How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support
We agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well. Some religious bodies want to conduct same-sex marriages, including the Quakers, Unitarians, Liberal Jews and others. Other religious bodies, including the larger churches, do not want to conduct same-sex marriages. Religious freedom should apply to both groups, and the bill gets the balance right. We think that the opt-in procedures in the bill are the appropriate way to do this, and, together with the amendments to the Equality Act 2010 which have been agreed with the UK Government, protect the religious freedom of religious bodies and of their members who participate in marriage ceremonies. We think that a small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the “husband and wife” gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Some couples who want to change would like to do so by marrying in the usual way, in a civil ceremony or a religious or belief ceremony conducted by an organisation that chooses to conduct same-sex marriages. However, many couples in civil partnerships would prefer to change their civil partnership to a marriage via a simple and inexpensive administrative procedure – they have already had their big ceremony when they had their civil partnership. The bill provides both those ways of changing a civil partnership to a marriage, which we welcome. However, in the bill, couples who are already in a civil partnership can only marry in Scotland if their civil partnership was registered in Scotland. Clearly the lightweight administrative procedure for changing to a marriage can only work with civil partnerships registered here in Scotland, but we see no reason why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should not be allowed to marry in Scotland in the usual way. Not allowing this would cause real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland. They will be unable to change to a marriage unless they first dissolve their civil partnership. But that requires proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down, by living apart for a year. It is very unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry. Even if they return to the country where they registered their civil partnership, if that country does not allow same-sex marriage, they would need to dissolve their civil partnership there in a similar way before coming back to Scotland to marry. The practical result will be that the couple will effectively be barred from marrying. In contrast, same-sex couples from any part of the world who are not in a civil partnership will be allowed come to Scotland to marry, whether or not that marriage would be recognised in their home country. We see no reason why this should not also apply to couples who are already in a civil partnership, and we believe that the bill should be amended to allow this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

This is not specifically an issue for LGBT people, but we welcome the additional flexibility that will be allowed in choosing the location of civil marriage ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

We believe that most same-sex couples will prefer a civil marriage, a religious or belief marriage, or a civil partnership conducted by a registrar. However, allowing the registration of civil partnerships in a ceremony conducted by a religious or belief

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

We strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. In our view, however, a number of amendments are needed to the parts of the bill that deal with gender recognition. As the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. This enables the spouse to effectively "veto" the trans person’s gender recognition, or at least to delay it while the trans person applies for a divorce. If the relationship between the spouses is difficult, the divorce proceedings could take a long time, during which the trans person is unable to access their human right to legal recognition in their true gender. When a trans person applies for gender recognition, they have already been living in their acquired gender for at least two years. Obtaining gender recognition does not therefore change the practical nature of their marriage, which has been same-sex for at least two years. But it does free the trans person from discrimination by bringing their legal status into line with reality. That should be available with or without the spouse’s consent, because it is a matter personal to the trans person, and has no direct effect on their spouse. It is the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition where both spouses have a direct interest, and where a requirement for the consent of the trans person’s spouse would be appropriate. We therefore believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. When a person has been transitioned for a long time, it can be very difficult indeed to obtain all the medical evidence that is required from people who have only been transitioned two years. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. We therefore believe that a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill – this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. We would also like to see the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We think that the bill strikes the right balance, and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to. Even where an organisation does agree, individual marriage celebrants within that organisation will be free to opt-out of same-sex marriages, as will any person who plays a part in the religious marriage ceremonies of that organisation (eg the church organist). These are strong protections. It has been proposed by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. We would strongly oppose that. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race. The registrars’ organisation, the Association of Registrars of Scotland, is not calling for an opt-out. The registering of civil partnerships in Scotland by civil registrars has worked well without any such legal opt-out, and we expect the registering of same-sex marriages to work equally well in a similar way. It has also been proposed by some people that teachers should have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. We would strongly oppose this. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, which is equally controversial for some people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech, as section 14 of the bill confirms. People will remain free to disagree with same-sex marriage and to express that disagreement publicly. The Lord Advocate’s guidance published with the bill makes clear that it is not a crime to disagree publicly with same-sex marriage. The case of Smith v. Trafford Housing Trust demonstrates clearly that it is against the law for an employer to take action against an employee simply because they say publicly that they disagree with same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. Apart from the issues mentioned under questions 7, 8 and 11 above, the main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. That has always been a part of the wider Equal Marriage campaign in Scotland. We believe that the same choices – marriage or civil partnership - should be open to all couples regardless of their gender. We therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law, driven by the need to consider the position on opposite sex civil partnership. We believe that review should start without delay, and, once it is complete, there should be prompt legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally, we note that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and that under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clear discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation, to report by July 2014. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and we strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete.

Are you responding as...

a private individual
I'm responding as a non homophobic adult.

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
Those in civil partnerships should be allowed to retain that status if they choose.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
It makes sense to permit religious groups to do this if they elect to do so.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
There is no reason to annul such a marriage without the consent of the married parties.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is no reason that liberalizing marriage law should affect the freedom of individuals or groups to disagree with same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

If the decision is made to retain civil partnership as an institution in parallel to marriage then it should be made gender-neutral.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People need to learn to be more accepting, no gay person will want to get married in a church or venue that is not accepting of them.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The Bill has no impact on freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

This has been a long time coming but to see this change so close to becoming a reality is inspiring.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It is time we had marriage equality.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

There needs to be equal recognition in terms of the law.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I hope it will be possible to carry out a conversion of existing civil partnerships to marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't think there should be protections that allow people in certain jobs (eg registrar, teaching) to refuse to carry out their legal duties. If equal marriage is legal then by working in certain professions, you agree to respect that fact.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is a different thing to using hate speech, and there should be no protection for those who use virulently homophobic terms.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I hope we will not see many more of these consultations and that the Scottish Parliament will follow the UK Parliament in passing legislation for equal marriage.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

As long as it is opt-in

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
As we are all human we should be treated equally. What goes on in my or anyone else's bedroom as long as all partners are consenting adults it should be government policy to treat their subjects the same before the law.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I am in support of freedom of speech with limits on hate speech and incitement to commit violence. As they say there is a difference between free speech and shouting fire in a crowded building

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I have Scottish parents although I live in England and I want Scotland to have the same positive LGBT rights as England.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
There must be equality. Protecting those with "concerns" is entrenching prejudice. Slave owners in the 18th Century would have been concerned at emancipation but those concerns could not mean that slavery was justified.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Scotland must be an equal society and equality means equality of marriage

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
I don't mind there being one or both, as long as they are both available to both same sex and mixed sex unions.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I don't think they should be worried about things that don't concern them - the law must change to reflect changes in social norms. If they don't want to get married to someone of the same sex, they don't have to, and they shouldn't be allowed to discriminate against others.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am very much in favour of civil partnerships (i.e. not marriage) for mixed sex couples. As somebody who identifies as bisexual but who is due to be married in a mixed sex union next year, I would much prefer a civil partnership as the gender of the person I am marrying should not be an issue. I also think it gives an option for those of us who don't like the baggage that comes with traditional definitions of 'marriage'.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Unsure

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Unsure

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Unsure

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition
Civil Partnership is adequate and available to all who wish it.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
Marriage has always been between a man and a woman only. Any other form of coupling is not marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There is a danger that proceeding on the path of same sex marriage will give rise to a reduction of freedom for those who, by nature of their employment, will be involved this question and could end up losing their employment. This has already been the experience of a number of people. In National terms, statistically, the demand for same sex marriage is evidence of the Tail wagging the Dog.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither
I do not understand this question.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither
I do not understand this question.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither
I do not understand this question.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

My chief concern is that if this bill passes then heterosexual couples will be prejudiced against. I mean I think the bill should also introduce the possibility of the alternative status granted by a civil partnership to heterosexual couples also.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I am in favour of it!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

There is no problem with existing legislation.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

I have no problem with same sex couples. I do however think that marriage is already has a definition of a partnership between one man and one woman, and there is no reason for this to change.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Unnecessary to redefine marriage and undermine it's unique relationship between a man and a woman.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Recognize a desire for those in same sex relationships to emulate marriage, but cannot see why government policy surrenders to this pressure when a civil partnership option gives all the necessary legal recognition.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As a father and grandfather, am concerned that grand children will be taught to see marriage options a confusing mix. Also children and grandchildren put under pressure to hide their Christian perspectives on same sex relationships for fear of reprisals. If following a career as a teacher, chaplain or Church Minister their conscience stance could make them vulnerable to accusations and legal challenges under equality legislation ultimately by the European Court of Human Rights.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It’s ironic that a concession has been made to accommodate a very small percentage of the population by bringing same sex relationships into the framework of marriage. Those who have deep religious viewpoints on the sanctity of marriage and feel unable to compromise are in danger of losing their civil liberties and freedom of speech. Legal protection needs to be afforded such people even to the extent of the highest court in Europe.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Redefining the historic definition of marriage is a danger to freedom of speech and conscience. The Bible is the foundation of my faith and life and the Bible speaks against the practice of homosexuality, much in the same way as it speaks against the practice of drunkenness or uncontrolled anger. As a teacher, I fear that under new legalisation my faith may be misconstrued to be racist or discriminatory. I already feel that there are no safe-guards for me to discuss my faith openly at work. If this legalisation passes, I have every expectation of losing my job over my beliefs in the next 10 years, if not sooner. This is radical and undemocratic. Further, I think the redefinition is unnecessary. Gay couples are already legally equal through civil partnerships. The extra rights they would achieve through 'marriage' are unclear. For my own personal situation, just as atheistic teachers have the right to opt-out of teaching religious subjects in school, I should have the right to opt-out of teaching about same-sex couples in school. As a parent, I should have the right to know if my child is being taught about same-sex couples in school and have the freedom to opt-out of it if I choose.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

More specific safe-guards need to be in place so that religious celebrants are not penalized or vilified for views upholding the traditional definition of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I believe that marriage refers to the union between a man and a woman exclusively.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition
Marriage is a sacred bond. Married people would not say that they are in a civil partnership and there are some civil partners who would not want to be classified as married. Trying to equate the two is foolish.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Freedom of speech is a crucial aspect in a democratic society. People holding to traditional views of marriage are already mocked and abused by a hostile media. It is essential that under the law people have the right to verbally express their own personal faith without fear of legal repercussion. The government should ensure that no person is forced to express agreement with same sex ‘marriage’ or be punished for expressing disagreement with it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Please see my previous comment.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

13 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM ANONYMOUS

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I am strongly opposed to this bill based on moral considerations as well as on an estimate of the destructive consequences of this bill to Scottish families and to our wider society. I do not believe that the introduction of this bill represents the interests of the Scottish people in general, nor even of gay people in particular, since there were no such demands until this legislation was proposed by politicians. Further, the simultaneous moves towards redefining marriage across the European Union suggests a consensus among top-ranking politicians rather than a consensus among the citizens of these countries. Yet, these moves are represented to these citizens as being in response to a groundswell of public opinion.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage as an institution has existed since the beginning of recorded history. It has always consisted of the union of a man and a woman for the purposes of procreation and mutual support. Marriage is the basis of the family which, as Aristotle observed, is the foundation of society. Whenever a tyranny – Communist, Fascist, or otherwise – has sought absolute control of a society it has seen in the traditional family an obstacle to its exercising complete influence over the individuals in that society and, consequently, sought to weaken the traditional family. To redefine marriage to include same-sex unions is to debase the value of marriage in the same way that the introduction of counterfeit coins into an economy debases the value of genuine coins. By extending the definition of marriage to same-sex unions the institution of marriage â€” as the union of a man and a woman â€” will be further weakened, thus leading to the further weakening of the traditional family in Scotland. The social consequences initiated by a social experiment of 'same-sex marriage' will be immense and probably not visible for at least a generation. Through the resulting weakening of marriage as an institution and the concomitant weakening of the traditional family, we may expect an increased level of crime and a decreased level of social cohesion in Scotland since children (especially boys) from non-traditional families exhibit a greater propensity to anti-social behaviours in comparison to children from traditional families[1][2]. This is not make a judgement of the culpability of children from such families, or in many cases the parents, but is an impartial statistical observation that bodes very ill for any nation that, by judicial fiat, attempts to change the nature of marriage and the family. [1]Â Stephen Demuth and Susan L. Brown, â€œFamily Structure, Family Processes, and Adolescent Delinquency: The Significance of Parental Absence Versus Parental Gender,â€ Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency 41, No. 1 (February 2004): 58-81. [2]Â Robert Apel and Catherine Kaukinen, â€œOn the Relationship between Family Structure
How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I'm afraid that I do not understand this question and am unclear on the distinction between a belief celebrant and a religious celebrant.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I do not believe that same-sex unions should be solemnised by religious or state bodies in any way.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

I do not believe that civil partnerships are a good thing since their introduction in Scotland served only to cause confusion about the real nature of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

I do not believe that same-sex unions should be solemnised by religious or state bodies in any way.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I do not believe that same-sex unions should be solemnised by religious or state bodies in any way.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition
I believe that confusion about one’s sex is a pathology that should be treated with compassion for the person afflicted. I believe that it is wrong to encourage a person thus afflicted to mutilate his or her own body. Therefore, I will not address the question of the marriage of such a person.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I believe that if this bill is carried through we shall witness a radical and detrimental change take place in Scottish society. There is a very powerful and well-funded lobby in Scotland which is seeking to fundamentally alter the behaviour and beliefs of the Scottish people with respect to the gay lifestyle. Unlike other lobby groups, however, this lobby does not respect the right of those who disagree with it to hold their own opinions. In fact, the gay lobby has evinced a desire to employ the machinery of the state against those it sees as opposing it. An example of this was seen in 2006 when the police (Sunday Herald, 15 January 2006). This, on the part of one of the politicians most visibly associated with the moves to redefine marriage, is suggestive of a profound intolerance towards Catholic teaching on sexual morality and a willingness that someone who professes such beliefs be subject to legal sanctions. A further example of this was in the same year when we saw nine Strathclyde fire-fighters disciplined after they would not take part in the annual ‘Pride Scotia’ Rally in Glasgow, a rally which frequently features public obscenity and mockery of Christianity. Further, since images of firemen are sexualised in the gay community the men may have also been concerned that they would be degraded by the participants. Nevertheless, the consciences of these men were disregarded and they were punished and sent on ‘diversity training’, which is reminiscent of the ‘re-education’ of recalcitrant individuals in the Soviet Union and National Socialist Germany.

It is clear that the people who are driving the marriage bill are not interested in protecting the civil liberties of those who disagree with the redefinition of marriage. Rather, they will ensure that those who publicly reject the idea that marriage can exist between two people of the same sex or who wish to protect their children from anti-traditional marriage propaganda will be treated as criminals and subject to the full force of the law. If marriage is redefined in Scotland then we may expect based on past evidence that its proponents will seek to utilise the apparatus of the State to stamp out dissent. Without the risk of hyperbole, I believe that we shall have taken a large step towards a modern form of despotism that enforces consent through the media, schools, and the law courts.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
It is extremely concerning that the right to free speech for those who disapprove of the redefinition of marriage was subject to opprobrium by so many other MSPs and subsequently thrown out. Further, that Mr Mason was subject to personal attacks and calls for his deselection. There are therefore no grounds to believe that the right to free speech will be respected, at least not for those who disagree with the redefinition of marriage. Rather, we have every ground to believe that those who do not believe that the State has the authority to redefine marriage will be denied freedom of speech and that those who dare to speak out will suffer legal penalties.

[1] That the Parliament notes the current discussion about same-sex marriages and the Scottish Government's forthcoming public consultation concerning equal marriage; further notes that, while some in society approve of same-sex sexual relationships, others do not agree with them; desires that Scotland should be a pluralistic society where all minorities can live together in peace and mutual tolerance; believes that free speech is a fundamental right and that even when there is disagreement with another person's views, that person has the right to express these views, and considers that no person or organisation should be forced to be involved in or to approve of same-sex marriages.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I find it worrying that this bill is being passed despite the majority of Scots expressing their opposition to it in the public consultation. There were a number of irregularities in relation to the consultation, such as the Equality Network being informed that the Government would accept submissions from outside Scotland while this was kept from groups campaigning for traditional marriage. Also, the late decision almost at the end of the consultation period that the Government would count postcard submissions as one entry, which depreciated the opinions of those many ordinary people who may not have had the opportunity, ability, or confidence to fill in the submission form which was, in many places, confusingly phrased. This bespeaks an attempt to enforce 'same-sex marriage' regardless of the wishes of the Scottish people. We should be concerned that elements in the Government have shown such disregard for genuine consensus and proper democracy. Finally, I find the proposed marriage bill most alarming as it will surely open the floodgates to anti-traditional marriage propaganda dignified with the name education in our schools. In each country where marriage has been redefined to include same-sex unions the public school system in that country has made such education mandatory and has even initiated criminal charges against parents seeking to protect their children from what amounts to little more than indoctrination. There is no reason to believe that the situation in Scotland will be different and the rights of parents as the primary educators of a child respected.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I am concerned that clergy and the group of leaders in the church may be subject to litigation by refusing to conduct a 'marriage' between a same-sex couple. I also believe that parents of primary school children require to be informed if/when same-sex marriage is being presented as a curricular subject.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage is the union of a MAN and a WOMAN for support, comfort and procreation of children. This Bill proposes a two tier system of marriage, but in my opinion, this is unworkable through the existing regulations regarding divorce. There is no equality there.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There have already been situations in England, Wales and Northern Ireland where people opposed to same-sex 'marriage' have had their strong beliefs questioned and even experienced Court action.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech appears to be acceptable if one is in favour of same-sex 'marriage'; those opposed to it risk litigation. So the equality lies open to question.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Same-sex marriage allows no new legal rights which civil partnership current have. Redefining marriage is unnecessary and serves no benefit to the people of Scotland. If marriage is redefined what is there to stop it being redefined further, in some other countries an attempt has been made to legalise polygamy.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The European Court of Human Rights article 9 does not offer protection for religious beliefs when it is in opposition to other rights. Therefore as the European Court of Human Rights might eventual be ruling in cases where churches wont allow same sex marriage in their church. Public sector workers who believe in the definition of marriage 'one man and one woman' should not be should not be questioned over the diversity or equality credentials. Teachers need to be protected if the feel through religious conviction unable to teach same-sex marriage in classroom they should be allowed to withdraw from doing so. Parents need to be allowed to remove children from classrooms where they are being taught about same-sex marriage. The opportunity to foster children should given to couple hold hold traditional views of marriage. Those who work in public sector jobs may lose employment if they refuse to endorse same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
freedom if speech should not be used to discriminate against people based on their sexual orientation

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

As an issue of equality, it does not permit equality of respect for the views of people who do not agree with same-sex marriage. It imposes an obligation to treat the issue of marriage in a way which is not in accord with the views of many people and penalizes them for their views. This is an offence against freedom of expression.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

The redefinition of marriage (OED.: a relation between a man and a woman) is unnecessary and unacceptable. Why not invent another term for a different type of relationship instead of foisting it on a perfectly reasonable institution?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

I do not understand the difference between belief celebrants and religious celebrants. What do you mean by "footing"?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

To put religious celebrants in the position of having to perform a ceremony they neither agree with nor can condone is an insult to their vocation. To ask them to opt-in or opt-out is trivializing and treating the arrangements like a trade union issue.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

If the term "civil partnership" has been satisfactory up until now, why push the boundaries in such a way as to distort an arrangement which has been perfectly satisfactory to the majority up till now. If it is religious sanction that is required then find another method of achieving it or another name for it.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

It just seems like an "anything goes" attitude which debases the deeper significance of a promise to be faithful to each other.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

Considering that civil partnerships are precisely that, ie. civil, not religious, I do not see why they should seek the sanction of organized religions in this way.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

If persons "acquire gender" in the sense of proclaiming they are "transgender" , it seems legal recognition is superfluous and the issue of marriage irrelevant.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People who are in opposition to same sex marriage should have their views respected just as much as the other way round. Marriage-related institutions should not be subject to threats or withdrawal of funding.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is enshrined in the foundations of democracy. Dictatorships tell their people what to believe and how to act. This feels as if we are being told to believe in same sex marriage and being compelled to sanction it and are penalized if we disagree.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

How much research has been done into the duration of these same sex relationships? If the relationship breaks down, what happens to any children born or acquired through adoption or fostering? Do they not have an equal entitlement to treatment as children born of traditional marriage? Genealogy is going to become an impossibility.

Are you responding as...
an academic
a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

There’s no need to redefine marriage, especially now at a time when The Scottish Parliament should be concentrating on far more important things like: jobs, the economy, roads, health and education.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

1. Nobody knows yet just what additional legal rights same-sex couples will get under marriages that they do not already have under civil partnerships;
2. Same sex marriage is too radical. For years marriage has been defined as a union between a man and a woman for the production of children and to provide a safe background for them that is both loving and secure.
3. Redefining marriage could lead to the legalisation of polygamy with all the emotional and economic implications this would have - especially for the state and for children that are part of such marriages. In Canada and the US this is already starting to happen, whereas in Brazil and the Netherlands marriage-like recognition has already been accorded to three-way partnerships. So the ball is gaining momentum.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Personally I believe that only ministers of religion should conduct marriage ceremonies in places of religious worship and between men and women only. But since civil marriages between men and women only have been conducted by registrars in non-religious

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

There’s no need for this. Civil partnerships already afford to same sex couples the rights and privileges that were hitherto absent.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

I prefer men and women to get married in churches, but have come to accept civil marriages in non-religious premises for those men and women who are non-believers. I could never accept a marriage between two men or two women no matter where that marriage took place and whomsoever conducted it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

Only marriage as it stands at the moment - a union between a man and woman - should ever have anything to do with religion. A civil partnership must always be solely a matter for the state.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Because I firmly believe that marriage is a union between a man and a woman, if any partner to a such a union were to change their sex, in my view the requirements of the union would no longer be satisfied and accordingly the marriage should be declared null and void.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People should be allowed to openly express their views on same sex marriage without fear of calumny and/or litigation. But even if this were enshrined in any Scottish legislation it would very hard to achieve given the Scottish courts' subservience to The European Courts. Indeed, some legal precedents have already been set which do not bode well in this regard. 1. In the same way as atheist teachers are not obliged to teach religious education, other teachers with strong religious convictions should not be forced to teach about same sex marriage; 2. Registrars and ministers should not be forced to conduct same sex marriages and no same sex marriage should ever be conducted in a church or other place of religious worship; 3. No one should be forced to accept same sex marriages if they do not wish to; 4. Employees, in particular public sector employees, should not be discriminated against as a result of their negative views, held privately or discussed in public, on same sex marriage; 5. Parents should be empowered to withdraw their children from any lesson that teaches about and/or promotes same-sex marriage; 6. Charities, in particular adoption charities, should not be discriminated against because of their unwillingness to embrace the same sex marriage ethos. 7. Registrars who object to same sex marriage should be afforded the same opt-out facility as doctors who object to abortions. Those are specific points I can think of immediately. But in general the law must ensure that same sex marriage is something that people can agree with or disagree with at their pleasure without fear of calumny and/or litigation. Otherwise we return to Nazi Germany in the 1930s and no right-minded person would wish to do that.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Everyone in Scotland should allowed to say what he or she likes provided doing so does not infringe any legislation currently in place. Since I believe we already have quite enough of that sort of legislation, we do not need any more. On a much broader scale neither do we need anymore 'Cultural Marxism by Stealth', a wicked political ideology brewed up in Germany in the 1920s with the express purpose of destroying Western Culture by steady degrees over a very long period of time. In my opinion same sex marriage forms an important strand of this wicked ideology and, as such, should partially explain why I am vehemently opposed to it.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I think that if a same sex marriage law is passed before the Referendum on Scottish Independence The Scottish People will DEFINITELY punish The Scottish Government by saying 'No' to Scottish Independence. Whereas, right now, the very fact that a same sex marriage bill has been proposed and is being discussed makes it more, rather than less, likely that The Scottish People will punish The Scottish Government by saying 'No' to Scottish Independence. So, maybe that's another reason to drop this stupid bill as soon as possible.

Are you responding as...

an academic

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Marriage between a man and a woman is a unique relationship. It has proved itself to be the backbone of our society. It is through marriage between a man and a woman that children are born thus ensuring the future population of the world. The affections, affinity and relationship between husband and wife are different to all other relationships into which people may enter. The population of our world would die out after one or two generations if same-sex marriage became the norm because same-sex couples cannot procreate children. That in itself shows that same-sex marriage is not the right way forward for our society. I do not know, nor have I been informed by the proposed legislation, as to what benefit "Same-sex Marriage" will bring to society.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The law already gives legal rights of marriage to same-sex couples. Therefore, it is not necessary to further change the law for them. Same-sex marriage cannot procreate children. Children need, and benefit from the influence of both a father and mother in their lives. Research shows that marriage benefits children. Same-sex marriage and marriage between a man and a woman are two different relationships. Same-sex marriage cannot provide the complementary input of a mother and father into the lives of their children. The fact that same-sex couples want to have the same legal status as heterosexual couples indicates, indirectly, that they already think that heterosexual marriage is the best arrangement!

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

The church is not under the jurisdiction of the state. Therefore the Scottish Parliament should not interfere in the legislation of the church. Religious celebrants should not be expected, or asked, to conduct marriages of people of other beliefs if

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

The authorisation of celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage, if made law, will have implications on registrars. It means, that if they refuse to do so, that they are in peril of losing their job. There have already been instances of people losing their jobs because they have voiced the opinion that they do not support same-sex marriage. We already know, from the media, that the Church of England is being taken to court by a same-sex couple to demand that it conducts same-sex marriage. It is not unreasonable to think that the same thing will happen in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Civil partnerships are between people of the same sex. Thus, they are not the same as marriage between a man and a woman. Therefore they should remain separate.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Civil marriages are "civil" not "religious". Therefore, in my view, they can be conducted anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and the registrar.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I believe, as already stated, that civil partnerships are "civil" and should have civil registrations only.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

This question demonstrates the complexities of the proposed legislation. A transgender person means that a person has changed their sex. If that is followed through, it means that the marriage relationship with the couple has been changed from that of one woman and one man, to a couple of the same sex. It is no longer a heterosexual marriage. The relationship must now be different for both parties. It will not be the normal relationship it was before. Since I have no knowledge or experience of such relationships I am unable to support or oppose this part of the legislation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
There should be no threat to people’s jobs just because they do not believe in same sex marriage. Children should not be taught about same sex marriage. They are already being taught more than is good for them. If children are to be taught about same sex marriage then parents should be free to withdraw their children from these lessons.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

At present people do not feel free to express their opinions about same sex marriage for fear of being reported and taken to court. This is not equality and shows that we do not have free speech in our country.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I fear that if this bill becomes law that it will be further relaxed just as happened with the Abortion Bill. This bill, if passed, will have implications for our children. They already have to contend with heterosexual marriage, single parent homes, and co-habiting couples. Now they might have to add same sex marriage to that. It will like make life more confusing for them and more complicated. This proposed Bill will not benefit our country.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Completely unnecessary pandering to a minority with a loud voice within the Gay community, civil partnership gives all the legal safeguards needed for same sex relationships & households, same sex marriage is a step too far.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

This again is pandering and pussyfooting about a loud minority, it should be remembered that marriage is, whether people like it or not, a part of religion and should remain so.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I think if mixed sex marriage participants would like to use gender-neutral language, then this should be allowed, where the celebrant is willing.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

The bill should be amended to allow full gender recognition with or without the spouse’s consent. Gender recognition should be allowed with or without the spouse’s consent because it is a matter personal to the trans person. The granting of a full gender recognition certificate has no practical impact on the non-trans spouse as all their pension, inheritance, parental and other rights remain unchanged. Also, many trans people have delayed applying for gender recognition whilst requirement to divorce exists. They may subsequently have lost contact with the specialist who originally diagnosed them and therefore may not be able to provide as much medical evidence as is currently required for a GRC. So the bill needs to be amended to allow a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

I don't believe religious leaders are any more qualified to register a marriage than a 'celebrant'. As long as they have all had to sit a course that gives them the legal right to notarise a marriage than I have no issue with religious officials having th

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Couples of the same sex who wish to enter into a formal union are entitled to do so under the terms of the Civil Partnership Act 2004. Re-defining marriage, which is exclusively between a man and a woman, is a dilution of that long established institution and will lead to polygamy and people claiming they are entitled to marry inanimate objects.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

It is essentially the same thing under a different name. Why not include polygamy under the term 'marriage'? Should this Bill become law there will be no barrier to what type of union can be referred to as a 'marriage' and thus fall under its definition. By breaking up marriage as it has always been known we are opening up to the possibility of polygamy and 'marriage' to inanimate objects.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Although science has advanced considerably in recent years there is no science that can completely change a man to a woman or vice versa.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The definition of marriage as it currently is should be protected. There is adequate recognition of civil partnerships under the Civil Partnership Act 2004. If not, it is entirely possible for the government to extend that legislation without redefining marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is an increasing danger across Scotland and the wider UK at the moment that those who do not agree or speak out against same-sex marriage are 'homophobic'. While this may be true for some it is certainly not true for others and the government would do well to visibly encourage arguments from both sides of the debate. There is the increasing danger of people who are not in agreement with same-sex marriage being encouraged to embrace it in order to keep their jobs, particularly in the public sector and, again, these people are at risk of being labelled 'homophobic' which, for most of them, will be complete nonsense.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I would emphasise that there is a significant risk of polygamy and other forms of 'union' been claimed as 'marriage' if the term is to be redefined to include same-sex unions. It will lead to a culture of selfishness where people will marry what they want, when they want and there will be no end to the legislation and judicial proceedings as people constantly battle out what they are and are not entitled to within our courts.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

As a former Biology teacher, my main concern are the health implications of anal sex. I believe no one on the committee will be prepared to place his/her finger in and out of a test-tube with human excrement. I also believe the scientists who regard anal sex as the principle culprit in the spread of the incurable HIV Aids virus, besides other viral and bacterial infections. The problem with the bill therefore is that it sends out a strong signal that anal sex is both normal and healthy. That could increase the spread of HIV and other infections, which in turn could cripple the NHS as retro-viral drugs do not come cheap.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Very, very sad at the madness of even a suggestion it is natural or healthy for society.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

So long as it is not inclusive of same sex marriage

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

I believe in traditional marriage only. I very reluctantly accept civil partnerships (as they exist) for same-sex couples. I feel it is hypocritical to allow same-sex partnerships if you do not allow non-sexual (such as sisters living together etc) civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Please protect our children (in particular) from thinking that anal sex is natural, normal or healthy - please follow medical advice and convey the truth! Unlike with smoking tobacco we can tax tobacco products to offset the cost to the NHS - we cannot tax HIV patients to offset the cost of retro-viral drug therapy for life. Your bill is bound to backfire on the homosexual community when the NHS cannot afford routine treatments/surgery.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Please do not be forced into this bill because of a tiny yet very vocal lobby. Please show some courage!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a celebranta private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

As same sex couples already have equal rights in the law it is totally unnecessary to change the definition of marriage. This is an ill-thought out bill that has nothing to do with equality but has everything to do with silencing those who support historical marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

same sex couples in civil partnerships already consider themselves married. Why is it necessary to violate what has always been accepted historically as marriage?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

It will bring further and unnecessary confusion and cost.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

This is in total opposition to what is natural and will bring unnecessary confusion within families, especially for the children.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As already evidenced in the UK and in other countries, there are no protections for those who oppose same sex marriage. Even before the bill was passed at Westminster, chaplains lost their jobs and others were demoted merely for supporting traditional marriage. And just last week—August, 2013, a homosexual couple have brought suit against the Church of England to force them to perform same sex marriages. Frivolous litigation against those churches and others who support traditional marriage and refuse to perform same sex marriages can bring heartache and bankruptcy, hindering organisations that faithfully serve their communities from continuing valuable work. Just yesterday—12 August 2013, I received a call on my home phone from someone purporting to want to know more about God. They said they got my number from our church website. They asked various questions about church and the Bible and then asked what I thought about gay marriage. I mentioned that I disagreed with it. That person called me all kinds of profane and abuse names and hung up. And, the coward that they were left no phone number to respond. There is nothing on our church website that mentions anything against same sex marriage. If this bill passes, myself as a minister, and my church, will suffer even further abuse and, very possibly, be taken to court to try to force us to perform same sex marriages. This bill does not and cannot offer appropriate protection. It will merely encourage the homosexual lobby to further its cause to silence all those who oppose their lifestyle. By the way, we have had homosexuals in our congregation for some time. And though we opposed their lifestyle, we never once made them feel marginalised or unwelcome. Privately I made my views known to them and publicly I encouraged folk to support traditional marriage but made it clear that we must always act with compassion and respect to others, whatever their stand.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People in the UK have already lost their jobs or been demoted for using their so-called freedom of speech. How are you really going to protect someone’s freedom of speech if they oppose same sex marriage? The Scotsman has been full of letters calling those who oppose same sex marriage as narrow minded, bigots, Nazis, etc., for merely having a different point of view. I personally have been abused by those who deliberately sought out my views to abuse me.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
Again, this is a confusing, costly and totally unnecessary bill that will open a pandora's box of trouble for families, society, as well as individuals and organisations that oppose same sex marriage. All this for a tiny minority of individuals who already have equal rights in the law and many of whom have no interest in same sex marriage. This is a bill designed not for equality but to silence all those who oppose same sex marriage and the homosexual lifestyle.

Are you responding as...

a celebranta faith/belief local group or congregation
a private individual
also as a foster carer

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Marriage is ordained by Almighty God

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

Already in England two homosexual men have publicly declared their intention to pursue their "right to be married" in a Church through the courts, declaring they are "un satisfied" by the current proposal and feel it discriminates.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Already Christian evangelicals e.g. Street preachers have been arrested for declaring the Gospel, as homosexuals declare doing so is homophobic. It is alarming the Nation which sent Mary Slessor to Nigeria, where she prevented the murder if twins, and was greatly lived by the common people, would today face arrest in her native land for declaring the Good News of Jesus Christ. Whilst homosexual groups continue to persecute Christians, they tolerate Muslims, some of whom have much stronger views than Christians re homosexual marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Yes. One of Hitlers first acts was to suspend Weimar Constitution 113, 115, 117 and 118 which gave freedom of speech, of the press, of association. Hitler knew if he could control speech, he would have absolute power. Then he persecuted Jews and believing Christians such as Bonhoeffer. It all started with the state determining and controlling what individuals were allowed to say.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage cannot be specified as the property of any state or institution including the Scottish Government. The Scottish Government was not given a mandate to redefine marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I believe that the protections will be eroded over time.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Same sex couples have already been granted legal rights through the introduction of civil partnerships. Marriage has a clear definition and it is not for a government or group of individuals to decide that it must change in definition. By changing the definition, it would make it easier for other groups to call for further changes at a later date; for example, more than two people in a marriage, a non-human being part of a marriage, etc. It leaves a door open for the institution of marriage to be rendered meaningless, as minority groups call for their 'rights'. In this country people have extensive freedoms and human rights. To demand that marriage changes its definition, could end up making a mockery of our human rights which we hold very dear.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Those of us who support marriage as a union between one man and one woman do so, not just because of religious beliefs, but because of the security it can bring to society. Research clearly shows the benefits a child gains from being brought up by one male and one female parent, and the disadvantages brought about when one of those roles is missing in their life. We should not be discriminated against because we hold the sanctimony of marriage very highly. We should be protected in our desire to bring our children up to believe the only marriage acceptable is between one man and one woman. This does not make us homophobic- tolerance means treating people with respect, not giving into all demands in the name of ‘equality’.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I would like those in leadership with influence in this area to reflect on what a change in the definition of marriage could mean in the long term. What could it be a springboard for? Changing the definition will not end the problem of homophobia. The government would be better looking at ways to try and end the harassment and abuse of people who are gay, rather than changing the definition of a much valued institution, which could in turn lead to further intolerance and marginalisation of religious groups.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Equality in Scotland will be a beautiful and splendid thing!

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

I do not agree that religious bodies or individual celebrants should be able to opt out of solemnising same sex marriage but continue with opposite sex marriages. If a church or celebrant does not wish to solemnise same sex marriages then they are discriminatory and unpleasant and their licence for solemnising opposite sex marriages should be removed in my opinion. I realise that this is perhaps a hardline stance, but I cannot personally get behind the idea of a law which allows homophobic / transphobic organisations or celebrants to continue. I agree in general with the Equality Network regarding their proposed amendment of section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Detailed briefing here: http://www.equality-network.org/our-work/equal-marriage/our-views-on-the-equal-opportunities-committees-questions/#sthash.Rc0x5rNx.dpuf

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I welcome the different options within the bill for changing a civil partnership to a marriage. I think that couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should also be allowed to marry in Scotland in the usual way. Not allowing this would cause real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland. They will be unable to change to a marriage unless they first dissolve their civil partnership. But that requires proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down, by living apart for a year. It is very unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry. Even if they return to the country where they registered their civil partnership, if that country does not allow same-sex marriage, they would need to dissolve their civil partnership there in a similar way before coming back to Scotland to marry. The practical result will be that the couple will effectively be barred from marrying. In contrast, same-sex couples from any part of the world who are not in a civil partnership will be allowed come to Scotland to marry, whether or not that marriage would be recognised in their home country. I see no reason why this should not also apply to couples who are already in a civil partnership, and I believe that the bill should be amended to allow this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I fully agree with the following response from the Equality Network: We strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. In our view, however, a number of amendments are needed to the parts of the bill that deal with gender recognition. As the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. This enables the spouse to effectively "veto" the trans person's gender recognition, or at least to delay it while the trans person applies for a divorce. If the relationship between the spouses is difficult, the divorce proceedings could take a long time, during which the trans person is unable to access their human right to legal recognition in their true gender. When a trans person applies for gender recognition, they have already been living in their acquired gender for at least two years. Obtaining gender recognition does not therefore change the practical nature of their marriage, which has been same-sex for at least two years. But it does free the trans person from discrimination by bringing their legal status into line with reality. That should be available with or without the spouse's consent, because it is a matter personal to the trans person, and has no direct effect on their spouse. It is the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition where both spouses have a direct interest, and where a requirement for the consent of the trans person's spouse would be appropriate. We therefore believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. When a person has been transitioned for a long time, it can be very difficult indeed to obtain all the medical evidence that is required from people who have only been transitioned two years. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. We therefore believe that a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill; this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. We would also like to see the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16. For more details of these points, see sections 1, 2 and 4 of our briefing here. - See more at: http://www.equality-network.org/our-work/equal-marriage/our-views-on-the-equal-opportunities-committees-questions/#sthash.Rc0x5rNx.dpuf

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Teachers should have no opt-out of discussing equal marriage, in any Scottish school. I think that those in society who feel that they deserve protections because of their concerns about equal marriage are frankly idiots.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I fully agree with the following from the Equality Network: The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. Apart from the issues mentioned under questions 7, 8 and 11 above, the main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. That has always been a part of the wider Equal Marriage campaign in Scotland. We believe that the same choices marriage or civil partnership - should be open to all couples regardless of their gender. We therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law. We believe that review should start without delay, and, once it is complete, there should be prompt legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally, we note that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and that under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clear discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation, to report by July 2013. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and we strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete. - See more at: http://www.equality-
Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Redefining marriage is unnecessary and a distraction from matters which are of importance to the people of Scotland, such as the economy and health. It is not clear what new legal rights, if any, same-sex couples would receive which they do not already have through civil partnerships. Marriage predates law, nation and church. Although matrimonial law has been tweaked over the years, the law has never fundamentally altered the essential nature of marriage: a lifelong commitment between one man and one woman. The plan to redefine marriage is therefore radical and unprecedented. Same-sex marriage focuses on the rights of adults. But marriage, as it has been understood throughout history, has been about much more than the love between two people. As an institution it incentivises a man and woman to not only commit to one another but to any children their union may create. Once you start unpicking one aspect of the definition of marriage, it can unravel further. In Canada and in some US states, where marriage has been redefined, attempts have been made to legalise polygamy.1 In Brazil, a three-way relationship was given marriage-like recognition, and the same is true of the Netherlands.2

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same-sex marriage?

