in paragraph 2 of Schedule 1 (relationships by affinity) is not related to that person in a forbidden degree”,

(c) after subsection (1A) insert—

“(1C) For the purposes of paragraph 2 of Schedule 1, “spouse” means—
(a) in the case of a marriage between persons of different sexes, a wife in relation to her husband or a husband in relation to his wife; and

(b) in the case of a marriage between persons of the same sex, one of the parties to the marriage in relation to the other.”,

(d) in subsection (7)—

(i) for “those provisions” substitute “subsection (1C)(a) as it applies to paragraph 2 of Schedule 1”, and

(ii) the word “former” in each place where it appears is repealed, and

(e) in subsection (7A)—

(i) for “mother” substitute “parent”, and

(ii) the words “in either column” are repealed.

(3) For Schedule 1 substitute—

“SCHEDULE 1
(introduced by section 2)

DEGREES OF RELATIONSHIP

1. Relationships by consanguinity

Parent
Child
Grandparent

Grandchild
Sibling
Aunt or uncle
Niece or nephew
Great-grandparent

2. Relationships by affinity referred to in section 2(1A)

Child of former spouse
Child of former civil partner
Former spouse of parent

Former civil partner of parent
Former spouse of grandparent
Former civil partner of grandparent
Grandchild of former spouse
Grandchild of former civil partner
3. Relationships by adoption

Adoptive parent or former adoptive parent
Adopted child or former adopted child.”.

2 Objections to marriage

In section 5(4) of the 1977 Act (objections to marriage)—

(a) paragraph (e) is repealed, and

(b) in paragraph (f), for “than one mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (e) above,” substitute “than—

(i) one mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (d) above; or

(ii) the ground that the parties are of the same sex.”.

3 Preliminaries to marriage

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 3 (notice of intention to marry)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) for paragraph (b) substitute—

“(b) if the person has previously been married and the marriage ended on the death of the other party to that marriage, the death certificate of that other party;”, and

(ii) after that paragraph insert—

“(ba) if the person has previously been in a civil partnership which ended on the death of the other party to the civil partnership, the death certificate of that other party;”,

(b) in subsection (2), for “or (b)” substitute “, (b), (ba) or (bb)”, and

(c) in subsection (5), after paragraph (ii)(b) of the proviso insert “; or

(c) if no such certificate has been issued only by reason of the fact that the parties to the intended marriage are of the same sex.”.

(3) In section 7(1) (marriage outside Scotland where a party resides in Scotland), after “(b)” insert “, (ba), (bb)”.

4 Meaning of marriage and related expressions in enactments and documents

(1) References (however expressed) in any enactment to—

(a) marriage (including a marriage that has ended),

(b) a person who is (or was) married to another person, and

(c) two people who are (or were) married to each other,
are references to marriage whether between persons of different sexes or persons of the same sex and to a party (or former party), or as the case may be the parties (or former parties), to such a marriage.

(2) Subsection (3) applies to references (however expressed) in any enactment to two people who—

(a) are (or were) not married to each other, but

(b) are (or were) living together as if they were husband and wife.

(3) The references include two people of the same sex who are (or were) not married to, nor in civil partnership with, each other but who are (or were) living together as if they were married to each other.

(4) References (however expressed) in any enactment to two people of the same sex who are (or were) living together as if they were in a civil partnership cease to have effect.

(5) Subsections (1) to (4)—

(a) apply to enactments (other than private Acts) passed or made before the commencement of this section, and

(b) do not apply in so far as the enactment, or any other enactment, provides otherwise.

(6) In so far as being (or having been) married or in a purported marriage is relevant for the operation of any rule of law, the rule of law applies equally in relation to marriage or purported marriage to a person of a different sex and marriage or purported marriage to a person of the same sex.

(7) Subsections (1) to (6) are subject to an order under subsection (8).

(8) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for any of subsections (1) to (6)—

(a) to have effect subject to provision made by the order, or

(b) not to apply in cases specified in the order.

(9) An order under subsection (8)—

(za) may make different provision for different purposes,

(a) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,

(aa) may modify any enactment (including this Act),

(b) is (except where subsection (9A) applies) subject to the negative procedure.

(9A) An order under subsection (8) which adds to, replaces or omits any part of the text of an Act is subject to the affirmative procedure.

(10) References (however expressed) in any document to—

(a) marriage (including a marriage that has ended),

(b) a person who is (or was) married to another person, and

(c) two people who are (or were) married to each other,

are references to marriage whether between persons of different sexes or persons of the same sex and to a party (or former party), or as the case may be the parties (or former parties), to such a marriage.
(11) The following expressions in any document have the meanings given—
(a) “widow” includes a woman whose marriage to another woman ended with the other woman’s death,
(b) “widower” includes a man whose marriage to another man ended with the other man’s death.

(12) Subsections (10) and (11)—
(a) apply to documents executed on or after the commencement of this section, and
(b) do not apply in so far as the document provides otherwise.

(13) In section 26(2) of the 1977 Act (interpretation), after the definition of “authorised registrar” insert—

““marriage” means marriage between persons of different sexes and marriage between persons of the same sex;”.

(14) In schedule 1 to the Interpretation and Legislative Reform (Scotland) Act 2010 (definitions of words and expressions), insert at the appropriate place in alphabetical order—

““marriage” means marriage between persons of different sexes and marriage between persons of the same sex (and any reference to a person being (or having been) married to another person, or to two people being (or having been) married to each other, is to be read accordingly),”,

““widow” includes a woman whose marriage to another woman ended with the other woman’s death,”,

““widower” includes a man whose marriage to another man ended with the other man’s death,”.

5 Same sex marriage: further provision

(2) For the avoidance of doubt, the rule of law which provides for a marriage to be voidable by reason of impotence has effect only in relation to a marriage between persons of different sexes.

(3) In section 1 of the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 (grounds of divorce), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) For the avoidance of doubt, in relation to marriage between persons of the same sex, adultery has the same meaning as it has in relation to marriage between persons of different sexes.”.

6 Jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages

Schedule 1, which makes provision about jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages, has effect.

6A Reset: abolition of defence

(1) Any rule of law under which a wife who receives or conceals goods stolen by her husband does not commit the offence of reset ceases to apply.
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

Part I—Marriage

Chapter 2—Marriage between civil partners in qualifying civil partnerships

(2) Subsection (1) applies only in relation to things done after the day on which this section comes into force.

CHAPTER 2

MARRIAGE BETWEEN CIVIL PARTNERS IN QUALIFYING CIVIL PARTNERSHIPS

Marriage between civil partners in qualifying civil partnerships

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 3 (notice of intention to marry), in subsection (1), after paragraph (ba) (inserted by section 3(2)(a)(ii) of this Act), insert—

“(bb) if the person is in a qualifying civil partnership within the meaning of section 5(6) with the other party to the intended marriage, an extract from the entry in the civil partnership register relating to the civil partnership;”.

(3) In section 5 (objections to marriage)—

(a) in subsection (4)(b), after “partnership” insert “other than a qualifying civil partnership with each other”, and

(b) after subsection (5) insert—

“(6) For the purposes of subsection (4)(b) a “qualifying civil partnership” is a civil partnership which—

(a) was registered in Scotland; and

(b) has not been dissolved, annulled or ended by death.

(7) A civil partnership which was registered outside the United Kingdom under an Order in Council made under Chapter 1 of Part 5 of the Civil Partnership Act 2004 is to be treated for the purposes of subsection (6)(a) as having been registered in Scotland if—

(a) the parties to the civil partnership elected Scotland as the relevant part of the United Kingdom under the Order; and

(b) details of the civil partnership have been sent to the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland.”.

7A Power to modify meaning of “qualifying civil partnership”

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify the meaning of “qualifying civil partnership” given by section 5(6) of the 1977 Act (as inserted by section 7(3)(b) of this Act) so as to include civil partnerships registered outside Scotland.

(2) An order under subsection (1)—

(a) may make different provision for different purposes,

(b) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,

(c) may modify any enactment (including this Act),

(d) is subject to the affirmative procedure.
Before laying a draft of an order under subsection (1) before the Scottish Parliament, the Scottish Ministers must consult the following persons on a copy of the proposed draft order—

(a) the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland, and

(b) such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.

Change of qualifying civil partnership into marriage

The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision to establish a procedure for the parties to a qualifying civil partnership to change their civil partnership into a marriage.

Regulations under subsection (1) may in particular make provision—

(a) about the making by the parties to a qualifying civil partnership of an application to change their civil partnership into a marriage,

(b) about the information to be provided in support of an application,

(c) about the provision of evidence in support of an application,

(d) for persons who have made an application to appear before any person or appear at any place,

(e) conferring functions on persons in relation to applications,

(f) for fees, of such amounts as are specified in or determined in accordance with the regulations, to be payable in respect of—

(i) the making of an application,

(ii) the exercise of any function conferred by virtue of paragraph (e).

Functions conferred by virtue of subsection (2)(e) may include functions relating to—

(a) the recording of information relating to qualifying civil partnerships changing into marriages,

(b) the issuing of certified copies of any information recorded.

Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland.

Regulations under subsection (1)—

(za) may make different provision for different purposes,

(a) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,

(b) may modify any enactment (including this Act),

(c) are (except where subsection (6) applies) subject to the negative procedure.

Regulations under subsection (1) which add to, replace or omit any part of the text of an Act are subject to the affirmative procedure.

In this section “qualifying civil partnership” has the meaning given by section 5(6) of the 1977 Act (as inserted by section 7(3)(b) of this Act).
9 Effect of marriage between civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership

(A1) This section applies where civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the 1977 Act)—

(a) marry in accordance with that Act, or

(b) change their civil partnership into a marriage in accordance with provision made under section 8(1).

(1) Where this section applies—

(a) the qualifying civil partnership ends on the date on which—

(i) the marriage was solemnised, or

(ii) the change took effect, and

(b) the civil partners are to be treated as having been married to each other since the date on which the qualifying civil partnership was registered.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1)(b)—

(a) a civil partnership registered under an Order in Council made under section 210 of the 2004 Act is to be treated as having been registered when it is entered in the Register Book maintained under the Order,

(b) a civil partnership registered under an Order in Council made under section 211 of the 2004 Act is to be treated as having been registered when the civil partnership register is signed in accordance with the Order.

(3) Subsection (1)(b) is subject to—

(a) any provision to the contrary made by or under any enactment,

(b) an order under subsection (4).

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for subsection (1)(b)—

(a) to have effect subject to provision made by the order, or

(b) not to apply in cases specified in the order.

(5) An order under subsection (4)—

(a) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,

(b) is subject to the negative procedure.

(6) If a decree of aliment under section 3 of the Family Law (Scotland) Act 1985 (powers of court in action for aliment) requiring one of the civil partners to make payments to the other is in force at the time the qualifying civil partnership ends by virtue of subsection (1)(a) of this section, the decree continues to have effect despite the ending of the civil partnership.

(7) If an order under section 103(3) or (4) of the 2004 Act (regulation by court of rights of occupancy of family home) is in force at the time the qualifying civil partnership ends by virtue of subsection (1)(a) of this section the order has effect from that time as if made under section 3(3) or, as the case may be, 3(4) of the Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981 (regulation by court of rights of occupancy of matrimonial home).
(8) In section 1 of the 2004 Act (provision for civil partnership), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) Subsection (3) is subject to section 9(1)(a) of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Act 2014 (ending of certain civil partnerships on marriage under Scots law).”.

CHAPTER 3
SOLEMNISATION OF MARRIAGE

10 Persons who may solemnise marriage

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 8 (persons who may solemnise marriage)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) after “marriage” in the first place where it appears insert “between persons of different sexes”,

(ii) in paragraph (a)(ii)—

(A) for “or priest of a religious body” substitute “priest or other celebrant of a religious or belief body”,

(B) for “religious body” in the second place it appears substitute “religious or belief body”, and

(C) for “marriages” substitute “marriage between persons of different sexes”,

(iii) in paragraph (a)(iii), after “Act” insert “to solemnise marriage between persons of different sexes”, and

(iv) in paragraph (a)(iv), after “Act” insert “to solemnise marriage between persons of different sexes”,

(b) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The Scottish Ministers may prescribe a religious or belief body under subsection (1)(a)(ii) only if—

(a) the body requests them to do so; and

(b) the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that the body meets the qualifying requirements.

(1B) Subject to section 23A, a marriage between persons of the same sex may be solemnised by and only by—

(a) a person who is—

(i) a minister, clergyman, pastor, priest or other celebrant of a religious or belief body prescribed by regulations made by the Scottish Ministers, or who, not being one of the foregoing, is recognised by a religious or belief body so prescribed as entitled to solemnise marriage between persons of the same sex on its behalf;

(ii) registered under section 9 to solemnise marriage between persons of the same sex; or
(iii) temporarily authorised under section 12 to solemnise marriage between persons of the same sex; or

(b) a person who is a district registrar or assistant registrar appointed under section 17.

(1C) The Scottish Ministers may prescribe a religious or belief body under subsection (1B)(a)(i) only if—

(a) the body requests them to do so; and

(b) the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that the body meets the qualifying requirements.

(1D) For the avoidance of doubt, nothing in subsection (1B)(a) or (1C)(a)—

(a) imposes a duty on any religious or belief body to make a request referred to in subsection (1C)(a);

(b) imposes a duty on any such body to nominate under section 9 any of its members to be registered as empowered to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex;

(c) imposes a duty on any person to apply for temporary authorisation under section 12 to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex;

(d) imposes a duty on any person who is an approved celebrant in relation to marriages between persons of the same sex to solemnise such marriages.

(1E) In subsections (1A)(b) and (1C)(b), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

(1F) Regulations under subsection (1E)—

(a) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances;

(b) may include transitional and saving provision.

(1G) Regulations under subsection (1)(a)(ii), (1B)(a)(i) or (1E) are subject to the negative procedure.,” and

(c) in subsection (2)—

(i) in paragraph (a)—

(A) after “(1)(a)” insert “or (1B)(a)”, and

(B) for “‘religious marriage’” substitute “‘religious or belief marriage’”,

(ii) in paragraph (b), after “(1)(b)” insert “or (1B)(b)”.

(3) In section 14 (form of ceremony to be used by approved celebrant)—

(a) in paragraph (a), after “or (ii)” insert “or (1B)(a)(i)”, and

(b) in paragraph (b), after “or (iv)” insert “or (1B)(a)(ii) or (iii)”.

(4) In section 26(2) (interpretation)—

(a) for the definition of “religious body” substitute—

“‘religious or belief body’ means an organised group of people—

(a) which meets regularly for religious worship; or
(b) the principal object (or one of the principal objects) of which is to uphold or promote philosophical beliefs and which meets regularly for that purpose;”, and

(b) after that definition insert—

“‘religious or belief marriage’ has the meaning given by section 8(2)(a);”.

11 Registration of nominated persons as celebrants

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 9 (registration of nominated persons as celebrants)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) for “religious body” substitute “religious or belief body”,

(ii) after “marriages” insert “between persons of different sexes”,

(b) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) A religious or belief body, not being prescribed by virtue of section 8(1B)(a)(i), may nominate to the Registrar General any of its members who it desires should be registered under this section as empowered to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex.”,

(c) in subsection (2)—

(i) after “(1)” insert “or (1A)”,

(ii) in paragraph (a), for “religious body” substitute “religious or belief body”, and

(iii) in paragraph (d)—

(A) the word “religious” is repealed, and

(B) after “that body” insert “in relation to solemnising marriages between persons of different sexes or, as the case may be, marriages between persons of the same sex”,

(d) after paragraph (d) insert “; or

(e) the nominating body does not meet the qualifying requirements.”,

(e) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) In subsection (2)(e), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

(2B) Regulations under subsection (2A)—

(a) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances;

(b) may include transitional and saving provision.

(2C) Regulations under subsection (2A) are subject to the negative procedure.”,

(f) in subsection (3)—

(i) after “ceremony” insert “for marriage between persons of different sexes”,

(iia) in paragraph (a), for the words from “witnesses,” to “wife;” substitute “witnesses—
(i) that they accept each other as husband and wife;
(ii) that they accept each other in marriage; or
(iii) either or both of sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii);”,

(ib) in paragraph (b), for the words from “subsection,” to “wife,” substitute “subsection—
(i) that the parties are then husband and wife;
(ii) that the parties are then married; or
(iii) either or both of sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii),”, and

(ii) after “ceremonies” insert “for marriage between persons of different sexes”,

(g) after subsection (3) insert—
“(3A) For the purposes of subsection (2)(b) above, a marriage ceremony for marriage between persons of the same sex is of an appropriate form if it includes, and is in no way inconsistent with—
(a) a declaration by the parties, in the presence of each other, the celebrant and two witnesses, that they accept each other in marriage;
(b) a declaration by the celebrant, after the declaration mentioned in paragraph (a), that the parties are then married, and the Registrar General may, before deciding whether to accept or reject a nomination, require the nominating body to produce in writing the form of words used at its marriage ceremonies for marriage between persons of the same sex.”,

(h) in subsection (4)—
(i) after “(1)” insert “or (1A)”, and
(ii) in paragraph (b), after “area” insert “or place”,

(i) in subsection (5)(a), after “(1)” insert “or (1A)”,

(j) after subsection (5) insert—
“(5ZA)The register mentioned in subsection (5)(a)(ii) is to be in two parts—
(a) the first part containing the details mentioned in subsection (5)(a)(ii) in relation to persons nominated by religious or belief bodies to solemnise marriages between persons of different sexes; and
(b) the second part containing those details in relation to persons nominated by religious or belief bodies to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex.”,

(k) in subsection (6), in the proviso, for “religious body” in each place where it appears substitute “religious or belief body”, and

(l) the italic cross-heading preceding section 9 becomes “Religious or belief marriages”.

(3) In section 10 (removal of celebrant’s name from register)—

(a) in subsection (1)—
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

Part 1—Marriage

Chapter 3—Solemnisation of marriage

(i) in paragraph (b), after “9(1)” insert “or (1A)”, and
(ii) in paragraph (c), after “9(3)” insert “or (3A)”,

(b) after that subsection insert—

“(1A) In relation to any ground mentioned in subsection (1)(a) to (c), references in this section to removal from and restoration to the register include removal from and restoration to the appropriate part of the register.”, and

(c) in subsection (4), after “9(1)” insert “or (1A)”.

(4) In section 14(b) (form of ceremony to be used by approved celebrant), after “9(3)” insert “or (3A)”.

(5) In section 24(2)(a) (offences), after “area” insert “or place”.

12 Temporary authorisation of celebrants

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 12 (temporary authorisation of celebrants)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “person” substitute “member of a religious or belief body”,

(b) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The Registrar General may grant an authorisation to a person under subsection (1) only if satisfied that the religious or belief body of which the person is a member meets the qualifying requirements.

(1B) An authorisation under subsection (1)(b) may be granted in relation to—

(a) only marriages between persons of different sexes;

(b) only marriages between persons of the same sex; or

(c) both.

(1C) The Registrar General may grant an authorisation to a person under subsection (1)(b) to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex only if the religious or belief body of which the person is a member—

(a) is prescribed by virtue of section 8(1B)(a)(i); or

(b) has nominated members (whether or not including that person) under section 9(1A) to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex.

(1D) In subsection (1A), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

(1E) Regulations under subsection (1D)—

(a) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances;

(b) may include transitional and saving provision.

(1F) Regulations under subsection (1D) are subject to the negative procedure.”.

(3) In section 24 (offences), in subsection (2)(c), for the words from “12(a)” to the end substitute “12 of this Act—

(i) if authorised under subsection (1)(a) of that section, solemnises a marriage not specified in the authorisation;
(ii) if authorised under subsection (1)(b) of that section, solemnises a marriage outwith the period specified in the authorisation;

(iii) in either case, solemnises a marriage otherwise than in accordance with such terms and conditions as may be specified in the authorisation;”.

13 Religious or belief marriage: further provision

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 6(5) (solemnisation of marriage on date and at place in Marriage Schedule), for “religious marriage” substitute “religious or belief marriage”.

(3) In section 11 (alterations to register), in paragraph (a), for “religious body” substitute “religious or belief body”.

(4) In the title of section 13 (preliminaries to solemnisation of religious marriages), for “religious marriages” substitute “marriages by approved celebrants”.

(5) In section 14(a) (form of ceremony to be used by approved celebrant), for “religious body” substitute “religious or belief body”.

(6) In the title of section 15 (registration of religious marriages), for “religious marriages” substitute “religious or belief marriages”.

(7) In section 15(3) (entry in register of marriage on receipt of Marriage Schedule), for “religious marriage” substitute “religious or belief marriage”.

CHAPTER 4

SAME SEX MARRIAGE: PROTECTION OF FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION ETC.

14 Same sex marriage: protection of freedom of expression etc.

(1) For the avoidance of doubt, nothing in this Part so far as it makes provision for the marriage of persons of the same sex and as to the persons who may solemnise such marriages affects the exercise of—

(a) the Convention right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion,

(b) the Convention right to freedom of expression, or

(c) any equivalent right conferred by rule of law.

(2) “Convention right” has the same meaning as in the Human Rights Act 1998.

CHAPTER 5

OTHER CHANGES TO MARRIAGE PROCEDURE

15 Power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: marriage

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 3 (notice of intention to marry), after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) A district registrar to whom a notice under subsection (1) is submitted may require the person submitting the notice to provide the district registrar with specified nationality evidence relating to each of the parties to the marriage.
(4B) A requirement under subsection (4A) may be imposed at any time—
   (a) on or after the submitting of the notice under subsection (1); but
   (b) before the district registrar completes the Marriage Schedule.

(4C) In subsection (4A), “specified nationality evidence” means such evidence of that person’s nationality as may be specified in guidance issued by the Registrar General.”.

(3) In section 7 (marriage outside Scotland where a party resides in Scotland), in subsection
(1) for “and (3)” substitute “, (3) and (4A) to (4C)”.

16 The Marriage Schedule

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 6 (the Marriage Schedule)—
   (a) after subsection (1) insert—
       “(1A) Regulations under subsection (1) prescribing the form of the Marriage Schedule may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.”, and
   (b) in subsection (4)(a), for “14 days” in both places where those words appear substitute “28 days”.

(3) In section 7(2) (issuing of certificate in respect of legal capacity to marry), for “14 days”
substitute “28 days”.

(4) In section 19(1) (period between receipt of marriage notice and solemnisation of marriage), for “14 days” substitute “28 days”.

17 Marriage outside Scotland: evidence of dissolution of former civil partnership

In section 7(1) of the 1977 Act (marriage outside Scotland where a party resides in Scotland), after “3(1)(a),” insert “(aa),”.

18 Religious marriages: solemnisation by Church of Scotland deacons

In section 8(1)(a)(i) of the 1977 Act (solemnisation of marriage by ministers of the Church of Scotland), after “minister” insert “or deacon”.

19 Places at which civil marriages may be solemnised

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 18 (places at which civil marriages may be solemnised)—
   (a) in subsection (1)—
       (i) after paragraph (a) insert—
           “(aa) at an appropriate place in the registration district of the authorised registrar; or
       (ab) with the approval of the Registrar General, at—
           (i) the registration office of another authorised registrar;
(ii) an appropriate place in the registration district of another authorised registrar; or

(iii) an appropriate place in Scottish waters.”,

(ii) paragraph (b) (and the word “or” following it) are repealed, and

(iii) paragraph (c) is repealed,

(b) after that subsection insert—

“(1A) In this section—

“appropriate place” means a place which—

(a) the parties to the intended marriage and the local registration authority agree is to be the place of solemnisation; and

(b) is not religious premises;

“local registration authority” means—

(a) the local registration authority for the registration district which includes the place; or

(b) where the place is in Scottish waters, the local registration authority for the authorised registrar’s registration district;

“religious premises” means premises which—

(a) are used solely or mainly for religious purposes; or

(b) have been so used and have not subsequently been used solely or mainly for other purposes.”, and

(c) subsections (2) to (8) are repealed.

(3) Section 18A (approved places) is repealed.

(4) In section 19 (marriage ceremony and registration of marriage)—

(a) in subsection (4)(a)—

(i) for sub-paragraph (ii) substitute—

“(ii) at an appropriate place (within the meaning given by section 18) in the registration district of the authorised registrar; or”;

(ii) sub-paragraph (iii) (and the word “or” following it) are repealed, and

(iii) in sub-paragraph (iv), for the words “in or on an approved vessel” substitute “at an appropriate place (within the meaning given by section 18)”;

(b) in subsection (4)(b)(ii), for “approved place” substitute “appropriate place (within the meaning given by section 18)”;

(c) subsection (5) is repealed.

(5) In section 26(2A)(b) (seaward boundary of registration district), for “within a registration district if it” substitute “a place within a registration district if the vessel”.
20 Second marriage ceremony: form of endorsement

In section 20(2)(d) of the 1977 Act (second marriage ceremony), in the form of the endorsement, the word “19” in both places where it appears is repealed.

CHAPTER 6

SHERIFF COURT JURISDICTION IN RELATION TO DECLARATOR OF MARRIAGE

21 Sheriff court jurisdiction in relation to declarator of marriage

(1) Section 8 of the Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973 (jurisdiction of the sheriff court in relation to actions for separation, divorce etc.) is amended as follows.

(1A) In subsection (1), before paragraph (a) insert—

“(za) an action for declarator of marriage;”.

(2) After subsection (2) insert—

“(2ZA)The court has jurisdiction to entertain an action for declarator of marriage if (and only if)—

(a) either party to the marriage—

(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the action is begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date, and

(b) any of the following requirements is met in relation to either of the parties to the marriage—

(i) the party is domiciled in Scotland on the date on which the action is begun,

(ii) the party was habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with that date, or

(iii) the party died before that date and either—

(A) was at death domiciled in Scotland, or

(B) had been habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with the date of death.”.

(3) In subsection (3)—

(a) after “declarator of” insert “marriage or of”, and

(b) after “subsection (2)” in both places where those words appear insert “, (2ZA)”.

(4) In subsection (4), after “declarator of” insert “marriage or of”.

PART 2

CIVIL PARTNERSHIP

22 Registration of civil partnership

(1) The Civil Partnership Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”) is amended as follows.
(2) In section 85 (formation of civil partnership by registration)—

(a) in subsection (1), for paragraph (c) and the words following it substitute—

“(c) the approved celebrant or, as the case may be, the authorised registrar.”,

(b) in subsection (4)(b), at the beginning insert “the approved celebrant or, as the case may be.”.

(3) In section 86 (eligibility)—

(a) for subsection (2) substitute—

“(2) Subject to subsection (3), a person is related to another person in a forbidden degree if related to that person in a degree specified in Schedule 10.”,

(b) in subsection (3), for the words from the beginning to “related” in the third place where it appears substitute “A person who is related to another person in a degree specified in paragraph 2 of Schedule 10 (relationships by affinity) is not related to that person”,

(c) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) For the purposes of paragraph 2 of Schedule 10, “spouse” means—

(a) in the case of a marriage between persons of different sexes, a wife in relation to her husband or a husband in relation to his wife, and

(b) in the case of a marriage between persons of the same sex, one of the parties to the marriage in relation to the other.”,

(d) in subsection (5)—

(i) after “in” insert “subsection (3A)(a) as it applies to”, and

(ii) the word “former” in each place where it appears is repealed, and

(e) in subsection (5A)—

(i) for “mother” substitute “parent”, and

(ii) the words “in either column” are repealed.

(4) In section 87 (appointment of authorised registrars), before “registration” in the first place where it appears insert “civil”.

(5) In section 88 (notice of proposed civil partnership), after subsection (6) insert—

“(7) In this section, “the district registrar” means—

(a) where the civil partnership is to be registered in a registration district, the district registrar for that district,

(b) where the civil partnership is to be registered in Scottish waters—

(i) in the case where the civil partnership is to be registered by an approved celebrant, the district registrar for any registration district,

(ii) in the case where the civil partnership is to be registered by an authorised registrar, the district registrar for the registration district of the proposed authorised registrar.”.

(6) In section 89 (civil partnership notice book), after subsection (2) insert—
“(3) In this section and sections 90, 91, 92 and 94, “the district registrar” means—

(a) where the civil partnership is to be registered in a registration district, the district registrar for that district,

(b) where the civil partnership is to be registered in Scottish waters—

(i) in the case where the civil partnership is to be registered by an approved celebrant, the district registrar to whom the civil partnership notices were submitted,

(ii) in the case where the civil partnership is to be registered by an authorised registrar, the district registrar for the registration district of the proposed authorised registrar.”.

(7) In section 90 (publicisation)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “a district registrar” substitute “the district registrar”,

(b) in subsection (2)(b), for “14 days” substitute “28 days”, and

(c) in subsection (3), for “91” substitute “91(1)”.

(8) In section 91 (early registration)—

(a) the existing text becomes subsection (1),

(b) in that subsection—

(i) for “An authorised registrar who” substitute “Where the district registrar”,

(ii) for “14 days” substitute “28 days”, and

(iii) after “section 90)” insert “the district registrar”, and

(c) after that subsection insert—

“(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), a request which is made by electronic means is to be treated as in writing if it is received in a form which is legible and capable of being used for subsequent reference.”.

(9) In section 92 (objections to registration)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “at which a notice of proposed civil partnership to which the objection would relate” substitute “of the district registrar”,

(b) in subsection (4)(b)—

(i) the word “and” following sub-paragraph (i) is repealed, and

(ii) after sub-paragraph (ii) insert “, and

(iii) where, in the case of a civil partnership to be registered by an approved celebrant, the civil partnership schedule has already been issued to the parties, if possible notify that celebrant of the objection and advise the celebrant not to register the civil partnership pending consideration of the objection.”, and

(c) in subsection (5)(a), for the words “not to register the intended civil partners and to notify them” substitute “to take all reasonable steps to ensure that the registration of the civil partnership does not take place and must notify, or direct the district registrar to notify, the intended civil partners”.

(10) In section 93 (place of registration)—

(a) in subsection (1)—
(i) after “registered” insert “by an authorised registrar”, and

(ii) for the words from “other” in the first place where it appears to the end substitute “other—

(a) at the registration office of the authorised registrar,

(b) at an appropriate place in the registration district of the authorised registrar, or

(c) with the approval of the Registrar General, at—

(i) the registration office of another authorised registrar,

(ii) an appropriate place in the registration district of another authorised registrar, or

(iii) an appropriate place in Scottish waters.”,

(b) after that subsection, insert—

“(1A) In this section—

“appropriate place” means a place which—

(a) the parties to the intended civil partnership and the local registration authority agree is to be the place of registration, and

(b) is not religious premises,

“local registration authority” means—

(a) the local registration authority for the registration district which includes the place, or

(b) where the place is in Scottish waters, the local registration authority for the authorised registrar’s registration district,

“religious premises” means premises which—

(a) are used solely or mainly for religious purposes, or

(b) have been so used and have not subsequently been used solely or mainly for other purposes.”,

(c) subsections (2) and (3) are repealed, and

(d) the title of section 93 becomes “Place of civil registration of civil partnerships”.

(11) After section 93 insert—

“93A Date and place of registration of religious or belief civil partnerships

(1) A religious or belief civil partnership may be registered only on the date and at the place specified in the civil partnership schedule.

(2) But if, for any reason, the civil partnership cannot be registered on that date or at that place and a new date or place is fixed for the registration, the district registrar must—

(a) issue another civil partnership schedule under section 94(2) in place of that already issued, specifying the new date or place, or

(b) substitute, or direct the approved celebrant to substitute, the new date or place in the civil partnership schedule already issued.

(3) Subsection (2) does not apply where—
(a) the new date is more than 3 months after the date for the registration specified in the civil partnership schedule already issued, or

(b) the new place is in a different registration district, is in Scottish waters instead of a registration district or is in a registration district instead of Scottish waters.

(4) In a case falling within subsection (3)(a) or (b) the Registrar General may, according to the circumstances—

(a) direct the district registrar—

(i) to issue another civil partnership schedule under section 94(2) in place of that already issued, specifying the new date or place, or

(ii) to substitute, or direct the approved celebrant to substitute, the new date or place in the civil partnership schedule already issued, (whichever the Registrar General considers the more appropriate), or

(b) direct each party to the civil partnership to submit to the district registrar a new notice of proposed civil partnership.

(12) In section 94 (the civil partnership schedule)—

(a) the existing text becomes subsection (1),

(b) in paragraph (b) of that subsection—

(i) for “14 days” substitute “28 days”, and

(ii) for “91” substitute “91(1)”, and

(c) after that subsection insert—

“(2) In the case of a civil partnership to be registered by an approved celebrant, the civil partnership schedule completed in accordance with subsection (1) is to be issued by the district registrar to one or both of the parties to the intended civil partnership.

(3) The district registrar may not issue the civil partnership schedule on a date earlier than 7 days before the date of the intended civil partnership unless authorised to do so by the Registrar General.”.

(13) After section 94 insert—

“94A Persons who may register civil partnerships

(1) A civil partnership may be registered by and only by—

(a) a person who is—

(i) a celebrant of a religious or belief body prescribed by regulations made by the Scottish Ministers, or who, not being a celebrant, is recognised by a religious or belief body so prescribed as entitled to register civil partnerships on its behalf,

(ii) registered under section 94B, or

(iii) temporarily authorised under section 94E, or

(b) a person who is a district registrar or assistant registrar appointed under section 87.
(2) The Scottish Ministers may prescribe a religious or belief body under subsection (1)(a)(i) only if—
   (a) the body requests them to do so, and
   (b) the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that the body meets the qualifying requirements.

(3) For the avoidance of doubt, nothing in subsection (1)(a) or (2)(a)—
   (a) imposes a duty on any religious or belief body to make a request referred to in subsection (2)(a),
   (b) imposes a duty on any such body to nominate under section 94B any of its members to be registered as empowered to register civil partnerships,
   (c) imposes a duty on any person to apply for temporary authorisation under section 94E to register civil partnerships,
   (d) imposes a duty on any person who is an approved celebrant in relation to civil partnerships to register civil partnerships.

(4) In this Part—
   (a) any such person as is mentioned in subsection (1)(a) is referred to as an “approved celebrant”,
   (b) a civil partnership registered by an approved celebrant is referred to as a “religious or belief civil partnership”,
   (c) a civil partnership registered by an authorised registrar is referred to as a “civil registration”.

(5) In subsection (2)(b), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

94B Registration of nominated persons as celebrants

(1) A religious or belief body, not being prescribed by virtue of section 94A(1)(a)(i), may nominate to the Registrar General any of its members who it desires should be registered under this section as empowered to register civil partnerships.

(2) The Registrar General must reject a nomination under subsection (1) if in the Registrar General’s opinion—
   (a) the nominating body is not a religious or belief body,
   (b) the nominee is not a fit and proper person to register a civil partnership,
   (c) there are already registered under this section sufficient members of the same body as the nominee to meet the needs of that body, or
   (d) the nominating body does not meet the qualifying requirements.

(3) In subsection (2)(d), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

(4) Where the Registrar General accepts a nomination made under subsection (1), the Registrar General—
   (a) must determine the period during which the nominee is empowered to register civil partnerships, being a period of not more than 3 years,
(b) may determine that the nominee is empowered to register civil partnerships only in such area or place as the Registrar General may specify, and

c) may make acceptance of the nominee’s registration subject to such other conditions as the Registrar General thinks fit.

(5) Nothing in subsection (4)(a) prevents the Registrar General from accepting a further nomination of that nominee, in accordance with this section, to take effect at any time after the end of the period determined by the Registrar General under subsection (4)(a).

(6) The Registrar General must—

(a) if accepting a nomination made under subsection (1)—

(i) so inform the nominee and the nominating body, specifying the period during which the acceptance has effect and any condition to which the acceptance is subject,

(ii) enter the name of the nominee, the nominating body and such other particulars as the Registrar General thinks fit in a register which the Registrar General must establish and maintain and which must be made available for public inspection at all reasonable times free of charge,

(b) if rejecting a nomination made under subsection (1), by notice in writing inform the nominating body of the reasons for that rejection.

(7) For the purposes of subsection (6)(b), notice which is given by electronic means is to be treated as in writing if it is received in a form which is legible and capable of being used for subsequent reference.

(8) If the nominating body is aggrieved by a rejection under this section it may, within 28 days of receiving notice of the rejection, appeal to the Scottish Ministers.

(9) On any such appeal the Scottish Ministers may—

(a) direct the Registrar General to accept the nomination, or

(b) confirm the rejection of the nomination,

and must inform the nominating body of their decision and the reason for it; and their decision is final.

(10) If a reason given for confirming the rejection of a nomination is that the nominating body is not a religious or belief body, the body may, within 42 days of receiving notice of the confirmation, appeal against the decision to the Court of Session and seek the determination of that court as to whether the body is a religious or belief body.

(11) If—

(a) the Court determines that the nominating body is a religious or belief body; and

(b) the reason mentioned in subsection (10) was the only reason given for confirming the rejection of the nomination,

the Registrar General must give effect to the determination as if it were a direction under subsection (9)(a) to accept the nomination.
94C Removal of celebrant's name from register

(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, the Registrar General may remove the name of a person registered under section 94B from the register on the ground that—

(a) the person has requested that the person’s name should be so removed,

(b) the body which nominated the person under section 94B(1) no longer desires that the person should be so registered,

(c) the person—

(i) has, while registered as an approved celebrant, been convicted of an offence under this Part,

(ii) has, for the purpose of profit or gain, been carrying on a business of registering civil partnerships,

(iii) is not a fit and proper person to register civil partnerships, or

(iv) for any other reason, should not be registered as an approved celebrant.

(2) The Registrar General may not remove the name of a person from the register on any ground mentioned in subsection (1)(c) unless the Registrar General has given the person at least 21 days notice in writing of the intention to do so.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), notice which is given by electronic means is to be treated as in writing if it is received in a form which is legible and capable of being used for subsequent reference.

(4) The Registrar General must—

(a) in the notice given under subsection (2), specify the ground of removal and call upon the person to give any reasons, within the period specified in the notice, why the person’s name should not be removed from the register, and

(b) consider any representations made within that period by the person.

(5) Where a person’s name has been removed from the register on any of the grounds mentioned in paragraph (c) of subsection (1), the person or the body which nominated the person under section 94B(1) may, if aggrieved by the removal, within 28 days of receiving notice of the removal appeal to the Scottish Ministers.

(6) On an appeal under subsection (5) the Scottish Ministers may give any direction they think proper to the Registrar General as to the removal from, or restoration to, the register of the person’s name; and such direction is final.

(7) Where a person has received a notice in pursuance of subsection (2), the person must not register a civil partnership unless and until the person’s name is restored to the register or, as the case may be, the Registrar General has decided not to remove the person’s name from the register.
94D Alterations to register maintained under section 94B

(1) A body registered in pursuance of section 94B(6)(a)(ii) must notify the Registrar General of any of the following events (if practicable, within 21 days of its occurrence)—

(a) any change in the name or the address of the body or any amalgamation with any other religious or belief body, giving the name and address of any approved celebrant who is a member of the body so registered,

(b) the death of an approved celebrant who is a member of the body so registered,

(c) any change of name, address or designation of an approved celebrant who is a member of the body so registered,

(d) the cessation of an approved celebrant who is a member of the body so registered from exercising the functions of an approved celebrant, giving the person’s name and address.

(2) The Registrar General must, on receipt of any such notification, make whatever alteration to the register maintained under section 94B the Registrar General considers necessary or desirable.

94E Temporary authorisation of celebrants

(1) The Registrar General may, in accordance with such terms and conditions as may be specified in the authorisation, grant to any member of a religious or belief body a temporary written authorisation to register—

(a) a civil partnership or partnerships specified in the authorisation, or

(b) civil partnerships during such period as is specified in the authorisation.

(2) The Registrar General may grant an authorisation to a person under subsection (1) only if satisfied that the religious or belief body of which the person is a member meets the qualifying requirements.

(3) The Registrar General may grant an authorisation to a person under subsection (1)(b) only if the religious or belief body of which the person is a member—

(a) is prescribed by virtue of section 94A(1)(a)(i), or

(b) has nominated members (whether or not including that person) under section 94B(1).

(4) In subsection (2), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (1), an authorisation which is issued by electronic means is to be treated as written if it is received in a form which is legible and capable of being used for subsequent reference.”.

(14) In section 95 (further provision as to registration)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “85” insert “the approved celebrant or, as the case may be,”,

(b) after subsection (1) insert—
“(1A) In the case of a religious or belief civil partnership, the parties to the civil partnership must, within 3 days of signing the civil partnership schedule in accordance with section 85(4), deliver the civil partnership schedule, or send it by post or arrange that it is delivered, to the district registrar.”,

(c) in subsection (2), for “after the civil partnership schedule has been signed, the authorised registrar” substitute “after—

(a) in the case of a civil registration, the civil partnership schedule has been signed in accordance with section 85, or

(b) in the case of a religious or belief civil partnership, the district registrar receives the civil partnership schedule,

the district registrar”,

(d) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) The district registrar must not enter the particulars set out in the civil partnership schedule relating to a religious or belief civil partnership in the civil partnership register unless and until the registrar receives a duly signed civil partnership schedule in respect of that civil partnership.

(3B) Where the Registrar General is satisfied that—

(a) a civil partnership has been properly registered, and

(b) the civil partnership schedule in respect of the civil partnership has been duly signed but has been lost or destroyed,

the Registrar General may direct the district registrar to complete an exact copy of the original civil partnership schedule and, so far as practicable, to arrange for its signature by those persons who signed the original schedule.

(3C) As soon as possible after the copy schedule has been signed, the district registrar must cause the particulars as set out in it to be entered into the civil partnership register.”;

(e) in subsection (4), after “their” insert “civil”.

(15) After section 95 insert—

“95ZA Registrar’s power to require delivery of civil partnership schedule

(1) Where the civil partnership schedule is not delivered to the district registrar within 21 days from the date of registration as entered in the schedule, the registrar may serve a notice in the prescribed form on either of the parties to the civil partnership requiring that party within 8 days from the date of service to deliver the schedule, or send it by post, to the registrar.

(2) If a person on whom a notice has been served under subsection (1) fails to comply with the notice, the district registrar may serve on the person a second notice in the prescribed form requiring the person to attend personally at the registration office of the district registrar, within 8 days from the date of service of the second notice, for the purpose of delivering the civil partnership schedule to the district registrar to enable the registrar to enter the civil partnership in the civil partnership register.”.

(16) In section 95A (validity following entry in civil partnership register), in subsection (1), after “95(2)” insert “or (3C)”.

(17) In section 96 (civil partnership with former spouse)—
(a) in subsection (3)(b), for “91” substitute “91(1)”, and

(b) in subsection (3)(c), for “paragraph (b)” substitute “subsection (1)(b)”.

(18) In section 97 (certificates of no impediment for Part 2 purposes)—

(a) in subsection (4), for “14 days” substitute “28 days”, and

(b) after subsection (5) insert—

“(5A) For the purposes of subsection (5), an objection which is submitted by electronic means is to be treated as in writing if it is received in a form which is legible and capable of being used for subsequent reference.”.

(19) In section 100 (offences)—

(a) in subsection (2)—

(i) in paragraphs (c), (d) and (e), after “being” insert “an approved celebrant or, as the case may be,”, and

(ii) in paragraph (f), for the words from “a” in the second place where it appears to the end substitute “in accordance with section 93”;

(b) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A person commits an offence if the person—

(a) registers a civil partnership in an area or place in which by virtue of section 94B(4)(b) the person is not permitted to register a civil partnership,

(b) registers a civil partnership in contravention of section 94C(7),

(c) being a person temporarily authorised under section 94E—

(i) if authorised under subsection (1)(a) of that section, registers a civil partnership not specified in the authorisation,

(ii) if authorised under subsection (1)(b) of that section, registers a civil partnership outwith the period specified in the authorisation,

(iii) in either case, registers a civil partnership otherwise than in accordance with such terms and conditions as may be specified in the authorisation,

(d) being a party to a civil partnership, fails to comply with a notice served under section 95ZA(2).

(3B) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3A) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.”, and

(c) in subsection (4), for “or (2)” substitute “, (2) or (3A)”.

(20) In section 126(4) (regulations), after “section” insert “94A(1)(a)(i) or (5), 94B(3), 94E(4) or”.

(21) In section 135(1) (interpretation of Part 3)—

(a) after the definition of “the 1965 Act” insert—

““approved celebrant” has the meaning given by section 94A(4)(a);”,

(b) after the definition of “civil partnership schedule” insert—

““civil registration” has the meaning given by section 94A(4)(c);”,
(c) after the definition of “registration office” insert—

““religious or belief body” means an organised group of people—

(a) which meets regularly for religious worship, or

(b) the principal object (or one of the principal objects) of which is to uphold or promote philosophical beliefs and which meets regularly

for that purpose;

“religious or belief civil partnership” has the meaning given by section

94A(4)(b);”.

(22) For Schedule 10 substitute—

“SCHEDULE 10

(introduced by section 86)

FORBIDDEN DEGREES OF RELATIONSHIP: SCOTLAND

1. Relationships by consanguinity

Parent

Child

Grandparent

Grandchild

Sibling

Aunt or uncle

Niece or nephew

Great-grandparent

Great-grandchild

2. Relationships by affinity referred to in section 86(3)

Child of former spouse

Child of former civil partner

Former spouse of parent

Former civil partner of parent

Former spouse of grandparent

Former civil partner of grandparent

Grandchild of former spouse

Grandchild of former civil partner.”.

23 Power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: civil partnership

In section 88 of the 2004 Act (notice of proposed civil partnership), after subsection (7) (inserted by section 22(5) of this Act) insert—

“(8) A district registrar to whom a notice under subsection (1) is submitted may require the person submitting the notice to provide the district registrar with specified nationality evidence relating to each of the intended civil partners.
(9) A requirement under subsection (8) may be imposed at any time—
   (a) on or after the submitting of the notice under subsection (1), but
   (b) before the district registrar completes the civil partnership schedule.

(10) In subsection (8), “specified nationality evidence” means such evidence of that person’s nationality as may be specified in guidance issued by the Registrar General.”.

24 Recognition of overseas relationships

(1) The 2004 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 214 (general conditions in relation to recognition of overseas relationships)—
   (a) after paragraph (b) insert—
       “(ba) the relationship is not one of marriage,”, and
   (b) in paragraph (c), for the words from the second “or” to the end substitute “but are not treated as married”.

(3) In Schedule 20 to the 2004 Act (specified relationships), the following entries are repealed—
      “Argentina marriage”,
      “Belgium marriage”,
      “Brazil marriage”,
      “Canada marriage”,
      “Denmark marriage”,
      “Iceland marriage”,
      “Mexico: Mexico City Federal District marriage”,
      “Netherlands marriage”,
      “Norway marriage”,
      “Portugal marriage”,
      “South Africa marriage”,
      “Spain marriage”,
      “Sweden marriage”,
      “United States of America: California marriage”,
      “United States of America: Connecticut marriage”,
      “United States of America: District of Columbia marriage”,
      “United States of America: Iowa marriage”,
      “United States of America: Massachusetts marriage”,
      “United States of America: New Hampshire marriage”,
      “United States of America: New York marriage”,
      “United States of America: Vermont marriage”.
Dissolution of civil partnership: evidence

(1) Article 2 of the 2012 Order (which disapplies from certain actions for dissolution of civil partnership section 8(3A) of the Civil Evidence (Scotland) Act 1988 (requirement for evidence other than that of a party to the civil partnership)) is to be taken to have been in force since 5 December 2005 and to have had effect in relation to actions raised before 30 March 2012 as it has effect in relation to actions raised on or after that date.

(2) The “2012 Order” is the Evidence in Civil Partnership and Divorce Actions (Scotland) Order 2012 (SSI 2012/111).

PART 3

Marriage and civil partnership: other provision

26 Bigamy

(1) In section 24 of the 1977 Act (offences)—

(a) before subsection (1) insert—

"(A1) A person ("A") commits an offence if A purports to enter into a marriage with another person ("B") knowing that either or both—

(a) A is already married to or in a civil partnership with a person other than B, or

(b) B is already married to or in a civil partnership with a person other than A.

(A2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (A1) is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years or to a fine (or both),

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum (or both).”, and

(b) in subsection (1)(ii), for “prescribed sum” substitute “statutory maximum”.

(2) In section 100 of the 2004 Act (offences)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “registers” substitute “purports to register”, and

(b) in subsection (3)(b), for “level 3 on the standard scale” substitute “the statutory maximum”.

(3) The common law offence of bigamy is abolished.

(4) In section 13 of the Presumption of Death (Scotland) Act 1977 (defence to charge of bigamy)—

(a) for “bigamy” substitute “committing an offence under section 24(A1) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 or section 100(1) of the Civil Partnership Act 2004”,

(b) after “marriage” insert “or civil partnership”, and

(c) after “spouse” insert “or civil partner”.

Part 4

Change of gender of married persons or civil partners

Schedule 2 (change of gender of married persons or civil partners) has effect.

28 Renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision about—

(a) the solemnisation of a renewed marriage between the parties to a protected Scottish marriage following the issue of a full gender recognition certificate to a party (or both parties) to the marriage,

(b) the registration of a renewed civil partnership between the parties to a protected Scottish civil partnership following the issue of full gender recognition certificates to both parties to the civil partnership.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may in particular make provision—

(a) about the submitting by the parties to the protected Scottish marriage of notice of intention to enter into a renewed marriage,

(b) about the submitting by the parties to the protected Scottish civil partnership of notice of intention to enter into a renewed civil partnership,

(c) about the information to be provided by the parties,

(d) about the provision of evidence by the parties,

(e) for the parties to appear before any person or appear at any place,

(f) conferring functions on persons in relation to a renewed marriage or renewed civil partnership,

(g) for fees, of such amounts as are specified in or determined in accordance with the regulations, to be payable in respect of—

(i) the submitting of notice of intention to enter into a renewed marriage or renewed civil partnership,

(ii) the exercise of any function conferred by virtue of paragraph (f).

(3) Functions conferred by virtue of subsection (2)(f) may include functions relating to—

(a) the recording of information relating to a renewed marriage or renewed civil partnership,

(b) the issuing of certified copies of any information recorded,

(c) the conducting of services or ceremonies in connection with a renewed marriage or renewed civil partnership.

(4) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland.

(5) Regulations under subsection (1)—

(a) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,
(b) may make provision applying any provision of the 1977 Act or the 2004 Act (either with or without modifications),

(c) may modify any enactment (including this Act),

(d) are (except where subsection (6) applies) subject to the negative procedure.

(6) Regulations under subsection (1) which add to, replace or omit any part of the text of an Act are subject to the affirmative procedure.

(7) In this section “full gender recognition certificate”, “protected Scottish civil partnership” and “protected Scottish marriage” have the meanings given by section 25 of the Gender Recognition Act 2004.

28A Grounds of divorce: interim gender recognition certificate followed by full certificate

(1) The Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1)(b) (issue of interim gender recognition certificate as ground on which decree of divorce may be granted), at the beginning insert “subject to subsection (3B),”.

(3) After subsection (3A) (as inserted by section 5(3)) insert—

“(3B) Subsection (1)(b) does not apply where, under the Gender Recognition Act 2004, the Gender Recognition Panel issue a full gender recognition certificate to the person to whom the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.”.

PART 5
REGISTRATION SERVICES

29 Provision of certain information to district registrars

In section 39C(1)(a)(i) of the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965 (provision of certain information to district registrars), for “section 34(3)” substitute “section 34(4)”.

29A Form of register of marriages

In section 54 of the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965 (regulations), after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) Regulations prescribing the form of a register of marriages under section 32 may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.”.

PART 6
GENERAL PROVISIONS

30 Interpretation

In this Act—

“the 1977 Act” means the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977,

“the 2004 Act” means the Civil Partnership Act 2004.
Ancillary provision

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make such supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision as they consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in connection with, or for giving full effect to, any provision of this Act.

(1A) An order under subsection (1) may make different provision for different purposes.

(2) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment (including this Act).

(3) Subject to subsection (4), an order under subsection (1) is subject to the negative procedure.

(4) An order under subsection (1) containing provisions which add to, replace or omit any part of the text of an Act is subject to the affirmative procedure.

Commencement

(1) This section and sections 30, 31 and 33 come into force on the day after Royal Assent.

(2) The other provisions of this Act come into force on such day as the Scottish Ministers may by order appoint.

(3) An order under subsection (2) may include transitional, transitory or saving provision.

Short title

The short title of this Act is the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Act 2014.
SCHEDULE 1
(introduced by section 6)

JURISDICTION IN PROCEEDINGS RELATING TO SAME SEX MARRIAGES

Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973

1 (1) The Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973 is amended in accordance with this paragraph.

(2) After section 8 insert—

“8A Same sex marriages

(1) Sections 7 and 8 do not apply in relation to marriages between persons of the same sex.

(2) Schedule 1B (jurisdiction in relation to same sex marriages (Scotland)) has effect.”.

(3) In section 10 (ancillary and collateral orders), after subsection (1B) insert—

“(1BA) In relation to a marriage between persons of the same sex, subsection (1) does not give the Court of Session or a sheriff court jurisdiction to entertain an application in proceedings where—

(a) the court is exercising jurisdiction in the proceedings by virtue of regulations under paragraph 2 of Schedule 1B; and

(b) the making or variation of an order in consequence of the application would contravene the regulations.”.

(4) Before Schedule 2 insert—

“SCHEDULE 1B
(introduced by section 8A)

JURISDICTION IN RELATION TO SAME SEX MARRIAGES (SCOTLAND)

Introduction

1 (1) This Schedule has effect with respect to the jurisdiction of the Court of Session and of the sheriff court to entertain, in relation to same sex marriages, proceedings for—

(a) divorce,

(b) separation,

(c) declarator of marriage,

(d) declarator of nullity of marriage,

(e) declarator of recognition, or non-recognition, of a relevant foreign decree.

(2) References in this Schedule to “relevant proceedings” are to such proceedings as are mentioned in sub-paragraph (1).

(3) In this Schedule—

“relevant foreign decree” means a decree of divorce, separation or nullity granted outwith a member State,
“same sex marriage” means a marriage between persons of the same sex.

Power to make provision corresponding to EC Regulation 2201/2003

2 (1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision—

(a) as to the jurisdiction of courts in Scotland in relevant proceedings in relation to a same sex marriage where one of the parties to the marriage—

(i) is or has been habitually resident in a member State,
(ii) is a national of a member State, or
(iii) is domiciled in a part of the United Kingdom or in the Republic of Ireland, and

(b) as to the recognition in Scotland of any judgment of a court of another member State which orders the divorce or separation of the parties to a same sex marriage, or the annulment of a same sex marriage.

(3) The regulations may provide that for the purposes of this Schedule and the regulations “member State” means—

(a) all member States with the exception of such member States as are specified in the regulations, or

(b) such member States as are specified in the regulations.

(4) The regulations may make provision under sub-paragraph (1)(b) which applies even in a case where the date of the divorce, separation or annulment is earlier than the date on which this paragraph comes into force.

(5) The regulations are subject to the affirmative procedure.

Divorce or separation

3 (1) The Court of Session has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for the divorce or separation of the parties to a same sex marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the Scottish courts have jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, or

(b) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under those regulations and either party to the marriage is domiciled in Scotland on the date on which the proceedings are begun.

(2) The sheriff court has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for the divorce or separation of the parties to a same sex marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the requirements of paragraph (a) or (b) of sub-paragraph (1) are met, and

(b) either party to the marriage—
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

Schedule 1—Jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages

(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date.

3 (3) Despite sub-paragraph (2), the sheriff court of the sheriffdom of Lothian and Borders at Edinburgh also has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for the divorce or separation of the parties to a same sex marriage if the following requirements are met—

(a) the parties married each other in Scotland,

(b) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, and

(c) it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to assume jurisdiction in the case.

Declarator of marriage

4 (1) In relation to a same sex marriage, the Court of Session has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of marriage if (and only if) either of the parties to the marriage—

(a) is domiciled in Scotland on the date on which the proceedings are begun,

(b) was habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with that date, or

(c) died before that date and either—

(i) was at death domiciled in Scotland, or

(ii) had been habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with the date of death.

(2) In relation to a same sex marriage, the sheriff court has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the requirements of paragraph (a), (b) or (c) of sub-paragraph (1) are met in relation to either party to the marriage, and

(b) either party of the marriage—

(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date.

Nullity of marriage

5 (1) The Court of Session has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of nullity of a same sex marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the Scottish courts have jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, or

(b) the parties married each other in Scotland, and

(c) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, and

(d) it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to assume jurisdiction in the case.

(2) In relation to a same sex marriage, the sheriff court has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of nullity if (and only if)—

(a) the requirements of paragraph (a), (b) or (c) of sub-paragraph (1) are met in relation to either party to the marriage, and

(b) either party of the marriage—

(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date.
(b) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under those regulations and either party to the marriage—

(i) is domiciled in Scotland on the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) died before that date and either was at death domiciled in Scotland or had been habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with the date of death.

(2) The sheriff court has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of nullity of a same sex marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the requirements of paragraph (a) or (b) of sub-paragraph (1) are met, and

(b) either party to the marriage—

(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date.

(3) Despite sub-paragraph (2), the sheriff court of the sheriffdom of Lothian and Borders at Edinburgh also has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of nullity of a same sex marriage if the following requirements are met—

(a) the parties married each other in Scotland,

(b) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, and

(c) it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to assume jurisdiction in the case.

Recognition, or non-recognition, of foreign decrees

6 (1) The Court of Session has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of recognition, or non-recognition, of a relevant foreign decree relating to a same sex marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the Scottish courts have jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, or

(b) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under those regulations and either party to the marriage—

(i) is domiciled in Scotland on the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) died before that date and either was at death domiciled in Scotland or had been habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with the date of death.

(2) The sheriff court has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of recognition, or non-recognition, of a relevant foreign decree relating to a same sex marriage if (and only if)—
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

Schedule 1—Jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages

(a) the requirements of paragraph (a) or (b) of sub-paragraph (1) are met, and

(b) either party to the marriage—

(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date.

Supplementary provision

7 (1) Paragraph 3(1) does not affect any rule of law under which the Court of Session has jurisdiction in certain circumstances to entertain proceedings for separation as a matter of necessity and urgency.

(2) Paragraphs 3 and 5 do not affect any jurisdiction of a sheriff court to entertain any proceedings for separation, divorce or declarator of nullity of marriage remitted to the court under any enactment or rule of court, if entertaining the proceedings would not contravene regulations under paragraph 2.

(3) At any time when proceedings are pending in respect of which a court has jurisdiction by virtue of any of paragraphs 3 to 6 (or this paragraph), the court also has jurisdiction to entertain other proceedings, in respect of the same marriage, for divorce, separation or declarator of marriage or of nullity of marriage even though that jurisdiction would not be exercisable under any of paragraphs 3 to 6.”.

Presumption of Death (Scotland) Act 1977

2 In section 1 of the Presumption of Death (Scotland) Act 1977 (actions of declarator of the death of missing persons), after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) Despite subsection (4), the sheriff court of the sheriffdom of Lothian and Borders at Edinburgh also has jurisdiction to entertain an action of declarator if—

(a) the pursuer in the action and the missing person are married to each other and are of the same sex,

(b) they married each other in Scotland, and

(c) it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to assume jurisdiction in the case.”.
Schedule 2—Change of gender of married persons or civil partners

Part 1—Applications by married persons and civil partners

SCHEDULE 2
(introduced by section 27)

CHANGE OF GENDER OF MARRIED PERSONS OR CIVIL PARTNERS

PART 1

APPLICATIONS BY MARRIED PERSONS AND CIVIL PARTNERS

Introductory

1 The Gender Recognition Act 2004 is amended in accordance with this Part of this schedule.

Interpretation

2 In section 25 (interpretation)—

(a) the existing words become subsection (1),

(aa) in the definitions of “full gender recognition certificate” and “interim gender recognition certificate”, for “5 or 5A” substitute “4C, 5, 5A or 5D”,

(b) before the definition of “registered psychologist” insert—

“protected Scottish civil partnership” means a civil partnership registered in Scotland,

“protected Scottish marriage” means a marriage solemnised in Scotland,” and

(d) after subsection (1) insert—

“(2) A civil partnership which was registered outside the United Kingdom under an Order in Council made under Chapter 1 of Part 5 of the Civil Partnership Act 2004 is to be treated for the purposes of this Act as having been registered in Scotland if—

(a) the parties to the civil partnership elected Scotland as the relevant part of the United Kingdom under the Order, and

(b) details of the civil partnership have been sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.

(3) A marriage which was registered outside the United Kingdom under the Foreign Marriage Act 1892 (other than a marriage registered by virtue of section 18 of that Act) is to be treated for the purposes of this Act as having been solemnised in Scotland if details of the marriage have been sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.

(4) A marriage which was solemnised outside the United Kingdom and registered under an Order in Council made under the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Special Provisions) Act 1957 is to be treated for the purposes of this Act as having been solemnised in Scotland if details of the marriage have been sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.

(5) A consular marriage in relation to which the relevant part of the United Kingdom is Scotland is to be treated for the purposes of this Act as having been solemnised in Scotland.
(6) In subsection (5)—

“consular marriage” means a marriage solemnised in accordance with Part 1 of Schedule 6 to the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013 and any Order in Council made under it, “relevant part of the United Kingdom”, in relation to such a marriage, means the part of the United Kingdom determined in accordance with paragraph 1(2)(b) of that Part of that Schedule for the purposes of the marriage.”.

Evidence

3 In section 3 (evidence), before subsection (7) insert—

“(6D) If the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish marriage, an application under section 1(1) must also include—

(a) a statutory declaration by the applicant that the applicant wishes the marriage to continue after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate (if that is the case), and

(c) either—

(i) a statutory declaration by the applicant’s spouse that the spouse consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate (“a statutory declaration of consent”) (if the spouse has made such a declaration), or

(ii) a statutory declaration by the applicant that no such declaration by the applicant’s spouse is included.

(6E) If an application includes a statutory declaration of consent by the applicant’s spouse under subsection (6D)(c)(i), the Gender Recognition Panel must give the spouse notice that the application has been made.

(6F) If the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership, an application under section 1(1) must also include a statutory declaration as to where the civil partnership was registered and, if the civil partnership was registered outside the United Kingdom, that details of the civil partnership have been sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.”.

Successful applications

4 In section 4 (successful applications)—

(a) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The certificate is to be a full gender recognition certificate if the applicant is neither married nor in a civil partnership.”,

(b) in subsection (2) (as substituted by paragraph 3 of Schedule 5 to the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013)—

(i) after first “is” insert “also”,

(ii) paragraph (a) is repealed,

(c) in subsection (3) (as so substituted)—
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill
Schedule 2—Change of gender of married persons or civil partners
Part 1—Applications by married persons and civil partners

(i) in paragraph (b), at the beginning insert “subject to subsection (3C)(b),”;
(ii) in paragraph (e), at the beginning insert “subject to subsection (3C)(c),”;
(d) after subsection (3B) (as so substituted) insert—
“(3C) The certificate is also to be a full gender recognition certificate if—
(b) the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish marriage and both parties to the marriage consent to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate, or
(c) the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership and the Gender Recognition Panel has decided to issue a full gender recognition certificate to the other party to the civil partnership.

(3D) The certificate is to be an interim gender recognition certificate if—
(a) the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish marriage and either party to the marriage does not consent to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate,
(b) subject to subsection (2)(b), the applicant is a party to a marriage which is not a protected Scottish marriage,
(c) the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership and the other party to the civil partnership has not made an application under
    section 1(1),
(d) the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership and the Gender Recognition Panel has decided not to issue a full gender recognition certificate to the other party to the civil partnership, or (e) subject to subsection (2)(e), the applicant is a party to a civil partnership which is not a protected Scottish civil partnership.

(3E) If a Gender Recognition Panel issues a full gender recognition certificate under this section to an applicant who is a party to a protected Scottish marriage, the Panel must give the applicant’s spouse notice of the issue of the certificate.

(3F) Subsection (3C)(c) is subject to section 5C.”.

Issue of full gender recognition certificate after interim certificate: applicant married

Before section 5 insert—

“4C Married person with interim certificate: issue of full certificate (Scotland)
(1) A Gender Recognition Panel must issue a full gender recognition certificate to a person in either of the following cases.
(2) Case A is where, on an application by the person, the Panel is satisfied that—
(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person,
(b) the person was a party to a protected Scottish marriage at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,
(c) the person is still a party to that protected Scottish marriage, and
(d) both parties to the marriage now consent to the marriage continuing after the issue of the full gender recognition certificate.
(3) Case B is where, on an application by the person, the Panel is satisfied that—

(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person,
(b) the person was a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,
(c) the protected civil partnership was a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977) and the parties to the civil partnership submitted notice of intention to marry under section 3(1) of that Act within the period of six months beginning with the day on which that certificate was issued,
(d) the submitting of notice has resulted in the civil partnership becoming a marriage,
(e) the person is a party to that marriage, and
(f) the person’s spouse consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of the full gender recognition certificate.

(4) If, on an application under subsection (2) or (3), the Panel is not satisfied as mentioned in that subsection, the Panel must reject the application.

(5) An application under subsection (2) must be made within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate is issued.

(6) An application under subsection (3) must be made within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the civil partnership becomes a marriage.

(7) An application under subsection (2) or (3) must include a statutory declaration of consent (within the meaning of section 3(6D)(c)(i)) made by the person’s spouse.

(8) An application under subsection (3) must also include—

(a) evidence of the date on which the notice referred to in subsection (3)(c) was submitted, and
(b) evidence that the civil partnership has become a marriage.

(9) If an application is made under this section, the Panel must give the applicant’s spouse—

(a) notice of the application, and
(b) if the Panel grants the application, notice of the issue of the full gender recognition certificate.

4D Application under section 4C: death of spouse

(1) In a case where an application is made under section 4C(2) or (3) and the applicant’s spouse dies before the application is determined—

(a) the application is to be treated as an application, made under section 5(2) in a case where a spouse has died, for a full gender recognition certificate to be issued, and
(b) that application is to be treated as having been made at the time when the application under section 4C was made.

(2) The Gender Recognition Panel determining the application must specify the period within which the applicant is to produce the required evidence in support of the new application.

(3) In this section—

“new application” means the application under section 5(2) which the person is, by virtue of subsection (1), treated as having made,

“required evidence” means the evidence required by section 5(4).

4E Married person with interim certificate: issue of full certificate on application to the sheriff (Scotland)

(1) A person may make a summary application to the sheriff for the issue of a full gender recognition certificate where—

(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person, and

(b) the person is a party to a protected Scottish marriage.

(2) The sheriff must grant an application made under subsection (1) if the sheriff is satisfied that—

(a) the applicant was a party to a protected Scottish marriage at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,

(b) the applicant is still a party to that protected Scottish marriage, and

(c) the application was made within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.

(3) If an application is made under this section, the sheriff must give the applicant’s spouse—

(a) notice of the application, and

(b) if the sheriff grants the application, notice of the issue of the full gender recognition certificate.

(4) For the avoidance of doubt, where an application has been granted under subsection (2), the applicant is to be treated for the purposes of section 1(1)(b) of the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 as a person to whom an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued.”.

Applications by both civil partners

6 Before section 6 insert—

“5C Protected Scottish civil partnership: applications by both civil partners

(1) This section applies where a Gender Recognition Panel decides to issue a full gender recognition certificate to a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership.
(2) The Panel must not issue the full gender recognition certificate to that person unless the Panel issues a full gender recognition certificate to the other party to the protected Scottish civil partnership.

(3) In such a case, the Panel must issue both certificates on the same day.

(4) Those certificates take effect at the beginning of the day on which they are issued.

5D Protected Scottish civil partnership: power to make further provision for issue of full certificate

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for the issue by a Gender Recognition Panel, on an application under section 1(1) by a qualifying person, of a full gender recognition certificate in additional circumstances to those specified in section 4(3C)(c) or 5C.

(2) In subsection (1), “qualifying person” means a person who is a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership.

(3) An order under subsection (1) may include, in particular, provision about—

(a) the evidence or other information that is to be included with an application,

(b) the procedure to be followed in determining an application, including provision for the giving of notice to any person,

(c) the effect of the issuing to the applicant of a full gender recognition certificate in relation to the civil partnership to which the applicant is party.

(4) Provision under subsection (3)(c) may include, in particular, provision for changing the civil partnership into a marriage.

(5) An order under subsection (1) may modify this Act or any other enactment.

(6) Before making an order under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult the following persons on a copy of the proposed draft order—

(a) the Registrar General for Scotland,

(b) the Gender Recognition Panel, and

(c) such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.”.

Appeals etc.

7 In section 8 (appeals etc.)—

(a) in subsection (1), before “5(2)” insert “4C,”,

(b) in subsection (5), before “5(2)” insert “4C,”,

(c) before subsection (6) insert—

“(5B) If an application under section 1(1), 4C, 5(2), 5A(2) or 6(1) is granted, the applicant’s spouse or civil partner may apply to the Court of Session to quash the decision to grant the application on the grounds that its grant was secured by fraud.”, and
(d) in subsection (6), before “the” in the first place where it appears insert “or an application under subsection (5B)”.

Registration

8 (1) In section 10 (registration), before subsection (2) insert—

“(1B) Where a full gender recognition certificate is issued by a Gender Recognition Panel to a person who is a party to a protected Scottish marriage or a protected Scottish civil partnership, the Panel must send a copy of the certificate to the Registrar General for Scotland.”.

(2) In Schedule 3 (registration), in Part 2 (Scotland)—

(b) in paragraph 19(1), before “5(2)” insert “4C,”, and

(c) after paragraph 20 insert—

“20A(1) The Registrar General may, with the approval of the Scottish Ministers, make regulations about—

(a) the registration of qualifying Scottish marriages, and

(b) the registration of qualifying Scottish civil partnerships.

(1A) Regulations under sub-paragraph (1) may in particular make provision for fees to be payable in respect of things done under the regulations.

(1B) Regulations under sub-paragraph (1) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.

(1C) Regulations under sub-paragraph (1)(a) must provide that where a full gender recognition certificate has been issued to a person under section 4E, the marriage must not be registered unless the person’s spouse consents in writing to that registration in the form prescribed by the regulations.

(2) In this paragraph—

“qualifying Scottish civil partnership” means a civil partnership registered in Scotland in a case where a full gender recognition certificate has been issued to each of the civil partners, “qualifying Scottish marriage” means a marriage solemnised in Scotland in a case where a full gender recognition certificate has been issued to one, or each, of the spouses.”.

Continuity of marriage

9 Before section 12 insert—

“11C Continuity of marriage: Scotland

(1) This section applies in relation to a protected Scottish marriage if (by virtue of section 4(3C)(b), 4C or 4E) a full gender recognition certificate is issued to a party to the marriage.

(2) The continuity of the protected Scottish marriage is not affected by the issuing of a full gender recognition certificate.”.
Continuity of civil partnership

10 After section 11C (inserted by paragraph 9) insert—

“11D Continuity of civil partnership: Scotland

The continuity of a protected Scottish civil partnership is not affected by the issuing of full gender recognition certificates (by virtue of section 4(3C)(c)) to both civil partners.”.

Foreign gender change and marriage

11 In section 21 (foreign gender change and marriage), subsections (2) to (5) are repealed.

PART 2

ALTERNATIVE GROUNDS FOR GRANTING APPLICATIONS FOR GENDER RECOGNITION CERTIFICATES

Introductory

11A The Gender Recognition Act 2004 is further amended in accordance with this Part of this schedule.

Alternative grounds for granting applications

11B In section 2 (determination of applications), after subsection (3A) insert—

“(3B) This section does not apply to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.”.

11C After section 3B insert—

“3C Alternative grounds for granting applications: Scotland

(1) This section applies to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with this section.

(2) The Panel must grant the application if satisfied that the applicant complies with the requirements imposed by and under section 3D and meets the conditions in subsections (3) to (6).

(3) The first condition is that the applicant was a party to a protected Scottish marriage or a protected Scottish civil partnership on or before the date the application was made.

(4) The second condition is that the applicant—

(a) was living in the acquired gender six years before the commencement of section 27 of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Act 2014,

(b) continued to live in the acquired gender until the date the application was made; and

(c) intends to continue to live in the acquired gender until death.

(5) The third condition is that the applicant—

(a) has or has had gender dysphoria, or

(b) has undergone—
(i) surgical treatment, or
(ii) such other treatment as the Scottish Ministers may by order prescribe,
for the purpose of modifying sexual characteristics.

(6) The fourth condition is that the applicant is ordinarily resident in Scotland.

(7) Before making an order under subsection (5)(b)(ii) the Scottish Ministers must consult the following persons on a copy of the proposed draft order—

(a) the Gender Recognition Panel,

(b) such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.

(8) An order under subsection (5)(b)(ii)—

(a) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances,

(b) may amend any enactment (including this Act).

(9) The Panel must reject the application if not required by subsection (2) to grant it.”.

Evidence for granting applications on alternative grounds

11D In section 3 (evidence), after subsection (9) insert—

“(10) This section does not apply to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.”.

11E After section 3C (inserted by paragraph 11C) insert—

“3D Evidence for granting applications on alternative grounds: Scotland

(1) This section applies to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.

(2) The application must include either—

(a) a report made by a registered medical practitioner, or

(b) a report made by a registered psychologist practising in the field of gender dysphoria.

(3) If the application is based on the applicant having or having had gender dysphoria—

(a) the reference in subsection (2) to a registered medical practitioner is to one practising in the field of gender dysphoria, and

(b) that subsection is not complied with unless the report includes details of the diagnosis of the applicant’s gender dysphoria.

(4) Subsection (2) is not complied with in a case where—

(a) the applicant has undergone or is undergoing treatment for the purpose of modifying sexual characteristics, or

(b) treatment for that purpose has been prescribed or planned for the applicant, unless the report required by that subsection includes details of it.

(5) The application must also include a statutory declaration by the applicant that the applicant meets the conditions in section 3C(3) and (4).

(6) The application must include—

(a) a statutory declaration as to whether or not the applicant is married or a civil partner,

(b) any other information or evidence required by an order made by the Scottish Ministers, and

(c) any other information or evidence which the Panel which is to determine the application may require,

and may include any other information or evidence which the applicant wishes to include.

(7) If the applicant is married, the application must include a statutory declaration as to whether the marriage is a protected Scottish marriage.

(8) If the applicant is married, and the marriage is a protected Scottish marriage, the application must also include—

(a) a statutory declaration of consent (within the meaning of section 3(6D)(c)(i)) by the applicant’s spouse (if the spouse has made such a declaration), or

(b) a statutory declaration by the applicant that no such declaration by the applicant’s spouse is included.

(9) If the application includes a statutory declaration of consent by the applicant's spouse, the Panel must give the spouse notice that the application has been made.

(10) If the Panel which is to determine the application requires information or evidence under subsection (6)(c) it must give reasons for doing so.”.

Membership of Panels determining applications on alternative grounds

11F In schedule 1 (Gender Recognition Panels), in paragraph 4, after sub-paragraph (3) insert—

“(4) But a Panel need not include a medical member when determining an application under section 1(1)(a) for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.”.

PART 3

CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

12 (1) In section 7(1) (applications: supplementary), before “5(2)” insert “4C,”.

(2) In section 22(2)(a) (prohibition on disclosure of information), before “5(2)” insert “4C,”.

(3) In section 24 (procedure for orders and regulations)—

(a) in subsection (5), after “section” insert “3D(6)(b),”, and

(b) after subsection (5) insert—
“(5A) Regulations made by the Registrar General for Scotland under paragraph 20A of Schedule 3 are subject to the negative procedure.

(5B) An order under section 3C(5)(b)(ii) or 5D(1) is subject to the affirmative procedure.”.
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision for the marriage of persons of the same sex; to make further provision as to the persons who may solemnise marriage and as to marriage procedure and the places at which civil marriages may be solemnised; to make provision for the registration of civil partnerships by celebrants of religious or belief bodies; to make provision about gender change by married persons and civil partners; to make a minor correction in relation to registration information; and for connected purposes.

Introduced by: Alex Neil
On: 26 June 2013
Bill type: Government Bill
INTRODUCTION

1. As required under Rule 9.7.8A of the Parliament’s Standing Orders, these Revised Explanatory Notes are published to accompany the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill (introduced in the Scottish Parliament on 26 June 2013) as amended at Stage 2. Text has been added or deleted as necessary to reflect the amendments made to the Bill at Stage 2 and these changes are indicated by sidelining in the right margin.

2. These Explanatory Notes have been prepared by the Scottish Government in order to assist the reader of the Bill and to help inform debate on it. They do not form part of the Bill and have not been endorsed by the Parliament.

3. The Notes should be read in conjunction with the Bill. They are not, and are not meant to be, a comprehensive description of the Bill. So where a section or schedule, or a part of a section or schedule, does not seem to require any explanation or comment, none is given.

THE BILL

4. The draft Bill proposes a number of amendments to the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 and the Civil Partnership Act 2004. These Acts are referred to in these Explanatory Notes as “the 1977 Act” and “the 2004 Act”.

Summary and background

5. Key matters covered by the Bill are:
   • the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other;
   • putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants;
   • the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage;
• civil partnerships changing to marriage;
• the authorisation of Church of Scotland deacons to solemnise opposite sex marriage;
• allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and the registrar;
• allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships. At the moment, ceremonies to register civil partnerships can only be civil in nature (although it is possible to have a religious or belief ceremony to mark the partnership, any such ceremony would not be recognised by the state);
• allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining the full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender.

COMMENTARY

Part 1 – Marriage

Chapter 1 – Same sex marriage

Overview

6. This Chapter makes a number of changes to marriage law. In particular, it amends the 1977 Act, in relation to the “forbidden degrees” (about people who are too closely related to each other to get married) to reflect the introduction of same sex marriage; it deals with existing references to marriage and related expressions in legislation and private documents, such as wills; and it clarifies how certain common law rules will operate in the context of a same sex marriage.

Section 1: Marriage of related persons

7. This section makes a number of amendments to the 1977 Act, in relation to the “forbidden degrees”. Provision is made about the forbidden degrees in section 2 of, and Schedule 1 to, the 1977 Act. Section 2 of the 1977 Act makes various provisions about how the forbidden degrees are to operate and be interpreted. Some of these provisions refer at present to a husband and wife or make other indirect references to opposite sex marriage. Due to the introduction of same sex marriage, these provisions are amended by section 1 of the Bill so that they can apply to opposite sex and same sex marriage. Section 1(2)(c) makes provision so that “spouse” means either a wife of a husband or a husband of a wife or a same sex spouse.

8. Section 1 introduces a new Schedule 1 to the 1977 Act, replacing the current Schedule 1. Section 1(2)(d) deletes the word “former” from section 2(7) of the 1977 Act. The word “former” is not needed as the new Schedule 1 to the 1977 Act refers to “former spouse” and “spouse” is defined as outlined in paragraph 7 above. The new Schedule 1 is a simplified version of the existing table of forbidden degrees in the 1977 Act. No changes are made in respect of the types of relationships which mean that a couple cannot marry. Instead, the change relates to how the relationships are described. The table below demonstrates this:
Relationships by consanguinity

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Current table (Column 1)</th>
<th>Current table (Column 2)</th>
<th>Proposed table</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Mother</td>
<td>Father</td>
<td>Parent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter</td>
<td>Son</td>
<td>Child</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Father’s mother</td>
<td>Father’s father</td>
<td>Grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother’s mother</td>
<td>Mother’s father</td>
<td>Grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Son’s daughter</td>
<td>Son’s son</td>
<td>Grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter’s daughter</td>
<td>Daughter’s son</td>
<td>Grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sister</td>
<td>Brother</td>
<td>Sibling</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Father’s sister</td>
<td>Father’s brother</td>
<td>Aunt or uncle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother’s sister</td>
<td>Mother’s brother</td>
<td>Aunt or uncle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brother’s daughter</td>
<td>Brother’s son</td>
<td>Niece or nephew</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sister’s daughter</td>
<td>Sister’s son</td>
<td>Niece or nephew</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Father’s father’s mother</td>
<td>Father’s father’s father</td>
<td>Great-grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Father’s mother’s mother</td>
<td>Father’s mother’s father</td>
<td>Great-grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother’s father’s mother</td>
<td>Mother’s father’s mother</td>
<td>Great-grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother’s mother’s mother</td>
<td>Mother’s mother’s father</td>
<td>Great-grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Son’s son’s daughter</td>
<td>Son’s son’s son</td>
<td>Great-grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Son’s daughter’s daughter</td>
<td>Son’s daughter’s son</td>
<td>Great-grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter’s son daughter</td>
<td>Daughter’s son’s son</td>
<td>Great-grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter’s daughter’s daughter</td>
<td>Daughter’s son son</td>
<td>Great-grandchild</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Relationships by affinity referred to in section 2(1A)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Current table (Column 2)</th>
<th>Proposed table</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Daughter of former wife</td>
<td>Child of former spouse</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter of former civil partner</td>
<td>Son of former civil partner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Former wife of father</td>
<td>Former husband of mother</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Former civil partner of mother</td>
<td>Former civil partner of mother</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Former wife of father’s father</td>
<td>Former husband of father’s father</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Former civil partner of mother’s mother</td>
<td>Former civil partner of mother’s mother</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Former wife of mother’s father</td>
<td>Former husband of mother’s mother</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Former civil partner of father’s mother</td>
<td>Former civil partner of father’s mother</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter of son of former wife</td>
<td>Son of son of former husband</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter of son of former civil partner</td>
<td>Son of son of former civil partner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter of daughter of former wife</td>
<td>Son of daughter of former husband</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter of daughter of former civil partner</td>
<td>Son of daughter of former civil partner</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Section 2: Objections to marriage

9. Section 5 of the 1977 Act currently provides for situations where there is an objection to a marriage proceeding. Section 5(4) lists the legal impediments to a marriage. These include where one or both parties are already married; where both parties are of the same sex or where one or both parties are not domiciled in Scotland and marriage would be void according to the law of the party’s domicile.

10. Section 2 of the Bill repeals the legal impediment of both parties being of the same sex, so that marriages between two people of the same sex can take place in Scotland, once the Bill is commenced.

11. Section 2 of the Bill also amends section 5(4) of the 1977 Act in relation to cases where one or both of the parties are not domiciled in Scotland.

12. The amendment makes it clear that even if a same sex marriage would be void according to the law of the domicile of one (or both) of the parties, that is not a barrier to the parties entering into a same sex marriage in Scotland.

Section 3: Preliminaries to marriage

13. This section makes some amendments to section 3 of the 1977 Act. Section 3 of the 1977 Act makes provision about the procedures a couple must go through when they want to marry. They must submit to a district registrar a notice of intention to marry, with the prescribed fee, their birth certificates and certain other documents, which are specified in section 3 of the 1977 Act.

14. Subsection (2) substitutes a new paragraph (b) in section 3(1) of the 1977 Act, to remove terms like “widow”, “widower” and “spouse”. The new paragraph instead refers to “the other party” to the marriage. Despite the change in terminology, the effect of the provision remains the same. When a marriage has ended because one of the parties has died, a person who is marrying again has to provide the death certificate of the deceased party.

15. Section 3(1) of the 1977 Act is also amended so that any person who wants to get married who has a civil partner who has died is required to submit the relevant death certificate. Section 7 of the Bill amends section 3 of the 1977 Act so that if a person who wants to get married is changing from a civil partnership to a marriage, that person must submit a relevant extract from the civil partnership register.
16. Section 3(2) of the 1977 Act makes provision in cases where someone intending to get married cannot supply his or her birth certificate or some of the other documents required by section 3(1). In essence, a person in this position has to supply the district registrar with a declaration on why the documents cannot be submitted.

17. The obligation in section 3(2) of the 1977 Act is extended by subsection (2) so that it also applies to the additional documents required as set out in paragraph 15 above. For more information on the process of changing from a civil partnership to a marriage, see the explanatory notes on sections 7 and 8.

18. Section 3(5) of the 1977 Act makes provision where one or both of the parties to the marriage is not domiciled in Scotland. Under section 3(5), such a party is required, if practicable, to submit a certificate issued by his or her home jurisdiction which confirms that there is no legal bar to him or her marrying in terms of the law of the home jurisdiction.

19. There are some exceptions in section 3(5) to the need to supply such a certificate. Subsection (2) of the Bill amends section 3(5) to provide that a certificate is not required if it would not be issued just because the parties to the marriage are of the same sex.

20. Section 7 of the 1977 Act allows a person who wants to marry outwith Scotland to apply to a district registrar in Scotland for a certificate in respect of a person’s capacity to marry. When applying, the person must submit certain documents to the registrar.

21. Subsection (3) of the Bill amends section 7(1) so it refers also to the death certificate when a civil partnership has ended by death and an extract from the entry in the civil partnership register where civil partners are changing their civil partnership to a marriage.

Section 4: Meaning of marriage and related expressions in enactments and documents

22. Section 4 makes provision on how the term “marriage” and other expressions should be interpreted in enactments (legislation) generally, the 1977 Act specifically, the common law and private documents (such as wills). The provisions of section 4 only apply to devolved legislation – legislation that is within the legislative competence of the Scottish Parliament.

23. Subsection (1) provides that references in enactments to “marriage” and people who are or were married should be read as referring to both opposite and same sex marriage and married couples. This would, for example, apply to terms in those enactments such as “husband”, “wife”, “man and wife” and “spouse”.

24. Subsections (2) and (3) make provision in respect of references in legislation to cohabitants, so it is clear they apply to same sex cohabitants too.

25. Subsection (4) removes references in legislation to two persons of the same sex who are (or were) living together as if they are or were in a civil partnership (i.e. cohabitants). Once the Bill is enacted, such references will be unnecessary as same sex cohabitants will be covered by the references caught be the provisions made in subsections (2) and (3).
This document relates to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 36A)

26. Subsection (5) makes it clear that subsections (1) to (4) only apply to enactments, other than private Acts, passed or made before section 4 is commenced. (As outlined below, subsection (14) makes changes to the Interpretation and Legislative Reform (Scotland) Act 2010 in respect of future legislation). Subsection (5) also makes it clear that subsections (1) to (4) do not apply if the enactment or any other enactment provides otherwise. For example, this Bill makes separate provision in relation to the solemnisation of, on the one hand, opposite sex marriage and, on the other hand, same sex marriage. Therefore, the general provisions at subsection (1) do not apply to the legislation on solemnising marriage.

27. Subsection (6) ensures that references to being (or having been) married or in a purported marriage in the common law are to be read as applying equally to opposite sex and same sex marriage.

28. Subsection (8) empowers the Scottish Ministers to make an Order, generally subject to the negative procedure, to disapply or modify the effect of subsections (1) to (6).

29. Subsection (9) ensures that any order under subsection (8) may amend primary and secondary legislation. Subsection (9A) ensures that, despite an order under subsection (8) generally being subject to negative procedure, any such order which amends primary legislation is subject to affirmative procedure.

30. For private documents which are executed after section 4 comes into force, subsection (10) provides that references in them to “marriage” or people being (or having been) married should be read as referring to both opposite and same sex marriage and married couples. This would, for example, apply to terms in private documents such as “husband”, “wife”, “man and wife” and “spouse”. Subsection (11) makes provision about the interpretation of “widow” and “widower” in any documents executed after section 4 comes into force.

31. By virtue of subsection (12), subsections (10) and (11) do not apply to documents where the document provides otherwise. Therefore, if a document executed after section 4 comes into force refers to a person being in an opposite sex marriage, subsection (10) would not enable that reference to be read as meaning a same sex marriage as well.

32. Subsection (13) adds a definition of “marriage” to the 1977 Act, referring to both opposite sex and same sex marriage. Section 26 of the 1977 Act, which contains a number of definitions, makes it clear that the definitions are to apply in the 1977 Act “except where the context otherwise requires”. An example would be the separate provisions of the 1977 Act, as amended or inserted by this Bill, on solemnising opposite sex and same sex marriage.

33. Subsection (14) adds definitions of “marriage”, “widow” and “widower” to the Interpretation and Legislative Reform (Scotland) Act 2010. The 2010 Act makes provision on how Acts of the Scottish Parliament and Scottish Statutory Instruments are to be interpreted. Therefore, adding a definition of “marriage” to the 2010 Act means that any references to marriage and married couples in any future Scottish Parliament legislation will cover both opposite sex and same sex marriage and spouses, unless specific provision is made so that this is not the case. The new definitions of “widow” and “widower” make it clear that in future legislation “widow” will include the female spouse of a deceased woman and “widower” the male spouse of a deceased man, unless contrary provision is made.

Section 5: Same sex marriage: further provision

34. This section makes provision relating to the introduction of same sex marriage and its effect on certain aspects of Scots law.

35. Subsection (2) makes provision in respect of permanent and incurable impotency. In Scotland, a marriage is voidable (i.e. a court action may be raised to challenge and end the marriage) if one of the parties is at the time of the marriage permanently and incurably impotent in relation to the other spouse. Subsection (2) provides that this rule of law only applies to opposite sex marriages.

36. Subsection (3) amends section 1 of the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 (“the 1976 Act”). Under the 1976 Act, there are two grounds of divorce in Scotland:

(a) irretrievable breakdown of the marriage;
(b) the issue, after the date of marriage, to either party of an interim gender recognition certificate under the Gender Recognition Act 2004.

37. Section 1(2) of the 1976 Act provides a number of ways in which the irretrievable breakdown of a marriage can be established. One of those ways is adultery. Adultery means in the common law sexual intercourse between a man and a woman.

38. Subsection (3) provides that “adultery” has the same meaning for the purposes of the 1976 Act for same sex marriage as it does for opposite sex marriage in that it relates to heterosexual intercourse only. This means that a spouse in a same sex marriage could, like a spouse in an opposite sex marriage, raise an action for divorce saying that the marriage has broken down irretrievably because the other spouse in the marriage has committed adultery (i.e. had sexual intercourse with a person of the opposite sex).

39. However, subsection (3) does not extend adultery to cover sexual activity between people of the same sex. Therefore, the ways of establishing irretrievable breakdown of a marriage remain unchanged. Neither an opposite sex spouse nor a same sex spouse can raise an action for divorce saying that the marriage has broken down irretrievably because the other party in the marriage has had sexual intercourse with a person of the same sex. Instead, the divorce action would have to put forward other reasons for irretrievable breakdown, such as unreasonable behaviour.

Section 6: Jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages

40. This section introduces schedule 1 on the jurisdiction of the Scottish courts in proceedings relating to same sex marriages. This schedule is explained at paragraphs 220 to 244 of these Explanatory Notes.
Section 6A: Reset: abolition of defence

41. This section repeals the defence for wives against the crime of reset. It is a crime to receive goods stolen by another. Subsection (1) abolishes the common law defence to the crime where the person accused of reset is the wife, and the goods were stolen by her husband.

42. Subsection (2) provides that the repeal of the defence to the crime of reset is abolished the day after the provision is brought into force. This means that the repeal will not affect anyone who is relying on the defence prior to this section being commenced.

Chapter 2 – Marriage between civil partners in qualifying civil partnerships

Overview

43. This Chapter relates to changing a civil partnership to a marriage and the legal effect of doing so.

Section 7: Marriage between civil partners in qualifying civil partnerships

44. Section 7 makes provision allowing civil partners, if they are in “a qualifying civil partnership”, to change their civil partnership to a marriage.

45. “A qualifying civil partnership” is defined by the amendment made by subsection (3)(b), which inserts new subsections (6) and (7) into section 3 of the 1977 Act. The definition is that to be “a qualifying civil partnership”, the civil partnership must have been registered in Scotland. In addition, the civil partnership must not have been dissolved, annulled or ended by death.

46. Subsection (3) also adds provisions to section 5 of the 1977 Act about civil partnerships registered at British consulates overseas and civil partnerships registered by British armed forces personnel.

47. Such civil partnerships are to be treated as having been registered in Scotland for the purposes of determining if they are a “qualifying civil partnership”, so long as:

- (a) the parties to the civil partnership elected Scotland as the relevant part of the United Kingdom when they entered into the civil partnership; and
- (b) details of the civil partnership have been sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.

48. Subsection (2) amends section 3 of the 1977 Act so that when a couple change their civil partnership to a marriage they have to provide to the district registrar an extract from the entry in the civil partnership register relating to the civil partnership.

49. Subsection (3) amends section 5(4)(b) of the 1977 Act about legal impediments to marriage. The current impediment in section 5(4)(b) is that “one of the parties is, or both are, already married or in civil partnership”. Subsection (3)(a) amends this so that being in a “qualifying civil partnership” with each other is not a legal impediment to marriage.
Section 7A: Power to modify meaning of “qualifying civil partnership”

50. This section allows the Scottish Ministers to extend by order the category of civil partnerships which can change their relationship to marriage in Scotland. This power could be used to enable civil partners in a partnership registered outwith Scotland to change their civil partnership to a marriage in Scotland.

51. Subsection (2) provides the order may amend primary or secondary legislation and is subject to affirmative procedure.

52. Subsection (3) requires the Scottish Ministers to consult the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland and such other persons as considered appropriate on a copy of the proposed draft order before laying a draft of any such order before the Scottish Parliament.

Section 8: Change of qualifying civil partnership into marriage

53. Section 8 makes provision so that qualifying civil partnerships can be changed to a marriage in accordance with an administrative procedure which may be prescribed by the Scottish Ministers in regulations.

54. By virtue of section 8(7), “qualifying civil partnership” in this section means a civil partnership registered in Scotland which has not been dissolved, annulled or ended by death (see section 5(6) of the 1977 Act, inserted by section 7(3) of this Bill). The definition also includes certain overseas civil partnerships treated as having been registered in Scotland (see section 5(7) of the 1977 Act, inserted by section 7(3) of this Bill).

55. Subsection (2) provides that regulations may in particular make provision on:

- the application process (subsection (2)(a));
- the information required from the applicants (subsection (2)(b));
- evidence to support the application (subsection (2)(c));
- any requirement to attend at a particular place or appear before a particular person (subsection (2)(d));
- conferring functions on persons (such as, for example, the Registrar General) (subsection (2)(e)). (Subsection (3) makes provision on particular functions which may be conferred);
- fees (subsection (2)(f)).

56. Subsections (4) to (6) make provision on procedures in relation to any regulations made by the Scottish Ministers. Under subsection (4), the Scottish Ministers must consult the Registrar General before making any regulations. Under subsections (5) and (6), any regulations are subject to negative Parliamentary procedure unless they amend primary legislation, in which case they are subject to the affirmative procedure.
Section 9: Effect of marriage between civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership

57. This section makes provision on the effect of civil partners changing their relationship to a marriage.

58. Subsection (A1) ensures that this provision applies to civil partners who change their relationship (registered in Scotland) to a marriage, regardless of whether they make this change through having a marriage ceremony (at section 7 of the Bill) or through the administrative route (at section 8 of the Bill).

59. Subsection (1)(a) provides that the qualifying civil partnership ends when the marriage is solemnised or the change took effect and subsection (1)(b) provides that the civil partners are to be treated as having been married to each other since the date on which the qualifying civil partnership was registered.

60. Subsection (1)(a) ensures that the couple do not have two civil statuses (married and in a civil partnership) at the same time. Subsection (1)(b) ensures that their time in the civil partnership is treated as if they had been married. For example, this means that provisions in the Family Law (Scotland) Act 1985, which covers matters such as financial provision during marriage and on divorce, applies to property acquired during and for the civil partnership as well as to property acquired during and for the marriage.

61. Subsection (2) defines what is meant by “registered” for the purposes of subsection (1)(b) in relation to civil partnerships originally registered at British consulates overseas or by British armed forces personnel. Civil partnerships at consulates are treated as registered when they are entered in the Register Book. Civil partnerships through the armed forces are treated as registered when the register is signed.

62. Subsection (3) makes provision so that subsection (1)(b) is subject to any contrary provision and any order made under subsection (4). For example, provision may be needed in relation to civil partnerships which turn out be void but are changed into marriage before it is realised they are void so the marriage is not backdated to when the civil partnership first started. In addition, there may be a need to recognise any court decrees from outwith Scotland which relate specifically to civil partnerships. The scope of any order and its Parliamentary procedure are set out in subsection (5).

63. Subsection (6) provides that any decree of aliment requiring one civil partner to make payments to the other which is in force when a civil partnership ends because it has been changed into a marriage continues to have effect. This ensures that any reference in the decree to the civil partnership does not stop the decree from continuing to have effect.

64. Subsection (7) provides that orders under section 103(3) or (4) of the 2004 Act, which relate to the regulation by the court of rights of occupancy of the family home, which were in force during the civil partnership continue to have effect once the couple are married.

65. Subsection (8) makes consequential amendments to section 1 of the 2004 Act, which contains provision on the circumstances in which a civil partnership ends.
Chapter 3 — Solemnisation of marriage

Overview

66. This Chapter makes provision on who may be authorised to solemnise marriage in Scotland.

67. Currently, for opposite sex marriage, Church of Scotland ministers are authorised by way of the Church of Scotland being named specifically in section 8 of the 1977 Act. Other religious bodies are prescribed by Statutory Instrument so that their celebrants are authorised to solemnise marriage. Other religious bodies can nominate persons to be registered by the Registrar General for Scotland as celebrants under section 9 of the 1977 Act. And the Registrar General may grant temporary authorisation to individuals to solemnise a marriage or marriages under section 12 of the 1977 Act.

68. In addition, civil registrars are authorised to solemnise marriage.

69. The Bill retains this system but makes provision for belief bodies to be authorised as well.

Section 10: Persons who may solemnise marriage

70. Section 10 of the Bill makes amendments for several different purposes.

71. Firstly, section 8 of the 1977 Act makes provision on who is authorised to solemnise marriage. This is amended so its current provisions apply to authorisations for opposite sex marriage only.

72. Secondly, section 10 of the Bill amends section 8 of the 1977 Act to allow celebrants from belief bodies to be authorised to solemnise marriages. Subsection (4) amends the existing definition of “religious body” in section 26 of the 1977 Act so that it covers belief bodies as well. The relevant aspects of the amended definition in relation to belief bodies are “an organised group of people … the principal object (or one of the principal objects) of which is to uphold or promote philosophical beliefs and which meets regularly for that purpose.”

73. Religious bodies can be prescribed under section 8 of the 1977 Act. The section is amended so that religious or belief bodies can be prescribed under this section. The effect of prescribing religious or belief bodies is that their celebrants and other persons recognised by them as entitled to solemnise opposite sex marriage can solemnise opposite sex marriages recognised by the state.

74. Thirdly, the new section 8(1A) of the 1977 Act, inserted by subsection (2)(b), provides that the Scottish Ministers may only prescribe a religious or belief body so that its celebrants are authorised to solemnise opposite sex marriage if the body requests this and if Ministers are satisfied that the body meets the “qualifying requirements”. Qualifying requirements are those set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers. These regulations are subject to the negative parliamentary procedure (new section 8(1G) refers).
Fourthly, section 10 of the Bill adds a number of provisions to section 8 of the 1977 Act to allow celebrants (of religious and belief bodies) to be authorised to solemnise same sex marriage. The new section 8(1B) of the 1977 Act, inserted by subsection (2)(b), provides who may solemnise a same sex marriage. The new section 8(1C) provides that the Scottish Ministers may only prescribe a religious or belief body so that its celebrants are authorised to solemnise same sex marriage if the body requests this and if Ministers are satisfied that the body meets the “qualifying requirements”.

Fifthly, the new section 8(1D) provides that nothing in subsection (1B) or (1C):

(a) imposes a duty on any religious or belief body to request (under section 8(1C)(a)) to be prescribed so that their celebrants can solemnise same sex marriage;

(b) imposes a duty on any religious or belief body to nominate members under section 9 of the 1977 Act to be empowered to solemnise same sex marriage;

(c) imposes a duty on any person to apply for temporary authorisation under section 12 to solemnise same sex marriage;

(d) imposes a duty on a celebrant approved to solemnise same sex marriages to solemnise such marriages.

Section 11: Registration of nominated persons as celebrants

Section 11 makes a number of amendments to section 9 of the 1977 Act, which relates to the registration of nominated persons as celebrants. Section 9 of the 1977 Act permits the authorisation of celebrants of bodies who have not been prescribed by regulations or are not, in the case of opposite sex marriage, the Church of Scotland.

Subsection (2)(a) amends section 9(1) of the 1977 Act so that it just relates to opposite sex marriages. This means that section 9(1) as amended provides that a religious or belief body, other than the Church of Scotland or a body prescribed by regulations to solemnise opposite sex marriage, may nominate to the Registrar General members so that they can solemnise opposite sex marriages.

Subsection (2)(b) to (l) then inserts new subsections into section 9 of the 1977 Act. The new section 9(1A), inserted by subsection (2)(b), provides that a religious or belief body who has not been prescribed by regulations to solemnise same sex marriage may nominate celebrants to the Registrar General so that they can be authorised to solemnise same sex marriage.

A number of amendments are made to section 9 of the 1977 Act, which provides for when the Registrar General must reject a nomination; what happens when a nomination is accepted; the register of authorised celebrants and their bodies; and for appeals. The amendments are made because of the introduction of same sex marriage and the authorisation of belief bodies and their celebrants.

Under section 9(2) of the 1977 Act, the Registrar General must reject a nomination on various grounds including if he or she considers the nominating body has sufficient celebrants to meet its needs. The amendment in subsection (2)(c) amends the grounds to reflect the changes made to subsection (1) and the new subsection (1A). The amendments reflect that bodies may have different needs in relation to celebrants solemnising same sex marriage when compared with opposite sex marriage.

82. A new ground of not meeting the qualifying requirements is added to section 9(2)(e) by subsection (2)(d) to the circumstances in which the Registrar General must reject a nomination.

83. Under section 9(2) of the 1977 Act, the Registrar General must also reject a nomination on the ground that the marriage ceremony used by the nominating body is not of an appropriate form. Section 9(3) of the 1977 Act sets out that a marriage ceremony will be of an appropriate form if it includes, and is no way inconsistent with particular declarations. Subsection (2)(f) amends section 9(3) to expand upon the declarations which will be considered to be of an appropriate form in the case of a marriage ceremony between persons of different sexes.

84. Section 9(3) (as amended) permits the Registrar General to accept nominations from religious and belief bodies which use (i) only gender specific language in marriage declarations, (ii) only gender neutral language in marriage declarations or (iii) a combination of both gender specific and gender neutral language in marriage declarations.

85. Subsection (2)(g) inserts provisions about the declarations for same sex ceremonies.

86. Subsection (2)(h) makes amendments to section 9(4) of the 1977 Act, which deals with cases where the Registrar General accepts the nomination. The Registrar General must currently decide how long the period of authorisation for the nominee should be, and may decide which area the nominee may solemnise marriages in. The amendments give the Registrar General the power to restrict any nominee to solemnising marriages in specific places.

87. Subsections (3), (4) and (5) make several amendments to sections 10, 14 and 24 of the 1977 Act. Section 10 makes provision about when a celebrant’s name may be removed from the register of bodies and celebrants who are authorised to solemnise marriage. Section 14 is about the form of ceremony to be used by a celebrant. Section 24 is about offences under the 1977 Act.

88. The amendments made by subsections (3), (4) and (5) are consequential, as a result of changes made to other provisions of the 1977 Act about authorisation of belief bodies; maintaining separate registers for same sex and opposite sex marriages; creating separate declarations for same sex and opposite sex marriage ceremonies; and enabling the Registrar General to authorise a nominee celebrant for a particular place only.

Section 12: Temporary authorisation of celebrants

89. Section 12 of the 1977 Act allows the Registrar General to grant temporary authorisation to solemnise marriage to a person.

90. Subsection (2)(a) amends the Registrar General’s power to clarify that he or she may grant temporary authorisations only to members of religious or belief bodies.
91. Subsection (2)(b) inserts new subsections into section 12 of the 1977 Act to provide that the Registrar General may grant an authorisation only if the religious or belief body meets the “qualifying requirements”. The “qualifying requirements” are those set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers (new section 12(1D)). These regulations are subject to the negative parliamentary procedure (new section 12(1F)).

92. Under section 12(1B), as inserted, temporary authorisation may be granted for opposite sex marriage only, for same sex marriage only or for both.

93. Under section 12(1C), as inserted, the Registrar General can only grant a temporary authorisation under section 12(1)(b) to solemnise same sex marriages if the relevant religious or belief body is prescribed by regulations so that its celebrants can solemnise same sex marriage or has put forward persons to be nominated as celebrants to solemnise same sex marriage.

94. Subsection (3) clarifies the existing offence under section 24(2)(c) of the 1977 Act of solemnising a marriage not covered by a temporary authorisation. The amendments made by subsection (3) have the effect that it is an offence to solemnise a marriage:

(a) where not specified in a temporary authorisation;

(b) where outwith the period of the temporary authorisation;

(c) otherwise than in accordance with any terms and conditions in the temporary authorisation.

Section 13: Religious or belief marriage: further provision

95. Sections 10, 11 and 12 of this Bill make provision for celebrants of belief bodies to solemnise marriage. Section 13 makes a number of consequential amendments to sections 6, 11, 13, 14 and 15 of the 1977 Act, as a result of these provisions, to reflect the authorisation of belief bodies and their celebrants.

Chapter 4 – Same sex marriage: protection of freedom of expression etc.

Section 14: Same sex marriage: protection of freedom of expression etc.

96. This section provides that the introduction of same sex marriage does not affect:

(a) the exercise of rights of anyone to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and freedom of expression which have been conferred by the European Convention of Human Rights; and

(b) the exercise of any equivalent rights conferred on anyone by the common law.

Chapter 5 – Other changes to marriage procedure

Overview

97. This Chapter makes a variety of changes to marriage law.
These include the introduction of powers for district registrars to require evidence of nationality from people wishing to get married; provisions on the timing of the issue of the marriage schedule; providing information to the district registrar on the ending of any civil partnership when a person is marrying outwith Scotland and is seeking a certificate about his or her legal capacity to do so; the automatic authorisation of Church of Scotland deacons to marry opposite sex couples and allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere agreed by the couple and the registrar, other than religious premises.

Section 15: Power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: marriage

This section makes amendments to sections 3 and 7 of the 1977 Act.

Section 16: The Marriage Schedule

This section amends the 1977 Act in relation to the power to prescribe the form of the marriage schedule and makes a number of changes to how quickly the marriage schedule and a certificate of no impediment should be issued after notice of intention to marry has been submitted by the parties to an intended marriage.

Subsection (2) amends section 6 of the 1977 Act so that regulations prescribing the form of the marriage schedule may make different provision for different cases or circumstances. This would, for example, allow the marriage schedule to take one form for opposite sex marriage and another for same sex marriage.

Section 7 of the 1977 Act relates to the issue of a certificate of no impediment to marry where a person residing in Scotland intends to marry outwith Scotland. Section 7(2) currently provides that the certificate shall not be issued earlier than 14 days after receiving the marriage notice. The amendment at subsection (3) changes the 14 day period to 28 days.
107. Section 19 of the 1977 Act provides that an authorised registrar shall not solemnise a marriage within 14 days of receiving a marriage notice. The amendment at subsection (4) changes this period to 28 days. An exception in section 19(1) allows the marriage to be solemnised earlier, on a specified date, where there is a written request and the Registrar General authorises the registrar to solemnise the marriage on the specified date.

Section 17: Marriage outside Scotland: evidence of dissolution of former civil partnership

108. This section amends section 7 of the 1977 Act. The effect of the amendment is that where a person wants to marry outwith Scotland and seeks a certificate about his or her legal capacity from the district registrar the person must provide a copy of the decree of dissolution or annulment of any civil partnership which the person has previously been in.

Section 18: Religious marriages: solemnisation by Church of Scotland deacons

109. This section amends the provisions of section 8(1)(a)(i) of the 1977 Act about automatic authorisation of ministers of the Church of Scotland in respect of opposite sex marriage. The effect is that Church of Scotland deacons, like Church of Scotland ministers, are automatically authorised to solemnise opposite sex marriage.

Section 19: Places at which civil marriages may be solemnised

110. This section makes amendments, principally to section 18 of the 1977 Act, so that civil marriage ceremonies can take place anywhere, other than in religious premises, agreed by the couple and the registrar, rather than at “approved places” (places approved by the local authority). This section applies to both opposite sex and same sex marriages. The section provides definitions for “appropriate place”, “local registration authority” and “religious premises”.

111. Specifically, these amendments mean that a civil marriage ceremony can take place in either:

- the registration office of the authorised registrar; or
- at an appropriate place in the registration district of the authorised registrar; or
- with the approval of the Registrar General, at the registration office of another authorised registrar; or
- with the approval of the Registrar General, at an appropriate place in the registration district of another authorised registrar; or
- with the approval of the Registrar General, at an appropriate place in Scottish waters.

112. As a result of the above, some amendments are necessary to the 1977 Act to section 19, on the marriage ceremony and registration, and section 26, on interpretation and definitions, where those provisions refer to the place where a marriage has taken place. Those amendments are made in subsections (4) and (5).
Section 20: Second marriage ceremony: form of endorsement

113. This is a minor amendment to section 20 of the 1977 Act. This makes provision for a couple to go through a second marriage ceremony in Scotland if they have already married outwith the United Kingdom but there is some doubt about the validity of the overseas ceremony. The second marriage ceremony in Scotland must be civil in nature.

114. Section 20 of the 1977 Act prescribes some forms. At the moment, section 20 provides that the year in these forms should start with the figures “19”. This reflects the twentieth century and is no longer appropriate. As a result, the amendment repeals the figures “19”.

Chapter 6 – Sheriff court jurisdiction in relation to declarator of marriage

Section 21: Sheriff court jurisdiction in relation to declarator of marriage

115. A declarator of marriage is a court judgment that a valid marriage exists, or existed, between two parties.

117. The amendments made by section 21 of the Bill to the 1973 Act only relate to opposite sex marriage. Paragraph 1(2) of schedule 1 to this Bill disapplies section 8 (and section 7) of the 1973 Act in relation to same sex marriage. Schedule 1 to the Bill makes provision on the jurisdiction of the Scottish courts in relation to same sex matrimonial court actions, including declarators of marriage.

118. By virtue of the amendments made by section 21(1A) and (2), the sheriff court has jurisdiction in declarator of marriage cases when either party to the marriage (a) is domiciled in Scotland when the action is raised or (b) was habitually resident in Scotland for a year before the action is raised or (c) died before the date when the action is raised and at death was domiciled in Scotland or had been habitually resident in Scotland for a year. In addition, either party to the marriage must have been:

- resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days before the court action is raised; or
- resident in the sheriffdom for at least 40 days ending not more than 40 days before the court action is raised and with no known residence in Scotland when the action is raised.

Part 2 – Civil partnership

Overview

119. This Part of the Bill amends legislation in respect of civil partnerships. Currently, only registrars can register civil partnerships. It is possible to have a religious or belief ceremony in relation to the civil partnership but any such ceremony has no legal significance. The Bill amends legislation so that, in future, it will be possible to have a religious or belief ceremony to register the partnership. Civil ceremonies will also remain available.
120. Many of the provisions in this Bill in relation to the authorisation of religious or belief celebrants to register civil partnerships, and on ceremonies, mirror provisions in the 1977 Act, on the solemnisation of marriage.

Section 22: Registration of civil partnership

121. Subsection (2) amends section 85 of the 2004 Act, to reflect the introduction of religious and belief celebrants to register civil partnerships. Section 85 makes provision on when two people are to be regarded as having registered as civil partners of each other and provides that both must sign the civil partnership schedule (“the schedule”).

122. Currently, one of the persons who must be present when the schedule is signed is the authorised registrar. The amendment made by subsection 2(a) changes this so that it may be signed in the presence of the approved celebrant or the authorised registrar. Once the couple have signed the schedule, it must also be signed by the witnesses and the person carrying out the ceremony. The amendment at subsection (2)(b) means that either the approved celebrant or the authorised registrar have to sign the schedule.

123. The amendment at subsection 2(a) also removes a reference to where the civil partnership may take place.

124. Subsection (3) makes a number of changes relating to the table of forbidden degrees. This is about people who are too closely related to each other to form a civil partnership. The opportunity has been taken to simplify the table of forbidden degrees. Subsection (22), explained below, substitutes a new Schedule 10 to the 2004 Act.

125. The amendment at subsection (3)(d) amends section 86(5) of the 2004 Act. Section 86(5) provides at the moment, in respect of people who have acquired a new gender, that references in the forbidden degrees to “former wife” includes “former husband” and references to “former husband” includes “former wife”.

126. The amendment at subsection (3)(d)(i) amends section 86(5) so that it refers to the definition of “spouse” (husband and wife) as added by subsection (3)(c). The amendment at subsection 3(d)(ii) removes the word “former” from section 86(5). The word “former” is not needed in section 86(5) as the new Schedule 10 to the 2004 Act refers to “former spouse” and “spouse” is defined by the amendment at subsection (3)(c).

127. The amendment at subsection (3)(e) reflects the simplification of the table of forbidden degrees. The simplified table now refers to “parent” to cover both mothers and fathers: the amendment as subsection (3)(e)(i) reflects that drafting change. Subsection (3)(e)(ii) deletes a reference to “in either column” as the simplified table of forbidden degrees just has one column.

128. The amendment at subsection (5) provides a definition of “district registrar” for the purposes of section 88 of the 2004 Act. Section 88 makes provision on information which intended civil partners must submit to the district registrar. The definition added at subsection (5) includes provision to cover cases where the civil partnership is to be registered in Scottish waters by an approved religious or belief celebrant.
129. The amendment at subsection (6) provides a definition of “district registrar” for the purposes of certain sections in the 2004 Act: section 89 itself (civil partnership notice book), section 90 (publicisation), section 91 (early registration), section 92 (objections to registration) and section 94 (the civil partnership schedule).

130. This definition is the same as the definition provided for section 88 except that where the civil partnership is to be registered in Scottish waters by an approved religious or belief celebrant, the district registrar is defined as the district registrar to whom the civil partnership notices were submitted (under section 88).

131. Subsection (7) amends section 90 of the 2004 Act. When publicising information about a forthcoming civil partnership, the district registrar and the Registrar General must provide the date when it is intended to register the civil partnership. Currently, this date must be more than 14 days after publicising the information: the amendment makes this 28 days.

132. Section 91 of the 2004 Act allows for early registration of a civil partnership. Subsection (8) amends a reference in section 91 from an authorised registrar to district registrar. A definition of “the district registrar” is inserted into the 2004 Act by subsection (5). Subsection (8) also changes the 14 day period in section 91 to 28 days, in line with the change made by subsection (7).

133. Subsection (8)(c) also amends section 91 so that it is clear that a request for early registration can be made electronically. The amendment creates an equivalent provision to section 6 of the 1977 Act.

134. Subsection (9) makes a number of amendments to section 92 of the 2004 Act, on objections to the proposed registration of a civil partnership.

135. The amendment at subsection (9)(a) makes it clear that the office where any person claiming to have reason to object to a proposed civil partnership can inspect the relevant entry in the civil partnership book is the office of the district registrar (as defined).

136. The amendment at subsection (9)(b)(i) is a consequential amendment required for the substantive amendment at subsection (9)(b)(ii). This amendment relates to a case where the district registrar has received an objection to a civil partnership which is more significant than just a misdescription or inaccuracy in a notice.

137. The new provision requires the district registrar, if the civil partnership schedule has already been issued and the civil partnership is to be registered by an approved religious or belief celebrant, to notify, if possible, the celebrant of the objection and advise the celebrant not to register the civil partnership pending consideration of the objection. This is on similar lines to equivalent provision in section 5 of the 1977 Act, on objections to marriage.

138. The amendment at subsection (9)(c) reflects that registration of civil partnerships in future may be through a religious or belief celebrant.
139. Currently, section 92(5)(a) of the 2004 Act provides that if the Registrar General is satisfied, after considering an objection, that there is a legal impediment to registering a civil partnership, the Registrar General has to direct the district registrar not to register the intended civil partners and to notify them accordingly. The amendment at subsection (9)(c) amends this so that the Registrar General, once satisfied that there is a legal impediment to registering a civil partnership has “to take all reasonable steps to ensure that the registration of the civil partnership does not take place and must notify, or direct the district registrar to notify, the intended civil partners”.

140. Subsection (10) amends section 93 of the 2004 Act so that it only covers cases where the civil partnership is being registered through a civil ceremony.

141. Subsection (10)(a)(ii) makes provision on where a civil ceremony may take place. It may take place at:
- the registration office of the authorised registrar;
- an appropriate place in the registration district of the authorised registrar (“appropriate place” is defined through the next set of amendments);
- with the approval of the Registrar General, the registration office of another authorised registrar;
- with the approval of the Registrar General, an appropriate place in the registration district of another authorised registrar; or
- an appropriate place in Scottish Waters.

142. Subsection (10)(b) provides definitions of “appropriate place”, “local registration authority” and “religious premises”. “Appropriate place” excludes “religious premises” which ensures that civil ceremonies to register civil partnerships cannot take place in religious premises. Similar definitions are inserted into the 1977 Act in relation to marriage by section 19 of this Bill.

143. Subsection (10)(c) repeals sections 93(2) and (3) of the 2004 Act. These are now unnecessary. Section 93(2) made provision on civil partnerships taking place outwith the authorised registrar’s district. This is now covered by the provision outlined above on where a civil ceremony may take place.

144. Section 93(3) of the 2004 Act made provision which banned civil partnerships from taking place in religious premises. The ban on civil ceremonies to register civil partnerships taking place in religious premises remains in place, as outlined above. Subsequent provision is made to establish religious and belief ceremonies to register civil partnerships. Such ceremonies may take place in religious premises.

145. Subsection (11) adds section 93A to the 2004 Act, on the date and place of religious or belief registration of civil partnerships. The procedures outlined in section 93A are in line with procedures contained in section 6 of the 1977 Act, in relation to the solemnisation of marriage.
Under section 93A the civil partnership should be registered on the date and at the place specified in the schedule. If this cannot be done and a new date or place is fixed, the district registrar must issue a new schedule or amend the existing one or direct the religious or belief celebrant to amend it.

However, special procedures apply if the new date for registration is more than 3 months after the date specified in the original schedule or if the new place for registration is in a different registration district or is in Scottish waters instead of a registration district or is in a registration district instead of Scottish waters.

In these cases, the Registrar General may:

- direct the district registrar to issue a new schedule;
- direct the district registrar to amend the existing schedule or direct the religious or belief celebrant to amend it; or
- direct the intended civil partners to send the district registrar a new notice of proposed civil partnership.

Subsection (12) amends section 94 of the 2004 Act which concerns the schedule. These amendments reflect the introduction of religious and belief ceremonies to register civil partnerships and changes made to sections 90 and 91 by subsections (7) and (8) about the minimum time period between publicising a civil partnership and it taking place.

The amendment at subsection (12)(c) provides that where the civil partnership is to be registered by an approved religious or belief celebrant, the district registrar must issue the completed schedule to one or both of the intended civil partners. The district registrar must not issue the schedule more than seven days before the intended civil partnership, unless authorised to do so by the Registrar General. This provision is on similar lines to section 6(4)(b) of the 1977 Act, in relation to the marriage schedule.

Subsection (13) adds sections 94A, 94B, 94C, 94D and 94E to the 2004 Act. These provisions relate to who can register a civil partnership, including religious and belief celebrants, and are based on equivalent provisions in the 1977 Act, on who can solemnise marriage.

Section 94A makes provision on who can register civil partnerships.

Under section 94A(1), a civil partnership may be registered only by a person who is:

- a celebrant of a religious or belief body prescribed by regulations or, not being a celebrant, is recognised by the body as entitled to register civil partnerships;
- registered as a celebrant under section 94B of the 2004 Act;
- temporarily authorised as a celebrant under section 94E;
- a registrar.
154. Section 94A(2) provides that Ministers may only prescribe a religious or belief body if the body requests them to do so and Ministers are satisfied that the body meets the “qualifying requirements”. The “qualifying requirements” are set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers (see section 94A(5)). These regulations are subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament (i.e. the negative procedure) by virtue of amendments made by subsection (20).

155. Section 94A(3) makes it clear that nothing in section 94A imposes a duty:
- on any religious or belief body to request to be prescribed;
- on any such body to nominate members under section 94B to nominate members to register civil partnerships;
- on any person to apply for temporary authorisation under section 94E to register civil partnerships;
- on any approved celebrant for civil partnerships to register civil partnerships.

156. Section 94B(1) provides that a religious or belief body who has not been prescribed under the regulations may nominate members to the Registrar General so that they can register civil partnerships.

157. Section 94B(2) provides that the Registrar General must reject a nomination if the Registrar General considers that the nominating body is not a religious or belief body; or it already has sufficient members registered to meet its need; or it does not meet the “qualifying requirements” set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers; or the nominee is not a fit and proper person. These regulations are subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Parliament (i.e. negative parliamentary procedure) (section 22(20) of the Bill refers).

158. When the Registrar General accepts a nomination, the Registrar General must, under section 94B(4)(a), determine the period during which the nominee can register civil partnerships. This period must not be more than 3 years but section 94B(5) makes it clear that the nominee may be put forward for a further period.

159. Section 94B(4)(b) allows the Registrar General to restrict the nominee to registering civil partnerships in specific areas or places. Section 94B(4)(c) allows the Registrar General to impose such other conditions as the Registrar General thinks fit.

160. When a nomination has been accepted, section 94B(6)(a) provides that the Registrar General must advise the body and the nominee accordingly, specifying the period during which the nominee can register civil partnerships and any conditions which have been imposed.