Churches and celebrants who refuse to marry same-sex couples will be susceptible to litigation. In England, a homosexual couple are already planning to go to court to force churches to host gay weddings. Ultimately this matter may be decided by the European Court of Human Rights, and any attempted protections in Scottish law could be overturned. There is no guarantee that, at some future date, the Court will not rule that religion and belief celebrants must either solemnise all marriages or cease to marry people altogether. Several cases in the European Court of Human Rights show that the Article 9 right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion does not provide protection when there is conflict between Article 9 and other rights. Equality laws have led to nearly all of Britain’s faith-based adoption agencies shutting down or dropping their religious ethos. A recent challenge involved a Scottish adoption agency who were told to end their pro-marriage policy by the charity law regulator because of alleged discrimination. Human rights law has not protected such adoption agencies. People who have a conscientious objection and who work in the public sector may lose their jobs or be unable to work in certain professions if they refuse to endorse same-sex marriage. Conscience clauses should be introduced in employment and equality laws to allow employees who believe in marriage, as it is currently defined, not to be forced to participate in same-sex marriage ceremonies or to express approval of marriage between two people of the same sex. Believing in the current definition of marriage must not be used by public sector employers to dispute or question the equality and diversity credentials of existing or prospective employees. The law makes space for doctors to opt-out of abortions if they conscientiously object to it. Similarly, registrars should be prevented from solemnising same-sex marriage if it goes against their consciences. While the law requires schools to provide religious education, it also protects atheist teachers from being compelled to teach it. Similar space should be given to teachers who, for religious convictions or otherwise, do not feel able to teach about same-sex marriage. Charity law should be amended to ensure that disagreement with same-sex marriage is not used to remove charitable status from religious and other charities, so that e.g. religious groups will not lose their charitable status if they are unwilling to marry same-sex couples. Many parents will have deeply-felt views about their children being taught about same-sex marriage in the classroom. The law should not undermine these views but should protect parents’ right to withdraw their children. Many will be unaware what their children are being taught so they should have a legal right to know when such lessons will take place.
The Public Sector Equality Duty says that public authorities must have due regard to the need to remove or minimise disadvantages suffered by persons who share a relevant protected characteristic (e.g. sexual orientation) that are connected to that characteristic. There must be protections in equality law to ensure that those religious groups that oppose the new definition of marriage are not treated less favourably by public authorities, such as being refused contracts, grants or use of facilities. People should not be prevented from fostering or adopting simply because they hold traditional views about marriage. The Government is considering making this clear through amending guidance, but it is something that should be secured through legislative change, not just guidance.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The issue of freedom of speech in this context is crucial because it is the expression of beliefs about marriage that tends to get people into trouble. Aside from a declaratory clause which has no practical impact (Clause 13), the Government’s Bill does not address this issue. More robust safeguards are needed to ensure that no person will be compelled to express agreement with a same-sex marriage or be punished for expressing their disagreement with it.

People who support the long-standing law of marriage are now often accused of discrimination. False allegations against employees and employers, for example, can be intimidating and may result in action being taken that is disproportionate. Adrian Smith, a housing manager in Trafford, was demoted after a colleague complained when he described same-sex marriage in church as an equality too far. Rev Brian Ross was removed from his post as a police chaplain because he disagreed with gay marriage on his personal internet blog. Strathclyde Police said Rev Brian Ross could hold his beliefs in private, but publicly expressing them was a breach of their equality and diversity policy.

People who express disagreement with same-sex marriage are already facing difficulties. There are clearly different views on this issue, and many people hold to the historic and long-standing definition of marriage, which is a belief worthy of respect in a democratic society. Those holding that view have a right to be able to express it freely. In recent years, the vilification of those stating traditional beliefs about marriage has created a climate of fear. There has been a chilling effect on free speech that has left the expression of some views something that is beyond the pale in many contexts. In theory, religion or belief is a protected characteristic that should be defended under equality law. In practice, equality law has been used to create a culture in which people feel that perfectly legitimate views can no longer be aired.

Specific amendments are necessary to protect the right to free speech and debate. They need to apply across public order and equality laws, including employment and goods and services. As a bare minimum amendments need to make clear that merely discussing or criticising same-sex marriage is not, on its own, a form of discrimination for the purpose of equality law or a breach of public order legislation. Such changes would help those who believe in traditional marriage to feel free to discuss the issue with their colleagues or customers, employees or employers. It would send an important message to those who are quick to label any disagreement with same-sex marriage as bigoted.
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation
a faith/belief local group or congregation
a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I DON'T FEEL THE CURRENT PROTECTIONS BEING PUT FORWARD GO FAR ENOUGH OR GIVE ENOUGH CLARITY TO ORGANISATION/WORKPLACES WHO WILL BE REQUIRED TO FOLLOW THEM. SPECIFICALLY IN THE PUBLIC SECTOR ORGANISATIONS WHERE I'M PRETTY SURE THAT WHEN EVEN A SLIGHT DISAGREEMENT OF SAME SEX MARRIAGE OR MORE SO A BELIEF IN TRADITIONAL MARRIAGE ONLY IS DECLARED PUBLICLY, THERE WILL BE UTTER PANIC BY THE HR DEPTs, AND UNECESSARY DISCIPLINES/DISMISSALS WILL OCCUR. MORE PROTECTION TO ALLOW FREE EXPRESSION OF AN OPPOSING VIEW, AND CLARITY OF THESE PROTECTIONS IS REQUIRED TO PUBLIC SECTOR AREAS.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

SEE PREVIOUS ANSWER

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

THE WIDER ISSUE IN MY OPINION IS HOW THE SNP HAVE IGNORED SO MUCH OPPOSITION TO THIS BILL AND HAVE GONE AHEAD REGARDLESS. SADLY, THE MANY PEOPLE WHO HAVE BEEN IGNORED MAY HAVE VOTED FOR SCOTTISH INDEPENDENCE - BUT NOT NOW!

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I pay my taxes, I work a full-time job, I actively contribute to society and I think it is an absolute disgrace that I cannot, by law, marry the person I love.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

18 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

9 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
I don't understand the question

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

9 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Fully support equal marriage and equal civil partnership

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
I believe those in public office should authorise all regardless of religious views.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
If one system is most suitable I would be in support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Freedom of speech is fine, but it shouldn't be allowed to dictate where an inequality exists

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I'd like to see a more compassionate, understanding society. Society is so diverse, which is a beautiful thing. Open communication can inspire acceptance, compassion and understanding. Bigotry promotes, fear, hate and violence. You can not promote homosexuality. A person is born this way. I'd like to see the promotion of compassion for ourselves and others.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

A difficult one. Hateful speech can influence others who don't know any better and be very hurtful to others. Although, we can only start to communicate with people who hold ignorant views when we speak to each other on an open and compassionate ground. Condemning and judging doesn't necessarily solve the problem. People need to see their own wrong internally on their own. "Be the change you want to see in the world".

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

First of all, marriage has always been the union of one man and one woman – before any organised religion or government came into being. Therefore, as no government invented marriage, the Scottish Government does not have any right to change the definition of marriage. Moreover, if the Government redefines marriage to include same-sex marriage, there is nothing to stop it further redefining marriage to include polygamy, or to include marriage between a group of men and/or women who claim to love each other and wish to have such arrangements recognised. Also, the institution of marriage has benefited families and communities for centuries. It has been proven that children are healthier and more successful in education and in society when reared by their natural married parents, rather than by any other arrangement, in particular, by a same-sex couple. And, of course, a man and a woman are required for a child to be produced. Finally, regarding the legal rights of marriage, same-sex couples can have all of these by entering a civil partnership, and same-sex marriage will not give them any additional rights. Therefore, there is no need for the Government to redefine marriage to include such couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

First of all, it must be pointed out that people’s consciences should be respected, and that reasonable accommodation for civil registrars who conscientiously object to same-sex marriage should be made. This should be allowed, given that doctors are allowed a conscientious objection for abortion. Also, it must be stressed that a person’s freedom of religion is not simply about freedom to worship or to believe certain things; it is also about freedom to live out those beliefs – to practise one’s religion. Moreover, a registrar may be carrying out a CIVIL duty, but the issue of solemnising same-sex marriages is very much a MORAL issue, and it is for this reason that registrars (Christian or otherwise) who object to such marriages should be accommodated. Why should Christians be excluded from such a profession? If they’re excluded, there will be many more cases like Lillian Ladele, the Christian registrar who was dismissed for refusing to conduct civil partnerships. In addition, as the teaching of same-sex marriage is very much an issue of conscience to many teachers (as it is a MORAL issue, and not simply another part of their job), it is vital that teachers who believe that marriage should only be between a man and a woman are reasonably accommodated. Simply providing guidance to schools will not do; there needs to be protection explicitly laid down in law, and so the Equality Act 2010 must be amended accordingly so that teachers (Christian or otherwise) who object to teaching same-sex marriage are protected from dismissal. Furthermore, parents who object to their children attending lessons that deal with same-sex marriage and/or other same-sex relationships because it is contrary to their deeply-held beliefs must be given the right to withdraw their children from such lessons. Again, guidance is not sufficient; the law needs to be changed so that parents have the legal right of withdrawal. Finally, the views of parents and pupils on the subject of marriage should be respected, and they should not be disadvantaged because they hold to a traditional view of marriage. This should also apply to charities that believe in traditional marriage, and in that regard, charity law should be amended so that organisations (Christian or otherwise) will not lose their charitable status, or be denied the use of public buildings or facilities because they conscientiously disagree with same-sex marriage. This is particularly the case with adoption agencies, which Alex Salmond has previously promised to protect, and the Scottish Government has also assured us that people who hold to the traditional view of marriage should not be excluded from being foster carers. If the First Minister is serious about these promises, he needs to back it up with changes to legislation (and not just guidance), even if it means asking the Westminster Government to amend the Equality Act 2010 accordingly. It is important to note that Article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights has proved to be ineffective in providing protection in the above cases.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
First of all, Alex Salmond has already promised to protect freedom of speech, and so in order to keep that promise, he needs to go much further than what is currently being proposed. One only has to look at recent cases of people being dismissed because they spoke out against same-sex marriage: Rev Brian Ross was dismissed from his post as a police chaplain in Strathclyde, and, of course, the former SNP leader, Gordon Wilson, was dismissed from his position on the Citizen’s Advice Bureau in Dundee because he believes that marriage should only be between a man and a woman. It is therefore clear that such people would not be protected under current proposals, and so it is vital that the Equality Act 2010 is amended to the extent that a person’s beliefs about marriage are specifically included in the protected characteristic of religion or belief. This is to ensure that it would be unlawful for employers to dismiss such people because of their beliefs regarding marriage. Also, the current proposals are far too vague; people must be free to express opposing views in the workplace without fear of intimidation (which is already commonplace), disciplinary action or dismissal, and so equalities legislation, particularly the Public Sector Equality Duty, must not be used to silence legitimate debate on the subject of same-sex marriage, but rather, equalities legislation, particularly the Equality Act 2010 must be amended accordingly so that legitimate debate is protected.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I wish to stress that it is vital that words like “husband” and “wife” are retained in the Scottish Government’s Bill on marriage. I find it quite disturbing that traditional, heterosexual marriage is being watered down in this way by using gender-neutral language, just so that same-sex marriage can be accommodated. Whatever one’s views are on same-sex marriage, there must be no change to opposite-sex marriage, for example, by using the word “spouse” in place of “husband” and “wife”, and nor should the words “husband” and “wife” be given new definitions, as appears to have happened south of the Border.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
If that's what people in civic partnerships wish

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Where people are entitled to their personal or religious beliefs, this should be protected and the Bill proposes opt-outs and opt-ins which will do this. Where people perform a public role, for example registrars, teachers etc they should not allow personal views to interfere with their public duties. And we should keep on educating and re-educating the bigots, the prejudiced and the discriminators until there is at least an equality in society to have ones own personal views, so long as they do not harm or inhibit anyone else's freedom

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People need to be reminded that freedom of speech is admirable, but only when we all enjoy it

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Scotland leads the way again!! I am proud to be Scottish when I see this Bill going through parliament and look forward to independence so that we can continue a more socially just country free of prejudice and discrimination

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I had been under the impression that Civil Partnerships gave gay couples a clear legal position with all the rights of marriage - or if there are minor differences these could easily be amended. The whole debate across the UK seems to me a major distraction from getting the economy right which affects the whole population. Marriage between a man and a woman longs predates the United Kingdom, Scots Law and Christianity. For thousands of years it has been the foundation of societies around the world providing a stable basis for children to grow up. If passed this law will not be the end of the process. Pressure is already growing to approve polygamy and polyamorous relationships in some countries.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

See comments at No 14

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

In schools teachers who are atheists are not required to teach religious education. In similar terms Christian teachers should not be compelled to promote same sex marriage. Any responsible teacher would seek to treat all children equally and fairly regardless of their background or orientation. Parents have a right to be concerned about what their children are taught in RME and should have the right to withdraw them. Our son and daughter in law have adopted two children who are a great joy to the whole family. Many Christian couples wish to adopt which would be a benefit to society as a whole and yet may be turned down for believing that the best context for children is a mother and father married to each other. Even although protections for religious celebrants have been mentioned how effective will they be and will they stand up if a case is taken to the European Court of Human Rights? As a Church of Scotland minister who is responsible for a parish I might have some sympathy for a couple who were active members of the congregation but not wish to get involved with marrying someone who turns up on the doorstep while they are holidaying in the area. This is a very popular tourist area! It is hard to predict what might happen but potentially you could get overwhelmed with requests to get married in a very picturesque part of Scotland. You might well feel that you would wish to turn down any holiday wedding requests on the basis of the amount of time they take up. Are you left wide open to requests for marriage from all over the UK?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The universal declaration of human rights lists freedom of speech and freedom of religion as fundamental rights and these appear to be under threat here. Equality Laws have been used to ride roughshod over these rights. Just because you disagree with someone does not mean that you hate them. It seems very strange to come to that conclusion. Surely in a civilised society people can express different points of view provided they are not deliberately whipping up ill feeling against a particular section of society. Religion or belief should be a protected characteristic which is defended under the equality law. In practice this is not happening. The law has been used to muzzle people.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

As a Church of Scotland minister I have conducted marriages for nearly 40 years. I cannot help but think that there would be an argument for making all marriages civil which perhaps would solve a lot of problems. This has been the case in a number of European countries for some years - long before same sex marriage appeared. The registrar conducts a legal ceremony which is the actual marriage. Subsequently faith groups or humanist celebrants can conduct a celebration of this fact. It has no legal significance but it does celebrate the reality. This would be fair and equal since the registrar would deal with everyone. What happens afterwards would simply be a private celebration. Even under the 1977 Act the Registrar already does most of the work. Instead of the couple going in to collect the Marriage Schedule they could go in for a brief civil service. The Registrar could be solely based at the Registry Office and leave it to others to conduct celebrations the following day or even that day. The Crown Prince of Luxembourg was married last year. The couple had a civil service on the Friday which was the legal part in the registry office and a celebration service in the cathedral the following day.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Redefining marriage is not only unnecessary but in opposition to not only historical and time served definitions but also biological truths and will irrevocably change Scottish society for the worse, regardless of somewhat popular current thinking, for which our citizens will reap the costs of further breakdown of society and its values.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The issue centres on the redefining of the institution of marriage which is not something a government has a mandate to alter. Further to this, the lack of clarity concerning the benefits beyond those already established through civil partnerships implies this is a hollow exercise. Any and all loving relationships between two people of the same sex cannot be equated with the definition of marriage and does not boil down to a matter of equality. The suggestion that any law will protect churches and celebrants is simply not true as we have seen recently with legal proceedings in England where a gay couple is keen to test the law with the aim of forcing churches to hold same sex ceremonies on the basis that the law doesn't offer full equality according to Barrie Drewitt-Barlow who feels he is “still not getting what I want … It upsets me because I want it so much – a big lavish ceremony” (see http://archbishop-cranmer.blogspot.co.uk/2013/08/tony-and-barrie-drewitt-barlow-sue.html; http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2383686/Millionaire-gay-fathers-sue-Church-England-allowing-married-church.html)

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

The difference between religious and belief celebrants is unclear.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition
I do not believe that same sex marriage should be introduced for all the reasons given above.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

This does not make any sense and does not appear clear cut. Belief is a matter of personal conscience and is a moral rather than legal matter.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Despite the rhetoric there appears to be no cast iron guarantees that protection will be given. I have cited the current legal challenge in England above and Article 9 of the European Court of Human Rights shows that protection is not given when there is conflict between this article and other rights. There have been many well publicised cases in recent years regarding the bullying of employees over their religious beliefs, e.g police chaplain forced to step down for his view that marriage is a “God-ordained institution between a man and a woman” but that this violated Strathclyde Police’s “equality and diversity policy” (http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/religion/9901134/Police-chaplain-forced-out-after-criticising-gay-marriage.html). This issue goes to the heart of so many aspects of society such as the need for protection for public sector workers, charities, parent's rights of teaching about marriage in the classroom, foster carers, etc, etc. So called equality laws have led to the closure of almost all of the UK's faith-based adoption agencies which has had a negative effect on some of the most vulnerable children in our society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Sadly, those who hold true to the traditional view of marriage are so often being accused of discrimination despite the statistics borne out by previous consultations where the majority of Scots are keen not to redefine marriage. As cited above the issue of freedom of speech is being courted by one side of this debate but not afforded to any other view.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Legal amendments are required to protect the freedom of belief and speech on such matters where the airing of such is not deemed in any way to be discriminatory.
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

an academic

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support this bill. I think it is important that every person is treated equally regardless of their lifestyle. It remains respectful of those with strong religious beliefs but allows a basic inequality to be addressed.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

This is so important for Scotland to achieve! Discrimination through the law should be a thing of the past, the law is meant to protect people from discrimination. If two people are in love and want to legally commit to each other through marriage, then they should be allowed to do so regardless of their gender. While civil partnership is all well and good, it is not the same thing as a marriage. This should not be denied to the LGBT community through the prejudice of some of the population.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

It is important that Scotland is able to recognise also that there are a wide variety of belief systems in place within our country. Traditional religious avenues are not appropriate for everyone, so clarifying this through the bill is a good thing. Humanism as a main example is becoming ever more popular and this should be recognised as every bit as valid as any traditional religious group.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I think the bill strikes a good balance between equality and respect for religious freedom. Those in support can embrace these changes and those opposed are free to ignore them. The opt in system is a good way to go about this.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
Strongly support. A same sex marriage in no way affects anyone else, it does not invalidate mixed sex marriages, so why not? If you are against same sex marriage, then don't marry someone of the same sex as you! All relationships should be taken equally seriously when two people have legally committed themselves to each other regardless of gender and regardless of the opinions of others. It is important that for those who wish to make this change, it is easy to do so. By allowing either a marriage ceremony or a simple administrative based change this should be achieved. However there should be more done for those whose partnership was registered outside of Scotland, as this could make it very difficult for those who did it abroad, or those who have since moved here.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This is one of the main draws of a Humanist ceremony for a lot of people and I support it. It allows all couples of any gender to make their wedding day a more personal experience. As long as all the paperwork is submitted correctly then I don't think it matters where the ceremony takes place.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

This allows greater flexibility for everyone. Couples of same and mixed gender and also celebrants from different belief backgrounds. Excellent idea.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

In theory I am in support, however some changes would be beneficial. Requiring spousal approval to gain Gender Recognition is not appropriate as this provides the transgender person with their basic human rights in line with the gender they have been living in for at least 2 years and is a personal matter. However spousal approval should be required to re-register the marriage. If they do not want to be in a same sex marriage then divorce is an option, therefore the non-trans spouse still has their freedom of choice without discriminating against the transgendered person. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. When a person has been transitioned for a long time, it can be very difficult indeed to obtain all the medical evidence that is required from people who have only been transitioned two years. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. I therefore believe that a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill â€“ this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. I would also like to see the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16. As if a person is old enough to marry, they are old enough to know what gender they wish to live as.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think that the bill strikes the right balance, and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to. Even where an organisation does agree, individual marriage celebrants within that organisation will be free to opt-out of same-sex marriages, as will any person who plays a part in the religious marriage ceremonies of that organisation (eg the church organist). These are strong protections. It has been proposed by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. I would strongly oppose that. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race. The registrars’ organisation, the Association of Registrars of Scotland, is not calling for an opt-out. The registering of civil partnerships in Scotland by civil registrars has worked well without any such legal opt-out, and we expect the registering of same-sex marriages to work equally well in a similar way. It has also been proposed by some people that teachers should have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. I would strongly oppose this. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, which is equally controversial for some people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech, as section 14 of the bill confirms. People will remain free to disagree with same-sex marriage and to express that disagreement publicly. The Lord Advocate’s guidance published with the bill makes clear that it is not a crime to disagree publicly with same-sex marriage. While I personally think it’s rude and represents a homophobic attitude, similar to other forms of unacceptable prejudice, freedom of speech allows me to think that and therefore it's important that those of the opposite view are afforded the same freedom.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. The main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. I believe that the same choices — marriage or civil partnership — should be open to all couples regardless of their gender. I therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law, driven by the need to consider the position on opposite sex civil partnership. I believe that review should start without delay, and, once it is complete, there should be prompt legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally, I note that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and that under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clear discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation, to report by July 2014. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and I strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Deserve the same rights as everyone else

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
They need reeducation to make them understand that just because you love someone of the same sex, doesn’t mean you are ‘wrong’ or ‘evil’. If you can marry someone you love, why not allow me?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is wonderful, so long as it’s not used to promote or induce terrorism. That’s the law, and terrorism isn’t just against a country or a government, it can be promoting hate against a group of people, including the LGBT community.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

If you refuse to allow same sex marriage, does that make you better than the people who refused to allow people of different races or religion to marry?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I see no reason to distinguish between the legal union of same sex and opposite sex couples. The current categorisation of same sex unions as civil partnerships implies some form of inferior recognition and there can be no legitimate reason for discriminating on this basis.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I see no reason to distinguish between the legal union of same sex and opposite sex couples. The current categorisation of same sex unions as civil partnerships implies some form of inferior recognition and there can be no legitimate reason for discriminating on this basis.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

I can see the point in those who have taken a specific religious vocation having the right to discriminate and not marry couples who are not in line with their beliefs. But those who are appointed civilly must respect the law and the rights of people not to be discriminated against on the grounds of sexual orientation. If their beliefs do not allow them to do this then they must not take up the position of a celebrant.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

See answer to question 6.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

It seems inherently unfair that same sex couples have two options to formally recognise their union and opposite sex couples have only one. It seems logical therefore that only marriage exists and those with civil partnerships are automatically converted to marriage.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This is an excellent idea and is in line with the position in other jurisdictions. Marriage is a personal thing and the right of couples to agree a location which accords with the couple’s own wishes seems most appropriate.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

No.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

No.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

17 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

a] I would consider that the Bill is not a priority with the general public, many of whom would prefer that the Scottish Government focus more on matters such as the economy and health. b] The ComRes poll in 2012 showed that 55% of people in Scotland agree that "marriage should continue to be defined as a lifelong exclusive commitment between a man and a woman". The percentage disagreeing was 38%. Civil partnerships already give all the legal rights of marriage to same-sex couples—it is not clear what new rights would be given to same-sex couples by redefinition. c] Redefining marriage would set a precedent which could lead to further redefinition eg (i) there are attempts to legalise polygamy in some US states and in Canada [cf: PinkNews.co.uk, 4 February 2009] (ii) a three-way relationship has been legalised in both the Netherlands and in Brazil. [The Daily Telegraph, 28 August 2012]

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

a] Over many centuries, the fundamental understanding of marriage has been that of a lifelong exclusive commitment between a man and a woman. Same-sex marriage focuses on the rights of the couple but traditional marriage emphasises not only these but also includes an emphasis on the heterosexual relationship as one in which children may be conceived and brought up. This recognises the complementarity of male/female as being of benefit to children. b] Although it is claimed that redefining marriage will equalise heterosexual and homosexual marriage relationships, in fact this is not so. In traditional marriage both commitment and responsibility are priorities, a fact which is recognised in law by the situation of adultery being a ground for divorce. However, under the proposed law, adultery will not apply to same-sex marriage, thus creating an inequality between the two forms of marriage. Thus the substantive legal framework for same-sex marriage and heterosexual marriage differs—logic would seem to dictate that differing legal obligations should result in differing categorisation.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition
I would be concerned, if some celebrants are authorised to solemnise heterosexual and same-sex marriages, that there will be a challenge under European equality law such that a same-sex couple may claim discrimination if a celebrant refuses to solemnise their marriage. Already, Mr Barrie Drewitt-Barlow, a partner in a same-sex couple relationship in England says that he is intending to take the Church of England to court so that he may have a marriage in church. I suspect that this challenge will include the celebrant. http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2383686/Millionaire-gay-fathers-sue-Church-England-allowing-married-church.html

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

All the legal rights of marriage are already available to same-sex couples through civil partnerships. It is not clear what new rights if any would be gained for same-sex couples by redefining marriage. Therefore, I do not support the changing of civil partnerships to marriage. I am deeply concerned about the civil rights and freedom of speech of people who support traditional marriage. There are cases already of a baker, a florist and a printer being challenged in court because they refuse to become involved with business requests from same-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

I would be concerned, if civil marriage ceremonies are allowed to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between couples and the registrar, that this would lead to couples claiming discrimination under EU equality law if they cannot have a civil marriage on religious premises. Already, Mr Barrie Drewitt-Barlow, a partner in a same-sex couple relationship in England says that he is intending to take the Church of England to court so that he may have a marriage in church. http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2383686/Millionaire-gay-fathers-sue-Church-England-allowing-married-church.html

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I would be concerned that, if religious registration of civil partnerships is allowed, that this would open the door to pressure on religious groups/individuals to be willing to offer this service. I would be concerned that this is a move towards a situa

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

a] When there is conflict, in the European Court of Human Rights, between Article 9 [right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion] and other rights, several cases have found that Article 9 does not provide the protections it is set up to do. [ cf. Eweida and Others v United Kingdom [2013]: http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/sites/eng/pages/search.aspx?i=001-115881 ] b] It is important that conscience clauses be introduced in employment and equality laws so that employees who support the present definition of marriage are not forced either to participate in same-sex marriage ceremonies or to give approval of same-sex marriages. If such clauses are not introduced, the situation may arise where whose who work in the public sector may lose their jobs or be excluded from certain professions if they do not support same-sex marriage. Reference: The Implications For Freedom of Conscience and Religious Liberty Arising From Redefining Marriage in Scotland by Aidan O'Neill QC  c] At present there are legal protections for atheist teachers which mean that they are not forced to teach religion. I believe that there should be similar protections for teachers who have religious or other convictions such that they do not support same-sex marriages.  d] The law should protect parents’ right to withdraw their children from lessons involving same-sex marriage. Moreover, the parents should have a legal right to know when such lessons are planned to happen.  e] The Government is considering making it clear through amending guidance that people should not be prevented from fostering or adopting simply because they support traditional marriage. However, more robust legislation should be set up, rather than just guidance.  f] It is important that religious groups which support traditional views on marriage are protected in equality law so that they are not treated less favourably by public authorities, for example by being refused grants, contracts or use of facilities.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

a] It is vital that robust safeguards are put on place such that no person will be forced to express agreement with same-sex marriage or be penalised for not agreeing with same-sex marriage.  b] There are differing views on same-sex marriage. People who support the historic and long-standing definition of marriage should have the right to express their belief freely. In recent times a climate of fear has grown where many people do not feel free to express their beliefs peacefully. One result of the equality law is that people feel that perfectly legitimate views cannot be freely expressed.  c] I believe that specific amendments are vitally necessary to protect the right to free speech and debate. Such amendments should apply across public order and equality laws, including employment and goods and services. It is VITAL that there are amendments which clarify that equality law and breach of public order law do not legislate such that that merely having a discussion on same-sex marriage is, of itself, a form of discrimination. This would help ensure that supporters of traditional marriage feel at liberty to discuss the topic with others at work or in the general public without being labelled as being discriminatory.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
a] I believe that it is very important that the principle of reasonable accommodation should be required of all public bodies in Scotland in their provision of public services.
b] I strongly believe that the Marriage and Civil Partnerships (Scotland) Bill should not be passed before an amendment is made to the Westminster Equality Act 2010 such that it incorporates the principle that an employer must make reasonable accommodation of the manifestation of religious belief by employees.

Are you responding as...

a teacher

17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I think this is a great step forward for equality. It was very painful for me to learn that my friends, a lesbian couple,

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

It is important that same-sex couples have the option of having a religious or belief based ceremony. It strikes me as very narrow minded to rule out that a couple might be religious simply because of their sexual orientation.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Marriage has been in existence since before time began as a union between a man and a woman for life. It is the foundation upon which families are based. Re-defining it will disrupt this and open the door for any other form of relationship including polygamy. It will be detrimental to children brought up in an environment where any form of relationship is acceptable and where any means of procreation is acceptable. Children will become merely accessories of whatever adults happen to want at the time. We have enough important issues in the country to be dealt with. This issue is a painful distraction from the other important things which need to be addressed including rebuilding the economy. Also, I as a constituent have not been given the opportunity to vote on this issue which is more fundamental than independence to our country. Such an important issue should never have come before parliament without the opportunity for the electorate to vote on this. Also, if this law is passed it will be impossible to repeal the law and uphold the sanctity of marriage in this country.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

Marriage can only be between one man and one woman. Same sex partners who choose to live together in a form of legal partnership should be recognised as same sex couples living together not as married people who are able to produce their own biological children.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

In the Christian tradition I would expect the man and woman to marry according to the commandment of the Bible. It is my understanding that other major religious groups would expect marriage according to their traditions between a man and a woman. To ex

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As has already happened in several cases in England, those who hold traditional beliefs about marriage will be discriminated against and the "equality" issue of the homosexual lobby will override the rights of Christians to exercise their faith in the daily exercise of their lives. It will result in Christians being discriminated in work, loosing jobs, not being considered for promotion and being considered as bigots purely for the purpose of holding on to the faith of the majority of the population of Scotland. It will begin persecution on a scale in Scotland that has not been seen for hundreds of years, and this is what the SNP government will be remembered for.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is nothing that the Scottish Government will be able to do if this law is enacted that will protect Christians from being victimised and criminalised for saying privately or publicly their beliefs that marriage should only be between one man and one woman for life.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I would summarise by saying that if the term marriage has to be redefined in order to make this happen then same-sex couples are not accessing marriage as it was. The result is that as the consequences of this Bill filter through no one will be better off and some will be worse off. Some of the consequences of the Westminster Bill are already risible e.g the possibility that the following questions might be realistic " Is your daddy a man or a woman." or " Is your husband male or female ".

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

As I have said in previous submissions and correspondence.  As marriage stands every person, male or female has the opportunity to marry as we know it. If someone chooses an alternative life-style why should they wish to alter the status quo for others . They are not discriminated against they just do not qualify any more than they could qualify for the mixed doubles at Wimbledon . Can we now expect the tennis authorities to cease discrimination and redefine 'mixed'.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Compared with the principal elements of the Bill this is almost an irrelevance. Let the state appoint who it likes to perform the ceremony. It is far more important that no one be forced to take part in something to which they strongly conscientiously object.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

Irrelevant. This is not a conscience issue.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I do not think that there is any reason for changing the marriage bill as it stands at present.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The rights of same sex individuals at the moment respect their choice to live in partnership and this does not have to be a reason for changing the law on marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

No need to change arrangements as they stand at present.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I do not think that believing in the current definition of marriage should influence decisions about employing individuals or affect their working conditions. Religious Education is part of the required curriculum, I as a teacher feel that my religious convictions would make it difficult for me to teach about same -sex marriage and would not want to participate in these lessons.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Specific amendments are necessary to protect the right to free speech and debate. They need to apply across public order and equality laws, including employment and goods and services. As a bare minimum amendments need to make clear that merely discussing or criticising same-sex marriage is not, on its own, a form of discrimination for the purpose of equality law or a breach of public order legislation. Such changes would help those who believe in traditional marriage to feel free to discuss the issue with their colleagues or customers, employees or employers.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

YOU ARE EITHER FOR OR AGAINST EQUALITY FOR ALL.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

There is no equality when part of society is excluded... Civil partnerships not being available to all put a second class taint on them. This is all about two people committing to each other, nothing else matters.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Sex and gender are not terms which are interchangeable, ceremonies should be possible to be gender neutral.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Religious celebrants should not have any advantage over anyone else. Belief in something which is not provable should never give you an advantage over anyone else.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

When civil partnerships were devised solely for same sex couples they were already being given something which could be considered "not quite a marriage", this was absurd. If it had equality status it should have been offered to two sex couples too. Civil partnerships should be available to be changed to a marriage AT NO FURTHER COST.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

It is the words and intention to commit which is important not the premises.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This is of personal concern since this week was the thirtieth anniversary of a marriage which both of us wish to continue. Without this change in the law You have the absurdity of two women already being married except that one of them has an "M" on a birth certificate and without distorting a thirty year old marriage that cannot be changed during the lifetime of the spouse. Should I die first you have the absurdity of dealing with a female body with this one legal male document whilst every other from bank account to passport has been female for years...

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

They have had an unjust monopoly for far too long.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I have some concerns that the gutter press will do their best to publicly "out" people like me who have had a medical condition dealt with, i.e. had my physical appearance match my innate self image. They would not get away with harassment of anyone with another medical condition so I would like to see provision shown to protect the identity of those living a life in a gender role other than the one forced on them at birth.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

A post operative transsexual trapped in a legal limbo.

17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The Bill defies God's law and the moral basis of all societies the world over for many thousands of years. It also is not a view which is held by a great deal of the general public and this should be a great concern to any political party trying to push this through. It is also uncharted waters which may cause a lot of problems in years to come. This policy has caused problems in various parts of the world and is not universally accepted. It also will fragment society more and marginalise people like myself who hold to a Biblical view of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

What is wrong with Civil Partnership. Marriage was intended for the union of one man and one woman to live together as two individuals but one unit. It was also intended for the procreation of children and providing appropriate role models for their development and understanding of human nature. Even most of nature has similar methods and relationships. Marriage certainly in my eyes and my understanding will never mean the union of couples of the same sex.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I'm not sure I fully understand this question. However, there are many religious beliefs, some agree with the Bill, some oppose and some are on the fence. Those who base our faith in the God of the Bible and desire to honour him in our lives will take the view as described in the Bible which is clearly opposed to same sex marriage and even same sex relationships of any kind

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

With regards to the Christian faith, it is impossible to say that you live by the standards God has set but then go and do something or agree with something which is in direct opposition to God and his revealed word. It would be like me stating that I agree with the Governments policy on taxation for raising money for public spending but then stashing undeclared income in some offshore account.
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

I am not comfortable with Civil Partnerships, but can live with that as it is not marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

These should be held in registrars to maintain privacy. Also such events if held elsewhere can be offensive to people who hold to traditional values and morals.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

As my previous comments state, I cannot sign up to any form of same sex union. It would be a great sin on my part as a minister of the Christian Gospel. Once one goes so far down a road, the gradient only goes one way - down.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

The Bible is clear - one man, one woman - from birth.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Already the Christians who hold to traditional, but Biblical views are being marginalised, discriminated against and made to feel that they do not value those who are different. This of course is far from the truth. God loves the sinner but hates the sin and all of us are in the same boat for all have sinned and fallen short of the mark. We have been influential in many social reforms and raising the standard of life for people in general. Religion has had a lot of bad press and rightly so. However, Bible believing Christians are not so much concerned about religion, but rather about a relationship with a holy God who will one day judge us all in righteousness. I wrote to David Cameron recently asking if I would be breaking the law if I was to attach to our church notice board a statement that this church only performs marriage as defined by God in his word the Bible. I have yet to receive a reply. Already ourselves, along with many other Bible believing churches are amending our church constitutions to ensure we will only allow one man one woman marriage so that apart from the Bible, we will also have a legal document to back up our position. This is truly sad that this is the case in Scotland. A country which was once described as the "Land of the Book."

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I wonder how long there will be freedom of speech for Christians. Freedom to stand by your belief within the workplace is now becoming a thing of the past as many Christians have suffered the loss of their job or have been victimised and marginalised because they hold a different view, a view that has been good enough for around 6000 years.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Sow to the wind and reap the whirlwind.

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation
a faith/belief local group or congregation
a private individual

17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

a] I would consider that the Bill is not a priority with the general public, many of whom would prefer that the Scottish Government focus more on matters such as the economy and health.

b] The ComRes poll in 2012 showed that 55% of people in Scotland agree that "marriage should continue to be defined as a lifelong exclusive commitment between a man and a woman". The percentage disagreeing was 38%. Civil partnerships already give all the legal rights of marriage to same-sex couples—it is not clear what new rights would be given to same-sex couples by redefinition.

c] Redefining marriage would set a precedent which could lead to further redefinition. eg (i) there are attempts to legalise polygamy in some US states and in Canada [cf: PinkNews.co.uk, 4 February 2009] (ii) a three-way relationship has been legalised in both the Netherlands and in Brazil. [The Daily Telegraph, 28 August 2012]

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

a] Over many centuries, the fundamental understanding of marriage has been that of a lifelong exclusive commitment between a man and a woman. Same-sex marriage focuses on the rights of the couple but traditional marriage emphasises not only these but also includes an emphasis on the heterosexual relationship as one in which children may be conceived and brought up. This recognises the complementarity of male/female as being of benefit to children.

b] Although it is claimed that redefining marriage will equalise heterosexual and homosexual marriage relationships, in fact this is not so. In traditional marriage both commitment and responsibility are priorities, a fact which is recognised in law by the situation of adultery being a ground for divorce. However, under the proposed law, adultery will not apply to same-sex marriage, thus creating an inequality between the two forms of marriage. Thus the substantive legal framework for same-sex marriage and heterosexual marriage differs---logic would seem to dictate that differing legal obligations should result in differing categorisation.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

I would be concerned that there may be a challenge on the grounds of discrimination under European equality law such that a couple may wish a belief celebrant to use religious premises for their same-sex marriage.
How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I would be concerned, if some celebrants are authorised to solemnise heterosexual and same-sex marriages, that there will be a challenge under European equality law such that a same-sex couple may claim discrimination if a celebrant refuses to solemnise their marriage. Already, Mr Barrie Drewitt-Barlow, a partner in a same-sex couple relationship in England says that he is intending to take the Church of England to court so that he may have a marriage in church. I suspect that this challenge will include the celebrant. [ cf http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2383686/Millionaire-gay-fathers-sue-Church-England-allowing-married-church.html ]

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

All the legal rights of marriage are already available to same-sex couples through civil partnerships. It is not clear what new rights if any would be gained for same-sex couples by redefining marriage. Therefore, I do not support the changing of civil partnerships to marriage. I am deeply concerned about the civil rights and freedom of speech of people who support traditional marriage. There are cases already of a baker, a florist and a printer being challenged in court because they refuse to become involved with business requests from same-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

I would be concerned, if civil marriage ceremonies are allowed to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between couples and the registrar, that this would lead to couples claiming discrimination under EU equality laws if they cannot have a civil marriage on religious premises. Already, Mr Barrie Drewitt-Barlow, a partner in a same-sex couple relationship in England says that he is intending to take the Church of England to court so that he may have a marriage in church. [ cf http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2383686/Millionaire-gay-fathers-sue-Church-England-allowing-married-church.html ]

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I would be concerned that, if religious registration of civil partnerships is allowed, that this would open the door to pressure on religious groups/individuals to be willing to offer this service. I would be concerned that this is a move towards a situation where a same-sex couple may claim discrimination if some members of a faith group are willing to perform this registration and others are not.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

I do not agree with legally acknowledging a transgender status

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

a] When there is conflict, in the European Court of Human Rights, between Article 9 [right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion] and other rights, several cases have found that Article 9 does not provide the protections it is set up to do. [cf. Eweida and Others v United Kingdom [2013]: http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/sites/eng/pages/search.aspx?i=001-115881 ]
b] It is important that conscience clauses be introduced in employment and equality laws so that employees who support the present definition of marriage are not forced either to participate in same-sex marriage ceremonies or to give approval of same-sex marriages. If such clauses are not introduced, the situation may arise where whose who work in the public sector may lose their jobs or be excluded from certain professions if they do not support same-sex marriage. [cf 'Re: The Implications For Freedom of Conscience and Religious Liberty Arising from Redefining Marriage in Scotland' by Aidan O'Neill QC]
c] At present there are legal protections for atheist teachers which mean that they are not forced to teach religion. I believe that there should be similar protections for teachers who have religious or other convictions such that they do not support same-sex marriages.
d] The law should protect parents' right to withdraw their children from lessons involving same-sex marriage. Moreover, the parents should have a legal right to know when such lessons are planned to happen.
e] The Government is considering making it clear through amending guidance that people should not be prevented from fostering or adopting simply because they support traditional marriage. However, more robust legislation should be set up, rather than just guidance.
f] It is important that religious groups which support traditional views on marriage are protected in equality law so that they are not treated less favourably by public authorities, for example by being refused grants, contracts or use of facilities.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I, myself, when delivering postcards supporting traditional marriage through letterboxes, was approached by a gentleman who demanded my name so that he could report me, claiming that delivering such postcards was a 'hate crime'. He accused me of spreading 'utter hatred'. On another occasion, a lady returned the postcard saying that I could 'wipe my arse with it'.
a] It is vital that robust safeguards are put on place such that no person will be forced to express agreement with same-sex marriage or be penalised for not agreeing with same-sex marriage.
b) There are differing views on same-sex marriage. People who support the historic and long-standing definition of marriage should have the right to express their belief freely. In recent times a climate of fear has grown where many people do not feel free to express their beliefs peacefully. One result of the equality law is that people feel that perfectly legitimate views cannot be freely expressed. c] I believe that specific amendments are vitally necessary to protect the right to free speech and debate. Such amendments should apply across public order and equality laws, including employment and goods and services. It is VITAL that there are amendments which clarify that equality law and breach of public order law do not legislate such that that merely having a discussion on same-sex marriage is, of itself, a form of discrimination. This would help ensure that supporters of traditional marriage feel at liberty to discuss the topic with others at work or in the general public without being labelled as being discriminatory.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

a] I believe that it is very important it is made a robust legal situation that the principle of reasonable accommodation should be required of all public bodies in Scotland in their provision of public services. b] I strongly believe that the Marriage and Civil Partnerships [Scotland] Bill should not be passed before an amendment is made to the Westminster Equality Act 2010 such that it incorporates the principle that an employer must make reasonable accommodation of the manifestation of religious belief by employees

Are you responding as...