161. The Registrar General also has to enter the name of the body, the nominee and any other relevant particulars into a register open for public inspection at all reasonable times free of charge.
162. When a nomination is rejected, section 94B(6)(b) provides that the Registrar General must inform the nominating body in writing, giving reasons. Section 94B(7) makes it clear that this may be done electronically. Section 94B(8) gives the nominating body 28 days to appeal to the Scottish Ministers against a rejection.

163. Section 94B(9) provides that on any such appeal the Scottish Ministers may confirm the rejection or direct the Registrar General to accept the nomination. Ministers have to inform the nominating body of their decision and give the reasons for the decision.

164. Section 94B (9) and (10) provides that the Scottish Ministers’ decision is final except that if the reason given by Ministers for confirming the rejection of a nomination is that the nominating body is not a religious or belief body, the body may appeal to the Court of Session, within 42 days of receiving the Ministers’ decision.

165. The appeal can seek the determination of the court that the body is a religious or belief body. Under section 94B(11), if the court determines that the body is a religious or belief body and that the only reason given by Ministers for confirming the rejection was that the body was not a religious or belief body, the Registrar General must then accept the nomination.

166. Section 94C of the 2004 Act makes provision on the removal from the register of a celebrant registered under section 94B. As well as provisions relating to the removal of a celebrant from the register, and on the procedures for doing so, provision is also made for appeals to the Scottish Ministers against decisions made by the Registrar General.

167. Section 94C(1) provides that the Registrar General may remove a person’s name from the register when:

- the person has asked to be removed;
- the body which nominated the person no longer wants the person to be registered;
- the person, while registered as an approved celebrant, has been convicted of an offence under this Part of the Bill;
- the person has, for the purpose of profit or gain, been carrying on a business of registering civil partnerships;
- the person is not a fit and proper person to register civil partnerships;
- the person, for any other reason, should not be on the register.

168. Section 94C(2) to (7) makes provision on removals from the register on the grounds outlined in section 94(C)(1). The Registrar General must give the person at least 21 days’ notice of the intention to remove him or her from the register (subsection (2); must specify the ground of removal; must ask the person to give reasons why he or she should not be removed; and must consider any representations made. Where a person’s name has been removed from the register, the person may then appeal to the Scottish Ministers within 28 days of receiving notice of the removal. After a notice is given under subsection (2), the person must not register a civil partnership until he or she is restored to the register or the Registrar General decides not to remove him or her from the register.
169. Section 94D makes provisions on alterations to the register of approved nominated celebrants maintained under section 94B. Provision is made that the body must notify the Registrar General when any of the events listed in section 94D occur and the Registrar General must then alter the register accordingly. The events in section 94D are:

- changes to the name or address of the religious or belief body;
- amalgamation of the religious or belief body;
- death of an approved celebrant;
- any change of name, address or designation of an approved celebrant;
- the cessation of an approved celebrant from exercising the relevant functions.

170. Section 94E makes provision on the temporary authorisation of religious or belief celebrants to register civil partnerships. Under section 94E(1), the Registrar General may grant any member of a religious or belief body temporary written authorisation to register a specific civil partnership or partnerships or to register civil partnerships during a specific period. This authorisation may contain terms and conditions. Section 94E(5) makes it clear that the authorisation can be issued electronically.

171. However, the Registrar General may only grant such temporary written authorisation when the religious or belief body of which the person is a member must meet the “qualifying requirements” (section 94E(2)). The “qualifying requirements” are defined at section 94E(4) as “such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers”. In addition, authorisation under section 94E(1)(b), which relates to authorisation for a period of time, may only be granted if the religious or belief body of which the person is a member is prescribed by regulations made under section 94A, so that its celebrants are authorised to register civil partnerships, or has nominated persons under section 94B to register civil partnerships.
(Section 94E(3)). The above regulations are subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Parliament (i.e. negative parliamentary procedure) (section 22(20) of the Bill refers).

172. Subsection (14) amends section 95 of the 2004 Act, on further provision as to the registration of civil partnerships including in relation to the schedule.

173. The amendment at subsection (14)(a) reflects that with the introduction of religious or belief ceremonies, it may be an approved celebrant, rather than a registrar, who asks the intended civil partners to confirm that, to the best of their knowledge, the particulars set out in the schedule are correct.

174. The amendment at subsection (14)(b) inserts a new subsection into section 95 of the 2004
Act. This provision requires civil partners who have had a religious or belief ceremony to ensure that the signed schedule is delivered to the district registrar within 3 days. (This is in line with section 15(2) of the 1977 Act, on delivering the signed marriage schedule to the district registrar).
175. The new section 95(3A) of the 2004 Act provides that the district registrar must not enter the particulars set out in the schedule for a religious or belief civil partnership in the register, unless and until the district registrar receives a duly signed schedule.

176. The new section 95(3B) empowers the Registrar General to take steps if satisfied that a civil partnership has been properly registered and the schedule has been signed but then lost or destroyed. In these cases, the Registrar General may direct the district registrar to complete an exact copy of the schedule and, so far as practicable, arrange for it to be signed again by those who signed the original schedule. The new section 95(3C) provides that once the copy schedule has been signed, the district registrar must arrange for its particulars to be entered into the register.

177. Subsection (15) adds section 95ZA to the 2004 Act, on registrar’s power to require delivery of civil partnership schedule. This new provision is in line with section 16 of the 1977 Act, on a registrar’s power to require delivery of marriage schedule.

178. Under the new provision, if the district registrar does not receive the schedule within 21 days from the date of registration, the district registrar may serve a notice in the prescribed form on either of the civil partners requiring that the schedule be delivered or sent through the post to the registrar within 8 days. If this notice is not complied with, the district registrar may serve a second notice in the prescribed form requiring the person to attend personally at the registration office within 8 days in order to deliver the schedule. Failure to comply with this second notice is a criminal offence (the offence is added by subsection (19)). Section 126 of the 2004 Act means that regulations prescribing forms under section 95ZA are subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament (i.e. negative procedure).

179. Subsection (17) relates to section 96, on civil partnership with former spouse. This follows a divorce on the grounds of an interim gender recognition certificate.

180. The amendment at (a) is a consequential change, reflecting the amendments to section 91 made by subsection (8), and the amendment at (b) is also a consequential change, reflecting the amendments made to section 94 by subsection (12). (The amendments made by subsection (12) are explained at paragraphs 149 and 150).

181. The amendments at subsection (18) relates to section 97 of the 2004 Act, on the issue of a certificate of no impediment where two people propose to enter into a civil partnership in England and Wales but one of them resides in Scotland. The first amendment changes the period in which the certificate should normally be issued from no earlier than 14 days to no earlier than 28 days. Section 97(5) of the 2004 Act makes provisions for objections in writing to the district registrar against the issue of a certificate. The second amendment makes it clear that any such objection may be submitted electronically.

182. Subsection (19) makes provision in respect of criminal offences and does so by amending section 100 of the 2004 Act.
183. The amendment at (a)(i) extends three offences which currently only apply to authorised registrars (or persons pretending to be authorised registrars) to approved celebrants (or persons pretending to be approved celebrants).

184. Following the amendments, the offences now relates to a person who knowingly:

- “being an approved celebrant or, as the case may be, an authorised registrar, purports to register two people as civil partners of each other before any civil partnership schedule available to him at the time of registration has been duly completed”;
- “not being an approved celebrant or, as the case may be, an authorised registrar, conducts himself in such a way as to lead intended civil partners to believe that he is authorised to register them as civil partners of each other”;";
- “being an approved celebrant or, as the case may be, an authorised registrar, purports to register two people as civil partners of each other without both of them being present”.

185. The amendment at (a)(ii) reflects changes to section 93 on place of civil registration of civil partnerships.

186. The amendments at (b) relate to new offences created as a result of the introduction of religious and belief ceremonies and to the penalty when found guilty of one of these new offences. The penalty on summary conviction is a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

187. The offences created by (b) are:

- an approved celebrant registering a civil partnership in an area or place where the celebrant is not permitted to register a civil partnership;
- an approved celebrant registering a civil partnership after a notice has been served by the Registrar General indicating that the Registrar General intends to remove the person’s name from the register;
- a celebrant approved on a temporary basis registering a civil partnership not specified in the authorisation;
- a celebrant approved on a temporary basis registering a civil partnership outwith the period specified in the authorisation;
- a celebrant approved on a temporary basis registering a civil partnership contrary to any terms and conditions specified in the authorisation;
- a party to a civil partnership failing to comply with a second notice from the district registrar, requiring the party to appear personally at the registration office to deliver the schedule.

188. The amendment at (c) is a consequential amendment to section 100(4) of the 2004 Act, reflecting the new offences created by (b). Section 100(4) provides that summary proceedings for an offence under section 100 may be commenced within 3 months after sufficient evidence comes to the Lord Advocate’s knowledge or within 12 months after the offence is committed (whichever period last expires).
This document relates to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 36A)

189. Subsection (20) provides that the new powers to make regulations in respect of prescribing religious or belief bodies whose celebrants are authorised to register civil partnerships on the “qualifying requirements” (for religious and belief bodies to meet) are subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Parliament (i.e. the negative procedure).

190. Subsection (21) adds definitions to Part 3 of the 2004 Act relating to civil partnerships in Scotland.

191. Subsection (22) introduces a new Schedule 10 to the 2004 Act, replacing the current Schedule. The new Schedule 10 is a simplified version of the existing table of forbidden degrees. No changes are made in respect of the types of relationships which mean that a couple cannot enter into a civil partnership. Instead, the change relates to how the relationships are described. The table below demonstrates this:

Table of forbidden degrees

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Current table (Column 1)</th>
<th>Current table (Column 2)</th>
<th>Proposed table</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Relationships by consanguinity</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Father</td>
<td>Mother</td>
<td>Parent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Son</td>
<td>Daughter</td>
<td>Child</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Father’s father</td>
<td>Father’s mother</td>
<td>Grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother’s father</td>
<td>Mother’s mother</td>
<td>Grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Son’s son</td>
<td>Son’s daughter</td>
<td>Grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter’s son</td>
<td>Daughter’s daughter</td>
<td>Grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brother</td>
<td>Sister</td>
<td>Sibling</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Father’s brother</td>
<td>Father’s sister</td>
<td>Aunt or uncle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother’s brother</td>
<td>Mother’s sister</td>
<td>Aunt or uncle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brother’s son</td>
<td>Brother’s daughter</td>
<td>Niece or nephew</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sister’s son</td>
<td>Sister’s daughter</td>
<td>Niece or nephew</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Father’s father’s father</td>
<td>Father’s father’s mother</td>
<td>Great-grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Father’s mother’s father</td>
<td>Father’s mother’s mother</td>
<td>Great-grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother’s mother’s father</td>
<td>Mother’s father’s mother</td>
<td>Great-grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mother’s mother’s father</td>
<td>Mother’s mother’s mother</td>
<td>Great-grandparent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Son’s son’s son</td>
<td>Son’s son’s daughter</td>
<td>Great-grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Son’s daughter’s son</td>
<td>Son’s daughter’s daughter</td>
<td>Great-grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter’s son son</td>
<td>Daughter’s son’s daughter</td>
<td>Great-grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Daughter’s daughter’s son</td>
<td>Daughter’s son daughter</td>
<td>Great-grandchild</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Relationships by affinity referred to in section 86(3)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Son of former wife</td>
<td>Daughter of former husband</td>
<td>Child of former spouse</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Son of former civil partner</td>
<td>Daughter of former civil partner</td>
<td>Child of former civil partner</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Former husband of mother</td>
<td>Former wife of father</td>
<td>Former spouse of parent</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Section 23: Power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: civil partnership

192. This section adds provisions to section 88 of the 2004 Act.

193. Section 88 of the 2004 Act makes provision on documents which people wishing to enter into a civil partnership have to supply to the district registrar.

194. The new section 88(8) provides that a district registrar may require “specified nationality evidence” in relation to the intended civil partners. The new section 88(9) outlines when such evidence may be requested. The new section 88(10) defines “specified nationality evidence” in terms of guidance that the Registrar General may issue.

195. Section 15 of this Bill adds similar provision to the 1977 Act, in relation to opposite sex and same sex marriage.

Section 24: Recognition of overseas relationships

196. Sections 212 to 218 and Schedule 20 to the 2004 Act makes provision on the recognition in the UK as civil partnerships of overseas same sex registered relationships. Such relationships can be recognised in the UK either by meeting general conditions laid down in section 214 of the 2004 Act or by being specified in Schedule 20. UK Ministers have the power to amend Schedule 20, with the consent of the Scottish Ministers and the Northern Ireland Department of Finance and Personnel.

197. Currently, both overseas same sex marriages and overseas same sex civil unions are recognised in the UK as civil partnerships, so long as they meet the provisions outlined above. Section 24 makes amendments so that, in future, these arrangements only relate to overseas same sex civil unions.
198. Overseas same sex marriages will, in future, be recognised in Scotland as marriages. Section 38 of the Family Law (Scotland) Act 2006 already makes provision on the formal validity of overseas marriages and marriages from elsewhere in the UK. Section 4 of this Bill makes provision so that references to “marriage” in enactments commenced before this Bill means both opposite sex and same sex marriage.

Section 25: Dissolution of civil partnership: evidence

199. The Evidence in Civil Partnership and Divorce Actions (Scotland) Order 2012 (SSI 2012/111) removed the need for third party evidence in actions to dissolve civil partnerships using the simplified procedure. (The simplified procedure can generally be used where there is no dispute about financial matters and no children under 16).

200. Some civil partnerships were dissolved using the simplified procedure and without obtaining third party evidence before the Order came into effect. Section 25 provides that the Order is to be treated as having had effect since 5 December 2005 (when civil partnerships were introduced). The effect of the provision is that decrees of dissolution granted before the Order took effect cannot be challenged on the grounds that no third party evidence was provided.

Part 3 – Marriage and civil partnership: other provision

Section 26: Bigamy

201. Subsection (1) makes bigamy a statutory offence in relation to both opposite sex and same sex marriage. Subsection (3) abolishes the current common law offence.

202. Subsection (1) amends section 24 of the 1977 Act, on offences, and makes it an offence for a person to purport to enter into a marriage with another person knowing that one or both of them is already in a marriage or civil partnership with somebody else.

203. Subsection (1) provides for the penalties on conviction for bigamy. On conviction on indictment, a person is liable to a maximum of two years in prison or an unlimited fine or both. On summary conviction, a person is liable to a maximum of 12 months in prison or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum (currently £10,000) or both.

204. Subsection (1) also corrects an existing reference in section 24(1)(ii) of the 1977 Act. The term “prescribed sum” is now out of date and has been replaced in most legislation with “statutory maximum”. A similar amendment is made here, clarifying the penalties which may be imposed following summary conviction in relation to the existing offences in section 24(1) of the 1977 Act.

205. Subsection (2) makes two amendments to the offence provisions at section 100 of the 2004 Act.

---

1 This Order can be found at http://www.legislation.gov.uk/ssi/2012/111/contents/made

2 More information on the simplified procedure is at http://www.scotcourts.gov.uk/taking-action/divorce-and-dissolution-of-civil-partnership
206. The first amendment changes an offence from “registers” a civil partnership to “purports to register”. This reflects that under section 86(1)(d) of the 2004 Act two people are not eligible to register a civil partnership if one or either of them is married or already in a civil partnership.

207. The second amendment made by subsection (2) updates a reference to penalties on summary conviction so that section 100(3)(b) of the 2004 Act refers to the statutory maximum rather than level 3 on the standard scale.

208. Subsection (4) amends the Presumption of Death (Scotland) Act 1977 to reflect the introduction of a statutory offence of bigamy under new section 24(A1) and to take account of the offence at section 100 of the 2004 Act of entering into a civil partnership while married or already in a civil partnership. The Presumption of Death (Scotland) Act 1977 contains a defence to bigamy if for seven years the person had no reason to believe his or her spouse was alive. In future, this defence will reflect that bigamy will be a statutory offence and will reflect the offence at section 100 of the 2004 Act.

Part 4 – Change of gender of married persons or civil partners

Overview

209. Under the Gender Recognition Act 2004, persons over 18 may apply to the Gender Recognition Panel (“the Panel”) to obtain full legal recognition of an acquired gender. Currently, married people and people in a civil partnership have to divorce or dissolve before obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate. Part 4, and schedule 2, make provision so that married people who wish to stay married do not have to divorce and to enable people in a civil partnership to stay in their relationship.

Section 27: Change of gender of married persons or civil partners

210. This section introduces schedule 2 to the Bill on applications to the Panel by married persons or persons in a civil partnership. This schedule is explained at paragraphs 245 to 300 of these Explanatory Notes.

Section 28: Renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate

211. Section 28 empowers the Scottish Ministers to make regulations (i) about the solemnisation of a renewed marriage for married persons in a protected Scottish marriage who have obtained a full Gender Recognition Certificate and (ii) about the registration of a renewed civil partnership between the parties to a protected Scottish civil partnership following the issue of full gender recognition certificates to both parties to the partnership. This would enable a new marriage or civil partnership certificate to be issued.

212. By virtue of section 28(7), “full gender recognition certificate” is defined by reference to the existing definition in section 25 of the Gender Recognition Act 2004. “Protected Scottish marriage” is also defined by reference to section 25 of the Gender Recognition Act 2004 as amended by paragraph 2 of schedule 2 to this Bill.
213. Subsection (2) provides that regulations under subsection (1) may in particular make provision on:

- submitting notice of an intention to enter into a renewed marriage (subsection (2)(a));
- submitting notice of an intention to enter into a renewed civil partnership (subsection (2)(b));
- the information required from the applicants (subsection (2)(c));
- evidence to support the application (subsection (2)(d));
- any requirement to attend at a particular place or appear before a particular person (subsection (2)(e));
- conferring functions on persons (such as, for example, the Registrar General) (subsection (2)(f)). (Subsection (3) makes provision on particular functions which may be conferred);
- fees (subsection (2)(g)).

214. Subsections (4) to (6) make provision on procedures in relation to any regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

215. Under subsection (4), the Scottish Ministers must consult the Registrar General before making any regulations. Under subsections (5) and (6), any regulations are subject to negative Parliamentary procedures unless they amend primary legislation, in which case they are subject to the affirmative procedure.

Section 28A: Grounds of divorce: interim gender recognition certificate followed by full certificate

216. Section 28A amends the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976. Under section 1(1)(b) of the 1976 Act, the issue of an interim gender recognition certificate is one of the grounds for divorce in Scotland. Section 28A(3), however, amends section 1 of the 1976 Act to provide that a divorce cannot be obtained on the grounds of the issue of the interim gender recognition certificate where the Panel has gone on to issue a full gender recognition certificate. Separate provision is made in the Bill, at paragraph 5 of schedule 2, to ensure that where the sheriff issues the full gender recognition certificate under section 4E, divorce on the grounds of the issue of the interim gender recognition certificate will still be available.

Part 5 – Registration services

Section 29: Provision of certain information to district registrars

217. This corrects an erroneous cross-reference. Section 39C(1)(a)(i) of the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965 currently refers to “the registers of births, deaths and marriages transmitted to the Registrar General under section 34(3) of this Act”. This reference should be to section 34(4) of the 1965 Act which provides that “The district registrar for a registration district shall, at such time or times as the Registrar General may direct, transmit a relevant register to the Registrar General”. Section 29 provides the correct cross-reference.
Section 29A: Form of register of marriages

218. Section 54 of the 1965 Act empowers the Registrar General, with the approval of Scottish Ministers, to make regulations on matters such as the form of registers for births, marriages and deaths. Section 29A amends section 54 of the 1965 Act so that regulations prescribing the form of a register of marriages may make different provision for different circumstances. Different descriptions may be needed for the parties of a same sex marriage when compared with parties to an opposite sex marriage.

Part 6 – General provisions

Section 31: Ancillary provision

219. This section allows Ministers to make ancillary provision, by order. Generally, such an order is subject to negative procedure but any order containing provisions which add to, replace or omit any part of the text of an Act is subject to the affirmative procedure.

SCHEDULES

Schedule 1: Jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages

Overview

220. The Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973 ("the 1973 Act") makes provision on the jurisdiction of the Scottish courts to deal with court actions on divorce, separation, declarator of nullity of marriage and declarator of marriage and on actions for declarator of recognition or non-recognition of relevant foreign decrees. The 1973 Act has been amended previously to take account of EC Regulation 2201/2003 (known as Brussels IIa) on jurisdiction, recognition and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial matters and in the matters of parental responsibility. EC Regulation 2201/2003 deals with opposite sex marriage only.

221. Schedule 1 makes provision on the jurisdiction of the Scottish courts in relation to same sex marriages. The schedule amends the 1973 Act to make provision for court actions in relation to same sex couples. The schedule also enables the Scottish Ministers to make provision corresponding to EC Regulation 2201/2003.

222. In addition, overseas couples who enter into a same sex marriage in Scotland but remain or become habitually resident or domiciled in another country may not be able to end their marriage in that country if it does not recognise the existence of the relationship.

223. The schedule therefore amends the 1973 Act to provide a "jurisdiction of last resort" so that those same sex couples who are unable to divorce or obtain other matrimonial order in the country which would normally have jurisdiction are able have their case heard in the Scottish courts. The Scottish courts will be able to assume jurisdiction if the couple were married in Scotland and it is the interests of justice to do so.

224. Provision of a similar nature was made in respect of civil partnerships under Chapter 3 of Part 5 to the Civil Partnership Act 2004. Part 4 of Schedule 4 to the UK Marriage (Same Sex
This document relates to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 36A)

Couples) Bill makes similar provision in respect of the jurisdiction of the courts in England and Wales in relation to matrimonial actions for same sex couples.

Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973

225. Paragraph 1(2) amends the 1973 Act to set out which provisions in respect of jurisdiction in matrimonial actions do not apply to marriages of same sex couples, which are instead dealt with in Schedule 1B, inserted by paragraph 1(4). Paragraph 1(3) amends section 10 of the 1973 Act, to reflect that references to EC Regulation 2201/2003 are not relevant for same sex married couples, as the Regulation extends to opposite sex marriage only.

226. Paragraph 1(4) inserts a new Schedule 1B into the 1973 Act. Paragraph 1 of the new Schedule 1B sets out that the Schedule has effect with respect to the jurisdiction of the court to entertain proceedings relating to the ending of a same sex marriage (divorce, separation, nullity) and proceedings relating to a marriage's validity, including whether or not the marriage exists. The paragraph also provides definitions.

Power to make provision corresponding to EC Regulation 2201/2003

227. Paragraph 2(1)(a) of Schedule 1B enables the Scottish Ministers to make regulations about the jurisdiction of the courts in relevant proceedings in relation to a same sex marriage. “Relevant proceedings” are defined in paragraph 1(2) of Schedule 1B with reference to the proceedings listed in paragraph 1(1): divorce; separation; declarator of marriage; declarator of nullity of marriage and declarator of recognition, or non-recognition, of a decree of divorce, separation or nullity granted outwith a Member State of the EU. Paragraph 2(1)(b) allows the Scottish Ministers to make regulations to provide for the recognition in Scotland of a judgment by a court of another Member State relating to divorce, separation or annulment.

228. The regulations under paragraph 2(1) would apply where one of the couple: is or has been habitually resident in a Member State), or is an EU national, or is domiciled in a part of the UK or the Republic of Ireland. The regulations may correspond with the terms of EC Regulation 2201/2003 on jurisdiction, recognition and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial matters.

229. The provisions in regulations made under paragraph 2(1)(b) on recognition of judgments can apply retrospectively – i.e. where the date of the divorce is earlier than the date on which the paragraph comes into force.

230. A statutory instrument containing these regulations will be subject to the affirmative procedure.

Divorce or separation

231. Paragraph 3(1) of Schedule 1B provides that the Court of Session is able to deal with divorce or separation cases relating to same sex marriage either (a) where the Scottish courts have jurisdiction because of regulations made under paragraph 2 of the Schedule or (b) when no court has jurisdiction under the regulations and either of the married same sex couple is domiciled in Scotland when the case starts.
232. Under paragraph 3(2), the sheriff court has jurisdiction in these cases when either (a) or (b) above is met and:

- either party to the marriage was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days before the court action is raised; or
- either party had been resident in the sheriffdom for at least 40 days ending not more than 40 days before the court action is raised and has no known residence in Scotland when the action is raised.

233. In addition, Edinburgh sheriff court has jurisdiction if the couple married in Scotland, no court has jurisdiction under regulations made under paragraph 2 of Schedule 1B and it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice for it to deal with the case. This is referred to in paragraph 223 above as “jurisdiction of last resort”.

Declarator of marriage

234. Paragraph 4(1) of Schedule 1B provides that the Court of Session is able to deal with declarator of marriage cases relating to same sex marriage either where either of the parties is (a) domiciled in Scotland when the action is raised or (b) habitually resident in Scotland for a year before the action is raised or (c) dead and at death was domiciled in Scotland or had been habitually resident in Scotland for a year immediately preceding the death.

235. Under paragraph 4(2), the sheriff court has jurisdiction in these cases when either (a) or (b) or (c) above is met and either party to the marriage:

- was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days before the court action is raised; or
- had been resident in the sheriffdom for at least 40 days ending not more than 40 days before the court action is raised and has no known residence in Scotland when the action is raised.

Nullity of marriage

236. Paragraph 5(1) of Schedule 1B provides that the Court of Session is able to deal with declarators of nullity of a same marriage where (a) the Scottish courts have jurisdiction under regulations made under paragraph 2 of Schedule 1B or (b) no court has jurisdiction under the regulations and either party to the marriage is (i) domiciled in Scotland when the action is raised or (ii) dead and at death had been domiciled in Scotland or had been habitually resident in Scotland for a year immediately preceding the death.

237. Under paragraph 5(2), the sheriff court has jurisdiction in these cases when either (a) or (b) above is met and either party to the marriage:

- was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days before the court action is raised; or
- had been resident in the sheriffdom for at least 40 days ending not more than 40 days before the court action is raised and has no known residence in Scotland when the action is raised.

34
In addition, Edinburgh sheriff court has jurisdiction if the couple married in Scotland, no court has jurisdiction under regulations made under paragraph 2 of Schedule 1B and it appears to the court in the interests of justice for it to deal with the case. This is referred to in paragraph 223 above as “jurisdiction of last resort”.

Recognition, or non-recognition, of foreign decrees

Paragraph 6(1) of Schedule 1B provides that the Court of Session is able to deal with proceedings to recognise or not recognise a court decree from outwith the EU relating to divorce, separation or nullity of a same sex marriage if (a) the Scottish courts have jurisdiction under regulations made under paragraph 2 of Schedule 1B or (b) no court has jurisdiction under the regulations and either party to the marriage is (i) domiciled in Scotland when the action is raised or (ii) dead and at death was domiciled in Scotland or had been habitually resident in Scotland for a year immediately preceding the death.

Under paragraph 6(2), the sheriff court has jurisdiction in these cases when either (a) or (b) above is met and either party to the marriage:

- was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days before the court action is raised; or
- had been resident in the sheriffdom for at least 40 days ending not more than 40 days before the court action is raised and has no known residence in Scotland when the action is raised.

Supplementary provision

Paragraph 7(1) of Schedule 1B makes it clear that the provisions in this Schedule on divorce or separation do not affect the Court of Session’s jurisdiction to hear separation proceedings as a matter of urgency.

Paragraph 7(2) makes it clear that the provisions in Schedule 1B on divorce, separation and nullity do not affect the sheriff court’s jurisdiction to hear such cases remitted to it under any enactment or rule of court, where hearing such cases does not contravene regulations made under paragraph 2.

Paragraph 7(3) makes it clear that when hearing a case under paragraphs 3 to 6 of Schedule 1B, the court can also hear other proceedings in respect of the same marriage, even if it would not normally have jurisdiction.

Presumption of Death (Scotland) Act 1977

Paragraph 2 of schedule 1 makes amendments to section 1 of the Presumption of Death (Scotland) Act 1977, which allows actions to be raised so that someone who is missing can be presumed to be dead. The amendment allows Edinburgh sheriff court to hear such actions in relation to a person in a same sex marriage where the marriage took place in Scotland and it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to assume jurisdiction. This is referred to in paragraph 223 above as “jurisdiction of last resort”.

35
Schedule 2: Change of gender of married persons or civil partners

Part 1 – Applications by married persons and civil partners

Overview

245. This schedule makes changes to the Gender Recognition Act 2004 (“the Gender Recognition Act”).

246. The Gender Recognition Act enables people to change their legal gender by applying for a gender recognition certificate under section 1 of that Act. The Gender Recognition Act extends across the UK but relates largely to devolved matters. The Gender Recognition Panel (“the Panel”) deals with applications for a gender recognition certificate and operates across the UK. Schedule 5 to the UK Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Bill makes similar provision to this schedule in respect of people who married in England and Wales or overseas or entered into a civil partnership in England and Wales.

247. The issue of a full gender recognition certificate enables recipients to be recognised in law for all purposes in their new gender (“the acquired gender”). At present people who are married or in a civil partnership must end their marriage or civil partnership before a full gender recognition certificate can be issued. This is achieved by the Panel issuing an interim gender recognition certificate to married applicants and applicants in civil partnerships. The issue of an interim gender recognition certificate is, in Scotland, a ground for divorce or dissolution of a civil partnership. Applicants then have six months from the date of issue of the interim gender recognition certificate to apply to the court to end their marriage or civil partnership. Once a marriage or civil partnership has been ended the court can issue a full gender recognition certificate.

248. This schedule amends the Gender Recognition Act to enable a marriage solemnised in Scotland (a “protected Scottish marriage”, defined by amendments made in paragraph 2 of the schedule) to continue where one or both parties change their gender and both parties wish to remain married. It also amends that Act to enable a civil partnership registered in Scotland (“protected Scottish civil partnership”, defined by amendments made in paragraph 2) to continue where both parties change their gender simultaneously and wish to remain in their civil partnership.

Paragraph 2 – interpretation

249. Paragraph 2 inserts definitions of the terms “protected Scottish civil partnership” and “protected Scottish marriage” into section 25 of the Gender Recognition Act (interpretation). Paragraph 2 also amends the existing definitions of “full gender recognition certificate” and “interim gender recognition certificate” to reflect that, in the future, gender recognition certificates may be issued under more provisions of the Gender Recognition Act.

250. Paragraph 2(d) makes provision in relation to civil partnerships and marriages carried out overseas by UK consular staff and through the UK armed forces. Such civil partnerships and marriages are to be treated as protected Scottish civil partnerships and marriages so long as the parties identified with Scotland at the time and details have been sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.
Paragraph 3 – evidence

251. Paragraph 3 inserts new subsections (6D), (6E) and (6F) into section 3 of the Gender Recognition Act to amend the evidence requirements for an application to the Panel.

252. At present, section 3(6)(a) of that Act requires people who apply to the Panel for a gender recognition certificate to submit a statutory declaration as to whether they are married or in a civil partnership. Submission of this evidence enables the Panel to determine whether to issue a full gender recognition certificate (for people who are not married or in a civil partnership) or an interim certificate (for people who are married or in a civil partnership).

253. New subsection (6D) requires applicants who are party to a protected Scottish marriage to include in their statutory declaration an additional declaration that they wish the marriage to continue after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate (if that is the case). It also requires the application to include either a “statutory declaration of consent” by the applicant’s spouse (which is a declaration that he or she consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate), or a statutory declaration by the applicant that no such declaration of consent by the applicant’s spouse is included.

254. If an application to the Panel contains a statutory declaration of consent by the applicant’s spouse, new subsection (6E) requires the Panel to inform the spouse that an application has been made.

255. New subsection (6F) provides that applicants in a protected Scottish civil partnership must provide a statutory declaration as to where the civil partnership was registered.

Paragraph 4 – successful applications

256. Paragraph 4 amends section 4 of the Gender Recognition Act by adding to subsections (2), (3), (3A) and (3B). Section 4(2) to 4(3B) of the Gender Recognition Act makes provision on the issue of a gender recognition certificate following successful application. The type of certificate received, whether full or interim, depends on the marital or civil partnership status of the applicant and, in the case of a married applicant, whether the applicant’s spouse has consented to the marriage continuing following the issue of a full gender recognition certificate.

257. Section 4(2) to (3B) applies in relation to applicants who are either (i) a party to a marriage under the law of England and Wales or under the law of a country or territory outside the UK (“a protected marriage”) or (ii) a party to a civil partnership under the law of England and Wales (“a protected civil partnership”). The amendments made by paragraph 4 of schedule 2 to the Bill make similar provision to that in section 4(2) to 4(3B) of the Gender Recognition Act but, aside from the provision about single applicants, these amendments apply in relation to applicants who are a party to a protected Scottish marriage or a protected Scottish civil partnership.

258. The effect of these amendments is to enable a full certificate to be issued:

- to single applicants (new subsection (1A);
to applicants who are party to a protected Scottish marriage and both parties to the marriage consent to the marriage continuing (new subsection (3C)(b)); and

- to applicants who are party to a protected Scottish civil partnership and the Panel has decided to issue the other party to the civil partnership with a full gender recognition certificate (new subsection (3C)(c)).

259. Interim gender recognition certificates will be issued:

- to applicants in protected Scottish marriages if either party to the marriage has not consented to the marriage continuing (new subsection (3D)(a));

- subject to subsection (2)(b) (which makes provision about applicants in a protected marriage), to applicants not in a protected Scottish marriage (new subsection (3D)(b));

- to applicants in protected Scottish civil partnerships where the other party to the civil partnership has not made an application for a gender recognition certificate at the same time as the applicant or the other party has made such an application but the Panel has decided not to issue a full gender recognition certificate to him or her (new subsections (3D)(c) and (3D)(d); and

- subject to subsection (2)(c) (which makes provision about applicants in a protected civil partnership), to applicants not in a protected Scottish civil partnership (new subsection (3D)(e)).

260. New subsection (3E) requires the Panel to notify an applicant’s spouse where it issues a full gender recognition certificate to the applicant.

261. New subsection (3E) provides that section 4(3C)(c) of the Gender Recognition Act is subject to new section 5C (inserted into that Act by paragraph 6 of this schedule).

Paragraph 5 – issue of full gender recognition certificate after interim certificate: applicant married

262. Paragraph 5 inserts new sections 4C, 4D and 4E into the Gender Recognition Act.

263. New section 4C provides for two situations (“Case A” and “Case B”) when the Panel must issue a full gender recognition certificate.

264. Case A is the situation where an applicant is in a protected Scottish marriage but his or her spouse has not issued a statutory declaration of consent. If the applicant’s spouse changes his or her mind before the marriage is ended and wishes the marriage to continue, subsection (2) provides that the applicant can apply to the Panel for a full gender recognition certificate. The Panel can only issue a full gender recognition certificate to the applicant following such an application if it is satisfied that the following conditions are met:

- an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the applicant (subsection (2)(a));
• the applicant was a party to a protected Scottish marriage at the time the interim gender recognition certificate was issued (subsection (2)(b));
• the applicant is in a protected Scottish marriage (subsection (2)(c)); and
• the applicant’s spouse consents to the marriage continuing (subsection (2)(d)).

265. If these conditions are not met, the Panel will reject an application for a full gender recognition certificate (subsection (4)). Subsection (5) sets a time limit for an application under Case A. The time limit is six months from the date on which the interim certificate was issued.

266. Case B is the situation where an application is made by a civil partner in a protected Scottish civil partnership, an interim gender recognition certificate is issued and the couple subsequently decide to change their civil partnership into a marriage under section 3 of the 1977 Act, as amended by this Bill. Subsection (3) provides that once the civil partnership has become a marriage, such applicants can apply for a full gender recognition certificate.

267. The Panel can only issue a full gender recognition certificate to the applicant if it is satisfied that the following conditions are met:
• an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the applicant (subsection (3)(a));
• the applicant was a party to a civil partnership at the time the interim gender recognition certificate was issued (subsection (3)(b));
• the notice of intention to marry must have been given within six months of the date of issue of the interim gender recognition certificate being issued (subsection 3(c));
• the civil partnership must have become a marriage (subsection (3)(d));
• the applicant is a party to that marriage (subsection (3)(e)); and
• the applicant’s spouse consents to the marriage continuing (subsection (3)(f)).

268. If these conditions are not met, the Panel will reject an application for a full gender recognition certificate (subsection (4)).

269. Subsection (6) sets a time limit for conversion of an interim certificate to a full certificate under this section. The time limit is six months from the date when the civil partnership becomes a marriage.

270. Applications under Case A and Case B require the applicant’s spouse to issue a statutory declaration of consent (subsection (7)). Applications under Case B must additionally include evidence of the date on which notice of intention to marry was given and evidence that the civil partnership has become a marriage (subsection (8)).

271. Where the Panel receives an application to issue a full gender recognition certificate in either Case A or Case B, subsection (9) requires them to notify the applicant’s spouse both of the application and also of the issue of the full gender recognition certificate (if the Panel grants the application).
272. New section 4D provides for the situation where an applicant has made an application for a full gender recognition certificate under new section 4C but before that application can be determined the applicant’s spouse dies.

273. At present if the applicant’s spouse dies within six months of the interim gender recognition certificate being issued, the applicant can apply for a full gender recognition certificate within six months of the date the death (section 5(2)(b) of the Gender Recognition Act). This section may not be available to applicants who have applied under new section 4C if the application has not been determined within the time limit in new section 4C(5) and (6). New section 4D provides that in such cases the applicant can still rely on the existing section 5(2)(b) to apply for a full gender recognition certificate.

274. New section 4E makes provision so that a person who is in a protected Scottish marriage may apply under summary application to the sheriff for a full gender recognition certificate. An application may be made where the applicant has an interim gender recognition certificate issued by the Panel.

275. Under subsection (2), the sheriff must grant the application if the sheriff is satisfied that the applicant was in a marriage solemnised in Scotland when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued; the applicant is still in the marriage; and the application is made to the sheriff within 6 months of the interim gender recognition certificate being issued by the Panel.

276. Subsection (3) requires the sheriff to notify the applicant’s spouse when an application is made and when the full gender recognition certificate is issued.

277. Subsection (4) makes provision in respect of section 1(1)(b) of the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976, which permits a decree of divorce to be granted on the grounds that an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued. Subsection (4) provides that if a sheriff issues a full gender recognition certificate to an applicant under section 4E, the applicant is to be treated for the purposes of section 1(1)(b) as a person to whom an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued. As a consequence, despite the issue of a full gender recognition certificate by the sheriff under section 4E, divorce on the grounds of the issue of the interim gender recognition certificate will still be available.

Applications by both civil partners

278. Paragraph 6 inserts new section 5C into the Gender Recognition Act. If both parties to a protected Scottish civil partnership make successful applications to the Panel, section 4(2)(c) of the Gender Recognition Act as amended by the Bill, applies, and both parties will be entitled to full gender recognition certificates. In such cases, the new section 5C enables the Panel to issue full gender recognition certificates to both parties simultaneously, ensuring that the continuity of the civil partnership is not affected by the changes in law to the gender of both parties.

279. Paragraph 6 also inserts new section 5D into the Gender Recognition Act. This empowers the Scottish Ministers to make provision by order on other procedures which could be established to enable the Panel to issue full gender recognition certificates to applicants in a protected Scottish civil partnership. By virtue of paragraph 12, any such orders are subject to the negative procedure unless they amend primary legislation in which case they are subject to the affirmative procedure.

Appeals etc.

280. Paragraph 7 makes consequential amendments to section 8 (appeals etc.) of the Gender Recognition Act to reflect the insertion of section 4C of the Act by this Bill.

281. Paragraph 7 also inserts new subsection (5B) into section 8 of the Gender Recognition Act and makes a consequential amendment to section 8(6) of that Act. New subsection (5B) enables an applicant’s spouse or civil partner to apply to the Court of Session where he or she considers that a full gender recognition certificate has been obtained by his or her spouse fraudulently.

Registration

282. Paragraph 8(1) amends section 10 of the Gender Recognition Act. New subsection (1B) provides that if the Panel issue full gender recognition certificates to one or both parties in a protected Scottish marriage or protected Scottish civil partnership, the Panel must send a copy of the full gender recognition certificate(s) to the Registrar General for Scotland.

283. Paragraph 8(2) makes some consequential amendments to Part 2 of Schedule 3 to the Gender Recognition Act which concerns registration matters in Scotland. In addition, paragraph 8(2) inserts a new paragraph 20A into Schedule 3 to that Act. It provides the Registrar General with a power to make regulations, with the consent of the Scottish Ministers, about the registration of qualifying Scottish marriages and Scottish civil partnerships (defined as marriages and civil partnerships in Scotland where one or both parties (both parties in relation to civil partnerships) have been issued with full gender recognition certificates). Such regulations could make provision for the administrative issue of new marriage and civil partnership certificates.

284. In accordance with the amendments made by paragraph 12 of this schedule to the Gender Recognition Act, any regulations under the new paragraph 20A would be subject to negative procedure.

285. Paragraph 8(2) also inserts new paragraph 20A(1C) into Schedule 3 to the Gender Recognition Act. It provides that the regulations to be made by the Registrar General for Scotland under sub-paragraph (1)(a) (about the registration of qualifying Scottish marriages) must provide that where a full gender recognition certificate has been issued to a person under section 4E, the marriage must not be registered unless the person’s spouse consents in writing.

Continuity of marriage

286. Paragraph 9 inserts a new section 11C into the Gender Recognition Act. Section 11C provides that the continuity of a protected Scottish marriage is not affected by the issuing of full gender recognition certificates to one or both of the parties to the marriage.
Continuity of civil partnership

287. Paragraph 10 inserts a new section 11D into the Gender Recognition Act. Section 11D provides that the continuity of a protected Scottish civil partnership is not affected by the issuing of full gender recognition certificates to both of the parties to the civil partnership under section 4(2)(c) of that Act.

Foreign gender change and marriage

288. Paragraph 11 repeals section 21(2) to (5) of the Gender Recognition Act (foreign gender change and marriage).

289. Section 21(2) to (5) of that Act currently provides for the situation where a person claims to have changed gender in their country of origin and married a person of the opposite sex to their acquired gender in that country or another country outside the UK. At present, these marriages have no standing under Scots law until a full gender recognition certificate has been issued by the Panel because Scots law regards the parties as having not been respectively male and female when the marriage was solemnised. As marriages in Scotland will now be available to same sex couples these sections can be repealed for the purposes of Scots law.

Part 2 – Alternative grounds for granting applications for gender recognition certificates

290. Part 2 of schedule 2 makes additional changes to the Gender Recognition Act. When the Gender Recognition Act came into force on 4 April 2005, section 27 included a modified evidence process which was open to applicants who could produce evidence that they had been living in their acquired gender for six years prior to the date on which they made their application under section 27. The so-called “fast track” process ran for the first two years after commencement of the Gender Recognition Act and expired on 3 April 2007. Part 2 of schedule 2 inserts a new modified evidence process into the Gender Recognition Act. The modified evidence process set out in new section 3D of the Gender Recognition Act will only be available to applicants who meet the four conditions set out in new section 3C of the Act.

291. Paragraph 11B inserts new subsection (3B) into section 2 of the Gender Recognition Act. New subsection (3B) provides that section 2 of the Gender Recognition Act (determination of applications) does not apply to any application under section 1(1)(a) of the Gender Recognition Act where the applicant indicates that the application is for a gender recognition certificate to be granted in accordance with new section 3C of the Gender Recognition Act.

292. Paragraph 11C inserts new section 3C into the Gender Recognition Act. New section 3C(2) provides that, if the Panel is satisfied that the applicant meets the four conditions set out in new sections 3C(3) to (6) and has complied with the evidence requirements set out in new section 3D, it must grant the application. If the Panel is not required by section 3C(2) to grant an application, it must reject the application in accordance with new section 3C(9).

293. New subsections 3C(3) to (6) set out the four conditions applicants must meet to be eligible to rely on the modified evidence process:
This document relates to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 36A)

- the first condition is that the applicant was a party to a protected Scottish marriage or a protected Scottish civil partnership on or before the date the application for gender recognition is made.

- the second condition is that the applicant was living in the acquired gender for six years prior to the date of commencement of section 27 of the Bill; has continued to live in the acquired gender until the date the application was made; and intends to continue living in the acquired gender until death.

- the third condition is that the applicant has or has had gender dysphoria or has undergone surgery or other treatment for the purpose of modifying sexual characteristics as may be laid down by order by the Scottish Ministers.

- the fourth condition is that the applicant is ordinarily resident in Scotland.

294. Paragraph 11D inserts new subsection (10) into section 3 of the Gender Recognition Act which disapplies the evidence requirements set out in section 3 in respect of applications where the applicant indicates that the application for a gender recognition certificate to be issued is being made in accordance with new section 3C of the Gender Recognition Act.

295. Paragraph 11E inserts new section 3D into the Gender Recognition Act. New section 3D sets out the modified evidence process an applicant who meets the four conditions in new section 3C of the Gender Recognition Act is entitled to rely on.

296. New subsections 3D(2) to (4) set out medical evidence applicants are required to submit. If the applicant is applying on the basis of having or having had gender dysphoria, a report made by a registered medical practitioner specialising in the field of gender dysphoria or a registered psychologist practising in the field of gender dysphoria must include details of the diagnosis of gender dysphoria. If the applicant is applying on the basis of having undergone treatment for the purpose of modifying sexual characteristics, or if the applicant is currently undergoing such treatment or such treatment has been planned or prescribed for the applicant, a report made by a registered medical practitioner or registered psychologist practising in the field of gender dysphoria must include details of the treatment.

297. New sections 3D(5) to (8) set out the additional evidence applicants are required to submit. New section 3D(5) requires applicants to include a statutory declaration that they meet the conditions in new section 3C(3) and (4) of the Gender Recognition Act. New section 3D(6) requires applicants to include a statutory declaration as to whether they are married or in a civil partnership. The Scottish Ministers can by order specify other information or evidence which applicants may be required to provide under section 3D(6) and the Panel may require applicants to submit any additional evidence it requires to determine the application provided it gives reasons for such requests (new section 3D(10)). Applicants can also submit any additional evidence they wish to include in their application.

298. If applicants indicate that they are married, new section 3D(7) requires applicants to include in their application a statutory declaration as to whether the marriage is a protected Scottish marriage. Where the marriage is a protected Scottish marriage, new section 3D(8) requires an application to contain a statutory declaration of consent (within the meaning of new section 3(6D)(c)(i) of the Gender Recognition Act, which is “a declaration by the applicant’s spouse that the spouse consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate”) or a statutory declaration by the applicant that no such declaration by the applicant’s spouse is included. If the application contains a statutory declaration of consent by the applicant’s spouse, new section 3D(9) requires the Panel to inform the spouse that an application has been made.

299. Paragraph 11F amends Schedule 1 to the Gender Recognition Act to insert new sub-paragraph (4) to paragraph 4. New paragraph 4(4) provides that the Panel need not include a medical member when determining any application under section 1(1)(a) of the Gender Recognition Act where the application is for a gender recognition certificate to be granted in accordance with new section 3C of that Act.

Part 3: Consequential amendments

300. Paragraph 12 makes consequential amendment to the Gender Recognition Act reflecting the substantive amendments made in the other paragraphs of schedule 2 to the Bill.
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUPPLEMENTARY DELEGATED POWERS MEMORANDUM

Purpose

1. This Memorandum has been prepared by the Scottish Government to assist the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee (“the DPLRC”) in its consideration of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill (“the Bill”). This Memorandum describes provisions in the Bill conferring power to make subordinate legislation which were either introduced to the Bill or amended at Stage 2. The Memorandum supplements the Delegated Powers Memorandum (“the DPM”) on the Bill as introduced.

PROVISIONS CONFERRING POWER TO MAKE SUBORDINATE LEGISLATION INTRODUCED OR AMENDED AT STAGE 2

Section 4(8) to (9) – meaning of marriage and related expressions in enactments and documents. (Amended power).

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: order
Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure, unless amendments are made to primary legislation in which case the affirmative procedure applies

Provision

2. Section 4(1) to (6) makes provision on how references to terms such as marriage in existing legislation and at common law should be interpreted. The provisions give the result that such terms will be interpreted to include same sex marriages. The power at subsection (8) gives the Scottish Ministers an order-making power to provide that the subsections have effect in a different way or do not apply in specified cases. Such an order can, under subsection (9), include provisions which are consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving.

3. The power was amended at Stage 2, for two purposes. First of all, subsection (9) was amended so that any order made under subsection (8) may make different provision for different purposes. Secondly, subsection (9) was amended so that any order made under subsection (8) may amend primary and secondary legislation.

4. In addition, subsection (6) was amended so that the provision on references to marriage in common law also covers purported marriages. In particular, this reflected that the provisions of section 3(3) and (4) of the Family Law (Scotland) Act 2006 (and the associated common law rule), on recognition in Scotland of certain marriages by cohabitation with habit and repute following a purported marriage outwith the United Kingdom, should extend to same sex relationships as well as opposite sex relationships.
This document relates to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 36A)

Reason for taking power

5. The reason for taking the power at section 4(8) and (9) remains as stated in paragraphs 7 to 9 of the DPM. In brief, the general intention is that, in future, references to “marriage” and to married couples will be interpreted as including both same sex and opposite sex couples. However, there may be a small number of exceptions, reflecting that rights and responsibilities may not be exactly the same.

6. The reason for the amendment to allow different provision for different purposes is that the Government has become aware that in certain circumstances differential provision may be needed. For example, the DPM made reference to public sector pension schemes and transgender people. If provision is made so that in public sector pension schemes same sex married couples are treated in the same way as civil partners, differential provision may be needed to protect the rights of the spouses of transgender people, to ensure that they do not lose any pension rights as a consequence of their spouse acquiring a new gender.

7. As noted above, the power at subsection (8) will allow the Scottish Ministers to list specified cases (e.g. an enactment) to which section 4(1) to (6) is not to apply. There may also be a few cases where the Scottish Ministers may need to amend the enactment in question to produce a result other than the one which would be delivered by section 4(1) to (6), which is why subsection (9) has been amended to allow primary and secondary legislation to be amended.

Reason for choice of procedure

8. The amendments made at Stage 2 mean that an order under section 4 may modify primary legislation. Amendments were also made at Stage 2 so that, in line with normal practice, orders will follow the affirmative procedure when they are amending primary legislation: see the insertion of subsection (9A) into section 4. Otherwise, the negative procedure will apply which offers an appropriate balance between, on the one hand, expedition and convenience and, on the other, the need for scrutiny for provisions of this nature.

Section 7A – power to modify meaning of “qualifying civil partnership”. (New power).

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers, consulting the Registrar General for Scotland and such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate

Power exercisable by: order

Parliamentary procedure: affirmative procedure
Provision

9. Under the Bill, persons in a “qualifying civil partnership” may change their civil partnership to a marriage.

10. “Qualifying civil partnership” is defined to refer to a civil partnership registered in Scotland (including civil partnerships registered overseas through the UK armed forces or through UK consuls where the couple elected Scotland and details of the civil partnership have been sent to the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland (“the Registrar General”)).

11. This power allows ministers by order to modify the meaning of “qualifying civil partnership” so as to include civil partnerships registered outside Scotland.

Reason for taking power

12. The Equal Opportunities Committee took evidence on this issue at Stage 1. In particular, there could be couples resident in Scotland and in a civil partnership registered outwith Scotland who might not be able to change their civil partnership to a marriage in the jurisdiction where the civil partnership was registered without dissolving the civil partnership beforehand. The evidence indicated that it would be strange to dissolve the civil partnership when the relationship had not actually broken down.

13. In responding to this evidence, the Government acknowledged the validity of the point but also noted that there was a risk of couples having two civil statuses – married and in a civil partnership – given that the jurisdiction of Scotland does not have control on the registration of civil partnerships in other jurisdictions.

14. Therefore, the Government lodged an amendment to take an order-making power. This will enable the Scottish Government to consider the issue with other relevant jurisdictions and to consult in Scotland on what provision should be made to allow persons in a civil partnership registered outwith Scotland to change the civil partnership in Scotland to a marriage.

15. The order-making power includes the ability to make different provision for different purposes.

16. Different provision might be made in respect of some civil partnerships registered outwith Scotland. For example, section 9 of the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013, passed at Westminster, makes provision on the parties to a civil partnership registered in England and Wales being able to convert their partnership to a marriage in England and Wales. Therefore, it may be that no provision is required in Scotland in respect of such civil partners.

17. In addition, the ability to make different provision for different purposes may be used to make different provision in respect of, on the one hand, persons in a civil partnership registered outwith Scotland who are now resident here and, on the other hand, persons in a civil partnership registered outwith Scotland who are not resident here.

18. The provision includes the power to make consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision. This may be required, for example, if specific provision is needed on the rights and responsibilities of persons in a non-Scottish civil partnership who change their civil partnership to a marriage in Scotland. It also might be required if any specific provision is needed to protect the rights and responsibilities of persons in a non-Scottish civil partnership acquired whilst in their civil partnership and before they changed their civil partnership to a marriage in Scotland.

19. The provision includes the power to modify any enactment. This might be needed, for example, to amend section 8 of the Bill, particularly section 8(7) which defines “qualifying civil partnership” for the purposes of section 8.

20. Section 8 relates to changing a civil partnership to a marriage through an administrative route. The Government expects that this route will not be available to civil partners who registered their civil partnership outwith Scotland, as the original paperwork in relation to the registration of the civil partnership would not be held in Scotland. As a result, a couple in a civil partnership registered outwith Scotland seeking to change their civil partnership to a marriage here would need to have a marriage ceremony (as envisaged by section 7 of the Bill) and section 8 may need to be amended accordingly.

21. Amendments may also be needed to section 9. In particular, as the jurisdiction of Scotland has no control over the registration of civil partnerships in other jurisdictions, provision may be helpful for the avoidance of doubt to make it clear that changing a civil partnership registered outwith Scotland to a marriage in Scotland has no effect on how the civil partnership may be treated in the original jurisdiction. In addition, civil partnerships were only introduced in Scotland in 2005, after the Civil Partnership Act 2004. Some jurisdictions provided legal recognition to same sex relationships before Scotland. Therefore, provision may be needed to make it clear that persons in a civil partnership registered outwith Scotland who change their civil partnership to a marriage here could not obtain any rights or responsibilities in Scotland which pre-date the introduction of civil partnerships here.

Reason for choice of procedure

22. This order-making power relates to the change of civil status. The DPLRC noted in its report on the Bill as introduced that this is a significant matter. The Government agrees and, therefore, affirmative procedure appears appropriate.

23. As the order may make significant provision, the power provides that the Scottish Government must consult on a proposed draft order. Given the Registrar General’s role in relation to the solemnisation of marriage and the registration of civil partnership, the power provides that Scottish Ministers must consult the Registrar General before laying any order. The power also provides that the Scottish Ministers must consult other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate. The Government envisages that the consultation would be public and bodies representing LGBT people and bodies representing the legal profession would be consulted.
Section 8(1) – change of qualifying civil partnership (Amended power and removed power).

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers, consulting the Registrar General
Power exercisable by: order
Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure, unless amendments are made to primary legislation in which case the affirmative procedure applies

Provision

24 As outlined in the DPM, this provision relates to procedures by which qualifying civil partnerships can change their civil partnership to marriage by means of an administrative process.

25. Two amendments were made at Stage 2. The first amendment reflects points made by the DPLRC in its report. The DPLRC asked the Scottish Government to consider if section 8(2)(g) of the Bill was necessary. Section 8(2)(g) allowed the regulations to make provision on the effect of changing a civil partnership to a marriage. Following consideration, the Government concluded that it was not necessary given that, as the DPLRC suggested, section 9 of the Bill could be extended. Section 9 of the Bill makes provision on the effect of changing a civil partnership to a marriage. As introduced, section 9 only applied where the couple changed their civil partnership to a marriage through having a ceremony.

26. Following the report by the DPLRC, the Government lodged amendments at Stage 2 to remove section 8(2)(g) and to extend section 9 so that it covers those who change through the administrative route as well as those who change through having a marriage ceremony.

27. The second amendment ensures that regulations on the procedures for the administrative route for changing civil partnerships may make different provision for different purposes.

Reason for taking power

28. The reasons for taking the power are as outlined in paragraphs 13 to 18 in the DPM, except that paragraph 16 no longer applies following the removal of section 8(2)(g) and the consequential changes to section 9 following the DPLRC’s report.

29. On the amendment to allow regulations to make different provision for different purposes, this may be required, for example, as different procedures may be needed for a couple in a civil partnership registered in Scotland but who now live outwith Scotland (as compared with a couple who live in Scotland).

30. It may be that the arrangements for checking the identity of the couple (to avoid fraud and to ensure that both parties do wish to change their relationship to a marriage) will have to be different if the couple do not live here. If the couple live in Scotland, the regulations may provide that any checks could be carried out by the local registrar. If the couple live outwith
Scotland, they may need to arrange for a notary public to confirm their identity and that both have confirmed that they wish the relationship to change to a marriage.

Reason for choice of procedure

31. In line with usual practice, the regulations will be subject to affirmative procedure if they amend any primary legislation. Given the likelihood, as mentioned in paragraphs 17 and 18 of the DPM, that there will be a need to amend provisions in the Gender Recognition Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”), the Government considers it likely that an order under these powers would be used to amend primary legislation and, therefore, affirmative procedure would apply. If any order should not amend primary legislation, it would appear appropriate for negative procedure to apply, given that the provisions are detailed and technical and deal with procedural matters.

Section 28(1) - renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate (Removed power)

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers, consulting the Registrar General

Power exercisable by: regulations

Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure, unless amendments are made to primary legislation in which case the affirmative procedure applies.

Provision

32. This provision relates to a married person or person in a civil partnership who has obtained a full Gender Recognition Certificate being able to have a renewal marriage or civil partnership ceremony, to reflect the acquired gender.

Reason for taking power

33. The reasons for taking the power are as outlined in paragraphs 75 to 80 of the DPM except that no provision is now made on the effect of entering into a renewed marriage or renewed civil partnership. The DPLRC, in its report on the Bill, invited the Scottish Government to consider whether the power at section 28(2)(h) should be removed. The power at section 28(2)(h) related to the legal effect of entering into a renewed marriage or civil partnership. Following the DPLRC report, the Government agreed that the power could be removed given that a renewed marriage or civil partnership ceremony is not intended to have a distinct legal effect. Therefore, the Government lodged an amendment at Stage 2 to remove section 28(2)(h).

Reason for choice of procedure

34. The reasons for the choice of procedure are as outlined in paragraph 81 of the DPM.
Section 29A – form of register of marriages (Amending power in existing legislation)

Power conferred on: the Registrar General, with the approval of the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: regulations
Parliamentary procedure: laid before Parliament under section 30 of the Interpretation and Legislative Reform (Scotland) Act 2010

Provision

35. Section 54 of the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965 empowers the Registrar General, with the approval of the Scottish Ministers, to make regulations on matters such as the form of registers for births, marriages and deaths. Section 29A of the Bill amends section 54 of the 1965 Act so that regulations prescribing the form of a register of marriages may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.

Reason for taking power

36. Different provision might be needed if, for example, different descriptions are needed in the marriage register for the parties of a same sex marriage when compared with the parties to an opposite sex marriage. This is in line with section 16(2)(a) of the Bill, which allows regulations prescribing the form of the marriage schedule to make different provision for different cases or circumstances. The powers at section 16(2)(a) of the Bill are described at paragraphs 63 to 65 of the DPM.

Reason for choice of procedure

37. This provision amends existing powers in the 1965 Act. The approach taken in the 1965 Act is that regulations made by the Registrar General are not subject to negative or affirmative Parliamentary procedures (unless they set fees, when they are subject to the negative procedure). Having no negative or affirmative Parliamentary procedure for this amended power is consistent with the 1965 Act generally. The default position applies under section 30 of the Interpretation and Legislative Reform (Scotland) Act 2010, so that the regulations are laid before Parliament.

Section 31 – ancillary provision (Amended power)

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: order
Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure, unless amendments are made to primary legislation in which case the affirmative procedure applies.

Provision

38. Section 31(1) allows ministers to make by order such supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision as they consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in connection with, or full giving full effect to, any provision of the Bill.
This document relates to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 36A)

Reason for taking power

39. The reasons for taking the power are as outlined in paragraphs 83 to 85 of the DPM. The powers were amended at Stage 2. This amendment allows an order under section 31 to make different provision for different purposes. This might be needed, for example, in respect of amending devolved pensions legislation to reflect the introduction of same sex marriage: separate provision may be needed for transgender people and their spouses.

Reason for choice of procedure

40. The reasons for the choice of procedure are as outlined in paragraph 86 of the DPM.

Schedule 2 (paragraph 6) – change of gender of married persons or civil partners (Amended power)

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers, consulting the Registrar General, the Gender Recognition Panel and such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate

Power exercisable by: order

Parliamentary procedure: affirmative procedure

Provision

41. Schedule 2 to the Bill makes provision on gender recognition. Paragraph 6 of schedule 2 inserts section 5D into the 2004 Act. Section 5D allows an order to be made to introduce a more streamlined process for civil partners to change their civil partnership to a marriage and obtain the full Gender Recognition Certificate. Following the report by the DPLRC, the Government lodged amendments so that all orders under section 5D are subject to affirmative procedure.

42. In addition, the amendments lay down a more detailed consultation procedure. In the Bill as introduced, the Scottish Ministers just had to consult the Registrar General before making an order. Following the amendments, the Scottish Ministers will have to consult on a draft of any proposed order and will have to consult the Registrar General, the Gender Recognition Panel and such other persons as Ministers consider appropriate.

Reason for taking power

43. The reasons for taking the power are as outlined in paragraphs 99 and 100 of the DPM.

Reason for choice of procedure

44. The Government lodged amendments to the Bill following the comments made by the DPLRC in its report.

45. As a result of these amendments, all orders made under the power, and not just those amending primary legislation, will be subject to affirmative procedure and will be subject to a more detailed consultation procedure.
Schedule 2 (paragraph 8) – change of gender of married persons or civil partners
(Amended power)

Power conferred on: the Registrar General, with the approval of the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: order
Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure

Provision

46. Paragraph 8 of schedule 2 contains provision amending the 2004 Act to allow the Registrar General, with the approval of the Scottish Ministers, to make regulations on the registration of marriages and civil partnerships following gender recognition.

Reason for taking powers

47. These powers enable the Registrar General to make regulations on the registration of marriages and civil partnerships following gender recognition.

48. The powers were amended at Stage 2 to make it clear that fees could be charged to applicants in respect of registration. Fees are generally charged for registration purposes.

49. The powers were also amended at Stage 2 to enable different provision to be made for different cases or circumstances. Different provision might be needed where the person receiving the full Gender Recognition Certificate was married in Scotland or entered a civil partnership in Scotland but was not born here or where the couple married here or entered a civil partnership here but no longer live in Scotland.

50. The powers were also amended by a non-Government amendment. This lays down that regulations under these powers must provide that where a full gender recognition certificate has been issued to a person after an application to the sheriff following the issue of an interim Gender Recognition Certificate, the marriage must not be registered unless the person’s spouse consents in writing to that registration in the form prescribed by the regulations.

51. An amendment was also made to correct a drafting point in paragraph 12 of schedule 2 to the Bill. As introduced, the Bill provided that regulations made under “paragraph 20A” are subject to the negative procedure. The amendment makes it clear that this is a reference to paragraph 20A of Schedule 3 to the 2004 Act.

Reason for choice of procedure

52. The reason for negative procedure remains as outlined in paragraph 106 of the DPM.
This document relates to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 36A)

Schedule 2, paragraph 11C – new section 3C(5)(b)(ii) – alternative grounds for granting applications: Scotland. (New power)

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers, consulting the Gender Recognition Panel and such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate

Power exercisable by: order

Parliamentary procedure: affirmative procedure

Provision

53. Part 2 of schedule 2 makes provision on applications to the Gender Recognition Panel (“the GRP”) by certain people who transitioned some time ago to an acquired gender.

54. The provisions allow such persons to supply alternative evidence to the GRP instead of the usual requirements, which are based around a diagnosis of gender dysphoria\(^1\). This alternative procedure will be available to persons who are or have been in a marriage or civil partnership registered in Scotland; were living in the acquired gender 6 years before the commencement of section 27 of the Bill and have or have had gender dysphoria or surgery or other treatment to modify sexual characteristics as may be laid down by order made by the Scottish Ministers.

Reason for taking powers

55. The alternative grounds allow the applicant to the GRP to provide evidence that he or she has had surgery for the purposes of modifying sexual characteristics. However, it has been suggested that in some cases long-term transitioned people may not have had surgery but may have had other treatment. Reasons for this include

- Surgical treatment may not have been available.
- There may have been medical reasons why the applicant could not have had surgery.

56. There is also a need to ensure that any treatment other than surgery which the applicant may have had provides sufficient evidence that the applicant has transitioned to an acquired gender.

57. Therefore, the new procedure contains an order-making power. This will allow Ministers to consult on exactly what types of treatment other than surgery for the purposes of modifying sexual characteristics should be accepted by the GRP.

58. Under the powers, Ministers must consult the GRP. This reflects that the GRP will have to follow the new procedures and may wish to offer a view on what treatment to modify sexual characteristics other than surgery should be accepted. Ministers will also have to consult other persons as appropriate. The Government expects that this would include bodies representing

---

\(^{1}\) Gender dysphoria is a widely recognised medical condition variously described as gender dysphoria, gender identity disorder and transsexualism. It is a drive to live in the opposite gender to that which a person has been registered at birth.
transgender persons, bodies representing the legal professional and some medical practitioners with expertise in this area.

59. The consultation will be on a draft of the proposed order given that the details of what is proposed may be particularly important.

60. The order may make different provision for different cases or circumstances. This reflects that transgender people may have varied needs and, as a result, treatments may vary depending on the precise needs.

61. The order may amend any enactment made at Westminster (or originally made at Westminster and subsequently amended by the Scottish Parliament). Any such amendments are expected to relate to the 2004 Act itself. For example, there may be a need to add more detail to section 3D(4) (inserted by Part 2 of schedule 2 to the Bill), on the report covering treatment to modify sexual characteristics.

Reason for choice of procedure

62. The order is subject to affirmative procedure. This reflects that the provisions impact on an individual’s personal status and, as such, are significant.

Schedule 2, paragraph 11E – new section 3D(6)(b) - alternative grounds for granting applications: Scotland (New power)

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: order
Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure

Provision

63. Part 2 of schedule 2 makes provision on applications to the GRP by certain people who transitioned some time ago to an acquired gender.

64. Part 2 of schedule 2 inserts new section 3D into the 2004 Act. Amongst other provisions, it lays down that applications must include any other information or evidence required by an order made by the Scottish Ministers.

Reason for taking powers

65. Part 2 of schedule 2 lays down what information or evidence applicants under this alternative procedure have to supply to the GRP. It is standard practice in this area to give ministers the power to lay down further information or evidence.

66. This may be used if, for example, the GRP or medical practitioners advise ministers that it would be helpful for all applicants under the alternative procedure to supply a specific piece of information or evidence. The new provision, again in line with standard practice, allow the applicant to supply additional information or evidence, if he or she so wishes, and also allows the GRP to require additional information or evidence in a specific case (if doing this, the GRP must give reasons for doing so).
Reason for choice of procedure

67. Negative procedure seems appropriate in respect of a procedural matter of this nature. The power relates to the detailed information which an applicant may have to provide to the Gender Recognition Panel, which is the type of power where negative procedure seems appropriate. It would not be an effective use of Parliament’s time to make this power subject to affirmative procedure.

Scottish Government
January 2014
28 January 2014

Dear Douglas

MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
RESPONSES ORGANISED THROUGH SCOTLAND FOR MARRIAGE

1. This letter provides the analysis of the additional 4,253 responses which failed to reach us from Scotland for Marriage. These responses were to the Scottish Government consultation on the draft Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill before it was introduced to the Scottish Parliament.

2. The Government published analyses of the responses to the consultation on the draft Bill and to our earlier consultation on the registration of civil partnerships and same sex marriage. These analyses are available on the Scottish Government website\(^1\).

3. 3,594 (84.5%) of the additional responses followed the standard template prepared by Scotland for Marriage (this includes a small number of duplicate responses). 20 of the additional responses were blank. This left 639 to analyse.

4. The text for the standard template prepared by Scotland for Marriage is at Annex A of the analysis of the consultation on the draft Bill\(^2\). The specific questions in the consultation addressed by the standard template prepared by Scotland for Marriage were:

- Question 7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for authorising religious and belief celebrants who wish to solemnise same sex marriage?
- Question 8. Do you have any comments on opt-outs for civil registrars who do not wish to solemnise same sex marriage?
- Question 9. Do you have any comments on the proposed approach in relation to freedom of speech?

\(^1\) See http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2012/07/5671 and http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2013/06/2782/9

\(^2\) See http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2013/06/2782/9
• Question 10. Do you have any comments on the proposals in relation to education and same sex marriage?
• Question 11. Do you have any comments on the proposals on the impact of same sex marriage on legislation, the common law or on private arrangements?

5. I attach as an annex to this letter an analysis of the additional points made in responses which contained some variations from the standard template.

6. The Government concluded that the points raised by these additional responses did not require any amendments to the Bill. We have a variety of reasons for reaching that decision, including:

• As we have indicated, most of the responses followed the standard template, which we have seen and taken account of.
• The Government considers that the system for authorising religious and belief bodies and celebrants who wish to take part in same sex marriage provides robust protections for those who do not wish to take part.
• There are a variety of measures in the Bill and in guidance which protect freedom of speech.
• On education, the Government has sought views on draft guidance in relation to the Conduct of Relationships, Sexual Health and Parenthood Education in Scottish Schools.
• In some areas, the Government has already taken action (for example, the proposed amendments to the Equality Act are now wider than was originally proposed, which is in line with the comments in the Scotland for Marriage standard template at question 7, and the Bill as introduced makes provision so that regulations providing the form of the Marriage Schedule may make different provision for different cases or circumstances).

7. I am sending a copy of this letter to Dr Gordon Macdonald of CARE for Scotland.

Yours sincerely

SIMON STOCKWELL
Family and Property Law

---

3 The draft guidance is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2013/09/7899/0

ANNEX: ANALYSIS OF ADDITIONAL RESPONSES FROM SCOTLAND FOR MARRIAGE WHICH CONTAINED VARIATIONS FROM THE STANDARD TEMPLATE

General

1. A number of the responses contained minor variations from the standard template. In relation to question 7, for example, around 30% of the non-standard responses were minor variations. Minor variations include material such as:

   - Comments along the lines of “Personally, I feel that…”
   - Comments along the lines of “…I agree with all of the above”.
   - A condensed version of the template answer.
   - Rephrasing of a point in the template answer.

2. Some responses expressed concern generally about homosexuality and homosexual conduct.

3. In some cases, a point in the template answer was omitted. For example:

   - in relation to registrars, a number of consultees removed the reference to providing an opt-out in legislation and, instead, just referred to providing a Code of Practice;
   - some consultees omitted reference to a specific adoption agency; and

4. There were a few responses where the respondents provided prayers or verses from the Bible.

Additional points made which were already included in the consultation analyses published by the Scottish Government

5. A number of additional points were made which are already reflected in the analyses published by the Scottish Government. These included:

   Question 7: the authorisation of religious and belief celebrants

   - Concerns about the practicalities of the opt-in system. [This type of point was reflected in paragraphs 5.15 to 5.20 of the analysis for the second consultation].
   - Local authorities will use the Public Sector Equality Duty to tell religious bodies that unless they carry out same sex marriages and civil partnerships, they could not solemnise opposite sex marriages\(^5\). [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.23 of the analysis for the second consultation].
   - Concerns about protections for congregations against same sex marriage. [This type of point is reflected in paragraph 5.12 of the analysis for the second consultation].
   - Concerns about potential challenges in relation to the use of church buildings. [This type of point was reflected in paragraphs 5.11 and 5.12 of the analysis for the second consultation].

---

\(^5\) In practice, local authorities do not authorise religious bodies to solemnise marriages. The authorisation comes from the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977; or from being prescribed in a Statutory Instrument made by Ministers or from the Registrar General.
Question 8: civil registrars

- Registrars should have the same protections as religious or belief celebrants. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.30 of the analysis for the second consultation].
- There could be different rules for those who apply to be a registrar after same sex marriage is introduced when compared with those who are already employed. It was suggested that the introduction of same sex marriage represents a fundamental change in the conditions of service for existing registrars. [This type of point is reflected in paragraph 5.32 of the analysis for the second consultation].
- There is a need to protect the rights of people of faith. [This type of point is reflected in paragraph 5.30 of the analysis for the second consultation].
- Religious belief affects the whole of a person’s life. [This type of point is reflected in paragraph 5.30 of the analysis for the second consultation].
- Concerns about what would happen if a registrar should face legal or other action for refusing to solemnise a same sex marriage. [This type of point is reflected in paragraph 5.31 for the analysis for the second consultation].
- There were concerns about the potential impact of same sex marriage on existing and future employment prospects of registrars. [This type of point is reflected in paragraph 5.31 of the analysis for the second consultation].
- People working for local authorities are bound to carry out the duties of the post. [This type of point is reflected in paragraph 5.27 of the analysis for the second consultation].

Question 9: freedom of speech

- There should be more specific provision in the Bill protecting freedom of speech. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.39 of the analysis for the second consultation].
- Calls for legislation to protect certain types of workers when carrying out their work. [This type of point was reflected in paragraphs 5.38 and 5.39 of the analysis for the second consultation].
- Points on the Lord Advocate’s prosecution guidelines⁶. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.41 of the analysis for the second consultation.]
- There was a need to consider the wider impact on other laws which same sex marriage would have. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.40 of the analysis for the second consultation].

Question 10: education

- Teachers with a conscientious objection should be protected in employment legislation and not be disadvantaged at future job or promotion opportunities. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.48 of the analysis for the second consultation].
- Freedom of speech should be given specific protection within the school environment. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.48 of the analysis for the second consultation].

---

⁶ The Lord Advocate’s prosecution guidance (issued after the consultation on the draft Bill) is at http://www.copfs.gov.uk/images/Documents/Prosecution_Policy_Guidance/Guidelines_and_Policy/PROSECUTION%20GUIDANCE%20IN%20RELATION%20TO%20SAME%20SEX%20MARRIAGE.pdf
• Concerns over the materials that could be used to support lessons covering same sex marriage in schools. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.48 of the analysis for the second consultation].

• Parents should have the right to withdraw their child from any lessons that discuss same sex marriage. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.48 of the analysis for the second consultation].

• Teaching about same sex marriage in schools could conflict with the views held by parents. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.48 of the analysis for the second consultation].

• Denominational schools should not be made to change what they currently teach in relation to marriage. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.48 for the analysis to the second consultation].

• Concerns that the understanding of the traditional definition of marriage would be eroded and there would be no opportunity to discuss this in classrooms. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.48 of the analysis for the second consultation].

Question 11: impact of same sex marriage on the law

• References to fostering and adoption and to a specific adoption agency and suggestions that same sex couples could use another adoption agency. [This type of comment was reflected in paragraphs 5.57 and 5.58 of the analysis for the second consultation]

• Some concerns about the terminology that might be used in marriage schedules in the future. [Section 16 of the Bill as introduced to Parliament makes provision so that regulations prescribing the form of the Marriage Schedule may make different provision for different cases or circumstances. This was not in the consultation draft of the Bill but was added following points made by some religious bodies at meetings. Paragraphs 57 to 64 of the Policy Memorandum for the Bill discuss this issue and others7].

• Concerns on polygamy. [This type of comment is reflected in paragraph 6.11 of the analysis for the first consultation. The Government made it clear, in paragraphs 3.37 and 3.40 of the second consultation paper, that it had no intention of allowing polygamous marriages to take place in Scotland].

Points raised generally

• The Scottish Government has no mandate to re-define marriage as marriage is between one man and one woman designed for procreation and bringing up children and instituted by God. Some responses also noted dictionary definitions of marriage and there was a suggestion that the Government does not have the right to authorise churches to solemnise same sex marriages. [This type of comment was reflected in paragraphs 6.6 and 9.9 of the analysis for the first consultation].

• There should be a referendum on same sex marriage. [This type of comment is reflected in paragraph 8.20 of the analysis for the first consultation].

• Suggestions the Government ignored the outcome of the first consultation. [This type of comment is reflected in paragraph 1.9 of the analysis for the second consultation].

• Different terminology should be used for same sex relationships. [This was reflected in paragraph 5.55 of the analysis for the second consultation].

7 The Policy Memorandum is at http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Marriage%20and%20Civil%20Partnership%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b36s4-introd-pm.pdf
There was a need to consider the impact of proposals on children. [This type of comment was reflected at paragraph 3.7 of the analysis of the second consultation. The impact on children was considered as part of the partial Equality Impact Assessment (EQIA) prepared by the Government for the second consultation and of the final EQIA published when the Bill was introduced].

Points on non-consummation. [Paragraph 3.34 of the second consultation paper noted that whilst in England and Wales non-consummation of a marriage is grounds for seeking a decree of nullity of the marriage this does not form part of the law of Scotland].

Same sex marriage may help a small minority but disadvantages the majority. [This type of comment is reflected in paragraph 6.13 of the analysis for the first consultation].

People of faith and religious bodies are suffering discrimination. [This type of comment was reflected at paragraph 6.12 for the first consultation].

Concerns about changes to language which same sex marriage might bring and wider concerns about changes to language generally. For example, concerns about removing “mother” and “father” from birth certificates and “partner” being used on forms or by officials rather than “husband” or “wife”. [This type of comment was reflected in paragraphs 5.54 and 5.55 of the analysis for the second consultation].

Reference to a number of cases where the respondent suggested an individual had lost paid or unpaid employment through having expressed opposition to same sex marriage. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.38 of the analysis for the second consultation].

Concerns about “belief” bodies and whether anybody could just fill in a form and become a religion. [This type of point was reflected in the last bullet of paragraph 4.14 of the analysis for the second consultation].

Concerns about the proposal to authorise Church of Scotland deacons to solemnise marriages. [This type of point was reflected in paragraphs 4.17 to 4.20 of the analysis for the second consultation].

Reference to a number of cases where the respondent suggested an individual had lost paid or unpaid employment through having expressed opposition to same sex marriage. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.38 of the analysis for the second consultation].

A comment suggesting that religious, belief or atheist celebrants should be allowed to solemnise same sex marriages if they wish. [This type of point was reflected in paragraph 5.5 of the analysis for the second consultation].

6. Further points raised and the Government’s response are shown in the table below.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>No.</th>
<th>Point</th>
<th>Government response</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Question 7: the authorisation of religious and belief celebrants</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1.</td>
<td>Concerns about religious liberty generally.</td>
<td>The Government considers that the Bill increases religious freedom by allowing those religious bodies who wish to do so to take part in same sex marriage and civil partnerships while protecting those who do not.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2.</td>
<td>Concerns about individual ministers of religion facing court action.</td>
<td>The planned amendments to the Equality Act are designed to protect individual celebrants. The European Convention on Human Rights provides a</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Authorisation will in time lead to compulsion. Suggestion that assurances on people not having to work on a Sunday have been eroded over time and the same could happen with assurances that religious bodies will not have to solemnise same sex marriage. The Registrar General might withdraw authorisation to solemnise opposite sex marriage from ministers who are opposed to same sex marriage.

The Government has made it clear that it has no intention of requiring religious bodies to take part in same sex marriage.

A person should not be subject to a hate crime prosecution if when the celebrant asks during a ceremony whether there are objections to the marriage the person objects to a same sex marriage on religious grounds. Opposition to same sex marriage is not in itself a criminal offence. The Lord Advocate’s guidelines clarify this.

Concerns that those opposed to same sex marriage might be discriminated against when applying for a position (eg minister) within a denomination.

It is for denominations to reach their own decisions on who should be appointed to posts within the denomination.

Why is there still discrimination against Catholics in relation to the Monarchy?

This does not seem relevant to same sex marriage.

The Scottish and UK Governments want to stop Christians from solemnising marriages.

The Scottish Government welcomes the role played by religious bodies in solemnising marriage. This enables couples, if they wish, to have a marriage ceremony which reflects their faith.

Concern that churches against same sex marriage might suffer indirect discrimination.

The Government has made it clear that churches should not suffer detriment for being against same sex marriage.

Question 8: opt-outs for registrars

It should be possible for the religious beliefs of registrars to be respected, given that there will not be many same sex marriages. The service should be provided in such a way to respect registrars both for and against same sex marriage and to ensure the service is not unduly disrupted.

The Government considers that local authorities should be able to deploy their registrar staff as they see fit, taking account of religious beliefs of registrars as appropriate.

There was a conscientious objection available during the war and similar provision should be available for registrars.

The Government does not consider that this is an appropriate analogy.

Registrars should be free to act upon their own beliefs at all times.

The Government agrees that local authorities should take account of religious beliefs held by registrars and other employees but allowing registrars to act upon their own beliefs at all times could disrupt the provision of services and lead to conflict with other employees.

A local authority taking account of a registrar’s religious beliefs may work now but may not work in the future if circumstances change.

As indicated above, the Government considers that local authorities should be able to deploy their registrar staff as they see fit, taking account of religious beliefs of registrars as appropriate. This
| | | |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5.</td>
<td>It should be an opt-in system rather than an opt-out system for civil registrars.</td>
<td>The Government does not agree with this. As indicated above, the Government considers that local authorities should be able to deploy their registrar staff as they see fit, taking account of religious beliefs of registrars as appropriate.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6.</td>
<td>The introduction of civil partnerships in one local authority in Scotland did lead to registrars being forced to register them against their religious beliefs.</td>
<td>As indicated above, the Government considers that local authorities should be able to deploy their registrar staff as they see fit, taking account of religious beliefs of registrars as appropriate.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.</td>
<td>The Equality Act 2010 should be amended to give legal protection to registrars.</td>
<td>The Government does not consider this to be appropriate. The 2010 Act is being amended to protect celebrants and other persons carrying out religious functions. Registrars are carrying out a civil function.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8.</td>
<td>Comments on Highland Council’s position on registrars.</td>
<td>This seems to reflect the approach taken by the Council when responding to the consultation.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9.</td>
<td>It should be written into a registrar’s conditions of employment that an employee should not be expected to act against their conscience.</td>
<td>This appears too wide, as employees may have views on a number of issues. As indicated above, the Government considers that local authorities should be able to deploy their registrar staff as they see fit, taking account of religious beliefs of registrars as appropriate.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10.</td>
<td>There is protection in the Netherlands for civil registrars who do not have to conduct same sex marriages.</td>
<td>There was discussion in relation to the Netherlands at Stage 1. In any event, the Government does not consider a legislative opt-out should be put in place in Scotland.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.</td>
<td>There should be protection for Registrars when discussing and voicing their conscientious objections inside or outside their workplace, including on social media.</td>
<td>Section 14 of the Bill already provides that the introduction of same sex marriage has no effect on existing rights to freedom of speech. This applies to registrars as it applies to everybody else.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Question 9: freedom of speech

|   | Freedom of speech will be curtailed by the dynamics behind same sex marriage and this will be backed up by laws at domestic or European level. The Scottish Government is already curtailing freedom of speech by not allowing discussion on drawbacks of same sex relationships. | The Government has no plans to curtail freedom of speech. In any event, freedom of speech is an integral part of the European Convention on Human Rights. |

---

The Government is seeking to control what people think (raised under question 8) and what churches should believe (raised under question 7).

2. Will LGBT people against same sex marriage be subject to discrimination?
   No. LGBT people, like everybody else, are entitled to express their own views on this issue.

3. People who support one man: one woman marriage are not homophobic.
   The Government has already made it clear that it entirely accepts it is possible to be opposed to same sex marriage without being homophobic. (See, for example, the penultimate bullet of paragraph 1.08 of the second consultation).

4. Concerns by an individual working for NHS Scotland about being able to exercise freedom of speech.
   A minister may be able to speak out against same sex marriage in a Church but may have to take a different approach when, for example, working in a hospital or a school.
   More generally, the Government considers that individuals are perfectly entitled to hold their own views on same sex marriage but any public service must be delivered to all, without discrimination.

5. Distributing religious leaflets or preaching outside a football stadium could be treated as an offence under the Offensive Behaviour at Football and Threatening Communications (Scotland) Act 2012.
   The offence in the 2012 Act requires threatening, hateful or other offensive behaviour which is likely to incite public disorder – simply expressing a view on same sex marriage by itself would not amount to the offence.
   There was a debate on a proposed amendment to the 2012 Act at Stage 2 of the Bill.

Question 10: impact of same sex marriage on education

1. Balancing the rights of teachers/head teachers in support of same sex marriage with those opposed to it could create problems in a school environment.
   There is a wide range of opinions held on many issues. We do not expect there to be consensus, but that in a professional environment, staff would have respect for each other’s views.

2. What is the current content of heterosexual marriages in the curriculum, and will a commitment be made to continue teaching this in schools? Why is the Bible no longer taught in schools?
   The Scottish Government does not define the curriculum. It is for each school to decide what pupils will be taught. The Scottish Government has produced guidance for use by teachers, but it is only guidance and not prescriptive.

3. Teachers are not made to teach one particular religion in school [and so should not be made to teach on one definition of marriage]. Teachers should not endorse one particular lifestyle.
   Teachers are required to teach in a balanced and non-discriminatory way on a variety of issues.

4. Parents may seek alternative education for their children if same sex marriage is taught in schools against their wishes.
   We expect schools to discuss the contents of lessons in advance with parents, and to listen to any concerns they may have, and take appropriate action.

5. How will sensitive issues such as adoption of children by same sex couples and the...
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Question 11: impact of same sex marriage on the law</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1. Any grants for the upkeep, repair and maintenance of Church buildings should not be withheld from a Church that only marries opposite sex couples.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. There should be a referendum on whether or not Scotland should completely adopt civil law, rather than law based on Christianity.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. There should be a Royal Commission to think through all aspects of such a significant change.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4. There could be costs arising from the need to change stationery as a result of same sex marriage.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
estimates that costs to make minor adjustments to forms and extracts would be around £80,000.

5. There should be provision for the wishes of parents whose children are up for adoption to specify that their child will be adopted by an opposite sex couple.

Section 14(5) of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) 2007 Act, allows for the views of parents to be taken into account when placing a child for adoption. It would be inappropriate to single out views on same sex adopters. The overarching focus is on adopters who can best meet the needs of the child.

6. If needed, specialist tribunals should be established to consider issues in relation to conscientious objection.

Where possible, the Government would encourage any disputes to be dealt with outwith tribunals and courts (eg any employer/employee dispute or discussion relating to same sex marriage would be best settled by dialogue).

If a case does have to go to litigation, the ordinary courts (or, where appropriate, Employment Tribunals) could deal with the case. There does not seem any need to set up separate tribunals in this area.

7. There is no Scots case law in relation to same sex marriage.

Case law will develop as appropriate. The courts may be able to draw on existing case law from cases involving opposite sex spouses or civil partners.

8. The proposed legislation is a radical change to Scots law which ordinary people using the legal system will find hard to understand.

Society develops and changes and the law reflects that.

9. The Bible and its public use should be protected in law to prevent faith groups from being subject to hatred because they disagree with same sex marriage

There is already protection in this area.

Article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights already provides a right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion and Article 10 protects freedom of expression.

Section 14 of the Bill provides that the introduction of same sex marriage has no impact on existing rights to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and expression.

The Lord Advocate has published prosecution guidance.

The risk in protecting a specific religious book is that something inciting violence or hatred could be said in a specific set of circumstances where words are quoted from that book and the ability to prosecute in those circumstances needs to be retained.

10. Why not invent a new word for all “marriages”?

The Government has no intention of doing this.

11. People respecting existing definitions of marriage should not be denied public services or support.

The Government has made it clear that opposition to same sex marriage should not affect eligibility for public services or support.

12. Common law and private arrangements should be able to continue as at present.

Section 4 of the Bill makes provision in this area.

---

| | |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Section 4 does not affect private documents executed before section 4 comes into force. And it will remain possible for private documents to refer specifically to opposite sex marriage if the party(ies) drawing up the document so wish.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13. Many religious bodies and people of faith are active in charitable works.</td>
<td>The Government agrees and very much welcomes this. The Government does not consider that the introduction of same sex marriage should stop religious bodies and people of faith from carrying out charitable functions.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14. Same sex marriage will discourage opposite sex marriage and cause embarrassment.</td>
<td>The Government considers that the introduction of same sex marriage will strengthen marriage, as more people will be able to get married. What an individual or a couple consider to be marriage should not be affected.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Family and Property law
Scottish Government
January 2014
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

8th Report, 2014 (Session 4)

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at stage 2

Published by the Scottish Parliament on 28 January 2014
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

Remit and membership

Remit:

1. The remit of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee is to consider and report on—
   (a) any—
   (i) subordinate legislation laid before the Parliament or requiring the consent of the Parliament under section 9 of the Public Bodies Act 2011;
   (ii) [deleted]
   (iii) pension or grants motion as described in Rule 8.11A.1; and, in particular, to determine whether the attention of the Parliament should be drawn to any of the matters mentioned in Rule 10.3.1;
   (b) proposed powers to make subordinate legislation in particular Bills or other proposed legislation;
   (c) general questions relating to powers to make subordinate legislation;
   (d) whether any proposed delegated powers in particular Bills or other legislation should be expressed as a power to make subordinate legislation;
   (e) any failure to lay an instrument in accordance with section 28(2), 30(2) or 31 of the 2010 Act; and
   (f) proposed changes to the procedure to which subordinate legislation laid before the Parliament is subject.
   (g) any Scottish Law Commission Bill as defined in Rule 9.17A.1; and
   (h) any draft proposal for a Scottish Law Commission Bill as defined in that Rule.

Membership:

Richard Baker
Nigel Don (Convener)
Mike MacKenzie
Margaret McCulloch
Stuart McMillan (Deputy Convener)
John Scott
Stewart Stevenson
Committee Clerking Team:

Clerk to the Committee
Euan Donald

Assistant Clerk
Elizabeth White

Support Manager
Daren Pratt
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

8th Report, 2014 (Session 4)

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at stage 2

The Committee reports to the Parliament as follows—

INTRODUCTION

1. At its meeting on 28 January 2014, the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee considered the delegated powers provisions in the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (“the Bill”). The Committee submits this report to the Parliament under Rule 9.7.9 of Standing Orders.

2. The Bill makes changes to the law on the solemnisation of marriage and civil partnerships. It makes changes to the law on gender recognition, matrimonial proceedings and other matters as a result of the changes which are made to marriage and civil partnership. The primary change which the Bill makes is to introduce same sex marriage. It does so through amendments to the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 (“the 1977 Act”). The Bill also makes provision for the registration of religious civil partnerships and belief civil partnerships by amendment to the Civil Partnership Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”); but it does not introduce opposite sex civil partnership.

3. The Scottish Government has provided the Parliament with a supplementary memorandum on the delegated powers provisions in the Bill, in advance of Stage 3 of the Bill (“the SDPM”).

4. The Committee reported on certain matters in relation to the delegated powers provisions in the Bill at Stage 1 in its 51st report of 2013.

1 Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 available at: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Marriage%20and%20Civil%20Partnership%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b36as4-stage2-amend.pdf

2 Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill Supplementary Delegated Powers Memorandum available at: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/MCP_SDPM_pdf
5. The Committee considered each of the new or substantially amended delegated powers provisions in the Bill after Stage 2.

6. After Stage 2, the Committee reports that it does not need to draw the attention of the Parliament to the new or substantially amended delegated powers provisions listed below and that it is content with the Parliamentary procedure to which they are subject:

- Section 4(8) to (9) – meaning of marriage and related expressions in enactment and documents (Amended power);
- Section 7A – power to modify meaning of “qualifying civil partnership” (New power);
- Section 8(1) – change of qualifying civil partnership (Amended power and removed power);
- Section 28(1) - renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate (Removed power);
- Section 29A – form of register of marriages (Amending power in existing legislation)
- Section 31 – ancillary provision (Amended power)
- Schedule 2 (paragraph 8) – change of gender of married persons or civil partners (Amended power)
- Schedule 2, paragraph 11E – new section 3D(6)(b) - alternative grounds for granting applications: Scotland (New power)

7. The Committee’s comments and, where appropriate, recommendations on the other delegated powers in the Bill are detailed below.

Schedule 2 (paragraph 6) – change of gender of married persons or civil partners (Amended power)

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers, consulting the Registrar General, the Gender Recognition Panel and such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate

Power exercisable by: order

Parliamentary procedure: affirmative procedure

8. Paragraph 6 of schedule 2 of the Bill inserts section 5D into the Gender Recognition Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”). Section 5D confers power on the Scottish Ministers to introduce a more streamlined process for civil partners to change their civil partnership to a marriage and obtain the full Gender Recognition Certificate.
9. In its stage 1 report, the Committee recommended that this matter should be provided for on the face of the Bill but if this was not possible then orders made under this power should be laid in draft before the Parliament for consultation and then subject to the affirmative procedure.

10. Amendments made at stage 2 provide for consultation on a draft order but do not require the order to be laid before the Parliament at that stage. Following the consultation period, the orders are subject to the affirmative procedure. This falls short of the Committee’s recommendation and would not formally intimate the consultation to the Parliament.

11. The Scottish Government has not explained why it has chosen not to bring forward an amendment implementing the Committee’s recommendation that the draft orders on which the Government consults should be laid before the Parliament.

12. The Committee welcomes the amendments made to the Bill at stage 2 which provide that orders made under section 5D of the Gender Recognition Act 2004 will now be subject to the affirmative procedure and that the Scottish Ministers are required to consult on a draft of any proposed order with the Registrar General, the Gender Recognition Panel and such other persons as they consider appropriate.

13. However, the Committee asks the Scottish Government to explain why it has chosen not to implement the Committee’s recommendation that the Bill should be amended to require a consultation draft to be laid before the Parliament.

Schedule 2, paragraph 11C – new section 3C(5)(b)(ii) – alternative grounds for granting applications: Scotland. (New power)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Power conferred on:</th>
<th>the Scottish Ministers, consulting the Gender Recognition Panel and such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Power exercisable by:</td>
<td>order</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parliamentary procedure:</td>
<td>affirmative procedure</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

14. Part 2 of schedule 2 makes provision about applications to the Gender Recognition Panel (“the GRP”) by certain people who transitioned some time ago to an acquired gender.

15. The provisions allow such persons to have their change in gender legally recognised through the issue of a gender recognition certificate if they meet certain conditions. One condition is that the person has undergone a prescribed treatment for the purpose of modifying their sexual characteristics. New section 3C(5)(b)(ii) of the 2004 Act therefore gives power to the Scottish Ministers to determine which treatment to modify sexual characteristics will qualify as part of the criteria for recognition of a change of gender.
16. The Committee considers that this is a significant matter and engages the question of whether the criteria for change in gender should be determined through delegated powers as opposed to requiring primary legislation. The Committee observes that until now the conditions under which a gender recognition certificate could be granted has been left as a matter for the Parliament rather than Ministers.

17. However, in recognition of the significance of the power, the Government has imposed a requirement for consultation with the GRP and such other persons as the Ministers consider appropriate on a draft order. The affirmative procedure applies to its exercise.

18. This power was newly inserted into the Bill at stage 2 and therefore prior to now, the Committee has not had the opportunity to comment on it. However, the power raises a similar issue to that discussed above in relation to inserted section 5D of the 2004 Act as the exercise of this power involves consultation on a draft order before the subsequent laying of a draft order subject to affirmative procedure. And, like the power under inserted section 5D, this power does not engage the Parliament at that stage.

19. Given the similar concerns the Committee raised at stage 1 in relation to inserted section 5D of the 2004 Act, the Committee asks the Scottish Government to explain why it is considered appropriate that the Bill does not require draft orders made under new section 3C(5)(b)(ii) of the 2004 Act to be laid before the Parliament at the point at which they are consulted on.
03 February 2014

Dear Douglas

MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
AMENDMENTS TO THE EQUALITY ACT 2010

1. In paragraph 4 of my letter of 16 December 2013, I indicated that the Government was considering whether the amendments to the 2010 Act also need to cover cases where a denomination opts in to same sex marriage and civil partnerships, makes it clear that some of its celebrants will not take part and there is then a legal challenge against the denomination.

2. I now attach a further version of the draft amendments. In 1(4), the proposed sub-paragraph (9C) to be inserted into Schedule 23 to the 2010 Act is new. It is designed to protect the denomination against any legal challenge where the denomination opts in but makes it clear that some of its celebrants will not take part.

4. There are some other minor changes to 1(4):

- The proposed sub-paragraph (9B) has been slightly amended to refer to “on behalf of an organisation” rather than “for the purposes of an organisation”.
- Proposed sub-paragraph (9D) has been re-numbered and a definition of “approved celebrant” has been added.

5. I also attach revised Explanatory Notes. The changes here are:

- Paragraph 16 and the example after it are new and reflect the new proposed sub-paragraph (9C).
- The last sentence of paragraph 15 has been amended to reflect the change to sub-paragraph (9B).
- Paragraph 17 has been re-numbered and reflects that a definition of “approved celebrant” has been added.
6. I am happy to answer any questions arising.

Yours sincerely

SIMON STOCKWELL
Family and Property Law
PART I

MODIFICATIONS OF THE EQUALITY ACT 2010

1 Modifications of the Equality Act 2010

(1) The Equality Act 2010 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 110 (liability of employees and agents), after subsection (5B) insert—

“(5C) A does not contravene this section by refusing to solemnise a relevant Scottish marriage for the reason that the marriage is the marriage of two persons of the same sex.

(5D) A does not contravene this section by refusing to register a relevant Scottish civil partnership for the reason that the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

(5E) Subsections (5C) and (5D) apply only if A is an approved celebrant.

(5F) Expressions used in subsections (5C) to (5E) have the same meaning as in paragraph 25B of Schedule 3.”.

(3) In Schedule 3 (services and public functions: exceptions)—

(a) before paragraph 25 insert—

“PART 6ZA

MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP: SCOTLAND”,

(b) in paragraph 25, after sub-paragraph (2) insert—

“(3) An approved celebrant (A) does not contravene section 29, so far as relating to gender reassignment discrimination, only by refusing to register the civil partnership of a person (B) if A reasonably believes that B’s gender has become the acquired gender under the Gender Recognition Act 2004.

(4) In sub-paragraph (3) “approved celebrant” has the meaning given in section 94A(4)(a) of the Civil Partnership Act 2004.”, and

(c) after paragraph 25A insert—

“PART 6B

SAME SEX MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP: SCOTLAND

25B Same sex marriage and civil partnership: Scotland

(1) An approved celebrant does not contravene section 29 only by refusing to solemnise a relevant Scottish marriage for the reason that the marriage is the marriage of two persons of the same sex.

(2) An approved celebrant does not contravene section 29 only by refusing to register a relevant Scottish civil partnership for the reason that the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

(3) A person does not contravene section 29 only by refusing to participate in a religious or belief ceremony forming part of, or connected with, the solemnising of a relevant Scottish marriage for the reason that the marriage is the marriage of two persons of the same sex.
A person does not contravene section 29 only by refusing to participate in a religious or belief ceremony forming part of, or connected with, the registration of a relevant Scottish civil partnership for the reason that the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

In this paragraph—

“approved celebrant”—

(a) in relation to solemnising a marriage, has the meaning given in section 8(2)(a) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977,

(b) in relation to registering a civil partnership, has the meaning given in section 94A(4)(a) of the Civil Partnership Act 2004,

“relevant Scottish civil partnership” means a religious or belief civil partnership within the meaning of section 94A(4)(b) of the Civil Partnership Act 2004,

“relevant Scottish marriage” means a religious or belief marriage of two persons of the same sex within the meaning of section 8(2)(a) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977.”.

In Schedule 23 (general exceptions), in paragraph 2, after sub-paragraph (9) insert—

“(9A) An organisation does not contravene Part 3, 4 or 7 only by refusing to allow premises owned or controlled by the organisation to be used—

(a) to solemnise a relevant Scottish marriage for the reason that the marriage is the marriage of two persons of the same sex,

(b) to register a relevant Scottish civil partnership for the reason that the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

(9B) A person (or an association of persons) does not contravene Part 3, 4 or 7 only by refusing to allow premises owned or controlled by the person (or the association) on behalf of an organisation to be used—

(a) to solemnise a relevant Scottish marriage for the reason that the marriage is the marriage of two persons of the same sex,

(b) to register a relevant Scottish civil partnership for the reason that the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

(9C) An organisation does not contravene section 29 only by allowing an approved celebrant of the organisation to act as set out in sub-paragraph (1) or (2) of paragraph 25B of Schedule 3.

(9D) In sub-paragraphs (9A) to (9C), “approved celebrant”, “relevant Scottish marriage” and “relevant Scottish civil partnership” have the same meaning as in paragraph 25B of Schedule 3.”.
EXPLANATORY NOTES TO THE PROPOSED MODIFICATIONS TO THE EQUALITY ACT 2010 DESIGNED TO PROTECT RELIGIOUS AND BELIEF BODIES, CELEBRANTS AND OTHERS

Introduction

1. These Explanatory Notes have been prepared by the Scottish Government to assist the reader of the draft modifications to the Equality Act 2010 (“the 2010 Act”). These draft modifications are designed to protect religious and belief bodies, celebrants and others who do not wish to take part in the solemnisation of a religious or belief marriage or the registration of a religious or belief civil partnership on the ground that it is of a same sex couple.

2. As the proposed modifications are reserved, the intention is that amendments to the 2010 Act will be included in an Order under section 104 of the Scotland Act 1998 (“the 1998 Act”). Section 104 of the 1998 Act gives UK Ministers the power to make consequential changes following an Act of the Scottish Parliament. The draft Order will be laid before the UK Parliament at Westminster.

3. The attached draft amendments to the 2010 Act follow the publication of a detailed statement agreed between the UK and Scottish Government on the intended approach.

The modifications

4. Article 1(2) inserts new subsections (5C) to (5F) into section 110 of the 2010 Act.

5. Section 110(1) of the 2010 Act makes an employee, or an agent for a principal, personally liable for unlawful acts they commit in the course of their employment, or under the authority of a principal, for which their employer or principal could also be held liable.

6. New subsections (5C) and (5D) provide that an individual cannot be held personally liable under the 2010 Act for a refusal to solemnise a same sex marriage or register a civil partnership where the reason is that the marriage or civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

7. New subsection (5E) provides that this protection only applies to an “approved celebrant”. By virtue of new subsection (5F), the definition of “approved celebrant” in new paragraph 25B of Schedule 3 to the 2010 Act (new paragraph 25B forms part of these draft modifications) also applies to the amendments made to section 110 of the 2010 Act. The definition of “approved celebrant” covers religious and belief celebrants of marriages and of civil partnerships.

Example

A chaplain employed by a university is asked to solemnise the marriage of an employee of the university with a person of the same sex. Although his religious body has opted into marriage of same sex couples, he refuses because he does not wish to marry a same sex couple. This is lawful. The university makes alternative arrangements by finding an alternative chaplain to solemnise the marriage.

8. Article 1(3) adds provisions to Schedule 3 to the 2010 Act. Schedule 3 to the 2010 Act has a number of exceptions to the general requirements in the 2010 Act in relation to the provision of services and the exercise of public functions.

---

1 This statement is at http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Resource/0042/00426318.pdf
9. Paragraph 25 in Schedule 3 already has an exception in respect of an approved celebrant not having to solemnise a marriage if the celebrant reasonably believes one of the parties to the proposed marriage has acquired a gender under the Gender Recognition Act 2004. The new paragraph 25(3) extends this protection to celebrants who register religious or belief civil partnerships, following their introduction. The new paragraph 25(4) defines approved celebrants to mean religious and belief celebrants.

10. The new paragraph 25B(1) and (2) provide that an approved celebrant does not contravene section 29 of the 2010 Act by refusing to solemnise a marriage or register a civil partnership because it is of a same sex couple. “Approved celebrant” is defined in new paragraph 25B(5) so as to mean a religious or belief celebrant. This provision protects religious and belief celebrants who do not wish to solemnise same sex marriage or register a civil partnership, even though their religious or belief body has opted in.

Example

A religious body opts into the solemnisation of marriage of same sex couples but makes it clear that it respects the views of those within the body who do not wish to take part. One of the body’s ministers does not approve of same sex marriage and does not wish to solemnise such a marriage. This would be lawful. The religious body arranges for an alternative minister to conduct the marriage ceremony for the same sex couple.

11. The new paragraph 25B(3) and (4) provide that a person does not contravene section 29 only by refusing to participate in a religious or belief ceremony forming part of, or connected with, the solemnising of a marriage or the registration of a civil partnership because the ceremony is between two persons of the same sex. In this context, “religious or belief ceremony” refers to a religious or belief activity which forms part of the marriage solemnisation or the civil partnership registration.

Examples

An organist who usually plays hymns at wedding services at a church does not wish to play at a wedding service of a same sex couple. This would be lawful because he is carrying out a religious ceremony (i.e. activity) which forms part of the marriage service.

A commercial photographer is asked to photograph a wedding of a same sex couple. It would be unlawful sexual orientation discrimination for her to refuse because she does not approve of marriage of same sex couples. This is because she is not carrying out a religious or belief activity.

A volunteer flower arranger who usually decorates the place of worship for wedding services refuses to do so for a wedding of a same sex couple because she does not approve of such marriages. She is not carrying out a religious or belief activity but her refusal would nonetheless be lawful because she is not considered to be providing a service to the public or a section of the public, so it is not covered by the 2010 Act. If a commercial flower arranger asked by a same sex couple to decorate their wedding venue refused to do so because he does not approve of marriage of same sex couples, this would be unlawful sexual orientation discrimination. This is because he is not carrying out a religious or belief activity and the service he provides is to the public and so is covered by the 2010 Act.

14. Sub-paragraph (9A) provides that a religious or belief organisation does not contravene Part 3 (services and public functions), Part 4 (premises) and Part 7 (associations) of the 2010 Act by refusing to allow premises it owns or controls to be used for same sex marriages or the registration of civil partnerships because these are same sex relationships.

Example

A religious or belief body which has opted in to same sex marriage and the registration of civil partnership decides a particular building should not be used for the solemnisation of same sex marriage or the registration of civil partnership because the local congregation disagrees with same sex relationships. This would be lawful.

15. Sub-paragraph (9B) provides that a person or association of persons does not contravene Parts 3, 4 or Part 7 of the 2010 Act in certain circumstances. These circumstances are a refusal to allow premises, which the person or association owns or controls on behalf of a religious or belief organisation, to be used for same sex marriages or the registration of civil partnerships because these are same sex relationships.

Example

A local church committee decides that its building should not be used for the solemnisation of same sex marriage or the registration of civil partnership, even though its religious body has opted in, because it disagrees with same sex relationships. This would be lawful. It is for the religious body to make its own arrangements on who decides how local premises should, or should not, be used.

16. Sub-paragraph (9C) provides that a religious or belief organisation does not contravene section 29 by allowing an approved celebrant to refuse to solemnise a same sex marriage or register a civil partnership because the marriage or the civil partnership is between two persons of the same sex.

Example

A religious or belief body opts in to the solemnisation of same sex marriage and the registration of civil partnerships but makes it clear that its celebrants do not have to take part. This would be lawful.

17. Sub-paragraph (9D) provides definitions of “approved celebrant”, “relevant Scottish marriage” and “relevant Scottish civil partnership”. These relate, respectively, to a religious or belief celebrant, a religious or belief same sex marriage and a religious or belief civil partnership.

---

Scottish Government

February 2014

2. In its report the Committee invited the Scottish Government to respond in relation to two related matters.

3. The first relates to the power at paragraph 6 of schedule 2 to the Bill which inserts section 5D into the Gender Recognition Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”). Insofar as that power was concerned the Committee asked the Scottish Government to explain why it has chosen not to implement the Committee’s stage 1 recommendation that the Bill should be amended to require a consultation draft to be laid before the Parliament.

4. The second matter concerns new section 3C(5)(b)(ii) of the 2004 as inserted by schedule 2, paragraph 11C of this Act. The Committee noted similar concerns to those raised at stage 1 in relation to inserted section 5D of the 2004 Act. As such, in its report, the Committee asked the Scottish Government to explain why it is considered appropriate that the Bill does not require draft orders made under new section 3C(5)(b)(ii) of the 2004 Act to be laid before the Parliament at the point at which they are consulted on.

5. The response from the Scottish Government to these two related matters is attached at the Annex.

6. Members are invited to note the Scottish Government’s response and to make any comments they wish.
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2

Schedule 2 (Paragraph 6): orders made under section 5D of the Gender Recognition Act 2004

1. The Committee asked the Scottish Government, in paragraph 13 of the report on the Bill as amended at Stage 2, why the Government has chosen not to implement the Committee’s recommendation that the Bill should be amended to require a consultation draft of the Order to be laid before the Parliament.

2. The Government considered the points made on section 5D of the Gender Recognition Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”) in paragraphs 37 to 48 of the report by the Committee on the Bill as introduced. As indicated in the Government response to this report, the Government agreed with the Committee that the power is significant and lodged amendments at Stage 2 so that all orders made under the new section 5D are subject to the affirmative procedure.

3. The Government also outlined its view on consultation in its response to this report. As indicated in its response, the Government lodged an amendment at Stage 2 so that before making an Order the Scottish Ministers would have to consult the Gender Recognition Panel (in addition to the requirement to consult the Registrar General) and such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate. This latter group will include bodies representing people seeking gender recognition and would also include bodies representing family lawyers.

4. The consultation will be on a draft of the proposed Order.

5. The Government considers this to be a robust and transparent consultation process. It will involve bodies supporting transgender people; legal practitioners; the Registrar General and the Gender Recognition Panel, which determines applications for gender recognition. Consulting in this way acknowledges the recommendation made by the Committee on consultation.

6. The Government considers that this process is preferable to the Committee’s recommendation that there be a requirement for consultation on a draft laid before the Parliament. The Government considers the approach now contained in the Bill ensures that key parties will be closely involved in the process whilst still recognising Parliament’s scrutiny role by ensuring that all orders made under section 5D of the 2004 Act are subject to the affirmative procedure. The Government is of the view that this strikes the right balance in relation to both consultation and Parliamentary scrutiny.

7. This approach also provides clarity on the process involved.

8. The Government will keep the Parliament closely informed on progress with implementing the Bill, if it is passed at Stage 3 and receives Royal Assent, including in relation to orders under section 5D.
Schedule 2 (Paragraph 11C): orders under section 3C(5)(b)(ii) of the 2004 Act

9. The Committee asked the Scottish Government, in paragraph 19 of the report on the Bill as amended at Stage 2, why it is considered appropriate that the Bill does not require draft orders made under section 3C(5)(b)(ii) of the 2004 Act to be laid before the Parliament at the point on which they are consulted on.

10. Following the comments made by the Committee on the powers at section 5D of the 2004 Act, the Government recognised, when lodging the amendments at Stage 2 to add new section 3C(5)(b)(ii), that a power of this nature was significant and should be subject to the affirmative procedure.

11. The Government also recognised that the consultation process needed to be robust. Therefore, the Bill provides that before making an Order under section 3C(5)(b)(ii) the Scottish Ministers must consult the Gender Recognition Panel and such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate on a copy of the proposed draft Order. The latter group of consultees will include bodies representing people seeking gender recognition.

12. Again the Government considers this to be a robust and transparent consultation process. As a result, the Government does not consider it necessary for draft orders to be laid before the Parliament at the point on which they are consulted on. The approach taken in the Bill means that key parties will be closely involved in the process whilst still recognising Parliament’s scrutiny role by ensuring that all orders made under section 3C(5)(b)(ii) of the 2004 Act are subject to the affirmative procedure. The Government is of the view that this strikes the right balance in relation to both consultation and Parliamentary scrutiny.

Family and Property Law
Scottish Government
January 2014
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Scottish Government’s response to its Stage 2 Report.
11:37

The Convener: We come to agenda item 6. As members will recall, the committee agreed its report on the bill as amended at stage 2 at last week’s meeting. In its report, the committee invited the Scottish Government to respond in relation to two matters relating to the laying of draft orders for consultation before the Parliament. Members have seen the response from the Scottish Government. Do members have any comments?

John Scott: I am content with the Government’s explanation.

The Convener: Does the committee agree to note the Scottish Government’s response?

Members indicated agreement.
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

Marshalled List of Amendments selected for Stage 3

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

Sections 1 to 33  Schedules 1 and 2
Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 10

John Mason

25  In section 10, page 10, line 19, at end insert—

< ( ) For the avoidance of doubt—

(a) no religious or belief body may be compelled by any means (including by the enforcement of a contract or a statutory or other legal requirement) to—

(i) make a request referred to in subsection (1C)(a);

(ii) nominate under section 9 any of its members to be registered as empowered to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex;

(b) no person may be compelled by any means (including by the enforcement of a contract or a statutory or other legal requirement) to apply for temporary authorisation under section 12 to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex.>

After section 14

John Mason

26  After section 14, insert—

<Protecting expression of belief in marriage between persons of different sex

For the avoidance of doubt, a belief in marriage as a voluntary union between one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others for life is a belief worthy of respect in a democratic society.>

Siobhan McMahon

3  After section 14, insert—

<Protection of freedom of expression: public authority functions

(1) For the avoidance of doubt, a public authority must not—

(a) withhold a service or the use of a facility from a person,
(b) terminate the provision of a service to, or the use of a facility by, a person,
(c) alter the terms on which a service is provided, or a facility is used, to the
detriment of the person,

where the reason for taking the action mentioned in paragraph (a), (b) or (c) is that the person holds the belief mentioned in subsection (2).

(2) The belief is that marriage may only be between one man and one woman.
(3) For the purposes of subsection (1), a public authority is a body listed in schedule 1 to the

Richard Lyle

1 After section 14, insert—

<Protection of freedom of expression: adoption and fostering

(1) For the avoidance of doubt, the views of a relevant person on whether marriage may be between persons of the same sex may not be considered—

(a) by an adoption agency when considering whether to approve a person as an adopter under or by virtue of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007,
(b) by a court in coming to a decision relating to the adoption of a child under or by virtue of the Adoption and Children (Scotland) Act 2007,
(c) by a local authority when considering whether to approve a person as a foster
carer under the Looked After Children (Scotland) Regulations 2009.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1) a “relevant person”—

(a) under paragraph (a) and (b) is a prospective adopter,
(b) under paragraph (c) is a prospective foster carer.>

Richard Lyle

2 After section 14, insert—

<Same sex marriage: protection of charitable status

In section 8 of the Charities and Trustee Investment (Scotland) Act 2005 (public benefit), after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) For the avoidance of doubt, a disbenefit is not incurred or likely to be incurred by the public in consequence of a body holding a belief as mentioned in subsection (2B).

(2B) The belief is that marriage may only be between one man and one woman.”>

After section 21

John Mason

27 After section 21, insert—
<CHAPTER

REVIEW OF SAME SEX MARRIAGE

Review of effect of same sex marriage

(1) The Scottish Ministers must, before the end of the 5 year period, review—
   (a) the effects of the introduction of marriage of persons of the same sex (“same sex marriage”),
   (b) the operation of the provisions on same sex marriage in this Act,
and lay before the Scottish Parliament a report of the review.

(2) The review must, in particular, consider—
   (a) the operation and effect of section 8(1D) of the 1977 Act (inserted by section
       10(2)(b) of this Act),
   (b) the operation and effect of section 14 of this Act,
   (c) any court proceedings relating to the effect of the introduction of same sex marriage.

(3) In carrying out a review under this section, the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after the report has been laid before the Parliament, publish the report in such manner as they consider appropriate.

(5) In this section—
    “court proceedings” includes proceedings of—
    (a) an employment tribunal within the meaning of section 1 of the Employment
        Tribunal Act 1996,
    (b) an Employment Appeal Tribunal within the meaning of section 20 of the Employment Tribunal Act 1996,
    (c) the European Court of Human Rights,
    (d) the European Court of Justice,
    “the 5 year period” means the period of 5 years beginning with the day on which any provision relating to same sex marriage comes into force.>

After section 25

Patrick Harvie

28 After section 25, insert—

<Review of civil partnership

(1) The Scottish Ministers must, no later than 9 months after the day of Royal Assent, lay before the Parliament a report setting out the options under consideration for the future of civil partnerships in Scotland.

(2) The options set out in the report under subsection (1) must include the option of enabling two people of different sexes to enter into civil partnership with each other.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must, in preparing the report under subsection (1), consult such persons as they consider appropriate.>

3
Section 28A

Alex Neil
4 In section 28A, page 32, line 12, leave out <The> and insert <Section 1 of the>

Alex Neil
5 In section 28A, page 32, line 12, after <1976> insert <(grounds of divorce)>

Alex Neil
6 In section 28A, page 32, line 18, at end insert <, but

( ) continues to apply despite a full gender recognition certificate being issued to that person by the sheriff under section 4E of that Act.”>

Section 32

Patrick Harvie
29 In section 32, page 33, line 13, at beginning insert <Section (Review of civil partnership),>

John Mason
30 In section 32, page 33, line 15, at end insert—

<(2A) The day appointed for the provisions for the marriage of persons of the same sex to come into force must be a day after the day when amendments to the Equality Act 2010 to give effect to the amendments mentioned in subsection (2B) have been or are being brought into force.

(2B) The amendments are—

(a) in section 10 (religion or belief), after subsection (3), insert—

“(3A) For the avoidance of doubt, the protected characteristic of religion or belief may include a belief that marriage may only be between a man and a woman.”,

(b) in section 149 (public sector equality duty), after subsection (9), insert—

“(9A) Compliance with the duties in this section requires ensuring that a belief that marriage may only be between a man and a woman is respected and that no person may suffer any detriment as a result of holding or expressing such a belief.”.>

Schedule 2

Alex Neil
7 In schedule 2, page 39, line 13, after <4C,> insert <4E,>

Alex Neil
8 In schedule 2, page 39, line 13, after <4C,> insert <4F,>
In schedule 2, page 43, line 16, at end insert ‘<, and

( ) the person is not in possession of a statutory declaration by the person’s spouse that the spouse consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate.’

In schedule 2, page 43, line 28, at end insert—

‘<( ) Where the sheriff issues a full gender recognition certificate, the sheriff must send a copy to the Gender Recognition Panel.’

In schedule 2, page 43, leave out lines 29 to 32

In schedule 2, page 43, line 32, at end insert—

‘4F Death of civil partner or spouse: issue of full certificate (Scotland)

(1) A Gender Recognition Panel must issue a full gender recognition certificate to a person in either of the following cases.

(2) Case A is where, on an application by the person, the Panel is satisfied that—

(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person,

(b) the person was a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,

(c) the protected civil partnership was a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977) and the parties to the civil partnership submitted notice of intention to marry under section 3(1) of that Act within the period of six months beginning with the day on which that certificate was issued, and

(d) the person’s civil partner died—

(i) before the submitting of notice had resulted in the civil partnership becoming a marriage, and

(ii) after the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.

(3) Case B is where, on an application by the person, the Panel is satisfied that—

(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person,

(b) the person was a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,

(c) the protected civil partnership was a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977) and the parties to the civil partnership submitted notice of intention to marry
under section 3(1) of that Act within the period of six months beginning with the day on which that certificate was issued,’
(d) the submitting of notice resulted in the civil partnership becoming a marriage, and

(e) the person’s spouse died—
   (i) within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the civil partnership became a marriage, and
   (ii) after the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.

(4) If, on an application under subsection (2) or (3), the Panel is not satisfied—
   (a) as mentioned in that subsection, or
   (b) that the person is neither married nor a civil partner,
the Panel must reject the application.

(5) An application under subsection (2) or (3) must be made within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the death occurs.

(6) An application under subsection (2) or (3) must include evidence of—
   (a) the death of the person’s civil partner or, as the case may be, spouse and the date on which it occurred,
   (b) the date on which the notice under section 3(1) of the 1977 Act was submitted.

Alex Neil
13 In schedule 2, page 43, line 32, at end insert—

<Issue of full gender recognition certificate after interim certificate: grounds of divorce

In section 5 (issue of full certificates where applicant has been married), after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) Subsection (1) does not apply where a full gender recognition certificate has already been issued, to the party to whom the interim gender recognition certificate was issued, by the sheriff under section 4E.”.

Alex Neil
14 In schedule 2, page 44, line 33, after <4C,> insert <4F,>

Alex Neil
15 In schedule 2, page 44, line 34, after <4C,> insert <4E,>

Alex Neil
16 In schedule 2, page 44, line 34, after <4C,> insert <4F,>

Alex Neil
17 In schedule 2, page 44, line 36, after <4C,> insert <4E,>
Alex Neil

18 In schedule 2, page 44, line 36, after <4C,> insert <4F,>

Alex Neil

19 In schedule 2, page 45, line 6, after <Panel> insert <or the sheriff>

Alex Neil

20 In schedule 2, page 45, line 10, after <4C,> insert <4E,>

Alex Neil

21 In schedule 2, page 45, line 10, after <4C,> insert <4F,>

Alex Neil

22 In schedule 2, page 45, leave out lines 20 to 23

Alex Neil

23 In schedule 2, page 48, line 35, after <4C,> insert <4F,>

Alex Neil

24 In schedule 2, page 48, line 36, after <4C,> insert <4F,>
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

Groupings of Amendments for Stage 3

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- the text of amendments to be debated during Stage 3 proceedings, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Note: The time limits indicated are those set out in the timetabling motion to be considered by the Parliament before the Stage 3 proceedings begin. If that motion is agreed to, debate on the groups above each line must be concluded by the time indicated, although the amendments in those groups may still be moved formally and disposed of later in the proceedings.