Retired Senior Teacher

18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Same sex marriage goes against the Law of God. When God gave the 10 Commandments to Moses, three of those Commandments referred to marriage: Honour Thy Father And Mother; Thou Shalt Not Commit Adultry; and Thou Shalt Not Covet Thy Neighbours Wife. What gives any Government the right to go against the Law of God?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I have concerns for the rights of women and children in our society if this law is passed. I would also like to know where divorce law would stand on the question of adultery.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

I am heartened by the forward-thinking, egalitarian, humanistic stance of this Bill and the Scottish Government's position. As a Scotsman who left his home country to live in Canada 8 years ago, and who is returning to Scotland to live shortly, I am delighted to be coming home to a more enlightened country. Canada legalised same sex marriage years ago. Bravo to Scotland for catching up!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

Freedom of expression and choice demands the ability to conduct ceremonies in the venue of the couple's choosing.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I cannot see what they need protected from. It is not for them to dictate how others live their lives.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Someone who has hidden either knowingly or not their true Gender Identity should not put their partner through the stress of a divorce if both partners wish to continue their marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Love is Love, no rules, no cure!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

I think that this should be available to those that want it. But some people would prefer a civil partnership and that should be available to all couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

It is unnecessary because same-sex couples already have all the rights they need under the civil partnerships scheme. It is also unwanted except by a very vocal minority. Until relatively recently a majority in the gay lobby did not even want marriage, which they considered too binding a tie. I very much doubt that this legislation will add any stability to most same-sex liaisons. It is also a distraction from more serious Government priorities â€“ securing good local employment, seeing that the NHS is up-to-date and able to treat an ageing population, maintaining the roads and other transport networks in good order, ensuring that the assessments for the Curriculum for Excellence are rigorous and will stand up to outside scrutiny etc.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Essentially I am dismayed. Also, I believe that the public are being hoodwinked into the idea that the Bill will achieve (a) equality; and (b) a strengthening of the marriage bond in society. In fact, it will undermine marriage because it has failed to substitute a new and satisfactory definition of marriage in place of the traditional one of a voluntary union between a man and a woman for life to the exclusion of all others. For its part, this Bill will set up a form of marriage where adultery is irrelevant; where marriage has nothing to do with the procreation of children; and where it seems that the distinction between male and female is being trampled underfoot. Moreover, under the Bill the terms of same-sex marriage will be different from those of opposite-sex marriage. So, where is equality?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I have no objection to this part of the Bill provided the belief celebrant comes from a responsible organisation. It would further undermine the place of marriage if representatives from flippant groups like the Jedi Knights cult were allowed to conduct marriage ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither
I am happy with these arrangements in that they take care to respect the conscience of individuals on this matter. My one difficulty (and it is a very serious one) is how far these arrangements will stand up under the European Convention on Human Rights see my answer to Q12.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

I am not greatly perturbed by this aspect of the legislation but I do have concerns that we will end up with a very complex and confusing family legal system where in time there will be both civil partnerships and marriages available to the same groups of people. After all, that was not the intention when civil partnerships were first introduced.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

I am indifferent about this aspect of the Bill.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

I have no objection to this, provided there is no possibility of coercion emanating from courts whether in Scotland or in Europe.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

While the Bill does show genuine respect for the position of those churches and celebrants who are opposed to same-sex marriage, there is considerable doubt as to whether this will stop gay activists taking churches to court or will prevent such challenges ending in the European Court of Human Rights. Already, in England a homosexual couple have announced their plans to go to court to force churches to offer wedding ceremonies for same-sex couples. I worry about the pronouncements of Scottish Government spokesmen who assume the sovereignty of the Scottish courts on rights issues. They rather naively ignore the possibility of the ECHR overturning verdicts in the Scottish courts. While Article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights does give the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, there have been some cases where these rights have been trumped by other sorts of rights. This may well happen, especially as the Faculty of Advocates have pointed out that the Convention is a living instrument and as society’s mores change, the way the Convention is interpreted changes. The time may come when the European Court decides that allowing churches and individual celebrants not to participate in same-sex weddings is discriminatory against homosexuals. In the light of this, I would find the Bill more satisfactory if it incorporated the right of conscientious objection for at least the following groups (a) individual religious celebrants; (b) teachers in school who might be required to teach same-sex marriage; (c) civil registrars employed before this Bill becomes law. As a retired teacher, I am well aware of the sort of pressures from a Senior Management Team or a head of department to follow a certain line in the curriculum. The conscience of individual teachers can easily be ignored in the process. The provisions under section 14 of the Bill are too brief and vague to be of any practical use. I am worried too that parents will have little idea of the new teaching materials to which their children will be exposed should the Bill become law. I am not sure how realistic it is for them to be fully informed of the content of every aspect of the curriculum, but the attempt should be made. It was not reassuring that as part of their last consultation, the Government referred merely to the provision for parents to remove their children from R.E or from lessons on sexual health. After all, R.E. and sexual health are only a small part of the curriculum and there are many other aspects of the curriculum where approval of same-sex marriage could be introduced, either overtly or implicitly. Unless clearer guidelines are given on parental rights and unless parents are informed in far more detail of curriculum content than has traditionally been the case, I can foresee a situation in a few years’ time when there will be a groundswell of protest against the whole system of primary and secondary education in Scotland. I would also like to see two legal changes – (i) charity law should be amended so that disapproval of same-sex marriage is never used as a justification for removing charitable status from religious and other charities; (ii) The Scottish Parliament Equal Opportunities Committee should ask the Westminster Government to amend Equality Act 2010 to enshrine the principle that an employer is obliged to make reasonable accommodation for the manifestation of religious belief by employees. It would be irresponsible for the Scottish Government to allow this Bill to become law before such an amendment is obtained.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There are many people who believe that sexual orientation is quite different from race and gender, which cannot be altered. They consider that sexual orientation is more of a lifestyle choice, and so open to approval or diapproval. They should be free to express that viewpoint. As a former R.E. teacher, I know that while it was not my role to impose my beliefs, pupils were curious to know what my beliefs were. It would not have helped classroom dynamics to conceal these views. This would apply not only to R.E. teachers but to teachers in many other subjects as well. Teachers should be free to express their own views in the classroom with restraint, of course, and with respect for the views of others. It will not help the atmosphere in schools nor will it improve the quality of teaching and learning if teachers who disagree with same-sex marriage are constantly in fear of pupils (or colleagues) trying to trip them up and so reporting them for their heretical notions about same-sex marriage. To remove the possibility of this scenario it should be made crystal clear in the bill that expression of disapproval of same-sex marriage is not reprehensible in any context. In other areas of the public sector personal beliefs on this issue should not be adduced against them. It was disgraceful that Adrian Smith, a housing manager in Trafford, should have been demoted on the ground of ‘gross misconduct™ because of remarks on his Facebook page which had nothing to do with his day-to-day work. Above all, if the Bill becomes law, it must be open to people to affirm publicly that it is a bad law with detrimental consequences for the whole of society. This is quite different from open defiance of the law and should be regarded as such. As a corollary, the right of legitimate protest against this law should be recognised. Moreover, those considered about its influence on society should be given unimpeded access to relevant data to enable them to monitor the effects same-sex marriage will have on all aspects of society.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am amazed that a Bill on such an important family matter should have so little to say on the rights of children.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

This bill is essential. It is farcical how long it has taken, for the basic human right to marry the person you love, to be made into law.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
For the greater good, it is my opinion, no extensive protections should be required regarding same-sex marriage. The outcome of introducing a same-sex marriage bill will be a fairer society, which should be embraced by society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is essential, but should should not be abused.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

I married my wife in 1986. I changed from male to female 5 years ago here in Canada. We remained married and have 3 children.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Gay marriage has nothing to do with straight people, no effect on their marriage, and they should have no say in which two persons, regardless of gender or sex, can or can not get married.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group
a private individual

17 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

I have heard members of parliament saying that it will strengthen society and similar quotes however they clearly have not experienced this lifestyle or undertaken any scientific research in this area. From personal experience my father was a homosexual and the lifestyle and culture that he passed on to me was not healthy and life empowering, it was a culture that imparted the message that sexual confusion is normal and healthy, that pornography was normal and healthy, sexual abuse, verbal abuse, sexual promiscuity, drug taking and alcohol abuse was all normal and healthy, however I soon started to realise as I grew older that it wasn't normal and healthy I started to realise that my deep sense of self hatred, insecurity, isolation and inability to communicate effectively or relate to anyone in a healthy way was because I had been parented by a person who himself did not understand what was normal and healthy and therefore was not able to impart a healthy culture to me. My father's parenting resulted in me being a very damaged and dysfunctional person, who struggled with eating disorders, anorexia and bulimia, self harming with razor blades, suicide attempts, drug abuse, alcohol abuse, nicotine abuse, inability to relate to anyone, sexual confusion, sexual promiscuity, manic depression, fragmented personality to mention just a few of the many many issues I have had to face and overcome. I further supply you with scientific research undertaken over the last 125 years into these issues (see link below) that fully support my experiences as normal and hope that it will provide you with further information to support your stance against the damage this bill will cause to society generations of children to come. http://freereformednotesbycvd.blogspot.co.uk/2009/06/conclusive-scientific-evidence-that.html

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

It was only through a personal encounter with Jesus Christ that my life was restored but he also gave me answers regarding my own struggle and sexual confusion. The bible is very clear in Romans 1 that the issue of homosexuality as well as all sin such as greed, murder, strife etc.. the things our newspapers are full of and we ALL have to overcome is because we have exchanged the truth of God for a lie, which then hands us over to a culture which gradually becomes more and more debased due to a lack of being connected to the source of life. I believe the Bible is true because when I placed God at the centre of my life once again my own sexual confusion, addictions and destructive behaviours were resolved and I have been able to help other people overcome similar issues. same Sex marriage will therefore be reducing culture into an increasing state of depravity as experienced by myself and therefore should be resisted as a corporate mandate. People are not created homosexuals and God has given everyone the freedom of choice however to live as they see fit and they will choose their eternal destiny based on their own choices. Therefore if people want to live as homosexuals they are free to do that however it should not be enforced on the wider community as a healthy alternative life style, which research and my experience and the bible all clearly say it is not. If we start shifting these ancient boundary stones and paying no attention to the bible, to research and to people's experience then what will stop us starting to legislate the right to commit incest or have sex with children, bigamy or any array of sexual deviation in the name of equality and freedom, which actually brings us not into increasing freedom but of depravity.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

The message we are giving to society is that a life without God is good and that is not the case. God is the source of all the good in the world that we take for granted. Creating a system separate from him is like a person saying I don't need a heart any

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

see previous comments

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

see previous comments

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

Any marriage that is not inline with divine design honouring God at the centre of it such as civil marriage is going to be under pressure from the word go and therefore I do not really think it matters where people get married and should be free to choose how and where they have their ceremony without restrictions.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

People are free to choose their way however they will have to live with either the positive or negative consequences of their choice
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Yes I think anyone that is against same sex marriage should be allowed to freely hold that view without any form of discriminatory or legal punitive action in any way, and be free to not participate in any such activity, however it is vital that their belief also include treating those that agree with it or choose to embrace a homosexual lifestyle with honour and respect and ensure that they are not party to any homophobic bullying or persecution in any way shape of form.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I think freedom of speech is important and we should all be free to express our views, however expressing them with any form of hatred, bullying, intimidation or violence is what should be legislated against, not opinions.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

It is an unnecessary Bill with an unnecessary agenda which though obliquely referenced in Manifesto's has been brought forward with haste and with prejudice.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage is an institution, universally recognised as between one man and one woman and a central part of which has been the provision of a stable environment for the upbringing of the next generation. this Bill loses that fundamental component of marriage by focusing on the wishes and preferences of adults without consideration of children at all. This legislation is unnecessary in that Civil partnerships proved the same legal rights as marriage and therefore there is no need to enact this legislation. In addition, what happens to terms like "husband" and "wife" or do they now become redundant or will they, as in England and Wales, become non-gender specific with the concomitant damage to the language?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

I do not believe that this ought to take place because marriage ought to continue to be between one man and one woman.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I do believe that civil partnerships have a place in a religious setting at all.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Churches and celebrants who refuse to marry same-sex couples will be susceptible to litigation. In England, a homosexual couple are already planning to go to court to force churches to host gay weddings. Ultimately this matter may be decided by the European Court of Human Rights, and any attempted protections in Scottish law could be overturned. There is no guarantee that, at some future date, the Court will not rule that religion and belief celebrants must either solemnise all marriages or cease to marry people altogether. The Law also currently provides that doctors who object to abortion on conscience grounds are not required to perform such and similar protection ought to be afforded to registrars re same sex "marriage" in this Bill. Also in schools, although religious education is compulsory, atheist teachers are not compelled to take part and so in a similar vein, neither should teachers who object to same sex "marriage" be compelled to teach it. This legislation, as the anecdotal evidence currently shows, will be a charter for the alienation of and perhaps persecution of those people, like myself, who hold to the view that marriage is between one man and one woman.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is clear evidence from cases which have been brought before courts that there will be significant curtailment of the right to free speech should this legislation be enacted. Biblically, without question, homosexual conduct is condemned as a sin but if this legislation goes ahead, it is doubtful if it will be legal to hold and teach this view.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

do not go ahead with this poorly conceived and ill thought through piece of legislation.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
a faith/belief local group or congregation

13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I believe in the principle of gender equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I also believe that civil partnerships should remain as an alternative for same sex couples, and that different sex couples should have the same choice between marriage and civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

It is OK to solemnise marriages but basically, in law, all marriages should be civil marriages, with freedom for marriage partners to receive solemnisation from their particular religion.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

I believe that civil partnerships should remain as an alternative for same sex couples, and that different sex couples should have the same choice between marriage and civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

I believe that everyone should be allowed the possibility of civil partnerships as an alternative to marriage. These two institutions are not exactly the same although they should remain equivalent in terms of law.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People who have concerns about same sex marriage should not be allowed to restrict the choice and rights of others.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Everyone has the right of free speech but people who have concerns about same sex marriage should not be allowed to restrict the choice and rights of others.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

In law marriage and civil partnerships should basically be civil not religious in nature. Religions should be free to endorse or not endorse either of these institutions.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I would like safeguards to be put in place to protect people who are of a different opinion and who believe that marriage is between one man and one woman.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech should be allowed by all parties.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I believe that it is morally wrong, and will send the wrong signals to the youth of today. It is in contrast to what we have learned from the bible.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

I do not believe that anyone should be given legal recognition of an acquired gender. We are either male or female at birth and this should remain so, irrespective of gender reassignment.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

Individual choice. Some couples may be content with a civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

The marriage commitment is the important issue, not the place.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I cannot see what problems would occur if they knew any couple who were married. It does not impact on their lives. So why should they be concerned about anyone else's personal lives.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
It shows that Scotland is moving forward with the rest of the world and is setting a great example for other countries who are unsure of their stance on equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
There is no reason why two people who love and are committed to each other cannot be wed in the ceremony of their choice.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
They need to be educated and taught than same sex couples are no different than traditional straight couples.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I think it's far more important to address inequality. Many people in the USA in the mid-20th century felt that allowing black and white people to marry was morally reprehensible. Now, such views are, thankfully, in the minority. It is crucial that clear points about the importance of equal marriage are made accessible to those who have doubts. Equality, first and foremost, must take precedence over moral positions.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I am gravely concerned by the proposals to redefine marriage and feel they are completely unnecessary and unhelpful, without sufficient protections in place for contentious objectors.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The institution of marriage is older than even the existence of our laws or country. It has always been defined as the union of one man with one woman. This is a fundamental change that was not even mentioned in any political party manifestos. If we redefine this, then marriage itself may be redefined as being not just one person with another but multiple marriages (polygamy). I believe this has already been brought up in some USA states where marriage laws were adjusted. As a primary school teacher, I believe this would seriously harm the mental health of our children. They need a stable relationship of two adults. I believe a stable balance of male and female, enables them to develop both masculine and feminine aspects of their personality.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

Celebrants who hold traditional views, must be given the freedom to act accordingly and not forced to act against their conscience.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Civil partnerships have equal status with marriage, in all governmental matters. The two are different. It is not necessary to redefine marriage.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

As I understand it, civil partnerships should be free to adhere to any belief system.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

This might be abused as a way to achieve gay marriage by the back door but I would have thought it unlikely to happen.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I'm particularly concerned that Christian charities should not be stripped of their charitable status because of their beliefs on marriage. Also - people should not be prevented from fostering or adopting simply because they hold traditional views about marriage. Their rights to hold these beliefs need to be protected by law. Employees should have the right to personal beliefs and not be forced out of their jobs as a result of them - especially council workers, or those working with children.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It is really important that we continue to respect those who wish to hold to a traditional view of marriage and give them the right to be able to express views freely. Protection is clearly needed, following the case of Rev Brian Ross, who was removed from his post as a police chaplain because he disagreed with gay marriage on his personal internet blog. If we are not free to discuss our views, it is not possible to have a full and reasoned debate - it is stifled by a climate of fear. Criticising same-sex marriage is not, on its own, a form of discrimination. Some are quick to label any disagreement with same-sex marriage as "bigoted" TM.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

This needs a very thorough examination and has been rushed through the English parliament system without receiving this. Please examine every aspect carefully and ensure that safeguards are put in place.

Are you responding as...
a private individual

17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Marriage is a sacrament and can be only between a man and a woman. Civil Partnerships enable same-sex couples to make their relationship official and public.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I believe Scotland should lead the way in the United Kingdom in relation to same-sex marriage, we started the ball rolling and believe as a nation we can lead others in bringing full equality to Scotland's population. The equal marriage bill needs to go further to fully live up to its name, yes same-sex couples can marry or be civil partnershiped, but why are civil partnerships not allowed in opposite-sex relationships? I also think that specific priests (ect) should be allowed to say whether they wish to perform a same-sex ceremony and be protected from the church or denomination they belong to for their choice, I think that the leader of a specific religion saying as a whole that no (for example) Catholic priests can perform a same-sex union in a church is wrong and again puts a stop to full equality. Individuals who belong to a religion should also have their own choice.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same-sex marriage, so that same-sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I am fully supportive of same-sex marriage and feel it will bring equality to Scotland's population and bring Scotland forward in regards to people's views towards the nation.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite-sex and same-sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

As the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. In my view, full gender recognition should be allowed with or without the spouse's consent because it is a matter personal to the trans person. The granting of a full gender recognition certificate has no practical impact on the non-trans spouse as all their pension, inheritance, parental and other rights remain unchanged. It is only any re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition that should require the consent of both spouses, since that is where both spouses have a direct interest.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I cannot imagine what protections those who have concerns might require. I cannot imagine what rational concerns they might have. Every couple who wish to be bound in matrimony strengthens the institution of marriage for everyone. Same sex marriage will strengthen the institution for everyone, even for those who feel they have cause for unfounded concerns, even for those who are opposed because they are consumed by prejudice will benefit from extending this right to all of their fellow citizens.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

A small amendment to section 11(2) of the bill would be appropriate, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
The partner who wishes to apply for a Gender Recognition Certificate should not have to obtain the consent of their spouse, but that consent should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

In the interests of equality and support of basic human rights its imperative this Bill is passed.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

A significant progressive movement for a Scottish society.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Important, but a purely personal choice. And only if this was characterised by the values and principles of the faith of which the persons were being married within.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Both options should continue to be made avaialble

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

as with current marriage legislation, it should be extended to include all relevant premises

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Why do they need protection, this is a modern society with diversity at its core; Same sex marriage will enhance Scotland as a nation and culture as it represents inclusion and equality in its widest form.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

That is should be celebrated and valued.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

it seems to be being ram-rotted through Parliament. When the overwhelming majority of respondents to the consultation was against same sex marriage, it seems the government is making a mockery of the idea of being responsible to the electorate.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I fail to see that same sex marriage will give any greater legal rights to the couple than civil partnership already does. Presumably when it comes to people of the same sex divorcing, the same legal requirements governing heterosexual divorce will be in force. Should this not happen it can hardly be classed as equality.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am concerned that already people are being dismissed for opposing same sex marriage; that people are already being intimidated; and that although safeguards may be said to be in place, they can be challenged successfully under various equality laws. The protection does not seem to be very stringent.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There seem to be already situations where freedom of speech is not respected if the comments are not in favour of same sex marriage. What safeguards would a concerned teacher or parent, for example, have if they voiced their disagreement with educational material promoting same sex marriage as being the equal of heterosexual? Would the right to dissent be enshrined in law? And if it would be, might that law too be challenged successfully?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am concerned that a group within the country seems to have an influence which is so disproportionate to the size of the group, and can seek to overthrow centuries of stable family relationships.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Equality Laws have resulted in the closing down of faith based adoption agencies. Human rights law offers no protection either. As I work in the public sector I could lose my job if I refuse to endorse same sex marriage. The Scottish government have been unable to give assurance that jobs will not be lost. The law protects atheists from being compelled to teach religious education. Similar rights should be given to teachers who do not feel able to teach about same sex marriage. Many parents do not want it taught in schools either. They should have the right to withdraw their children from such lessons.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

This question has not been dealt with in this bill. No one should be forced to agree with this bill or punished or discriminated against for saying they disagree with it.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Same sex marriage was not on this government’s manifesto and should not be railroaded through on the "assumption" that the electorate agree to it.

Are you responding as...

17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
As a Bible teacher I am concerned, as has already been demonstrated in London, that in quoting the Bible one may be open to arrest if someone does not like what the Bible says about same sex relations. It has already been shown in a number of countries that protection measures do not work. In parts of Canada, Christian lawyers who uphold the 'traditional' or Biblical view of marriage have been deemed unfit to practise.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation
a private individual

17 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

As the bill stands, all religious or belief mixed-sex marriage ceremonies must use gender-specific language (â€œI declare that you are now husband and wifeâ€). In contrast, religious or belief same-sex marriages will use gender-neutral language (â€œI declare that you are now marriedâ€). This creates difficulties for trans and intersex people who live in a different gender from their legal sex. In my view, it is wrong to impose gender-specific terms where the couple would prefer to use gender-neutral language and the organisation conducting the marriage agrees to do that.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

As the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. In my view, full gender recognition should be allowed with or without the spouse's consent because it is a matter personal to the trans person. The granting of a full gender recognition certificate has no practical impact on the non-trans spouse as all their pension, inheritance, parental and other rights remain unchanged. It is only any re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition that should require the consent of both spouses, since that is where both spouses have a direct interest. The bill is currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, to reintroduce the simplified long-term transitioned application process for gender recognition. Many trans people have delayed applying for gender recognition while the unfair requirement to divorce exists. Over the several years since they transitioned they may have lost contact with the specialist who originally diagnosed them and therefore may not be able to provide as much medical evidence. Currently you need to be aged at least 18 to apply for gender recognition. This creates difficulties for 16 and 17 year old trans people who want to get a civil partnership or marriage as they are unable to enter their marriage or civil partnership in their correct gender. The Age of Legal Capacity (Scotland) Act 1991 provides that people of 16 can enter into any transaction and the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977 provides that people can marry at 16 without parental permission so the age for gender recognition should be reduced to 16 so that it matches with these existing Scottish legal provisions.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Marriage equality is essential for a fair and equal society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

I do believe that Marriage has been defined through the Bible by God. All people should be treated with respect and dignity but that does not mean that we need to redefine marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Marriage has been defined by God as a man and a woman joining together in a covenant relationship. Same sex couples can live together and make agreements but it cannot be marriage. Although matrimonial law has been tweaked over the years, the law has never fundamentally altered the essential nature of marriage: a lifelong commitment between one man and one woman.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

Celebrants should be given a free choice, without any discrimination, if they want to solemnise same-sex partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

It is not clear what new legal rights, if any, same-sex couples would receive which they do not already have through civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Marriage is between one man and one woman. We can call same-sex partnerships a 'Civil Partnership' but we must not and dare not try to redefine marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Allowance should be given to teachers who, for religious convictions or otherwise, do not feel able to teach about same-sex marriage. This would be similar to the protection offered atheist teachers from being compelled to teach RE.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The issue of freedom of speech is crucial and should fiercely protected by the authorities. Robust safeguards are needed to ensure that no person will be compelled to express agreement with a same-sex marriage or be punished for expressing their disagreement with it.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

16 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

I am trans-sexual myself - male to female - and I support equality and the right of those who are LGBT to be able to marry and have the same rights as everyone else.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I think it's a wonderful thing, love is love and allowing for same sex marriage would really help the economy and promote progress and understanding.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

If people wish to be married in a church and the religious community is able to get over their backwards ignorance, then that's fine with me.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I feel that the terms should be up to the couple getting married, if they wish to be referred to as husband and husband or wife and wife, then that should be their choice and their right.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

Sounds great to me.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
That's fine with me, why would you want to married in a stuffy or cold church when you could be married outside surrounded by the beauty of nature? It should be the choice of those getting married where they wish to get married

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

I do not feel that religion, if religion continues to be used as a weapon by ignorant minds, should have a say in the matter. If people can't look past their twisted beliefs and get over themselves then they should not have the say on people's lives

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

If the marriage is still holding and the couple still love one another, then that is a good thing, but they shouldn't be forced to choose between their marriage and their self happiness. If the couple are unable to keep their marriage together then they shouldn't be punished for that, transition is a very emotionally and mentally trying time for those who are Trans* and marriages and relationships can suffer from it

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I feel that those who are against it and who are determined to prevent progress and change are causing more harm than good. No one chooses their sexuality nor their gender identity, it is simply how people are born. It isn't the haters who need protecting, it's the rest of us who are just trying to live our lives in peace without ignorant, narrow minded bigots making things harder who need the protection

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech comes with the responsibility and maturity of understanding that the world does not belong to heterosexual, cis-gender people, we are all fellow human beings at the end of the day and our differences define us and enrich life. Without difference life would be very boring.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am concerned that ignorance will still continue to be enforced by the media and hate will continue to be enforced by those determined to keep us in the dark ages. The hate needs to stop.

Are you responding as...

a private individual
Trans-sexual woman - male to female
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Im not sure why on earth we are asking for yet more consultations on this instead of just getting it passed. Total waste of time and money asking for more feedback!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Common Sense

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

We are in secular society. Church attendance gets lower every week. Should have the same powers as Religious celebrants

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

And should be made as uncomplicated and low cost as possible for existing Civil Partners

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Should be allowed anywhere

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
Totally supportive

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Totally supportive

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

In basic terms. Stuff them! If they dont like an equal society maybe they need to go and live in uganda or Russia.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech does not allow them to discriminate or try and being in amendments to defend their bigotry.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

as shown by same sex adoption legislation there can be no protection for those who oppose this legislation re same sex marriage. Those who vote to introduce this legislation do so knowing that they are in fact legalising discrimination against Christians for simply holding the apparently radical and dangerous view that marriage should be between one man and one woman. Are critically ill patients to be denied the comfort and care of a hospital chaplain who shares their beliefs because that chaplain has been sacked. Will teachers face the sack if they refuse to use material which they find offensive

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is the most precious freedom we have and must be defended vigorously. The debate through the media and unfortunately through some politicians on this proposed legislation has been nothing more than bullying and name calling such as bigot towards those who oppose the legislation no matter how gently they express their views. We have already seen people sacked for expressing views honestly and not wishing to offend then losing their livelihood, business, s. We now have a situation in Scotland where the majority of people are fearful of expressing a commonly held, rational, traditional point of view. TYRANY How can Scottish politicians possibly think they would be taken seriously encouraging developing nations toward freedom of speech and transparency whilst inflicting this discriminatory and intimidating law

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

i find it astonishing that any government or political party would consider introducing legislation of this kind which has attracted such a huge amount of opposition from the public without having the honesty or courage to have included it in its manifesto. Gay rights lobbyists have already stated they will target for legal action schools, teachers and churches when this legislation is passed. How many sacked teachers and closed churches will be acceptable to the parliament

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

I fail to see what additional legal rights the proposed legislation would give to same-sex couples that the current legislation does not already provide. Therefore the legislation in my opinion is a waste of time and scarce resources.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition
Belief celebrants do not have the same training and background as religious celebrants. Someone with 6 or 7 years study should not be put on the same footing as someone who has done a weekend course.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There is a definite concern about freedom of speech. Already I sense there is a fear to say anything against same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

As a secondary teacher I am particularly concerned about the right of teachers (and indeed all public sector workers) to express support for traditional marriage. A primary teacher in England has already been reprimanded because she refused to read a book to her infant pupils about gay penguins. This is really quite a Stalinist approach and will probably happen in Scotland as well.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This legislation is long overdue and I am currently discriminated against in that having undertaken a civil partnership on the understanding that this provided total equality it is now understood that this is not the case and that previous legislation was not repealed or amended which in effect only enabled by civivl partner to access my pension up to 1988 and not prior to this date.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

100% agree that this legislation is overdue and hope the process to have this agreed and introduced is done so with the appropriate haste.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Appropriate that people should have the choice along with the organisations whoi should also have the choice. The only suggestion I would wish to make is that in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using gender free form of words within the marriage ceremony.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

There should be no reason why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should not be allowed to marry in Scotland in the usual way. This would create problems for those that had to go elsewhere to have their relationship recognised and would then require to dissolve/divorce before proceeding to marry. This is not equal in terms of those of mixed gender.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

There are a number of amendments required to address issues around transgender e.g. consent of spouse etc. is a nonsense and should be done in line with the two year time frame for acquired gender status.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

A fair and correct balance however the idea for registrars to opt out is not appropriate as they are carrying out a civil function. The idea that Teaching staff could opt out of discussing same sex marriage when it is raised is not acceptable as there should be no reason to prevent young people discussing their particular home life whatever the make up of their family. If we are committed to equality then all means all and we should accept nothing less. It is understood there will be a need to raise awareness amongst staff in the public sector etc. and this should be undertaken as part of the ongoing professional development across the sector.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The proposed Bill has no impact on the freedom of speech as section 14 of the Bill confirms.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The Bill is a huge step forward for equality and the commitment to review the civil partnership law regards the need to consider the position on opposite sex civil partnership is paramount and urgent and should start without delay and prompt legislation t

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
without a doubt

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
without a doubt

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
definitely

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

protect them from what? their own fear? i'd encourage them to reflect on whether god has anything to do with belief systems!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academican LGBT group
a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Legalising same sex marriage does not mean that straight people need to go out and get married to a member of the same sex. Gay people can't help who they love and they should be allowed to declare this love and be given the same rights as straight people in a relationship. It is 2013 and so it is time we realised that love is love and it is not bounded by race, skin colour, political/religious views or gender.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I am very happy with the positive steps the Bill has taken towards marriage equality, although I do wish the bill had gone further in some areas, particularly in introducing civil partnerships for mixed-gender couples.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

There was never any good reason to prevent same sex couples getting married.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I note particularly that Humanist celebrants have been able to conduct marriages for several years now. Having attended several humanist weddings, I think they have proved that a wedding need not have a religious component to be a very personal and beautiful occasion.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I am broadly in favour of the Bill in this area, but I would note that I do not necessarily agree that religious celebrants should be able to restrict themselves to only marrying mixed sex couples. Being a marriage celebrant should be regarded as a legal position, carrying out a legal process, and celebrants should therefore be required to be willing to marry any couple who can legally marry (completely separately to whether or not a religious body wishes to solemnise same sex marriages).

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

It should be trivial to convert a civil partnership to a marriage (and vice versa). Indeed, I do not believe there should be any distinction between a marriage and a civil partnership.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Given that belief organisations may marry people, I don't see why they should not be able to register civil partnerships for people.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

This is not an area in which I have any knowledge, but I would note that I agree with the Equality Network's views on this topic, available here:  http://www.equality-network.org/our-work/equal-marriage/our-views-on-the-equal-opportunities-committees-questions/

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I do not think there are any concerns in this area.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I don't think the bill should cause any issues with freedom of speech. People have the right to disagree with equal marriage if they choose, as long as this is done in a respectful manner.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
I object to the principle of religious celebrants being allowed to conduct a legal marriage. I would rather see civil marriage as the legal norm, with couples able to have a religious wedding ceremony to suit their own beliefs afterwards, as is done in France.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
I support it on grounds of equality of opportunity, but I have previously stated marriage should take place in a civil context.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

I attach the caveat that finding one’s spouse preferring to undergo gender reassignment should reasonable grounds for divorce proceedings.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I do no believe anyone who has such concerns needs protection. Same sex marriage affects only the people involved and those who are concerned about it should withdraw from the debate. Public servants are required to marry those who apply if they meet the criteria for legal eligibility. Registrars should not be allowed to absolve themselves from their duties.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
Marriage is for one man and one woman to be together.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
No religious body and no individual celebrant will be obliged to conduct same sex marriages - they are free to opt out which seems like a very strong protection indeed for those who object to these plans on religious grounds. If we’re talking about civil registar then their own personal beliefs about same sex marriage simply can't allow them to opt out of something that the state has decided to make law - they have a job to do, in accordance with the law, and their services must be open to everyone. Children in schools must be taught about the world they live in and the laws of the country which they live in. Any suggestion that teaching staff should have the right to limit discussion of same sex marriage in schools based on their own personal beliefs is illogical and offensive - by offering any protection along these lines we are saying that there is something unacceptable or second rate about people in same sex relationships and that a law that has been passed is something to be kept secret. It just doesn't make sense.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People will remain free to say that they don't agree with same sex marriage; there is no impact on freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I believe that both marriage and mixed sex civil partnerships should be made open to all

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Marriage is fundamentally a union between two individuals who care and love for one another. In the 21st century this should not be exclusive to 'a man and a woman' when now, more than ever, we have a wonderfully diverse society with many different people with many different preferences. Marriage is about a commitment between two PEOPLE, and ALL people should have the opportunity to marry whomever they love and want to and should not be restricted due to medieval beliefs about strict man and woman unions.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe everyone is entitled to freedom of speech, so long as they do so in an inoffensive, peaceful manner. The world would be a boring place if we all believed the same things, but we should also take caution that we make our opinions known in an appropriate manner with concrete evidence to illustrate that our individual opinions have been constructed through thorough education and research.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

N/A

Are you responding as...

a public body

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

It is contrary to most people's opinions    It is contrary to age-long accepted views    It is contrary to common sense and our human natures

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
As my replies to no.4

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

My opinion on the basic provisions of the bill is so opposed that any response here would be irrelevant

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
Although my support here is reluctant and hesitant, I have no objection to the proposal
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

If same sex marriage becomes legal in Scotland, full, guaranteed and completely unbreakable protection must be afforded to all who have concerns about same sex marriage. This would apply in a particular and special way, to those who have authority to solemnise marriage but are in conscience opposed to same sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The matter is so basically a matter of conscience that those who have a responsibility for the teaching of children (parents, guardians, carers, teachers) must have freedom to impart their opposition to those whom they have a right and responsibility to teach.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

I support the bill completely as I'm an asexual individual however as I'm also trans* I believe the bill still could be improved.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Very positive however I think the bill should consider those who are transgender or non-binary as well.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

Amend the bill to allow the option of gender neutral ceremonies for mixed sex couples where the religious or belief body is willing to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

I believe anyone of any gender or sexuality should be allowed the form of partnership they desire be it a civil partnership or a marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Amend the bill to allow full gender recognition with or without the spouse’s consent. Both spouses consent should only be needed if a re-registration is needed and allow a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. The bill is currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, to reintroduce the simplified long-term transitioned application process for gender recognition. Lastly amend the bill to equalise the age for gender recognition with the age for marriage which is 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

They'll get over it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

My only thoughts are, this is long overdue, Scotland has tried to portray itself as an advanced compassionate culture, but it always seems to contradict this by allowing hate filled religious organisations to influence the outcomes of any progress. Not all people are to be tarr'd by the same brush, it seems to be mainly those at the top and those with lots of money.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I have been with my partner for 12 years, five of those years we have been in a civil partnership. At this ceremony we were told it was as good as marriage in all but name, this seems to be less certain now that the new marriage bill has come along and we are not sure whether we will need to upgrade or whether this will be done automatically. If we do have to upgrade, paying yet more money for something we were assured was the real Mackoy then we have been mislead by our government. It would be more genuine for our leaders to admit this, rather than make more money without a care in the world for consequence, people's rights or security.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This is a cruel business being dictated by the ignorant and careless few, no matter what gender we are, we are all human,

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Bethany Hughes and many other professors of her ilk, Ian Stewart for eg. Have gently shown those who are willing to listen, many of the root causes to many tales from biblical origin. The Bible and Holy books, have their places in life’s coping strategies, but they certainly were not written for people to use as ammunition and a cover to hide their hatred and fear. Scotland has a dreadful reputation causing misery on a scale for so many to take their own lives due to rejection from local communities. Its time for people who wish to wallow in hatred and concern, to realise they are on the wrong side of history and will be remembered for all the wrong reasons. According to ancient Jewish custom, Jesus long term partner was James, I could hardly believe this until it was explained, along with the fact Jesus blessed a Roman Soldier in a same sex relationship. The Roman Catholic church has admitted same sex relationships once existed. Thousands of people have died and been forgotten and some smeared as mad or evil for simply being, these days should be well behind us now, may those with concern, gain confidence and peace of mind to move on.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Love, trust and respect is all that should matter when two people enter into a marriage. Their gender or sexual orientation should have no baring on whether they are able to make a commitment to each other. Should the bill be passed the only people affected will be those currently prevented from marrying... For everyone else nothing changes!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

I acknowledge some same sex couples would wish to marry, and believe the numbers will be small. However, if there is to be parity, then same sex partnerships have to abolished, as at present, there is no mixed sex partnership. The organisations and people

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Religious forms of marriage are based on long historical records of acceptance into a belief, through established churches. This has to remain valid and not extended to all and sundry.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

All civil partnerships should automatically be changed to marriage and civil partnerships totally scrapped.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

To obtain a GRC, the person has to be transsexual and NOT transgender. Until such time as same sex marriage is legally permitted, then the granting of a GRC allows that person to be the acquired gender. This currently means that if the person remained marr

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Many members of the public are being brow beaten by the equal marriage lobby, and they are intimidated to not being "p.c.". This is ridiculous to have those who have an opinion to not be allowed their say. Moving forward and making things equal is a noble cause, but when doing so is preventing others from having a say, then where does this lead for the future

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I have intimated my concerns in the last question

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

There is a load of nonsense being pushed about transgender people, especially about having a spouse's permission etc. The NGO's, including the Equality Network and Scottish Transgender Association are trying to say that the spouse has no rights in regards

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I believe it should be the decision of the couple in the civil partnership

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I believe that this should be a non-issue. If you are of legal age, and wish to marry someone, regardless of gender, you should be allowed to do so, you have the right to do that. There is literally no reason to oppose this bill, religious or otherwise.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

It is high time that same sex couples receive the same treatment and do not have to fight for what they believe in

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

I think that belief celebrants should be afforded this right without the thought that this is a privilege, the way this sounds makes me think that religious celebrants are deemed ‘higher’?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Same sex couples do not obtain the same legal rights even as civil partnerships,

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

There are so many beautiful locations in Scotland, not excluding our churches

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

People have to be allowed to make a choice regardless of sex, gender.......if they have undergone a sex change then that is how they choose to live their lives and should be allowed to do so without restriction

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There is no need for protection........this implies problems!!!!! Society as a whole has its own problems and none of these can be put at the door of one individual group. If people have concerns then that is their right but they certainly don't need protection.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

I find the question a little unclear, and therefore cannot fully answer.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Get over it! Their concerns will prove unfounded once marriage is equal, and the world doesn't implode around them.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Is the Bill really necessary? it is not obvious what additional legal rights it adds to same sex couples over what is available under current legislation. In contrast it introduces conflict between civil law and the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion â€“ this would be best avoided by providing a ceremony which is called something other than "marriage".