Group 1: No power to compel religious or belief bodies to carry out same sex marriages
25

Group 2: Protection of freedom of expression etc.
26, 3, 1, 2, 30

Debate to end no later than 50 minutes after proceedings begin

Group 3: Review of same sex marriage
27

Group 4: Review of civil partnership
28, 29

Debate to end no later than 1 hour 15 minutes after proceedings begin

Group 5: Processes for, and consequences of, applications to sheriff for issue of full gender recognition certificate
4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, 15, 17, 19, 20, 22
Group 6: Issue of full gender recognition certificate following death of civil partner or spouse
8, 31, 14, 16, 18, 21, 23, 24

Debate to end no later than 1 hour 30 minutes after proceedings begin
EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Vol. 3, No. 75 Session 4

Meeting of the Parliament

Tuesday 4 February 2014

Note: (DT) signifies a decision taken at Decision Time.

Business Motion: Joe FitzPatrick, on behalf of the Parliamentary Bureau, moved S4M-08938—that the Parliament agrees that, during stage 3 of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill, debate on groups of amendments shall, subject to Rule 9.8.4A, be brought to a conclusion by the time limit indicated, that time limit being calculated from when the stage begins and excluding any periods when other business is under consideration or when a meeting of the Parliament is suspended (other than a suspension following the first division in the stage being called) or otherwise not in progress:

- Groups 1 and 2: 50 minutes
- Groups 3 and 4: 1 hour 15 minutes
- Groups 5 and 6: 1 hour 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill - Stage 3: The Bill was considered at Stage 3.

The following amendments were agreed to (without division): 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 31, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24.

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division)—

- 25 (For 21, Against 96, Abstentions 3)
- 26 (For 19, Against 95, Abstentions 7)
- 3 (For 21, Against 98, Abstentions 2)
- 1 (For 20, Against 98, Abstentions 3)
- 2 (For 27, Against 92, Abstentions 2)
- 27 (For 19, Against 100, Abstentions 1)
- 30 (For 14, Against 100, Abstentions 1)

Amendment 28 was moved and, with the agreement of the Parliament, withdrawn.

Amendment 29 was not moved.

The Deputy Presiding Officer extended the first time-limit under Rule 9.8.4A(c).

The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing (Alex Neil) moved a motion without notice under Rule 9.8.5A to move the second time limit by up to 30 minutes. The motion was agreed to. As a consequence, the third time limit was also moved by 30 minutes.

The Deputy Presiding Officer further extended the second time limit under Rule 9.8.4A(c).

The Presiding Officer altered the time of Decision Time by 30 minutes in consequence of the motion under Rule 9.8.5A being agreed to and notified members accordingly.

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing (Alex Neil) moved S4M-08915—That the Parliament agrees that the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill be passed.

After debate, the motion was agreed to ((DT) by division: For 105, Against 18, Abstentions 0).
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: Stage 3

14:11

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): Before we move to the next item of business, I extend a welcome to the members of the public who are in the public gallery. However, I say to them that this is a meeting of the Parliament in public, not a public meeting, and I would appreciate it very much if they did not participate in the debate by applauding or making other interventions.

The next item of business is stage 3 proceedings on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. In dealing with the amendments, members should have the bill as amended at stage 2, the marshalled list of amendments and the groupings of amendments.

The division bell will sound and proceedings will be suspended for five minutes for the first division of the afternoon. The period of voting for the first division will be 30 seconds; thereafter, I will allow a voting period of one minute for the first division after a debate. Members who wish to speak in the debate, on any group of amendments, should press their request-to-speak buttons as soon as possible after the group is called.

Members should now refer to the marshalled list of amendments.

Section 10—Persons who may solemnise marriage

The Presiding Officer: Amendment 25, in the name of John Mason, is in a group on its own.

John Mason (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP): I emphasise that amendment 25 and other amendments that I have lodged are intended to strengthen the protections for those who disagree—who, frankly, will continue to disagree—with same-sex marriage. Other members may speak against the bill in principle, but that is not my intention, whatever my personal beliefs.

The words “strengthening” and “protection” can seem a bit subjective, but that is where we are. We are not at zero per cent protection, nor are we or can we be at 100 per cent. We are all trying to anticipate what the courts may or may not decide in the years ahead. I accept that the Government has made attempts to build in safeguards on what is a very controversial issue, but I would argue that we could make some improvements.

In other legislation, we have seen a degree of accommodation by the Government, which has been very welcome—for example, in the Freedom of Information (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2013 and in the current budget bill. Surely, some flexibility today would show that Parliament is listening to the public. Some of my amendments—for example, amendments 26 and 27—might gain greater support than others, but for now we are looking at amendment 25.

Amendment 25 is based on an amendment that was accepted by the United Kingdom Government during the passage of the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013. Section 10 of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill proposes a new section 8(1D) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977, which refers to no duty being imposed by specific proposed new subsections of the 1977 act. By contrast, the Westminster protection is broader, referring to no person being “compelled by any means”—that is the key phrase—“including by the enforcement of a contract or a statutory or other legal requirement”.

The aim of amendment 25 is not to remove the “no duty imposed” terminology but to bolster it by putting in the additional protection of a person not “compelled by any means”. That is to give protection for the religious liberty and rights of conscience of those groups and individuals who do not wish to participate in same-sex marriages.

The “by any means” terminology should cover, for example, the hire of public premises being made conditional on a religious body being a prescribed body that is able to conduct same-sex marriages. That is not currently covered by the limited “no duty imposed” terminology. The amendment would help to prevent a scenario from occurring in which, for example, a religious organisation is refused hire of public buildings because it is not registered for same-sex marriages.

Given that a similar amendment was accepted at Westminster, I would argue that we could learn from that example and that amendment 25 could similarly be accepted by the Scottish Parliament and the Government today.

I move amendment 25.

14:15

Marco Biagi (Edinburgh Central) (SNP): One of the key concerns when the bill was discussed at the Equal Opportunities Committee was the nature of the opt-in requirement and the question whether there could be any kind of challenge.

When Aidan O’Neill and other legal experts came before the committee, my first question was whether there could be any means, under human rights or other law, whereby a church could be forced to perform a same-sex marriage, as amendment 25 tries to stave off. It is worth going through the response that I got directly, as it shows the difference between Scotland and England. It was:

“It could be argued that, at a certain level, the Church of England is a public authority when it carries out marriage functions because of its duty in law to marry anyone ... In Scotland, there is a different relationship between church and state. The Church of Scotland is not and has never been a department of the state”.

I then asked:

“Would article 9 of the European convention on human rights offer strong protection to a church against such a challenge?”

Aidan O’Neill said:

“Yes.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 19 September 2013; c 1494.]

The opinion that came before the Equal Opportunities Committee from the person who is most closely associated with the campaign against equal marriage was that no further protection is necessary.

I add that the issue throws up some serious questions about parliamentary competence. We are not, in this Parliament, able to change or amend any duty that the European convention on human rights would put on us. As a layman, I would suggest that the wording “may be compelled by any means” could be taken to refer to an attempt to pass something in employment law or in other reserved areas. As members throughout the chamber know, should an amendment that creates an interference with reserved areas pass at this stage, it would cause the entire bill to fall. I hope that members will reject the amendment.

Jackie Baillie (Dumbarton) (Lab): It would be helpful if the cabinet secretary could, when winding up, offer clarification on John Mason’s amendment 25 so that members, in exercising their vote, are aware of all the facts. I understand that the amendment seeks to ensure that there are no circumstances in which any religious or belief body can be compelled to carry out a same-sex marriage.

I understand—and as has been referred to—that a similar amendment was made at Westminster to the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Bill, which became the 2013 act. Can the cabinet secretary confirm whether that is the case, and whether there is a difference between what was passed at Westminster and the bill? Can he confirm whether the point raised by my colleague Marco Biagi is indeed correct about the reservation?

I understand that the view of the Equality Network is that the amendment is “unnecessary” and that:

“Section 10(2) of the bill already states ... that there is no duty imposed by the bill on religious or belief bodies to request to be prescribed to conduct same-sex marriages, or to nominate any of their celebrants for registration to conduct same-sex marriages.”

That provision goes on to offer the same protection to individual celebrants, too.

It would be helpful to the entire Parliament if the cabinet secretary could advise us whether John Mason’s amendment is necessary and on what discussions he has had, if any, with our colleagues at Westminster, given the fact that similar changes were apparently accepted in the UK Parliament.

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): As Jackie Baillie says, the Equality Network has described amendment 25 as “unnecessary”. I would guess that the Government will take the same view, given the existing protections in the bill.

In speaking against the amendment, I think that it is worth recalling quite how strong those existing protections are. John Mason used the phrase “religious liberty”. There is at present no religious liberty on the question of same-sex marriage. Those religious bodies and officiants who wish to welcome same-sex couples on equal terms are forbidden from doing so by the secular law—this Parliament’s law. If we want religious liberty to exist on this question, liberty has to be the freedom to say yes as well as the freedom to say no—or it is not freedom at all.

At the moment, the bill actually goes further towards the constituency that John Mason seeks to represent than pure religious liberty. If we were simply concerned with religious freedom, we would say that religious officiants are neither forbidden nor compelled to conduct same-sex marriages. In fact, what the law says is that religious bodies may forbid their officiants from conducting same-sex marriages but that they may not compel.

Under the bill as it stands, religious bodies as well as individual officiants will have their freedom protected. It is worth reflecting on quite how far John Mason seeks to go away from the principle of religious freedom.

Bob Doris (Glasgow) (SNP): I have a brief comment that I hope the cabinet secretary will deal with in his summing up.

The argument seems to have been fairly well made that amendment 25 may not be necessary. I am sure that the cabinet secretary will say something about that in his summing up. However, I ask the cabinet secretary, in terms of building the largest possible consensus in relation to the bill, whether there would be any unintended consequences if amendment 25 was passed. In other words, would there be detriment to the bill if amendment 25 was passed? I seek clarification on that from the cabinet secretary in his summing up.

Chic Brodie (South Scotland) (SNP): I understand and accept the principles of the bill, but the overriding interest on my part is to protect the rights of individuals while wishing to extinguish the rancour that has characterised some of the debate prior to today. I believe that amendment 25 will help.

I raised with the cabinet secretary the issue of article 9 of the European convention on human rights, which provides for “the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion”, and the “Freedom to manifest one’s religion or beliefs ... subject ... to such limitations”, which include among several others “the rights and freedom of others.”

Some of those people may be involved in religious organisations. That provision is compounded by the Equality Act 2010, which prohibited discrimination because of religion or belief in connection with employment, vocational training or education.

We do not need another act of toleration, and we have gone way beyond that; but neither do we need another case like the Ladele and McFarlane cases, which were on civil partnerships, ending up in the European courts, which so far have ruled that employers or organisations can legitimately limit the freedom of employees to manifest their religions or faith to prevent discrimination to other groups. Sometimes the law can be an ass.

There is no unilateralism in the bill to protect the freedom of all individuals to live and believe as they wish. That circle must be squared in the bill. I think that amendment 25 deserves consideration.

The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing (Alex Neil): I do not support amendment 25. I will try to deal with the points that have been raised by the various speakers.

Everybody, including the Scottish Government, has recognised throughout that many churches and celebrants will have concerns about same-sex marriage. Our consultations on the bill and the planned amendments to the Equality Act 2010 reflect that.

I do not consider that there is a need to borrow terminology from the 2010 United Kingdom act. I will give a brief synopsis of the protections for Scottish religious and belief bodies and celebrants as a result of the legislation that we introduced and the related amendments to the Equality Act 2010.

The bill will establish an opt-in system for bodies that wish to take part. There is provision at section 10 that makes it clear that the bill does not impose a duty to opt in and does not impose a duty on a person to apply for temporary authorisation. We have also agreed amendments to the Equality Act 2010 with the UK Government to protect individual celebrants from actions of discrimination. I believe that the approach that we have taken was supported by the evidence given to the Equal Opportunities Committee.

Amendment 25 could actually cause confusion. In particular, it is not clear what is meant in the amendment by “the enforcement of a contract or a statutory or other legal requirement”.

Including those words in marriage legislation might suggest that there is a statutory role for religious and belief bodies in marriage ceremonies beyond their role under the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977.

During the debate on an equivalent amendment at stage 2, John Mason mentioned a specific example, as he has done today, of a local authority that would not hire out premises to a church because that church did not toe the line on same-sex marriage. We covered that specific issue in the Government consultation on the draft bill before it was introduced to Parliament.

Paragraphs 62 to 65 of annex A to the consultation noted that a local authority that refuses to let premises to a body on the basis of the body’s religious beliefs risks a successful claim for discrimination. I know that John Mason often raises concerns about the public sector equality duty. Our consultation on the bill went on to note that that duty does not mean that public bodies can discriminate when the Equality Act 2010 says that that is unlawful.

In conclusion, I invite the Parliament to reject amendment 25 for three reasons. First, we specifically addressed in our consultation the point that John Mason raised at stage 2 on churches hiring premises. Secondly, to import terminology from UK legislation into the bill could cause utter confusion. Thirdly, there are robust protections for religious bodies and celebrants in the bill and in the planned amendments to the Equality Act 2010. I therefore consider that amendment 25 is unnecessary and that it should be rejected.

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): I call on John Mason to wind up and press or withdraw his amendment.

John Mason: I will comment on a few of the speeches that have been made.
Marco Biagi talked about human rights law, but that is not really the concern here. The concern is that a zealous local authority that is very committed to the public sector equality duty will refuse to let a hall or whatever to a religious group that has not signed up to same-sex marriage. It is all very well to say, as the cabinet secretary did, that there is a risk that the local authority could be defeated in the courts, but the reality is that a small charity or a small church cannot possibly afford to go to the courts. Given the cost, it is just not possible for many groups to get such clarification. That is why I argue that what I propose needs to be in the bill.

Jackie Baillie used a useful word that I think will come up again this afternoon when she said that the amendment is “unnecessary”, and the cabinet secretary said that there is no “need” for it. However, that is not really my argument. The argument is not that we have 100 per cent safeguards here or that we do not know. We want that we are in a grey area. The question is whether we can make things a little bit clearer through amendment 25 and others. That is why I am arguing for what I propose.

Patrick Harvie mentioned religious freedom. I am happy to accept that there is not complete religious freedom at the moment, but some of the danger around the bill is that, overall, religious freedom will be reduced.

I end by saying that, if the Parliament accepts none of my amendments this afternoon, we will send out a signal that we have not been listening. I think that we should at least accept one or two of them. I press amendment 25.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 25 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division. As it is the first vote of the afternoon, there will be a five-minute suspension.

14:27

Meeting suspended.

14:33

On resuming—

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We move to the division on amendment 25.

For

Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Fraser, Murdo (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Graham, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Alderdice, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baker, Richard (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Ailean (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Campbell, Roderick (North East Fife) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Fitpatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
The division is: For 21, Against 96, Abstentions 3.

Marriage can be only between a man and a woman. That has been the prevailing view in Scotland for centuries. It may now be considered to be a minority or even old-fashioned view, but it is an integral tenet of faith for many Christians, Muslims and others, as well as the belief of many with no faith position at all.

The bill’s policy memorandum states:

“Many people and organisations hold the view that marriage can only ever be between a man and a woman. The Government has made clear its respect for this view”.

Similarly, during our oral evidence sessions, the director of Stonewall Scotland, Colin Macfarlane, told the Equal Opportunities Committee that not believing in same-sex marriage does not make an individual homophobic

"in any way, shape or form.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 5 September 2013; c 1397.]

However, a distinct lack of respect for people who express that view has already come to light—and that is before the law has changed. For example, we have seen volunteers in the third sector removed from the board for publicly supporting traditional marriage and our colleague Elaine Smith vilified for expressing her opposition to same-sex marriage.

John Finnie (Highlands and Islands) (Ind):

Does the member accept that intemperate language has been used on both sides of the debate? Does he condemn its use on both sides, as I do?

John Mason: Yes, I completely accept that intemperate language has been used. If I believe everything that is said on Facebook, thousands of people will be campaigning against me at the next election.

At stage 2, some members asked why only the current definition of marriage was being singled out as worthy of respect in the amendment. The answer, of course, is that, if the law is changed, the new definition of marriage will automatically be afforded full protection and respect by the law. Amendment 26 is necessary to ensure that what may become the old definition of marriage, to which many in Scotland will continue to adhere, is likewise protected and respected. Should the new definition of marriage be agreed by Parliament, it is important that individuals and organisations that do not agree with the new definition feel free to express their opinions without fear. By agreeing to the amendment, Parliament would send a strong signal that intolerance of those who continue to believe in the current definition of marriage will not be tolerated.

I understand that the language that is used in amendment 26 is a key test that is used by the European Court of Human Rights. Surely showing tolerance of and respect for those whose views... may differ from the state’s position is the hallmark of any democratic society. I therefore urge MSPs across the chamber, whatever their view is on the bill, to support amendment 26.

I turn to my amendment 30. It has been accepted that the need to amend the Equality Act 2010 is part of the process. I know that the Scottish Government has been working with the UK Government to prepare amendments to that act that relate to religious bodies, celebrants and others who do not wish to take part in the solemnisation of same-sex marriages.

However, concerns about the Equality Act 2010 go beyond the issue of celebrants and what happens inside religious buildings. The further issue relates to ordinary people, specifically those who work in the public sector. The Equality Act 2010 is intended to protect such people against discrimination on the ground of religion or belief, but it has tended not to do so. That protected characteristic has rather been relegated below others. Therefore, I would like to see additional amendments to the 2010 act that would specify that the protected characteristic of religion or belief includes the belief in marriage as currently defined.

That would not guarantee success in the courts, but it would confirm that belief is capable of being protected by the 2010 act and would make it clear that compliance with the public sector equality duty in section 149 of that act requires ensuring that no one should suffer any detriment as a result of holding or expressing the view that marriage is between a man and a woman. Nobody who works in or seeks a career in the public sector in Scotland should have their equality and diversity credentials or their suitability for employment disputed merely because they hold to the existing view of marriage, whether expressed or not.

At stage 2, Alex Neil said:

“I understand the concerns that religious bodies have expressed. As well as making it clear that people who oppose same-sex marriage should not be denied public services or the use of public facilities, we have made it clear that religious bodies that oppose same-sex marriage will continue to be eligible for grants and public services. As I have said, any public services that are provided through public money must in principle be available to all.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 19 December 2013; c 1730.]

I therefore urge Alex Neil to do exactly what he said at stage 2 and support my amendment.

Richard Lyle (Central Scotland) (SNP): As an adoptive parent myself, I appeal to the cabinet secretary and to every member in the chamber, whatever their view is of the bill, to understand why I feel that it is incumbent upon me to return with amendment 1 at stage 3. I do so because this is a matter of the utmost importance. People have to experience adopting a child to know what couples go through. Social workers—quite rightly—ask many questions and my wife and I went through the process and eventually got a baby 32 years ago.

I am glad that the cabinet secretary is on the record as saying:

“It would not be appropriate for prospective and current foster carers who oppose same sex marriage to have their suitability to foster children questioned just because of opposition to same sex marriage.”

I do not doubt his sincerity for one minute. He went on to say that

“opposition to same sex marriage is not by itself sufficient to make a person unsuitable to provide foster care.”—
I think that it is the phrase “by itself” that may trouble potential carers. It would be a genuine tragedy for everybody involved—especially the children—if prospective foster carers or adopters were turned down because their views on same-sex marriage led the authorities to question their suitability for the role. What is more likely, yet no less tragic, is that applicants with so-called traditional views on marriage will be put off applying in the first place, fearing that they will be branded homophobic.

It is worth emphasising that amendment 1 gives no special protection to people who disagree with same-sex marriage. Rather, it means that no views on the subject, whether for or against, should be factors in the approval process. My amendment would therefore provide equal protection for a couple who were passionately in favour of same-sex marriage and who found themselves in difficulty. That is why the bill should state that views on same-sex marriage cannot be taken into consideration during the approval process for prospective foster carers or adoptive parents. I therefore earnestly urge colleagues to lend me their support this afternoon.

Amendment 2 aims to ensure that an organisation’s charitable status is protected if it believes in the present definition of marriage. As every member knows, Scottish civic society is teeming with charitable organisations, many of them religious, which are engaged in all sorts of social activities in their communities such as food banks, homelessness services or debt advice.

It is also the case that many of those charities, due to their ethos, would not be supportive of same-sex marriage. That certainly does not mean that same-sex couples would be discriminated against with regard to the services that are provided by such bodies—to suggest otherwise is quite wrong and would be a terrible insult to those organisations. On the contrary, the issue at stake is that the Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator may seek to use a charity’s opposition to same-sex marriage as a means of challenging its public benefit. The loss of charitable status could easily lead to such an organisation’s closure, which would have a hugely detrimental impact upon the vulnerable people who rely on the services that it provides.

Despite previous ministerial assurances regarding the future of the Catholic adoption agencies, OSCR has sought to remove charitable status from St Margaret’s Children and Family Care Society because St Margaret’s gives preference to married couples. I hope that all members have read the extremely thoughtful letter that was sent to us by the Rev Thomas White, the executive chair of St Margaret’s, which expands on the issue. The fact that OSCR’s decision has been overturned on appeal in the past few days is extremely good news, but it does not mask the fact that OSCR wished to remove St Margaret’s charitable status and that a lengthy period of uncertainty, disruption and distress has engulfed that small society. St Margaret’s had to use the law to protect itself, but a less well-resourced charity might feel that the costs would deter such action.

The appeal decision is welcome, but the entire sorry episode serves to underline why amendment 2 is so important. It would simply ensure that OSCR could not consider an organisation’s position on same-sex marriage when assessing its charitable status. I therefore urge the Government and all members to put the matter beyond doubt and to back amendment 2, which would send out a powerful message to the many voluntary bodies that are currently hard at work in our communities and which might be worried about the bill’s unforeseen impact.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Several members wish to speak, so I urge them to be as relatively brief as they can in making their point.

Marco Biagi: Above all with the bill, which will shortly become law, I want it to be even handed. I want the same protections and provisions to apply to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people and to those who are not LGBT, including those who oppose the bill. Whenever the Equality Act 2010 is mentioned in the Equal Opportunities Committee, my colleague John Mason mentions the prospect of a hierarchy of rights. However, it seems to me that the amendments in the group try to create a hierarchy of rights by creating special protections.

Those protections are unnecessary. Section 14 states:

“nothing in this Part so far as it makes provision for the marriage of persons of the same sex and as to the persons who may solemnise such marriages affects the exercise of—

(a) the Convention right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion,

(b) the Convention right to freedom of expression”.

Those two strong protections run right through the bill and apply equally to those on both sides of the debate. Moreover, the suggested amendments to the Equality Act 2010 in amendment 30 have already been rejected by the United Kingdom Government and would therefore cause the bill never to come into force.
The argument behind amendment 26 is that opposition to same-sex marriage is a belief that is worthy of respect in a democratic society. John Mason suggests that we need a provision on that because the bill creates a new definition. However, the bill goes out of its way to ensure that it is perfectly legal for a church or other religious organisation not to perform same-sex marriage.

The bill creates a situation in which every church has to choose, so it seems perverse to think that the wording of the bill could be cited as a reason for actions against a group that had used the powers that are in the bill. There is a strong difference between a bill that permits same-sex marriage and one that criminalises opposition to it. This bill is clearly permissive rather than compulsive.

None of the amendments in the group is necessary, because all the protections are in the bill. I would not want to lodge an amendment stating that support for same-sex marriage is a belief that is worthy of respect in a democratic society or that an organisation that supports same-sex marriage should not be denied access to public services, even though I can foresee circumstances in which local authorities or other organisations might have a bit of reluctance in that regard. Let us have one set of protections that applies broadly and that covers everyone, so that we are all equal in the eyes of the law.

Jackie Baillie: I wish to comment on amendments 1 and 2 in the name of Richard Lyle and amendment 30 in the name of John Mason.

I will start with the latter. I am totally opposed to amendment 30, because whether or not John Mason intended this to be the case, it is undoubtedly a wrecking amendment. Expanding the protected characteristic of religion and belief to include belief that marriage should be only between one man and one woman raises questions about the overall status of other beliefs. As I understand it, it is extremely unlikely that the UK Government will agree to those particular amendments to the Equality Act 2010. Therefore, because the bill could be enacted only after those specific changes had been made, it would in effect never happen. Of course, it is up to individual colleagues to exercise their judgment on amendment 30, but I urge caution, given the likely effect of agreeing to it.

The Scottish Government has, of course, been in dialogue with UK counterparts, and it would be useful for the cabinet secretary to set out the agreement for an order under section 104 of the Scotland Act 1998 and how those additional protections in the Equality Act 2010 will be taken forward.

I turn to amendments 1 and 2 from Richard Lyle. It seems a long time ago, but I recall the same matters being discussed in the chamber during the passage of previous legislation and my colleague Michael McMahon seeking clarification from ministers about Catholic adoption agencies when we last considered fostering and adoption. He was given an on-the-record assurance about the Scottish Government’s intentions, and we know that that counts.

I recognise that decisions about adoption and fostering are taken with the interests of the child as the paramount factor, so what reassurance can the cabinet secretary offer that belief in traditional marriage between a man and a woman is not an issue in determining fostering and adoption?

Members will understand concerns, as the charitable status of St Margaret’s Children and Family Care Society was questioned, and I am delighted—as, I am sure, are many other members—at the ruling of the Scottish Charity Appeals Panel only last week, which recognised that the society provides public benefit and qualifies for charitable status.

My question to the cabinet secretary is whether we need to put the matter beyond doubt by putting it into the bill. If not, what clear indication of safeguards and intention on the Government’s part can he offer that would be useful to members in determining how they vote?

Margaret Mitchell (Central Scotland) (Con): I speak in support of amendment 26, which reflects the high level of public concern about same-sex marriage and seeks to protect those who hold to the current definition of marriage. It provides wider protection than the provision that protects clergy and religious celebrants. In essence, it seeks to ensure the right to freedom of speech for individuals of all faiths who believe that marriage is between only a man and a woman.

In a democratic society, showing respect and tolerance for those whose views differ from the position that is legislated for by the state is fundamental. The main argument against amendment 26 appears to be that it is discriminatory because it implies that other views are not worthy of respect. I consider that to be oversensitive to the point of looking like an excuse not to support that fundamental freedom.

Amendment 3 is also worthy of support to guard against the overzealous, politically correct interpretation of the bill. On that basis, I consider Richard Lyle’s amendments 1 and 2 also to be worthy of support.

Jim Eadie (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP): I oppose amendment 1 in the name of my friend and colleague Richard Lyle, with whom I have a respectful disagreement on the subject.
Amendment 1 is identical to stage 2 amendment 43, which the Equal Opportunities Committee considered and to which it disagreed. It would prevent an adoption agency, court or local authority from taking into account a person’s views about same-sex marriage in all cases in making decisions on approving the person as an adopter, on the adoption of a child or on approving the person as a foster carer.

Speaking as someone who is gay and adopted, I believe that amendment 1 is discriminatory and unnecessary.

It is discriminatory because it singles out beliefs about same-sex marriage as being worthy of particular protection. However, why should other beliefs—for example, a belief that divorce is wrong—not be equally protected? Passing legislation that gives greater protection to one particular belief might undermine the legal position of all other beliefs, because courts might take the view that the Parliament intended that beliefs that are not specifically listed in legislation should be less protected.

Amendment 1 is unnecessary because adoption and fostering legislation already requires decisions to be based on, as Jackie Baillie said, one paramount consideration: the best interests of the child. Constraining the courts, local authorities and adoption agencies, as the amendment seeks to do, could unacceptably interfere with their ability to ensure that the best interests of the child remain the paramount consideration.

It is clear that—here I agree with Richard Lyle—a person’s view on same-sex marriage should not and must not, as family law and equality and human rights legislation already state, be the determining factor in deciding their suitability as an adoptive or foster parent. However, it would be disproportionate and would distort the decision-making process to exclude all consideration of such views in all cases. For example, where a child has been successfully brought up for some years by a same-sex couple and is now in need of adoption or fostering, the fact that a possible adoptive or foster parent has strong views against same-sex marriage and says that they would seek to teach the child those views might, in some cases, count against their suitability as adoptive or foster parents.

For those reasons, the amendment is disproportionate. Overall, I believe that it is unnecessary and could be discriminatory. For all of those reasons, I urge the chamber to reject the amendment.

Nigel Don (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP): I would like to speak briefly on amendment 26. First, for the avoidance of doubt, I agree that it is unnecessary—indeed, that is presumed within the words—but we must acknowledge that, as we have all seen from our mailboxes, there is widespread concern about the matter.

Why is it relevant here? Why is it not discriminatory in its context? Quite simply because it relates to a bill that changes the more than 2,000-year-old definition of marriage. That is precisely why this is the right place for it. It is not discriminatory in its context, although, of course, it would be if it were anywhere else. Right where it is, it seems to provide reassurance, if not protection.

Patrick Harvie: Marco Biagi points out that this group of amendments creates a hierarchy, and he is quite right. In particular, amendments 26 and 3 open up another possibility, of an increased likelihood of speculative attempts to press matters through the courts. I am sure that we can envisage a scenario in which any measure that is taken by a local authority or other public body to promote equality or tackle prejudice and discrimination would be challenged in the courts on the basis that it does not show sufficient respect for the belief that same-sex marriage is wrong.

There is a similar issue with amendment 3, in particular the words that are used in subsection (2):

“The belief is that marriage may only be between one man and one woman.”

It does not say that it should be; it says that it “may only be”.

The amendment would open up the possibility of organisations seeking to refuse to acknowledge same-sex married couples as married couples and refusing to treat them as married couples, because they take the view that that is not what marriage ought to be. That would give rise to a host of legal challenges, which I do not think is what the member who is moving the amendment would wish to happen.

On Richard Lyle’s amendments, amendment 1 says:

“the views of a relevant person on whether marriage may be between persons of the same sex may not be considered”.

That seems to imply that those views may not be considered no matter in what terms they are expressed. I know that there are people who say that opposing same-sex marriage does not make a person homophobic, and perhaps on another occasion there will be greater time to debate that question in depth, but I am sure that all members accept that homophobia exists in our society and that, when considering matters around adoption and fostering, it would be legitimate to consider the views of some of those people who express those views in the terms that members will have seen in their inboxes. To suggest that those views can never be considered goes far too far.

Amendment 30 is the most transparent wrecking amendment in the papers before us today. To suggest that this legislation cannot come into force until amendments are made to the Equality Act 2010, which we know will not happen, is simply an attempt to stymie the will of the majority in Parliament to pass the principle of same-sex marriage.

I urge all members to reject all the amendments in the group.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I advise the Parliament that I am exercising my power under rule 9.8.4A(c) to extend the next time limit, to avoid debate on this group being unreasonably curtailed.

15:00

Murdo Fraser (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con): I support Richard Lyle’s amendment 2, which deals with the issue of charitable status, an issue that I raised during the stage 1 debate. As Richard Lyle pointed out, there will be many faith-based social providers who might well fall foul of this legislation, should it be passed in its current form.

I have no doubt that, if the bill is passed, there will be challenges to the charitable status of certain faith-based social providers that take a traditional view of marriage. As has been mentioned, we saw that in relation to St Margaret’s adoption agency and its view on same-sex adoptive couples. As we have heard, the good news is that that issue has been resolved and the decision has been taken that charitable status should be retained.

Of course, that does not mean that the same will necessarily apply should the bill be passed, because we are dealing with completely different legislation and a different set of circumstances. Even so, even though St Margaret’s survived, it nevertheless suffered huge disruption to its important charitable work and a cost of some £50,000 in legal expenses—a cost and a challenge that could well close down many other faith-based charities that have a much smaller budget.

The issue is simple and straightforward. The Scottish Government has made it clear that it does not want to see charitable status removed from such faith-based social providers. The Scottish Government should take the lead on this—it should put the matter beyond doubt and accept amendment 2. The Government will no doubt say that it is unnecessary, but it seems to me that if anything can be done to deter what might be vexatious challenges to the charitable status of faith-based social providers, such provisions should be put in place.

I ask the cabinet secretary to address one point when he comes to wind up on this group of amendments. If he does not think that amendment 2 is necessary but agrees with me about protecting the charitable status of such faith-based social providers, would he undertake, in the event that the bill is passed and we subsequently see such challenges to the charitable status of faith-based providers, to bring back to the Parliament primary legislation to put the matter right? I believe that Parliament is agreed that it does not want to see that charitable status removed.

Kevin Stewart (Aberdeen Central) (SNP): I have told the chamber before that it came as a bit of a shock, when I was first elected some 15 years ago, to be told that I was a parent. My shock increased dramatically when I was told that I was a parent of hundreds of children. Now, in this place, like everyone else, I am the corporate parent to thousands of children in this country. That is why I have always had an interest in adoption and fostering. It is much better if a kid ends up with parents rather than going through the care system. When it comes to adoption and fostering, consideration of a child’s future is paramount.

I cannot understand Mr Lyle’s amendment 1, which would make special provision for one set of beliefs but not, as Mr Eadie outlined eloquently earlier, for other beliefs. The amendment is a bit daft, to say the least, because we would end up with huge numbers of other folk coming forward with future amendments on adoption and fostering, asking for special protection for other folks who hold different beliefs. That would be a rod for our own backs. I am very interested to hear what the cabinet secretary has to say on the issue. However, as it stands, amendment 1 should be rejected by Parliament.

Bob Doris: Mr Eadie’s contribution compelled me to rise to speak on amendment 1. I agree whole-heartedly with Mr Eadie that equality and rights in this area cut both ways. He gave a practical example of why amendment 1 is flawed.

I hope that I misheard Mr Harvie—whose views on the matter I completely respect—in relation to amendment 1. I thought that he mentioned that he believed that people who opposed same-sex marriage might, as a rule, be homophobic, which I do not believe is necessarily the case. I hope that I am wrong about what Mr Harvie said. This is an opportunity for Mr Harvie to clarify the point.

Patrick Harvie: Some people have argued that simply opposing same-sex marriage does not make a person homophobic. Whether or not I agree with that—and I am not sure that I am convinced of that argument in blanket terms—the point that I was making was that homophobia does exist and it is important that in the legislation that this Parliament passes and the debates that it conducts, we do nothing that endorses or justifies the homophobia that exists in our society.

Bob Doris: I am delighted that I did contribute in relation to amendment 1, because I agree with every word that Mr Harvie said and that was an opportunity to clarify what he said. On the basis of what we have heard, I will not be supporting amendment 1 this afternoon.

Alex Neil: Like others, I am concerned about the potential impact of these amendments and I do not support them. A number of them would make specific reference in legislation to protecting views about marriage being between one man and one woman. As others have said, that raises questions about other views.

I do not consider that amendment 26 is necessary. I agree that a belief that marriage should only ever be between one man and one woman is worthy of respect. However, it would be unnecessary and unhelpful to put a specific provision on that in the bill. Making specific reference in legislation to one issue would raise questions about other beliefs for which there is no specific legislative provision. In addition, the effect of providing in law that one particular view is “worthy of respect” is unclear. It could almost suggest that the view could not be criticised, which would undermine freedom of speech.

On amendment 3, I agree that a person or body that believes that marriage may only be between one man and one woman is worthy of respect. However, it would be unnecessary and unhelpful to put a specific provision on that in the bill. Making specific reference in legislation to one issue would raise questions about other beliefs for which there is no specific legislative provision. In addition, the effect of providing in law that one particular view is “worthy of respect” is unclear. It could almost suggest that the view could not be criticised, which would undermine freedom of speech.

At stage 2, Siobhan McMahon expressed concern about, for example, religious organisations that are opposed to same-sex marriage not being allowed to provide public contracts or not being allowed to hire public buildings. In response to the request that Jackie Baillie made during her speech, I can refer to the relevant amendments to the UK Equality Act 2010, which I have agreed with the UK Government. One of those amendments is to protect people from discrimination in relation to persons controlling the use of religious or belief premises who refuse to allow those premises to be used for same-sex marriage—in other words, people cannot be discriminated against because they refuse to allow those premises to be used, as outlined by Siobhan McMahon.

A public body that refuses to let premises to a religious body just because of the religious body’s views on same-sex marriage risks a successful claim for discrimination, however. The key factor in relation to the award of contracts is the balancing of cost, quality and sustainability to provide the service to all who need it, rather than views on same-sex marriage. I do not consider that amendment 3 is necessary or helpful. As with other amendments in this group, the amendment is unhelpful in that it raises questions about the impact on other beliefs for which there is no specific legislative provision.

On amendment 1, I appreciate Richard Lyle’s concerns, but the key and overriding principle in relation to adoption and fostering is the welfare of the child. It is already the case in law that views on same-sex marriage—or anything else for that matter—should not disqualify anyone from becoming a foster carer or adoptive parent. If the amendment was agreed to, we would be singling out views on marriage as being a specific issue that should not be considered by adoption agencies, the courts and local authorities. Again, it seems unnecessary and unhelpful to single out views on same-sex marriage in that way.

The better approach is to assess prospective foster carers and adoptive parents in a comprehensive way on their ability to provide loving homes and to promote the welfare of children in their care. We should not concentrate on views on issues of the day, but instead should concentrate absolutely on what is best for the child.

I have similar concerns about amendment 2. It is already the case that the simple expression of a view on same-sex marriage, which is to the furtherance of a body’s charitable purposes, is not expected to adversely affect the body’s charitable status. Under the Charities and Trustee Investment (Scotland) Act 2005, a body seeking charitable status has to show the Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator or the courts that its purposes are for public benefit. The act does not lay down what purposes are for the public benefit. Amendment 2 appears to seek to change that only in respect of same-sex marriage.

That could raise general questions about how charitable status is decided. Singling out views on same-sex marriage could cast doubt on the expression by a charity of a view on other issues and lead to the need to amend the 2005 act repeatedly, to make provision on each issue. That concern is similar to the concern about many of the amendments in this group.

Murdo Fraser: Before the cabinet secretary finishes on amendment 2, will he address the point that I raised? If, when the bill is passed, he turns out to be wrong about the issue and there are successful challenges to the charitable status of faith-based social providers who take a traditional view of marriage, will he undertake to introduce primary legislation to this Parliament to put matters right?

Alex Neil: We are absolutely, totally sure that we are not wrong on this matter. If such a situation arose under unforeseen circumstances, we would take whatever measures were necessary to rectify it, because it would not be an acceptable position. I hope that that reassures the member that we are absolutely sure about what we are proposing. However, if we turn out to be wrong—which would be a highly unusual occurrence, in my estimation—we would take corrective action as appropriate at the time.

I do not consider that amendment 30’s suggested changes to the Equality Act 2010 are desirable. The first suggested change is to the protected characteristic of religion or belief. If the protected characteristic of religion or belief should be amended to make a specific reference to the belief that marriage may only be between a man and a woman is respected and that no person may suffer any detriment as a result of holding or expressing such a belief. Imposing an obligation on a public authority that they must ensure that a specific belief is respected would give them a duty that they could not deliver.

Given that I do not consider that those changes should be made to the Equality Act, it follows that I do not consider that the commencement of the same-sex marriage provisions should depend on them. Indeed, as Jackie Baillie and others have stated, it is highly unlikely that the UK Government would make those changes to the Equality Act, so it appears that amendment 30 would stop the provisions on same-sex marriage in the bill from being commenced. That would, of course, have a huge impact on the bill and could delay same-sex marriages in Scotland for an indefinite period. We would have to discuss the proposed amendments to the Equality Act with the UK Government, which is opposed to them and opposed them when it considered its own legislation.

The effect—although perhaps not the intention—of amendment 30 would be to wreck the bill entirely. I therefore invite the Parliament to reject all the amendments in the group.

John Mason: I thank members for their contributions and will mention one or two. Marco Biagi and Patrick Harvie talked about wanting balance and not wanting a hierarchy of rights. However, I am making the point that there appears to be a hierarchy of rights at the moment and we are seeking to equalise those rights, so that all protected characteristics in the Equality Act are treated more equally. That point was raised at Westminster, including by me when I was a member of the committee that studied the Equality Bill as it went through the Parliament there. The Government at that time refused to say either that all rights were equal or that there was a hierarchy. However, we have seen in practical experience that there is a hierarchy in the courts.

I certainly disagree with Marco Biagi on one point. He emphasises that churches and denominations are being protected, but misses out protection for people in the voluntary and public sectors.

15:15

Marco Biagi: Does the member not appreciate that the relevant articles in the European convention on human rights, including the one on freedom of thought, expression and religion, apply equally to individuals, organisations and any other form of entity that might exist in this country?

John Mason: But the reality is that the courts decided against someone like Lillian Ladele, who was not allowed to exercise any freedom in her case.

Jackie Baillie and Alex Neil said that amendment 30 is a wrecking amendment. I am willing to accept that the effects of the amendment would be more difficult to achieve than those of some of the others, but the reality is that any amendment to the Equality Act 2010 is made through negotiation with Westminster, and that is all that the amendment seeks.

Murdo Fraser made a strong argument for amendment 2, which many members will have been convinced of. Kevin Stewart talked about only protecting one group, but not all groups are under the same amount of pressure. Alex Neil mentioned that the Equality Act 2010 has exactly the same problem in that it does not cover every single possible group that could be discriminated against; it focuses only on the eight or nine groups that are most discriminated against.

Alex Neil said that he was “absolutely, totally sure”, although he seemed to back off from that later. That is an incredibly strong statement to make about anything that might happen in future in the courts.

I want to focus on amendment 26. We all seem to agree with the wording of the amendment. If we reject it, are we saying that the belief in traditional marriage is not worthy of respect? If members wanted to send out the message that they have been listening, amendment 26 would be a good one to support.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 26 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Don, Neil (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fraser, Murdo (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
Milton, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Ballie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baker, Richard (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Alieen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Campbell, Roderick (North East Fife) (SNP)
Carlisle, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Edie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Fergusson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, lain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDonald, Mark (Aberdeen Donside) (SNP)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Pearson, Graeme (South Scotland) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Salmond, Alex (Aberdeenshire East) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urqhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)

Abstentions
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Malik, Hanzala (Glasgow) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 19, Against 95, Abstentions 7.

Amendment 26 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Because I extended the time limit for the first group of amendments, we have less than 10 minutes to deal with groups 3 and 4. That will not be sufficient time, so I advise members that any member who has the right, under rule 9.8.5A, to move a motion without notice proposing that the next time limit be extended by up to 30 minutes. Does any member wish to so move?

Motion moved,

That, under Rule 9.8.5A, the next time limit for consideration of amendments be extended by up to 30 minutes.—[Alex Neil]

Motion agreed to.

Amendment 3 moved—[Stobhan McMahon].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 3 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Fraser, Murdo (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baker, Richard (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannianshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Campbell, Roderick (North East Fife) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Edie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Graham, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Kelly, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moy) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Easter) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDonald, Mark (Aberdeen Donside) (SNP)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gill (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Pearson, Graeme (South Scotland) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Salmond, Alex (Aberdeenhillshire East) (SNP)
Scallon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swain, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)

Abstentions
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Malik, Hanzala (Glasgow) (Lab)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 21, Against 98, Abstentions 2.

Amendment 3 disagreed to.
Amendment 1 moved—[Richard Lyle].

Richard Lyle: Presiding Officer, may I have a few seconds to reply to some of the comments that have been made?

The Deputy Presiding Officer: No, I am afraid that you cannot. I am sorry.

The question is, that amendment 1 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Fraser, Murdo (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Claire (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Baillie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baker, Richard (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)

Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Alieen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Campbell, Roderick (North East Fife) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabian, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Fergusson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
MacIntosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDonald, Mark (Aberdeen Donside) (SNP)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Alieen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
The question is, as amended, that amendment 2 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
- Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
- Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
- Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
- Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
- Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
- Fraser, Murdo (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
- Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
- Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
- Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
- Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
- Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
- MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
- Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
- Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
- McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
- McHugh, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
- McIlwraith, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
- McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
- McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
- Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
- Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
- Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
- Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
- Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
- Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)

Against
- Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
- Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
- Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
- Ballie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
- Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
- Baker, Richard (North East Scotland) (Lab)
- Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
- Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
- Beatle, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
- Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
- Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
- Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
- Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
- Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
- Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
- Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
- Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
- Campbell, Roderick (North East Fife) (SNP)
- Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
- Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
- Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
- Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
- Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
- Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
- Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
- Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
- Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
- Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
- Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
- Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
- Ewing, Alistair (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
- Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
- Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
- Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
- FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
- Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
- Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
- Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
- Graham, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
- Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
- Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
- Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
- Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
- Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
- Humie, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
- Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
- Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
- Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
- Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
- Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
- Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
- Lamont, John (Dumfries and Galloway) (Con)
- Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
- MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
- MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
- MacDonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
- Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
- Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
- Mackenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
- Marr, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
- Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
- Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
- McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
- McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
- McDonald, Mark (Aberdeen Donside) (SNP)
- McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
- McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
- McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
- McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
know that that has not always been managed. It should regularly review all legislation, but we all hoped for, a review will serve to address those effects. It has been said before that Parliament had all the positive effects that its supporters shown to have had any negative effects or has not be worth while; if, however, the legislation is amendment either side of the argument, because it is a neutral split than we are. Whatever our view of the bill, it proposes a major change to what has been the tradition in Scotland for a very long time. Even if there is—as there was at stage 1—a big majority in Parliament to pass the bill, the public is much more evenly split than we are. I suggest that amendment 27 is one of the easiest amendments to support, even for the bill’s proponents. The amendment, if agreed, would send out the message that Parliament is listening and that should anything unintended happen—on either side of the argument, because it is a neutral amendment—that can be reviewed. With that in mind, there should be a commitment to review the legislation after five years and to assess its impact. If the impact is minimal, the review will still be worth while; if, however, the legislation is shown to have had any negative effects or has not had all the positive effects that its supporters hoped for, a review will serve to address those effects. It has been said before that Parliament should regularly review all legislation, but we all know that that has not always been managed.

Amendment 27 would put down a simple marker in the bill and ensure that a review takes place.

It was suggested at stage 2 that amendment 27 could be interpreted as a sunset clause. The implication of that interpretation would mean that, if accepted, same-sex marriages might in the future be abolished. That is clearly not the case; all that is asked for is a review.

I move amendment 27.

Marco Biagi: My comments on amendment 27 will be brief. The fact that we are debating an issue that was the outcome of something that happened in 2007 shows that the issues will continue and that they will be looked at and debated in the chamber without the need for an arbitrary review being set at a particular time. The suggestion that the bill will be passed and then sit on the statute book unexamined is rather far fetched. Given that Parliament will be actively watching the situation and that civil society will be actively debating the issue for years to come, I do not see the need for an arbitrary review at the five-year point.

Jim Hume (South Scotland) (LD): I tend to agree with Marco Biagi and to disagree with John Mason’s amendment 27. It ignores the democracy of Parliament and calls on the Scottish ministers, in conducting a review, to “consult such persons as they consider appropriate” and to publish a report. However, Parliament has a committee structure, and the committees have the protocol of reviewing all Scottish legislation. I therefore agree with Marco Biagi that the amendment is unnecessary, and I shall vote against it.

Alex Johnstone (North East Scotland) (Con): Post-legislative review is a good idea in all cases. It is one of the objectives that Parliament does not achieve often enough.

The six amendments that we have debated previously today, and several others that were lodged at stage 2—including my own, which I have not brought back to Parliament—were designed to ensure that the bill, once it becomes an act of law, does not have unintended consequences. The case for each of the previous amendments has been argued well but has been substantially rejected by Parliament. It therefore seems to be reasonable that, at the end of the process, we should have an amendment that is designed to protect against unintended consequences.

Amendment 27 does not ask us to change the bill in any way; it asks for a review to ensure that, after five years, should the majority in Parliament turn out to have been wrong, and should there have been unintended consequences, the Government of the day will be able to deal with the problems as it sees fit. I do not accept the suggestion that amendment 27 is somehow a sunset clause, because the amendment makes it clear that the review would be a review of the effects of same-sex marriage.

It is vital that, when we come to a conclusion on the bill, we find a way to bring Parliament together. It is therefore reasonable that the majority who seem likely to have their way at decision time tonight should take this only remaining opportunity to offer an olive branch to the other sections of opinion within Parliament, who are concerned about the effects of the bill, by ensuring that amendment 27 is passed. Should the majority be right, the effect of the amendment will be virtually zero. Should there be unintended consequences, the effect of the amendment will be to offer an opportunity for the Government of the day to deal with the problems.

I invite members across the chamber to take the opportunity to join Parliament together around the amendment, to ensure that we all have something that we can agree on and take forward alongside the legislation.

Patrick Harvie: It has been properly pointed out that post-legislative scrutiny is a matter for parliamentary committees. No doubt, any committee that considers it necessary to undertake that work will do so in its own good time.

John Mason says that amendment 27 is designed to send a signal. Let me ask members to consider what signal it will, in fact, send. The signal that it will send, for the next five years, is that same-sex marriages remain an open question, and that anyone who has taken part in a same-sex marriage—anyone who has formed a relationship and has married their same-sex partner—will still have a question hanging over them: what is the future going to be? Is there any other category of marriages that members would like to keep on hold for the next five years while we conduct a review of the consequences? I do not think so.

Mark McDonald (Aberdeen Donside) (SNP): Does Patrick Harvie agree that the message that amendment 27 sends, based on the stipulations within it, is that somehow same-sex marriage can have only negative consequences?

Patrick Harvie: I agree. My final point relates to the argument that there will be unintended consequences. People have been whipping up completely groundless fears about what the consequences of the bill will be.

Let me explain what the consequences will be. Some couples who love each other will get married. They might previously have been in civil partnerships. Some confetti will be thrown. Some cake will be eaten. Occasionally, an auntie will use the excuse to buy a new hat. With just a little bit of luck, some of these people might live happily ever after.

My olive branch, which has been requested by Alex Johnstone, is simply to say this: let us welcome the consequences—the real consequences—that will flow from passing the bill. Let us welcome them with joy.

15:30

Christine Grahame (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP): My question is a simple one. I do not know what is meant by “the effects of”. If we are to put something in legislation that is then to be reviewed, John Mason will have to tell me what it means.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: That is perhaps a question for the cabinet secretary, to whom we now come.

Alex Neil: Like other members, I do not support amendment 27. The points that Patrick Harvie made are valid.

We are all agreed that every piece of legislation that is passed by Parliament should be subject—at the right time and at Parliament's choosing—to post-legislative scrutiny. However, amendment 27 is not really about the typical, normal post-legislative scrutiny process. It refers only to the provisions of the bill relating to same-sex marriage. The bill goes much wider than same-sex marriage; it extends the notice period for marriages, it allows civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere that is agreed by the couple and the registrar, it puts belief bodies on the same footing as religious bodies in relation to the solemnisation of marriage, it introduces qualifying requirements for religious and belief bodies to meet before they can solemnise marriage, and it introduces religious and belief civil partnerships. It also makes very wide provisions for the transgender community.

Amendment 27 does not, however, refer to any of those other provisions. To paint the proposed provisions as normal post-legislative scrutiny is not a proper or accurate reflection of the effect of the amendment.

I appreciate John Mason’s claim that the amendment would not introduce a sunset clause, but the proposed new section would still be potentially very destabilising when it comes to the impact of the bill. It would be detrimental to the reputation of Parliament if we were to pass amendment 27 and we would be sending out a very wrong signal to the entirety of Scottish society. I hope that Parliament will reject the amendment decisively.
John Mason: I agree with Jim Hume that committees should review legislation. I have been here nearly three years now, however, and I do not think that that is happening. There may be other ways of dealing with the issue, but Parliament somehow needs to get its act together on actually reviewing legislation.

Patrick Harvie and Mark McDonald had an interesting interchange. Mark McDonald suggested that the proposed review suggests that there could only be negative consequences. I do not see that in amendment 27. Perhaps he wants to correct me.

Christine Grahame asked about “the effects of” the introduction of same-sex marriage. In normal English, speaking as an accountant, I understand that phrase. I do not know what the legal problem with those particular words might be.

Christine Grahame: I do not know what the remit of any review would be if it is just about “the effects of” the measures. That wording is far too broad.

John Mason: I am not sure that that intervention has clarified the issue very much in my mind—perhaps other members understand. “The effects of” means “the consequences”. Amendment 27 specifically mentions the question whether there have been “any court proceedings”, tribunals or suchlike.

The cabinet secretary questioned why amendment 27 asks for a review concerning same-sex marriage only. The reality is that the rest of the bill is largely non-controversial. There were hardly any divisions at committee on the rest of the bill. By all means, we can review the whole bill, but it is this particular area that needs to be looked at. Alex Johnstone put it quite well when he spoke about an olive branch, and said that the effect would in fact be almost zero.

Amendment 27 is the final amendment in my name. I find it disappointing that the cabinet secretary would not even commit to a review in a specified time, even if that is not in the eventual legislation.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 27 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Fraser, Murdo (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baker, Richard (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Alileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Campbell, Roderick (North East Fife) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Edie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffith, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)

Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Amendment 28 would also require ministers to consult in preparing the report.

Amendment 29 is consequential on amendment 28.

Dave Thompson (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch): I am intrigued by amendment 28 because it was not so long ago that we were being told that marriage was the gold standard and that people in civil partnerships felt like second-class citizens. If that was true, why would anyone choose a civil partnership over a civil marriage?

Patrick Harvie: The member has not been told by me that marriage is the gold standard. I think that we should all be committed to the importance of choice. People who wish to pursue the option of marriage should be able to make that choice. However, there will be others who believe that civil partnership better reflects their personal values, ideology or what have you. There will be some who regard marriage as having a religious connotation that they do not choose to buy into.

The reality is that we do not know what the uptake of civil partnership by same-sex couples will be, nor do we know what appetite there might be among mixed-sex couples for civil partnership instead of marriage, although we know that there is some because a case has been taken to the European Court challenging UK civil partnership legislation. It has been recognised that an imbalance will arise, in that same-sex couples will be able to choose civil partnership, marriage or cohabitation, whereas mixed-sex couples will have only two of those options. If there were some challenge to that on human rights grounds, it might be hard to justify not allowing mixed-sex couples to have civil partnerships.

The Scottish and UK Governments have noted the position and have agreed to conduct civil partnership reviews. The Scottish Government published a remit for its review in September, but we do not know much more about the timescale for the review or the options that the Scottish Government is considering. The UK Government’s review, which was published very recently, is quite troubling, because it opens up the possibility that people in same-sex civil partnerships will be compelled to have their civil partnership either dissolved or converted into marriage, when that was not their choice.

I lodged amendments 28 and 29 purely to open a debate on the question and to offer the cabinet secretary the opportunity to set out the Scottish Government’s position and current thinking on it. I also hope that he will indicate a willingness to enter into civil partnership with each other.”
consider opening up civil partnership to mixed-sex couples just as we are opening up marriage to same-sex couples, and to close down the possibility that civil partners could be forced to convert their partnership into a marriage or that they could lose their legal status altogether.

I move amendment 28.

Jamie Hepburn (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP): There is merit in reviewing the position of civil partnerships, so I thank Patrick Harvie for lodging amendments 28 and 29. Most people would accept that the Parliament created the institution of civil partnership because, at that stage, it was not quite prepared to do what we are likely to do today and legislate for those in same-sex relationships to be able to get married.

However, I approach the matter from a slightly different perspective from that of Patrick Harvie. If we legislate for same-sex couples to be able to get married, we call into question the position of the institution of civil partnership. Frankly, I doubt that those who are in civil partnerships today aspired to enter the institution of civil partnership; they chose to enter that institution because it was the one that was available to them. I suspect that most people in that institution already regard themselves as married, and that is why it is important that we are taking the step that we are taking today.

That step calls into question the on-going position of civil partnerships. I know that the Scottish Government is to review the position, as Patrick Harvie has called for. Equally, I accept his point about choice, and that is why it is important that we have a review that can inform the position. If the cabinet secretary can set out how the review will go forward and what options it will consider, we may be able to conclude that amendment 28, with which I sympathise, is unnecessary.

Alex Johnstone: I will be very brief, Presiding Officer. Dare I ask whether Mr Harvie will explain to us in his closing remarks why, a few minutes ago, a review was a bad idea?

Marco Biagi: Alex Johnstone refers to a lack of agreement, so I begin by quoting an unusual associate in the civil partnerships argument, who said:

“There is no discrimination whatsoever in the present law, except that against heterosexual population relating to civil partnerships.”

Those are the words of someone I have never quoted before—Norman Tebbit, who agrees that the status quo on civil partnerships is untenable. Perhaps that spirit of agreement is the reason why a rainbow has appeared over the Parliament this afternoon as we have debated the bill.

I have an issue with the on-going existence of civil partnerships for same-sex couples only, because that is indirectly discriminatory against LGBT people. Members could ask why the exclusion of opposite-sex couples is discriminatory against LGBT people. It is because civil partnership is still in statute as a marker of difference and a relic of prejudices past. It continues to create a separate category showing that LGBT people need different treatment and special institutions—something that I would not support in this context.

Dave Thompson: Following on from the argument that the member has just made, would it not be better just to abolish civil partnerships and give everyone the same, if it is truly about equality?

Marco Biagi: I was about to say that I have some sympathy with that perspective. I supported civil partnerships at first, but in time and on reflection I came to identify them more with the desire not to allow same-sex couples to get married than with the attempt to create an alternative. I supported those who campaigned for them at the time, such as Patrick Harvie, and I did so on a pragmatic basis. Those people are all to be commended, but—let us face it—in the long run civil partnerships have been overtaken. Personally, I would consider it a little bit distasteful to keep them, in the same way as I would regard wearing a badge that says that I am gay so as to warn people of a nervous disposition.

My personal preference would be to see civil partnership disappear entirely. That is what happened in Denmark and Sweden when they legislated for equal marriage. However, I realise that many people wish to keep civil partnerships, not least those who are in them, and that although I see civil partnerships as irredeemably tainted by prejudice, there are those who see marriage as irredeemably tainted by the sexism that characterised it for hundreds of years.

If I am saying anything here, it is that, whatever happens, the status quo on civil partnership must not continue. Above all, it must not continue through sheer political inertia. Civil partnerships should either end, as Dave Thompson suggests, or be made equal, so that the unnecessary, unnatural and differentiating division between two types of couple ends.

15:45

I was glad when the Scottish Government promised in appearances before the Equal Opportunities Committee to look at the issue and come back to it, and I trust that it will do so. I firmly support the spirit of amendment 28 but, if I backed it, that would be a signal that I was not taking the Government at its word. If the amendment is pressed to a vote, I will vote against it, and I urge others to do the same. I will listen with interest to the cabinet secretary’s comments.

Stewart Maxwell (West Scotland) (SNP): Fundamentally, amendment 28 comes down to something that I hope that we all support and which is a strand throughout the bill. This is about freedom of choice. If a couple—whether they be heterosexual or homosexual—wish to enter into a civil partnership rather than a marriage, I do not see what the problem is, if that is their choice. If cohabiting heterosexual couples wish not to get married but to enter into a civil partnership, they are barred from doing so. If we are truly determined to create a society in which we value choice among adults—

Dave Thompson: The member raises an interesting point about giving people a choice. People are given a choice between two different things, such as an apple and a pear. What is the difference between civil partnership and civil marriage?

Stewart Maxwell: Sometimes, when people are given a choice, it is not between an apple and a pear but between two different apples. It is entirely reasonable to give people a choice between marriage and civil partnership.

As I said, surely this is about freedom of choice. We should aim for that in the bill. I think that a review is a good idea, but that is not to say that I support amendment 28. I want to hear from the cabinet secretary about the Government’s plans for the review that he has talked about.

Mark McDonald: I have two points. Stewart Maxwell has summed up the first point eloquently. It is not for us to second-guess people’s motivations in defining their relationships. If individuals wish to enter into a civil partnership rather than a marriage, that is none of our business. It is up to the two individuals to define their relationship. I have sympathy with Patrick Harvie’s amendment 28, in that the option of a civil partnership is not available to heterosexual couples at the moment, as he said.

I disagree with much that my colleague Dave Thompson has said on the issue, but he makes the valid point—Jamie Hepburn made it, too—that civil partnerships might no longer be necessary. However, we need a thorough examination of the matter. Individuals in my circle of friends and constituents of mine have expressed the view that, if civil partnerships were available to mixed-sex couples, they would be willing or would wish to take up that opportunity. It is not for us to second-guess relationships.

As for Alex Johnstone’s flippant intervention, the review that was discussed in relation to amendment 27 was being pursued from an entirely negative perspective.

Alex Johnstone: In the member’s mind, could the main difference between the reviews be that he might favour the outcome of one but not the other?

Mark McDonald: I have never second-guessed the outcome of a review. I believe that Patrick Harvie is pursuing a review for positive and inclusive reasons to do with ensuring equality of status for civil partnerships while they still exist—indeed, as my colleague Jamie Hepburn said, they might not be necessary. I do not believe that the review that was proposed in amendment 27 was being pursued from a positive perspective. That is why I rejected that amendment. I will be happy to hear the cabinet secretary’s views before I decide whether to support amendment 28.

Bruce Crawford (Stirling) (SNP): I will make a simple point. I make no comment on the amendments; I want to hear what the cabinet secretary has to say.