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Because the same word (marriage) is being used to describe the man/woman binding relationship and a same sex binding relationship it is promoting the understanding that these are more than just equally valid â€“ they are the same. However, even within the proposed legislation that is not the case. It is also evident that procreation can only occur within the man/woman relationship. There is no reason why a same sex couple who wish to establish a binding relationship should not do so within the context of a suitable ceremony - however it should not be termed marriage because that leads to confusion.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

The suggested arrangements to authorise some celebrants could jeopardise the rights of dissenting celebrants should they be challenged in the European Courts.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It seems that any protections within the legislation may be overridden by higher authority e.g. European Court of Human Rights - there seems to be a hierarchy of rights and someone will have to lose out. This is clearly not in the best interests of all. Also clauses which protect genuine and non harmful beliefs i.e. regarding the current traditional view of marriage as the only valid definition of marriage, must be incorporated into other legislation where individuals may be impacted e.g. employment law, equality law, charity law and local government legislation. Specific protection should be provided for faith based organisations to require as a "Genuine Occupational Requirement" the need to accept the current traditional view of marriage as between one man and one woman. The belief that marriage should be between only a man and a woman should be recognised as legitimate and people should be free to express that view.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There seems to be an increasing intolerance of the views that: * men and women are of equal value but are not the same * marriage should continue to be between one man and one woman â€“ for life * individuals can disagree with the concept of "same sex marriage" and be allowed to say so There seems to be a view that individuals may have such views but they are not permitted to voice them in any way these individuals are not in any way homophobic but are having their right to speak removed from fear of reprisals this is not a free speech democracy. There is a need to make it clear when and where it will be permissible (e.g. religious education in schools) for an individual to state that he/she believes that marriage should be between a man and a woman. Again the whole principle behind the proposed legislation seems to me to be misplaced and an alternative approach to providing a same sex ceremony should be investigated.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Recent news articles regarding the potential impact of Same Sex Marriage on schools and education authorities are giving concern that Head Teachers will increasingly be reluctant to include the teaching of Christian beliefs in their curriculum simply because they want to avoid any controversy which they perceive may arise from that. This means that the cumulative effect of the current legislation program on top of preceding legislation in this area will have the unintended effect of reducing the breadth of the religious education curriculum which itself would conflict with other legislation.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
I strongly support equal marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I feel that civil marriage negates any need for civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither
I am not overall in favour of civil partnerships as I feel they are a poor substitute for equal marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
In the event of legalising equal marriage it seems petty in the extreme to penalise people undergoing this kind of trauma by forcing them to address this when it is a separate issue.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

- a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Eh?! Just what kind of protections are they supposed to require? There is hardly a risk of 'disapprovers' being forced into a same sex marriage. The question is a bit akin to asking if carnivores should have protection from vegetarians. Those who 'object' to same sex marriages should try to learn to live and let live. Love for someone of you own sex has no more potential for harm than any other love. And no, I do not think registrars 'with concerns' should be allowed to opt out of their legal duties, once the law is changed. I am also completely out of sympathy with the 'concerns' of some of the clergy, but have no desire to force any individual to act against their conscience. Enough said.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrantI reply as a caring individual, rationalist, and humanist grandmother.

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I warmly welcome this bill as a sign of Scottish Government's commitment to developing a fairer and more equal society.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I strongly support the introduction of same sex marriage and wish to see marriage for same or opposite sex couples be considered to be the same thing in the eyes of the law and society. I accept the right of certain religious groups to only wish to perfor

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Marriage and civil partnership are not the same things in the eyes of the law or society. Only by offering marriage as an option to couples of all kinds, can we avoid discrimination. Couples already in civil partnerships who wish to marry, should be able to do so easily, regardless of where their civil partnership was registered. The Bill should be amended to avoid the creation of a peculiar situation and potential hardship for partners who would have to formally dissolve their civil partnership in order to marry.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support this move. I am in agreement with comments made by The Equality Network regarding amendments to the bill.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I agree that people should be able to decline to perform religious same-sex marriage ceremonies on the grounds of their own faith and beliefs, but that those religious bodies and individuals that wish to perform such ceremonies are also free to do so. I do not believe this should apply to civil marriages.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I think the Bill does not impinge on freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Redefining marriage is costly and unnecessary, it was not in any party’s manifesto and the public have not voted to do so. There is nothing to say it will give gay couples any additional rights to the current civil partnership and will fundamentally alter an ancient institution which stretches further back than the Scottish nation itself or any formal religious institution. Undermining the definition of marriage as between one man and one woman will have far reaching consequences, not least on its stable framework within which the raising of children has been shown to be most favorable. I fear that this may be the thin end of the wedge when it comes to legalising other issues such as polygamy.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
See Q5.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I worry that churches and celebrants who refuse to marry a same sex couple will face litigation, as article 9 has not shown itself to be particularly strong in cases against other rights. Conscience clauses should be introduced for both faith based charities and those in employment, particularly public sector workers, who refuse to endorse same sex marriage, including preventing employers disputing equality and diversity credentials of employees who refuse to endorse same sex marriage, foster or adoption patents discriminated because of traditional views on marriage and teachers who refuse to teach about it or parents who wish their children to be kept from lessons teaching it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill does not address this issue of how it will protect the rights of those expressing their belief that same sex marriage is wrong. Those of us expressing disagreement are already experiencing difficulties and safeguards need to be put in place to support those holding this view to be able to express it freely. The equality law has created a culture of fear and has made it easy for some people to label any disagreement with same sex marriages as bigoted.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Love is love no one has any right to tell anyone anything otherwise

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
People can say what they want - doing something and imposing and focusing is another.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

no

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

i fully support the equal marriage bill. i do however support the rights of the church to refuse to conduct same sex marriage

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

i fully support this movement

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

https://www.surveymonkey.com/i/t.gif

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

i feel this should be redone. i.e if you are part of a civil partnership marriage should be applied for as civil partnership is a joke.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

opposite sex couples have this right so same sex couples deserve this right

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

i believe this should be dissolved and re aplication would be required

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

how can it effect you gay people have been in society freely for years no one is being forced to perform these marriages.. do what my church did change the constitution to suit but just because you dont like it doesnt make it wrong... we have moved from slavery and have given black, Asian, Chinese, Japanese people rights and it was once seen as the norm to abuse people in a slavery role... it is 2013 we are all human beings one family from one god.... as a gay Christian i'm not saying i want to marry my partner tomorrow but when the time is right i would expect to have the same rights as Adam and eve not made to feel sub human because im adam and hes steve

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individuala gay christian

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group
a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Teacher

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I feel it should be everyone’s right to receive equal treatment and that should include equal access to marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

I’m not certain whether everyone with a civil partnership would wish for it to be converted to a marriage? If there is a benefit or preference for civil partnership, I think both should be equally available to people of any sexual orientation or identification.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

I don’t really have an opinion on this.
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Definitely in support of this - I have heard of some very distressing situations where couples are unable to get married or to stay married due to the gender reassignment of one or other of the couple.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I fail to see what protection is due to people whose closed-minded attitudes are intended to prevent others in our society from having equal rights. I am a straight, married person - other than my belief that everyone deserves equal treatment, I can't see that it'll make the slightest difference to me or have the slightest impact on me whether everyone has equal access to marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Marriage should be available to all

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Allowing same sex marriage is not going to bring the world to an end
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition
This goes against EVERY principle and decency known to mankind.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
Disgusted. There is no need to continue with this issue. They already have Civil Rights.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition
Opposed.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition
This will put those who oppose the solemnising of same sex marriage under pressure to conform.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
Unnecessary.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition
As long as it doesn't interfere with those of Religious Beliefs and that they will not be expected to bow to pressure to preform these ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

You cannot class these in the same league.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

These will put people in the public domain in a position whereby they may lose their jobs because they refuse to promote same sex anything. This will lead to persecution and vilification of people who do not support and condone these practises. No one should be put in that position. There is only 3 per cent of the population who want this and as far as I am concerned this is a complete and utter waste of tax payers money and the governments time when there are other more important and relevant issues to be looked at and dealt with.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We are supposed to live in a free and democratic society, but when it comes to issues like this being rammed down the throats of people who clearly do not want this then we have to start looking at the policies of this Parliament. This would lead to people who do not agree being sued and prosecuted for this opinions and stances because they will not agree to perform a ceremony, not allow a couple to stay in the same room in a Bed and Breakfast or Hotel, there a Priest or Vicar does not consent to perform a wedding ceremony or a school teacher will not teach of this issue. There are a lot of reasons to suppose that there will be less freedom of speech in the future.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

They do not need to be 'recognised' by marriage. They are just raising their fist in the face of convention and decency. They will be expecting to be able to adopt children, which has already happened. What implications and effect do you think this will have on these children in the long term? Talk about being confused about gender and their sexuality, which could lead to long term issues that one seems to have considered.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We are made in Gods image, and God loves all his children equally. The LGBT community does not want special treatment. They want equal treatment. We respect the privacy of what goes on behind closed doors in other peoples lives and wish for the same respect in return.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Not everyone subscribes to a particular religious faith as I do, but I have to express my belief in a Creator who laid down the fundamental laws about human life, fundamental for most religions and many millions of no particular faith. Like millions of Scots before me, I hold to the belief that marriage is not only for love but for the creation of new life. Contraception has broken that connection, but same-sex marriages will not create new life, but will depend on heterosexual couples to provide the children they may desire. In that sense, same-sex marriage is a dead end for the healthy regeneration of our society.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I also oppose this law because I want to to head off the further developments which are already being spoken about such as polyamoury (previously called polygamy) - on Monday the BBC News webpage had a long article on two men and two women who lived toge

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

I think that the dignity of marriage and the seriousness it deserves call for a limit on the kind of weddings people have. Marriage is trivialised by that and over-the-top extravagant celebrations which do not cement the relationship as is evidenced by al
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Why is Parliament intending to pass a law which will benefit so few and at the same time bring genuine fear to huge numbers of parents, teachers, and people in their work situation? Parliament is not supposed to create alarm. It is meant to maintain harmony in society. This issue has yet to be addressed with any seriousness. There is serious prejudice at work here. People have already lost their jobs, even before the legislation has been passed, over expressing their firmly held religious beliefs about marriage. We are moving into a new type of existence which it is not exaggerated to describe as totalitarian. You will no longer be free to express publicly your belief that the Creator laid down the basic ground rules about marriage. Parliament will decide what marriage is. Is this really what Parliament is for? I liken this to Parliament decreeing that the earth is flat. Parliament can imprison us all for insisting that the earth is round, but it will still be round! It has been that shape since as far back as anyone can remember and it would be very stupid for Parliament to pretend otherwise. So also with marriage: it has been a certain shape since as far back as anyone can remember. They cannot change the shape of marriage anymore than they can change the shape of the earth. They can decree all they like, but it will not change what the Creator Himself decreed long time ago. This is an issue of conscience. The legislation does not respect conscience. You will be breaking the law if you abide by your conscience in this matter. That is what is at stake. Is that the kind of country we will have for the future?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

As a priest I have always told my people that they should always treat others with respect. In the particular matter of homosexual and lesbian people I have stressed the need to avoid cruel or unkind behaviour, to protect their dignity, and to help them f

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebranta faith/belief local group or congregation
a private individual
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

Civil partnerships seem very based in legality. There is little talk of love or commitment or of the couples relationship.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

This would entirely be between the couples and celebrant. If religious organisations are welling to allow ceremonies to take place in religious premises then then they should be allowed to marry wherever possible for different sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither
This would purely be a question for the couples.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I find it hard to believe that anyone would require protection from same sex marriages

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither
I don't relly understand this question. As far as I am concerned anyone employed by the state who can legally celebrate a marriage must do so for all legal marriages. Celebrants who are not employed by the state should have the right to refuse to celebrat

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither
See my comments on previous questions.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Obviously, they have a right to remain uninvolved, but they do not have a right to dictate the actions of others based solely on some belief or other such as a religious belief (for beliefs are not facts) even if they are part of a hierarchy in an organisation to which the potential celebrant belongs. Same sex marriage, for the moment, must remain an issue for the individuals own private conscience - in EVERY circumstance.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is already severely curtailed in this country. One must take care not to limit it any further.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

It is an opportunity for Scotland to show that it is an equal, fair, tolerant and compassionate country

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Couples should have equality, regardless of sexual orientation. If marriage is such a 'desirable' institution then it should be available to everyone.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Belief celebrants should not be discriminated against simply because they do not share the religious views of other celebrants

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Couples should have the same choice of ceremony regardless of sexuality and not be discriminated against.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

If that is what a couple want, it should be allowed

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Registrars should have parity with other celebrants so that couples have equal choice.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Celebrants should not be compelled to perform ceremonies to which they have an objection. this should not apply to registrars who should be compelled to perform all ceremonies which are recognised by law. they are government employees and should conform to policy

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I think it is vital that this bill goes through and makes same sex couples equal in all aspects to heterosexual couple.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

But I believe that if the church chooses to carry out same sex marriages they should be free to do so.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
They should not be allowed to enforce their beliefs on me, as I should not be allowed to enforce my beliefs on them. If they don't believe in gay marriage then they don't need to attend one, engage in one nor carry one out, they have the choice to do this. At the moment we don't have any choice.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

No

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither
Not sure what this actually means

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I don't believe that anyone should need to be protected from anything that has nothing whatsoever to do with them.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I fully support the introduction of marriage for same sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Permitting same sex marriage does not affect traditionally-recognised heterosexual marriage. I personally see no grounds for concern about enacting legislation to legalise same sex marriage in Scotland. Same sex couples should have equal opportunities to legally express partnerships.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I support the right of religious celebrants to opt out of performing same-sex marriages if it goes against their personally held beliefs, however I do not support any employee of a public body (ie registrar) from performing a civil same-sex marriage, nor

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

I believe there should be the option of both civil partnerships and marriages for same-sex couples and for mixed-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

I believe that religious marriages for same-sex couples should also be available in religious premises as well as other venues when agreed upon by those involved

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Transgender people should be fully recognised as the gender that they identify as.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't believe any religious establishments should be forced to perform same-sex marriages; other than that people are entitled to their beliefs but the rights of same-sex couples or transgender people should not be infringed upon because of negative views of others. Ultimately, those people will not be affected by same-sex and transgender people being granted rights that all citizens deserve.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

civil partnerships should be available for mixed-sex couples too. gender recognition should not require the spouses approval. any couple choosing to marry should be able to choose the language used, e.g. all people should be granted the ability to use gender-neutral language if they choose. couples who have entered into a civil partnership outside of Scotland, who then move to Scotland, should be allowed to marry in Scotland as those who formed a civil partnership in Scotland are able to do.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

20 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
N/A
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

N/A

Are you responding as...

an academic

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Are we all equal, or are those who believe in certain things (or not) privileged to have different rules to the rest of society? The Scottish Parliament must take a stand for total equality for all those who live in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Are we all equal, or are those who believe in certain things (or not) privileged to have different rules to the rest of society? The Scottish Parliament must take a stand for total equality for all those who live in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Are we all equal, or are those who believe in certain things (or not) privileged to have different rules to the rest of society? The Scottish Parliament must take a stand for total equality for all those who live in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Are we all equal, or are those who believe in certain things (or not) privileged to have different rules to the rest of society? The Scottish Parliament must take a stand for total equality for all those who live in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Are we all equal, or are those who believe in certain things (or not) privileged to have different rules to the rest of society? The Scottish Parliament must take a stand for total equality for all those who live in Scotland.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Are we all equal, or are those who believe in certain things (or not) privileged to have different rules to the rest of society? The Scottish Parliament must take a stand for total equality for all those who live in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Are we all equal, or are those who believe in certain things (or not) privileged to have different rules to the rest of society? The Scottish Parliament must take a stand for total equality for all those who live in Scotland.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I have 'concerns' about same sex marriage: I am concerned that those who wish to have a same sex marriage need 'protecting' from anti equality groups, who do not see all individuals as equal in the eyes of the law and of society. I would also love to know who phrased this question, and what they were implying by it!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Every question put in this survey has the same issue at its heart...are we all equal, or are those who believe in certain things (or not) privileged to have different rules to the rest of society? The Scottish Parliament must take a stand for total equal

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

This Bill is a diversion of parliament’s attention away from many pressing and important issues. It is sadly symptomatic of the Scottish political readiness to pander to political correctness rather than tackle these issues. With both homosexual and heterosexual partnerships currently recognised and having equal legal rights, this bill is unnecessary and divisive. It is merely an attempt to eradicate any distinctive form of positive heterosexual identity in society. This also sets the scene for further redefinition in future - whether the government intends this or not - as can be seen with attempts to recognise polygamy in North America and recognition of three-person relationships in the Netherlands.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I think that this is a supreme piece of unnecessary illogic. The whole thing is geared to weaken marriage, not strengthen it. When marriage is the committed, publicly declared relationship of a man and a woman bringing up any children they might have, it is absurd to say that it will be strengthened by the “equal marriageâ€” where one gender is excluded, fidelity is of lesser importance, any children involved are intentionally deprived of either a mother or father in the home, and any distinct reference to male-female complementarity is branded as the forefront of intolerance.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I’m glad that it is finally considered that wider protections are required at all. Churches and charities are almost certainly going to face litigation, either on grounds of sexual orientation or gender discrimination. This has already happened to the Church of England. These sorts of cases will eventually end up at the European Court of Human Rights, where we can already see that freedom of conscience only applies to certain consciences. Opt-out should be available — atheists are not compelled to oversee religious or faith activities, health practitioners are not compelled to participate in abortions. I understand that Scottish teachers, as those in England, will be at risk of dismissal if they refuse to promote same-sex marriage. There have already been cases where others in public service posts — in Strathclyde Police, Trafford Housing Trust, the Citizen’s Advice Bureau — have been dismissed, demoted or disciplined for expressing views of marriage as being between one man and one woman, outwith their employment, before any changes were made in law. The Scottish Government believes human rights law protects against any charity from losing its status on the basis of supporting marriage. We have already been in this situation with adoption agencies — these assurances would appear to be worth little.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Statute must be made clear that disagreeing with same-sex marriage or homosexual relations is not a breach of equality or human rights laws. Additionally it should be clearly made illegal to bring actions against people for such disagreement.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I believe that the principle of reasonable accommodation for belief or conscience should be followed by employers and public bodies. To this end, Parliament should seek the amendment of the Equality Act 2010 by Westminster and do so before attempting to

Are you responding as...

a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Don't understand the question. Don't see why anyone with "concerns" requires any "protection".
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

20 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The only issue I see is for those conducting same sex marriages. If it is against such a person's own beliefs to conduct such a marriage then they should be allowed to... personally elect not to do so. I believe this is covered in the option to "Opt In" if you wish to conduct such marriages.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I do not see the need for such a Bill to be promulgated without proper and thorough debate. It was not mentioned in any of the parties' manifestos prior to the elections. All legal rites are available in civil partnership legislation and there is no clear evidence that the majority of the people in Scotland want marriage to be redefined.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

For hundreds if not thousands of years marriage has been inextricably connected with the continuation of the human species through the procreation and education of children, which by their very nature involve the union of a man and a woman. Any attempt to redefine the nature of marriage would be tantamount to defining the earth as flat. It would be impractical to remove procreation from the definition of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I would be against such an arrangement since the provision of civil partnerships renders such arrangements unnecessary. It also opposes the teaching of my Church.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

The change is unnecessary since all legal provisions are already in place for such couples.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

Again, I do not understand the question

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I would have grave concerns about any protection being promised to those with concerns about same sex marriage, given the protection promised to faith group adoption agencies who opposed same sex adoption due to religious beliefs. I fear that any promises of protection for those who oppose same sex marriage on religious grounds would be unable to be fulfilled in law.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I thought that this country prided itself on the right of individual to freedom of speech, but increasingly Christians are being suffering reprisals for merely expressing their opinion, e.g. Adrian Smith, housing manager at Trafford House Trust being penalised for expressing is opinion BEFORE any law was promulgated.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I feel there are too many issues, as yet unforeseen, that will emerge if this Bill is promulgated without proper and lengthy debate and consultation.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The plan to redefine marriage is 'radical' and 'unprecedented'. Marriage as we know it, between one man and one woman, predates law, nation and church. Therefore, to change, radically, the meaning of marriage (by redefining it in law) leaves the church, and especially Christians who believe the Bible, open to various forms of prosecution. You need to make allowance in legislation for the difference between the proposed new dictionary definition of marriage and the Biblical definition. This seems only fair and just. (There are at least 12 cases to date where Christians were censured, demoted or forced to resign because of their beliefs). This is unbelievable in a democratic country! Once you start redefining marriage it can open a can of worms. In Canada and some US states, where marriage has been redefined, attempts have been made to legalise polygamy. In Brazil, a three-way relationship was given marriage-like recognition. Similarly, the same is true of the Netherlands.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Although certain protections may be put in place for churches and celebrants who refuse to 'marry' same-sex couples, they will still be susceptible to litigation. In England, a homosexual couple are already planning to go to court to force the Church of England to host gay weddings. (Christian Post, August 2nd 2013). Ultimately, this matter may be decided by the European Court of Human Rights. Therefore, any protections in Scottish law could be overturned, which is totally unsatisfactory. You are willing to make radical changes to the state of marriage, yet few positive laws to protect a sizeable number of Christians and those of other faiths in this country, who still believe in traditional marriage. Article 9 which details the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, 'has not' been upheld in the European Court of Human Rights, where there is conflict between Article 9 and other rights. There needs to be a ‘conscience objection clause’ for people who work in the public and private sector. Already employees have been penalised for having a traditional view of marriage. The law allows for doctors and nurses to opt-out of abortions if they conscientiously object to it. Similarly, registrars should be exempt from solemnising same-sex marriage if it goes against their conscience. While the law requires schools to provide religious education, it also protects atheist teachers from being compelled to teach it. Similar protection should be given to teachers who, for religious convictions or otherwise, do not wish to teach about same-sex marriage. Also, the law should protect parents' rights to withdraw their children from classes when same-sex marriage lessons are taught.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The Government's Bill does not address free speech. 'Clause 14' has not prevented workers in the public sector from being censured and penalised. More defined safeguards in law are needed to ensure that no person will be compelled to express agreement with same-sex marriage or be punished for expressing their disagreement with it. People who support the long-standing law of marriage are now being accused of discrimination. Adrian Smith, a housing manager in Trafford, was demoted for 'gross misconduct' after a colleague complained when he described same-sex marriage in church as 'an equality too far'. (The Daily Mail, 24th October 2011). The Rev Brian Ross was removed from his post as a Police Chaplain because he disagreed with gay marriage on his personal internet blog. Strathclyde Police said that the Rev Brian Ross could hold his beliefs in private, but publically expressing them was a breach of their equality and diversity policy. (The Daily Telegraph, 1st March 2013). There are obviously different views on the issue of what marriage constitutes. For thousands of years it has clearly been between one man and one woman. Hundreds of thousands of people hold to the historic and long-standing definition of marriage in this country, which is a belief worthy of respect in a democratic society. In theory, religion or belief is a protected characteristic that should be defended under the equality law. But, it practice, the equality law has been used to create a culture in which people feel that perfectly legitimate views can no longer be aired because of threats to their jobs and safety. (Elaine Smith MSP, who voted against same-sex marriage to represent the view of her constituents, was vilified and subjected to personal attacks). She said, "Speaking against the redefinition of marriage in modern Scotland, sadly, leads to verbal attacks which seems to be an attempt to shut down debate and intimidate opponents". (The Herald, Tuesday, 18th June 2013). This is indeed, shocking! She is one of the few brave MSPs who believes in being truthful, and appropriately representing her constituents.

I cannot help but feel that this blatant disregard for the voting public which is overwhelmingly in favour of traditional marriage, will have a great impact on the results in the coming SNP election for independence. Because the SNP government refused an electoral vote on same-sex marriage, bandying numbers about those in favour of this by The Equality Network's director, Tim Hopkins, is totally unproductive. (The Herald, 18 June 2013). The Independence Vote in September 2014 will speak for itself!

To protect the right to free speech and debate, 'specific amendments' are necessary. They need to cover public order and equality laws, including employment, goods and services. Both public and private employees need to feel free to voice their opinions when discussing 'same-sex' marriage without the underlying threat of being penalised.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

I do not think that same-sex marriage is a necessary or logical step in acknowledging the rights of those in the LGBT community. Civil partnerships have made it clear that the state recognises the their status and civil rights; in addition, the law protects individuals and groups from discrimination. Same sex marriage will break the tradition of acknowledging the complementary nature of male/female relationships and the greater benefit to society in general of stable family life where children have both a mother and a father.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am very concerned about the implications for those who work for public bodies e.g. teachers and who do not believe in same sex marriage or that homosexual and heterosexual relationships are of the same moral validity. I believe that the right of free speech and conscience should be recognised so that no-one will be prosecuted for expressing their private opinion on these matters - unlike as in the case of Mr. Ross, former Chaplain to Strathclyde Fire Service.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I think it is a fundamental right in civilised society and should be recognised in relation to the issue of same sex marriage. I am particularly concerned about teachers who disagree with same sex marriage (I was a teacher myself).

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Just as in the case of other equality issues e.g. gender, race, disability, it should be acknowledged that equality does not mean sameness. The distinctive relationship between a man and a woman (relating to complementarity of the sexes and to the possibi

Are you responding as...

a private individual
Former member of the teaching profession

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition
I am opposed to Bill on Biblical grounds, it is not a political issue, it is a moral and religious issue.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
Marriage is defined in the Bible as between a man and a woman, there is no other definition. It is for the purpose of building the family, society, the school the church. The family institution was created before any other including the State and the Church. This Bill potentially destroys one of society's important foundations.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition
The marriage between a man and a woman is founded on Scripture not on the state or the church; Same sex marriage is not, it is unnatural. For my part I will never authorise it in my premises or outside them

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
Gay rights are all included in the civil partnerships. I would remind you that many in the Gay community do not support this Bill they are happy with civil partnerships, many of them see this legislation as a distraction.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition
My views on this are stated above.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

My reasons for opposition are ground on the Bible.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

As above.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Apart from the moral issue which is the most important, if this Bill becomes law it will have a huge knock on effect involving civil liberties not just for churches and ministers. What about the work place Care Homes and schools etc those who work in the public sector, and parents who object on the grounds of a Christian conscience who do not wish their children to be taught that same sex marriage is normal. I am all in favour of protects if the Bill becomes law. However I am of the view despite whatever protections are in place, will be challenged in the courts and particularly in Brussels and the Court of Human Rights, any protections the Government will put in place will be overturned there.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

If the Bill becomes law the true christian church will not be silent on this matter. I believe also that many outside the christian church will not be silent. This aggressive minority who are pushing this legislation and Gay rights will not succeed because conscencious christians and others who are not christian also have their human rights.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
a faith/belief local group or congregation
a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage is an ancient institution which has always been defined as a specific union between a man and a woman. The physical complementarity in the union of a man and a woman, for the purposes of procreation, points towards a deeper spiritual truth that calls each human being to an even more fruitful and life-giving union with a source of love and wisdom, which all generations and cultures until only very recently, have been able to discover in many and diverse ways. This history, if not this wisdom, should at the very least be respected. It would seem imprudent and callous to demolish the particular institution of marriage which for good reason has always specified the particular union between a man and a woman, especially since civil partnerships already affords legal equality for same sex couples. Marriage between a man and a woman, is the foundation of the family, which is the basic building block of civil and moral life. This building block upon which society depends is already vulnerable because of a consumerist mentality that ill-defines true freedom and happiness. The cost of this in economic terms alone, to our education and health systems (not to mention our prison system) is already evident. Redefining "marriage" will undoubtedly pave the way for the further disintegration and fragmentation of society, which will have immense repercussions for all.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

I am in opposition of the term "marriage" being used with respect to the union between same-sex couples. However, since a "civil marriage ceremony" between a man and a woman is not in itself a religious ceremony, I have no objection to such ceremonies taking place anywhere.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am extremely concerned that Churches and celebrants who refuse to marry same-sex couples will be susceptible to litigation. Freedom of thought, conscience and religion are fundamental and inalienable rights of the human person and should be respected and protected as such. The human rights of individuals and organisations who are pro-marriage, should not be undermined and forced out of the public domain. Those who work in the public domain must not have their diversity or equality credentials disputed or questioned by employers, on the basis that they disagree with the definition of "marriage" being extended to same-sex couples.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I feel very concerned that the rights of those holding views which oppose same sex marriage are being undermined. Within the public domain, there already seems to exist a culture of fear whereby those expressing traditional views with regards to marriage are deemed bigoted and threatened with disciplinary proceedings under the equality law. The right to freely and publicly express opposition to same sex marriage without fear of repercussion and punishment needs to be safeguarded and clearly articulated and upheld especially by public employers.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

does not apply

Are you responding as...

a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

As far as 'rights' are concerned, same sex relationships already have equality in law. Under the interpretation of 'Equality', this Act is seeking to change the understanding of Marriage held by the great majority, to satisfy the paranoia of a small group of militants for whom this campaign is really their religion.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

'Marriage' has in the great majorities of nations and cultures involved the voluntary commitment of a man and woman to a permanent bond. creating a family within which children can be reared and nurtured. Stable families are the building bricks of society. By this Act and applying the term 'marriage' to a whole range of relationships you are not enhancing the meaning of the word, but making it meaningless.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Undertakings by Government to recognise that persons who through conscience and belief do not concur with the institution and promotion of 'same-sex marriage' will be protected, do not seem to have any substance. 'Equality' has become a new god before which all attitudes, practices and even thoughts are being asked to bow. Just as Russian science was set back years by accepting wholesale Lamarck's understanding and hypotheses, so is this rush into legislative change. Government will make promises, knowing full well that they will be over-ruled by the interference of the European Court of Human Rights.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The Bible (Romans Ch1) makes the point that the proliferation of same-sex practices is a punishment on Societies and individuals. The manner in which this Act by a stroke has deprived whole words and concepts of their basic meaning (eg 'husband' and 'wife') demonstrates how far madness has already penetrated our nation. God help us.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The situations envisaged by George Orwell in "1984' are being played out for real in our beloved country in 2013.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Marriage definition should not be changed. Changing the law about marriage is another issue that takes government time and taxpayers money to try to satisfy only the few from gay lobby.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I strongly do not agree that same sex couples should be able to marry. I believe marriage is only between man and woman, by the definition. The definition of marriage should not be changed. Marriage has immense, deep meaning and role in society. Same sex couples do not fulfill that meaning.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There is a lot of people that do not agree with same sex marriage however it seems that nowadays their voice is not important - more - their opinions are commented as homophobic or intolerant. People are afraid to speak to support traditional marriage in places of work or in public places as it can lead to difficulties or even losing their job... That makes a farce from freedom of speech and believes. There is existing gay lobby that is disrespectful to majority of people and their opinion about marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is not provided for everyone. People with traditional beliefs about marriage are in practice not supported and not protected. Their opinions are marginalised.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The Bill about same sex marriage was not consulted properly with wide society. I think there should be referendum done about it. Amongst my friends and acquaintance there is only a few that would agree with the Bill.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I find this question puzzling. Those with concerns about same sex marriage should certainly not marry someone of the same sex. Other than that what "protection" could possibly be required?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
No

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
No

Are you responding as...
a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Very comprehensive and much needed

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
As a gay person I would love to have the chance to marry my partner, instead of being relegated to civeil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Opt-in procedures are a good idea - everyone can then adhere to their own beliefs.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Good for those who want it - those who want to stay in a civil partnership should be allowed to

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

While I do support this, I am concerned about the issue of a trans* person having to gain consent from their partner before being able to fully transition. You can get a new job, move house or have a child legally without asking your spouse - why is their

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

We are very supportive, particularly as our house in England is currently on the market so that we can move to Scotland to live. We want to live in a country where our marriage is fully recognised, irrespective of the fact that one party to our marriage has obtained gender recognition under English law (our marriage having been registered in England). We do think certain aspects of the Bill affecting trans people could be improved. In saying this, please note that we were the lead couple in raising the issue of pension penalties imposed by the UK parliament Bill upon the spouses of trans people obtaining gender recognition within marriage, and in persuading the UK government to relent on this point, which will of course also benefit such couples in Scotland. See 7 and 11 below.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

About time too.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

To do otherwise would be contrary to the right to freedom from discrimination arising from religion AND BELIEF (although we do not personally accept that it is appropriate to discriminate against people just because of the religion or belief one holds).

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

We do not personally accept that discrimination against same sex marriage on grounds of religion is appropriate and see problems where members and celebrants in a church or other organised religion wish to conduct a same sex marriage contrary to the tenet

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
We agree entirely and personally think that it would make more sense to have a single institution of marriage, rather than parallel legal relationships of marriage and civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Is there not supposed to be just one, single institution of marriage? All marriages are civil and the religious are entitled to put their own religious spin on their marriage, which nevertheless remains a civil marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

If civil partnerships are to continue, then religious and other believers ought to be able to enter into them in the context of their own faith or belief. To allow otherwise would contravene their freedom of religion or belief.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

We have waited over a decade for this following the appalling marriage bar on gender recognition introduced by the Gender Recognition Act in 2003. We will personally remedy this under English law at the earliest available opportunity and wish to see the s

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Speaking as a couple at whom such 'protections' may allow people to discriminate against us, we totally disagree with such protections. If they must exist, they should be tightly confined to the practice of the religion seeking to discriminate and NOT allowed to leak into the public sphere, for example in the delivery of any services delivered to the general public, such as registrars, or health services.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...
a private individual

20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

This is completely unnecessary, a total distraction from really important matters. Marriage is between a man and a woman. Same sex couples have civil partnerships. This issue has been raised by a minority group who just want to cause a fuss. It's a waste of time and money.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Education guidance from the Scottish Government says schools should teach about the importance of marriage. What happens in the case of same sex marriage? As a Christian teacher, I could not teach that same sex marriage is acceptable or right. According to expert legal advice, a teacher who fails to endorse same sex marriage could be dismissed. The law protects atheist teachers from being compelled to teach RE. so teachers who for religious convictions or otherwise do not feel able to teach about same sex marriage should also be protected.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We should all have the right to free speech and debate. I do not feel free to state my belief in traditional marriage as the 'noisy minority' will not allow me to. I feel extremely intimidated when shouted down and ridiculed. Many people feel the same way as I do and, for this reason, have not expressed their views.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Equality is very important and needs to have whole UK united for matters like marriage

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
xxxAll arguments have been outlined ion UK Parliament.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Public employees should carry out government policy

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Not affected by this except those of extreme views

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
I believe that everyone should have an equal right to marry regardless of their sexual identity and that all unions should be recognised equally.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I am in favour of the introduction of same sex marriage but only if it is treated equally to opposite sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition
I don't think anyone's personal beliefs should take preference over a person's right to marry.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I believe all civil partnerships should automatically be recognised as a marriage if the law is passed.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't believe there should be any protections in place, it is a personal choice to follow a religion and society shouldn't have to protect people because of something they have chosen to believe.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I do not believe the Government has any right to redefine marriage between a man and a woman. I have no problem with same sex couples having a civil partnership but to use the term marriage is wrong. Marriage is already defined in the New Testament and as a Christian country (last time I checked) we have no authority to change that!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage is between a man and a woman as it has always been. I have no problem with a same sex couple having a civil partnership but to use the term married is wrong and will confuse many people.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

The Government has no right to call same sex partnerships 'marriage' as marriage has already been defined.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Marriages already take place in various venues, so whether a marriage between men and women or a civil partnership should be able to hold them in a suitable venue.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

Forget the religious part.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

I have no thoughts one way or another on this particular subject.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The obvious Religious aspect could cause great offence to many Christians who believe as already mentioned that marriage is defined in the New Testament in the Bible. Changes to that stance cold result in confusion in schools. Impressionable teenagers growing up believing its ok to be Gay or whatever especially if they are quiet or shy and may think they are different. Will 'Normal' marriage disappear in time? Will people who are against same sex marriage be bullied, ostracized, be removed from jobs etc? There are so many 'maybe's'. The fact you use the word 'Protections' in itself causes concern. So I still remain against Same Sex Marriage!!!!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

What freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The wider issue I am concerned about is the fact that Government is planning on the redefining of Marriage to allow any combination of people to get married! I find the idea total anathema. If Scotland is a Christian Country (please advise me if I am wrong) then the definition of marriage is laid out clearly in the New Testament in St Matthew. Civil Partnerships between same sex couples I have no problem with as many of them are indeed nice people and loving to one another but to use the term Marriage is to far!!!