Whatever we do as a Parliament today or in future, we should not diminish the standing of those who have already willingly entered into civil partnerships and have, in effect, chosen that direction. Removing civil partnerships from statute would diminish their own and society’s view of their standing, regardless of the fact that they would then become equal. Therefore, we have to look for another option.

I ask the cabinet secretary to reflect on that as we make these decisions. We have to think about what has already happened and people who have made decisions in the past. To remove all of that now, given that people freely entered into civil partnerships, would be wrong.

Alex Neil: I am grateful for the opportunity to speak to Patrick Harvie’s amendments 28 and 29, on the review of civil partnerships. I guarantee that there will be no inertia from the Government on that or any related issue.

As members will be aware, we have already published the remit for our review of civil partnerships, which is on the Government website. We have already had initial informal discussions with key stakeholders, which will be followed by a full public consultation that will outline the options and the consequences of each option and seek views.

I am keen to talk to the other parties across the Parliament on the methodology and timing of the review, because such an exercise is better done together on a consensual basis, so that, whatever option the Parliament eventually agrees, at least we will have as much buy-in as we can from external stakeholders and parliamentary participants.
On the timescale, I am determined that we get the job done as quickly as possible. We hope to establish a timetable and methodology as soon as possible after initial discussions with parliamentary colleagues in other parties, and to complete the review by the early part of 2015 at the very latest. A realistic timetable would probably mean any consequent legislation coming in the session that starts in 2016, but if we can all agree on what the legislation should be, there is no reason why the work on it could not start in 2015. That would be my intention after consultation with other parties.

As the debate has highlighted, there are, broadly, two viable options that relate to the future of civil partnerships. The first would be to lay down that no more new civil partnerships could be entered into after a specified date, to reflect that, in future, both same-sex couples and opposite-sex couples will be able to get married. The other main option would be to establish opposite-sex civil partnerships in Scotland. At the moment, I will certainly not come down on one side of the argument or the other; rather, I want to see the evidence on and consequences of both.

I will develop the extremely important point that Bruce Crawford made about people who have already entered into a civil partnership—and people who will have done so by the time that any legislation is introduced. Unlike the recommendations in the review down south, I would be quite reluctant to support any proposal that absolutely required those in existing civil partnerships to be forced to change their status as a result of any review, because it is clear that they entered into civil partnerships in good faith. They should have the option of changing their status, but I would need a lot of persuading before I would agree to forcing them to change their status by either dissolving their civil partnerships or transferring and converting them into marriage.

All those issues are clearly for discussion. We need to look at the consequences. The pension consequences, for example, require detailed consideration, because pensions may be the most complicated issue of the lot to deal with when we come to legislating, no matter which option, or options, we eventually agree to pursue.

I say to Patrick Harvie that I am absolutely committed to the review and to doing it and dealing with the methodology and the timetable on a consensual basis. I want the review to be done by early 2015 so that we can quickly start to work on any recommendations on legislation, with legislation possibly being passed in the session that starts in 2016.

On that basis, I ask Mr Harvie not to press his amendments.

Patrick Harvie: It is probably true that a little over a decade ago, when Scotland and the UK were debating civil partnership, there were some people who were willing to support civil partnership—the technical legal rights and responsibilities of marriage but without the name “marriage”—who might not have been ready to support the bill that we are debating today. I hope that those people have come with us on society’s progress towards equality and are voting with the bill.

Civil partnership might not have been introduced as a separate institution had support for same-sex marriage existed a little over a decade ago. However, that is what happened. At the time, I proposed that if we were creating civil partnership, we should do so on a non-discriminatory basis and should allow mixed-sex couples as well as same-sex couples to have a civil partnership, should that be their preference. We did not do that, and the UK Parliament, when it legislated for the whole of the UK, gave us the system that we have now.

Jamie Hepburn quite rightly said that the situation calls into question the future of civil partnership, and I do not think that it gives an answer. As members have said, there is a question about whether civil partnership should continue under its current status, whether it should be removed—as the UK Government proposes—or whether people will simply opt for marriage and so there will be less take-up of civil partnership. We do not know the answer, which is why a review is necessary.

If Alex Johnstone had listened to Marco Biagi’s answer, it would be clear to him that it is only those mixed-sex couples—they are probably few in number—who would prefer civil partnership who face any argument of discrimination around what the law allows them to do. That is why a review is required. Both Governments agreed about that, and I am happy to see that a review will happen.

It is also important to recognise that, as Marco Biagi said, there will be an anomaly only if civil partnership continues for same-sex couples only. If it continues for everybody, we will have removed the discrimination. If it does not continue for everybody, we will have perhaps removed the discrimination in a less favourable way.

The cultural meanings of marriage and civil partnership are subjective. That is why the difference between them is subjective. It is not for us to decide whether some people should regard marriage as patriarchal or as having the sanctity of a religious contract, nor is it for us to decide whether people should regard civil partnership as a purely legal instrument or as a marker of discrimination. People reach such value judgments on their own terms.
Having said all that, I thank the cabinet secretary for his response. He has given some indication of the timescale. I am very pleased that he is talking about broadly two options, instead of the additional option that the UK Government has floated of forcing people to change their civil partnership into a marriage. I am happy that there has been a recognition of the status and the meaning of civil partnership as something distinct, and I am happy about the consensual basis on which the cabinet secretary intends to pursue those debates.

I am content with the cabinet secretary’s response. On that basis, I withdraw amendment 28.

Amendment 28, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Members will note that we have passed the agreed time limit for the debate on group 4. I exercised my power under rule 9.8.4A(c) to allow debate on the group to continue beyond the limit in order to avoid its being unreasonably curtailed.

Section 28A—Grounds of divorce: interim gender recognition certificate followed by full certificate

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 5 is on the processes for, and consequences of, applications to sheriff for issue of full gender recognition certificates. Amendment 4, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 5 to 7, 9 to 11, 13, 15, 17, 19, 20 and 22.

Alex Neil: Most of the amendments in group 5 relate to a new procedure that was introduced at stage 2 on obtaining a full gender recognition certificate. Under the procedure, a sheriff may, in certain circumstances, grant a full GRC without the need for the spouse to consent to stay in the marriage.

Amendments 4 and 5 relate to section 28A of the bill, which amends the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976. Amendment 4 makes it clear that the amendments are to section 1 of the 1976 act. Amendment 5 adds a reference to the title of section 1 of the 1976 act.

Amendment 6 is also on divorce. A ground for divorce is when one of the spouses has been issued with an interim GRC. The bill amends the Gender Recognition Act 2004 so that, once the gender recognition panel has issued a full GRC, it is no longer open to a spouse to seek divorce on the basis of the interim GRC.

Amendment 6 creates an exception to that general rule so that, where a sheriff issues the full GRC under the new procedure, a spouse can still seek a divorce on the basis of the interim GRC.

That is because a spouse might not have consented to staying in the marriage. As a result of amendment 6, amendment 11 deletes proposed new section 4E(4) of the 2004 act, which is now unnecessary.

16:00

Amendment 7 updates the interpretation section of the 2004 act to reflect that, in future, a sheriff may issue a full GRC under the new procedure. Amendment 9 provides that a person may apply to the sheriff under the new procedure only if the applicant does not have a statutory declaration by the spouse consenting to stay in the marriage after the issue of the full GRC.

Amendment 10 requires the sheriff, when granting a full GRC under the new procedure, to send a copy to the panel. Amendment 13 removes the obligation on the court to issue a full GRC following divorce when a sheriff has already issued a full certificate under the new procedure. Amendments 15 and 17, which relate to applications to the court where a GRC might have been obtained by fraud, ensure that such applications are possible where the sheriff grants a full GRC under the new procedure.

Amendment 19 places a duty on the panel to send a copy of a full GRC to the registrar general for Scotland following the sheriff issuing it under the new procedure. Where the Court of Session quashes a sheriff’s decision to issue a full GRC under the new procedure, amendment 20 requires the court to inform the registrar general, who then has to cancel the relevant entry in the gender recognition register.

Finally, proposed new paragraph 20A(1C) of schedule 3 to the 2004 act imposes a requirement that regulations on marriage registration must provide that, following the issue of a full GRC under the new procedure, spouses could register their marriage only if they both consented in writing to the registration. That proposed paragraph could cut across the drafting of regulations, so amendment 22 removes it.

I move amendment 4.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: As no member has requested to speak, do you have anything further to say by way of winding up, cabinet secretary?

Alex Neil: I will forgo any opportunity to do so, Presiding Officer.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Excellent.

Amendment 4 agreed to.

Amendments 5 and 6 agreed to.

Section 32—Commencement
Amendment 29 not moved.

Amendment 30 moved—[John Mason].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 30 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Fraser, Murdo (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)

Against
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Bagill, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baker, Richard (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Campbell, Roderick (North East Fife) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Graeme, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)

Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDonald, Mark (Aberdeen Donside) (SNP)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Pearson, Graeme (South Scotland) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeen West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Salmond, Alex (Aberdeenshire East) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)

Abstentions
Malik, Hanzala (Glasgow) (Lab)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 14, Against 100, Abstentions 1.

Amendment 30 disagreed to.

Schedule 2—Change of gender of married persons or civil partners
Amendment 7 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 6 is on the issue of full gender recognition certification following the death of a civil partner or spouse. Amendment 8, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 31, 14, 16, 18, 21, 23 and 24.

Alex Neil: Amendment 31 introduces a new section 4F to the Gender Recognition Act 2004. Section 4F provides for applications to the gender recognition panel for a full gender recognition certificate—GRC—in certain cases where the civil partner or spouse of a transgender person dies. Amendment 8 makes a change to the interpretation section of the 2004 act to reflect that change.

Amendment 14 extends the right of appeal to the Court of Session on a point of law against a decision by the panel to reject an application under section 4F.

The 2004 act provides for referrals to the Court of Session where a GRC was secured fraudulently. Amendments 16 and 18 extend the right to make such referrals to cases under section 4F, and amendment 21 provides that, where the Court of Session quashes a decision that the panel made under section 4F, the court must inform the registrar general for Scotland so that he can remove any relevant entry in the gender recognition register.

Section 7 of the 2004 act allows the secretary of state, following consultation with the Scottish ministers, to lay down the form and manner of applications to the panel. Amendment 23 extends that to applications under the new section 4F.

The last amendment in the group relates to certain protected information about a transgender person who has applied for a GRC. Section 22(2)(a) of the 2004 act makes it an offence to disclose such information unlawfully. Amendment 24 applies that offence to applications under section 4F.

I move amendment 8.

Amendment 8 agreed to.

Amendments 9 to 11, 31 and 13 to 24 moved—[Alex Neil]—and agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: That ends considerations of amendments.

Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick):

Before we start, I say to Parliament that, as a consequence of the earlier decision to extend the debate on amendments by 30 minutes, decision time will also be moved by 30 minutes.

The next item of business is a debate on motion S4M-08915, in the name of Alex Neil, on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. I call Alex Neil to speak to and move the motion—cabinet secretary, you have 14 minutes.

16:10

The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing (Alex Neil): I am pleased to open the stage 3 debate on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

I thank the members of the Equal Opportunities Committee; its convener, Margaret McCulloch; and her predecessor, Mary Fee. Their careful and considered scrutiny of the bill is greatly appreciated. I pay tribute to and thank my team from the policy, legal and communications team, who have been helping with the bill within the Scottish Government. They have provided me with absolutely first-class support.

The stage 1 debate in November did this Parliament proud. There were many eloquent and moving speeches, with respect shown on all sides. I am sure that, although different views are honestly and earnestly held across the chamber, we will, nevertheless, represent those views in a respectful manner.

If we pass the bill, today will mark an historic day in the history of the Scottish Parliament. I believe that we have got the balance right in the bill. We are extending the rights and freedoms of people of the same sex who wish to be married and to have that marriage recognised by the state. At the same time, we are building in necessary safeguards for the rights of those who are opposed to same-sex marriage and who do not wish to perform same-sex marriage, particularly church organisations and celebrants.

We are doing a remarkable thing today. We are saying to the world, loud and clear, on behalf of Scotland, that we believe in recognising love between same-sex couples in the same way that we do between opposite-sex couples.

We have taken forward this process carefully, and I am confident that, following the two consultations, a robust committee process and today's proceedings in the chamber, we have achieved an excellent package. Of course, the bill does not just introduce same-sex marriage; it also includes detailed provisions in other areas. I will give a brief overview of those provisions before moving to the provisions on same-sex marriage, because the other provisions are also important.

In the case of couples who wish to have a civil marriage, the bill allows flexibility for ceremonies to be undertaken anywhere that is agreed by the registrar and the couple, provided that it is not in religious premises. The bill establishes belief ceremonies alongside religious and civil ceremonies, reflecting the growing number of marriage ceremonies that are being solemnised by humanists. The bill also authorises Church of Scotland deacons to solemnise opposite-sex marriage.

Scotland has an excellent reputation for marriage ceremonies. Indeed, one of the strengths of the Scottish system is its diversity and variety. The bill seeks to protect that by introducing the possibility of qualifying requirements for religious and belief bodies to meet before their celebrants may be authorised to solemnise marriages or register civil partnerships.

The bill extends the normal notice period for marriage and for civil partnership from 14 days to 28 days, which will work as a deterrent to sham marriages and reflects the reality of how long it takes to check that a person is eligible to marry in Scotland.

As well as changes to marriage law, the bill makes some changes in relation to civil partnerships. Most notably, the bill introduces the religious or belief registration of civil partnership, where the religious or belief body is happy to take part. As debated earlier, the Government will consult publicly on the future of civil partnerships, taking account of the introduction of same-sex marriage.

Clearly, the major innovation in the bill is the introduction of same-sex marriage. The bill proposes to allow same-sex couples to do what thousands of opposite-sex couples do every year—get married. Same-sex couples will be able to choose whether to have a religious, a belief or a civil marriage ceremony, recognised by the state.

Although the bill will allow religious and belief bodies that wish to solemnise same-sex marriage the opportunity to do that, we respect the decision of those religious and belief bodies that do not wish to take part. Not only do we respect that decision, but we have put in place specific protections in the bill for such religious and belief bodies so that they cannot be forced to solemnise same-sex marriage.

The bill establishes an opt-in system for religious and belief bodies in relation to same-sex marriage and civil partnerships. It also makes it clear that there is no obligation to opt in. We have agreed an amendment to the United Kingdom Equality Act 2010 to provide further protection for individual religious and belief celebrants. That amendment will protect individual celebrants who refuse to solemnise same-sex marriage and civil partnerships from court actions claiming discrimination. Of course, a number of religious and belief bodies wish to take part in same-sex marriages and will welcome the opportunity to do so.

The bill does not include a specific opt-out for civil registrars. That is because a civil registrar is a public servant providing only a public function. The registration of civil partnerships by civil registrars in Scotland has worked well and there is no reason to expect that the solemnisation of same-sex marriage by civil registrars will not work just as well.

Those who are opposed to same-sex marriage have made it clear that their concerns go beyond issues in relation to celebrants and registrars and relate to other issues in society. Most notably, we have heard concerns in relation to freedom of speech. There is nothing in the bill that impacts on freedom of speech. Indeed the wide-ranging debate on the bill, in which diverse views have been expressed, shows that freedom of speech is, as it should be, alive and well in Scotland. The bill includes provision at section 14 to make it clear that the introduction of same-sex marriage in Scotland will have no impact on existing rights to freedom of speech, thought, conscience and religion.

We have listened to people’s concerns about potential prosecutions for speaking out against same-sex marriage. The Lord Advocate’s prosecution guidance puts beyond doubt that “criticism of same sex marriage or homosexuality is not in itself an offence”.

In relation to guidance, the Government has sought views on updating education circular 2/2001 on the conduct of relationships, sexual health and parenthood education. We are considering the points that have been made and will issue updated guidance shortly.

In all our work, whether guidance or legislation, we have aimed to listen, to be inclusive and to increase rights and provide protections. In relation to same-sex marriage specifically, I strongly believe that the bill achieves the right balance between treating all of our citizens equally and respecting and protecting the rights of conscience and religious objection.

In addition to same-sex marriage, we make new provisions for the transgender community, which I hope will make life a lot easier for that community.
Our society has changed, and changed for the better. Within my adult life, we have seen an end to the criminalisation of homosexual acts and the introduction of civil partnerships. Today is a momentous day for equality in our nation. No longer will persons of the same sex be barred from showing their commitment to each other through getting married.

This legislation sends a powerful message to the world about the kind of society that we in Scotland are trying to create—a nation where the principles of fairness and equality are woven into the very fabric of our society; a nation that protects and promotes freedom of expression; a nation that cherishes love; and a minister who prepares a shorter speech to allow other members the opportunity to speak for longer in the debate.

I commend the bill to the chamber and ask my fellow MSPs to support it and support it well.

I move,

That the Parliament agrees that the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill be passed.

The Presiding Officer: Cabinet secretary, you just destroyed all my calculations and I will have to start all over again.

16:19

Jackie Baillie (Dumbarton) (Lab): Like the cabinet secretary, I am pleased to participate in the stage 3 debate on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

I commend the members and clerks of the Equal Opportunities Committee for their diligence in scrutinising the bill at stage 1 and, at stage 2, considering many of the amendments that we have also debated today. When there is a free vote in the Parliament, it places much more responsibility on committee members to take care in their considerations. Whatever their ultimate view, all the members of the Equal Opportunities Committee have done an outstanding job for the Parliament in subjecting the bill and its amendments to a robust level of scrutiny. I believe that Margaret McCulloch deserves particular recognition for so smoothly taking over from Mary Fee as the committee’s convener part way through the bill’s passage. [Applause.]

Ultimately, however, this is a Government bill, started by Nicola Sturgeon, who was clear in her commitment to same-sex marriage, and carried forward by Alex Neil, who may not have used all his speaking time but has certainly used his considerable political skill to deliver the bill itself.

Undoubtedly, there has been a volume of evidence both in favour of and against the bill. The consultation received a record number of submissions—over 70,000 in total. As Scotland for Marriage pointed out, more of those submissions were against the bill than in favour of it. I have to say that the correspondence that I have received over the passage of the bill is much more finely balanced. Views are passionately held and I respect that. However, I repeat something that I said at stage 1: this is about changing attitudes in Scotland. It is the case that attitudes are changing. We should consider the evidence on that, which I think we would all agree is robust and reliable.

The Scottish social attitudes survey in 2002 showed that 41 per cent of people were in favour of same-sex marriage and 19 per cent were against it. In the same social attitudes survey, but this time in 2010, the proportion of people who were in favour of same-sex marriage had risen to 61 per cent. I can only imagine what it would be today. A shift of 20 per cent in opinion on any issue in such a short space of time is, frankly, astonishing and it speaks to the way that we are progressing as a society. If we begin to unpack the detail of that, we find that support for equal marriage can be found across all echelons of society, among the religious and the secular, people of all ages and income groups and people resident across the length and breadth of the country. Support for this bill therefore transcends religious, social, demographic and geographical boundaries.

If we examine the detail even further, we see that, according to the survey, 55 per cent of those who identified themselves as Catholic supported same-sex marriage and 21 per cent were opposed. Among Scottish Presbyterians, 50 per cent supported same-sex marriage and 25 per cent were against. Of those living in the most deprived areas of Scotland, 67 per cent supported same-sex marriage, while the figure for those who live in the most affluent areas was 63 per cent. Frankly, it makes no difference whether someone lives in urban or rural Scotland, because support for same-sex marriage is roughly the same. Support among young people is higher than support among older people. I will explore that in more detail shortly. There is no doubt about current public attitudes.

Let us look at another data set, helpfully provided by Professor John Curtice, who as we know has a wealth of experience in these things. He described a cultural shift in Britain over the past 30 years. According to Professor Curtice, in 1983, 62 per cent of the population believed that same-sex relationships were mostly or always wrong. That figure has dropped to 28 per cent, which is quite extraordinary. His explanation for that shift is that it is young people who increasingly support same-sex marriage. The Equality Network backs that up by telling us that support for same-sex marriage is highest among those who are under 55. Taken together, I believe that that offers the kind of robust and credible evidence that we always pride ourselves on seeking before making policy in this chamber.

On that note, I want to consider what has happened in other countries that have legislated for same-sex marriage. In Europe, since 2001, we have seen the Netherlands, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Norway—I could go on and on—and, most recently, England and Wales, legislate in this area. We also see same-sex marriage in Canada, South Africa, Argentina, New Zealand, Uruguay, Brazil and 17 states in America where it is the norm. Many of those countries are considered to be very religious. A significant number, such as Spain, Portugal, Argentina and Brazil are predominantly Catholic. In Portugal an amazing 81 per cent of the population identify themselves as Catholics, but they have same-sex marriage in place.

In the Netherlands, which was the first country to introduce same-sex marriage, support for their bill was about 62 per cent in 2001. That has now risen to such an extent that I understand that almost everyone there supports same-sex marriage—the highest approval rating of any European country. Apparently some 16,000 people have a same-sex marriage each year out of a nation of 16 million.

When the Parliament passed a law on civil partnerships, we took a huge step forward. Same-sex couples had the legal rights associated with marriage. However, I recognise that, for some, that falls far short of a marriage in which their love and commitment are fully recognised. The Equality Network talks about a gold standard; whatever language we use, it is a matter of equality and fairness.

For a host of reasons, I believe that equal marriage is an idea whose time has come and I will vote in support of the bill this evening.

That said, very few of us in this chamber have been deaf to the concerns that have been raised. I am pleased that we had a robust debate at stage 2 and today in this chamber. I welcome the openness of the chamber to hearing the concerns expressed. It is a sign of a mature Parliament that we have been able to consider the bill in a calm, sensible and objective manner, with tolerance of those who hold differing opinions from ours.

The principal area of concern was in relation to the protections that have been put in place by the Scottish Government. I believe that most members have been persuaded that it will not be possible for any religious or belief body to be forced to perform a same-sex marriage. Celebrants will not be forced to perform a same-sex marriage if it is against their beliefs and no one will be compelled to perform same-sex marriage ceremonies. Under the Government’s proposals, it will be their choice to opt in.

Indeed, throughout consideration of the bill, it has been made clear on numerous occasions that no part of the religious community that does not wish to conduct same-sex marriages will be forced to do so. I believe that that is right and proper: these are matters of conscience, doctrine and belief that are properly for the church and not the state.

Religions already can and do refuse to marry people. That is a matter for them; it is not proposed that that will change in any way. However, I recognise the genuine concerns that people have raised about protections and I very much welcome the arrangement between the Scottish and United Kingdom Governments to amend the UK Equality Act 2010. The 2010 act contains provisions about not discriminating when providing a service, with exemptions for religious and belief bodies that apply in certain circumstances. The Scottish Government has rightly sought the protection to be more comprehensive by asking for a further amendment that would help allay fears about challenges.

Amendments with the aim of respecting the right of those who, as a result of their religious beliefs, take the traditional view of marriage as being between a man and a woman have been considered this afternoon. Concerns have also been highlighted about freedom of speech. I think that the assurances that were given by the cabinet secretary were sufficient to allay those fears.

The Equal Opportunities Committee asked the Scottish Government to look again at the gender recognition provisions and I am pleased that the Government has acted to address those concerns.

For me, the bill is about equality, fairness and social justice: values that are instilled in many of us by our parents, community and society. For many of us, the bill is also about how we see ourselves as a nation, and how others see us. It is about the values that we hold and whether Scotland is indeed a confident, progressive nation where equality is truly valued. It is about our recognition that tolerance and acceptance of all are essential qualities of a mature and civilized society.

We are not the first country to agree to same-sex marriage and we certainly will not be the last. Those countries that have led the way have not suffered any adverse impact on their social and cultural values; in fact, I would suggest quite the opposite.

It is time for change. It is time to support equal marriage.
Jackson Carlaw (West Scotland) (Con): When this parliamentary year started and we came back from the summer recess in full anticipation of passing momentous legislation on same-sex marriage, my personal assistant greeted me at the office and said, “Have you heard the latest? Neil Bibby and Mark Griffin have got engaged.” There was just a moment before the look on my face made her feel that she needed to qualify that and say, “Not to each other.” I noticed that they sat together at the back of the chamber throughout the debate on the amendments this afternoon. On the record, I wish them and their respective—on this occasion—opposite-sex partners every happiness in the marriages that they are about to embark on. [Applause.]

At the stage 1 debate, the Official Report of which I re-read, we heard some outstanding speeches from Ruth Davidson, Marco Biagi, James Dornan, John Lamont and Christian Allard, who was cut off in his prime by you, Presiding Officer, as he got to the peroration of a wonderful anecdote about two gay French farmers, the conclusion of which I hope to hear—

Christian Allard (North East Scotland) (SNP) rose—

Jackson Carlaw: —but in his own time.

On re-reading that Official Report I saw that there were also eloquent speeches from Nigel Don and John Mason, who put the alternative point of view.

As we move past the amendment stage this afternoon, the Parliament is entitled to take a celebratory attitude to the bill that we are about to pass. I congratulate all those across Scotland who have campaigned to bring this moment about: the Equality Network and its indefatigable parliamentary liaison officer, Tom French, and all the others across Scotland who have done this.

I know that there will be a big party in Hemma tonight. My clubbing days are gone; I do not know whether Jackie Baille, Nicola Sturgeon and Alex Neil plan to be dancing tonight. I think that Ruth Davidson could be. I look at Jim Hume and see a bit of a wannabe, so it is possible that he will want to be. Today is a celebration.

I echo what I said when I co-sponsored some equal marriage events. My wife and I have enjoyed 26 years of marriage, not civil partnership. I want every couple in Scotland, regardless of their sex, to be able to have exactly the same opportunity to enjoy a long and happy marriage such as we have had.

I also welcome the fact that those couples will be moving into modern Scottish family life. That includes the experience of single parents who are struggling, either through fate or circumstance or choice, to bring up children on their own. It includes my experience: my mother and father were married and I am the married father of two highly opinionated young sons—how they became so highly opinionated, I have no idea. It also includes the experience of same-sex couples. I hope that they will have the opportunity to enjoy marriage, to be able to rear children in a happy and stable family environment and to have everything that goes with that.

I also take a practical point of view. Our country has an ageing demographic. We do not want people to feel that they have to live alone. I want us to do whatever we can to make it possible for any couple to share a life together. If the marriage legislation that we will pass today encourages that, that will be all to the benefit of our nation.

There has been huge change in my lifetime from the brutal atmosphere in which gay people had to live when I was a teenager and young man, when gay people felt that they had to strangle their sexuality. I know some of those people—I am in the Tory party after all. [Laughter.] Okay, it is a common point for everyone else.

Today is a fantastic change to be celebrated in the mood, style, signature and stamp of my country, Scotland. Let me chuck in a bit of musical theatre, because it is that kind of debate, is it not? Rodgers and Hammerstein’s 1943 musical “South Pacific” was made into a movie in 1958, the year before I was born. As a 12-year-old, I was confronted by this particular lyric:

You’ve got to be taught to hate and fear,
You’ve got to be taught from year to year,
It’s got to be drummed in your dear little ear,
You’ve got to be taught to hate and fear,

I am in—

You’ve got to be taught before it’s too late,
Before you are six or seven or eight,
To hate all the people your relatives hate,
You’ve got to be carefully taught!

I do not ascribe any of those prejudices to anyone in the chamber this afternoon, but what that song said to me as a 12-year-old is that we can come into politics and hope to change the attitudes in the country about sexual, racial and religious equality. We politicians have the opportunity today to be part of a generation that teaches the next generation, without prescribing the word “teach” too strongly, about the kind of country that they want to work in, to live in, to marry in, and the country that I want to vote for tonight.

The Presiding Officer: We now move to the open debate. We are heavily subscribed, notwithstanding the cabinet secretary’s efforts. I advise members that the first few speakers can have six minutes but, thereafter, all other speakers will get five minutes. That way, I will make sure that I can get all the voices in the Parliament into the debate.

16:34

Marco Biagi (Edinburgh Central) (SNP): Presiding Officer,

“I am a migrant with a German passport who was born in a former Soviet country. I want to stay because I learned that Scotland is a place where race and origin matters less than where I came from. This is the most wonderful place I want to live in. This is the society I want to contribute to. Please extend this liberty to other people who face discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation.”

Valeri, from Fountainbridge.

“As a member of the Quaker community I find it unacceptable that we are unable to have our registrars conduct same-sex marriages or civil partnerships within our meeting houses.”

Anthony, from the old town.

“I have been with my wife for eight years and we became civil partners five years ago. I usually use the terms ‘wife’ and ‘marriage’ when describing my relationship as to me they describe perfectly the nature of our relationship, however, I am painfully aware that in the eyes of Scottish and UK law those terms are not applicable and we are left with the term civil partners, a term that makes us sound as if we are in business together as opposed to a loving monogamous relationship.”

Angela, from Haymarket.

“I remember as a little girl asking my mother why two ladies couldn’t marry each other and her struggling to answer. As I grew up I began to understand it was not for any logical reason but just that some of our rules are unfair but we don’t like to change things that have always been that way.”

Annie, from Dalry.

“When I came out as gay in my later teens clause 28 was still in law. Homosexuality was never mentioned at school, at least not in a positive context, making growing up gay isolating and often painful. But I do think about the young people growing up gay today and what a difference it would make to their self-esteem and confidence to know that they are equal in the face of the law and could get married, perhaps just as their parents did or their heterosexual friends may do. Without equality in the face of the law how can these kids grow up feeling equal?”

David, from the new town.

“My other role model for a successful loving relationship is that of my best friend’s parents. His father had a sex change about 30 years ago, and my friend grew up knowing her as his aunt. They are still married, and have been for almost as long as my own parents. I count them as close friends today, but growing up they were my second set of parents.

Because of the current unequal laws on marriage she’s never been formally recognised as a woman. They couldn’t face the divorce which would be required under the current laws. Forced to choose between state recognition of gender, or their marriage, they chose the latter. She has lived for 30 years with a physical identity at odds with her legal one.”

Patrick, from Fountainbridge.

“I ‘came out’ at the age of 15, just over ten years ago now, to a fairly rough school in Edinburgh. I was surprised to find that I was met with relatively little negativity from my peers, and nothing but support from my teachers. My mother took the revelation rather badly. She had an image of gay people, one that she presumed meant I would be bullied all of my life; that I’d never have a ‘normal’ loving partner to grow old with; that I’d never have children. She was convinced it was her fault—that she’d consigned me to a fate of certain pain. Yes, bullying will inevitably continue. But let’s not fan that fire by keeping equal people on different sides of a barrier. So please, let’s not look on this as a matter of ‘just’ words and definitions. Words and definitions go a long way to moulding attitudes and challenging prejudices.”

Adam, from Gorgie.

In November 2013, at stage 1 of the bill, I told my own story. On this historic day, I wanted to throw open the doors of this chamber to let in the voices of just some of the 429 constituents who have been moved to ask me to vote yes today. I never needed persuading.

I hear one last voice today:

“We give you our deepest dearest wish to govern well, don’t say we have no mandate to be so bold. We give you this great building, don’t let your work and hope be other than great”.

That was Edwin Morgan. Wherever he is, today he is smiling.

16:39

Margaret McCulloch (Central Scotland) (Lab): I support same-sex marriage as a matter of principle. Not long after I was elected to the Parliament, I was proud to pledge my support to the equal marriage campaign. However, legislators have a responsibility to make sure that all sides of the debate are heard, that everyone’s rights are respected and that all bills undergo proper scrutiny.

That is exactly what I have tried to do as the convener of the Equal Opportunities Committee and I can say the same for my committee colleagues. Whatever our initial thoughts about the principles behind the bill, we worked together to take evidence, over several months, to produce a balanced and comprehensive report on the bill and to debate many of the amendments that have returned to the chamber in some form today. At the end of that process, having listened carefully to the different arguments that have been made, I am more convinced than ever that it is right to pass the bill and to legislate for equal marriage.
Much has been made in the debate of the state of public opinion. We have been told that the majority of respondents to the Government’s consultation opposed changing the law and that to do so would therefore be against the wishes of the Scottish people. It has even been suggested that the bill should be put to a referendum. However, I do not believe that the rights of any minority should be dependent on the will of a majority at a particular point in time. Nor do I believe that members should take a view on the bill on the basis of the way that they think the wind is blowing. We must do what we believe is right.

Nonetheless, let us take a closer look at public opinion. Professor John Curtice reminded the committee that pro forma letters and emails that are part of an organised campaign might tell us more about the structure than the state of public opinion. Opinion polls actually show that 60 to 65 per cent of the public support same-sex marriage and that is consistent with the findings of the independent Scottish social attitudes survey.

Many of the amendments that have been presented today, like those that were presented to the committee, relate to concerns about how the bill might affect people who have a traditional view of marriage. In my view, such amendments are unnecessary, because sufficient safeguards to protect the rights of those people either already exist or are provided for in the bill. The only religious or belief bodies that will solemnise a same-sex marriage and the only religious celebrants who will participate are those who want to. That is what the opt-in approach that has been taken in the bill is all about—legislating for equal marriage but securing the right of religious and belief bodies to decide whether they want to be part of it.

No prospective foster carer or adoptive parent should be refused solely on the basis of their views about same-sex marriage. The best interests of the child should come first, as they do under the law at present. Furthermore, the right to express a traditional view of marriage as being between one man and one woman is already protected by our freedom of expression; it does not require a specific mention in the bill.

There is one amendment that was withdrawn during stage 2 on which I want to press the cabinet secretary today. One of the Equal Opportunities Committee’s concerns at stage 1 was that the bill does not allow couples in a civil partnership that is registered in another country to change their civil partnership to a marriage in Scotland. That could leave those couples trapped outside the law as the only same-sex couples unable to marry in Scotland. I was, therefore, happy that at stage 2 the Scottish Government recognised the problem and committed to dealing with it. However, the point is to be addressed by order and not through primary legislation, to allow the Government time to consult on the detail of it. It is important to me and to several other committee members that the Government act on that point and that any change is done right.

At stage 2, my committee colleague John Finnie asked the cabinet secretary:

“can you give an undertaking that the general policy approach on the matter will be, as far as possible, to enable all same-sex couples with foreign civil partnerships to marry in Scotland?”

The cabinet secretary’s response was:

“Absolutely, and that is why I need time to get the approach right.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 19 December 2013; c 1707.]

In the light of that guarantee given at stage 2, I ask the cabinet secretary to provide more information about the process of introducing an order to deal with that specific point and the timescale that we could expect the order to be delivered in.

This Parliament has come a long way since the debate on section 28 and it has come even further since the introduction of civil partnerships. The case for equal marriage has been made. The safeguards are there. The bill does not curtail religious freedom, it enhances it. The bill does not deal in half measures for same-sex couples, but gives them the same rights that every other couple has. Let us vote today for a bill that we have already waited too long for. Let us vote today for a fairer Scotland.

16:45

Alex Johnstone (North East Scotland) (Con):

Members will not be surprised to discover—if they do not know already—that I will vote with the minority at decision time tonight. However, I have no intention of dwelling on that, as I wish to talk about other things that have happened during the passage of the bill.

First, I highlight the respect that has existed between the two sides during the process. I draw attention in particular to the work of the committee under its convener. The committee was fairly evenly split, yet it conducted itself in a manner befitting the Parliament. In fact, the quality of the debate and of the evidence that we received from both sides is to be highly commended.

There have been one or two bad experiences. After the stage 1 debate, I, like many members of the Parliament, had some interesting emails and tweets. However, none of the more hostile correspondence that I received came from anyone who had a vested interest in the debate. I believe that those who took one side or the other in the debate have conducted themselves in an exemplary manner throughout.

I will say a little about those who were opposed to this change in the law. It is vital that both sides are heard during the legislative process, and it was therefore essential that, in a debate in which there was likely to be a majority position and a minority position in the Parliament, those on the minority side who came to give evidence felt that their views were taken seriously and treated with respect.

A number of us on the committee, and others in the Parliament, have worked hard to ensure that the minority view has been represented. I hope that those individuals and organisations feel that the Parliament has given them a fair crack of the whip. It is essential that both sides feel that they have been listened to, right to the very end of the process.

It is disappointing that none of the amendments—particularly those lodged by John Mason and Siobhan McMahon for consideration today—was accepted by the Parliament. I believe that, if some token had been given, those who take the alternative view might have felt engaged in the process right to the end. However, there has been significant involvement and buy-in throughout the process.

John Finnie (Highlands and Islands) (Ind): Will the member accept that it should be the quality rather than the quantity that matters when it comes to amendments?

Alex Johnstone: Indeed. That is very much the case, as the way in which the evidence has been treated throughout the process indicates.

As I said, I am disappointed that we were not able to find some compromise that would have allowed some of the amendments to be accepted. It remains a concern among many on the minority side that there will be an on-going effect. I think that it has been accepted in the arguments from both sides that the bill makes such a substantial change that it changes many things in ways that we will not be able to predict.

I hope and pray that we will have the positive outcome that many people have spoken about and that we will not experience the potentially negative consequences that some have described. Nevertheless, we should all be ready in case we are not so lucky.

Looking to the future, my one disappointment with the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill is that although it dealt with a number of key issues, it did not deal with the significance of marriage in society as a whole. I am not stupid enough to fail to realise that there are today many different models and that we have to work to support all the models with equal vigour. However, I also believe and am prepared to argue that society itself in recent years has been weakened by the weakening of marriage as a bedrock of society. I believe that we need to look carefully at the significant role that marriage plays in building strong families and a strong society. Although I accept the broad and different definition of family that we have today, I believe that it is right that we continue to argue for the strength of marriage as a cornerstone of society.

It is for that reason that, although I accept that I will not be on the successful side after the vote tonight, I believe that we must continue to press for marriage to be the cornerstone and bedrock that makes for strong families and a strong society. During my lifetime, marriage’s role in society has weakened and I think that we have seen society suffer. However, I think that we can reverse that trend. I believe that we can do that even in the context of substantial changes to marriage such as that in the bill.

I would like to see in future a Government that consolidates the achievement of the bill as it becomes an act and ensures that we go on to take advantage of the opportunity that marriage and family give us to strengthen society and make the future of our children stronger as a result.

The Presiding Officer: The next speeches will be of five minutes.

16:51

James Dornan (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP): I start by responding to the point that Alex Johnstone just made. I would have thought that, if anything, the bill would strengthen marriage because it makes marriage much more acceptable for every sector of society. I also think that Alex Johnstone’s argument about the weakening of marriage being at the root of all evil over the past decades is a bit simplistic. However, the bill can only help to strengthen marriage and make it more acceptable to everybody across society.

I would like to thank Jackson Carlaw for his kind words, but he clearly does not want to hear my words as he is not present. He gave a very eloquent speech, but it left me feeling a wee bit empty because when he started to talk about “South Pacific” I was fairly confident that he was going to sing but, unfortunately, he did not.

When I got elected to Parliament in 2011, I realised very quickly that we were going to be part of something special and that Scottish National Party members were going to be part of at least one memorable day and event, which would be the referendum. What I had not quite realised was that there would be other opportunities to do something really historic. Today is one of those rare days when I can say as a politician that, no matter what happens, even if today is my last day as a politician—and given that the vote goes the way that I hope it will tonight; I do not know what time it will take place now, Presiding Officer, but it will be some time after six—my colleagues and I will have made a difference to improve the lives and rights of many people across Scotland. We should all be proud of that.

Like others, I recognise that there has been a change in society. I recognise what it was like a long time ago and when I was growing up. That we have come to where we are in such a comparatively short period of time in historical terms—although I have been here a fair length of time, to be fair—is something that we should be immensely proud of. As I said in a previous speech, I have no concerns about safeguards with regard to the bill. All the safeguards are in place and I am confident that celebrants and religious bodies will find that to be the case.

In my speech last November on same-sex marriage, I talked about my brother Michael and how he had just contacted me to tell me that he was going to get married. As things often happen, he phoned me very quickly after that and said “I’m not just getting married, James. I’m getting married next Wednesday.” So, I had to contact Joe FitzPatrick, who I have to give huge thanks to because he was incredibly helpful, along with the whip’s team—Bill Kidd, Fiona McLeod and Graeme Dey, who covered for me when I was away—and I managed to get away to see Michael getting married. It was a lovely ceremony that was very small and family oriented.

There were two things about it. One is that I was the only member of our family who was there. That is understandable as it was very short notice; I also have a very understanding boss and I could afford to go. Other members of my family could not afford to go in that time period, and my mother is 79 years of age and she could not travel to Lisbon, so there was a hole. It would have been perfect if members of the family had been able to go. I have no doubt that if we had had the legislation in Scotland, the wedding would have been here, because Raoul has a smaller family than ours and they are more mobile than us, so they would have come over here and we would have had that opportunity. That was a shame.

The other thing is that it did not rain. I looked back to that UK Independence Party comment and I thought, “No—that just can’t be true.” There was no thunder and lightning. It was a lovely sunny day. The sun was even shining through the windows. It was just a perfect, lovely day, so that was really strange.

In my previous speech, I said that my opinion was that they were getting married because they had got to an age at which they thought that it was right to ensure that their affairs were settled, and I knew that it was a strong relationship. But when I was over there, what really got to me was that I realised just how much the day meant to them. That kind of surprised me. It was the right thing for them to do to ensure that, as they get into their 60s, everything is settled, but it is a marriage based on love, and it was an absolutely lovely thing to see. I was honoured and delighted to be there. I just wish that it could have been here.

I finish with two quotes. One is from more than 2,000 years ago and the other is from more than 150 years ago. The first is:

“The only stable state is the one in which all men are equal before the law.”

If we take it that “men” means the species as opposed to the gender, that is a good quote. I said that because Nicola Sturgeon was giving me a funny look. [Laughter.] The other quote is from Robert Ingersoll, who was a civil war veteran, a political leader and a radical orator. He said:

“The true civilisation is where every man gives to every other man every right he claims for himself.”

I suggest that includes the right to be married. On that note, I am delighted and proud to support the motion.

16:57

Richard Lyle (Central Scotland) (SNP): Tonight, I will be out of step with the majority of the Parliament, and I regret that. However, I am grateful for the opportunity to speak at what is undoubtedly an historic moment for Scotland. It is historic because the institution of marriage, which has been at the core of our culture for centuries, is on the cusp of being changed forever. Many people welcome that. They say, “Why not have equal marriage? Why deny gay people the right to marry?” They argue that the status quo is discriminatory. I understand that line of argument, which has certainly been embraced by the vast majority of my fellow parliamentarians, but it is not one that I can agree with.

It is my conviction, and the conviction of many thousands of Christians, Muslims, people of other faiths and people of no faith, that marriage is unique—a unique relationship between a man and a woman. In recent months, polls have been cited to indicate that Scotland supports the bill, but I am not convinced that that is the case. Some 54,000 people signed Scotland for Marriage’s petition against the bill and, of the 62,000 people in Scotland who expressed a view during the Government’s main consultation on whether same-sex marriage should be introduced, 64 per cent—almost 40,000 people—said that it should not. Many of my fellow citizens have spoken clearly, but I am not convinced that we are listening.

Whether or not one accepts that the majority of Scots oppose the bill, the balance of views in the Parliament, where there is near-overwhelming enthusiasm for same-sex marriage, is hugely disproportionate to that in the country at large. That is why the various amendments that John Mason, Siobhan McMahon and I lodged, which were discussed earlier this afternoon, were significant and deserved the support of all MSPs, including those who favour same-sex marriage. Those amendments sought to ensure that the many thousands of Scots who disagree with the bill would have their views respected and protected once the law is changed.

In reply to Mr Harvie’s comments on amendment 1, I can say that I was branded homophobic in various emails. I brought my children up to respect people for what they are. Basically, that is how my make-up has always been.

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): Will the member give way?

Richard Lyle: No, I will not. I have only five minutes.

There are adoptive parents out there who are frightened that their opposition to same-sex marriage will be misunderstood.

I ask Jackie Baillie and the cabinet secretary to tell the Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator about charitable status, because OSCR ain’t listening to the cabinet secretary. He can write OSCR a letter and see where that gets him. I found out as a councillor that written policy counts for more than letters; when someone said “It’s policy, councillor,” that was fine—we could drive it forward.

My good friend Jim Eadie and I first met when I entered the Parliament. He told me that he was adopted and that he was gay. He is my friend, and I hope that I will still be his after today. I respect his views and I know that he respects mine.

Supporters of the bill claim that the amendments that I mentioned would have permitted discrimination against same-sex couples. That is untrue. The fact that such a claim was made shows why protection is necessary. Not one non-Government amendment was supported, which was disappointing.

Time and again, we have heard supposed reassurances from proponents of the bill that no church will be forced to conduct a same-sex marriage and that religious celebrants will be protected. That is all well and good but, as those who oppose the bill have said repeatedly, that is not the major issue.

As the Rev David Robertson of the Free Church of Scotland said at stage 1,

“My concern is not so much about the clergy—to be honest, we can look after ourselves—as about other people, who might find themselves victims of discrimination.”—[Official Report, Equal Opportunities Committee, 12 September 2013; c 1451.]

That has happened even before the law has been changed. A former leader of my party, Gordon Wilson, was voted off the board of his local citizens advice bureau in 2011 because of his public support for marriage. Some MSPs who do not support the bill have experienced vitriolic abuse for refusing to back the change in the law.

That is why many people have concerns about the impact that the change in the law will have on many Scots who, for sincere reasons of conscience, cannot endorse same-sex marriage. They are not bigots, as some suppose, but they are fearful, particularly if they are in public service jobs.

In closing, I will say a few words about recent events surrounding St Margaret’s Children and Family Care Society. The success of that agency’s appeal is great news and demonstrates a welcome dose of common sense. However, the cost, time and effort for that small charity to get the result, and the fact that OSCR sought to remove its charitable status in the first place, underline why we are worried.

The Presiding Officer: You need to bring your remarks to a close.

Richard Lyle: That happened before the law is changed.

I know that I will not win tonight, but I will vote in line with my conscience, in the way that I have always stood up for my constituents.

17:02

Drew Smith (Glasgow) (Lab): The debate is no less welcome for being long awaited. At decision time, Scotland can become the 17th or the 26th country or territory around the world—it depends on how we count it; I will not go into the constitutional issues—to legislate for equal marriage rights for same-sex couples. We will pass what many regard as the last great reform that is required to achieve full equality in law for lesbian, bisexual and gay people.

It is true that equality in law will not immediately mean the end of discrimination in all its forms, but it will mean the completion of the first phase of a campaign that began in Scotland at the end of the 1960s and which achieved the decriminalisation of homosexuality in 1980, as others have said. That landmark achievement was slowly followed by equalisation of the age of consent and, ultimately, couples in the 19th century had to keep their relationships secret. The bill also makes significant progress on the inclusion of trans and intersex people. After today, campaigning for LGBT people—for example, for better sexual health and education policies and against bullying or stigma—will go on, but the crucial point is that it will do so on a similar basis to that for other groups and from the starting point of full legal equality.

While other countries around the world, including our neighbours in England and Wales, have taken the lead, those of us who have supported marriage equality in Scotland have watched and hoped that our day was coming closer. As each country has taken the step, the pressure for change has increased.

In each nation, the story of the fight for equality has been different. Each land has its own progressive coalitions, which have been built up over time and which are unique to the relationships and experiences of its people. However, the discrimination and oppression that too many gay and lesbian people have faced have been all too similar. It is said that the world is becoming a smaller place but, for lesbian and gay travellers throughout the generations, the most far-flung destinations must have seemed familiar, because the reality of discrimination has been a constant and near universal fear, wherever it is called home. Therefore, I am proud that Scotland can today join the places where difference is something more when I use the word “accepted”. The prize is not that we no longer care who gets married to whom, but that we recognise individual human relationships. The commitment to love another person and to spend our days with and for that person can today be on the table.

When I spoke in support of the bill at stage 1, I said that I wanted to do more than just win an argument for tolerance. Therefore, I also mean something more when I use the word “accepted”. The prize is not that we no longer care who gets married to whom, but that we recognise individual human relationships. The commitment to love another person and to spend our days with and for them can be a very private matter, but it can also be a proudly public one, if that is wanted. To my mind, that is the right that the bill creates, and it is one that, distinct from civil partnerships, should be available in the same terms to all couples, regardless of their sexuality and whether they profess a faith. That is the right that other countries have created, and we should join them. We should do so not just for our own people in Scotland in order that the state is truly the enemy of discrimination among its citizens rather than just the arbitrator, but because history has already taught us that we are on her right side.

In the coming weeks, the eyes of the world will be on Sochi and the winter Olympics there. We will be reminded that the world is not so small and that the attitudes that we rightly condemn in Russia are far more the norm there and elsewhere than what we might boastfully feel are our own enlightened views.

Each Parliament that has already made the change has done so in its own fashion. In some, there have been tears, hugs and the singing of national or protest songs. Jackson Carlaw took us somewhat towards that, but not the whole way, thankfully. Our chance at history comes at just after 6 o’clock, but it must be living history for much longer afterwards. We need a Scotland in which we renew our determination to eliminate homophobia and to celebrate, not just tolerate, diversity. We need determination that our small—and, I predict, positive—example will help to ensure that we are not for long the latest legalisers of equal marriage but rather are among the early adopters of change that has already taken far too long. It should be remembered that, for many people in the world, we will be just a far-off dream.

Those of us in the Parliament who have campaigned for equal marriage will be pleased with our work today and our work towards today, but there are many days of individual celebration ahead. Those days—not this day—will show that what has been done in the first few countries is more than a dream; it is a hope for all lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people, wherever they live and whatever their experience. That is why I feel very privileged to support the bill.

17:07

Linda Fabiani (East Kilbride) (SNP): It is an absolute delight to be in the chamber today and to pass the bill very soon, I hope.

I thank not only all those who have worked hard to bring to fruition the principles that many people have worked for for years but those who have worked hard on the technicalities and have tried to ensure that, as far as possible, as the convener of the Equal Opportunities Committee, Margaret McCulloch, said, everyone was heard with dignity and respect on a subject that evokes strong emotions on all sides.

I am glad that we are here but, for me, it is not really the detail that matters; it is the principle and the ethic that says to me, “This is absolutely the right thing to do.” Everybody can think of people, whether from their childhood or family members, who have been badly affected by the discrimination that has happened. Let us not forget that it was only in 1980, I think, that we decriminalised homosexuality in this country. That is not that long ago.

I want to see the kind of society that has said at a top level, “We’re creating equality by allowing same-sex marriage,” and in which people such as my great-uncle do not have to run down to London... and live apart from their family, as my great-uncle had to do so that he could live with someone he loved. There was also my uncle, who had an absolutely rotten childhood, adolescence and adulthood, very much based on his psyche and his having to live a life that was a pretence. Members will notice that I am not saying their names. That is because there are still people out there to whom that would be a bit of a revelation. I respect the memory of both men; they hid what they were for very valid reasons.

I also want to live in a society in which actors do not have to portray in real life the characters that they portray on screen. Yes, we have come a long way on that but there is still a bit of discrimination going on in that area.

I want to live—and represent the constituency of East Kilbride—in a country in which I do not have the occasional young person coming to me and saying, “I have to admit to everyone that I am gay,” or “I have to admit to everyone that I am bisexual,” and asking, “Do you know anyone who will support me or help me?” I do not want people to have to admit to anything. I want people to just be people and to be the way that they are, and I want everyone to be treated equally in the eyes of the law.

To go back to the earlier discussion about civil marriage, religious marriage and civil partnerships, everyone should be equal and have equal chances and equal opportunities. My colleague Stewart Maxwell was quite right about that. The reality is that we have civil partnerships now—they are there. There should be equality for anyone who wants to take part in any of those options.

I am not married—I have chosen not to be married. Duncan may have something to do with that as well, right enough, so we have chosen not to be married. If we choose to have a civil partnership—if that comes in—it does not matter what the differences are between civil marriage and civil partnership. It will be my choice and absolutely no business of anyone in the chamber or anyone else what we choose to do if the law says that we have that opportunity—that everyone has that opportunity.

I loved Stewart Maxwell’s comment that sometimes people are forced to choose between different kinds of apples; it is not always about choosing between apples and pears. I will leave my colleagues to decide whether I am a soor old Granny Smith or a sweet Pink Lady. [Laughter.] Maybe I do not want to hear the answer to that.

Yes, we have done something pretty wonderful today and I am really pleased about that, but let us not kid ourselves that everything is solved just because we put this into legislation. There is still a long way to go. There is still discrimination out there and there are still a lot of people who need support before we get to the point at which, in reality, it just does not matter a toss what someone’s sexuality is.

I cannot mention everyone who has been involved in the bill but I will mention the Equality Network—

The Presiding Officer: It will have to be brief, Ms Fabiani.

Linda Fabiani: Absolutely. The Equality Network is saying that there is still a lot more work to do to tackle prejudice and to ensure that LGBT people receive equal treatment across society—yes. It is time for change so let us move on and build on what we have done today.

17:13

Jim Hume (South Scotland) (LD): Fairness and equality run through the veins of every true Liberal Democrat I know. We want Scotland to be one of the fairest and most equal places in the world. That is why we support the bill enabling gay, transgender and lesbian couples to marry. When MSPs met to debate the bill back in November, I was pleased to have the opportunity to vote in favour of the bill and I of course remain supportive of the bill.

The bill demonstrates that our society values every person equally, irrespective of their sexuality, and that we regard every relationship as worthy of equal recognition. If two people in a loving relationship want to formalise that relationship through a religious or civil marriage ceremony, that should be the case. They should not be prevented from doing so. In other words, there should be no differentiation between what is available to same-sex or to mixed-sex couples.

I strongly believe that that sense of fairness and equality also runs deep in the psyche of every Scot. Indeed, that view has been reflected in the emails and letters that I have received over the past few months. Key to the whole debate has been the issue of respect for everyone’s opinions and getting the balance right.

The bill as it stood earlier struck a good balance. It was recognised that, in voting to uphold the intention of the bill to allow for equal marriage, it was also important to respect the rights of individuals and faith organisations not to carry out same-sex marriages if they do not wish to. I believe that the stage 2 amendments acknowledged that balance.

As a Lib Dem and someone who was brought up in a household of good churchgoers—with a mother who broke another mould by becoming the first woman elder in the parish—I believe that it is important to do the right thing. Inequality is a form of oppression and can manifest itself in many forms, some more subtle than others, and to varying degrees. It is true that society has come a long way on gay rights and equality issues, but I do not buy the argument that gay people should be happy with what they have, as though they have already been given some special concession.

The idea that a gay couple should have no legal right to a religious or civil marriage ceremony makes the massive assumption that marriage does not apply to those in a same-sex relationship and that they cannot express their religious view or commitment to marriage. To take that a step further, preventing same-sex couples from marrying is preventing a section of the population from expressing their marriage beliefs, which in my view represents a subtle and creeping oppression.

Back in the 19th century, the businesswoman Anne Lister, whose diaries, which were discovered after her death, revealed much about her private life, said it best when she wrote of her sexuality:

“This is my nature. To act in opposition to my nature would be more wrong for me than to be a married woman. I am living my life with the nature that God gave me. It is perfectly ok”.

As an aside, it is interesting to note that Anne Lister should primarily be remembered for being the so-called “first modern lesbian”. In fact, she is arguably a role model for women and men to this day. She was an independent businesswoman in her own right and became one of the first women to climb the Pyrenees. She lived her life her way, with the nature that God gave her.

We are not giving preferential treatment to any one group; we are simply saying that everyone, regardless of sexual orientation, should have the same rights. Anything less is inhumane. I am proud to stand up for equality of marriage in Scotland. There can be no excuse for isolating a section of the population for any reason, whether that is on the basis of religious affiliation, skin colour or gender. For that reason, I will be proud to support the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill through its final stage today, as will, I believe, my fellow Lib Dems.

I should recognise the many constituents who have contacted me and others in support of the bill. We should also recognise the positive campaign, in particular by Stonewall and the Equality Network, throughout the debate. We should of course have respect for other people’s views, in the chamber and outside it.

We should also give recognition to Alex Neil for his determination to bring the bill to the Parliament and for the meetings that he held with me and others to ensure that Scotland can be seen as a leading light for equality. I look forward to voting yes for this historic bill at decision time today.

17:17

John Mason (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP):
The process has been a long one. I thank members, the clerks and others who have helped with a professional attitude throughout. I first said something publicly on same-sex marriage in August 2011, which was about two and a half years ago, and I realise that others have been campaigning on the issue on either side for a lot longer than that. Therefore, it will be good to reach a decision today; then we can, I hope, get on with other business and with rebuilding relationships, which might have been strained during the process. I have to say that I am disappointed that none of my amendments was accepted today.

I have previously said that I am relaxed about the introduction of same-sex marriage if no one will be disadvantaged by it. However, early on in the process, it became clear that changing marriage would have significant repercussions throughout society. We need to be realistic and accept that this is a significant change in how our society operates. Although some see it as a major step forward on human rights, others feel that a key part of their lives and experience and a key building block of society is being undermined. As we have seen in other countries, same-sex marriage will continue to be an area of controversy even after it is introduced.

Ideally, we all want a society in which everyone is treated equally and minority views are at least tolerated, if not welcomed. However, the fear among some people is that we might see a switch from lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people being discriminated against to religious or other people with a traditional view being discriminated against. Will Christians and others be squeezed out of working in the public sector? We are not sure.

Jim Hume: I do not like to say that the member is scaremongering, but does he have any evidence at all of religious organisations being squeezed out?

John Mason: We have gone over some of this already, but it appears that, for example, somebody with traditional committed Christian or Muslim beliefs cannot be a registrar in the public sector.

I do not think that that is the Government’s intention, and I accept that some safeguards have been built in. I also accept that we can never have 100 per cent safeguards or know where the courts will go in future. I am therefore disappointed at the Parliament’s response to the amendments on that issue that were proposed today.
There are parts of the bill that are not controversial. The controversial part is clearly same-sex marriage. However, the bill comes against a backdrop of questions about the place of religion in society, which will be an issue in the future whether or not Scotland gains independence.

There is a clear trend away from religion these days. Society seems to be becoming increasingly secular and humanist. However, it is also interesting to look a little below the surface and see how people react at times of stress and loss.

We did not take evidence from the Scottish Independent Celebrants Association, but it has spoken to MSPs in Parliament. Independent celebrants report how many people approach them for a funeral not wanting a full church or religious service but still wanting a hymn and a prayer, which the humanists cannot provide.

It was also interesting how many people speaking about the recent helicopter crash who would not normally be seen as religious talked about our thoughts and prayers being with the families of victims and attended church services and mass.

We are in an untidy kind of society that is perhaps not as Christian as I would like or as humanist as Patrick Harvie would like, but we need to recognise where people are at. For many, that includes a bit of faith and religion, at least below the surface.

The relationship between church and state is part of the debate as well. I am clear that church and state should be separate and that the church should not be in a privileged position, as it has been in the past—neither the church nor the state benefited from that.

The bill is not perfect and could have been improved more along the way. However, the key point for me and others is that we may well be, and probably are, opening the door for more discrimination against religious and other people who think a bit differently from the rest of society. I hope that I am proved wrong in that, but the signs are not encouraging.

For that reason, I feel forced to vote against the bill.

17:22

John Finnie (Highlands and Islands) (Ind): I thank the various groups that provided briefings for the debate. One line in the Equality Network briefing said that it would make Scotland fair and more equal if we agreed to the bill, and I agree with that.

The Parliament has an important role in serving the people of Scotland, and we know that the people of Scotland have different genders, races, sexualities and localities.

The committee structure plays a key role in our scrutiny of legislation. Much has been said about the Equal Opportunities Committee. I thank our convener, Margaret McCulloch, for her comments and her résumé of the work that took place. I also thank our valuable committee staff, who were tremendously helpful in providing support to enable us to scrutinise the bill.

A lot of evidence was taken and, like many, I have had a lot of communications. Some of them have not been particularly measured and others have clearly indicated that they have not read the proposals, which is a bit disappointing.

Of particular interest was a line of emails that I got. As someone who has spent all but a handful of years in the Highlands—I was born, was brought up and live there—I found being told that I could not possibly be a Highlander or I would not support the bill to be quite dismissive of an entire population and, indeed, the geography of the place.

In many locations around the globe—sadly, 21st century Scotland is no different—people choose selective tracts from a book of their choice to support various things. That might be girls not being educated; women not being allowed to be doctors or to drive motor vehicles; the mode of dress that can be worn; boys and girls not being allowed to be educated in the same room; the races being segregated; children being beaten; interfaith and interrace marriages being banned; goats being thrown off towers to their deaths; and people who love each other not being allowed to marry.

There have been many entirely reasonably expressed views. I do not go for the hierarchy. We either believe in equality or we do not; there is no hierarchy within that.

I will quote two of the communications that I have had. One is from a monk in an abbey in the Highlands and Islands, who concludes by saying:

“Of course the main victims in your favoured legislation will be children—but they don’t vote, so obviously can be safely ignored”.

I have to say that I will be safely ignoring that gentleman.

I commend the approach to children that is taken by Stonewall Scotland, which says:

“Existing law already states, rightly, that all decisions on adoption or fostering must be based on the best interests of the child. Stonewall Scotland agrees that prospective foster carers and adoptive parents should not be rejected solely because of their views on same-sex marriage. We do believe, however, that potential adoptive parents or foster carers should be assessed on whether they have a range of skills to support looked after children, including those who may grow up to be lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender or may be experiencing homophobic or transphobic bullying.

What a contrast between the views of that proponent of faith adherence and the support that we have had in the way of briefings from equality groups.

Similarly, like other members, I have received a communication from a Free Presbyterian minister, who says:

“If you ignore this warning”—the warning not to support the bill—

“I am clear from complicity of you dying in your iniquity.”

He adds that his “conscience will be purged from any involvement in the national sin.”

I have news for the Rev Campbell: I am going to die, and my death certificate will not state that the cause of death was iniquity or involvement in the national sin.

To those sadly loveless communicants, I say that I, too, can quote from a book. The book that I will quote from says:

“A new command I give you: Love one another. As I have loved you, so you must love one another.”

A lot has been made of statistics, and Jackie Baillie has alluded to the social attitudes survey. To me, it is not about who can get the bigger gang together but about which group values equality more. We have heard about the civil registrars and the contrast with the faith adherents, but who would want to get married in a situation involving duress anyway?

It is quite clear to me that one person’s morality is another person’s prejudice. I am sad to say that we have heard a lot of prejudice in relation to this bill. As I have said before, I do not think that there can be any caveats in relation to equality.

We have an opportunity to make history. Not many people get that. There have been vital votes on franchise and slavery, and the future analysis of that has been important. James Dornan will be seen to have acted to make a difference.

I have one final quote—

The Presiding Officer: You need to make it brief.

John Finnie: Martin Luther King Jnr said:

“I have decided to stick with love. Hate is too big a burden to bear.”

I ask others to facilitate the love that would allow people to marry, and to support this legislation.

17:27

Mary Fee (West Scotland) (Lab): In my view, this bill is the single most important piece of legislation that the Parliament has delivered. That is a hard feat to achieve. It is bigger than the smoking ban and it is bigger than the Scottish Independence Referendum Bill. The Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill will deliver real change on equality in Scotland.

We have all heard about the evil consequences that are going to occur and about the effects that same-sex marriage will have on children. However, I am sure that we can all agree that continually talking about same-sex relationships in demeaning and bigoted tones will promote more harm to children, especially those who may have difficulty in accepting their sexuality.

The Bible and the teachings of Jesus are supposed to promote love and forgiveness. However, throughout this campaign, I have seen little evidence of that from certain opposition groups. I ask those who are concerned about and campaign about the consequences of same-sex marriage for children: where is the campaign to stop divorce? In 2011-12, there were 9,503 divorces in Scotland. What of those children and their rights? As the Bible says,

“What therefore God has joined together, let not man separate.”

Is it the case that that law of God is wilfully being ignored? The Bible also explicitly forbids cutting one’s hair and trimming one’s facial hair. The Bible also supports slavery.

I would like to stress at this point that I am not criticising any individual for their religious belief; I am merely pointing out the hypocrisy of certain opposition groups. The Bible has been used in representations to me as a means of reinforcing opposition to the bill. I merely point out a couple of other areas in the Bible that should perhaps be reflected on if groups want to be fair and honest and to have due regard to equality.

Our society has become increasingly liberal, tolerant, accepting and understanding. I hope that that continues over the decades and centuries to come. We have also become more secular; there is a correlation between increased secularism and liberalism. The bill is stronger than it was at stage 1, although there were amendments that were not agreed to that would have increased equality for LGBT couples, especially young transgender adults. In easing the worries of opposition groups, the Scottish and UK Governments have made amendments to the Equality Act 2010 and guaranteed the freedoms that we have been asked to protect today.

As I said in November, enough safeguards are already in place without needing some of the amendments that were lodged. In our current political landscape, we hear about Scotland becoming a fairer and more equal society. Today, those who perpetuate that statement have the opportunity to take a step towards ending the discrimination that same-sex couples face.

Commitment between two loving and consenting adults, not the ability to create a family, should be the basis for marriage. In many cases, families are created before marriage—again, there is no precondition that must be met before marriage.

In the stage 1 debate, I pointed out that single-parent families are increasingly accepted as normal and that the language used by opposition groups adds to the stigma forced on single parents, especially mothers. As we come to the end of the legislative process, let us remember that, as long as a child has a loving and stable home, it does not matter if they come from a one-parent family or their parents are a same-sex couple or a mixed-sex couple.

Today, Scotland will take a massive stride in equality. We will catch up with our neighbours down south and other progressive nations throughout the world, becoming the 17th nation to make marriage equal. This Parliament has continually acted against the social and moral inequalities that discriminate against LGBT people, and today we will add marriage equality to the list of other actions that we have taken, such as repealing section 28, allowing same-sex couples to adopt and ensuring that LGBT people are protected under hate crime laws.

The work of the Scottish Government and Alex Neil is to be commended. Praise must also go to Tim Hopkins and Tom French at the Equality Network, Stonewall Scotland, the Scottish Transgender Alliance and LGBT Youth Scotland.

I am proud to stand up for social justice, equality and fairness, and today I will be proud to vote for equal marriage in Scotland.

17:32

Kevin Stewart (Aberdeen Central) (SNP): Earlier today, during stage 3, Mr Mason asked us to accept one or two amendments to show that we have been listening. Later, Alex Johnstone said that we should have accepted some amendments as a "token". We should not agree to amendments or make legislation for tokenistic reasons. We have struck the right balance. On showing that we have been listening, I have been listening to the many constituents who have contacted me. By 10 to one, folks in my constituency have told me to vote in favour of the bill today.

I have respect for people of all religions and am glad that we have the bill that we have. I will quote one of my constituents, who wrote to me just the other day:

"I am a Christian and urge you to remember that there are Christians in your town who wish to support inclusion and equality."

We must all take cognisance of the views of individuals and not just the views of organisations, which sometimes do not reflect the views of those who participate in those organisations.

That is my wee bit of politicking. All this is about equality. I think about two wee girls in Aberdeen with two wee mummies—not two wee mummies; two mummies. I am going to get into trouble for that. They should have the same rights as any other family. If their parents want to marry, they should be allowed to marry. Those two wee girls may well have married mummies sooner rather than later.

Alex Johnstone talked about strong families; I am a great supporter of strong families. I talked in the stage 1 debate about my family and the strength that I have taken from having parents who have stayed together for many years and who have gone through the joy and happiness and the trials and tribulations of marriage. I hope that others in our society will soon be able to have those same experiences—although maybe with a little less of the trials and tribulations, it has to be said. Like Alex Johnstone, I think that strong families often breed strong societies. He said that marriage should be "a bedrock". I do not disagree with that statement, either. The only problem that I have, which I hope we will address today, is that folks who love one another and who are of the same sex cannot marry at the present time.

Many folk have said that today is a historic day. I agree. I hope that we take the bold step today to rid our society further of discrimination. Most of all, I hope that we will think about the families that already exist across this country in which the parents are not allowed to marry, and the people who will want to follow the line of marriage in the future.

I said at stage 1 that I will bear no malice, no matter how folk vote on this issue, but I hope that they will vote for the bill, because I think that it is a good piece of legislation, which has been strengthened by the efforts of the cabinet secretary and the many campaigning groups, on both sides, that have contributed to making it what it is. I will bear no malice, but I will make the same appeal that I made at stage 1: think of the future. Think of your sons and daughters and grandchildren, who may well turn out to be LGBT. Give them the same opportunities that many of you had. Allow them to marry.
Nigel Don (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP): I start by turning to the very front of the bill, which says:

“An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision for the marriage of persons of the same sex”.

That is why I, as a Christian, found it very difficult at stage 1 to accept that that was the right way forward. I did not want to redefine a word that has a meaning in literature and liturgy and which has a significance to Christians, which I felt should not be ignored. Others have agreed with that.

At stage 1 we did not have a choice about an alternative route. The bill did not say, “An Act to eliminate discrimination against those of the same sex who might wish to form some legal relationship other than civil partnerships”; it said on its face that we were going to redefine marriage. At that point, I took exception to it and I argued and voted against it.

I felt that the Government could have brought forward something that was based on civil partnerships. In fact, so did the Government; the paperwork says that it did consider that, but it also notes that it had not consulted on it, so it did not do so.

We have moved on. That stage 1 debate is behind us. This Parliament decided by a very substantial majority that the bill is the way forward. At this point I say not that Parliament decided that this is the way forward, but that we decided that this is the way forward.

We have decided that we are going to redefine marriage; I am now left to address the practical consequences of that. I am now looking at a bill that moves to eliminate discrimination against couples of the same sex. I support that, as I always did. If we are going to change the definition of the word, so be it. I will, accordingly, support the bill tonight.

Mary Scanlon (Highlands and Islands) (Con): I commend my colleague and friend Jackson Carlaw on his speech. As a fellow Conservative, I fully understand and empathise with many of the thoughts and views that he expressed.

I have received many of the emails that John Finnie received, to which I will come back.

I welcome the change in the bill—which not many members have mentioned—that acknowledges the role that humanists, for example, will play in solemnising marriage, by putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants. I also welcome the extension to the normal notice period for marriage and civil partnerships from 14 to 18 days. Those changes have been lost in the main core of the debate today.

I am delighted to be in the Scottish Conservatives, which had in 2004 under our leader David McLetchie, and has today, 10 years later, under Ruth Davidson’s leadership, a free vote. I fully respect the views of all my colleagues and others who choose to oppose the bill.

I was the only MSP to abstain in the 2004 vote on civil partnerships. At that time I could see quite clearly the points that were being made on both sides, so I thought that abstaining was the right thing to do. However, at stage 1 and today again, Jackie Baillie stated that the Scottish social attitudes survey in 2002 showed that 41 per cent of people were in favour of same-sex marriage and 19 per cent were against. We can assume that 40 per cent were undecided. In the 2010 survey, the proportion who were in favour of same-sex marriage rose from 41 to 61 per cent. I was probably one of the 40 per cent who were undecided in 2004, but I will vote for the bill tonight.

I ask myself, “What was my tipping point?” Like John Finnie, I read all the emails that came in, as I did in 2004. The language of some individuals—not churches, but individuals—who opposed the bill was the tipping point for me to vote in favour.

The divide across income groups, geographic areas and religious communities is interesting, with 50 per cent of Presbyterians and 55 per cent of Catholics in favour. In the most deprived areas, 67 per cent support same-sex marriage, and in the most affluent areas the figure is 63 per cent. Whether people are urban or rural, rich or poor, religious beliefs and attitudes are changing.

I thank Mary Fee, because we have all been talking about same-sex and different-sex marriage, and Mary Fee was the only one at stage 1 and today to raise the issue of single parents. I am a single parent. I was married; my husband walked out when my children were aged one and two. I did not ask him to do that; I did not want that to happen. I hope that Mary’s points will be embraced today. When my children went to school in Dundee, my daughter was asked, “Hands up those from a broken home.” I can tell you that that teacher in that school never asked that question again after I visited. [Applause.] I believe that whether we are in our role as MSPs, parents or citizens, we should all, individually or otherwise, address that type of humiliation, embarrassment, isolation and bullying, whenever and wherever it arises. I thank Mary Fee.

I do not agree with all that John Mason said about extending marriage to same-sex couples: that is, that it dilutes its value. In fact, I think that it is a fair and just society that extends marriage to people who love each other, no matter where they live or whom they love. People are equal, and this Parliament is voting to give the same rights to everyone.

Following my vote in favour at stage 1, I received emails saying that I would be struck down by the wrath of God for supporting the bill. Others have mentioned potential discrimination. Just as I would not discriminate against same-sex relationships, I would not move to discriminating against those who hold traditional Christian beliefs. That is why I listened very closely to John Mason’s and Richard Lyle’s arguments about their amendments, and why I listened equally carefully to the responses by the cabinet secretary. I have supported John Mason’s call for a five-year review, which is reasonable.

I read the stage 1 debate and noted that Joan McAlpine said that when she was growing up, she did not know anyone who was gay. Neither did I, while I was growing up in Angus—but “gay” meant something quite different then. I remember going to Links park in Montrose with my father in the early 1960s and asking why the referees were all gay, although that was not quite the word that was used. I do not remember my father’s answer very clearly, but the term was used in a very derogatory manner, particularly when the ref’s decision did not find favour with the fans.

The Presiding Officer: I am sorry, Ms Scanlon—you need to wind up.

Mary Scanlon: Later on, at Tannadice, my son asked me about the ref’s sexuality, and I found it difficult to explain why these mysterious men in black, with all the power and authority on the football field, should be at the mercy of that term.

This weekend, I read a chapter from David Walliams’s book “The Boy in the Dress” to my seven-year-old grand-daughter. I hope that she will be much more prepared for the diversity of the real world than I was.

17:45

Christian Allard (North East Scotland) (SNP): First of all, I would like to clarify where I come from on same-sex marriage, then I would like to tell members briefly about how I participated in the work of the Equal Opportunities Committee on the bill, before concluding with what I think the bill is really about for me.

Yes—I come from France, a country that has just passed similar legislation. As Jackson Carlaw hinted, in the debate at the end of stage 1 in November last year, I finished my contribution with a childhood memory of a conversation that I had with my father. On the following day, members asked me to clarify the reason why I introduced chicken farming to a debate on marriage and civil partnership. I think that the words of my father might have been lost in translation.

I spent an idyllic childhood in rural France in one of those typical French villages. My father ran a chicken farm and I still remember the day, 40 years ago, when he told me about customers of his who lived as a couple in a remote farm nearby. I was struck by the way that my father spoke about this same-sex couple with great respect and in a friendly tone. I wonder what happened to those farmers and how much those two men would have liked to take the opportunity to get married, like every other farming couple in rural France.

I have something else to add about that. We have heard many contributions from members today, and it seems to me that no one has said that we all have prejudices. I have to say, maybe to my shame, that despite what my father told me, I did not twig. When I went to school, and then to secondary school, I was still full of prejudices towards gay people. I could not understand it; I never realised what my father was trying to tell me. Yet, I went to church every Sunday and was even an altar boy. My father did not go to church. He made the excuse that looking after his chickens was a seven days a week job. I went to church and listened to everything, but I also listened far too much to my peers at school.

I changed my mind when I grew up, but I feel that, out there, there are still a lot of people who are like I was when I was young and full of prejudices even though I had a strong family background, such as Alex Johnstone talked about.

I welcome the fact that Parliament and the Scottish Government have introduced the bill. We need to send the strong message to people that same-sex marriage should be more than tolerated—that it should be celebrated.

However, all that I have told you about was in the past and we are here today, perhaps 40 years too late, voting on a bill that will give everyone the right to marry. When I was preparing for the debate last night, I happened to read a message on social media from John Mason, who spoke earlier. I congratulate him on the message that he posted in which he thanked everybody who had contacted him, in particular the people who disagreed with his position, and for doing so in a calm and sensible fashion. The member for Glasgow Shettleston must be commended for his words and his tone—not just then, but today.

I also take the opportunity to offer my thanks to everyone who wrote to me on the issue. As will other members of the Equal Opportunities Committee, I will do my best to respond to the many people who asked me to support the bill.
I listened carefully to John Mason; I also listened to Nigel Don. I urge John Mason to reconsider and to vote for the bill, despite his reservations.

We have heard about the meaning of the word “marriage.” That word does not belong to the state or to any religion; it belongs to the couples who marry, in church or not, whether or not they are same-sex couples, including farmers. The bill is not about words; it is about people.

I pay tribute to James Morton of the Equality Network and Scottish Transgender Alliance, who came to our committee to give evidence and to explain how equal marriage matters to trans and intersex people.

The Presiding Officer: Please wind up.

Christian Allard: I also thank Linda Fabiani for defending the transgender community’s cause. If this bill has achieved anything that we did not expect it to achieve, it has been to get out in the open the transgender community’s agenda.

17:51

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): I was not really expecting to hear about chicken farming, Tannadice or “South Pacific”—well, perhaps I was expecting to hear about “South Pacific”—but we have heard some cracking good speeches. I, for one, feel privileged to be a member of the Parliament and to have the opportunity to speak in the debate.

The comments that Marco Biagi read from some of his constituents put me in mind of how I might have felt had this legislation been passed in Scotland when I was coming out—or, more particularly, when I did not yet feel able to do so. The message that we send by passing the legislation will be extremely positive. The response of young people, some of whom are baffled that it is even an issue, will become the mainstream response. A few years down the line, a great many people in Scotland will wonder what all the fuss was about.

I pay credit to the Government, the Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing and Nicola Sturgeon, who was the previous minister in charge of the bill, the committee and its previous members, and the many campaigners who have worked so hard on the issue. It has taken us a little bit longer than Westminster to get to this point but, partly because of the time spent and the committee’s amendments, we have a better bill as a result.

There has been a good degree of cross-party consensus, which speaks volumes. That was not always the case. From decriminalisation through to the equalisation of the age of consent, the introduction of anti-discrimination law, the repeal of section 2A, legislation on gender recognition and adoption and fostering, moves towards equal family law, and the introduction of civil partnerships and now equal marriage, we have heard the voices of dissent. I believe that they are diminishing in their number in society at large and in the substance of their arguments, although that persistent opposition remains.

I must say to Alex Johnstone in particular that those arguments have not always been expressed to me in the respectful tones that he described. A vociferous opposition to LGBT equality and human rights exists in our society. Those people have inherited the views of those who objected every step of the way, from decriminalisation onwards. Judging from the correspondence that I have received, some people simply seem baffled at the idea that same-sex relationships should be treated with respect or equality. Often the prejudice is couched in religious terms. I make the case that claiming religious justification for prejudice does not make that prejudice any less objectionable, although I endorse Kevin Stewart’s comments that, very often, the hierarchies that represent that prejudice do not necessarily represent the views of the people whom they claim to represent.

Many people perceive the bill principally in religious terms, but let us remember once again that most people who get married in Scotland choose not to involve religion in any way; indeed, most marriages are fully secular. It is important to assert that religious freedom includes not only freedom of religion but freedom from religion. Those are both important aspects of religious freedom. I have yet to hear—in this debate or in any other so far—any clear, coherent moral argument that same-sex relationships are in any way inferior or less worthy of respect and equal status.

Now that the bill is on the verge of being passed, it is important that we look beyond our current situation and beyond Scotland to countries where the fight for equality and LGBT human rights is not about pensions and inheritance, but is still about life and death. In some of those places, some strands of organised religion and their hierarchies continue to offer the single most consistent source of hostility to LGBT people’s dignity, rights, equality, wellbeing and safety.

As we welcome to Glasgow some of those countries where people are struggling with that question of life and death on LGBT equality, we should take pride in telling the story of Scotland’s progress from being a country that felt unable to decriminalise homosexuality at the same time as the rest of the UK and in which, in Glasgow and Edinburgh, people felt that it was not yet safe to have a pride march—we could not do that here—to being this country, which is proud to pass equal marriage legislation for this generation and for the future.

17:56

Jim Eadie (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP): I am grateful to speak in the debate on an issue that means so much to me and to so many of us. This is a day that many of us did not think we would see in our lifetime. I am immensely proud that this Parliament will, at decision time this evening, pass into law a bill that will allow same-sex couples to marry. There have been some outstanding speeches from the front benches and across the chamber this afternoon.

I believe that the bill is the measure of a civilised and just society. It is the hallmark of a country that is comfortable in its own skin and which says with quiet dignity and confidence that we value all our citizens equally. Loving and committed relationships between two people should be accorded parity of esteem and equal status before the law, whether they are between two women, between two men or between a man and a woman. Like Marco Biagi, I have been reminded of that by the rich personal testimony that I have received throughout the extensive passage of the bill. Christian Allard is right to say that the bill is about people. It is life changing.

Only yesterday, I received a letter from a woman in my constituency who urged me to support the bill. She said:

“I am in a civil partnership and feel it is second class marriage. The terminology is terrible, ‘civil partnership’ sounds cold and legal, and I have to explain what it is—that it is marriage but not quite marriage.”

She went on:

“I am forced to mark myself as different, as not straight as not married. That is tiresome and I don’t want these battles. Talking about my partner shouldn’t be about the terminology—it should be about our relationship.”

I was humbled to receive a letter today from a young man of 26, who said:

“I have always known that I wanted to be married, not civil partnered, not something other, not something different: married. I had thought we would have to go abroad to do this but thanks to the decision taken today we can marry here in Scotland. I now look forward to what will be the happiest day of my life, marrying the person I love in the place I call home.”

I said in the stage 1 debate that Scotland had been a “cold and inhospitable place” for many people—myself included—to grow up in as gay or lesbian in the 1980s and 1990s. I am glad that Scotland is no longer that cold and inhospitable place. I believe that the bill will have a hugely positive impact on our society and on the health and wellbeing of LGBT people across our country.

Future generations of young people in Scotland can grow up as gay and lesbian without the self-doubt and self-loathing that many people of my generation and previous generations faced. They will know that their intrinsic worth as a human being is accepted by the society of which they are members.

Scotland now has one of the most progressive equal marriage bills in the world. We started the process earlier than England and Wales, and we have taken longer in our consultation on and consideration of the legislation, but, like the Equality Network, I believe that the length of time that it has taken has made it well worth the wait.

Scrapping the spousal veto and allowing the option of gender-neutral marriage ceremonies means that the legislation will provide genuine marriage equality for all, including for trans and intersex people. As Linda Fabiani reminded us, 34 years after Scotland decriminalised male homosexuality in 1980, we have the opportunity to remove the final piece of sexual orientation discrimination from Scots law and to create full legal equality for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people.

Many people deserve credit for achieving this milestone in our history. Special mention must go to Tim Hopkins and Tom French of the Equality Network; to Colin Macfarlane of Stonewall Scotland; to the Scottish Transgender Alliance; and to the many others who played their part in bringing us to this day.

We should also remember those who are no longer with us. I think of the Scottish Homosexual Rights Group many decades ago, and people such as Janey Buchan, Robin Cook, Father Anthony Ross and our own Scots makar, Edwin Morgan.

Today is a day to pause and reflect on how far we have come as a society. The mood has been celebratory, as Jackson Carlaw reminded us. This is a day when we come together as a Parliament and as a nation to proclaim the importance of marriage as an institution that is open to all. Men and women across Scotland have new cause to hope for their future, with the wondrous possibilities that may present themselves and the chance to share their lives with the person they love.

Like all of us, I, too, have cause for optimism for my future. Perhaps a personal ad in The Scotsman: “Slim, athletic, professional 45-year-old male seeks husband to share his life and passions. Must like a good debate, but not take themselves too seriously. All applications will be carefully considered”—I jest.

This is a profound moment in our nation’s history. Although we do not yet live in a society that is free from prejudice and discrimination, this law is a bold and positive step towards creating a Scotland that is based on the first principles of fairness and justice for all. It is the final step in the journey for equality for the LGBT community in Scotland, and it is one of which I and all of us within and outwith this chamber can be rightly and immensely proud.

18:02

Jean Urquhart (Highlands and Islands) (Ind):

Late in the debate as it is, I am delighted to have this opportunity to state my support for equal marriage. I believe whole-heartedly that this can only be a positive step for Scottish society and in particular for its LGBT community, who have for so long been denied the choice that so many of us have taken for granted: the choice to say “I do”.

I pay tribute to the work of Stonewall Scotland, the Equality Network and the Scottish Youth Parliament, which, among many organisations, have been strong, considered and rational voices calling for this necessary change.

As well as highlighting the positives, it is important to reiterate to those who do not support the bill that they really cannot have anything to fear from this move towards equality. I believe that the religious safeguards that are currently proposed, whereby religious institutions are permitted, if they so wish, to hold equal marriage ceremonies, suitably protect both institutions that do not wish to do so and those that do. There are institutions, such as certain parts of the Jewish faith and the Quakers, that wish to conduct equal marriage ceremonies, and to disallow that would in itself be faith-based discrimination.

Several countries across the world have already legalised same-sex marriage, including a number that are signatories to the European convention on human rights. Religious freedom has remained in place for those with traditional views on marriage, and I suggest that that will also be the case in Scotland.

Among its many provisions, the Equality Act 2010 makes it illegal to deny a person or an organisation access to public services—or to deny charities support—based purely on views on same-sex marriage. The act ensures that no duty is placed on any religious body or individual celebrant to conduct these ceremonies. The existing law already rightly states that all decisions on fostering or adoption should be based on the interests of the child, not on the views of the prospective parents.

Marriage does not belong to any one organisation. Many people in the LGBT community wish to be married in order to have equal status in society. Civil partnerships do not put same-sex couples on an equal footing. As human beings, they do not wish to be treated differently from anyone else. I believe that the bill will help to make Scotland a more equal society.

Many in the LGBT community want to be married in accordance with their religion, and many religions are in favour of same-sex marriage, including Unitarians, Quakers, humanist-liberal Judaists, the Metropolitan Community Church and the Open Episcopal Church. Like other members, I have received correspondence from some Church of Scotland ministers and from observant Protestants, Catholics and people from other denominations in which they express their support for same-sex marriage, so we must not believe that everyone in every church feels that the bill is wrong.

The evidence overall suggests that the bill has public support. Opinion polls have consistently shown that the level of support for same-sex marriage is around two thirds of those polled. The 2010 Scottish social attitudes survey found that, when asked the question “Do you agree or disagree that gay and lesbian couples should be allowed to marry?”, 61 per cent of respondents said that they agreed; only 19 per cent said that they disagreed. Perhaps Scotland really is moving on.

The Labour Party, the Liberal Democrats, the Scottish National Party and the Green Party all had equal marriage proposals in their 2011 election manifestos, with varying degrees of commitment, and a Conservative-led Government has introduced same-sex marriage in England and Wales.

I can remember when homosexually itself was considered a criminal offence. Scotland has come a long way in a relatively short space of time. I hope that the passing of the bill will form one more link taking us towards a progressive, equal and tolerant Scotland. I whole-heartedly support the bill.

The Presiding Officer: We now move to the winding-up speeches. Margaret Mitchell has six minutes.

18:06

Margaret Mitchell (Central Scotland) (Con):

That the bill will be passed this evening has been a foregone conclusion since the overwhelming vote in favour of it in November last year. That being the case, I believe that supporters of same-sex marriage could have moved some way to try to allay the fears and accommodate the different but equally passionate and legitimate views of those on the other side of the debate. I am therefore saddened that the proposed amendments to the bill that specifically sought to protect freedom of speech and religious belief have not been agreed to, as those amendments would have led to better, more robust legislation.

I note that the submission from Stonewall Scotland stated that it “is clear that the freedom to hold and express the belief that a marriage can only be between one man and one woman is already, rightly, robustly protected by law.”

If that is so, there should have been be no difficulty in making sure that that freedom was set out in the bill. However, Stonewall Scotland took a rather skewed view on amendment 26. It stated:

“This amendment, however, seeks to elevate one belief above others and would enshrine in law that same-sex relationships are uniquely worthy of criticism.”

Today, a compromise was offered by those opposed in principle to the bill, in the form of amendments that were lodged in an effort to clarify and strengthen the legislation. However, disappointingly, there has been no corresponding empathy shown or quarter given by the majority of those who support the bill.

Marco Biagi: Will the member take an intervention?

Margaret Mitchell: If Mr Biagi does not mind, I am expressing the minority view and I would like the time to develop it.

That situation is a sad reflection on our Parliament, as there is no doubt that the bill sets in competition two equality strands: the right not to be discriminated against on the basis of sexual orientation, and the right to religious belief. It is worth pointing out that, had that lack of empathy prevailed with those, including me, who are opposed to same-sex marriage but who voted in favour of civil partnerships for same-sex couples, the Civil Partnership Act 2004 would not have been passed.

Kevin Stewart: Will the member give way?

The Presiding Officer: I do not think that Ms
Mitchell wishes to give way.

Margaret Mitchell: I have made the reason for my position on interventions quite clear, Mr Stewart.

Quite simply, it would have been wrong not to support the 2004 act, because that legislation addressed the unjust discrimination against same-sex couples that existed in law at that time.

The role of Government should be to ensure fairness under the law for those who hold differing beliefs. Despite that, the Scottish Government ignored the results of its own consultation on same-sex marriage, with two thirds of those who responded to the same-sex marriage question indicating their opposition.

Furthermore, in legislating for a redefinition of marriage, the Government has eroded the boundary between state civil provisions, where it has a role to play, and religious belief and teaching, where it does not. It has done so in the name of equality, but equality is about fairness; it is not about making everyone the same. The indisputable fact is that the bill diminishes the deeply held views of those who consider that marriage is between a man and a woman. There is nothing fair in causing those opposed to same-sex marriage to feel apprehensive about expressing that view, yet that situation will now prevail in Scotland.

The majority of contributions in this closing debate have been passionate, witty and decidedly upbeat—not least, the contribution from my colleague Jackson Carlaw—with members expressing the view that the introduction of same-sex marriage tackles discrimination. But let us be clear: terrible and vile discrimination still exists against same-sex couples. It is not to be found in these reasoned amendments, as some seem to believe, but, rather, in the intolerance of certain religious teaching and ethnic minority cultures—here in Scotland, the UK and globally. The bill does absolutely nothing to tackle that issue. If it did, it would have my overwhelming support this evening.

The bill will inhibit people from expressing their religious beliefs. In a democratic society, the ability of the minority to feel free to air their views is fundamental. The bill undermines that ability and, in doing so, has not achieved fairness or equality but instead has elevated the beliefs of one group of society, to the detriment of another. For those reasons, I regret that I will not be voting for the bill this evening.

18:12

Jackie Baillie: I say at the outset that I regret some of the comment in the previous speech, which struck me as being out of step—even with those who have disagreed with the bill. We have heard powerful testimony and experience from a number of members, and there have been excellent contributions from across the chamber. I will attempt to do justice to most of them, but members will forgive me if I run out of time.

It may come as a surprise to people outside the chamber, but we often agree across the parties.
We are capable of working together, although that might not be evident when they look in on Thursday's First Minister’s questions. I welcome the First Minister to the chamber. I think that we can agree that we are proud of Parliament and of how we deal with difficult issues that inspire passion on all sides.
There was substantial committee scrutiny, substantial external scrutiny of the bill and quite a bit of comment on top of that. Like Jackson Carlaw and many others here today, I want to pay tribute to all the campaigners. With only a few exceptions, they have engaged maturely in the debate. I have no doubt that their contributions have made today a historic day.

Jackson Carlaw was almost singing from "South Pacific". I am not sure whether that is a good thing or not; I will leave it for others to judge. I am always happy to take an intervention, if he wants to regale us with song, but I put it down to the excitement of the occasion. Indeed, his observation, which was echoed by Mary Scanlon, about those in the Tory party who had to strangle their sexuality, earned a laugh of substantial recognition. I will leave that sticking to the wall.

In a considered contribution, Marco Biagi brought the voices of his constituents directly into the chamber and, in an emotional and well-thought-through speech, made this debate very much about them and what we now do for them.

Margaret McCulloch, ever the convener of the Equal Opportunities Committee, was rightly pursuing the cabinet secretary right to the end on the question of converting to marriage civil partnerships that have been conducted outside Scotland. I hope that the cabinet secretary will take some of the considerable time that we have at our disposal to respond to her points in his closing speech.

James Dornan spoke about his brother’s marriage in Lisbon; I was jealous of the sunshine of Portugal that he brought into the chamber. He was right to say to Alex Johnstone that the bill can only strengthen marriage. It is about celebrating all marriages and it underlines the benefits that flow from marriage. As the cabinet secretary said, this is about a nation that cherishes love.

As Drew Smith said, demonstrating love and commitment to each other can be a private thing for many couples; for others, it is a proudly public matter. On that note, I will correct Jackson Carlaw. I know that he is not often wrong, but I am sure that he will take what I say in the intended spirit. It is not just Neil Bibby and Mark Griffin who are engaged to be married; Drew Smith got engaged to Jillian Merchant on Christmas eve. I suppose that I should declare an interest—I am not sure what our register of members’ interests requires—because she used to work for me, so I take some credit for bringing the two together. I say to Jackson Carlaw that, for the error that he made, Drew Smith will send him the gift list in the post. [Interruption.] I ask the Cabinet Secretary for Finance, Employment and Sustainable Growth to stop heckling from a sedentary position.

In all seriousness, I say that John Finnie was right. As we listened to the debate, it was clear that the measure is not about a hierarchy in equality. People either believe in equality or they do not; there is no pick and mix. I am pleased that Parliament came to the same conclusion with a series of amendments.

I hesitate to say that Mary Fee has been married for 36 years to Brian. She told us all at a Burns supper last week that he has bought her presents including a lawnmower and even a pan loaf. That is a clear example that shows that, even with the most extreme provocation, marriage is about love and commitment that endure.

Kevin Stewart and I have often disagreed, and about many things, but he was correct to say that legislation should not be tokenistic. Legislating is about doing what is right and what will stand the test of time.

In her usual quirky way, Mary Scanlon reminded us all that we have a responsibility to challenge discrimination, as she did, whether it is in the classroom or on the football pitch in interesting circumstances.

Christian Allard treated us to an exposition on chicken farming moving into the 21st century. He was right to say that what we are doing today is celebrating same-sex marriage.

Patrick Harvie said that no clear, coherent or moral argument has been heard in the chamber against same-sex marriage. He reminded us of the story of our progress; he said that we should share that progress with countries that come to the Commonwealth games and that we should use the games for a positive purpose.

What can I say to Jim Eadie? I look forward to the invitation to his wedding, as do most members.

In the stage 1 debate, Alex Neil was right to say that "we are not redefining marriage ... the bill does not in any way redefine ... marriage. It does extend the eligibility for marriage, which is the key point of the proposed legislation. People in Scotland who have been ineligible for marriage will now be eligible for marriage and for that marriage, and the love that it represents”— irrespective of whether it is same-sex marriage or otherwise—

"to be recognised by the state".—[Official Report, 20 November 2013; c 24691.]

That is crucial.

In front of the First Minister, I pay tribute again to Alex Neil. That does not happen often, so Alex Neil should savour it—although it probably will not do his career in the SNP much good. Alex Neil has piloted the bill through Parliament with considerable skill, for which I thank him.
Today, we take a decision on the essential character of Scotland and on how we see ourselves. Equal marriage is about equality, fairness and social justice. Let us vote for it. It is time for change.

The Presiding Officer: I call Alex Neil to wind up the debate. I would appreciate it if the cabinet secretary continued until 6.30.

Alex Neil: Thank you very much, Presiding Officer. It is never a problem to do that.

I begin with a plea to Jackson Carlaw, who said that he will not go to the party tonight. I think that he should go to the ball tonight. If he is worried about his age letting him down, I will give him a loan of my slippers so that he can get home safely and well.

I pay tribute to the work of Nicola Sturgeon, who demonstrated the bravery and vision to initiate the bill in the first place. Without her contribution, we would not be here today agreeing to—I hope—the bill. [Applause.]

I pay tribute to those on both sides of the argument, who have, with very few exceptions, conducted the argument both in and outwith Parliament with a great deal of dignity and respect for everyone’s points of view. That is how things should be.

It is fair to say that the people who are worried about freedom of speech in Scotland should not be worried at all, having listened to this debate and to the entire debate over the past two and a half years, because freedom of speech is alive and well on all sides in Scotland, and that is also how things should be.

I want to answer the precise and fair question that was asked by Margaret McCulloch in her role as convener of the Equal Opportunities Committee and as an individual MSP. She asked specifically about overseas civil partnerships and converting them into marriage. Obviously, I appreciate the views that have been expressed on allowing people who are in civil partnerships that have been registered outwith Scotland to change their legal status of their relationship, so we will work with the committee to ensure that there is an early resolution of that issue.

More widely, I agree with Jackie Baillie and thank her for her very kind comments about me. Again, this has been an outstanding debate that has done Parliament very proud.

I think that all the members who are opposed to the bill and were the authors and supporters of amendments that we discussed earlier said in their speeches that they are concerned that none of the amendments was passed. That is not because there was a lack of consideration of those amendments or a knee-jerk reaction. We considered each and every one of the amendments in great detail and decided not to accept them for the reasons that I outlined.

However, in Parliament’s 15-year history, no piece of legislation—there is no exception—has had as much consultation as this bill. We have gone through various stages of consultation and have done much more consultation than our colleagues down south. That was the right thing to do. I agree with Patrick Harvie; as a result of the consultation, we have ended up with a better bill than would otherwise have been the case, and with a better bill than the legislation down south.

From listening to people, I am aware that there is no precedent in any jurisdiction anywhere in the world that has passed such legislation, for the many protections that we have in the bill. There are five sets of protections for people who are opposed to same-sex marriage or who do not wish to perform same-sex marriages. First, the system is a voluntary, opt-in one. That is a protection. Secondly, the amendments to the Equality Act 2010 represent a series of protections—in particular, for celebrants and churches. Again, the protections are stronger than those in the UK legislation.

Thirdly, there will be protections in the education guidance that my colleague Mike Russell will publish shortly. In addition, there are protections in the prosecution guidelines that the Lord Advocate has already published and—with regard to many of the issues—there is protection in the fact that, under the Scotland Act 1998, Parliament must embed the European convention on human rights in all its legislation.

The provisions in many of the amendments that were debated today are covered more robustly in some of the legislation that I have mentioned. Indeed, the reason for not accepting a number of the amendments was that much of the existing legislation—in addition to the bill that is before us and the draft amendments to the UK Equality Act 2010—is stronger than the wording of some of those amendments. The legislation is not confusing, but is straightforward and clearly understandable, and will be absolutely adhered to in its implementation.

One example, which was mentioned earlier, is Siobhan McMahon’s amendment concerning the hiring of property and facilities. A very specific element in the draft amendments to the Equality Act 2010 relates to people who are using premises on behalf of a religious organisation, and states that they cannot be discriminated against for refusing to allow those premises to be used for same-sex marriages.

I believe that, as Jackie Baillie said, we have struck a good balance. We are extending the freedoms and rights of organisations such as the Unitarian Church and the Quakers that want to perform same-sex marriage, and the rights of people of the same sex to marry and have their marriage recognised in law. In so doing, we are also safeguarding the rights of churches and celebrants who do not want to perform same-sex marriages, and we are protecting the right of free speech so that people can continue to express their opinion for or against same-sex marriage in an open, free and democratic society.

The balance of measures that we have introduced is very fair. It reflects the diversity of opinion in our society, and at the same time it can take us forward.

The priority now is to get the secondary legislation in place and to get the amendments to the Equality Act 2010 agreed. I give that commitment to members—I cannot give a guarantee, because it depends on the amendments’ passage through Westminster, although I put on the record the excellent co-operation that we have had from Maria Miller and her officials in the UK Government. Following the passing of those amendments and the secondary legislation we will, ideally, see the first same-sex marriages in Scotland this year. [Applause.] That sends out a loud and clear message.

I finish by saying this: I was brought up, as every member in the chamber probably knows, in a mining village in South Ayrshire—

Members: Oh!

Alex Neil: It was south of the Ayrshire Mason-Dixon line. Drenhorn, where the Deputy First Minister comes from, was north of that line; I note for her sake that my village was called Patna.

I was christened in the United Free Church and married 36 years ago in the same church. I always remember the philosophy in that mining village. Our motto, if we had one, was the same as I think it is in every mining village and in many other communities in Scotland: “Live and let live.”

My belief is that couples of the same sex can fully realise their potential, fully live out their aspirations and fully live out and show their love only if those people are able to marry the person whom they love who is of the same sex. We should let live; let live those who want to get married to someone of the same sex and those who want to perform marriages of people of the same sex, and let live those who are not in favour of that because of religious belief, so that they are not forced to do something that they do not want to do. If ever there was a motto to sum up the Government’s and the Parliament’s approach to the bill, it is live and let live.

I believe that, when the history of the Parliament is written, if we pass the bill, as I believe we will, today will be one of the great historic days of the Parliament, not just because of the provisions of the bill but because of the message that it sends out about the new Scotland that we are creating in the 21st century—a Scotland where we all believe in live and let live. [Applause.]
The Presiding Officer: The next question is, that motion S4M-08915, in the name of Alex Neil, on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill, be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baker, Richard (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Campbell, Roderick (North East Fife) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
The Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 105, Against 18, Abstentions 0.

Motion agreed to,
That the Parliament agrees that the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill be passed.

[Applause.]
CONTENTS

Section

PART 1

MARRIAGE

CHAPTER 1

SAME SEX MARRIAGE

1 Marriage of related persons
2 Objections to marriage
3 Preliminaries to marriage
4 Meaning of marriage and related expressions in enactments and documents
5 Same sex marriage: further provision
6 Jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages
6A Reset: abolition of defence

CHAPTER 2

MARRIAGE BETWEEN CIVIL PARTNERS IN QUALIFYING CIVIL PARTNERSHIPS

7 Marriage between civil partners in qualifying civil partnerships
7A Power to modify meaning of “qualifying civil partnership”
8 Change of qualifying civil partnership into marriage
9 Effect of marriage between civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership

CHAPTER 3

SOLEMNISATION OF MARRIAGE

10 Persons who may solemnise marriage
11 Registration of nominated persons as celebrants
12 Temporary authorisation of celebrants
13 Religious or belief marriage: further provision

CHAPTER 4

SAME SEX MARRIAGE: PROTECTION OF FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION ETC.

14 Same sex marriage: protection of freedom of expression etc.
CHAPTER 5
OTHER CHANGES TO MARRIAGE PROCEDURE

15 Power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: marriage
16 The Marriage Schedule
17 Marriage outside Scotland: evidence of dissolution of former civil partnership
18 Religious marriages: solemnisation by Church of Scotland deacons
19 Places at which civil marriages may be solemnised
20 Second marriage ceremony: form of endorsement

CHAPTER 6
SHERIFF COURT JURISDICTION IN RELATION TO DECLARATOR OF MARRIAGE

21 Sheriff court jurisdiction in relation to declarator of marriage

PART 2
CIVIL PARTNERSHIP

22 Registration of civil partnership
23 Power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: civil partnership
24 Recognition of overseas relationships
25 Dissolution of civil partnership: evidence

PART 3
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP: OTHER PROVISION

26 Bigamy

PART 4
CHANGE OF GENDER OF MARRIED PERSONS OR CIVIL PARTNERS

27 Change of gender of married persons or civil partners
28 Renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate
28A Grounds of divorce: interim gender recognition certificate followed by full certificate

PART 5
REGISTRATION SERVICES

29 Provision of certain information to district registrars
29A Form of register of marriages

PART 6
GENERAL PROVISIONS

30 Interpretation
31 Ancillary provision
32 Commencement
33 Short title
Schedule 1—Jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages
Schedule 2—Change of gender of married persons or civil partners
   Part 1—Applications by married persons and civil partners
   Part 2—Alternative grounds for granting applications for gender recognition certificates
   Part 3—Consequential amendments
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill

[AS PASSED]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision for the marriage of persons of the same sex; to make further provision as to the persons who may solemnise marriage and as to marriage procedure and the places at which civil marriages may be solemnised; to make provision for the registration of civil partnerships by celebrants of religious or belief bodies; to make provision about gender change by married persons and civil partners; to make a minor correction in relation to registration information; and for connected purposes.

PART 1

MARRIAGE

CHAPTER 1

SAME SEX MARRIAGE

1 Marriage of related persons

(1) The Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 (“the 1977 Act”) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 2 (marriage of related persons)—

(a) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) Subject to subsection (1A), a marriage between persons who are related to each other in a forbidden degree is void if solemnised—

(a) in Scotland; or

(b) at a time when either party is domiciled in Scotland.

(1ZA) For the purposes of subsection (1), a person is related to another person in a forbidden degree if related to that person in a degree specified in Schedule 1.”,

(b) in subsection (1A), for the words from the beginning to “paragraph,” substitute “A person who is related to another person in a degree specified in paragraph 2 of Schedule 1 (relationships by affinity) is not related to that person in a forbidden degree”,

(c) after subsection (1A) insert—

“(1C) For the purposes of paragraph 2 of Schedule 1, “spouse” means—
(a) in the case of a marriage between persons of different sexes, a wife in relation to her husband or a husband in relation to his wife; and
(b) in the case of a marriage between persons of the same sex, one of the parties to the marriage in relation to the other.”,

(d) in subsection (7)—
(i) for “those provisions” substitute “subsection (1C)(a) as it applies to paragraph 2 of Schedule 1”, and
(ii) the word “former” in each place where it appears is repealed, and

(e) in subsection (7A)—
(i) for “mother” substitute “parent”, and
(ii) the words “in either column” are repealed.

(3) For Schedule 1 substitute—

“SCHEDULE 1
(introduced by section 2)

DEGREES OF RELATIONSHIP

1. Relationships by consanguinity
   Parent
   Child
   Grandparent
   Grandchild
   Sibling
   Aunt or uncle
   Niece or nephew
   Great-grandparent
   Great-grandchild

2. Relationships by affinity referred to in section 2(1A)
   Child of former spouse
   Child of former civil partner
   Former spouse of parent
   Former civil partner of parent
   Former spouse of grandparent
   Former civil partner of grandparent
   Grandchild of former spouse
   Grandchild of former civil partner
Part 1—Marriage

Chapter 1—Same sex marriage

3. Relationships by adoption

   Adoptive parent or former adoptive parent

   Adopted child or former adopted child.”.

2. Objections to marriage

   In section 5(4) of the 1977 Act (objections to marriage)—

   (a) paragraph (e) is repealed, and

   (b) in paragraph (f), for “than one mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (e) above,” substitute “than—

   (i) one mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (d) above; or

   (ii) the ground that the parties are of the same sex.”.

3. Preliminaries to marriage

   (1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

   (2) In section 3 (notice of intention to marry)—

   (a) in subsection (1)—

   (i) for paragraph (b) substitute—

   “(b) if the person has previously been married and the marriage ended on the death of the other party to that marriage, the death certificate of that other party;”;

   (ii) after that paragraph insert—

   “(ba) if the person has previously been in a civil partnership which ended on the death of the other party to the civil partnership, the death certificate of that other party;”,

   (b) in subsection (2), for “or (b)” substitute “, (b), (ba) or (bb)”; and

   (c) in subsection (5), after paragraph (ii)(b) of the proviso insert “; or

   (c) if no such certificate has been issued only by reason of the fact that the parties to the intended marriage are of the same sex.”.

   (3) In section 7(1) (marriage outside Scotland where a party resides in Scotland), after “(b)” insert “, (ba), (bb)”.

4. Meaning of marriage and related expressions in enactments and documents

   (1) References (however expressed) in any enactment to—

   (a) marriage (including a marriage that has ended),

   (b) a person who is (or was) married to another person, and

   (c) two people who are (or were) married to each other,
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill
Part I—Marriage
Chapter 1—Same sex marriage

are references to marriage whether between persons of different sexes or persons of the same sex and to a party (or former party), or as the case may be the parties (or former parties), to such a marriage.

(2) Subsection (3) applies to references (however expressed) in any enactment to two people who—

(a) are (or were) not married to each other, but

(b) are (or were) living together as if they were husband and wife.

(3) The references include two people of the same sex who are (or were) not married to, nor in civil partnership with, each other but who are (or were) living together as if they were married to each other.

(4) References (however expressed) in any enactment to two people of the same sex who are (or were) living together as if they were in a civil partnership cease to have effect.

(5) Subsections (1) to (4)—

(a) apply to enactments (other than private Acts) passed or made before the commencement of this section, and

(b) do not apply in so far as the enactment, or any other enactment, provides otherwise.

(6) In so far as being (or having been) married or in a purported marriage is relevant for the operation of any rule of law, the rule of law applies equally in relation to marriage or purported marriage to a person of a different sex and marriage or purported marriage to a person of the same sex.

(7) Subsections (1) to (6) are subject to an order under subsection (8).

(8) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for any of subsections (1) to (6)—

(a) to have effect subject to provision made by the order, or

(b) not to apply in cases specified in the order.

(9) An order under subsection (8)—

(za) may make different provision for different purposes,

(a) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,

(aa) may modify any enactment (including this Act),

(b) is (except where subsection (9A) applies) subject to the negative procedure.

(9A) An order under subsection (8) which adds to, replaces or omits any part of the text of an Act is subject to the affirmative procedure.

(10) References (however expressed) in any document to—

(a) marriage (including a marriage that has ended),

(b) a person who is (or was) married to another person, and

(c) two people who are (or were) married to each other,

are references to marriage whether between persons of different sexes or persons of the same sex and to a party (or former party), or as the case may be the parties (or former parties), to such a marriage.
(11) The following expressions in any document have the meanings given—

(a) “widow” includes a woman whose marriage to another woman ended with the other woman’s death,

(b) “widower” includes a man whose marriage to another man ended with the other man’s death.

(12) Subsections (10) and (11)—

(a) apply to documents executed on or after the commencement of this section, and

(b) do not apply in so far as the document provides otherwise.

(13) In section 26(2) of the 1977 Act (interpretation), after the definition of “authorised registrar” insert—

““marriage” means marriage between persons of different sexes and marriage between persons of the same sex;”.

(14) In schedule 1 to the Interpretation and Legislative Reform (Scotland) Act 2010 (definitions of words and expressions), insert at the appropriate place in alphabetical order—

““marriage” means marriage between persons of different sexes and marriage between persons of the same sex (and any reference to a person being (or having been) married to another person, or to two people being (or having been) married to each other, is to be read accordingly),”,”

““widow” includes a woman whose marriage to another woman ended with the other woman’s death,”,

““widower” includes a man whose marriage to another man ended with the other man’s death,”.

5 Same sex marriage: further provision

(2) For the avoidance of doubt, the rule of law which provides for a marriage to be voidable by reason of impotence has effect only in relation to a marriage between persons of different sexes.

(3) In section 1 of the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 (grounds of divorce), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) For the avoidance of doubt, in relation to marriage between persons of the same sex, adultery has the same meaning as it has in relation to marriage between persons of different sexes.”.

6 Jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages

Schedule 1, which makes provision about jurisdiction in proceedings relating to same sex marriages, has effect.

6A Reset: abolition of defence

(1) Any rule of law under which a wife who receives or conceals goods stolen by her husband does not commit the offence of reset ceases to apply.
(2) Subsection (1) applies only in relation to things done after the day on which this section comes into force.

CHAPTER 2

MARRIAGE BETWEEN CIVIL PARTNERS IN QUALIFYING CIVIL PARTNERSHIPS

5 Marriage between civil partners in qualifying civil partnerships

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 3 (notice of intention to marry), in subsection (1), after paragraph (ba) (inserted by section 3(2)(a)(ii) of this Act), insert—

“(bb) if the person is in a qualifying civil partnership within the meaning of section 5(6) with the other party to the intended marriage, an extract from the entry in the civil partnership register relating to the civil partnership;”.

(3) In section 5 (objections to marriage)—

(a) in subsection (4)(b), after “partnership” insert “other than a qualifying civil partnership with each other”, and

(b) after subsection (5) insert—

“(6) For the purposes of subsection (4)(b) a “qualifying civil partnership” is a civil partnership which—

(a) was registered in Scotland; and

(b) has not been dissolved, annulled or ended by death.

(7) A civil partnership which was registered outside the United Kingdom under an Order in Council made under Chapter 1 of Part 5 of the Civil Partnership Act 2004 is to be treated for the purposes of subsection (6)(a) as having been registered in Scotland if—

(a) the parties to the civil partnership elected Scotland as the relevant part of the United Kingdom under the Order; and

(b) details of the civil partnership have been sent to the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland.”.

7A Power to modify meaning of “qualifying civil partnership”

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify the meaning of “qualifying civil partnership” given by section 5(6) of the 1977 Act (as inserted by section 7(3)(b) of this Act) so as to include civil partnerships registered outside Scotland.

(2) An order under subsection (1)—

(a) may make different provision for different purposes,

(b) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,

(c) may modify any enactment (including this Act),

(d) is subject to the affirmative procedure.
(3) Before laying a draft of an order under subsection (1) before the Scottish Parliament, the Scottish Ministers must consult the following persons on a copy of the proposed draft order—

(a) the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland, and

(b) such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.

8 Change of qualifying civil partnership into marriage

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision to establish a procedure for the parties to a qualifying civil partnership to change their civil partnership into a marriage.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may in particular make provision—

(a) about the making by the parties to a qualifying civil partnership of an application to change their civil partnership into a marriage,

(b) about the information to be provided in support of an application,

(c) about the provision of evidence in support of an application,

(d) for persons who have made an application to appear before any person or appear at any place,

(e) conferring functions on persons in relation to applications,

(f) for fees, of such amounts as are specified in or determined in accordance with the regulations, to be payable in respect of—

(i) the making of an application,

(ii) the exercise of any function conferred by virtue of paragraph (e).

(3) Functions conferred by virtue of subsection (2)(e) may include functions relating to—

(a) the recording of information relating to qualifying civil partnerships changing into marriages,

(b) the issuing of certified copies of any information recorded.

(4) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland.

(5) Regulations under subsection (1)—

(za) may make different provision for different purposes,

(a) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,

(b) may modify any enactment (including this Act),

(c) are (except where subsection (6) applies) subject to the negative procedure.

(6) Regulations under subsection (1) which add to, replace or omit any part of the text of an Act are subject to the affirmative procedure.

(7) In this section “qualifying civil partnership” has the meaning given by section 5(6) of the 1977 Act (as inserted by section 7(3)(b) of this Act).
9 Effect of marriage between civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership

(A1) This section applies where civil partners in a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the 1977 Act)—

(a) marry in accordance with that Act, or
(b) change their civil partnership into a marriage in accordance with provision made under section 8(1).

(1) Where this section applies—

(a) the qualifying civil partnership ends on the date on which—

(i) the marriage was solemnised, or
(ii) the change took effect, and
(b) the civil partners are to be treated as having been married to each other since the date on which the qualifying civil partnership was registered.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1)(b)—

(a) a civil partnership registered under an Order in Council made under section 210 of the 2004 Act is to be treated as having been registered when it is entered in the Register Book maintained under the Order,
(b) a civil partnership registered under an Order in Council made under section 211 of the 2004 Act is to be treated as having been registered when the civil partnership register is signed in accordance with the Order.

(3) Subsection (1)(b) is subject to—

(a) any provision to the contrary made by or under any enactment,
(b) an order under subsection (4).

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for subsection (1)(b)—

(a) to have effect subject to provision made by the order, or
(b) not to apply in cases specified in the order.

(5) An order under subsection (4)—

(a) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,
(b) is subject to the negative procedure.

(6) If a decree of aliment under section 3 of the Family Law (Scotland) Act 1985 (powers of court in action for aliment) requiring one of the civil partners to make payments to the other is in force at the time the qualifying civil partnership ends by virtue of subsection (1)(a) of this section, the decree continues to have effect despite the ending of the civil partnership.

(7) If an order under section 103(3) or (4) of the 2004 Act (regulation by court of rights of occupancy of family home) is in force at the time the qualifying civil partnership ends by virtue of subsection (1)(a) of this section the order has effect from that time as if made under section 3(3) or, as the case may be, 3(4) of the Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981 (regulation by court of rights of occupancy of matrimonial home).
(8) In section 1 of the 2004 Act (provision for civil partnership), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) Subsection (3) is subject to section 9(1)(a) of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Act 2014 (ending of certain civil partnerships on marriage under Scots law).”.

CHAPTER 3

SOLEMNISATION OF MARRIAGE

10 Persons who may solemnise marriage

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 8 (persons who may solemnise marriage)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) after “marriage” in the first place where it appears insert “between persons of different sexes”,

(ii) in paragraph (a)(ii)—

(A) for “or priest of a religious body” substitute “priest or other celebrant of a religious or belief body”,

(B) for “religious body” in the second place it appears substitute “religious or belief body”, and

(C) for “marriages” substitute “marriage between persons of different sexes”,

(iii) in paragraph (a)(iii), after “Act” insert “to solemnise marriage between persons of different sexes”, and

(iv) in paragraph (a)(iv), after “Act” insert “to solemnise marriage between persons of different sexes”,

(b) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The Scottish Ministers may prescribe a religious or belief body under subsection (1)(a)(ii) only if—

(a) the body requests them to do so; and

(b) the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that the body meets the qualifying requirements.

(1B) Subject to section 23A, a marriage between persons of the same sex may be solemnised by and only by—

(a) a person who is—

(i) a minister, clergyman, pastor, priest or other celebrant of a religious or belief body prescribed by regulations made by the Scottish Ministers, or who, not being one of the foregoing, is recognised by a religious or belief body so prescribed as entitled to solemnise marriage between persons of the same sex on its behalf;

(ii) registered under section 9 to solemnise marriage between persons of the same sex; or
(iii) temporarily authorised under section 12 to solemnise marriage between persons of the same sex; or

(b) a person who is a district registrar or assistant registrar appointed under section 17.

(1C) The Scottish Ministers may prescribe a religious or belief body under subsection (1B)(a)(i) only if—

(a) the body requests them to do so; and

(b) the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that the body meets the qualifying requirements.

(1D) For the avoidance of doubt, nothing in subsection (1B)(a) or (1C)(a)—

(a) imposes a duty on any religious or belief body to make a request referred to in subsection (1C)(a);

(b) impose a duty on any such body to nominate under section 9 any of its members to be registered as empowered to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex;

(c) impose a duty on any person to apply for temporary authorisation under section 12 to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex;

(d) impose a duty on any person who is an approved celebrant in relation to marriages between persons of the same sex to solemnise such marriages.

(1E) In subsections (1A)(b) and (1C)(b), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

(1F) Regulations under subsection (1E)—

(a) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances;

(b) may include transitional and saving provision.

(1G) Regulations under subsection (1)(a)(ii), (1B)(a)(i) or (1E) are subject to the negative procedure.”.

(c) in subsection (2)—

(i) in paragraph (a)—

(A) after “(1)(a)” insert “or (1B)(a)”;

(B) for “‘religious marriage’” substitute “‘religious or belief marriage’”;

(ii) in paragraph (b), after “(1)(b)” insert “or (1B)(b)”.

(3) In section 14 (form of ceremony to be used by approved celebrant)—

(a) in paragraph (a), after “or (ii)” insert “or (1B)(a)(i)”;

(b) in paragraph (b), after “or (iv)” insert “or (1B)(a)(ii) or (iii)”.

(4) In section 26(2) (interpretation)—

(a) for the definition of “religious body” substitute—

“‘religious or belief body’ means an organised group of people—

(a) which meets regularly for religious worship; or
(b) the principal object (or one of the principal objects) of which is to uphold or promote philosophical beliefs and which meets regularly for that purpose;”, and

(b) after that definition insert—

““religious or belief marriage” has the meaning given by section 8(2)(a);”.

11 Registration of nominated persons as celebrants

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 9 (registration of nominated persons as celebrants)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) for “religious body” substitute “religious or belief body”,

(ii) after “marriages” insert “between persons of different sexes”,

(b) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) A religious or belief body, not being prescribed by virtue of section 8(1B)(a)(i), may nominate to the Registrar General any of its members who it desires should be registered under this section as empowered to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex.”,

(c) in subsection (2)—

(i) after “(1)” insert “or (1A)”,

(ii) in paragraph (a), for “religious body” substitute “religious or belief body”, and

(iii) in paragraph (d)—

(A) the word “religious” is repealed, and

(B) after “that body” insert “in relation to solemnising marriages between persons of different sexes or, as the case may be, marriages between persons of the same sex”,

(d) after paragraph (d) insert “; or

(e) the nominating body does not meet the qualifying requirements.”,

(e) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) In subsection (2)(e), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

(2B) Regulations under subsection (2A)—

(a) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances;

(b) may include transitional and saving provision.

(2C) Regulations under subsection (2A) are subject to the negative procedure.”,

(f) in subsection (3)—

(i) after “ceremony” insert “for marriage between persons of different sexes”,

(ia) in paragraph (a), for the words from “witnesses,” to “wife;” substitute “witnesses—
(i) that they accept each other as husband and wife;
(ii) that they accept each other in marriage; or
(iii) either or both of sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii);”,

(ib) in paragraph (b), for the words from “subsection,” to “wife,” substitute “subsection—
(i) that the parties are then husband and wife;
(ii) that the parties are then married; or
(iii) either or both of sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii),”,” and

(ii) after “ceremonies” insert “for marriage between persons of different sexes”,

(g) after subsection (3) insert—
“(3A) For the purposes of subsection (2)(b) above, a marriage ceremony for marriage between persons of the same sex is of an appropriate form if it includes, and is in no way inconsistent with—

(a) a declaration by the parties, in the presence of each other, the celebrant and two witnesses, that they accept each other in marriage;
(b) a declaration by the celebrant, after the declaration mentioned in paragraph (a), that the parties are then married, and the Registrar General may, before deciding whether to accept or reject a nomination, require the nominating body to produce in writing the form of words used at its marriage ceremonies for marriage between persons of the same sex.”,

(h) in subsection (4)—

(i) after “(1)” insert “or (1A)”, and

(ii) in paragraph (b), after “area” insert “or place”,

(i) in subsection (5)(a), after “(1)” insert “or (1A)”,

(j) after subsection (5) insert—
“(5ZA)The register mentioned in subsection (5)(a)(ii) is to be in two parts—

(a) the first part containing the details mentioned in subsection (5)(a)(ii) in relation to persons nominated by religious or belief bodies to solemnise marriages between persons of different sexes; and

(b) the second part containing those details in relation to persons nominated by religious or belief bodies to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex.”,

(k) in subsection (6), in the proviso, for “religious body” in each place where it appears substitute “religious or belief body”, and

(l) the italic cross-heading preceding section 9 becomes “Religious or belief marriages”.