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Why are gay people not satisfied that they have equality under law, why do they want to attack God and his ways and violate his laws even more? Their actions are an offense to God, making a mockery of his institution. It is funny how this society actively mocks Christianity: OMG is offensive to God and to any true Christian. If I were to say "oh my mohammad" or "oh my kristna" or "oh my budha" or "oh for shiva’s sake", I would be taken to court. If I were to offend the gay community, I would be charged and maybe sitting in a cell, but it is ok for the gay community to make a complete and utter mockery of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Where people get married is not the issue and it may even be helpful to have marriages where the registrar can not make it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition
As God is in opposition to civil partnerships then I cannot support the religious registration of civil partnerships. Civil partnerships should provide the legal equality to satisfy a persons rights.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Straight people are supposedly not allowed to have an opinion as it has to be prejudicial. This is a cop out to prevent anyone from objecting. This is fear tactics used by bullies to frighten people into silence. It is basically a cruel attempt at victimising people for their beliefs because it goes against a minority of the population alternative beliefs. It is very much like Hitler’s movements: if you don’t agree you will be dealt with. Why should the state become an accomplish in destroying good people’s lives, losing their jobs or even going to jail because they have beliefs that existed for thousands of years: these rights should be protected from minorities who shout out loud.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech has to be put into context and not be used to bully and condemn good people. There should be debate not criminal conviction or job loss. This is similar to the witch hunts of our countries past; burn good people to strengthen the cause.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
Individuals who are in a loving relationship regardless of their sex should be granted the same rights as everyone else. If these couples want to commit their lives together the state should recognise these equally. Love is love and there is no difference between straight and gay couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
As long as the legal system treats all couples equally, that is fine. Religion has too much 'so called' say in the matter. As an atheist, I would like to be represented by my government, which is grounded in proper democratic processes.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
It's about time. In 50 years we'll look back on this time and wonder why we didn't do it sooner.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Same sex couples should be recognised on equal grounds as opposite sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Good. Religious ceremonies not for everyone anyway.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
I'm not sure what this means.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I think these types of folk need support and compassion during a time like that. It must be very hard. I'd support whatever was in their best interests.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

They don't need protection. They need to be educated about same sex couples to take the fear out of it for them. As society becomes more tolerant, younger generations will hopefully help to reduce the need for 'protection' as people realise it is just the way some people are. The only ones who need protection are religious groups. They need to know it has nothing to do with them. People are still going to be gay and live openly in this world. They need to be encouraged to accept it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It's what makes me proud to be British. It's very important.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I can't think of any good reason to be against it, but I'm sure you've heard all the arguments again and again. I will tell you a story, though: there's a couple I know. One of them was American, one had moved to America but not with permanent residence. They fell in love. Eventually, the latter was due to leave the country; he'd stay, except that because they couldn't get married, he couldn't. They moved to Canada so they could stay together. Don't you think it would have been better if they could have stayed where they wanted?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

It's simple: equal rights for all. This shouldn't even need to be politicised. Anyone opposing this is doing so purely based on their own intolerant views but who would never be affected adversely by this.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
As above. There is no good reason they shouldn't get married.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

Question is worded weirdly...We live in a secular society. I would like to keep it that way.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Equal rights for all.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Would surely tidy things up and save bother of straight people requesting rights to civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Of course!
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I can't think who this would prove useful to but sure why not?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Of course. What, you would revoke their marriage based on something so personal? Please.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Those who oppose it don't need protection - they need to take a long hard look at themselves.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Censorship on the Internet is becoming too frequent. We need to realise distinction between hate speech that actually invites violence or harm and people who just offend others. Offending people doesn't physically harm them. I regularly offend religious people. Their arms don't fall off, they just get hurt feelings.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
In a modern society the commitment made through law should not be undermined if not carried out in a religious institution.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
The civil partnership law was piecemeal and many people would want to have the equity afforded to heterosexual couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
People should be allowed to practice their faith and marry in this if they choose.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Support this on the basis that marriage is between a man and a woman

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Any person and organisation (business or charity) should be free to operate without a fear of litigation if they believe in and promote the traditional marriage definition i.e between one man and one woman
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The Bill should make it clear, in unequivocal terms, that everyone is free to express support for traditional marriage and disapproval of "same sex marriage" without fear of litigation and impediment to follow their chosen career path. A retrospective clause should be inserted into the Civil Partnership legislation to ensure that there is no discrimination against those who cannot reconcile their conscience to agree with same sex unions.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am a teacher now in retirement. In the earlier part of my career, I taught all age groups in Primary School and latterly was a Senior Teacher, my pupils being children with special needs right up to school leaving age. If passed into law, there is no doubt that schools will be flooded with material designed to convince pupils of an impressionable age that same sex marriage is perfectly fine. Teachers who wish to teach the nature of the time honoured institution and its benefits to society as a whole, and who disapprove of same sex marriages or unions could find themselves, quite unjustly, in conflict with those authorities who claim same sex marriage is an equality issue. It is to be hoped that this Bill is not passed into Law, but if it is conscientious objectors must be protected.

Are you responding as...

a private individual
Please note my qualifications mentioned in 14

22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
contributes to demonstrating equality in civic Scotland

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
allows those with religious beliefs & those concerned with different grounds e.g. adultery between marriage & civil partnerships to have these resolved

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
again contributes to equality between secular/non-secular organisations

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
opt-in procedures should resolve concerns for those organisations wishing to avoid involvement but should not be extended to public service employees e.g. registrars as they should fully observe non-discriminatory practice

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
for those electing to choose marriage universality should apply same as those opposite sex couples who wish to elect civil partnership option

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
support couples right to choose venue
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

support right of religious organisations to voice opposition but not to halt universal rights of others

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

should also extend to transgender individuals

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

why the hell should someone be banned from marrying the person they love? there's no good reason for it! people are people, and love is love. there's no argument.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

no matter what, people should have the option. if someone still wants a partnership they should be able to have one

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

religion isn't a necessary part of marriage. I am of the belief that as a non believer, it would be disrespectful to people of faith for me to be married in their place of worship. there needs to be options for everyone

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

duh you can be both gay AND religious
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

being transgender doesn't mean you're suddenly not human. we face enough problems being transgender, we don't need laws breaking our marriages apart for simply being who we are. LOVE. IS. A. HUMAN. RIGHT.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

50 years ago people were picketing marriage between mixed race couples. now, we look back at them in shame. what do you think people will think of YOU in 50 years time?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

What does that even mean???

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

What the hell does all of that even mean? Just because you have a piece of paper saying 'I am no longer man but woman' doesn't change the metaphysical fact that what you are now is simply a badly deformed man or woman. Any likeness they would have to a man or a woman would be purely accidental (in the Aristotelian sense) and essentially (yet again, in the Aristotelian sense) they would still be the gender with which they were born.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There will be none. Regardless of what the government promises, there will be none. It will mark the end of religious freedom in our country and the end of western civilisation - a process which had its beginnings in the enlightenment and its careless and irrational abandonment of metaphysical principles which (as current times show) have massive implications for the way we live and order not only our personal lives but society as a whole.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Yet again, there is none. I know plenty of people who are scared that they might lose their job or get demoted just because they are out spoken against the governments proposals. This fear is not without precedence not only in this country, but around the world.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academica private individual
A Roman Catholic

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Fully support the introduction of same sex marriages

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
Once this is introduced where does it stop? It will lead to polygamy and other unnatural relationships. Children need a father and a mother and the result of the lack of this is already being seen in the behaviour of our youngsters growing up with single parents.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition
Ministers and churches should have the right in a democracy to choose whether they want to authorise a same sex marriage. Why do people who do not believe what churches preach want to get married in a church?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
Marriage is a special relationship between a man and woman. Rights are already provided for a civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Parents should know about same-sex marriage teaching in school and be allowed to withdraw their children from it Teachers also should have the right to refuse to teach it It should not be widely available on children’s programmes on TV and taken as norm when so many people object

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

This Bill is proving that it is difficult to have freedom of speech now. People are afraid to speak out and there is a threat to jobs etc if people do not conform or agree this surely needs amendments to the Bill to cover this

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

All the legal rights and privileges of marriage are already available to same-sex couples through civil partnerships. Therefore, it is unclear how the introduction of same-sex marriage will provide any real benefit to anyone. I question whether the redefinition of marriage is necessary, especially at a time when there are very real problems facing the people of Scotland. The Scottish Government should be focused on issues such as the economy, health and education, which, depending on whether they are handled well or badly, will have a real and tangible impact on the people of Scotland. I would rather the Government spent their time on these issues than on an issue that is both controversial and will not improve anyone’s quality of life or civil rights. I would also like to raise concerns about potential future changes to marriage law. If the definition of marriage can be changed in one way, it can potentially be changed in other aspects. In Canada and some US states, attempts have been made to legalise polygamy using the same arguments that are being used to support the same-sex marriage. In both Brazil and the Netherlands, three-way relationships have been given marriage-like recognition. This is deeply troubling, and raises the question of where we draw the line on what marriage is. Marriage has remained (more or less) constant throughout history as the lifelong commitment between one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others. To fundamentally shift on one aspect of this definition paves the way for other fundamental shifts, and the Government should be wary of setting an undesired precedent.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Ultimately, introducing same-sex marriage will put the civil rights of couples to marry against the right of others (especially religion and belief celebrants) to freedom of though, conscience and religion. No matter what protections are introduced, there is the possibility that the matter may be decided in the European Court of Human Rights, who have the authority to overrule the protections of Scottish law. There is a precedent in that court that the Article 9 right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion does not provide protection when there is conflict with other rights. This raises troubling questions of the ability of Scottish law to provide sufficient protections. The Government should be very aware of this in their decision making process – the redefinition of marriage may well have far-reaching and unintended consequences. Having said that, the law currently makes space for doctors to opt-out of abortions on grounds of conscience. Similar protections should be introduced for registrars to opt-out of solemnising same-sex marriages. Charities should not be stripped of their charitable status for disagreeing with same-sex marriage – this is particularly a concern for religious groups, who may well be put under pressure to 'marry' same-sex couples. Atheist teachers are permitted to opt-out of religious education, so similarly, teachers who hold a traditional view of marriage should be permitted to opt-out of teaching about same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

This is a crucial issue, because the expression of beliefs about marriage has already got people into trouble. For example, Adrian Smith was demoted for "gross misconduct" after a colleague complained when he described same-sex marriage in church as "an equality too far". There needs to be specific and robust protections of freedom of speech in this issue. There is currently no restriction on speaking in favour of same-sex marriage, so opponents, who are already often vilified, must be free to speak in opposition to it.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

No opposition, but unsure if this change is justified by demand.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Adequate protections seem to have been granted both to potential marriage celebrants, and to those worried about the effect on freedom of expression.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The Chapter 4 provisions seem to provide adequate protections.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I have concerns about the failure to redefine "adultery" within the Bill, as described in paragraphs 26-38 of the Explanatory Notes. I am of the opinion that sexual intercourse between one of the partners in a marriage and any person other than their spouse, regardless of gender, should be grounds for establishing irretrievable breakdown of a marriage. The application of the gender-specific definition of adultery to same-sex marriages is illogical and, in my view, does not give the full range of protections as for opposite-sex marriages.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Feel that love and Marriage has for so long been determined by dogmatic systems and society has changed on the whole, reasoning for opposition no longer applies and love is a natural occurrence that has no right to be dictated upon. A person falls in love with another and nature is what decides I do not feel that institutions such as christianity, local authority and parlaiment (humanity) have the right to decide what is natural. I feel people should be free to marry whom ever they love and or feel they can be committed to as a partnership.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Its about time, society cannot decide on such a personal experience and noone should be made to feel less than as this is degrading and cruel.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

I do not know what this is??? Maybe better education about the difference would help to ensure you get a proper answer about this one. I dont feel there is a difference faith is faith and spirituality is what counts nomatter where a person might find it wether it be with a belief celebrant or a religious celebrant.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Everyone should have a right to choose, always

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Equal fair opportunities for all

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

Just the same as Marriages

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
In 2013 every person should be equal & free to marry & love who they want.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
I think it should be down to individual religious places to decide whether they should conduct a service. No one should be forced to conduct something they don’t want to.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I support equality of marriage for all people gay or straight  I support better legislation to protect transgender people  I support civil partnerships for straight people

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I fully support same sex marriage and no difference between law for anybody

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

belief celebrants should be treated same as religious ones, we need a wider understanding of spirituality in this modern age, no one is right or wrong and noone should not be allowed to judge someone elses beliefs.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

celebrants should be able to marry who they want to, if it is against thier personal belief to marry gay couples they should not have to do so.However I do not like opt out clause for church to not be allowed to marry same sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

great idea all people should have option to marry someone they love and for that union to be treated as seriously and equally as straight people

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

all needs to be a bit more flexible, not to have such a divide between civil and religious marriage

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I support greater protection of the rights of transgender people

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

same sex marriage is of concern to the 2 people who love each other and not causing anyone else any harm. I think we need to embrace diversity, support equality of everyone and not pander to bigots who want to impose their beliefs onto how someone else should live their life.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

i support freedom of speech, what ever it is as long as it does not incite violence and hatred. I think there is a difference between having a different opinion and telling someone how to live their life. equality for LGBT people is essential to be written into law. if some people don't like it , tough.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
A welcome move forward to equality for all in this sphere.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
All humans of good standing must have equal rights.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
WHAT sort of question is this?! WHO devised it?! WHAT was their intention?! It smacks heavily of institutionalised religious bigotry. Have we not yet got beyond the archaic default position where the religious person is assumed to have superior rights to those of the non-religious?! Perhaps I should not be surprised when over half the population of Scotland can comfortably be assessed to be the latter and yet our Education Committees still have, BY LEGAL STATUTE, three non-elected ‘faith’ members with full voting rights. Will it take another Dreyfus Affair to separate Church and State in this backwoods?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Goes without saying.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Equality demands it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

In the cause of equality.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

No discrimination

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

They should work on their empathy skills and reflect that the world is not here for their especial benefit

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Not at this time. My views are in accordance with those of the Humanist Society Scotland.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Not at this time. My views are in accordance with those of the Humanist Society Scotland.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a faith/belief local group or congregation
a private individual

22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

When are you going to consider the difference in rights and experiences of cohabiting couples in comparison to married and same sex legal partnerships?
Cohabiting couples do not enjoy the same privileges of these two groups yet are the most common form of partnership in Scotland.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It is a necessity yet without the military and legal support of the judiciary, government and intelligentsia free speech does not exist. Try publishing a book that criticizes a religion in a liberal country and you will find out! Try exposing a neanderthal footballer who has an affair with his wife's sister and various other stupid women and you will find out that you can't even mention they have taken out a super injunction. Free speech does not exist in the UK.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The problem is that most people in the UK and in Scotland accept and have no problem with same sex marriages, relationships etc. What the problem really is is a lack of tolerance from both sides of the vociferous debate that goes on in the name of equality (church vis LGBT lobbyists). Normal members of the public think money should be spent on promoting real equality and the SG should spend money promoting equality concerned with social class. The two opposing groups should grow up, stop trying to wind each other up and give us all a break from their obsessive fascism.

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Any Bill that brings equanimity to all peoples of Scotland is of value making an inclusive society and reflecting the message more widely that equal rights relates to all humanity.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

No matter what gender coupling, the act of marriage is a solemn commitment between two people who wish to formally unite their lives together. No doubt couples will have decided upon marriage after a great deal of deliberation.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Whatever belief path or religion, we are one created humanity with dignity at the heart. Whilst some branches of formal religion are against change, there are others that openly acknowledge we are all one under God and they welcome LGBTQ peoples to partnership / marriage. What matters is each person's own truth and essential sincerity in relation to his or her God or belief. If the act of marriage and civil partnership is respected in the context of a belief or religious person then this reflects integrity.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Transgender people are vulnerable and brave, and it is essential to be open to give them the chance of a partnership of their choice.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the word ‘protections’ is quite alarmist. However, of course it is vital to address the reality of people with concerns. In the complexity of our communities, there are fears and anxieties that go beyond the central issue of same sex marriage, which may be the catalyst for people’s hatred, prejudice and loathing towards LGBTQ peoples. Indeed, some people may prefer to live in an exclusive society rather than an inclusive one. Nevertheless, with the aspiration of inclusivity reflected in sex marriage, those who have concerns may be fuelled by anger to reject people who seem far from them in belief and lifestyle. I think more could be done by way of creating dialogue and education between peoples of all diversities to expand knowledge offering the chance of understanding and insight into folk’s views, i.e., giving a space for those with concerns and those who welcome the change to develop respect and wisdom of each other.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is at the heart of human decency and forms a vital legacy for future generations.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Across the country, so many different voices express so many different views. We hear so much on all sides, however, what may serve in our society is to provide workshops such as creative writing at which people may explore their own experiences then to share aspects of their lives in a group. When disparate groupings of people come together in this way, they are often able to cut through conditioning and prejudice towards a deeper understanding of others and themselves, more aware of how we form a common humanity connected through our emotional journeys such as of loss, loneliness, sorrow.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
a private individual
a poet
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
I'm only disappointed that it's taken the Scottish government so long to legislate in this area of equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Opposition to this measure re-inforced it's importance as a means of asserting the equal value of gay and straight people and their relationships.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither
I think it should have been up to the conscious of the individual religious celebrant - if religious bodies are given permission to stand-in for the state then they should accept the same standards of equal treatment as the state.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
I support as long as it's a choice and not automatic - I think everyone should have the choice of civil partnership, marriage or remaining single, regardless of sexual orientation.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
If permission is given to use the religious premises and all sides wish it, why should this be denied?
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

I would prefer all marriages to be legalised in a secular ceremony, followed by a religious ceremony for those who wish it, again regardless of orientation.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Nobody needs 'protection' from equality and there should be no right to discriminate. People are entitled to believe and think whatever they want, but shouldn't be allowed to discriminate on the basis of gender, race, religion or sexual orientation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
They should grow up and get over themselves and stop screwing with the happiness of others.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

In my opinion marriage is for heterosexual monogamous couples - same sex unions may be partnerships but that does not equate to marriage

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

what do you mean by 'belief' celebrants? I do not understand this term

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I am concerned about teachers who may be opposed to same sex marriage on religious grounds being forced to teach same sex is ok, or lose their jobs and/or face discrimination should freedom of speech take higher priority than freedom of conscience?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
It is important every human right to be legalised and write on paper

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Making further submission and legislation it's respect to the existence.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
Faith and religion are always part of people's life and should be respected

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

When individual's opinions infringe on the human rights and personhood of others, they forfeit their right to have these opinions protected.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is important, but freedom of action is an entirely different issue.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Go ahead with the changes, don't let the dinosaurs stop you. They will die off and you will offer a better future for everyone in the future.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

the anti-lgbt lobby have no place in a modern society with their rants

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
This doesn't fit in with God's creation.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
I don't consider it 'right' that the Scottish Parliament should in any way redefine marriage... it doesn't fit with God's creation.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition
...in opposition to civil marriages

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition
When deviating from God's purposes... it causes huge unnecessary repercussions.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Christian school teachers would have a problem in my opinion in promoting - or even mentioning - same sex marriage on the same basis as man/woman in marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

people have a fear - concern - about speaking out against same sex marriages as they will be seen to be intolerant and prejudiced.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Equality matters

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Couples should be free to make a commitment to each other and celebrate their love regardless of whether they are same sex or not.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
People should be given the choice.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
The decision to stay married should be made by the couple.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People are entitled to their beliefs, but same sex marriage is about the couple getting married and not about anyone else. I fail to understand exactly what people who may have concerns would feel they need protection from. I also have a concern that any protection for society could be used as a means to discriminate against same sex couples.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is important, but it doesn't give people justification for discrimination and it shouldn't be used as a reason to deny people the right to celebrate their love and commitment to each other.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

This bill is a big step for equality in Scotland; currently same sex couples cannot get married, suggesting they are unequal in society. It's time this changed.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

There is no logical reason to restrict access to belief ceremonies if traditional religious and non-religious ceremonies are on equal footing.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

I think it is important to recognise that civil partnerships were/are not equal to marriages, hence the importance of this bill. So I believe some sort of active "conversion" is appropriate.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

People should be allowed to get married wherever is important to them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

It is wholly unfair to force a transgender person to get divorced if neither party wants to.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think there is adequate protection. Same sex marriage affects those who want to get married, and others' opinions are peripheral to that.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition
I do not agree with the definition of marriage as put forward by the Bill.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
I believe that opening up marriage to same sex couples removes it from its inherent link with the biological family in a way that will be damaging for society as a whole and for children in particular.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither
It seems an adequate solution.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
Civil partnerships were introduced as something fundamentally different to marriage; changing civil partnerships to marriages implies that this was not the case and turns civil partnerships into something they were not meant to be.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition
The dignity and integrity of the ceremony suggests that it should take place within the restrictions currently placed on it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

It is no longer a “civil partnership™” if taking place within a religious or belief context.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The protections foreseen by the Bill only seem to cover religious organisations and individual religious ministers. Even if the protections are adequate in these cases, which is far from certain, they certainly would not provide any protection for other citizens who do not wish to take any part in same sex marriage. For example, they would provide no protection to a wedding photographer who could not in good conscience photograph a same sex ceremony, or a baker who could not provide a cake for such a ceremony, or any other of the many individual citizens whose work is connected in some way with the vast wedding industry. The religious freedom of institutions and ministers might be safeguarded but the religious freedom of individual believers would not.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

This was not in the SNP mandate. It is not a democratic action. As a lawyer specialising in family law, I do not understand that this Bill accords same sex couples any new legal rights not already given to them via civil partnerships. It seems instead to be about enforcing a new moral order, rather than giving legal rights - I would question whether that should be the purpose of legislation, particularly in difficult economic times when there are so many other pressing matters for the government to deal with. I also do not consider that the definition of marriage is something which the government can, or should, tamper with. I think that doing so risks undermining one of the building blocks of our society, and I am concerned particularly for the generation who will grow up with this new definition.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither
If there are churches or religions who wish to do so, that is up to them - I am concerned that sufficient protection be put in place for any institutions or individuals who do not wish to do so. Given the overreaching powers of the ECHR, is this something that the Scottish Government is really able to do?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I have real concerns about this. Particularly, I do not think that this is something that the Scottish Government can control, given the uncertainty of future legal challenges (e.g. by gay rights campaign groups) and the overriding powers of the ECHR. There is a prevailing attitude by a (vocal) minority that anyone who thinks marriage should remain between a man and a woman is a bigot. The stifling of free speech which this produces is already frightening, and reminiscent of McCarthyism. Will this extend to it being seen as entirely right for such "bigots" to be publicly shamed, to lose their jobs etc just for expressing or holding such a view? In particular, the areas of concern are: - teachers who do not want to teach that same sex marriage is of equal moral validity to heterosexual marriage: - anyone employed by a public sector body who is seen not to adhere to their equality and diversity policy (and such people have, I understand, already lost jobs). - adopters and foster carers; - charities and religious bodies who hold charitable status; - religious groups who wish to use council or other premises;

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

See my answer to previous question. I have huge concern about this - the prevailing climate which labels anyone a bigot just for disagreeing with same sex marriage is simply horrible. It stifles any respectful or rational debate. It risks that those who believe that marriage should be between a man and a woman will be held guilty of discrimination, simply for having that belief. The current clause in the Bill is inadequate to provide protection. I am not sure that anything that Government puts in can provide sufficient protection, given potential human rights challenges once the definition is revised.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I believe that marriage is the lifelong union between a man and a woman for life for the intention of raising a family.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I remember hearing that same sex partnerships have given same sex couples protection under the law as in line with people who are married so there is no need to be redefining marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Civil partnerships are not the same as marriage and therefore cannot be changed to try to make them the same. Marriage is a specific relationship for raising children who have been conceived within the marriage. Children have a right to a mother and a father of opposite sexes and as previously stated neither can marriage cannot be changed into something that it is not.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

I do not think that civil marriage ceremonies should take place.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

Civil partnerships are contrary to biblical religious teaching on marriage and therefore cannot be registered authentically.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I was shocked to see in the news that a police chaplain was told he could no longer continue as a Strathclyde Police Chaplain because his comments in support of traditional marriage on his blog was in contravention of the police equality and diversity policy. What is absolutely bewildering is that same sex marriage is not legal and this man's views were reflecting the law but nevertheless he was being removed from his post. Utterly astonishing! There have also been lots of other cases reported in the news over recent times. Guest House owners, Housing Managers, Adoption Agencies all linked to the expression of support for traditional marriage. People in the public sector who believe in traditional marriage must have their rights protected so that they are not liable to be penalised in any way for expressing their views in public as long as their views are properly expressed.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of Speech must not only be protected but must be seen and understood to be protected. In my opinion it is being undermined on a weekly basis by the faceless 'politically correct' agenda. Who are these anonymous people who seek to undermine the moral majority and so damage the very foundations of society.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

What about focusing on the needs of children instead of always focusing on the needs of adults. With rights come responsibilities but there are often times when responsibilities come first as where and when children are concerned. Put the needs of children front and centre.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I don't think this is clear at all - because of the way the government is going there will be no choice anyway. The Government have no conscience and do not really care what Christians think.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Very opposed - marriage is only between a man and a woman.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

Just now many marriages between a man and a woman are outwith religious premises anyway.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

for reasons stated before, they would then be classified as same sex, so how can they remain married

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As stated before, marriage is only between a man and a woman. Am extremely disappointed in our Government for not standing up to Christian standards in a Christian country. They are certainly showing themselves to be weak and scared of what their voters will think of them, if they don't bow to this demand, but instead look to be inadequate and wimpish. So therefore if they cannot stand up to the status of a Christian country and let people down, how can we expect to believe that Christians will be able to uphold their consciences re employment etc - we just can't believe in our Government.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

what freedom of speech?! With this Government, there is no freedom of speech! For airing views and standing up for personal Christian beliefs, people are accused of discrimination, removed from posts, demoted, intimidated. What an example this Government set - talk about being two-faced!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

We need to have specific issues listened to and amendments made to enable those who believe and uphold a biblical view of marriage to be able to speak as freely in private about their views, instead of feeling we are in a 'big brother' state. The Government should be listening, not ignoring and going their own way without caring.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

It appears to be a needless change with a minority of public support supporting it. People can already have civil partnerships which can confer all the legal benefits of married couples, so it is not really about equality. It is like trying to abolish the terms men and women in the name of equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

It is a contradiction in terms. People of any sex can have relationships, either sexual or platonic. They can enter into civil partnerships to celebrate that and declare it to the world, or they can just live together for the short term or permanently, showing their care and love for one another. The difference in marriage is in its primary purpose, it is for the procreation and nurture of children, in an environment that has been proven to be the best for children. In turn as these children mature, this will prove to be best for society. I believe that this proposal will devalue my marriage. In any forms etc that I have to fill in I would want to be able say that I have a heterosexual marriage, to distinguish my position from a system which will damage society.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

I think it is a bad idea unless civil partnerships were being abolished or heterosexual couples could enter into civil partnerships, and adultery was recognized in same sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the protections may be inadequate, or may be ineffective because of European legislation. Already there are legal challenges in England. I have concerns about my grandchildren being protected from teaching that promotes this against their parents beliefs. I have concerns about teachers being forced to teach things against their beliefs. I have concerns about faith groups being denied public funding or denied the use of public buildings because they do not support this legislation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is already restricted for some faith groups, being arrested for speaking in public about their beliefs. I think that this legislation will just increase this restriction.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Nicola Sturgeon said at the beginning of this process that it was the "Right thing to do". The question is who decides what is right and wrong, and what factors are taken into account. It seems that today we have as a supreme being, not the God who has been our God for centuries, but a god of equality, subject only to the fashions of today's society, where there is no ultimate truth that can be known. I strongly prefer the God of the Judeo - Christian tradition who has served our nation well.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Human rights for ALL people

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Human rights for ALL people

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Human rights for ALL people

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Human rights for ALL people

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Human rights for ALL people

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Human rights for ALL people

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual  a gay woman

23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The section in Chapter 4 on Freedom Of expression is only limited to persons asked to Solemnise the proceedings and leaves those members of the general public who are in opposition to this bill unprotected by the convention right of freedom of expression. In essence what this bill seems to achieve is the alienation members of society along religious lines which is very wrong.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The Bill as it stands is badly worded it seeks to override aspects of faith and faith or belief are not the prerogative of the state in so far as the state can seek to amend religious doctrine which is what this bill seeks to do in proposing marriage be solemnised by amongst others religious or belief persons. It would be better if the bill had been presented in a way that simply stated that marriage could be solemnised by approved persons and then a section on who could be an approved person. In its current form it gives the impression that all religious or belief communities are in full support of this bill. The bill also does not provide for premises to be withheld from usage by same sex ceremonies. If a church, mosque or synagogue does not support same sex marriage there is no provision in the bill for those premises to be withheld.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

The bill in its current form does not appear to take into account faith or religious beliefs and as such puts people who hold religious views that do not support same sex marriage at logger heads with the law. The Bill does not provide of freedom of expression to the general public and has wider implications for schools, church after school care clubs and holiday clubs for example, as well as Mosques and Synagogues who provide teaching of their faiths most of which is at odds with this bill. The bill in its current form is therefore bad for society.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This would be the best compromise in it would allow for the respect of religious and belief objectors not to be, potentially taken to court on their opposition on religious grounds for refusing the solemnisation on their premises.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I find it difficult to understand why given the current social and economic climate when there are so very many other issues needing to be addressed that politicians have decided to spend so much time and money on this matter given that no party has a mandate from the electorate on this matter. Very undemocratic.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

From time immemorial marriage has always been the union of one man and one woman for the purpose of having children, raising children and protecting and nurturing family life. It is the very foundation of society. Children are deserving of a mother and a father. Any attempts to redefine marriage will have serious implications for the rights of children, parents and those holding to traditional marriage values.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

I do not feel that any marriage celebrants should be forced against their conscience to authorise same sex unions. I feel that public sector employees should have their rights respected and enshrined in law to afford them protection.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

It is my understanding that when civil partnerships were introduced that they were afforded the same legal rights as married people. Why is it therefore now necessary to seek to redefine the law? How much is this going to cost the tax payer? I would be especially interested in why the government is pressing ahead despite the outcome of the public consultation on this issue.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

Since I believe in traditional marriage and feel that family life and children need to be protected I would be opposed to civil marriages taking place in public outdoor areas where children may be.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

Same sex unions do not adhere to Christian teaching on marriage and so I fail to see how same sex unions can be authentically registered.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As a former public sector employee I am extremely concerned at the pressure faced by those in the public sector to conform to so called 'politically correct' indoctrination with particular reference to the promotion of Lesbian Gay Bi Sexual and Transgender issues. As a Christian I worked in a public sector office with approximately 400 staff. There were five floors in our office. I came into my office one day to be confronted with A3 size Stonewall Posters in the workspace, on all floors, corridors, meetings rooms etc saying 'Some people are gay , get over it'. This was despite regular equality and diversity staff training sessions saying that tolerance and respect for others should be practised. During a discussion in one of the regular equality and training sessions on the matter of LGBT issues I raised the subject of the poster message. I explained that I had no problem with the statement 'Some people are gay' but that I felt that the phrase 'get over it' was disrespectful of my views on the matter as a Christian.I explained that as a Christian I believed that the practice of homosexuality was a sin but that this did not mean that I hated anyone, however,I objected to the fact that I would be characterised as 'homophobic' for airing my Christian views. I said that as a Christian I felt that I was being targeted by Stonewall propaganda. Nothing was done about the Stonewall posters which seemed to demonstrate to me that there is a hierarchy of rights and that Sexual Orientation rights are more highly favoured in the public sector.On more than one occasion LGBT issues were the subject of equality and diversity training. I know from being a parent that the same pressure is being faced by friends teaching in schools. What about protecting the rights of those who hold traditional views on marriage and family life and who are opposed to the redefinition of marriage. Many people are deeply concerned at the insidious influence of 'political correctness' not least because it is all pervasive and deeply damaging

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There have been numerous cases reported in the media that cause me great concern, particularly, where they involve people being afraid of losing their jobs,or indeed having their chances of employment or promotion or indeed pay adversely affected. One young friend in teaching has told me that before the summer her school had inserted LGBT Helpline posters in all of the teachers' staff room mailboxes and that they were expected to put these up in class. As a Christian she did not feel that she could do this as she had pastoral concern for her pupils. It transpired that the posters were removed and nothing more was heard about them, but had she raised her viewpoint how would that have impacted upon her employment. We have already heard about the housing manager at Trafford Housing Trust, which is apparently not even a public sector authority, who was demoted and suffered financially by having 40% of his salary cut for remarks stating his belief that same sex marriage in a church was 'an equality too far'. These remarks were made in his own time on his own Facebook. A shocking disregard of freedom of speech. There are many other such incidences. Sadly they are becoming too numerous to mention but they have affected people in many workplace professions. Freedom of speech must be protected but it is being eroded daily by political correctness which has a cancerous effect on our society. Increasingly people are feeling that they are being coerced into declaring support for matters/issues which they cannot in conscience support. Such people must know that they can talk about their views on marriage without fear of discrimination.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

If freedom of speech is not protected then persecution is what follows. We need to ensure that society does not crumble into factions for the sake of children and families. Indeed we need to focus more on the rights of children to a mother and a father.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

I am unclear as to whether there would be a delay in issuing a full Gender Recognition Certificate to those transitioning whose spouse / partner refused to sign the decree agreeing to the marriage / partnership continuing afterwards. I am concerned that t

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I think there are enough protections currently in place for those that have "concerns" about same sex marriage and that more should be done to protect those actually engaging in same sex marriage. More education on the fact that those people of the LGBTQ community are just exactly the same as those in the heterosexual community needs to take place especially in schools as there is a high suicide rate among young LGBTQ identifying people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

While Freedom of Speech is a much needed part of society it must be respected that if your opinions and views, once aired, encourage people to act in an offensive or unlawful manner then they will be held accountable in some shape or form.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a hopefully decent member of the human race.

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

It is legislation being pushed. Through without an electoral mandate and no conscience clauses included similar to those in other legislation.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

It is a distraction from more important matters in the country, eg jobs, nhs funding, education, etc. Same sex couples already have legal rights under civil partnership. The vast majority of Scotland are opposed to this legislation which redefines marriage in a radical and unprecedented manner. As a Minister of Religion, the Bible has been our Nation's moral co pass for generations, underpinning all past legislation as the base line and states quite categorically that marriage is a life long commitment between one man and one woman. To alter this is completely contrary to God's Word in Scripture. Traditional marriage is more than about individual rights, because it expands to include responsibilities and care of children from the marriage union. Once one aspect of traditional marriage is changed, it will start to unravel a host of other difficulties, such as polygamy, multiple partner relationships and will leave society with no moral benchmarks.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

By asking this question You have already started to unravel our country's moral base line, provided by traditional marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

the proposed legislation offers little protection for individuals who believe marriage is between one man and one woman. Given the lack of clarity from the Scottish Government on how this legislation will affect individuals who believe marriage is only between a man and a woman, we suggest the legislation is amended and adopts a conscientious objection clause similar to that of the 1967 Abortion Act with regards to the celebration of same-sex marriages. This would provide indisputable guidance which would be hugely helpful, rather than having to establish precedents through the courts. The legislation has worked well for abortion, another deeply contentious moral issue, and it would make sense to have similar provision for same-sex marriage. as Ministers of Religion, we would like some reassurance that in the eyes of the state it will still be legal to believe that marriage is between a man and a woman, that those who hold to this traditional view will not be subject to prosecution and that they will be free to express their opinions. Given what has already happened in England â€“ where a court case has been brought against the Church of England with the ink barely dry on the Royal Assent â€“ there is no doubt that we will see similar instances north of the border. The issue is simply not going away, and I urge the Scottish Government to think again about embarking on this major social experiment before it further unravels the fabric of society. the Equality Act should be amended to include a specific reference to protect workers opposed to same sex marriage on the grounds of religious conviction â€“ it is inconsistent for the Scottish Government to protect choirmasters and organists against discrimination, whilst leaving registrars, teachers and other public sector workers in I have a deep concern about the teaching of same-sex marriage in schools. It was â€œunacceptableâ€ that parents did not have the option to remove their children from all classes where gay marriage will be taught.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
Are you responding as...

a faith/belief local group or congregation

23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
People should be able to perform them if they want, and not perform them if they don't.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

If we are including in freedom of speech freedom of expression, people should be able to say they disagree with same sex marriage without fearing prosecution. That is not to say hate crimes should stop being hate crimes, or aggravations of assault ignored. But particularly when a debate like this is happening publicly, the ability to comment freely is crucial. I disagree with those who oppose same sex marriage, but I want them to be able to express it, if for no other reason than knowing who the bigots are.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
i think it should be the same for the lgbt community as it is for the others and allow us to marry the one we love in the church's
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

It's just a different name for the same thing.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

I think it should be at the discretion of each individual religious premises whether a same sex couple can be married there. I think same sex couples should have the right to get married where they want.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

Same sex couples should have the same rights as opposite sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

They will still be a couple in love, does anything else matter?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Nobody is going to force them to go to a same sex marriage I'm sure.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

If the couple wished this to happen

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I think the Bill covers protections for persons with concerns over same sex marriage. No individual or organisation is being compelled or forced into providing marriage for same sex couples, indeed unfortunately many individuals ministering within some religious organisations cannot provide this service even if they would like to

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It is my belief that all opinions should be heard and protected within a democracy but not to the detriment of a specific group of people or individuals.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

It is immensely important for equality in Scotland, also freedom of religion in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

All marriages should be treated the same whether they are between a mixed sex or same sex couple there should be no discrimination or discriminatory language.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

There is absolutely no need for this Bill as civil partnership give the same legal rights to same sex couples and redefining marriage does not bring civil partners any more rights. So why is this all happening when there are so many other things needing to be sorted out. Also no political party has a mandate to change marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Same sex couples can never be married as they cannot consummate their relationship and conceive children. Marriage is about more than two adults. Children deserve to have their own mother and father. Also recent polls have shown that the majority of people in Scotland do not want marriage to be redefined. To fly in the face of the majority will of the people is utterly undemocratic.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

Celebrants should have their conscientious/religious rights respected where same sex relationships are concerned. No one working in the public or private sector should be forced to act against their beliefs in support of same sex marriages

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Since marriage is the lifelong union of one man to one woman for the upbringing of children then clearly civil partnerships can never be 'changed' into a marriage any more than an apple can be changed into an orange. This is not and can never be an equality issue.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

True biblical teaching does not recognise civil partnerships and so from a faith perspective civil partnerships can never be recognised/registered

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People who believe in marriage should not suffer any discrimination for holding their views or for expressing their views neither should they be afraid to speak freely. There is a very real culture of fear in the public sector workplace and indeed now in society at large. It is outrageous when people are accused of being homophobic just for expressing their religious belief. It is scandalous when they experience loss of pay or indeed loss of position or career advancement. Sadly there has been a lot of evidence reporting such cases in the media over the past year.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Political Correctness is killing off Freedom of Speech we do not live in a democratic society any more. We need to do more to be seen to be protecting freedom of speech. Sadly the ECHR is undermining our laws and traditions where the subject of Marriage is concerned. I believe that there is a great danger that anyone refusing to marry same sex couples will face litigation in the courts. I understand that currently in England a same sex couple are already planning to go to court to force churches to hold gay weddings.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

In protecting traditional marriage we recognise the importance of marriage for children. Children have rights too. The right to a mother and a father not to a genderless concept. I am also deeply concerned about the effects upon the education of children if marriage is redefined. Since the teaching of marriage is mandatory within the curriculum it would mean that very young children would be exposed to teaching that is not in accordance with their parents wishes and teachers who would not wish to teach same sex marriage would potentially face disciplinary procedures. I have seen some of the proposed Stonewall education resources for Primary Children and it is very concerning.
Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Its 2013!!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I am very disappointed that the Bill has been published, as there was no electoral mandate for the Scottish government to do so. The SNP's manifesto clearly stated that it would consult on the issue of redefining marriage and, having done so, it has ignored the 64% of responses that indicated that there was no wish for any change and proceeded with the draft Bill. Such a decision shows that the government is not in fact prepared to listen to the people of Scotland as a whole, which it so often likes to claim that it does. More worryingly, it also shows that the government is prepared to reject all the compelling arguments against redefining marriage and impose a radical and highly divisive ideology on the whole of society, against the wishes of the majority. This is clear in Alex Neil's statement that the government does not accept the view that marriage can only ever be between a man and a woman, the view that was pretty well held by everyone - including homosexual activists - until about twenty years ago. It is still the dominant view in society. The stance taken by the government is not to be expected in a free and democratic country. Serious questions need to be asked about the role and purpose of government in relation to this matter and other legislation currently being proposed (eg the "named person" legislation). The Bill has next to no protections for those who would oppose same-sex marriage, which is evidence that the rationale behind the Bill is to impose an ideology on society that cannot be criticised without consequences. That is a chilling state of affairs.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The Bill starts by amending a forbidden degree in the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977. The question has to be asked why this degree was forbidden in the first place? If the answer is that society was unenlightened about same-sex relationships at that stage and has now "moved forward", what is to stop future governments from abolishing other forbidden degrees, such as under-age marriage (could the age of consent not be lowered to 15, if there was enough campaigning for it? And then 14?), bigamy (for bisexuals), multi-partner marriage (as advocated by Laurie Penny in The Guardian on 20 August 2013) and even incest (which Switzerland has recently considered decriminalising)? I believe that the reason why same-sex marriage was forbidden in the 1977 Act was because, like all the other forbidden degrees, it was seen as harmful and contrary to the historic, universal and societal understanding of marriage. The government has shown no compelling reason to abolish the forbidden degree of same-sex marriage for at least the following reasons: (1) there is no overwhelming demand for it either from society in general or from the homosexual community in particular, only 3% of whom have indicated that they wish to get married - these statistics are reflected in the low take-up of same-sex marriage among the homosexual community in countries where it is already legal; (2) same-sex marriage confers no new legal rights on same-sex couples that are not already available through civil partnerships, so there is no discrimination and no necessity for legal change; (3) the government’s role in conferring the legal status of marriage on a married couple is to recognise and regulate marriage in society, so if a society does not overwhelmingly recognise that marriage can be between same sexes, no government has any mandate to tell its citizens what marriage is - accordingly, a referendum on the issue is absolutely essential; (3) conferring the SOCIAL status of marriage on couples is not the purpose of government and never has been - redefining marriage to include same-sex couples is blatantly imposing gender theory ideology on society, with the clear warning to all dissenterers that, because the law says same-sex marriage is OK, if you disagree, you find yourself on the wrong side of the law and must take the consequences if you continue to oppose what government says is "the right thing to do" (ie declare same-sex marriages lawful and therefore good and legitimate). No nation in human history had legalised same-sex marriage until 2001 - do the politicians of this generation really believe that none of their predecessors has been as wise, as enlightened, as fair, as just, as progressive as them? If the answer is "yes", then a study of the history of world civilizations is needed to show what happened to every civilization that thought that way. Both the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the European Convention on Human Rights make it clear that marriage is between a man and a woman. In the case of Schalk and Kopf v Austria, this was made clear and led to the court confirming that same-sex marriage was not a human right under the convention. The Equal Opportunities Committee needs to take time to ask itself what marriage is - its nature, its purpose, its boundaries, its benefits for society - these have not been addressed thus far and I would urge the EOC to recommend to Parliament that no further steps be taken in relation to the legislation until there has been a thorough consideration of all these matters. The whole process has been far too rushed, including the selection of groups to give oral evidence BEFORE written evidence was heard - why the great rush?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I'm not sure what the thinking behind this move is, as I believe it is more than just removing the inconvenience for couples who have eg a humanist wedding from having to have two ceremonies. I fear that religious celebrants will become fewer and fewer and that there may ultimately be a choice between a civil wedding and a belief wedding, of whatever shape or form. I'm not sure whether that is a good thing or not, but I am concerned that for those who wish a religious wedding ceremony, this may be increasingly hard to obtain.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition
While I can see the attempt being made here to accommodate celebrants who oppose same-sex marriage, my concern is that this could be challenged legally and struck down by Strasbourg, who have indicated in other cases that, if a member state passes same-sex marriage into law, it must be available to all and there must be no discrimination. The only option for a celebrant in those circumstances would be to cease to be a celebrant, which would mean ultimately that the only marriage celebrants would be those who were happy to conduct same-sex marriages. This fact alone should lead the EOC to recommend that further study be carried out into this issue before Parliament proceeds with any legislation.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

I do not believe that same-sex relationships can ever be marriages, because of the nature of marriage, historically and universally until this century, as being the union between people of opposite sexes. I also understand the majority of people in civil partnerships would not want to change their status automatically, as they are happy with having a different relationship - as Stonewall indicated they wanted when civil partnerships were being proposed (they only changed their policy in 2010).