(3) In section 10 (removal of celebrant’s name from register)—

(a) in subsection (1)—
Part 1—Marriage

Chapter 3—Solemnisation of marriage

(i) in paragraph (b), after “9(1)” insert “or (1A)”, and

(ii) in paragraph (c), after “9(3)” insert “or (3A)”,

(b) after that subsection insert—

“(1A) In relation to any ground mentioned in subsection (1)(a) to (c), references in this section to removal from and restoration to the register include removal from and restoration to the appropriate part of the register.”, and

(c) in subsection (4), after “9(1)” insert “or (1A)”.

(4) In section 14(b) (form of ceremony to be used by approved celebrant), after “9(3)” insert “or (3A)”.

(5) In section 24(2)(a) (offences), after “area” insert “or place”.

12 Temporary authorisation of celebrants

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 12 (temporary authorisation of celebrants)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “person” substitute “member of a religious or belief body”,

(b) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The Registrar General may grant an authorisation to a person under subsection
(1) only if satisfied that the religious or belief body of which the person is a member meets the qualifying requirements.

(1B) An authorisation under subsection (1)(b) may be granted in relation to—

(a) only marriages between persons of different sexes;

(b) only marriages between persons of the same sex; or

(c) both.

(1C) The Registrar General may grant an authorisation to a person under subsection (1)(b) to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex only if the religious or belief body of which the person is a member—

(a) is prescribed by virtue of section 8(1B)(a)(i); or

(b) has nominated members (whether or not including that person) under section 9(1A) to solemnise marriages between persons of the same sex.

(1D) In subsection (1A), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

(1E) Regulations under subsection (1D)—

(a) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances;

(b) may include transitional and saving provision.

(1F) Regulations under subsection (1D) are subject to the negative procedure.”.

(3) In section 24 (offences), in subsection (2)(c), for the words from “12(a)” to the end substitute “12 of this Act—

(i) if authorised under subsection (1)(a) of that section, solemnises a marriage not specified in the authorisation;
Chapter 4—Same sex marriage: protection of freedom of expression etc.

14 Same sex marriage: protection of freedom of expression etc.

(1) For the avoidance of doubt, nothing in this Part so far as it makes provision for the marriage of persons of the same sex and as to the persons who may solemnise such marriages affects the exercise of—

(a) the Convention right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion,
(b) the Convention right to freedom of expression, or
(c) any equivalent right conferred by rule of law.

(2) “Convention right” has the same meaning as in the Human Rights Act 1998.

Chapter 5

Other changes to marriage procedure

15 Power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: marriage

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 3 (notice of intention to marry), after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) A district registrar to whom a notice under subsection (1) is submitted may require the person submitting the notice to provide the district registrar with specified nationality evidence relating to each of the parties to the marriage.
(4B) A requirement under subsection (4A) may be imposed at any time—
   (a) on or after the submitting of the notice under subsection (1); but
   (b) before the district registrar completes the Marriage Schedule.

(4C) In subsection (4A), “specified nationality evidence” means such evidence of that person’s nationality as may be specified in guidance issued by the Registrar General.”.

(3) In section 7 (marriage outside Scotland where a party resides in Scotland), in subsection
   (1) for “and (3)” substitute “, (3) and (4A) to (4C)”.

16 The Marriage Schedule

10 (1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 6 (the Marriage Schedule)—
   (a) after subsection (1) insert—
       “(1A) Regulations under subsection (1) prescribing the form of the Marriage Schedule may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.”,
       and
   (b) in subsection (4)(a), for “14 days” in both places where those words appear substitute “28 days”.

(3) In section 7(2) (issuing of certificate in respect of legal capacity to marry), for “14 days”
       substitute “28 days”.

(4) In section 19(1) (period between receipt of marriage notice and solemnisation of marriage), for “14 days” substitute “28 days”.

17 Marriage outside Scotland: evidence of dissolution of former civil partnership

In section 7(1) of the 1977 Act (marriage outside Scotland where a party resides in Scotland), after “3(1)(a),” insert “(aa),”.

18 Religious marriages: solemnisation by Church of Scotland deacons

In section 8(1)(a)(i) of the 1977 Act (solemnisation of marriage by ministers of the Church of Scotland), after “minister” insert “or deacon”.

19 Places at which civil marriages may be solemnised

(1) The 1977 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 18 (places at which civil marriages may be solemnised)—
   (a) in subsection (1)—
       (i) after paragraph (a) insert—
           “(aa) at an appropriate place in the registration district of the authorised registrar; or
       (ab) with the approval of the Registrar General, at—
           (i) the registration office of another authorised registrar;
(ii) an appropriate place in the registration district of another authorised registrar; or

(iii) an appropriate place in Scottish waters.”,

(ii) paragraph (b) (and the word “or” following it) are repealed, and

(iii) paragraph (c) is repealed,

(b) after that subsection insert—

“(1A) In this section—

“appropriate place” means a place which—

(a) the parties to the intended marriage and the local registration authority agree is to be the place of solemnisation; and

(b) is not religious premises;

“local registration authority” means—

(a) the local registration authority for the registration district which includes the place; or

(b) where the place is in Scottish waters, the local registration authority for the authorised registrar’s registration district;

“religious premises” means premises which—

(a) are used solely or mainly for religious purposes; or

(b) have been so used and have not subsequently been used solely or mainly for other purposes.”,

(c) subsections (2) to (8) are repealed.

(3) Section 18A (approved places) is repealed.

(4) In section 19 (marriage ceremony and registration of marriage)—

(a) in subsection (4)(a)—

(i) for sub-paragraph (ii) substitute—

“(ii) at an appropriate place (within the meaning given by section 18) in the registration district of the authorised registrar; or”,

(ii) sub-paragraph (iii) (and the word “or” following it) are repealed, and

(iii) in sub-paragraph (iv), for the words “in or on an approved vessel” substitute “at an appropriate place (within the meaning given by section 18)”,

(b) in subsection (4)(b)(ii), for “approved place” substitute “appropriate place (within the meaning given by section 18)”, and

(c) subsection (5) is repealed.

(5) In section 26(2A)(b) (seaward boundary of registration district), for “within a registration district if it” substitute “a place within a registration district if the vessel”.
20 Second marriage ceremony: form of endorsement

In section 20(2)(d) of the 1977 Act (second marriage ceremony), in the form of the endorsement, the word “19” in both places where it appears is repealed.

CHAPTER 6

5 SHERIFF COURT JURISDICTION IN RELATION TO DECLARATOR OF MARRIAGE

21 Sheriff court jurisdiction in relation to declarator of marriage

(1) Section 8 of the Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973 (jurisdiction of the sheriff court in relation to actions for separation, divorce etc.) is amended as follows.

(1A) In subsection (1), before paragraph (a) insert—

“(za) an action for declarator of marriage;”.

(2) After subsection (2) insert—

“(2ZA) The court has jurisdiction to entertain an action for declarator of marriage if (and only if)—

(a) either party to the marriage—

(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the action is begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date, and

(b) any of the following requirements is met in relation to either of the parties to the marriage—

(i) the party is domiciled in Scotland on the date on which the action is begun,

(ii) the party was habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with that date, or

(iii) the party died before that date and either—

(A) was at death domiciled in Scotland, or

(B) had been habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with the date of death.”.

(3) In subsection (3)—

(a) after “declarator of” insert “marriage or of”, and

(b) after “subsection (2)” in both places where those words appear insert “, (2ZA)”.

(4) In subsection (4), after “declarator of” insert “marriage or of”.

PART 2

CIVIL PARTNERSHIP

22 Registration of civil partnership

(1) The Civil Partnership Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”) is amended as follows.
(2) In section 85 (formation of civil partnership by registration)—
(a) in subsection (1), for paragraph (c) and the words following it substitute—
“(c) the approved celebrant or, as the case may be, the authorised registrar.”;
(b) in subsection (4)(b), at the beginning insert “the approved celebrant or, as the case may be,”.

(3) In section 86 (eligibility)—
(a) for subsection (2) substitute—
“(2) Subject to subsection (3), a person is related to another person in a forbidden degree if related to that person in a degree specified in Schedule 10.”;
(b) in subsection (3), for the words from the beginning to “related” in the third place where it appears substitute “A person who is related to another person in a degree specified in paragraph 2 of Schedule 10 (relationships by affinity) is not related to that person”;
(c) after subsection (3) insert—
“(3A) For the purposes of paragraph 2 of Schedule 10, “spouse” means—
(a) in the case of a marriage between persons of different sexes, a wife in relation to her husband or a husband in relation to his wife, and
(b) in the case of a marriage between persons of the same sex, one of the parties to the marriage in relation to the other.”;
(d) in subsection (5)—
(i) after “in” insert “subsection (3A)(a) as it applies to”, and
(ii) the word “former” in each place where it appears is repealed, and
(e) in subsection (5A)—
(i) for “mother” substitute “parent”, and
(ii) the words “in either column” are repealed.

(4) In section 87 (appointment of authorised registrars), before “registration” in the first place where it appears insert “civil”.

(5) In section 88 (notice of proposed civil partnership), after subsection (6) insert—
“(7) In this section, “the district registrar” means—
(a) where the civil partnership is to be registered in a registration district, the district registrar for that district,
(b) where the civil partnership is to be registered in Scottish waters—
(i) in the case where the civil partnership is to be registered by an approved celebrant, the district registrar for any registration district,
(ii) in the case where the civil partnership is to be registered by an authorised registrar, the district registrar for the registration district of the proposed authorised registrar.”.

(6) In section 89 (civil partnership notice book), after subsection (2) insert—
“(3) In this section and sections 90, 91, 92 and 94, “the district registrar” means—

(a) where the civil partnership is to be registered in a registration district, the district registrar for that district,

(b) where the civil partnership is to be registered in Scottish waters—

(i) in the case where the civil partnership is to be registered by an approved celebrant, the district registrar to whom the civil partnership notices were submitted,

(ii) in the case where the civil partnership is to be registered by an authorised registrar, the district registrar for the registration district of the proposed authorised registrar.”.

(7) In section 90 (publicisation)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “a district registrar” substitute “the district registrar”,

(b) in subsection (2)(b), for “14 days” substitute “28 days”, and

(c) in subsection (3), for “91” substitute “91(1)”.

(8) In section 91 (early registration)—

(a) the existing text becomes subsection (1),

(b) in that subsection—

(i) for “An authorised registrar who” substitute “Where the district registrar”,

(ii) for “14 days” substitute “28 days”, and

(iii) after “section 90)” insert “the district registrar”, and

(c) after that subsection insert—

“(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), a request which is made by electronic means is to be treated as in writing if it is received in a form which is legible and capable of being used for subsequent reference.”.

(9) In section 92 (objections to registration)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “at which a notice of proposed civil partnership to which the objection would relate” substitute “of the district registrar”,

(b) in subsection (4)(b)—

(i) the word “and” following sub-paragraph (i) is repealed, and

(ii) after sub-paragraph (ii) insert “, and

(iii) where, in the case of a civil partnership to be registered by an approved celebrant, the civil partnership schedule has already been issued to the parties, if possible notify that celebrant of the objection and advise the celebrant not to register the civil partnership pending consideration of the objection.”, and

(c) in subsection (5)(a), for the words “not to register the intended civil partners and to notify them” substitute “to take all reasonable steps to ensure that the registration of the civil partnership does not take place and must notify, or direct the district registrar to notify, the intended civil partners”.

(10) In section 93 (place of registration)—

(a) in subsection (1)—
(i) after “registered” insert “by an authorised registrar”, and

(ii) for the words from “other” in the first place where it appears to the end substitute “other—

(a) at the registration office of the authorised registrar,

(b) at an appropriate place in the registration district of the authorised registrar, or

(c) with the approval of the Registrar General, at—

(i) the registration office of another authorised registrar,

(ii) an appropriate place in the registration district of another authorised registrar, or

(iii) an appropriate place in Scottish waters.”,

(b) after that subsection, insert—

“(1A) In this section—

“appropriate place” means a place which—

(a) the parties to the intended civil partnership and the local registration authority agree is to be the place of registration, and

(b) is not religious premises,

“local registration authority” means—

(a) the local registration authority for the registration district which includes the place, or

(b) where the place is in Scottish waters, the local registration authority for the authorised registrar’s registration district,

“religious premises” means premises which—

(a) are used solely or mainly for religious purposes, or

(b) have been so used and have not subsequently been used solely or mainly for other purposes.”,

(c) subsections (2) and (3) are repealed, and

(d) the title of section 93 becomes “Place of civil registration of civil partnerships”.

(11) After section 93 insert—

“93A Date and place of registration of religious or belief civil partnerships

(1) A religious or belief civil partnership may be registered only on the date and at the place specified in the civil partnership schedule.

(2) But if, for any reason, the civil partnership cannot be registered on that date or at that place and a new date or place is fixed for the registration, the district registrar must—

(a) issue another civil partnership schedule under section 94(2) in place of that already issued, specifying the new date or place, or

(b) substitute, or direct the approved celebrant to substitute, the new date or place in the civil partnership schedule already issued.

(3) Subsection (2) does not apply where—
(a) the new date is more than 3 months after the date for the registration specified in the civil partnership schedule already issued, or

(b) the new place is in a different registration district, is in Scottish waters instead of a registration district or is in a registration district instead of Scottish waters.

(4) In a case falling within subsection (3)(a) or (b) the Registrar General may, according to the circumstances—

(a) direct the district registrar—

(i) to issue another civil partnership schedule under section 94(2) in place of that already issued, specifying the new date or place, or

(ii) to substitute, or direct the approved celebrant to substitute, the new date or place in the civil partnership schedule already issued, (whichever the Registrar General considers the more appropriate), or

(b) direct each party to the civil partnership to submit to the district registrar a new notice of proposed civil partnership.”.

(12) In section 94 (the civil partnership schedule)—

(a) the existing text becomes subsection (1),

(b) in paragraph (b) of that subsection—

(i) for “14 days” substitute “28 days”, and

(ii) for “91” substitute “91(1)”, and

(c) after that subsection insert—

“(2) In the case of a civil partnership to be registered by an approved celebrant, the civil partnership schedule completed in accordance with subsection (1) is to be issued by the district registrar to one or both of the parties to the intended civil partnership.

(3) The district registrar may not issue the civil partnership schedule on a date earlier than 7 days before the date of the intended civil partnership unless authorised to do so by the Registrar General.”.

(13) After section 94 insert—

“94A Persons who may register civil partnerships

(1) A civil partnership may be registered by and only by—

(a) a person who is—

(i) a celebrant of a religious or belief body prescribed by regulations made by the Scottish Ministers, or who, not being a celebrant, is recognised by a religious or belief body so prescribed as entitled to register civil partnerships on its behalf,

(ii) registered under section 94B, or

(iii) temporarily authorised under section 94E, or

(b) a person who is a district registrar or assistant registrar appointed under section 87.
(2) The Scottish Ministers may prescribe a religious or belief body under subsection (1)(a)(i) only if—

(a) the body requests them to do so, and
(b) the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that the body meets the qualifying requirements.

(3) For the avoidance of doubt, nothing in subsection (1)(a) or (2)(a)—

(a) imposes a duty on any religious or belief body to make a request referred to in subsection (2)(a),
(b) imposes a duty on any such body to nominate under section 94B any of its members to be registered as empowered to register civil partnerships,
(c) imposes a duty on any person to apply for temporary authorisation under section 94E to register civil partnerships,
(d) imposes a duty on any person who is an approved celebrant in relation to civil partnerships to register civil partnerships.

(4) In this Part—

(a) any such person as is mentioned in subsection (1)(a) is referred to as an “approved celebrant”,
(b) a civil partnership registered by an approved celebrant is referred to as a “religious or belief civil partnership”,
(c) a civil partnership registered by an authorised registrar is referred to as a “civil registration”.

(5) In subsection (2)(b), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

94B Registration of nominated persons as celebrants

(1) A religious or belief body, not being prescribed by virtue of section 94A(1)(a)(i), may nominate to the Registrar General any of its members who it desires should be registered under this section as empowered to register civil partnerships.

(2) The Registrar General must reject a nomination under subsection (1) if in the Registrar General’s opinion—

(a) the nominating body is not a religious or belief body,
(b) the nominee is not a fit and proper person to register a civil partnership,
(c) there are already registered under this section sufficient members of the same body as the nominee to meet the needs of that body, or
(d) the nominating body does not meet the qualifying requirements.

(3) In subsection (2)(d), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

(4) Where the Registrar General accepts a nomination made under subsection (1), the Registrar General—

(a) must determine the period during which the nominee is empowered to register civil partnerships, being a period of not more than 3 years,
(b) may determine that the nominee is empowered to register civil partnerships only in such area or place as the Registrar General may specify, and

(c) may make acceptance of the nominee’s registration subject to such other conditions as the Registrar General thinks fit.

(5) Nothing in subsection (4)(a) prevents the Registrar General from accepting a further nomination of that nominee, in accordance with this section, to take effect at any time after the end of the period determined by the Registrar General under subsection (4)(a).

(6) The Registrar General must—

(a) if accepting a nomination made under subsection (1)—

(i) so inform the nominee and the nominating body, specifying the period during which the acceptance has effect and any condition to which the acceptance is subject,

(ii) enter the name of the nominee, the nominating body and such other particulars as the Registrar General thinks fit in a register which the Registrar General must establish and maintain and which must be made available for public inspection at all reasonable times free of charge,

(b) if rejecting a nomination made under subsection (1), by notice in writing inform the nominating body of the reasons for that rejection.

(7) For the purposes of subsection (6)(b), notice which is given by electronic means is to be treated as in writing if it is received in a form which is legible and capable of being used for subsequent reference.

(8) If the nominating body is aggrieved by a rejection under this section it may, within 28 days of receiving notice of the rejection, appeal to the Scottish Ministers.

(9) On any such appeal the Scottish Ministers may—

(a) direct the Registrar General to accept the nomination, or

(b) confirm the rejection of the nomination,

and must inform the nominating body of their decision and the reason for it; and their decision is final.

(10) If a reason given for confirming the rejection of a nomination is that the nominating body is not a religious or belief body, the body may, within 42 days of receiving notice of the confirmation, appeal against the decision to the Court of Session and seek the determination of that court as to whether the body is a religious or belief body.

(11) If—

(a) the Court determines that the nominating body is a religious or belief body; and

(b) the reason mentioned in subsection (10) was the only reason given for confirming the rejection of the nomination,

the Registrar General must give effect to the determination as if it were a direction under subsection (9)(a) to accept the nomination.
Removal of celebrant’s name from register

(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, the Registrar General may remove the name of a person registered under section 94B from the register on the ground that—

(a) the person has requested that the person’s name should be so removed,

(b) the body which nominated the person under section 94B(1) no longer desires that the person should be so registered,

(c) the person—

(i) has, while registered as an approved celebrant, been convicted of an offence under this Part,

(ii) has, for the purpose of profit or gain, been carrying on a business of registering civil partnerships,

(iii) is not a fit and proper person to register civil partnerships, or

(iv) for any other reason, should not be registered as an approved celebrant.

(2) The Registrar General may not remove the name of a person from the register on any ground mentioned in subsection (1)(c) unless the Registrar General has given the person at least 21 days notice in writing of the intention to do so.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), notice which is given by electronic means is to be treated as in writing if it is received in a form which is legible and capable of being used for subsequent reference.

(4) The Registrar General must—

(a) in the notice given under subsection (2), specify the ground of removal and call upon the person to give any reasons, within the period specified in the notice, why the person’s name should not be removed from the register, and

(b) consider any representations made within that period by the person.

(5) Where a person’s name has been removed from the register on any of the grounds mentioned in paragraph (c) of subsection (1), the person or the body which nominated the person under section 94B(1) may, if aggrieved by the removal, within 28 days of receiving notice of the removal appeal to the Scottish Ministers.

(6) On an appeal under subsection (5) the Scottish Ministers may give any direction they think proper to the Registrar General as to the removal from, or restoration to, the register of the person’s name; and such direction is final.

(7) Where a person has received a notice in pursuance of subsection (2), the person must not register a civil partnership unless and until the person’s name is restored to the register or, as the case may be, the Registrar General has decided not to remove the person’s name from the register.
94D Alterations to register maintained under section 94B

(1) A body registered in pursuance of section 94B(6)(a)(ii) must notify the Registrar General of any of the following events (if practicable, within 21 days of its occurrence)—

(a) any change in the name or the address of the body or any amalgamation with any other religious or belief body, giving the name and address of any approved celebrant who is a member of the body so registered,

(b) the death of an approved celebrant who is a member of the body so registered,

(c) any change of name, address or designation of an approved celebrant who is a member of the body so registered,

(d) the cessation of an approved celebrant who is a member of the body so registered from exercising the functions of an approved celebrant, giving the person’s name and address.

(2) The Registrar General must, on receipt of any such notification, make whatever alteration to the register maintained under section 94B the Registrar General considers necessary or desirable.

94E Temporary authorisation of celebrants

(1) The Registrar General may, in accordance with such terms and conditions as may be specified in the authorisation, grant to any member of a religious or belief body a temporary written authorisation to register—

(a) a civil partnership or partnerships specified in the authorisation, or

(b) civil partnerships during such period as is specified in the authorisation.

(2) The Registrar General may grant an authorisation to a person under subsection (1) only if satisfied that the religious or belief body of which the person is a member meets the qualifying requirements.

(3) The Registrar General may grant an authorisation to a person under subsection (1)(b) only if the religious or belief body of which the person is a member—

(a) is prescribed by virtue of section 94A(1)(a)(i), or

(b) has nominated members (whether or not including that person) under section 94B(1).

(4) In subsection (2), the “qualifying requirements” are such requirements as may be set out in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (1), an authorisation which is issued by electronic means is to be treated as written if it is received in a form which is legible and capable of being used for subsequent reference.”.

(14) In section 95 (further provision as to registration)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “85” insert “the approved celebrant or, as the case may be,”,

(b) after subsection (1) insert—
“(1A) In the case of a religious or belief civil partnership, the parties to the civil partnership must, within 3 days of signing the civil partnership schedule in accordance with section 85(4), deliver the civil partnership schedule, or send it by post or arrange that it is delivered, to the district registrar.”;

(c) in subsection (2), for “after the civil partnership schedule has been signed, the authorised registrar” substitute “after—

(a) in the case of a civil registration, the civil partnership schedule has been signed in accordance with section 85, or

(b) in the case of a religious or belief civil partnership, the district registrar receives the civil partnership schedule,

the district registrar”,

(d) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) The district registrar must not enter the particulars set out in the civil partnership schedule relating to a religious or belief civil partnership in the civil partnership register unless and until the registrar receives a duly signed civil partnership schedule in respect of that civil partnership.

(3B) Where the Registrar General is satisfied that—

(a) a civil partnership has been properly registered, and

(b) the civil partnership schedule in respect of the civil partnership has been duly signed but has been lost or destroyed,

the Registrar General may direct the district registrar to complete an exact copy of the original civil partnership schedule and, so far as practicable, to arrange for its signature by those persons who signed the original schedule.

(3C) As soon as possible after the copy schedule has been signed, the district registrar must cause the particulars as set out in it to be entered into the civil partnership register.”;

(e) in subsection (4), after “their” insert “civil”.

(15) After section 95 insert—

“95ZA Registrar’s power to require delivery of civil partnership schedule

(1) Where the civil partnership schedule is not delivered to the district registrar within 21 days from the date of registration as entered in the schedule, the registrar may serve a notice in the prescribed form on either of the parties to the civil partnership requiring that party within 8 days from the date of service to deliver the schedule, or send it by post, to the registrar.

(2) If a person on whom a notice has been served under subsection (1) fails to comply with the notice, the district registrar may serve on the person a second notice in the prescribed form requiring the person to attend personally at the registration office of the district registrar, within 8 days from the date of service of the second notice, for the purpose of delivering the civil partnership schedule to the district registrar to enable the registrar to enter the civil partnership in the civil partnership register.”.

(16) In section 95A (validity following entry in civil partnership register), in subsection (1), after “95(2)” insert “or (3C)”.

(17) In section 96 (civil partnership with former spouse)—
(a) in subsection (3)(b), for “91” substitute “91(1)”, and
(b) in subsection (3)(c), for “paragraph (b)” substitute “subsection (1)(b)”.

(18) In section 97 (certificates of no impediment for Part 2 purposes)—
(a) in subsection (4), for “14 days” substitute “28 days”, and
(b) after subsection (5) insert—

“(5A) For the purposes of subsection (5), an objection which is submitted by electronic means is to be treated as in writing if it is received in a form which is legible and capable of being used for subsequent reference.”.

(19) In section 100 (offences)—
(a) in subsection (2)—

(i) in paragraphs (c), (d) and (e), after “being” insert “an approved celebrant or, as the case may be,”, and
(ii) in paragraph (f), for the words from “a” in the second place where it appears to the end substitute “in accordance with section 93”,
(b) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A person commits an offence if the person—

(a) registers a civil partnership in an area or place in which by virtue of section 94B(4)(b) the person is not permitted to register a civil partnership,
(b) registers a civil partnership in contravention of section 94C(7),
(c) being a person temporarily authorised under section 94E—

(i) if authorised under subsection (1)(a) of that section, registers a civil partnership not specified in the authorisation,
(ii) if authorised under subsection (1)(b) of that section, registers a civil partnership outwith the period specified in the authorisation, (iii) in either case, registers a civil partnership otherwise than in accordance with such terms and conditions as may be specified in the authorisation,
(d) being a party to a civil partnership, fails to comply with a notice served under section 95ZA(2).

(3B) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3A) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.”, and

(c) in subsection (4), for “or (2)” substitute “, (2) or (3A)”.

(20) In section 126(4) (regulations), after “section” insert “94A(1)(a)(i) or (5), 94B(3), 94E(4) or”.

(21) In section 135(1) (interpretation of Part 3)—
(a) after the definition of “the 1965 Act” insert—

““approved celebrant” has the meaning given by section 94A(4)(a);”,
(b) after the definition of “civil partnership schedule” insert—

““civil registration” has the meaning given by section 94A(4)(c);”, and
(c) after the definition of “registration office” insert—

““religious or belief body” means an organised group of people—
(a) which meets regularly for religious worship, or
(b) the principal object (or one of the principal objects) of which is to uphold or promote philosophical beliefs and which meets regularly
for that purpose;
“religious or belief civil partnership” has the meaning given by section
94A(4)(b);”.

(22) For Schedule 10 substitute—

“SCHEDULE 10
(introduced by section 86)
FORBIDDEN DEGREES OF RELATIONSHIP: SCOTLAND

1. Relationships by consanguinity
   Parent
   Child
   Grandparent
   Grandchild
   Sibling
   Aunt or uncle
   Niece or nephew
   Great-grandparent
   Great-grandchild

2. Relationships by affinity referred to in section 86(3)
   Child of former spouse
   Child of former civil partner
   Former spouse of parent
   Former civil partner of parent
   Former spouse of grandparent
   Former civil partner of grandparent
   Grandchild of former spouse
   Grandchild of former civil partner.”.

23 Power of district registrar to require evidence of nationality: civil partnership

In section 88 of the 2004 Act (notice of proposed civil partnership), after subsection (7)
(inserted by section 22(5) of this Act) insert—

“(8) A district registrar to whom a notice under subsection (1) is submitted may require the person submitting the notice to provide the district registrar with specified nationality evidence relating to each of the intended civil partners.
Part 2—Civil partnership

(9) A requirement under subsection (8) may be imposed at any time—
   (a) on or after the submitting of the notice under subsection (1), but
   (b) before the district registrar completes the civil partnership schedule.

(10) In subsection (8), “specified nationality evidence” means such evidence of that
5 person’s nationality as may be specified in guidance issued by the Registrar General.”.

24 Recognition of overseas relationships

(1) The 2004 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 214 (general conditions in relation to recognition of overseas relationships)—

   (a) after paragraph (b) insert—

   “(ba) the relationship is not one of marriage,”, and

   (b) in paragraph (c), for the words from the second “or” to the end substitute “but are not treated as married”.

(3) In Schedule 20 to the 2004 Act (specified relationships), the following entries are
10 repealed—

   “Argentina marriage”,
   “Belgium marriage”,
   “Brazil marriage”,
   “Canada marriage”,
   “Denmark marriage”,
   “Iceland marriage”,
   “Mexico: Mexico City Federal District marriage”,
   “Netherlands marriage”,
   “Norway marriage”,
   “Portugal marriage”,
   “South Africa marriage”,
   “Spain marriage”,
   “Sweden marriage”,
   “United States of America: California marriage”,
   “United States of America: Connecticut marriage”,
   “United States of America: District of Columbia marriage”,
   “United States of America: Iowa marriage”,
   “United States of America: Massachusetts marriage”,
   “United States of America: New Hampshire marriage”,
15 “United States of America: New York marriage”,
   “United States of America: Vermont marriage”.

20
Dissolution of civil partnership: evidence

(1) Article 2 of the 2012 Order (which disapplies from certain actions for dissolution of civil partnership section 8(3A) of the Civil Evidence (Scotland) Act 1988 (requirement for evidence other than that of a party to the civil partnership)) is to be taken to have been in force since 5 December 2005 and to have had effect in relation to actions raised before 30 March 2012 as it has effect in relation to actions raised on or after that date.

(2) The “2012 Order” is the Evidence in Civil Partnership and Divorce Actions (Scotland) Order 2012 (SSI 2012/111).

Bigamy

(1) In section 24 of the 1977 Act (offences)—

(a) before subsection (1) insert—

“(A1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if A purports to enter into a marriage with another person (“B”) knowing that either or both—

(a) A is already married to or in a civil partnership with a person other than B, or

(b) B is already married to or in a civil partnership with a person other than A.

(A2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (A1) is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years or to a fine (or both),

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum (or both).”, and

(b) in subsection (1)(ii), for “prescribed sum” substitute “statutory maximum”.

(2) In section 100 of the 2004 Act (offences)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “registers” substitute “purports to register”, and

(b) in subsection (3)(b), for “level 3 on the standard scale” substitute “the statutory maximum”.

(3) The common law offence of bigamy is abolished.

(4) In section 13 of the Presumption of Death (Scotland) Act 1977 (defence to charge of bigamy)—

(a) for “bigamy” substitute “committing an offence under section 24(A1) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 or section 100(1) of the Civil Partnership Act 2004”,

(b) after “marriage” insert “or civil partnership”, and

(c) after “spouse” insert “or civil partner”.
PART 4
CHANGE OF GENDER OF MARRIED PERSONS OR CIVIL PARTNERS

27 Change of gender of married persons or civil partners

Schedule 2 (change of gender of married persons or civil partners) has effect.

28 Renewed marriage or civil partnership following issue of full gender recognition certificate

1. The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision about—
   (a) the solemnisation of a renewed marriage between the parties to a protected Scottish marriage following the issue of a full gender recognition certificate to a party (or both parties) to the marriage,
   (b) the registration of a renewed civil partnership between the parties to a protected Scottish civil partnership following the issue of full gender recognition certificates to both parties to the civil partnership.

2. Regulations under subsection (1) may in particular make provision—
   (a) about the submitting by the parties to the protected Scottish marriage of notice of intention to enter into a renewed marriage,
   (b) about the submitting by the parties to the protected Scottish civil partnership of notice of intention to enter into a renewed civil partnership,
   (c) about the information to be provided by the parties,
   (d) about the provision of evidence by the parties,
   (e) for the parties to appear before any person or appear at any place,
   (f) conferring functions on persons in relation to a renewed marriage or renewed civil partnership,
   (g) for fees, of such amounts as are specified in or determined in accordance with the regulations, to be payable in respect of—
      (i) the submitting of notice of intention to enter into a renewed marriage or renewed civil partnership,
      (ii) the exercise of any function conferred by virtue of paragraph (f).

3. Functions conferred by virtue of subsection (2)(f) may include functions relating to—
   (a) the recording of information relating to a renewed marriage or renewed civil partnership,
   (b) the issuing of certified copies of any information recorded,
   (c) the conducting of services or ceremonies in connection with a renewed marriage or renewed civil partnership.

4. Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult the Registrar General of Births, Deaths and Marriages for Scotland.

5. Regulations under subsection (1)—
   (a) may include consequential, supplementary, incidental, transitional, transitory or saving provision,
Part 5

Registration services

28A Grounds of divorce: interim gender recognition certificate followed by full certificate

(1) Section 1 of the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 (grounds of divorce) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1)(b) (issue of interim gender recognition certificate as ground on which decree of divorce may be granted), at the beginning insert “subject to subsection (3B),”.

(3) After subsection (3A) (as inserted by section 5(3)) insert—

“(3B) Subsection (1)(b)—

(a) does not apply where, under the Gender Recognition Act 2004, the Gender Recognition Panel issue a full gender recognition certificate to the person to whom the interim gender recognition certificate was issued, but

(b) continues to apply despite a full gender recognition certificate being issued to that person by the sheriff under section 4E of that Act.”.

PART 5

REGISTRATION SERVICES

29 Provision of certain information to district registrars

In section 39C(1)(a)(i) of the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965 (provision of certain information to district registrars), for “section 34(3)” substitute “section 34(4)”.

29A Form of register of marriages

In section 54 of the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965 (regulations), after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) Regulations prescribing the form of a register of marriages under section 32 may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.”.
PART 6
GENERAL PROVISIONS

30 Interpretation
In this Act—

“the 1977 Act” means the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977,
“the 2004 Act” means the Civil Partnership Act 2004.

31 Ancillary provision
(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make such supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision as they consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in connection with, or for giving full effect to, any provision of this Act.

(1A) An order under subsection (1) may make different provision for different purposes.

(2) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment (including this Act).

(3) Subject to subsection (4), an order under subsection (1) is subject to the negative procedure.

(4) An order under subsection (1) containing provisions which add to, replace or omit any part of the text of an Act is subject to the affirmative procedure.

32 Commencement
(1) This section and sections 30, 31 and 33 come into force on the day after Royal Assent.

(2) The other provisions of this Act come into force on such day as the Scottish Ministers may by order appoint.

(3) An order under subsection (2) may include transitional, transitory or saving provision.

33 Short title
The short title of this Act is the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Act 2014.
SCHEDULE 1
(introduced by section 6)

JURISDICTION IN PROCEEDINGS RELATING TO SAME SEX MARRIAGES

Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973

1 (1) The Domicile and Matrimonial Proceedings Act 1973 is amended in accordance with this paragraph.

(2) After section 8 insert—

“8A  Same sex marriages

(1) Sections 7 and 8 do not apply in relation to marriages between persons of the same sex.

(2) Schedule 1B (jurisdiction in relation to same sex marriages (Scotland)) has effect.”.

(3) In section 10 (ancillary and collateral orders), after subsection (1B) insert—

“(1BA) In relation to a marriage between persons of the same sex, subsection (1) does not give the Court of Session or a sheriff court jurisdiction to entertain an application in proceedings where—

(a) the court is exercising jurisdiction in the proceedings by virtue of regulations under paragraph 2 of Schedule 1B; and

(b) the making or variation of an order in consequence of the application would contravene the regulations.”.

(4) Before Schedule 2 insert—

“SCHEDULE 1B
(introduced by section 8A)

JURISDICTION IN RELATION TO SAME SEX MARRIAGES (SCOTLAND)

Introduction

1 (1) This Schedule has effect with respect to the jurisdiction of the Court of Session and of the sheriff court to entertain, in relation to same sex marriages, proceedings for—

(a) divorce,

(b) separation,

(c) declarator of marriage,

(d) declarator of nullity of marriage,

(e) declarator of recognition, or non-recognition, of a relevant foreign decree.

(2) References in this Schedule to “relevant proceedings” are to such proceedings as are mentioned in sub-paragraph (1).

(3) In this Schedule—

“relevant foreign decree” means a decree of divorce, separation or nullity granted outwith a member State,
“same sex marriage” means a marriage between persons of the same sex.

Power to make provision corresponding to EC Regulation 2201/2003

2 (1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision—

(a) as to the jurisdiction of courts in Scotland in relevant proceedings in relation to a same sex marriage where one of the parties to the marriage—

(i) is or has been habitually resident in a member State,

(ii) is a national of a member State, or

(iii) is domiciled in a part of the United Kingdom or in the Republic of Ireland, and

(b) as to the recognition in Scotland of any judgment of a court of another member State which orders the divorce or separation of the parties to a same sex marriage, or the annulment of a same sex marriage.

(3) The regulations may provide that for the purposes of this Schedule and the regulations “member State” means—

(a) all member States with the exception of such member States as are specified in the regulations, or

(b) such member States as are specified in the regulations.

(4) The regulations may make provision under sub-paragraph (1)(b) which applies even in a case where the date of the divorce, separation or annulment is earlier than the date on which this paragraph comes into force.

(5) The regulations are subject to the affirmative procedure.

Divorce or separation

3 (1) The Court of Session has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for the divorce or separation of the parties to a same sex marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the Scottish courts have jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, or

(b) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under those regulations and either party to the marriage is domiciled in Scotland on the date on which the proceedings are begun.

(2) The sheriff court has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for the divorce or separation of the parties to a same sex marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the requirements of paragraph (a) or (b) of sub-paragraph (1) are met, and

(b) either party to the marriage—
(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date.

(3) Despite sub-paragraph (2), the sheriff court of the sheriffdom of Lothian and Borders at Edinburgh also has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for the divorce or separation of the parties to a same sex marriage if the following requirements are met—

(a) the parties married each other in Scotland,

(b) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, and

(c) it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to assume jurisdiction in the case.

Declarator of marriage

4 (1) In relation to a same sex marriage, the Court of Session has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of marriage if (and only if) either of the parties to the marriage—

(a) is domiciled in Scotland on the date on which the proceedings are begun,

(b) was habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with that date, or

(c) died before that date and either—

(i) was at death domiciled in Scotland, or

(ii) had been habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with the date of death.

(2) In relation to a same sex marriage, the sheriff court has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the requirements of paragraph (a), (b) or (c) of sub-paragraph (1) are met in relation to either party to the marriage, and

(b) either party of the marriage—

(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date.

Nullity of marriage

5 (1) The Court of Session has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of nullity of a same sex marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the Scottish courts have jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, or
(b) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under those regulations and either party to the marriage—

(i) is domiciled in Scotland on the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) died before that date and either was at death domiciled in Scotland or had been habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with the date of death.

(2) The sheriff court has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of nullity of a same sex marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the requirements of paragraph (a) or (b) of sub-paragraph (1) are met, and

(b) either party to the marriage—

(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date.

(3) Despite sub-paragraph (2), the sheriff court of the sheriffdom of Lothian and Borders at Edinburgh also has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of nullity of a same sex marriage if the following requirements are met—

(a) the parties married each other in Scotland,

(b) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, and

(c) it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to assume jurisdiction in the case.

Recognition, or non-recognition, of foreign decrees

6 (1) The Court of Session has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of recognition, or non-recognition, of a relevant foreign decree relating to a same sex marriage if (and only if)—

(a) the Scottish courts have jurisdiction under regulations under paragraph 2, or

(b) no court has, or is recognised as having, jurisdiction under those regulations and either party to the marriage—

(i) is domiciled in Scotland on the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) died before that date and either was at death domiciled in Scotland or had been habitually resident in Scotland throughout the period of one year ending with the date of death.

(2) The sheriff court has jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for declarator of recognition, or non-recognition, of a relevant foreign decree relating to a same sex marriage if (and only if)—
(a) the requirements of paragraph (a) or (b) of sub-paragraph (1) are met, and

(b) either party to the marriage—

(i) was resident in the sheriffdom for a period of 40 days ending with the date on which the proceedings are begun, or

(ii) had been resident in the sheriffdom for a period of not less than 40 days ending not more than 40 days before that date, and has no known residence in Scotland on that date.

Supplementary provision

7 (1) Paragraph 3(1) does not affect any rule of law under which the Court of Session has jurisdiction in certain circumstances to entertain proceedings for separation as a matter of necessity and urgency.

(2) Paragraphs 3 and 5 do not affect any jurisdiction of a sheriff court to entertain any proceedings for separation, divorce or declarator of nullity of marriage remitted to the court under any enactment or rule of court, if entertaining the proceedings would not contravene regulations under paragraph 2.

(3) At any time when proceedings are pending in respect of which a court has jurisdiction by virtue of any of paragraphs 3 to 6 (or this paragraph), the court also has jurisdiction to entertain other proceedings, in respect of the same marriage, for divorce, separation or declarator of marriage or of nullity of marriage even though that jurisdiction would not be exercisable under any of paragraphs 3 to 6.”.

Presumption of Death (Scotland) Act 1977

2 In section 1 of the Presumption of Death (Scotland) Act 1977 (actions of declarator of the death of missing persons), after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) Despite subsection (4), the sheriff court of the sheriffdom of Lothian and Borders at Edinburgh also has jurisdiction to entertain an action of declarator if—

(a) the pursuer in the action and the missing person are married to each other and are of the same sex,

(b) they married each other in Scotland, and

(c) it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to assume jurisdiction in the case.”.
SCHEDULE 2
(introduced by section 27)

CHANGE OF GENDER OF MARRIED PERSONS OR CIVIL PARTNERS

PART 1

APPLICATIONS BY MARRIED PERSONS AND CIVIL PARTNERS

Introductory

1 The Gender Recognition Act 2004 is amended in accordance with this Part of this schedule.

Interpretation

2 In section 25 (interpretation)—

(a) the existing words become subsection (1),

(aa) in the definitions of “full gender recognition certificate” and “interim gender recognition certificate”, for “5 or 5A” substitute “4C, 4E, 4F, 5, 5A or 5D”,

(b) before the definition of “registered psychologist” insert—

“protected Scottish civil partnership” means a civil partnership registered in Scotland,

“protected Scottish marriage” means a marriage solemnised in Scotland,”, and

(d) after subsection (1) insert—

“(2) A civil partnership which was registered outside the United Kingdom under an Order in Council made under Chapter 1 of Part 5 of the Civil Partnership Act 2004 is to be treated for the purposes of this Act as having been registered in Scotland if—

(a) the parties to the civil partnership elected Scotland as the relevant part of the United Kingdom under the Order, and

(b) details of the civil partnership have been sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.

(3) A marriage which was registered outside the United Kingdom under the Foreign Marriage Act 1892 (other than a marriage registered by virtue of section 18 of that Act) is to be treated for the purposes of this Act as having been solemnised in Scotland if details of the marriage have been sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.

(4) A marriage which was solemnised outside the United Kingdom and registered under an Order in Council made under the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Special Provisions) Act 1957 is to be treated for the purposes of this Act as having been solemnised in Scotland if details of the marriage have been sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.

(5) A consular marriage in relation to which the relevant part of the United Kingdom is Scotland is to be treated for the purposes of this Act as having been solemnised in Scotland.
(6) In subsection (5)—

“consular marriage” means a marriage solemnised in accordance with Part 1 of Schedule 6 to the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013 and any Order in Council made under it, “relevant part of the United Kingdom”, in relation to such a marriage, means the part of the United Kingdom determined in accordance with paragraph 1(2)(b) of that Part of that Schedule for the purposes of the marriage.”.

Evidence

3 In section 3 (evidence), before subsection (7) insert—

“(6D) If the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish marriage, an application under section 1(1) must also include—

(a) a statutory declaration by the applicant that the applicant wishes the marriage to continue after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate (if that is the case), and

(c) either—

(i) a statutory declaration by the applicant’s spouse that the spouse consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate (“a statutory declaration of consent”) (if the spouse has made such a declaration), or

(ii) a statutory declaration by the applicant that no such declaration by the applicant’s spouse is included.

(6E) If an application includes a statutory declaration of consent by the applicant’s spouse under subsection (6D)(c)(i), the Gender Recognition Panel must give the spouse notice that the application has been made.

(6F) If the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership, an application under section 1(1) must also include a statutory declaration as to where the civil partnership was registered and, if the civil partnership was registered outside the United Kingdom, that details of the civil partnership have been sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.”.

Successful applications

4 In section 4 (successful applications)—

(a) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The certificate is to be a full gender recognition certificate if the applicant is neither married nor in a civil partnership.”,

(b) in subsection (2) (as substituted by paragraph 3 of Schedule 5 to the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013)—

(i) after first “is” insert “also”,

(ii) paragraph (a) is repealed,

(c) in subsection (3) (as so substituted)—
(i) in paragraph (b), at the beginning insert “subject to subsection (3C)(b),”;
(ii) in paragraph (e), at the beginning insert “subject to subsection (3C)(c),”;
(d) after subsection (3B) (as so substituted) insert—

“(3C) The certificate is also to be a full gender recognition certificate if—

(b) the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish marriage and both parties to the marriage consent to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate, or

e) the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership and the Gender Recognition Panel has decided to issue a full gender recognition certificate to the other party to the civil partnership.

(3D) The certificate is to be an interim gender recognition certificate if—

(a) the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish marriage and either party to the marriage does not consent to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate,

(b) subject to subsection (2)(b), the applicant is a party to a marriage which is not a protected Scottish marriage,

(c) the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership and the other party to the civil partnership has not made an application under section 1(1),

(d) the applicant is a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership and the Gender Recognition Panel has decided not to issue a full gender recognition certificate to the other party to the civil partnership, or

e) subject to subsection (2)(c), the applicant is a party to a civil partnership which is not a protected Scottish civil partnership.

(3E) If a Gender Recognition Panel issues a full gender recognition certificate under this section to an applicant who is a party to a protected Scottish marriage, the Panel must give the applicant’s spouse notice of the issue of the certificate.

(3F) Subsection (3C)(c) is subject to section 5C.”.

Issue of full gender recognition certificate after interim certificate: applicant married

5 Before section 5 insert—

“4C Married person with interim certificate: issue of full certificate (Scotland)

(1) A Gender Recognition Panel must issue a full gender recognition certificate to a person in either of the following cases.

(2) Case A is where, on an application by the person, the Panel is satisfied that—

(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person,

(b) the person was a party to a protected Scottish marriage at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,

(c) the person is still a party to that protected Scottish marriage, and

(d) both parties to the marriage now consent to the marriage continuing after the issue of the full gender recognition certificate.
(3) Case B is where, on an application by the person, the Panel is satisfied that—

(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person,
(b) the person was a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,
(c) the protected civil partnership was a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977) and the parties to the civil partnership submitted notice of intention to marry under section 3(1) of that Act within the period of six months beginning with the day on which that certificate was issued,
(d) the submitting of notice has resulted in the civil partnership becoming a marriage,
(e) the person is a party to that marriage, and
(f) the person’s spouse consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of the full gender recognition certificate.

(4) If, on an application under subsection (2) or (3), the Panel is not satisfied as mentioned in that subsection, the Panel must reject the application.

(5) An application under subsection (2) must be made within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate is issued.

(6) An application under subsection (3) must be made within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the civil partnership becomes a marriage.

(7) An application under subsection (2) or (3) must include a statutory declaration of consent (within the meaning of section 3(6D)(c)(i)) made by the person’s spouse.

(8) An application under subsection (3) must also include—

(a) evidence of the date on which the notice referred to in subsection (3)(c) was submitted, and
(b) evidence that the civil partnership has become a marriage.

(9) If an application is made under this section, the Panel must give the applicant’s spouse—

(a) notice of the application, and
(b) if the Panel grants the application, notice of the issue of the full gender recognition certificate.

4D Application under section 4C: death of spouse

(1) In a case where an application is made under section 4C(2) or (3) and the applicant’s spouse dies before the application is determined—

(a) the application is to be treated as an application, made under section 5(2) in a case where a spouse has died, for a full gender recognition certificate to be issued, and
(b) that application is to be treated as having been made at the time when the application under section 4C was made.

(2) The Gender Recognition Panel determining the application must specify the period within which the applicant is to produce the required evidence in support of the new application.

(3) In this section—

“new application” means the application under section 5(2) which the person is, by virtue of subsection (1), treated as having made, “required evidence” means the evidence required by section 5(4).

4E Married person with interim certificate: issue of full certificate on application to the sheriff (Scotland)

(1) A person may make a summary application to the sheriff for the issue of a full gender recognition certificate where—

(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person,
(b) the person is a party to a protected Scottish marriage, and
(c) the person is not in possession of a statutory declaration by the person’s spouse that the spouse consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate.

(2) The sheriff must grant an application made under subsection (1) if the sheriff is satisfied that—

(a) the applicant was a party to a protected Scottish marriage at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,
(b) the applicant is still a party to that protected Scottish marriage, and
(c) the application was made within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.

(3) If an application is made under this section, the sheriff must give the applicant’s spouse—

(a) notice of the application, and
(b) if the sheriff grants the application, notice of the issue of the full gender recognition certificate.

(3A) Where the sheriff issues a full gender recognition certificate, the sheriff must send a copy to the Gender Recognition Panel.

4F Death of civil partner or spouse: issue of full certificate (Scotland)

(1) A Gender Recognition Panel must issue a full gender recognition certificate to a person in either of the following cases.

(2) Case A is where, on an application by the person, the Panel is satisfied that—

(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person,
(b) the person was a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,
(c) the protected civil partnership was a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977) and the parties to the civil partnership submitted notice of intention to marry under section 3(1) of that Act within the period of six months beginning with the day on which that certificate was issued, and

(d) the person’s civil partner died—

(i) before the submitting of notice had resulted in the civil partnership becoming a marriage, and

(ii) after the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.

(3) Case B is where, on an application by the person, the Panel is satisfied that—

(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person,

(b) the person was a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,

(c) the protected civil partnership was a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977) and the parties to the civil partnership submitted notice of intention to marry under section 3(1) of that Act within the period of six months beginning with the day on which that certificate was issued,

(d) the submitting of notice resulted in the civil partnership becoming a marriage, and

(e) the person’s spouse died—

(i) within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the civil partnership became a marriage, and

(ii) after the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.

(4) If, on an application under subsection (2) or (3), the Panel is not satisfied—

(a) as mentioned in that subsection, or

(b) that the person is neither married nor a civil partner,

the Panel must reject the application.

(5) An application under subsection (2) or (3) must be made within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the death occurs.

(6) An application under subsection (2) or (3) must include evidence of—

(a) the death of the person’s civil partner or, as the case may be, spouse and the date on which it occurred,

(b) the date on which the notice under section 3(1) of the 1977 Act was submitted.”.

5A In section 5 (issue of full certificates where applicant has been married), after subsection (1), insert—

Issue of full gender recognition certificate after interim certificate: grounds of divorce

(c) the protected civil partnership was a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977) and the parties to the civil partnership submitted notice of intention to marry under section 3(1) of that Act within the period of six months beginning with the day on which that certificate was issued, and

(d) the person’s civil partner died—

(i) before the submitting of notice had resulted in the civil partnership becoming a marriage, and

(ii) after the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.

(3) Case B is where, on an application by the person, the Panel is satisfied that—

(a) an interim gender recognition certificate has been issued to the person,

(b) the person was a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership at the time when the interim gender recognition certificate was issued,

(c) the protected civil partnership was a qualifying civil partnership (within the meaning of section 5(6) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977) and the parties to the civil partnership submitted notice of intention to marry under section 3(1) of that Act within the period of six months beginning with the day on which that certificate was issued,

(d) the submitting of notice resulted in the civil partnership becoming a marriage, and

(e) the person’s spouse died—

(i) within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the civil partnership became a marriage, and

(ii) after the period of six months beginning with the day on which the interim gender recognition certificate was issued.

(4) If, on an application under subsection (2) or (3), the Panel is not satisfied—

(a) as mentioned in that subsection, or

(b) that the person is neither married nor a civil partner,

the Panel must reject the application.

(5) An application under subsection (2) or (3) must be made within the period of six months beginning with the day on which the death occurs.

(6) An application under subsection (2) or (3) must include evidence of—

(a) the death of the person’s civil partner or, as the case may be, spouse and the date on which it occurred,

(b) the date on which the notice under section 3(1) of the 1977 Act was submitted.”.
“(1A) Subsection (1) does not apply where a full gender recognition certificate has already been issued, to the party to whom the interim gender recognition certificate was issued, by the sheriff under section 4E.”.

Applications by both civil partners

5C Protected Scottish civil partnership: applications by both civil partners

(1) This section applies where a Gender Recognition Panel decides to issue a full gender recognition certificate to a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership.

(2) The Panel must not issue the full gender recognition certificate to that person unless the Panel issues a full gender recognition certificate to the other party to the protected Scottish civil partnership.

(3) In such a case, the Panel must issue both certificates on the same day.

(4) Those certificates take effect at the beginning of the day on which they are issued.

5D Protected Scottish civil partnership: power to make further provision for issue of full certificate

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for the issue by a Gender Recognition Panel, on an application under section 1(1) by a qualifying person, of a full gender recognition certificate in additional circumstances to those specified in section 4(3C)(c) or 5C.

(2) In subsection (1), “qualifying person” means a person who is a party to a protected Scottish civil partnership.

(3) An order under subsection (1) may include, in particular, provision about—

(a) the evidence or other information that is to be included with an application,

(b) the procedure to be followed in determining an application, including provision for the giving of notice to any person,

(c) the effect of the issuing to the applicant of a full gender recognition certificate in relation to the civil partnership to which the applicant is party.

(4) Provision under subsection (3)(c) may include, in particular, provision for changing the civil partnership into a marriage.

(5) An order under subsection (1) may modify this Act or any other enactment.

(6) Before making an order under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult the following persons on a copy of the proposed draft order—

(a) the Registrar General for Scotland,

(b) the Gender Recognition Panel, and

(c) such other persons as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.”.
Appeals etc.

7 In section 8 (appeals etc.)—
   (a) in subsection (1), before “5(2)” insert “4C, 4F,”,
   (b) in subsection (5), before “5(2)” insert “4C, 4E, 4F,”,
   (c) before subsection (6) insert—
      “(5B) If an application under section 1(1), 4C, 4E, 4F, 5(2), 5A(2) or 6(1) is granted, the applicant’s spouse or civil partner may apply to the Court of Session to quash the decision to grant the application on the grounds that its grant was secured by fraud.”,
   (d) in subsection (6), before “the” in the first place where it appears insert “or an application under subsection (5B)”.

Registration

8 (1) In section 10 (registration), before subsection (2) insert—
   “(1B) Where a full gender recognition certificate is issued by a Gender Recognition Panel or the sheriff to a person who is a party to a protected Scottish marriage or a protected Scottish civil partnership, the Panel must send a copy of the certificate to the Registrar General for Scotland.”.

   (2) In Schedule 3 (registration), in Part 2 (Scotland)—
      (b) in paragraph 19(1), before “5(2)” insert “4C, 4E, 4F,”, and
      (c) after paragraph 20 insert—
         “20A(1) The Registrar General may, with the approval of the Scottish Ministers, make regulations about—
            (a) the registration of qualifying Scottish marriages, and
            (b) the registration of qualifying Scottish civil partnerships.
         (1A) Regulations under sub-paragraph (1) may in particular make provision for fees to be payable in respect of things done under the regulations.
         (1B) Regulations under sub-paragraph (1) may make different provision for different cases or circumstances.
      (2) In this paragraph—
         “qualifying Scottish civil partnership” means a civil partnership registered in Scotland in a case where a full gender recognition certificate has been issued to each of the civil partners, “qualifying Scottish marriage” means a marriage solemnised in Scotland in a case where a full gender recognition certificate has been issued to one, or each, of the spouses.”.

Continuity of marriage

9 Before section 12 insert—
“11C Continuity of marriage: Scotland

(1) This section applies in relation to a protected Scottish marriage if (by virtue of section 4(3C)(b), 4C or 4E) a full gender recognition certificate is issued to a party to the marriage.

(2) The continuity of the protected Scottish marriage is not affected by the issuing of a full gender recognition certificate.”.

Continuity of civil partnership

10 After section 11C (inserted by paragraph 9) insert—

“11D Continuity of civil partnership: Scotland

The continuity of a protected Scottish civil partnership is not affected by the issuing of full gender recognition certificates (by virtue of section 4(3C)(c)) to both civil partners.”.

Foreign gender change and marriage

11 In section 21 (foreign gender change and marriage), subsections (2) to (5) are repealed.

PART 2

ALTERNATIVE GROUNDS FOR GRANTING APPLICATIONS FOR GENDER RECOGNITION CERTIFICATES

Introductory

11A The Gender Recognition Act 2004 is further amended in accordance with this Part of this schedule.

11B In section 2 (determination of applications), after subsection (3A) insert—

“(3B) This section does not apply to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.”.

11C After section 3B insert—

“3C Alternative grounds for granting applications: Scotland

(1) This section applies to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with this section.

(2) The Panel must grant the application if satisfied that the applicant complies with the requirements imposed by and under section 3D and meets the conditions in subsections (3) to (6).

(3) The first condition is that the applicant was a party to a protected Scottish marriage or a protected Scottish civil partnership on or before the date the application was made.

(4) The second condition is that the applicant—
Evidence for granting applications on alternative grounds

11D In section 3 (evidence), after subsection (9) insert—

“(10) This section does not apply to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.”.

11E After section 3C (inserted by paragraph 11C) insert—

“Evidence for granting applications on alternative grounds: Scotland

(1) This section applies to an application under section 1(1)(a) which states that it is an application for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.

(2) The application must include either—

(a) a report made by a registered medical practitioner, or

(b) a report made by a registered psychologist practising in the field of gender dysphoria.

(3) If the application is based on the applicant having or having had gender dysphoria—
(a) the reference in subsection (2) to a registered medical practitioner is to one practising in the field of gender dysphoria, and
(b) that subsection is not complied with unless the report includes details of the diagnosis of the applicant’s gender dysphoria.

(4) Subsection (2) is not complied with in a case where—
(a) the applicant has undergone or is undergoing treatment for the purpose of modifying sexual characteristics, or
(b) treatment for that purpose has been prescribed or planned for the applicant, unless the report required by that subsection includes details of it.

(5) The application must also include a statutory declaration by the applicant that the applicant meets the conditions in section 3C(3) and (4).

(6) The application must include—
(a) a statutory declaration as to whether or not the applicant is married or a civil partner,
(b) any other information or evidence required by an order made by the Scottish Ministers, and
(c) any other information or evidence which the Panel which is to determine the application may require,

and may include any other information or evidence which the applicant wishes to include.

(7) If the applicant is married, the application must include a statutory declaration as to whether the marriage is a protected Scottish marriage.

(8) If the applicant is married, and the marriage is a protected Scottish marriage, the application must also include—
(a) a statutory declaration of consent (within the meaning of section 3(6D)(c)(i)) by the applicant’s spouse (if the spouse has made such a declaration), or
(b) a statutory declaration by the applicant that no such declaration by the applicant’s spouse is included.

(9) If the application includes a statutory declaration of consent by the applicant’s spouse, the Panel must give the spouse notice that the application has been made.

(10) If the Panel which is to determine the application requires information or evidence under subsection (6)(c) it must give reasons for doing so.”.

Membership of Panels determining applications on alternative grounds

11F In schedule 1 (Gender Recognition Panels), in paragraph 4, after sub-paragraph (3) insert—

“(4) But a Panel need not include a medical member when determining an application under section 1(1)(a) for a certificate to be granted in accordance with section 3C.”.
PART 3

CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

12 (1) In section 7(1) (applications: supplementary), before “5(2)” insert “4C, 4F,”.

(2) In section 22(2)(a) (prohibition on disclosure of information), before “5(2)” insert “4C, 4F,”.

(3) In section 24 (procedure for orders and regulations)—

(a) in subsection (5), after “section” insert “3D(6)(b),”, and

(b) after subsection (5) insert—

“(5A) Regulations made by the Registrar General for Scotland under paragraph 20A of Schedule 3 are subject to the negative procedure.

(5B) An order under section 3C(5)(b)(ii) or 5D(1) is subject to the affirmative procedure.”.

3388
Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill
[AS PASSED]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision for the marriage of persons of the same sex; to make further provision as to the persons who may solemnise marriage and as to marriage procedure and the places at which civil marriages may be solemnised; to make provision for the registration of civil partnerships by celebrants of religious or belief bodies; to make provision about gender change by married persons and civil partners; to make a minor correction in relation to registration information; and for connected purposes.

Introduced by: Alex Neil
On: 26 June 2013
Bill type: Government Bill