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

No comment.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

This would cause huge difficulties for the many religious bodies who oppose civil partnerships and would make them all subject to litigation. On balance, their rights to freedom of religion should be favoured over the wish (not right) for people to have their civil partnership ceremony in a religious setting.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

No comment.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Yes. The EOC will no doubt be hearing from many individuals about freedom of conscience in public life in general, eg in the public sector, especially teaching, social work and the police, but I would like to refer to two matters in particular which I think the EOC needs to consider very carefully: first, if prospective employees for the NHS are asked at interview, or (if successful) during diversity training, about their views on same-sex marriage and are either turned down from getting a job or dismissed for expressing their views, what will happen to the NHS, if huge numbers of evangelical Christians, Roman Catholics and Muslims are unable to work within it? Already there are shortages of consultants in many hospitals, so that many are being recruited from Western Europe, where one of the aforesaid religious positions is held by most people in these countries - such an approach under the Public Sector Equality Duty would potentially be catastrophic to the NHS - and the public sector generally. The second point I wish to make relates to the freedom of parents not only to withdraw their children from ALL classes where same-sex marriage is taught (in particular where it is actively promoted, which seems likely to avoid accusation of discrimination), but to have their children educated in line with their religious or philosophical or pedagogical views. This is enshrined in Article 14 of the ECHR and in Article 2 of Protocol 1 to the Human Rights Act 1998 and is an absolute human right. At the very least, the EOC must recommend that same-sex marriage be taught as a controversial subject where people hold strong views in both sides and that is is OK in a free society for that to happen. Not to include clear direction in the legislation could well leave the legislation open to legal challenge for being incompatible with the Human Rights Act. Article 17 of the ECHR lays down that one human right cannot be used to restrict another - here, it would be the right not to be discriminated against versus the right to education in line with parental views. I believe the recent ECHR decision in the Ladele case makes it entirely possible for Holyrood to include a wide range of protections under the margin of appreciation principle - surely the margin is wide in both directions? This should not be challengeable in the Strasbourg.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Yes. It seems to be entirely possible that expressing disagreement with same-sex marriage could be viewed in law as tantamount to racism and could lead to litigation and, if a broadly worded incitement to homophobic hatred offence is created, prosecution. The existence of Article 9 human rights is NOT adequate (as recent ECHR cases have shown) to protect people from litigation and prosecution and the only way for this to happen is either for robust protections to be included in the legislation or for the EOC to recommend a postponement of the legislation until further research is carried out into the possibility of amending equality, education and employment legislation.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Yes. Scotland has been a free and democratic nation for centuries. It is CURRENTLY one of the most tolerant nations on Earth, where homosexual people are already accepted and approved of in society and hold some of the highest positions in business and public life. Indeed, I firmly believe there is positive discrimination in favour of homosexuals in many areas of life, in particular careers in the public sector. At present, people who believe in traditional marriage are still accepted in society, but only just - and their acceptance and their freedom and ability to live freely are under enormous threat from this legislation. Introducing same-sex marriage will not improve the lot of homosexuals in Scotland in general, if only 3% take it up, and equality will not be achieved with heterosexual couples (because the two relationships can never be the same, one having the potential for procreation, the other not, and adultery provisions are different for both). However, a whole raft of new inequalities will be created if the Bill goes ahead in its current form. The EOC should respectfully recommend to Parliament that the legislation be put on hold until further research and study is carried out into the inevitable negative ramifications and consequences of introducing same-sex marriage. Scotland deserves nothing less. It's time - to think again....

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I am in support of the bill fully as it is representable of all members of the LGBT community and is fully complacent to full equal marriage rather than just same-sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I support same-sex marriage in full but feel that the bill going forward is more than just same sex marriage and includes the protections and introductions to equality for all of the LGBT community and will allow Scotland to stand forward more.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I'm a great believer in people of faith having their views in society and those views being protected for them but when it comes to inflicting religious views onto the political needs of equality I truly believe that religious beliefs have no place in soc

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I don't feel any institution has the right to solemnise marriage of any sort. Marriage is a social exchange of union, I feel same-sex or opposite sex marriage should be open for all members of society without barriers or exclusions.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I feel that civil partnerships should be open to be exchanged in marriage if the said couple wish that to happen. There should be no separate ceremominal if the couple do not wish to be, it should be an easy exchange of paperwork.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Absolutely, as long as the party involved are happy to celebrate there union then there should be no barriers towards this!

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

There are many members of the LGBT community that find grace and compassion in belief and I feel that if the religious leader is happy to bless a marriage of union of same-sex couples then it should be up to the individual rather than the institution to which they belong.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Absolutely! If a family unit and both parties love each other then there should be no barriers to this.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Social diversity is a movement that will come and we the LGBT community only wish to be treated as an equal to every other member of society. We are all born into this world equal, so why can't we all live the same way. With deep sincerity that is all we wish.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I'm a great believer in having the right to speak out without being silenced as long as my words do not offend, hurt or discriminate. There should be restraints when insighting hate and I feel this should be publishable fully to the law, this would also include defamatory or false proclamations.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I feel the bill is right and represents those who most need it.

Are you responding as...

a private individual
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I strongly support equal marriage for all couples, gender is irrelevant.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Religious institutions who oppose equal marriage should have the right to opt out of performing a religious ceremony if doing so would violate their religious beliefs. Civil registrars should have no such right, they are employed by the state to perform a civic duty, not to impose their beliefs upon others. To grant such a right would set a dangerous precedent which could lead to civil registrars seeking the right to deny marriages on the basis of faith, race, or any other aspect of a couple.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly approve of this bill because it makes it possible for same-sex couples to enter into marriage, including religious marriage, while protecting the right of religious bodies which oppose same-sex marriage to decline to conduct such ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I strongly support the introduction of same sex marriage on the grounds of justice, equality and basic human decency.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

This is a difficult area in which to make clear distinctions. In some cases - Christians, Jews, Hindus, Muslims, Pagans, Sikh's, Buddhists and Baha'is - we are clearly dealing with religious celebrants. However, with Humanists, while they will deny that

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The right to refuse to conduct religious, same sex, marriages provides sufficient protection for those who have concerns about same sex marriage. Anything further would infringe the rights of those who wish to conduct, or enter into, same sex marriages.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

Civil partnerships should be extended to heterosexual couples as well.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
21st century society should have no place for such views. They should be subject to the same treatment as racists.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

If parties consent to a legal act, there should be no impediment.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

I am a gay man and I would love to be able to marry my partner in a church.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

There are greater and more pressing need in our society than seeing that those few who can have civil partnerships and 'want' same sex marriage in a religious setting. This is a terrible distraction from the needs of the poor, the elderly, the infirm, the protection of the innocent, the education of young, the advancement of laws which make the whole of society a better place to live.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

It is unnecessary. People can choose who they want to live with. They can press the government for tax breaks as a couple in the laws eyes. Marriage is to bring together opposite sex couples for the security that can be found in married life. To force redefinition of marriage to allow same sex couples to marry in buildings to do with religion (when such an act is a sin in that religion) does not make sense. It is asking religious bodies to accept something which is against their very existence.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

They already are on the same footing. In the matter of redefining marriage however, this can not be a sound criteria for decision making. Many people have aspirations/feelings/beliefs, but not all these can be said to stand the test of time, whereas rel

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

This will come down to personal opinion, and that will fracture and split religious groups.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

I would be much happier if this did not happen.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

Not my business.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am a secondary school teacher in a Roman Catholic School. I am not RC, but hold to the Christian values upon which many of our societies virtues were built upon. I fear that if in some way I uphold these values, as I am asked to do in my job, -and wish to do- , then I will become a target for individuals who feel that their quest for widespread equality is of greater importance than the views of those who hold fast to the ideal of traditional marriage. For example, it can put individual pupils or staff in a difficult position when the question asked is, "Sir! sure it's ok for a man to marry a man!" New law might say yes. My position rightly encourages me to respond no. Teachers will be asked by Government to be all inclusive. By definition, in my job, I can not always do that.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I would like the freedom of speech to include that of the parent for their wishes for their child's education, in so far as; if I do not want my children taught that same-sex marriage is a good thing, or something that is to be accepted, then my wishes for them to opt out of such classes must be upheld.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Those who do not agree with same sex marriage for personal reasons, should be protected against legal challenges should they feel it necessary to withhold or refuse services or products which they are in the business of supplying.

Are you responding as...

an academica celebrant
a private individual
School Teacher & Parent.
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I feel that those who are gay already have all the rights that they require to live in harmony in Scotland. I believe it is not the job of any government to redefine marriage, marriage was here long before governments. I also feel that the minority 1% of all of Scotland should never have the right to redefine anything for the other 99% of us.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I believe all men and women are created equal, but that does not mean anyone can have what he or she wants just because it suits them. Every decision made in the public arena effects the rest of our country. This is a massive step in the wrong direction. The gay community does not have the trump card over everyone else and especially over the rights of children to have a mum and a dad. If a gay couple wish to live together, that is fine, but the rest of the country should not have to accept their world-view.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

We are all entitled to our believes, religious or otherwise. No one should be forced to accept someone else's view on beliefs. I would fear though that non religious celebrants may conduct weddings for the wrong reasons.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

At present as a celebrant, I would not conduct a same sex wedding and I should be entitled not to do so. There should be a level playing field; I'm happy to let the gay community live as they see fit, but I should not be punished in anyway just because I hold that the traditional marriage of one man and one women (that has served the nations for centuries) is the best for the country. The government may promise to guard celebrants from any discrimination, but they do not have the authority to provide this, because the European human rights people can overturn our well intentioned wee meaningless laws!
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

As already stated, there is absolutely no need to change this. The gay couple already has all the rights and privileges that they require to live their lives here in Scotland. This is a nightmare; the family unit will not recognised if this is allowed. Already the gay lobby is seeking to abolish words like; mum, dad! Again, if someone wishes to life with someone of the same sex that is non of my business, but they should not be allowed to "force" the nation to agree with their view of sexuality.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

Never!! Is the government not listening! Why should a gay couple be allowed to marry in a religious building when they know that those who worship thier disagree with their views. Churches, mosques, synagogues etc must never be held to ransom by this mino

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

If a religious body holds to the traditional view of marriage, they ought to be allowed to practice that without the fear of reprisals. Each religious body must be allowed to practice their centuries long beliefs in the way they have always done. Some groups may choose to register civil partnerships and others will not wish to do so. Both should be free to do this and no group should be felt that the country is against them for living according to their faith and conscience.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

I'm not fully educated on this issue and would not wnat to say the wrong thing.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

This is the biggest issue over the same- sex debate in my opinion. We have already seen in both England and Scotland how people have been discriminated against over this problem. The Scottish government has no real authority to promise protection for the majority of the nation who still support traditional marriage. People have lost their jobs over this issue and the gay community could not care less about this, as long as they get what they want. We need to be realistic, many do not support same-sex marriage and they must like the gay couple be allowed to express that without the fear of discrimination. If I refuse to marry a gay couple or refuse to make their wedding cake(former baker) will I go to jail? Most faith based adoption agencies in the UK have closed over this issue. It is massive!!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I love Scotland! I love living here, I love being Scottish, I love the people of Scotland. I love the FREEDOM of speech we enjoy together. I love the diversity of Scotland. We must never lose this. We are free to support any football team we like, eat any style of food we like, go anywhere we like in our beautiful country. I love all that! I love folk being able to give their opinions on every and all subjects, even although we know their talking mince! It's great! No one is discriminated against because they like Hamilton Accies and Chinese food and love to tell their workmates about it. So why on such an important issue as this should the nation not be free to air their views with respect without being afraid of the gay protection police!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Only to say, I pray for our nation, for our children and for our government that they will do what is best for the country. For those already here and for those yet to be born. This is such a massive issue. Redefining marriage is not our right. This looks like progress but in fact it is the opposite. What will be next; a three way marriage (like Holland), Brothers and Sisters wanting their rights to marry each other. The paedophile wanting his rights to marry a 11 year old child. Extreme I know, but tampering with this beautiful gift of marriage will leave us all in a pit we may never get out of. THINK PLEASE! Have courage to do the RIGHT thing.

Are you responding as...

- a celebrant
- a faith/belief-based organisation

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

For over a decade I have felt very strongly about this issue. I believe that separating marriage for heterosexual couples and civil partnerships for same sex couples is discriminatory. As a gay youth I particularly felt excluded and "not good enough" for marriage. Marriage is a normal milestone in our society and I believe that all adults who love each other should have the same opportunity to express their views through marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I believe religious organisations should have the right to choose.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

Not allowing this is extremely limiting and unnecessary.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support this as I believe that transgender persons face an enormous amount of discrimination.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I feel that because religious bodies will have the opportunity to opt out, that this bill serves our wider population well.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I do not feel that this bill will negatively affect freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships is missing from this Bill. I believe that the same choices - marriage or civil partnership - should be open to all couples regardless of their gender.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

While I have many friends who are openly homosexual, I am opposed to the change in the definition of marriage. Such a change would, in my view, be a breach of my rights. Among my homosexual friends, I have yet to find a single one who wants this legislation. All appear to feel that it will do more harm than good.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I believe that the definition of marriage, the union of one man with one woman, should stay as it is. A large majority of my friends, both gay and not, hold the same view.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

All individuals must be given the opportunity to express their conscience and be protected, not forced to undertake acts that would be genuinely unacceptable. The rights of these individuals must be protected.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I do not believe that this legislation is necessary, nor that it should go ahead.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

From my discussions with a range of gay and non-gay friends, I see no demand for this. I conclude that the issue is being pressed by a small, unrepresentative minority. The introduction of this change would, I believe, be an infringement of my rights.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

From my discussions with a wide range of gay and non-gay friends, I see no demand for this and I believe the change should not go ahead.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

This would clearly be an infringement of the rights of many thousands who are opposed to such a change and goes against the views of the vast majority of Christian leaders.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Such individuals require considerable compassion and understanding. Over the years I have known several such individuals. However, I cannot accept that such a definition of marriage is acceptable, to my conscience, therefore, if this change was forced through, I would see it as an infringement of my rights.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It is absolutely vital that the rights of this majority group are protected. I believe that the large majority do not want this change and they should not be compelled to accept it. Religious leaders have clearly expressed their grave concern over these proposals.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

someone who want equil right for every one

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This Bill is a huge step forward, but it contains some significant problem areas and areas of discrimination.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I support this fully and welcome it.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

I agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise same-sex marriages, mixed-sex marriages, or both. However, groups and celebrants should not have to take an additional step to treat people equally: if they do not wish to celebrate same-sex marriages, they should have to opt out. I support opt-out procedures rather than opt-in procedures. Celebrants, belief and religious groups, and couples should also have the option of using gender-free language for mixed-sex marriages.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

In the bill, couples who are already in a civil partnership can only marry in Scotland if their civil partnership was registered in Scotland. There is no reason why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should not be allowed to marry in Scotland in the usual way. The current draft of the bill would cause real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland. They will be unable to change to a marriage unless they first dissolve their civil partnership. This requires proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down, by living apart for a year. It is unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry. Even if they return to the country where they registered their civil partnership, if that country... does not allow same-sex marriage, they would need to dissolve their civil partnership there in a similar way before coming back to Scotland to marry. The practical result will be that the couple will effectively be barred from marrying. In contrast, same-sex couples from any part of the world who are not in a civil partnership will be allowed come to Scotland to marry, whether or not that marriage would be recognised in their home country. There is no reason why this should not also apply to couples who are already in a civil partnership, and the bill should be amended to allow this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Marriages (and civil partnerships) should be able to take place anywhere the registrar and couple wish and agree to have it. This is a matter of religious liberty.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I fully support the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I support the right of transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full, legal Gender Recognition Certificate. However, there are some serious problems with the proposed wording in the draft bill, which need amendment. As the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. This enables the spouse to effectively veto the trans person’s gender recognition, or at least to delay it while the transgender person applies for a divorce. If the relationship between the spouses is difficult, the divorce proceedings could take a long time, during which the transgender person is unable to access their human right to legal recognition in their true gender. When a transgender person applies for gender recognition, they have already been living in their acquired gender for at least two years. Obtaining gender recognition does not therefore change the practical nature of their marriage, which has been same-sex for at least two years. But it does free the transgender person from discrimination by bringing their legal status into line with reality. That should be available with or without the spouse’s consent, because it is a matter personal to the transgender person, and has no direct effect on their spouse. It is the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition where both spouses have a direct interest, and where a requirement for the consent of the transgender person’s spouse would be appropriate. Spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-transgender spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. When a person has been transitioned for a long time, it can be very difficult indeed to obtain all the medical evidence that is required from people who have only been transitioned two years. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. Therefore, a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill: this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. It would also be good for the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The bill provides strong protections for those who may have concerns about same-sex marriage. I strongly oppose the proposal to give civil registrars a right to opt out of performing same-sex marriages. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race. The registrars’ organisation, the Association of Registrars of Scotland, is not calling for an opt-out. The registering of civil partnerships in Scotland by civil registrars has worked well without any such legal opt-out, and the registering of same-sex marriages can be expected to work equally well in a similar way. I also strongly oppose the proposal to allow teachers to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a student asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, which is equally controversial for some people. Opt-outs should not be allowed in this case, either.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There are strong protections for freedom of speech within the bill.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

It is deeply disappointing that this bill, while it represents progress in so many ways, fall so short of equal marriage. I have discussed this in my responses to questions 7, 8, and 11. In addition, the bill falls short of equal marriage in its failure to introduce mixed-sex civil partnerships. I welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law, driven by the need to consider the position on opposite sex civil partnership. This review should start without delay, and, once it is complete, there should be prompt legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. In addition, the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clear discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation, to report by July 2014. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and we strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete.

Are you responding as...

- a celebrant
- a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The Bill is unnecessary and a distraction from matters which are of importance to the general population. All the legal rights of marriage are already available to same-sex couples through civil partnerships. There is no great demand for same-sex marriage and the other measures contained in the Bill.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage is a relationship between a man and a woman for the purpose of companionship and the procreation of children. It is based upon the objective reality of the complementarity of two created genders (male and female). The procreative potential of the institution of marriage is intrinsic to its nature and role in society. This is the reason the state recognises marriage in law.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

I believe it is wrong to put belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants. One does not BELIEVE in God and the other DOES.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It seems that there is less and less determination amongst politicians to build in protections for those in society who have concerns about same-sex marriage as has been seen by the bill passed recently in England and Wales. Why, when the word 'equality' is bandied about in relation to same-sex marriage, is the same word so sadly lacking when those who do not, within their own conscience, subscribe to the trend and are termed 'homophobic' or 'bigots'? Would the Scottish Government put in place protections for heterosexuals to protect them from unfounded charges of 'homophobia' made by homosexual people i.e. 'heterophobia'?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I have witnessed television programmes where people who do not subscribe to same-sex marriage have been bullied, ridiculed, accused of being homophobic and verbally attacked. People are now becoming frightened of expressing their views for fear of retribution from the homosexual community. Will the Scottish Government give a categoric guarantee that it will never become illegal to speak openly in support of the role of traditional heterosexual marriage?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

This question needs to be simplified. Plain, simplified English, layman's terms must be used.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

Agreed between the couple and the registrar being key. This is a private agreement, not subject to the whims of the irrelevant public.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
If the other party to the marriage wishes to dissolve the marriage on this basis, they should have available. Private agreement is key, not procedural whims of irrelevant parties.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Same sex marriage must have the same consequences as traditional marriages - it must have the same inheritance, tax, savings, married persons allowances, consideration, fees, rights, responsibilities, liabilities and treatment etc. in all ways.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

- an academic
- an LGBT group
- a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It should not be a concern, it is a basic right - time for Scotland to be civilised on that issue.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...
a private individual
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

I am strongly in support of this Bill. It is important for the state to recognise the relationships of gay and lesbian people equally with those of heterosexuals.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Same sex couples should be able to marry just as opposite-sex couples do. Passage of the Bill would mean that, for the first time, my relationship with my same-sex partner will be treated equally with heterosexual marriages. Please pass the Bill!

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I am in support. I am a Quaker, and it is important to me that Quakers be allowed to celebrate same-sex marriages, as we want to do.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

People in civil partnerships who wish to change their partnership to a marriage should be able to do so. For example, my partner and I are in a civil partnership (which was established in the USA). We consider ourselves married and would like to have state recognition of this. It is important to us that we be able to change our relationship status to "married". My understanding is that the current language of the Bill would require us to dissolve our civil partnership (with great difficulty) and then remarry. This is effectively unworkable and is unfair. I don't think the Scottish government should compound previous discrimination (not allowing us to marry in the past) by effectively barring us from marrying in the future. I hope that this language can be rewritten before passage of the Bill.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I believe there is a significant danger that churches and ministers who refuse to marry same sex couples will be subject to litigation. Although Scottish law may seek to defend those who do not wish to conduct same sex marriages, ultimately such matters would be decided by the European Court of Human Rights.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe freedom of speech and freedom of conscience to be fundamental in a civilised, tolerant society.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

- a celebrant
- a faith/belief-based organisation
- a faith/belief local group or congregation

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Nobody should have to do it who objects. I’m sure nobody would want to be married by somebody who didn’t want to do so.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
I think civil partnerships should still be available for same sex couples and for opposite sex couples also.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
I think the recognition of someone’s gender should not affect the status of a marriage or civil partnership
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I think that people should be entitled to freedom of speech but in the same way that racism is a crime so should homophobia and should be treated the same. Although it is often hard to categorise which terms are homophobic, there should definitely be some official guidelines, like with discrimination, to which phrases are not acceptable for those who don't fully understand the nature of the LGBTQ community.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I think that in terms of gender recognition there should be something relating to the recognition of not only people who are transgender and identify as a man or a woman but of people who are genderqueer. So genders which fall into this category; gender non-binary, bi-gender, the third gender, gender fluid, agender to name a few.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

We are making a fundamental change to the fabric of our society to accommodate a tiny group of people who will gain no further legal or other rights no enhanced status, in short no material benefit. The bill is not only unwelcome but unnecessary.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

See my answer to Question 4.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Great care needs to be taken to safeguard people from possible prosecution arising from some feeling free to marry same-sex couples whereas others do not. The case of registrars or ministers of religion spring to mind.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

See my answer to Question 4. The change is unwelcome and unnecessary.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

This whole area is a minefield. It is not clear that the Scottish Parliament can provide any adequate protection given that the European Court of Human Rights can always trump our legislation (it would seem). Many are going to be vulnerable. Are we really comfortable with the prospect of teachers, ministers, social workers and others being taken to court for alleged discrimination, arising from the simple fact that they cannot in good conscience accept or promote same-sex marriage? Or are we prepared to countenance good, hard-working capable employees losing their job or be denied promotion over this issue? Once this legislation is passed a can of worms will be opened and it is difficult to foresee all the consequences.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

This a huge area of concern for many people as there seems to have been a marked erosion of freedom of speech in recent years. To say in public "The Bible clearly teaches that homosexual practice is wrong" invites arrest (and people have been arrested!) Of course that is a statement of opinion that should be challenged not by arrest but by a request for it to be justified. But there are many, many examples where a statement of opinion results in a court case when there was no intention to offend or discriminate. If someone were to say to me that Mathematics as taught in university is useless for society I could take offence or I could argue the opposite. The police seem to be applying the law in a thoughtless way (to put the best construction on things). Whatever happens in the rest of the UK, at least in Scotland let us promote free speech realising that strong opinions will cause offence.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition
Disastrous for Scotland and the UK.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
The thin end of the wedge.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition
If it ain't broke don't fix it.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We are now seeing Christians being sacked and denied jobs because of their beliefs. This is all wrong. In Tower Hamlets they even investigated a woman teacher because she went to church. Incredible!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I am in favour of freedom of speech but it must be responsible and not bigoted. For example, in my opinion, Stonewall is the most bigoted organisation I know because they accuse all opponents of being homophobic which is quite untrue.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The UK and Western World in general is in grave danger of disintegrating. Not enough indigenous children are being born to balance the workplace which means future pensioners will not have enough people in work to support them. I wonder what the Muslim population of the UK think about same sex marriage and what will happen when they become a majority? Food for thought!

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This will be a big step forward for same sex couples and the SNP government should be congratulated for taking this bold step.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Strongly in support but there should be two versions of marriage (for same sex and mixed sex couples). I welcome that the Bill puts forward a single version of marriage for all.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I welcome this proposal as there are many same sex couples in Scotland who would like to move to marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The Bill strikes the right balance and offers protection to those people who have concerns about same sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to this.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech, as section 14 of the bill confirms. People will remain free to disagree with same-sex marriage and to express that disagreement publicly. The Lord Advocate’s guidance published with the bill makes clear that it is not a crime to disagree publicly with same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

1. Marriage is a reflection of the Divine Trinity and the Saviour's relationship with His church. Same-sex unions cannot reflect this 2. Children develop emotionally best with both sexes as parents. 3. The man is the head and primary authority in the ho

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

1. The legal union of two persons of the same sex can never be marriage therefore it cannot be treated in the same way. It cannot be the same because marriage is basically legitimising the union of two person to give the offspring of that union a legal st

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It seems that those whose consciences cannot allow them to approve of S-S Marriage will face hostility and a programme of aggression from those who insist that their S-S Status is fully equal to Marriage. This will create a divided and self destructive society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Marriage is between a man and a woman. If a homosexual couple want a civil partnership in law then I have no problem with that but marriage is between a man and a woman. Traditional Religious belief on this should be protected. It is a human right to have freedom of belief and conscience and the right to freedom of speech. That is what made Scotland great in the past in that our country was one where you could debate and have different views on subjects.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

See above.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

But what beliefs exactly!? People can belief in whatever - will they be able to celebrate or conduct a marriage a marriage under their beliefs. I think marriage would be undermined if this were to happen.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

As said previously, only one man and one woman should be married. Once you redefine marriage, all sorts of options are available - see Holland (who I believe are debating this and Brazil I believe where there has been a three way union legalised.) Also, Calvin Klein has said if he could marry his cat, he would! Where does it end? Marry your brother, sister, child etc. How would celebrants feel about having to conduct same sex marriages when they themselves might be against it? You could be causing them to go against their own beliefs. Their human rights must be protected.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition
Normal to be honest. Most people, in their hearts, do 'feel' that society is based on the union of a man and woman - how else are we to survive? and that it is best for children.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

No, if they are going to take place, it must just be in the registrar's office.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I would be against religious belief registration. As said before, traditional religious belief supports the idea of one man and one woman.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

That would be unacceptable because then it would be two women or two men married, which is the same a same sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People who disagree, or say or even think, that same sex marriage is unacceptable or even wrong, must have their right to do so upheld and protected. Yes, it might be 'offensive' to some but then again another's views might be 'offensive' to someone else? Are everyone's rights going to be upheld? Whose rights are more worthy of being upheld or protected? The Scottish Govt.in its 'egalitarian' approach must ensure, that all its citizens rights and views have to be protected. Also, teacher's, who are supposed to give all sides of the argument, are they going to be prosecuted (of perhaps be disciplined or even lose their jobs) for even giving a viewpoint to the kids that is not what 'the Govt. want'. I hope not!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Yes, it is a human night and yes, sometimes views are different and offensive (depending on your viewpoint of what is offensive of course - the adage -one man's meat is another man's poison comes to mind) but all of us must be able to express what we believe/ think whether others like it or not. Surely, that is what democracy is about.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
Society is going to be radically altered. Once marriage is redefined, society will be weakened. Look at the state of society at the moment where there is a lack of respect for it - social problems, high teenage pregnancies, children not seeing their fathers or grandparents, high suicide rates among young men (lack of knowing what it is to be man?), when you change this to accommodate a few, what other consequences are going to follow? Can the Govt ensure that all sections of society will be protected in they disagree with this bill? They have to otherwise you have exchanged one 'inequality' with another.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
It is as fair and honest as is probably possible.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
It is essentially about allowing people to exercise their human rights.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Their views should be respected; however, their views are not superior to those who wish for equal marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Marriage is not a religious ceremony and has never been. What's more, homosexuality has always been part of society and should not be stigmatised or legally banned from full civil participation.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Religious organisations and their officials should not be compelled to offer same sex marriages or civil partnerships. Registrars, as public sector workers, should not be able to opt out of offering this service to same-sex couples. Same sex marriages will affect same sex couples who choose to get married. People who are against same sex marriage on religious grounds will not be affected, and will not lose anything, should a same sex couple marry. Schools should not be able to teach that same sex relationships or marriages are morally wrong but offer unbiased information.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The issue of same sex marriage is one of equality. With this bill we reflect within the country’s laws, the intention to create equality. There is no rational opposition to the demand for equality.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

There is a wider debate to be had on the nature of marriage as a historically problematic institution, but it cannot be had while access to the institution is denied to, or in its nature denies the experiences of, any number of our citizens.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

"Concerns" are already fully protected by civil rights; we all have the right the right to think whatever we like. There is no warrant to protect acted-out anti-gay bigotry.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is not nearly enough protection for freedom of speech. In particular, such freedoms should not be curtailed by the claim of having been 'offended'.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

It is taking far to long to enact this legislation. I am 66. I would like the opportunity to marry before I die.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
strongly supports and welcomes the bill. It will be a huge step forward for equality in Scotland, and it balances equality with respect for freedom of religion and freedom of speech.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
The opt in system is the best way to allow those who do want to solemnise same sex ceremonies to be able to do so whilst respecting those faiths/denominations and belief communities that would rather not solemnise same sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Bill strikes the right balance, and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to. Even where an organisation does agree, individual marriage celebrants within that organisation will be free to opt-out of same-sex marriages, as will any person who plays a part in the religious marriage ceremonies of that organisation (eg the church organist). These are strong protections - I would however object to allowing a registrar to opt out of registering a same sex marriage as it is part of their actual job.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I understand and accept the right of people to oppose same sex marriage. They are entitled to that view. I don't think, however, that they are entitled to impose that view on the whole of Scotland. I don't think the impact on them of two same sex people marrying is sufficient to outweigh the significant impact on the same sex people of the current law which prevents them marrying. It is about balancing interests and the current situation impacts disproportionately on same sex couples who want to marry.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I don't think freedom of speech is relevant here.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

It is unnecessary. It has nothing to do with equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

It is a contradiction in terms. Marriage can not be redefined by statute.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

Se a danderous precedent

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As a teacher I do not believe there is protection for those who believe in traditional marriage. As a church leader I must have the freedom to express clear Christian teaching.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It is a mark of a democracy and must never be impinged

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Elder and teacher

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The Bill is extremely important. I am proud that Scotland was among the first countries to seriously consider and begin this process. I am disappointed that we are now falling behind. This Bill makes me proud and hopeful for Scotland's future.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

As a gay or queer-identifying woman, it makes me feel like I will have a home here in Scotland, like I am valued here. Scotland is one of the world leaders when it comes to the equality of lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people - particularly when it came to protecting the rights of transgender individuals. I think it is vital to protect the rights of all people, both here in Scotland and internationally. Marriage is valued so highly and holds such meaning to many, there is no reason why it should not be introduced in Scotland. This marriage should be the SAME for all couples, regardless of gender.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I am in support of this absolutely.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

I am in support of this, but agree with the Equality Network's call for a small amendment here to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I agree that those who wish to change their civil partnership to a marriage should indeed be able to do so, and that those who wish to remain in a civil partnership should not be forced to change to a marriage. However, I don't understand or agree why this option will not be available to couples outwith Scotland, given the huge negative ramifications of this for those couples - it is not their fault that they didn't have the option to marry, and I don't think they should be penalised for this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I think this flexibility is important to enable all people who wish to be married to do so in a way that is meaningful and significant for them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I believe that it is worth providing this as an option, yes.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I support the proposition to allow transgender people to stay married when obtaining a full gender recognition certificate and believe this will benefit many many couples - forcing them to dissolve their marriage is needlessly cruel and can provide further distress at what may well be a stressful time already. I disagree that an individual will need their spouse's permission to transition. This seems completely unnecessary and opens up the possibility for abusive spouses to refuse consent and then potentially delay any divorce procedures. I don't see how this can be in line with an individual's human rights. There is no way that an individual's application for a GR Certificate will suddenly impact on a marriage, as part of the requirement is that this individual has lived in their gender for at least two years. It is the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition where both spouses have a direct interest, and where a requirement for the consent of the trans person's spouse would be appropriate. The English legislation contains different requirements for those who have been transitioned for over 6 years which ought to be introduced here. It is practically extremely difficult for such individuals to obtain all of the required evidence and so this should be simplified in line with English legislation. The minimum age for requesting a GRC should be in line with Scotland's minimum age for marrying, 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

This bill provides protection for those who disagree. It has been proposed by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. We would strongly oppose that. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It is extremely important that teachers should not be allowed to opt out of discussing same-sex marriage. This then becomes an issue of the pupil experiencing discrimination under the equality act - refusing to inform students of LGBT issues serves to further marginalise LGBT young people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

This bill will protect the rights of same sex couples and LGBT people more widely.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I wish to echo the Equality Network’s sentiments on the issue of private pensions, detailed here: Finally, we note that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and that under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clear discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation, to report by July 2014. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and we strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...
a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I do not believe any protection is required.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
No

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Two people who love each other should have the right to get married, irrelevant of their sex. The same sex marriage bill will allow equality so that two people, no matter what gender, will be able to get married if they so wish. I also feel that it is app

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I agree that religious body's and belief organisations should have the option to choose not to perform same sex marriages should they not wish.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

This allows for equality, as well as this marriages should not be seen as 'same-sex marriages' and 'mixed-sex marriages' but simply all should be seen as marriages in a continuing effort towards equality.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
To not allow same sex couples to marry is discrimination

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
There should be no segregation just because its same sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Poorly worded question
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

While I appreciate the importance of protecting people’s rights and upholding the principle of equality, it appears to me that this bill goes beyond any proper understanding of equality. I believe that everything that can possibly be done in this respect has already been achieved in Civil Partnership legislation. What is being sought here (in the same-sex marriage bill) is something that denies the reality of biological difference; it debases the complementarity of the two sexes i.e., the fact that we were created male and female. It is a bill that most certainly impinges on the rights of those whose consciences direct them to maintain that same-sex marriage (not homosexuality per se) is wrong. It is important to be clear about this latter distinction, because a true understanding of equality hinges upon it e.g., there are many areas of conduct in heterosexual relations that, equally, are morally wrong.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I cannot see what purpose is served by expending so much time, energy and other resources in promoting something that is unnecessary. I say unnecessary, because I simply cannot see what vitally important new legal rights are being obtained for same-sex co

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

I imagine that there are many grey areas when it comes to distinguishing belief celebrants from religious celebrants, but on my own understanding I would say that a key difference is that all religious celebrants look to God, the Supreme Being, as the pro

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I’m not sure that it’s clear either from the Bill or from the explanatory notes what the position is with regard to the opt-in procedures, but if the Bill sets the default position to be that religious or belief bodies have to opt in to be abl
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

As I hope I’ve made clear in my response to questions 4 and 5, I see no grounds for civil partnerships changing to marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

I have no objection to allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and the registrar.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I do not believe that religious registration of civil partnerships should be allowed (for reasons given in my answer to Question 6). With regard to belief registration, I feel that the decision on whether or not to register civil partnerships should refl

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Transgender issues are, for me at least, too complex to be treated in a clear, straightforward manner that would be required for this Call for Evidence. I do not feel competent, therefore, to answer this particular question.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The matter of protections for those who have serious concerns about same-sex marriage is probably where my greatest anxiety lies, for I have not been persuaded that any “right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion” will stand up when brought into conflict with other rights. All too often, I feel, conscience and religion are viewed as nebulous, easily dispensable aspects of human rights, and are all-too-readily overridden by the more immediately practicable/definable areas of human rights. For those who exercise a living religious faith, conscience is a matter of the first importance. The reason this is so, is that, central to the beliefs of many religions, is the sense of accountability before God for our conduct while here on earth; the way we act on earth — our motives, our thoughts, words and deeds — affects our destiny in eternity. For those who have a clear grasp of this perspective, it governs our whole way of life in the present world.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

A private individual licensed for lay ministry in the Church, i.e. not ordained.

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
A huge and necessary step in the process of achieving an equal and discrimination free society

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
marriage is to be completely equal and available to all people

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
religious freedom is important

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
an easy administrative process should be made automatically available

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
People can't help who they fall in love with. If two people want to make a commitment to each other they should be able to
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

No

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Everyone should be equal

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This Bill is long overdue and equality should be commonplace in today's society. I would like to be able to tell my children they can grow up and love who they wish, and be able to show that love equally.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Love is love.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Marriage is between two people who love each other. Gender should not be the deciding factor.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It truly worries me that we would have to protect people who simply wish to marry the one they love.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It is never black and white - I think there are situations where you should exercise this right, and others when you should consider what you should say more carefully.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
As the Lord said: "Judge not, lest ye be judged." And as Ricky Gervais said: "Freedom of speech is a right. Being listened to, being taken seriously or being respected for what you say, is not. Get over it."

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

I strongly oppose the introduction of the same sex marriage into the Scottish Bill on Marriage and Civil Partnership. Marriage is an institution which lies at the very foundations of our society and has been defined in our culture over centuries. This bill

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Being in opposition to same-sex marriage I feel that the government is persistently ignoring the views of those who oppose the Bill. Such a drastic change which strikes at the core of the definition of marriage should never be introduced with such a great opposition to it and with all the concerns of the people arguing against it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Once marriage has been redefined many aspects, not at present under consideration, may well be given recognition in the future. e.g. the legalization of polygamy, three-way relationships etc. Such has, in fact, been the case in the Netherlands. By intr

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

In England at present, a homosexual couple are planning to go to court in an attempt to force churches to host gay weddings. (Essex Chronicle 1st August 2012) Should this come before the European Court of Human Rights it is quite possible that any protections in Scottish Law could be overturned. As the law provides for doctors to opt-out of performing abortions if they conscientiously object to abortion, registrars, religious and belief celebrants should be afforded the same protection. Those holding to traditional views about marriage should not be prevented from fostering or adopting. After all same-sex couples are given the right to foster and adopt and they hold strong views about same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The issue of freedom of speech in this context is vital because people get into difficulties through expressing their beliefs about marriage. Apart from a declaratory clause which has no practical impact (Clause 14) the Government's Bill doesn't address th

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
It's a good bill and must be passed.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Nobody should be discriminated against because of who they love and love isn't about discrimination. The only people it affects are gay people so I reject the nonsense why two people of the same gender shouldn't be allowed to be married based on one's religious beliefs since religion is already protected from participating.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
Not all religious celebrants are against equal marriage and neither are those of beliefs or no beliefs. I strongly believe people of any belief should be allowed to celebrate same-sex marriages.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Strongly support that. Those who do not wish to should be protected from doing so. Freedom of religion is also about those denominations who wish to celebrate same-sex marriages too. No religious denomination should be able to dictate what others should and should not do in this respect.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I think those who wish to retain civil partnerships should be able to. I also think heterosexuals should have access to them. I support upgrading civil partnerships to marriages for those who want it and at no additional cost.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Strongly support that

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I support it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

As long as both parties are in agreement, I have no problem with it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It cannot be said enough but people of faith and those of no faith who are opposed to same-sex marriage should be re-assured that this will not affect them in any way. It does not impact their marriages, doesn't prevent them from getting married and having their own beliefs about it. As I said in another comment, the only people this law will affect are gay couples, nobody else.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Opponents should be allowed to voice their opposition as long as its purpose is not to incite hatred or foment homophobia. It should be done in a polite manner with respect for all.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Nothing I can think of.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Gender recognition is unnecessary for the marriage process.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The bill does have some issues with how trans people could be treated, but it is otherwise a very good opportunity for Scotland and equality as a whole in Europe.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I am in support of same sex marriage, and feel that it should be granted on the same level as heterosexual marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

Civil partnerships should still exist, but there should be a procedure to change those to marriages - civil partnerships can hold more worth to those opposed to the religious aspect of marriage - even if the marriage procedure does not exist within a religious institution's building or by their ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This should be allowed not just for comfort but also for what it can mean between a couple - a place that isn't religious can potentially be worth more to the couple.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

There should also be provisions to allow a transgender person to divorce should the other person in the couple not agree - denying such can be seen as abuse, and transgender persons are one of the most abused groups in all of society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

A person who is transgender should not be denied their gender change if one in the couple does not agree to this - a divorce should be permissible for this reason, to avoid abuse of the transgender person by the partner of the trans person, due to the common abuse of trans people in general, seen as weak and vulnerable.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The sign of a civilised society is how it treats minorities as well as the majority of people who exist in it and, by passing this bill the Scottish Government will send a strong signal that it upholds equality for all of its citizens irrespective of their gender or sexuality

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I am in support of the right to equal equality and availability of marriage and civil partnerships to all citizens regardless of sexual orientation.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Such as important an institution as marriage should be available to all citizens regardless of gender or orientation. Sexual orientation is not chosen, so to deny the availability of marriage equally to all constitutes discrimination and this piece of legislation attempts to remedy that. An equal society is a fair society and will eventually lead to a society more at ease with itself and less divisive.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I would welcome this as I consider that belief or a lack thereof nor religion should entitle or deprive anyone from an equal footing in society. Those who do not have a religion will no doubt wish to benefit from the same advantages that opposite gender marriage currently offers to groups such as humanists.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I think that religions and belief organisations should be able to determine their own choices in whether or not to celebrate same gender marriage whether by opt-in or opt-out. The legislation has chosen opting in and I support the right for religious groups to determine how they celebrate marriage and whether they offer same gender marriage either now or in the future.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
I would support this. Many couples may wish to further validate their partnership as a marriage without having to participate in a new ceremony. It makes sense to include this in the bill.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I would welcome this as many couples already choose locations for marriage that are a mixture of religious or non-religious venues. With many in society choosing a belief structure that is not always strictly aligned with an existing religious doctrine, a range of venues allows them to choose a venue according to their conscience.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Many LGBT individuals have strong religious convictions and would welcome the choice to celebrate their marriage with a religious ceremony where the religion chooses to accept same gender marriage. This would be a welcome benefit for all.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I would welcome this. Where an individual opts for a gender recognition change and where their existing partner wishes to stay with them, it would be an unnecessary encumbrance to expect a couple to divorce and remarry where there is agreement within the existing marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Whilst I find that I cannot accept many of the arguments proposed for refusing to accept same sex marriage, I respect that in a free and fair democratic society that those with differing views to my own must be free to express them provided that expressing those views does not cause harm or discriminate anothers freedom. Teachers should not be forced to teach only a single view as long as their own views do not harm LGBT children in their care by teaching discriminatory views. Religious organisations should be free to express their religious doctrines as long as they do not use this as a weapon to discriminate in the services that they offer to society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is crucial to a fair society. Even those who teach hateful or harmful things are better held to account by free and frank discussion than by suppression. That said, there is a point at which we should not allow all speech regardless of how much hate it may contain as a great deal of damage can be done to the human spirit by discrimination/oppression. It is right, therefore, that legislation permits free speech whilst protecting vulnerable individuals from hate speech. It is a difficult balancing act but one where we should always be looking to ensure that all legislation balances the rights and responsibilities of everyone in society.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
I would like my friends to have the choice of marriage in the same sense that I have it

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Very welcome the idea and our society should embrace this

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither
Not sure what qualifications a belief celebrant has

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
People should have the choice of a non-religious wedding

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Very supportive - I have a few friends who would love to marry their partners

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Same for all

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
Some of my gay friends are members of church groups and I want them to have their beliefs recognised.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I have no specific comments.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It's a progression of society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

This is an issue that I support, but not when it's for intolerance or abuse of others.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No comments.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Long overdue equality.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
Bill brings clarity.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
As much as I disagree with the religious views held which say same sex relationships are against the teaching of the bible I do believe everyone has a right to their beliefs - the bill gives lot out options and I agree with that.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Both should be options so civil partners shouldn't be forced to marry. I think the bill achieves this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
I actually thought this was already possible.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Don't know enough on this to offer opinion.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As a Christian in a same sex relationship I know how strongly held some opinions are. But I also know that those true believers also recognise that God loves us all. I would not want the law to force anyone’s hand. Eventually God will lead all true believers to see the light and understand that love is love, no matter the sex of the individuals.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
My opinion should not matter. It is a private matter between consenting adults, in which equality should be axiomatic.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
As long as those who's status changes are the ones who have made the decision.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Religion should be a non-factor unless those getting married choose for it to be

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Requiring that someone halt a marriage to change gender when all parties involved want to remain married is nonsensical, this should again be an individual choice.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Protected from what. I'm concerned about different sex marriage, where's my protection?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The only people who will be affected by the introduction of same sex marriage are those couples who are denied equality and choice at the moment. No other disenfranchised group are denied rights in society like this and it is time that the government pushes society to treat people equally!!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
No, I wouldn't.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
No.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I'm worried about teenagers and how stressful it can be when you are that age and know that you are gay but know that family and possibly friends too will not accept this. The more things that we can make "equal" for heterosexual and gay lifestyles, the

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Very much in support, this is something that needs to be changed and is ridiculous that it hasn't already. It is horribly unfair to expect trans* people to separate from their partners while they obtain the certificate, this should be a bigger priority, a

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Equality matters.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Should person wish it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Equality for all matters.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is different from hate speech. Speech which uses homophobic transphobic language should not be tolerated.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Civil partnerships for different gender couples should be available.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I want to be treated and viewed as equal to my friends and family, somehow civil partnership is still viewed as not quick as committed as marriage

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

Strongly agree to this as a route to equality

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

A is currently with heterosexual marriage

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Tis is a matter for the couple not the state

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think that the wider society requires educated in respect to equality there is protection needed to same sex couples not society

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Only in so much as it falls within the bounds of other laws such as not being able to have freedom to be homophobic

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am proud to live in a country where the powers at be and laws support my right to equality and where I now have a right to be equal and feel equal what a long way we have travelled since I was a teenager.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The Humanist Society Scotland (HSS) heartily endorse the thrust of the Bill and the intention behind it, to create a more equal Scotland. As the fundamental principle behind Humanism is that every human deserves equal rights, the HSS fully supports both allowing same sex couples to marry and equalising the status of Belief celebrants. As believers in a secular state where all are treated equally, the HSS regrets that within this Bill heterosexual couples will not have a right to form civil partnership but welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law and promptly enact legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally the HSS would like to see the criteria on which organisations are judged as suitable to conduct marriage being applied equally. In chapter 3, section 2 of the Bill this would require an amendment to the Bill which would remove the privileged status of The Church of Scotland currently enshrined in section 8 (1) (a) (i) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977. For clarity and to reflect their equal status in law, where previously some titles of Christian Celebrants eg, minister, priest or pastor have been specifically included, these specifics in the Bill are replaced throughout by the phrase Celebrant of a Religious or Belief body.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

This bill removes discrimination

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I strongly support this, I see no need for privilege given to Church personnel.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

The HSS supports the right of celebrants of all beliefs and religions to opt out. We appreciate the care that has been taken to allow a conscience opt-out for individual celebrants where their organisation has opted in to conducting same sex marriages.
We are therefore disappointed that the reciprocal freedom of conscience has not been granted to allow individual celebrants within opted-out organisations from individually choosing to conduct same sex marriages and civil partnerships. A small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious or belief bodies that wish to, should be permitted to continue to use the “husband and wifeâ€” gendered form of the marriage ceremony, and same sex couples should be also be given the choice of wording within a civil marriage.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

There should be no costs involved in changing a civil partnership to a marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I agree with this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

I believe that it should be up to the couple to choose the type of legal recognition they want for their relationship.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

All discrimination should be illegal.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

When considering calls for conscience clauses or protection of freedom of speech on this issue, I would ask for equal marriage to be treated in the same way as equality law on race, gender or disability and those with other protected characteristics.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
The HSS agree with politicians and the Registrar General that conducting marriages should not be a business. As a charity, the ceremonies carried out by our celebrants are only part of our work but we are concerned that some charities have been set up which appear to be operating as marriage businesses. We therefor we welcome the modification to Section 12: Temporary Authorisation and, for clarification, that the criteria for suitable organisation should be defined as in section 10 (4) (a), and we request that if no other criteria for temporary authorisation should be permitted.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

Humanist Society Scotland Celebrant

23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I think that the Bill is gratuitous - it arises neither from a manifesto commitment nor from any widespread public concern. It may be that there is no great public opposition to it, but I believe that if enacted it will have a corrosive effect on the institution of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

It is unnecessary from a statutory point of view - as I understand it, all the legal protections associated with marriage are already afforded to same-sex couples through the civil partnership legislation. It is an affront to the dictionary definition of marriage, which is a sexual union between a man and a woman - for the purpose of mutual support and the rearing of children. I understand that what is proposed is not even "equal" marriage, in that in heterosexual marriage unfaithfulness will remain a ground for divorce, but not in same-sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Churches - I understand that cases against churches unwilling to celebrate same-sex marriage may end up in the European Court of Human Rights, with the risk that the protection afforded by the Bill could be overruled. Officials - in particular chaplains, teachers and registrars, but possibly going wider - who have scruples about same-sex marriage could be dismissed. Even ordinary employees expressing views on the matter could be at risk, if their management has adopted an "equality" policy. Parents may well be concerned about the teaching given to children in sex education lessons, and about their ability to withdraw them if same-sex marriage is being assumed or approved of.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I believe that the Bill will benefit the entire LGBT community. It means that all members of the community will feel they are being properly represented in law.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

The introduction of the Bill will mean that LGBT relationships and families are recognised by law and in religion, as well as showing that the government is in support of said relationships and families. I believe that this will lead to a lowered intolerance towards the LGBT community.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I believe that a third way of marriage should be equally recognised in law as religious and civil services are.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I support the idea of celebrants being authorised to solemnise both opposite and same sex marriage’s, as long as the celebrant is willing to and is not forced to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I believe the option to enter into marriage should be given to those already in a civil partnership, as a marriage may have been what they wanted when they instead had to settle for a civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

I support this as long as all parties are in agreement.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I believe that if those within civil partnerships wish to have their relationship recognised by a religious/belief organisation, then they should be allowed to do so.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I am in full support of this decision and actually find it rather shocking that transgendered individuals have no choice but to divorce their partner or spend their life trapped in what they deem to be the wrong body.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't believe that those in society who have concerns require protection. Their issues are fueled by their own ignorance. It may benefit to provide better education on the LGBT community and LGBT relationships in schools to aid in filtering out ignorance and prevent homophobic/transphobic bullying.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe that everyone is entitled to share their opinion on any given subject. However, they must be aware that this doesn't mean their opinion is correct.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

If this bill comes into law, I believe it would be beneficial to include same-sex relationships, transgender individuals and the LGBT community in general in education. I believe this would help nurture tolerance towards the LGBT community, make adolescents more comfortable being open and honest about who they are knowing they are accepted and protected and it would reduce homophobic/transphobic bullying within schools/education if adolescents are taught that these individuals do not threaten the way they wish to live their lives.

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The gay community has not called for this legislation and as they already have all the legal rights of marriage in civil partnerships it is unnecessary. Redefining marriage as proposed will undermine the stability of the family which is the cornerstone of any organised society. Traditional marriage where a family has both mother and father in a stable relationship has been shown by research to be the best environment for raising children. Instead of pursuing this unnecessary legislation it would be more helpful to spend resources on supporting families to provide that stable environment.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Since it has been lawful for a very long time for same sex couples to cohabit without restriction or without any expressed desire for marriage by them one can only draw the conclusion that this is a political football being used by anti religious bodies to remove any influence of religion from public life. It seems that Christianity in particular is coming under pressure from these secular and atheistic bodies who are very quick to bring legal challenges using human rights and equality legislation as a lever. This is not an outcome which in any way will promote equality. People of all religions /faith groups are members of the public and have a legitimate right to be represented within all aspects of public life and to have their views and lifestyle openly respected and not sidelined or misrepresented as it is at the moment. Legal provision should be made to prevent people of all faiths from losing their jobs because of their beliefs and employers both in the public and private sectors should be legally bound to make provision for them to opt out of situation which go against their religious beliefs and conscience. Speaking as a nurse where it has long been the case that you could refuse, without recriminations, to assist in abortions there is always someone who can fill in without serious disruption of services.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Isn't it ironic that they wish to ape the religious ceremonies they so despise?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

Having taken note of what has been happening in England I oppose this as in spite of so called strong legal protection there is already a legal challenge by a same sex couple to the Church of England to try and force them to perform same sex marriages. The law hasn't even come into force yet! Even if the law is upheld in the UK this will inevitably end up in the European Court of Human Rights where our laws can be overturned. There is no sure way of protecting the rights of religious bodies to opt out of same sex marriages so the only way is not to introduce the law in the first place. Same sex couples will gain nothing by these ceremonies that they do not already have. Those who are aggresively forcing this legislation through will obviously stop at nothing to achieve their goals and have no real interest in true equality and respecting the rights of all.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

See previous argumants

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There have been many cases where people have lost their jobs because of their beliefs and unwillingness to participate in activites related to same sex issues. This is a violation of their human rights. People should not be disadvantaged in life because of what they believe. People have also been discriminated against and arrested because they have voiced their opinions on the whole issue of homosexuality at work or in public and even their personal e-mails to friends have been used against them. This is not creating equality in society. It is creating oppression and destroying freedom of speech which is a fundamental principle on which any civilised democratic society is founded. I have no faith in the Westminster government as they have consistently lied to the public on the issue of same sex marriage. They said after civil partnerships were introduced that they would never legalise same sex marriage, They said politicians would have a free vote on the issue but still used the whip to bring dissenters into line. They have targeted companies telling them to sack employees who refuse to assist same sex marriages. They changed the time of the vote to disadvantage opposition and the equality committee who scrutinised the legislation was unequally weighted with an over representation of pro same sex marriage supporters. This hardly gives us, the public, any confidence in the integrity of government. I would like to think that in Scotland we have a more balanced approach but can only wait and see.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Everyone is entitled to hold their personal views on same sex relationships and should be free to speak in open debate. I do not think that teachers should be forced to teach about same sex marriage if it is against their beliefs and preachers, chaplains and counsellors should be able to represent their views publicly and be able to give counsel to those who seek advice on sexual matters where they request such help. There should be protection from complaints from people who have misled them by agreeing to accept counsel then reporting them afterwards. People may not always agree with their counsellor but they do not have to accept it anyway.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Parents should be able to withdraw their children from lessons on sexual issues especially where same sex relationships are concerned. They should be given timely warning by the school that these will be taking place so other arrangements can be made. I think children are taught about specific sexual issues far too early. They should be allowed to get on with their basic education and enjoy their childhood without the pressure of issues beyond their ability to understand. Questions can be dealt with by the parents at home as they know their child best and what they are mature enough to handle. One size does not fill all! Finally, can I remind one and all that every species on the planet mates male/female and the human body is designed for heterosexual relationships not same sex ones. Whether you believe in a Creator God or one of the many theories of evolution these are biological realities and should be remembered when considering how we handle these issues.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The United Nations Declaration of Human Rights defines marriage as a union between a man and a woman. The Oxford English Dictionary defines it as “the formal union of a man and a woman, typically as recognized by law, by which they become husband and wife”. It would be a presumption on the part of the Scottish Parliament or any other body to seek to alter the realities of biology and claim to make such a union between two people of the same sex. The public meaning and expectation of marriage could be altered from a defined and integral part of the fabric of society to a mere right to express subjective personal preference.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The relationship between two people of the same sex, however loving and affirming this may be, cannot be equated with marriage which carries with it the concept of kinship and the continuance of human relationship beyond the personal arrangement and preference of one generation. It is not possible to ‘divorce’ procreation from marriage and procreation is not a physiological option for same sex couples without going outside the relationship. Same sex couples can co-habit, just as opposite sex couples can (and do) but to alter the definition of marriage to accommodate even strongly held views is to diminish the relationship of marriage. This is not a matter of fairness, it is a matter of moral relativism where “what may be right for you may not be right for me”. This leads society away from a definition of a ‘one flesh’ union between a man and a woman towards personal choice determined by preference.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

The difference between religious celebrants and belief celebrants is not at all clear. All would define their position by their beliefs.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

We do not believe that same sex marriage is a valid concept and therefore arrangements to solemnise same sex marriage would be, by definition, invalid.
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

We do not believe that same sex marriage should be introduced for the reasons given above. Civil partnerships and marriage are different in essence and the two concepts should remain separate. The pressure to equate same sex relationships with marriage is clearly political rather than moral and the Scottish Parliament would be giving consent to this if they became interchangeable. We do not believe this would be in the best interests of our Nation.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

This sounds very like a 'fudge' to make Civil Partnership into a form of marriage. The religious and belief element is a matter of conscience and a measure of flexibility on the part of religious and 'belief' bodies may well be appropriate, but this should not be a matter of law. It is recognised that Civil Partnership confers upon the participants all the legal and financial provisions available to a married couple and the re-definition of marriage would confer no substantial advantage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The re-definition of marriage has implications for many different areas of society, not least, the place of conscience and deeply held beliefs and principles. The militancy of the 'Gay' lobby makes it inevitable that any perceived infraction of equality whether by individuals or groups will be pounced upon with the result that anyone who disagrees is likely to be subject to attack. Discrimination is not a one-way issue. The individual's position on the validity of same-sex marriage has the potential to become a tool of discrimination, even to the point of loss or refusal of employment. The most obvious instance, already apparent in relation to Civil Partnership, is the position of Civil Registrars. Some who may accept Civil Partnership as granting appropriate legal and civil rights would object strongly to same-sex 'marriage'. Would it not be discrimination to deny them a conscience clause? Article 9 of the Declaration of Human Rights gives a right to 'freedom of thought, conscience and religion.'and, since the Scottish Government has subscribed to that Declaration, it has an obligation to fulfill this provision. There has been a succession of cases brought before the European Court of Human Rights in which conscience and belief have been the issue. In some of these only lip-service has been given. The Public Sector Equality Duty requires public authorities to "have due regard to the need to remove disadvantages suffered by persons who share a relevant protected characteristic (e.g. sexual orientation) that are connected to that characteristic" and there is considerable concern to maintain that duty, but it must be recognised that the needs of one group do not cancel out the needs, or indeed the rights of another. People who, on the basis of belief and conscience cannot accept any new definition of marriage must not be allowed to be treated less favourably in decisions regarding employment, contracts, grants or use of public facilities. It is entirely possible that those holding to a traditional view of marriage might be be directly disadvantaged in relation to fostering, adoption, housing, employment, charitable status, use of premises and other areas of public responsibility. Of particular concern is the area of education. Article 14 of The European Charter of Human Rights recognises "the right of parents to ensure the education and teaching of their children in conformity with their religious, philosophical, and pedagogical convictions shall be respected." While open discussion of marriage, sexuality and personal orientation should not be discouraged in schools, where parents are concerned that a particular line of teaching is taking precedence over their own convictions, they should have the right to withdraw their children from such teaching. It is also of concern that children who have been withdrawn from classes might, themselves face discrimination. Parents and children do need reassurance and protection. The current emphasis by 'Stonewall' and other similar organisations to promote same sex 'marriage' and homosexual practice in schools is a matter of deep concern. Legislation to redefine marriage is being blatantly used to promote this emphasis.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

With freedom comes responsibility; with rights come obligations. Freedom of speech is crucial in this context. In many areas at the present time the expression of well established and deeply held views is dismissed as bigotry, prejudice or dogma. Robust safeguard to ensure that no-one should be compelled to express agreement with same-sex marriage and that no-one should face sanctions for expressing disagreement with it. Bizarrely, those who stand clearly in support of a traditional view of marriage are now being held to be guilty of discrimination. The removal of Rev. Brian Ross from his post as Chaplain to Strathclyde Police because of his expression of disagreement with gay marriage in his internet blog, is a case in point. He was told that he 'could hold his beliefs in private but to publicly express them was a breach of the equality and diversity policy'. What is a Chaplain for, if not to express the beliefs of his Faith? Specific protection of the right to free speech and debate is necessary in any such legislation as this. Protection must be applicable across the areas of public order and equality, employment issues, and public order situations. Discussion or even criticism of same-sex marriage must not, on its own, constitute a breach of public order or equality law. Those who believe in traditional marriage and relationships must not be prevented, or even inhibited from discussing the issues with colleagues, employers, employees, customers or anyone else.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
The introduction of “Same-sex marriage” would lead to a significant blurring of the concept of marriage. This can only undermine the stability of family life in a society in which this essential component of human life and happiness is already under threat. It is no part of Government’s responsibility to interfere to this extent in the area of personal human relationships. It is one thing to give civil rights to a minority group which has perceived itself to have been marginalised but it is quite another to attack the concept of marriage by equating it with something to which can never be equivalent. The effect is likely to be a further trivialisation of marriage in our Society. We should recognise that same sex marriage cannot be anything but a “sham marriage” since it cannot fulfil the deepest elements of that relationship. It should not matter what is being done elsewhere. If we perceive ourselves as being an autonomous people we should stand up for our rights and our traditions.

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief local group or congregation

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

In support, should the couples involved prefer this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As a heterosexual man, I have no concerns whatever and I'm afraid I have little sympathy for those who claim to have concerns. I believe these 'concerns' are, more often than not, based on prejudice. Consequently, I am of the view that there is no need for such 'protections.' However, I do believe that the bill, even with such 'protections', is a significant step forward.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No

Are you responding as...

a private individual

21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I care passionately about Scotland’s future, and hope that it will not allow itself to be left behind as the world modernises.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I was forced to go to Sweden to marry my partner, when I would have loved to marry her in my own country. Instead, I feel like a second-class citizen with a second-class relationship in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Marriage is not the property of religious institutions.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

I think people in civil partnerships should have the option to remain in them rather than be converted to marriage. Equally, I believe that heterosexual couples should have the right to civil partnerships. Marriage isn’t for everyone, but many people want legal security.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

But I believe they should also be allowed to take place on religious premises.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Religious organisations have been allowed to broadly discriminate unjustly for too long and no longer have the standing in society they once enjoyed. They should not be exempt from equality laws.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Why would this even be an issue?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

They are not in danger. Their concerns are based on fear and hatred, and pandering to those fears will not allow society to progress.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech does not extend to hate speech, and too many times during this debate 'freedom of speech' has become a 'acceptable' cover for homophobic and damaging opinions to be publicly aired. I speak of course, of comparisons to bestiality or peadophilia that are apparently acceptable to declare in parliament or in public address as though they are facts. There comments are deeply damaging to the LGBT community, who have not in the least been protected from them. In fact, we have been told instead that the legislating of our equal rights in a 'moral' issue. I cannot express how deeply offensive this is.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Stop allowing legislation to be altered or lobbied by the religious right. They have no investment in the future of this country, only their own bigoted goals.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

This proposed Bill creates more equality than it solves. Adultery law and principle is inseparable from the current concept of marriage and will remain for heterosexual couples and cannot be applied to same sex partnerships. Creating a new inequality. The redefinition of marriage will therefore be in name only because the concept can only apply to heterosexual couples. The same concepts of a consummated relationship and infidelity are not being applied to same sex relationships and therefore show that the Bill is not offering marriage even by refining the term. If the Government are serious about equality they will have to change legislation to offer civil partnerships for heterosexual couples. Again without this a new inequality in society is being created and will end up being very expensive as I believe, there will be in the not too distant future, many cases of inequality taken to the European courts. The Civil partnership law already established gives the necessary legal framework to protect same sex partnerships, giving same sex partners all the legal rights of heterosexual couples. The new Bill will not as far as I can see offer any new legal benefits to same sex couples. It is my view that the concept of civil partnership already legally protects same sex couples and that the new Bill as it stand will not achieve what its supporters think it will. It will create new challenges in society that the general public will not be willing to endorse. For it to work, terms such as husband and wife, mother and father will have to be removed from so much established legislation. Supporters Gay and straight do not in my opinion understand the long term effect of redefinition and once redefined the gateway that opens for more redefinition in society.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The marriage ceremony is a public declaration of commitment and responsibility with promises made that are dissolved by death or adultery. The new Bill does not draw same sex relationships into the same substantive legal frame work and therefore is not the same thing and cannot be called the same thing. If the commitment obligations are different then surely the relationship is different and has to be categorized differently. Marriage as it has been known and practiced for centuries is a protective framework for the procreation and raising children. It spans culture language race and religious issues and gender issues - I don't see that we in the 21st century have the right to redefine it. Others have in the past only for it to be reestablished.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

It would depend on the governing structure established and potential training / monitoring. This carries a huge responsibility as you officiate at a ceremony where two people make a binding agreement with legal repercussions. This should not be opened up lightly. Even now under the current system, those linked to a denomination are internally trained and monitored and other church groups have to apply for renewed permissions. every three years

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

As I have already explained they cannot be defined the same. The Civil Partnership was necessary to protect, same sex couples in our society and has for them brilliant legal rights the same as marriage law. To be fair in society forever the government need to look more carefully at heterosexual couples who would rather have a civil partnership and cases such as two sisters sharing a home and their legal rights on the death of another etc etc

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

If the legislation went ahead you would have to allow the ceremonies to happen anywhere, the celebrant being solomised and not the building. As is the case now for marriage celebrants. Unlike the English system where the solomisation of a building is a factor

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I am opposed to the Bill's proposals.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage is not merely a tradition that is to be treated lightly. It is foundational to society. It predates law, nation and church. Over the years, the law has never fundamentally altered the essential make up of marriage: a lifelong commitment (crucially) between one man and one woman. The proposal to redefine marriage now is unconventional in the extreme and unprecedented.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Churches / celebrants who refuse to marry same-sex couples will be susceptible to litigation. There are insufficient safeguards in place. This is cause for concern. Endorsing the current definition of marriage must not be used by public sector employers to dispute / question the equality and diversity credentials of existing or prospective employees.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There are different views on this issue, and many hold to the historic, traditional and long-standing definition of marriage, which is a position / view worthy of respect in a democratic society. Those holding that view have a right to be able to express it without fear of intimidation.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

ANONYMOUS SUBMISSION

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The bill is an exceptionally important step towards equality in Scotland. I strongly welcome this bill.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Having something separate i.e. civil partnerships does not equate equality. Even when they offer the same protections legally, using different language means that they're something 'other' and will be looked on as such. Having something 'other' puts people in same-sex relationships as second-class citizens and leads to continued discrimination. The law should treat all marriages equally regardless of gender. As a 25 year old gay woman, I hope that Scotland - the country that I have been born and raised in, and that I love - will support me in my love of another person and allow me to commit my life to her in marriage. Even if marriage isn't something I ever choose for myself and my own relationship, I hope that I will have the option like all other citizens of this country. It is essential to me that Scotland is a country where equality, fairness, tolerance, respect and diversity are our shared values and I think the introduction of same sex marriage is fundamental to this.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I agree that religious celebrants should have the freedom to decide for themselves and that opt-in procedures are the correct and respectful way of doing this.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I support this as an option for those who want to their change their CP to a marriage, however respect that some people may not in fact want this and it therefore should be an option for individual couples to decide.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support trans people who are married to get their gender recognition without having to divorce

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I think the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnership is an important addition. For full equality it is essential that marriage be available to mixed-sex and same-sex couples, as well as civil partnerships being available to mixed-sex and same-sex couples. Regardless of gender these options should be available. I think it also better supports trans people in achieving their gender recognition certificate without the need to change their CP to a marriage. If 2 people want to remain in a relationship then they should be able to do so, one person's gender reassignment should not mean that legal status be dissolved, offering CPs and marriages regardless of gender would support this.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I think the inequality here is vile and indefensible. I think that opposition should be called on the bigotry that it is - even if religious. Sanctioned discrimination is still discrimination.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I want to be free to get married in my homeland.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

This is only fair.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I agree with the opt-in for practical reasons, thought I would prefer an opt-out system. As long as all couples have equality then I am happy.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I think all CPs should be upgraded but only because I disagree with the tiered system. I think that civil partners should be free to upgrade or keep their CP but I think that civil partnerships should be stopped and no more given out.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I don't see why religious premises can't be used with consent but I think this is a brilliant idea. Marriage should be a liberal and loving ceremony, not confined.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I think civil partnerships should be ended.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This is absolutely necessary. There is no justifiable opposition.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Bigotry does not need to be protected. Though people can have their opinions against equality there is no need to enshrine them in legislation and no need for bigoted actions and statements to be protected. Disagreeing with equal marriage does not require we trip over ourselves not to be equal, it means that some people should get perspective and stop their hatred. We need more education on sexuality in general and ESPECIALLY on non-straight sexualities in schools to protect people from themselves as regards bigotry.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There has been no infringement on freedom of speech that I’ve seen. I think there should be louder condemnation of the opponents of equality - protecting your voterbase by failing to stand up for your marginalised constituents is deplorable. It's popular to stand up for women and racial minorities but still not cool to defend LGBT people and you all need to consider why you aren't tearing up headlines in condemning the bigotry of equal marriage opponents.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am exceptionally pleased by the provisions for Humanist ceremonies and the liberalisation of location if agreed with the registrar.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Anonymous

30 July 2013
OTHER WRITTEN EVIDENCE: OTHER SUBMISSIONS

Abercrombie, David
Action for Children
Adam, Heather
Ainsworth, Mary
Aitken, Gordon
Aitken, Graeme
Alexander, Isla
Alexander, James
Allan, Andrew
Allan, Grant
Allen, Mrs K
Allison, Archie
Anderson, Peter
Anderson, Robert
Anstey, Christopher
Anthony, David
Anthony, Lily
Arnott, Andrew
Ashman, Alex
Atkinson, Michael
Avison, Amanda
Bain, Hugh
Bain, Peter
Baird, Prof. Alfred
Baird, William
Baker, Sally
Baptist Union of Scotland
Barker, Timothy
Barrie, Emma
Barringer, Brian
Bat Or, Clare
Beattie, Jennifer
Belcher, Helen
Bell, Gordon
Bender, Rev. Stephen
Bennet, Lorna
Bentley, Steven
Beresford, John
Bestwick, Christine and John
Bevington, Jim
Beyer, Erin
Bhatti, Lesley
Bi Community News
Black, David
Blackburn, Helen Blance, Darren
Blench, Declan
Boden, Fergus
Bo'Ness Old Kirk (Church of Scotland)
Boyle, Anne-Marie
Bradley, Samuel
Braine, David
Braithwaite, Megan
Brash, Derek
Bray, Isobel
Brew, Marc
Brian, David
Brodie, Andrew
Brown, Allan
Brown, Ian
Brown, Lesley Anne
Brown, Talitha
Browne, Phil
Brownsey, Paul
Burn, Rowan
Bush, Alan Mark
Butterworth, Frances
Buxton, Anthony
Calder, Calum
Calder, Stephen
Calvary Carluke Christian Fellowship
Calwell, Michael
Cameron, Ross
Cammisar, Georjean
Campbell, Anna
Campbell, Craig
Campbell, Douglas
Care
Carlin, Eric
Carmichael, Alison
Carmichael, Helen
Carnall, Jane
Carroll, Sinead
Catholic Truth
Cavers, Shelia
Chandler, Fiona
Changing Attitude Scotland
Chapman, Vaila
Charlotte Baptist Chapel
Charleston, Taylor
Charlwood-Green, Lisa
Cheyne, Susan
Children in Scotland
Chmiel, Ross
The Christian Institute
Christy, Neil
Chryston Church of Scotland
Church of Scotland – Watt, Rev Dr Hugh Clark, Jessica
Clark, Matthew
Clarkson, Jamie
Clayton, Kevin
Clement, Rebecca
Clinton, Michael
Cochrane, Audrey
Coleman, Emma
Collins, Owen
Community Church Edinburgh
Convery, Maeve
Cookson, Lucas Jaiden
Coroon, Rebecca
Cowie, Kevin Mark Stephen
Craig, Margaret
Cree, Lisa
Creechan, Henry
Creechan, Michael
Crockard, Deborah
Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service
Crozier, Caroline
Cruikshank, Paul
Cummings, Chelsea
Cunningham, Stephanie Custodio-Forbes, Hugh
Dalrymple, Amy
Dalziel, Kirsty
Daniel, George and Linda
Davidson, Euan
Davies, Hugh
Davis, Laura-Jayne
Deeside Christian Fellowship Church
Denyer, Veronica
Diamond, Ian
Dian, Jenny
Dickie, Eileen
Dickson, Karen
Dietz, Karen
Digance, Claire
Dix, Fiona
Dodds, Dr Euan
Dolby, Douglas
Doran, David
Dorigo, Lewis
Douglas Renton Ministries
Downie, David Nathan
Dowsett, Rosemary
Ducker, Judi
Duffy, Chris
Eadie, Danielle
Earlie, Nancy
East Ayrshire Council
Edwards, Andrew
Edwards, Julie
Emily
Ewing, Mandy Evans
Faculty of Advocates
Farrell, Keith Francis
Faulds, Allan
Faulkner, Emma
Ferguson, Gavin
Fife Islamic Centre Glenrothes
Figures, Craig
Findlay, Alan
Finlayson, Connor SP
Fire Brigades Union LGBT National Committee
Fitzpatrick, Storm Potratz
Fleming, Donald
Forbes, James
Forde, Amanda
Fothergill, Rev Andrew
Fox, Richard
Fraser, Grant
Fraser-Granados, Tim
Free Church of Scotland - Dr John Morrison
Free Church of Scotland (Continuing) – Public Questions Religion and Morals Committee
Free Church of Scotland - Thomas Davis
Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland
French, Deborah
Frew, Iain
Fulton, Kirsty
Gallagher, Aodhan
Gallagher, Daniel Arthur
Gann, Roger Garman, Chris
Gay, Charlene
Gibson, Alexander W
Gill, Catriona
Gilmour, Paul
Glasgow City Council
Glasgow Unitarian Church
Goodhall, Adam
Goodman, David
Gordon, Jimmy
Gorman, Caroline
Gosling, Sarah
Graham, Natalie
Granados, Michael
Green, Liz
Greig, Shaun
Gronowski, Dr Rebekah
GUSRC
Gusterson, Mary and John
Hadfield, M
Haga, Ismar
Haggerstone, Linda
Hall, Tim
Halliday, Amy Denise
Harkinson, Anthony
Harris, Jennifer
Harris, Paula
Hart, Eric
Hearty, David
Heggie, Louise
Henderson, Roisin
Hendry, Courtney
Henry, Lynne
Heppell, Pat
Heppenstall, Jane
Higgins, Sherrie
Holdsworth, Ashley
Holmes, Mark
Honhold, Nick
Hopkins, Al
Hothersall, Duncan
Howard, C B
Howie, Alexander G
Howitt, Jamie
Hoyda, Claire
Hughes, Helen
Hughes, Ian
Hughes, Laura
Humanist Fellowship of Scotland
Humanist Society Scotland
Humphrey, Rhianna
Hunter, Ciaran
Hunter, Dr Ross
Hunter, Glen
Hutchin-Bellur, Sunil
Hutchinson, Ellie
Hutchison, Craig
Hutchison, Kirsty
Hutchison, Maureen
Hyams, Cheryl
Hylands, Jamie
Inglis, Stewart
Inshes Church of Scotland
Jack, Gillian
Jack, Ross
Jackson, Fiona
Jackson, Marilyn
Jeffrey, Peter
Jewish Gay and Lesbian Group
Johnston, Fiona
Jones, Hefin
Jones, Ria Elaine
Jupp, Ed
Keilty, Ray
Kellner, Anna
Kellock, Andrew
Kelly, Blair
Kelly, Kathleen
Kennedy, Maureen
Kermode, Jennie
Kidd, Benjamin
King, Roslyn
King, Sam
Kingswood, Jane
Kinmond, James
Klip, Hugo
Laing, David
Law Society of Scotland
Lee-Chan, Bryan
Leinster, Paul
LGBT - Bristol
LGBT - Labour Scotland
LGBT - Youth Scotland further submission
LGBT+ Liberal Democrats
LGBTory
LGCM
Lindsay, Caron
Linton, Mary
Little, Eilidh
Little, Gordon
Livingstone, Marc
Lloyd, Beth
Lloyd, Raychel
Lockhart, Mary
Love, Edward
Mac An Tuairneir, Marcas
MacConnell, Mr FJ
MacConnell, Mrs Angela
MacDonald, Angus
Macdonald, Don
MacDonald, Sheila
MacGillivray, Moranne
MacGregor, Loran
Mackay, Raymond
MacKenzie, Bill
MacKenzie, Jennifer
MacKenzie, William
Maclean, Sarah
MacLeod, Fraser
Macleod, Murdina
Macleod, Alasdair BM
Macphail, Kevin
Macpherson, Catriona
MacRae, Jeanette
MacVicar, James
Madden, Niamh
Magee, Andrew Campbell
Manning, Mark
Mansfield, Nigel
Marshall, Heather
Marszalek, Agnes
Martens, Roushan
Martin, David
Martin, Iain
Martin, Lee
Mason, Jonathan
Mathers, Avery
Mathie, Hugh Alexander
Matthew, Laurie
Mauchline, Emma
McArthur-Worbey, Fiona
McBride, Kenneth Martin
McCabe, Liam
McCahill, Seanpaul
McClure, Anne
McCrone, Carolyn
McDonald, Eilidh
McDowell, Jacqueline
McFarlane, Fraser
McGarva, Michelle
McGread, Vincent
McGregor, David
Mcguire, Siobhan
McInally, Clarisse
McIntosh, Alex
McIntosh, Colin Stephen Anderson
McIntosh, Hugh
McKay, Gemma Caitlyn
McKenna, George
Mckenna, Revd Scott
McKiernan, Jennifer
McLay, Alan
McLean, Derek
McLean, Jackie
McLeod, Lindsey
McMahon, Alan
McMurtrie, David
McNicoll, Nik
Merican, Kat
Millar, Stephen
Miller, Marsali
Miller, Staci
Milner, Kerri
Mitchell, Gregory
Mitchell, Vivienne
Mitchison, Shirley
Monsma, Kylie
Moody, Maria
Mooney, Agnes
Moreland, Caroline
Morland, John-Ross
Morrison, Ian
Morrison, Katie
Morrison, Mrs Betty
Morrison, Murdo
Morrison, Peter and Marion
Morton, Craig
Mothers’ Union
Muir, Greig
Murray, Elizabeth
Muslim Council of Scotland
National Trans Police Association
National Union of Journalists
McCallum, John
Nelson, Sandy
Newth, Hilary
NHS Grampian
NHS Greater Glasgow and Clyde
NHS Highland
Nightshade, Cleodhna
Nobbs, Brian
Noble, Alastair
North Lanarkshire Muslim Women and Family Alliance
NUS Scotland
O’Docherty, Neil
O’Hara, Andrew
O’Hara-Thomas, Mark
One Spirit Interfaith Foundation
O’Neill, Jennifer
O’Neill, Joanne
O’Neill, Thom
Osborne, Nicola
Our Lady of Perpetual Succour Parish
Overton, Kim
Oxborrow, Trevor
Pagan Federation (Scotland)
Parish Church in the Church of Scotland
Paterson, Iain
Paton, Hugh
Pearce, Dr Augur
Pinkett, Blair
Plushkis, Ronald
Porter, E
Porter, Jemma
Pott, Jonny
Potter, Megan
Potter, Rosemary
Potter, Stella
Predota, Elinor
Preston, Susan
Price, Julie
Priest, Alex
Proctor, John
Puntis, Timothy
Qiu, Alexander
Quakers – Helen, Keating
Quinn, Robin
Randall, David
Rankin, Jason
Reilly, Joe
Religious Society of Friends (Quakers)
Reoch, Gillian
Reynolds, Michael
Rhatigan, Tara
Richards-Hill, Jaye
Richardson, Nathan Richter, C
Rigg, Simon
Robertson, John
Robertson, Sabrina
Robertson, Tony
Robertson, Victoria
Robinson, Elaine
Rodgers, Sarah
Roper, Beverley
Rose, James
Ross, C Brian
Rowell, Karen
Russell, C
Ryan, Sylvia
Rychter, Tomas
The Salvation Army
Sarbat
Sayers, Samantha
Schmitz, Tony
Schofield, Freya
Welsh, Stephen
West Dunbartonshire Council
West of Scotland LGBT Forum
Westbury, Hannah
White, Nikki
White, Peter
Whyte, Ross
Wilcox, John
Wilkes, Daniel
Wilkinson, Sue
Williams, Anna
Williams, Derek
Wilson, David
Wilson, Fiona
Wilson, Hannah
Wilson, Hazel
Wilson, Patrick
Wilson, Sophie
Wilson, Stew
Wood, Andy
Woodsford-Dean, Mark
Wright, Ross
Wylie, Ralph
Wyllie, Callum
Young, Lynzi
Young, M C G
Zdravkov, Hristo
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
All people should be free to marry if they wish regardless of sexual orientation or gender status

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
All celebrants should have equal status and be able to marry any couple legally allowed to do so.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Any celebrant who can legally perform opposite sex marriage ceremonies should be allowed to perform legal same sex ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
If a civil partnered couple wished to change the status of their relationship to that of marriage then there should be a mechanism in place to allow this to happen

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
I was under the impression that this was currently the case. I believe that as long as the celebrant is permitted to perform the ceremony and the couple are legally permitted to marry then there should be no barriers to them carrying out the ceremony, including choice of location.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

David Abercrombie
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Action for Children supports the introduction of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill that will introduce same-sex marriage, put belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants, allow civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, and allow transgender people to stay married when obtaining the full Gender Recognition Certificate.

Equality is one of Action for Children’s core values. We are a leading Stonewall Diversity Champion in the charity sector and the lead charity working with New Family Social to increase the numbers of lesbian, gay and bisexual foster carers and adoptive parents, as part of our work to find safe, loving home for vulnerable children and young people.

We believe that having a society that values and respects diversity provides a safer, healthier and inclusive environment for the vulnerable children and young people with whom we work. Equality for same-sex couples in marriage will contribute to building stronger families and communities and sends out a clear and positive message for children and young people with same-sex parents, and for young lesbian, gay or bisexual people themselves.

The proposal to allow transgender people to stay married when obtaining the full Gender Recognition Certificate will give an element of important continuity in families at a time of considerable change, and we welcome this.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Action for Children
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Heather Adam
23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM MARY AINSWORTH

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Mary Ainsworth
9 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
This is a very positive and progressive step forward for Scotland. We are proud of our welcoming and caring national character and this Bill is a logical and progressive continuation of that. I personally welcome this Bill as it will level the playing field and publicly declare Scotland intentions to make everyone equal under the law.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
This is something I support very much as it is illogical & cruel that same sex couples can not marry the person they love. We can no claim to live in a fair & equal society until this Bill is passed.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
There should be no barrier to performing weddings, humanism, atheist, christian, muslim whatever it should all be equal under the law!

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Churches and religious institutions should be able to opt in. However even if their own canon or law do not recognise a marriage between same sex couples then the law should.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
People should be able to choose whatever is appropriate for them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

The location should not matter!

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Many religious people are champing at the bit to perform same sex weddings. So allow them to legally do so with recognition under the law.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

The married the person, their soul if you will, not the genitals.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The only protection they would require is an opt in procedure. If they don't want to perform same sex marriages, then they don't have to.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

---

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Gordon Aitken
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

I think this bill is along time coming. Everyone in Scotland should have the same opportunities as one another, and in marriage this should be no different. This bill should have been brought forward many years ago.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I think anyone living in Scotland should have the right to marry whoever they want to. Same sex or not.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

student

Graeme Aitken
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Isla Alexander
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Men and women of marriageable age have the right to marry and to start a family.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

The European Court of Human Rights ruled in 2002 that this right extends to transsexual people who are now able to marry or enter civil partnerships in their acquired gender because of the Gender Recognition Act (2004).

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

It is time to disestablish the church in this country and put a stop to the unequal processes of giving moral authority to bodies that have proven their claims to guide us morally.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

It is important to give ALL people of ALL beliefs the right to self determination in the solemnising of their relationships and legally uphold partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

If anyone, or any couple wish to have a civil partnership they should be allowed this as their alternative choice to marriage. Equality!

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

The European Court of Human Rights ruled in 2002 that this right extends to transsexual people who are now able to marry or enter civil partnerships in their acquired gender because of the Gender Recognition Act (2004).

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We are not all heterosexual and those that have concerns need to educate themselves and get over their incredulous prejudices which are based on ignorance and fear.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We are all entitled to free speech - and to express that speech without harm to others in appropriate forums. Your freedom stops when it impinges on someone else’s. You don't have to agree with another’s view but both sides merit hearing. Without freedom of speech, other fundamental rights, like the right to vote, would wither and die.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Bigotry and sectarianism are Scotland's not so secret shame, and the prizing in law or funding of any belief group over others is the root cause of many of Scotland's issues today.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

James Alexander
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

I believe Equality for LGBT people will only be successful for future generations if they can have the choice to be married in the same ceremonies as heterosexual couples, whether these ceremonies be civil, religious or other faith groups.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I believe allowing celebrants to opt-in allows the different faiths to retain their beliefs without forcing them and so if they opt-in the procedures will be in place to allow this.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

I think it would make civil partnerships stronger to know that it has stepped up to a more equal footing with heterosexuals.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

It seems fair to have marriages anywhere.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition
I can understand having to adjust the fine print on civil partnerships however I believe firmly that the anti-gay marriage campaigners have used the idea of allowing heterosexual couples to opt for civil partnership as a means of setting back the campaign for Equal Marriage for all. To make changes to Civil Partnership may be a misdirected energy that should be going towards the Equality Campaign.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

If couples are happy to stay married when one person changes gender then I see no reason to oppose that loving relationship to continue.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the concerns boil down to long seated prejudice and so the concerns, some of which will be heart felt, must be looked upon objectively and not be allowed to be clouded by intolerance and fear of difference.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Growing up in a small town, being gay was to be on the outside. Through time I have seen many changes in attitude amongst people which could be down simply to more positive portrayals of gay characters in film, television and in theatre. On Freedom of speech I would say only that, as long as protests are peaceful then, people should be allowed to speak their mind. Regarding a recent protest by the Anti-Gay Marriage Campaign in my own home town, I was disturbed however as there is a fine line between freedom of speech and a campaign of hatred and prejudice. Although it was an orderly and peaceful protest, I felt uncomfortable seeing this happen where I live.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Andrew Allan
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM GRANT ALLAN

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Grant Allan
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I am for civil partnerships, not same sex marriage

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

If same-sex marriage advocates want equality, then the burden is on them to prove that a same-sex union is essentially the same as a heterosexual union in all regards. Otherwise, everyone knows that there is nothing "unequal" or "unfair" about treating two different things two different ways. Marriage has always been heterosexual. As same sex couples do not want to be heterosexual I wonder why they want a heterosexual ceremony?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

what is the difference? Some beliefs are religious some are not. They are still beliefs

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

As I am opposed to same sex marriage I am opposed to anyone performing such marriage.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

marriage means a heterosexual union If they want a specific name for a union then a word should be coined to mean a same sex union That would be equality, each type of union to have its own title

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither religious ceremonies should be where the religion specifies. Civil ceremonies could be anywhere.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support if a religion approves same sex union then it is up to them to allow such registration. If government departments wish to record all unions then it is up to them. Husband and wife should be terms still available for heterosexuals and not changed to suit any other unions.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition As I am opposed to same sex marriage I would also be opposed to this.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

You only have to look at what is happening in other countries besides our own, particularly America and Canada, to see what would happen if same sex marriages were permitted. Protected religious groups are being attacked in the courts and religious or non religious individuals or businesses are also under attack both in the courts and by aggressive action from vociferous same sex advocates. If examples are wanted I have links to sites where this has been reported.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Expressions of belief have become hate crimes. This is totally against personal freedom of belief and expression.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

All this has been pushed forward against the wishes and with no mandate from the general public simply because a very small minority have pushed hard. According to recent research, same sex attraction is social not genetic. Also, the majority of same sex couples do not stay together as many do not want permanent relationships. Already the ratio of 'divorces' for civil partnerships is higher than heterosexual marriages.

Are you responding as...

a private individual
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support and welcome the bill. It will be a huge step forward for equality in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I believe that Equality means making the same CHOICES available to all. Marriage is a legal contract and has status and value in our society. Same sex couples should not be denied this.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Generally I think that the opt-in procedures in the bill are fine. I would have preferred to see a complete change in the law so that ALL marriages are carried out in civil ceremonies only, leaving religious/belief ceremonies as 'added extras' by those who want them.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
This is not something I had previously considered and I don't have strong views, other than to support anything that adds flexibility.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support measures to allow transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. However, I'm not sure why a married person should need the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. Perhaps it needs to be clarified that consent is only required when the couple seek to stay married. Presumably, without consent, the marriage will no longer be valid. Not sure about legal technicalities of this.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think that the bill has included more than enough protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. As previously mentioned, I would have preferred ALL marriages to be Civil contracts/ceremonies only, thereby removing the input of all religious/belief organisations, and the need to 'protect' them. I also support the Equality Network's views on any calls for civil registrars to have a right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. I also support the Equality Network's views on any calls for teachers to have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. Such measures would be the reverse of equality.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Archie Allison
2 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I do not see how religious objections should be allowed to prevent gay people marrying since it does not make any obligations on them to participate
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Peter Anderson
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage is between a man and a woman.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

There is no authority in the Bible for anything other than marriage between a man and a woman

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

Marriage is between a man and a woman, anything else is a perversion

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Marriage is not a civil partnership. This move would make me feel abused and defiles. My marriage would be dragged down to the same level of this evil act.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I feel as if I am repeating myself here. marriage is between a man and a woman
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

What sort of abomination will you think up next?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Yes, those of us in society who disagree should be protected and in a free society be allowed to disagree without fear or favour. there are signs that this is not happening as we speak and this awful law is not yet on the statute book. Disagreeing with homosexuals should be allowed. Plus why are you making provision for people outside of Scotland to speak and have influence on this matter?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Robert Anderson
11 July 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM CHRISTOPHER ANSTEY

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Christopher Anstey
13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I don't care about protection of bigots, to the same extent I wouldn't care about the protection of people who were against interracial marriage.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

David Anthony
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Lily Anthony
15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM ANDREW ARNOTT

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

i strongly support this bill, which is required to help Scotland move to a more equal society where the rights of all are protected.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

i strongly support same sex marriage, as it is important that the rights and opportunities of marriage are available to all across Scotland, and not just heterosexuals.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Religions are just long-running, 'traditional' and well organised groups related to a belief. So, in keeping with the focus of this bill to equalise rights for those getting married, the rights of minority belief groups should be the same as the rights of

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

it should be an option for those currently in civil partnerships to change the official nature of their partnership to a marriage if they so wish.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

i agree that civil marriage ceremonies should be able to be conducted in any place agreed by the couple and the registrar
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

i fully support this. it is barbaric, cruel and humilliating to force a couple to divorce if one of them changes the physical nature of their body to achieve the gender they feel they are and always have been.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

If someone doesn't like the idea of same sex marriage they don't need to enter into one! if the discussion was about allowing multi-racial marriage there would be no conceivable support for people in opposition to multi-race marriage, and yet somehow it seems to be acceptable when the issue is gender. It cannot be acceptable for people to use religion (or other personal beliefs) to inhibit/oppose the joining of two individuals who love each other on the grounds of their gender.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Andrew Arnott
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support
A human beings should be able to love and marry any other human being

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support
A human beings should be able to love and marry any other human being

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support
A human beings should be able to love and marry any other human being

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither
A human beings should be able to love and marry any other human being

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
A human beings should be able to love and marry any other human being

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
A human beings should be able to love and marry any other human being
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

A human beings should be able to love and marry any other human being

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

A human beings should be able to love and marry any other human being

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

A human beings should be able to love and marry any other human being

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

A human beings should be able to love and marry any other human being

Are you responding as...

a private individual

alex ashman
illustrator (freelance)
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

In my view marriage is a reserved power, in that it pre-dates law and nation and has traditionally been accepted to be the life long union of one man and one woman.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
As a teacher, I am concerned that my freedom on religion is hampered and my conscientious objection to same-sex marriage would be trampled on if I refuse to endorse same-sex marriage in the class. A conscience clause should be introduced in employment and equality laws to allow employees who believe in traditional marriage not to be forced to express approval of marriage between two people of the same sex. The law currently protects atheist teacher from having to teach religious education and a similar allowance should be given to teachers who for religious convictions or otherwise, do not feel able to teach about same-sex marriage. As a church leader, charity law should be amended to ensure that disagreement with same-sex marriage is not used to remove charitable status from religious and other charities, so that e.g. religious groups will not lose their charitable status if they are unwilling to marry same-sex couples. As a parent with deeply-felt views about their children being taught about same-sex marriage in the classroom. The law should not undermine these views but should protect parents’ right to withdraw their children. Many will be unaware what their children are being taught so they should have a legal right to know when such lessons will take place.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

More robust safeguards are needed to ensure that no person will be compelled to express agreement with a same-sex marriage or be punished for expressing their disagreement with it. People who express disagreement with same-sex marriage are already facing difficulties. There are clearly different views on this issue, and many people hold to the historic and long-standing definition of marriage, which is a belief worthy of respect in a democratic society. Those holding that view have a right to be able to express it freely. Amendments need to make clear that merely discussing or criticising same-sex marriage is not, on its own, a form of discrimination for the purpose of equality law or a breach of public order legislation. Such changes would help those who believe in traditional marriage to feel free to discuss the issue with their colleagues or customers, employees or employers. It would send an important message to those who are quick to label any disagreement with same-sex marriage as “bigoted”. I am concerned that even raising my religious disagreement with same-sex marriage with my public-sector line-manager would jeopardise my career.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Michael Atkinson
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
More equality

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Should be on the same basis as mixed couples

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
If people choose to make the change

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Amanda Avison
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Hugh Bain
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Peter Bain
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The majority of the people of Scotland are opposed to this. If MSP's consider this so important, they should move toward a referendum on the matter. It is not for MSP's to choose to redefine marriage, in response to a noisy, but relatively small lobby group.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

homosexuals can already marry, so there is no need for this legislation.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

This question is unclear.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

These co-called protections will not be effective. The aggressive gay lobby will make sure of that.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Prof. Alfred Baird
13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I appreciate that the Scottish Government appears to have realised the contentious and divisive nature of their proposals to re-define the long-held traditional understanding of marriage. I believe that they have made attempts to listen to the range of viewpoints expressed and sought to provide some accommodation for those who do not agree with same-sex marriage. However, one has to question the need for this bill. Civil partnerships recognised the mutual commitment of a same-sex couple and sought to provide the legal context whereby there would be accommodation and protection for the financial and personal implications of that relationship. The promotion of same-sex marriage appears to be merely a symbolic demand for equality despite the fact that marriage and same-sex marriage can never be equivalent (see the argument presented in question 5). The other reason for questioning the need for same-sex marriage is the number of people involved. One can get some indication of the possible demand for same-sex marriage by considering the number of civil partnerships registered to date. Between 2005 and 2012 approximately 4500 civil partnerships were registered – representing 9000 individuals. The population of Scotland between the ages of 16 and 64 (giving an indication of those of marriageable age) was around 3.5 million in the 2011 census. Thus, in the name of equality, the most basic building block of our society is being re-defined and deconstructed – with all the implications this is likely to bring in its wake - to address a perceived injustice to 0.25% of the relevant Scottish population.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Throughout history, and across societies and cultures of all descriptions, the nature of marriage has been instinctively recognised as being between a man and a woman. It is only in recent years that attempts have been made to redefine and deconstruct marriage into something which it has never been. C S Lewis, the author of the Narnia novels has written about the importance of not being swept away by the ‘shallow complacency of chronological snobbery’, whereby we believe that we have nothing to learn from the past, and instead are ‘shaped by predominant cultural moods and intellectual conventions’. This seems to be what has happened with the current debate over marriage re-definition where a radical proposal has been taken up with alacrity with little consideration of the impact it might have on our society in the future, informed by our experience of the past. Lewis would argue that ‘we can learn from the past precisely because it liberates us from the tyranny of the contemporaneous’. Marriage is not only an indication of a personal commitment between a man and a woman. It is also sends a message to society at large that this couple intend to commit themselves to each other with, in most cases, the expectation that their mutual commitment will find new depth and expression if children are born as a result of their union. Even although some couples may marry and choose not to have children, or be unable to have children, or be too old when they marry to have children does not invalidate the basic purpose of marriage – to provide social stability and to create a safe and loving environment in which children can be raised. Thus, marriage has high ideals which benefit not only the individuals involved but also society at large. Marriage is a vital social institution which requires a degree of self-sacrifice to make it work. Those advocating same-sex marriage are demanding a human right; this is misguided, as the personal, emotional and inwardly-focussed relationship which same-sex marriage is, in no way reflects the rich intentions of marriage and cannot create the same positive outcomes for society. The issue is not about equality of rights. The issue is that same-sex marriage can never be the equivalent of traditional marriage and so the demand for equality is in this regard is mis-placed. The lack of equivalence between real marriage and same-sex marriage is made obvious by the difficulty of deciding whether a same-sex marriage has been consummated or not and what would constitute adultery in a same-sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Civil Partnerships were introduced with a specific purpose and it would not be appropriate to now re-define that purpose.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It has become quite clear over recent years that acceptance of a homosexual lifestyle has become the vital benchmark as to whether or not one is suitable for employment in the public sector. I would like to share my personal experience with the Committee. My wife and I became foster carers around six years ago. The assessment process for being a foster carer is, rightly, rigorous and lengthy. During part of our assessment we were asked our views on how we might cope if we were caring for a young person who indicated that he or she might have same-sex attraction. As part of our response to this question we made clear some of our concerns about a homosexual lifestyle. This caused great concern with our interviewing social worker who had to bring in her manager to talk this issue over with us. We were in due course registered as foster carers and have had great satisfaction in taking on this role. However I have two concerns about the situation described above. Firstly, we were only going to be looking after babies under two years of age and so the issue of same-sex attraction was never going to be relevant. Nonetheless it was thought essential that we be asked our views. Secondly, the interviewing social worker made no attempt to assess our views on the other equality strands which might be relevant to our role as foster carers – eg gender, religion, disability; sexual orientation was the only strand about which she seemed to be concerned. My fear would be that should same-sex marriage become legal there would be increased pressure for foster carers and others in the employment of the public sector to have to conform to a certain code of beliefs. There needs to be a reasonable accommodation to allow a range of beliefs on this topic, especially in the public sector, so that committed and talented people will not be lost to important roles in public service.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is every indication from other countries where same-sex marriage has been introduced that this results in a limitation on freedom of speech and in challenges to anyone unwilling to accept the new orthodoxy. Some of the most telling examples come from Canada where the re-definition of marriage took place 10 years ago. (see for example http://www.thepublicdiscourse.com/2012/11/6758/?utm_source=RTA+Miller+SSM+Canada&utm_campaign=winstorg&utm_medium=email ) For the health of our society it is vital that we retain our traditional acceptance of freedom of opinion and freedom of speech within a context of open debate and mutual respect. People must continue to have the right to express opinions which others may not agree with, even if it involves criticism of a lifestyle. Otherwise the likely prospect, based on the experience of other countries, is that this vital issue may be the catalyst for a restriction on the freedom of individuals to hold sincerely held and carefully thought-out beliefs.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No further comment
a private individual

William Baird
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

It's about improving equality for all and allowing people who love each other to be able to celebrate their love like other people, if they choose to. It would bring Scotland to the forefront of equality and show the rest of the world that a famously traditional country can recognize when equality should be recognised.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I don't actually understand why this is being debated at all. We live in a time where discrimination against anyone for their gender, sexuality, religion, race or disability is unacceptable. to say that some people have a right to marriage and others do not is discriminatory, and should be left to each individual's choice, not law to decide how they celebrate their relationship. I also support the fact that the bill recognises that same sex intercourse outside of marriage is adultery, not currently enshrined in law, and therefore recognises infidelity in it's many forms as grounds for divorce. It seems preposterous to me that this was not all ready accepted as such.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Humanist celebrants in Scotland can already conduct legally-recognised marriages. The bill clarifies that in the law, and makes clear that other philosophical belief organisations can also apply to conduct marriages. I welcome this

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Many religions and religious factions have strong beliefs about homosexuality and it would be unfair to expect all places of worship to welcome same-sex marriage. However, there are also a number of religious settings where homosexuality is accepted as well as many LGBT individuals who have personal beliefs and it would be especially meaningful for them to be able to get married in a place of worship according to their religion. The opt in procedure is appropriate for this and I would welcome it. We think that a small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the “husband and wife” gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Many couples who have a Civil Partnership did so as it was the closest they were able to get to a legal marriage at the time. Most people I know consider the arrangement to be legally the same anyway and for those that have a Civil Partnership and want it to be recognised as a marriage, they should be able to sort this as soon as is practically possible.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This should be available to all couples pursuing a marriage in general, whether LGBT or not. Still, for clarity's sake I am in favour of this regardless.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

If the individuals getting married should want a religious service, and can find an appropriate religious practitioner and site to do so it should certainly be allowed. There will be many religious factions and congregations who are not open to allowing same-sex marriages in their places of worship due to their religious beliefs. If this is the case, they should have every right to deny marriage in their settings.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

If they are living as a different gender and their partner accepts them as such, this should be allowed. If this bill goes through then this process would be a lot easier as it wouldn't matter if the couple was "traditional" or same sex.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The proposed bill provides a good balance between accepting equality for all as well as respecting the religious rights of others who may disapprove on religious grounds. Those who do oppose same-sex union have to accept that there are many "traditional marriage" couples who live their lives outside of their religious ethics and they should consider this to be like that. They don't have to like it, but they do have to accept the right of others to have a loving relationship.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sally Baker
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM BAPTIST UNION OF SCOTLAND

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

The Baptist Union of Scotland has made submissions at the earlier Public Consultation and Draft Bill stages. To avoid repetition, it is not intended to restate these submissions at this stage. However, for information and ease of reference, a note of the resolution passed by the assembly of the Baptist Union of Scotland, in October 2011, is inserted at Question 14. It relation to this stage, individual Baptist congregations may comment directly. However, we wish to note that the predominant view within the congregations which are members of the Baptist Union of Scotland is one of opposition to the introduction of this Bill on the basis of its redefinition of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

The predominant view within the congregations which are members of the Baptist Union of Scotland is that marriage can only be between one man and one woman. Any move to redefine marriage would not be consistent with that view. As a union of churches which has invested heavily in marriage, encouraging marriage over cohabitation, preparing many couples for marriage in carefully ordered programmes, supporting couples struggling to remain married, because we believe it to be the most stable basis for society and for the rearing of children, we would clearly state that the predominant view within our congregations is that we do not wish to see marriage redefined in our nation through this Bill.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

Our commitment to religious freedom in this nation would extend to those of any faith or none. We have no objection to belief celebrants having the same status in law as religious celebrants.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

We find the opt-in procedures to be more appropriate than an opt-out option. We hope this will protect local religious celebrants and local churches from litigation.
However, there continues to be a fear among celebrants that refusal to conduct same sex marriages will quickly lead to persecution or prosecution.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

Civil partnerships are by definition a civil matter and we strongly believe that they should remain in that domain. We do not believe that bringing this civil institution into the religious sphere is at all helpful. We would fear that in years to come it could potentially harm the religious freedom of celebrants and religious bodies. We strongly affirm our belief in the separation of church and state and request that the government does not allow religious and belief bodies to have any legal part in civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We appreciate the attempts of this Bill to protect the freedom of individual conscience of celebrants and to reassure our religious body that we will not be required to choose between conducting all forms of what will come to be known as marriage or no forms of what will become known as marriage. We believe that if this Bill is to become law, then changes to the Equality Act 2010 will be required. However, our concern is that these may prove to be insufficient and unsustainable, and in time churches, trustees and the clergy opposed to same sex marriage may all find themselves without robust legal protection. We would ask that full consideration be given to our earlier proposal outlined in the first consultation, and in all conversations with government ministers and civil servants, that the most inclusive and equitable approach for our society as a whole, including the protection of the religious freedom of celebrants and religious bodies, is for the state to withdraw from marriage and to seek civil registration of partnerships for all for the purposes of organising our society. As we stated in the earlier consultation, “The only way we can imagine this inequality being addressed, if the government is not convinced to maintain the present definition of marriage, is through the introduction of civil partnership for all, with the option for religious organisations to bless that which their religious conscience allows. As the predominant opinion within our union of churches clearly is distinct from the view of the present government, we believe that a separation of church and state on this issue has now become necessary. Further to this, we believe that the EIA fails to recognise that Christian belief and other religious beliefs apply to the whole of life and not simply the formal structures of church and clergy. Baptist believers declare in their baptismal vows that Jesus Christ is their Lord and Saviour. The implication of Jesus™ lordship is intended to be expressed in every aspect of their lives. Many Baptist Christian believers have, in response to this lordship, sought the opportunity to serve our nation in the public sector. We believe that the EIA has failed to fully recognise the impact this proposed legislation may have on people of faith who oppose the concept of same sex marriage, who are currently working in the public sector, such as registrars and teachers. We believe that those with a conscientious objection may find themselves disciplined at work for refusing to conduct or endorse same sex marriage. Greater consideration needs to be given to the religious freedom of all rather than simply that of the clergy and religious bodies. Our fear is that those who oppose the concept of same sex marriage and will neither endorse, participate in or teach it as equal marriage, will be discriminated against in our nation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We affirm Article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers. The crunch issue is whether a state can affirm and accommodate contradictory views being held, expressed, and lived out by its citizens. A mature democracy should be able to answer™yes™ to that. But it must apply to all. We accept that the views and voices of many groups in society have been discriminated against in the past and have been marginalised. We accept that it is right to correct this discrimination and marginalisation. We submit that it is also important that the correcting of that discrimination must not lead to a new discrimination where other views and voices are not accepted as valid, and are therefore disregarded or actively undermined.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Our Assembly passed the following resolution in October 2011: The Baptist Union of Scotland adopts the EBF resolution on marriage dated 22-25 September 2010. In doing so, and with reference to the consultation asked of us by the government, 1. Believe the current proposal from the government is unwise, and ask that before they seek to introduce legislation for same sex marriage, they commit to a further conversation with Christians in Scotland for us to discuss our serious concerns. 2. Affirm the authority and beauty of Scripture as it points toward true and wholesome human sexuality, expressed in the words of Genesis 2:24. 3. Accept the testimony of Scripture that our relationship with God, our Creator, is broken and is expressed in rejection of His ways and pursuit of our own. 4. Resolve to be, as the EBF resolution invites us to be, pro-active for the wellbeing and good of all in our society. European Baptist Federation Council Mondo Migliore, Rome, Italy 22â€“25 September 2010 The European Baptist Federation Council: Rejoices in the mutually loving and selfless relationship of God the Father, Son and Holy Spirit and the demonstration of this through the life, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Gives thanks to God for creating man and woman in his image and seeks to follow the witness and teaching of Scripture for any expression of human sexuality. Urges Baptists to model, value and teach that marriage is the creational and biblical setting of any sexual relationship between a man and a woman, as expressed in Genesis 2:24: “Therefore a man leaves his father and his mother and clings to his wife, and they become one flesh.” Shares in the brokenness of human relationships and acknowledges the pain and difficulties this brokenness causes for people in our churches and society. Affirms our responsibility to share the Good News of Jesus Christ in word and deed with all people, irrespective of their way of life or convictions. Recognises the need to encourage, support and pray for married people, offering pastoral and spiritual care for the strengthening of healthy and vibrant Christian communities in relationship with Jesus Christ and each other.

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation

Alan Donaldson
Baptist Union of Scotland
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I feel very strongly that marriage is between one man and one woman only. It is ordained by God and no-one has the right to change its definition.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

This focuses on the rights of adults and fails to understand that marriage is much more than simply love. It provides the vital service of producing children in some but not all cases. Marriage therefore involves commitment to each other and to any subsequent children. It is unclear as to what rights same gender marriage would provide in addition to that already available under civil partnership agreements.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

As a Christian marriage is ordained by God and in a religious ceremony it is God who joins the two people together not the celebrant.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

If a civil ceremony then I do not have a comment, but in a religious ceremony then I support the traditional view of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am VERY concerned about the lack of protection for those who support the traditional view of marriage. We are promised protection but it is absent in the proposed legislation, and already in England there is a court case to seek to force a church to hold a same gender marriage service. Currently legislation has seen the demise of all faith-based adoption agencies including here in Scotland. There is no protection for those working in the public sector who support traditional marriage, and some have already lost their employment because of their belief. That is simply not equality but seeking to 'shut up' those who disagree with the re-defining of marriage. Many traditional marriage organisations will probably lose their charitable status and therefore have to close. How is this providing a broad view across the nation. It is simply seeking to force people to agree with the current political ideologies which may be 'here today and gone tomorrow', and ignore the basis on which much of our culture, institutions and society is built.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Governments speak of freedom of speech but only if it concurs with their views. Politicians need to remember that whilst they have a vote, it is the people who vote them in and out of office. People who support the long-standing law of marriage are now accused of discrimination by objecting to the re-defining of marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

There is a total lack of understanding that our belief is not one we can switch on and off. The view that we can be Christians in our homes but not outside is naïve and shows a complete lack of understanding of what our faith is about. Specific amendme

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Timothy Barker
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Emma Barrie
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Marriage is if for a man & a woman. Quite apart from any religious beliefs this is plain common sense.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

Definitely against. Christianity is based entirely on the message of the Bible. The Bible makes it clear that homosexuality is a sin and therefore also a lifestyle choice (a bad one).

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

Call a spade a spade. Two men in a sexual relationship or 2 women in a sexual relationship is fundamentally different from 2 people of the same sex being in a sexual relationship. Why try to pretend they are the same? It will fool no one and have no beneficial effects on society, in fact all the evidence from other Countries suggests it will have a detrimental effect.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

Not sure what the ramifications of this are?
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

Again I am not sure what the implications are

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

I am not sure what the implications are

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We still live in a democracy and I would like it to stay that way. People have a right to speak their mind and be guided by their conscience. The proposed legislation is likely to have a gagging effect on people so that they no longer feel able to express their views without fear of civil action. This is wrong and a step towards a police state. The Bill will serve to encourage homosexuality and lesbianism in society. Is this what the Scottish Parliament want?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Covered earlier

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The Scottish Parliament would do well to learn from the experiences after introducing same sex marriage in Canada for example: http://www.thepublicdiscourse.com/2012/11/6758/ Governments should protect the public at large and not continually pander to the demands of minority groups. It is short sited to think that this Bill will increase the popularity of the Scottish Parliament or help its drive for independence. In England the Bill has seriously damaged David Cameron's chances of re-election.

Are you responding as...

an academic
a faith/belief local group or congregation
a private individual

Brian Barringer
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Clare Bat Or
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
It means that trans people can stay married, if they transition while married.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Everyone is entitled to be married. If that makes them happy. Also they would still have a home if the partner dies. They would have more legal rights married.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Everyone should be free. Love is the most important.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jennifer Beattie
15 August 2013
I am a woman with a transsexual history. I was married almost 20 years ago while living in Scotland, and would very much like to return to live there some day. I am still living with my wife and teenage children, and have foregone gender recognition (available to me since 2006) because my wife and I did not want to dissolve a loving and stable marriage.

I welcome the principles behind the Bill.

When people say that marriage is between a man and a woman, I usually want to ask how they define those terms. While it is true that the vast majority of people identify as one or the other, and their bodies are congruent with their identity, there are a small number of people (including trans and intersex people) who do not fit easily into this binary model of gender. Therefore opening up marriage to all regardless of their gender is a huge step forwards, and removes unfairness and some idiosyncrasies.

In my own situation, my wife and I have lived in a practically same-sex marriage since 2004, even though it may not yet legally be recognised as such. The Bill would allow me to seek gender recognition without the requirement to dissolve or annul my marriage – something that is greatly welcomed.

However there remain some issues with the Bill as currently worded. They are similar to the issues that I engaged with many politicians in Westminster about – including Government Ministers and opposition spokespeople.

The first is the requirement for spousal consent should someone in my situation seek gender recognition.

The law has, over many years, removed the idea that wives are their husband’s property, and has relied on the principle that parties to a marriage are responsible within it. If one party to a marriage undertakes an action, the other party is assumed to consent. If the other party does not consent, and the disagreement is fundamental, then the established route to resolve the situation is to dissolve the marriage through the divorce courts.

By requiring the spouse of a trans person to provide formal consent as part of the trans person’s gender recognition process, this Bill reverses that process. It is saying that, uniquely, trans people cannot be trusted within their marriage, and that this course of action must be confirmed independently with their spouses. As such it probably breaches Article 8 of the Human Rights Act – as the state is interfering in the private and family life of the trans person.

Marriages that do survive gender transition are relatively rare. While no formal statistics exist, I estimate that around 10% of marriages survive, meaning that around 90% fail. Over recent years I have noticed that more marriages do appear to survive, but they are still very much the minority. A recent study indicated that, in a majority of marriages, the spouse attempts to obstruct the gender transition process, and that around a third of spouses actively obstruct the divorce process. The Bill makes no distinction between couples that wish to stay together and those who are currently divorcing. The Bill, as currently worded, may well place the fundamental right of gender recognition into the hands of a hostile spouse. If a spouse does not give formal consent then the trans person’s gender recognition is vetoed until the marriage ends. This is fundamentally wrong.

Additionally it is important to clarify that the trans person must be able to provide proof of living in their “acquired” gender for a minimum of two years before commencing the gender recognition process. As in my case, the marriage will have functionally been a same-sex marriage for most, if not all, of that time. Spousal consent is not required for name change (which is one of the key determinants of proof for gender recognition), nor for any gender-related surgery. Indeed, to require spousal consent for any medical practice is regarded as ethically unsound. Yet the proposal is to single out gender recognition, well after all practical aspects of a gender transition may have been completed, as the sole step requiring spousal consent.

Because of these three reasons, the message that trans people cannot be trusted, handing the right of recognition to someone else who may well be hostile and obstructive, and the ethical problems, the requirement for spousal consent should be removed.

The Westminster government’s defence was that marriage had been contracted between a man and a woman, and that the change in gender status created a fundamental change to the marriage. This view appeared to be based upon the wording of the marriage vows. Yet marriage vows also include the names of the individuals consenting to the marriage, yet spousal consent is not required for one of those parties to change their name. And we return to the ethical problems outlined above should we wish to say that a medical procedure creates a fundamental change.

My wife has the view that she married a person, not a role or a label. We have taken the “till death do us part” wording seriously. She has recognised that, while certain of my biological aspects might have changed through medication and surgery, I am still fundamentally the person she married. I am more than my genitals. To reduce someone to the status of their genitalia is both inaccurate and demeaning, and actually not compliant with the Gender Recognition Act 2004.

In Scotland the mechanism exists for re-registering a marriage. If this is done post-gender recognition, it is only fair that both parties must give consent for the marriage to be re-registered, but that should be argued as a point separate from gender recognition. If any marriage is to be re-registered in Scotland, both parties should give consent.
A second concern is the omission of any fast-track gender recognition procedure.

When the Gender Recognition Act was passed in 2004, it was recognised that some trans people would have difficulties in providing the medical evidence required, due to the retirements or deaths of doctors, or the general passage of time. Section 27 of the Act allowed for a fast-track gender recognition procedure, whereby people who had lived in their “acquired” gender for six years or more, and could provide proof of that, needed to supply less formal medical evidence. This section was “sunsetted” in 2007.

The Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act 2013, recently passed in Westminster, reintroduces the fast-track gender recognition process for a similar group of people. It was accepted that the arguments about providing historic medical evidence were as valid now as they were in 2004, and also that many trans people (such as myself) would have been eligible for gender recognition for many years but chose to remain married instead.

A fast-track gender recognition procedure should be added to the Bill. The Westminster Act includes the requirement that the trans person is in a marriage at the time that they apply for gender recognition, which leads to the possibility that a trans person may get married in order to apply for gender recognition. This requirement is unnecessary, and also discriminates against those who were married but are no longer for whatever reason, including recent death of their spouse. The fast-track procedure should simply be open to all people who have lived in their “acquired” gender for a minimum period of 6 years.

Trans people may already be in civil partnerships. As the Bill stands, they would be required to convert these civil partnerships into marriages before they could apply for gender recognition, or dissolve their civil partnership. The introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships would remove this requirement. Civil partnerships, as with marriages, should be made available to all regardless of gender.

If a trans person is in a civil partnership to someone they were previously married to, the marriage having ended because of the gender recognition requirement, they should not have to pay to have their civil partnership converted back into a marriage.

Turning to the marriage ceremony, it is also important that marriages can be conducted in non-gendered terms if the parties so wish. Again this protects those who do not identify as either male or female, but also marriages involving trans people, where one party may not view the other as their husband or wife.

Helen Belcher
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The Scottish Government has rushed through this major change to Scottish society at break-neck speed without considering the wider societal implications (marriage and family unit). The protections offered to those holding to the traditional view of marriage are virtually meaningless or completely ambiguous - meaning they are likely to be challenged and defeated in court. It also remains deeply unpopular, as demonstrated by the first consultation (where two-thirds of respondents opposed this controversial change).

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The definition of marriage is the union of one man with one woman should not be changed. The proposed new definition is completely open to interpretation and could pave the way for a further redefinition of marriage in the future. Although polygamy is billed as a straw man arguments, there is increasing evidence of this behaviour on Scottish shores - particularly on social media. Again, this shows the lack of proper scrutiny and rationale thinking applied to this bill. The bill does not follow logic either. For example, adultery does not apply to proposed same-sex marriages. Commitment and responsibility are important parts of the legal framework of marriage, yet they only apply in practice to heterosexual couples. Surely this shows that relationships between same-sex and opposite-sex couples are completely different and should continue to be classified in different categories accordingly.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

The definition of belief in the Bill is so wide ranging that associated celebrants may have little or no training or qualifications (ministers of religion generally train for at least three years). This could lead to a further dissolution of the meaning and integrity of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I have no wish to see the introduction of same-sex marriage and oppose this proposal. Given that the Scottish Government is steamrolling ahead regardless, there must be protections enshrined in legislation to protect those celebrants, churches and religious bodies that are opposed to same sex marriage. The UK Equality Act must be amended to include these protections.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Civil partnerships are not marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

For the avoidance of doubt I do not wish to see these same-sex marriage ceremonies held in a place of worship.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

There is no need or demand for this to happen. Civil partnerships have managed perfectly fine up until this point.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The Bill is lacking in protections for many individuals opposed to the redefinition of marriage, e.g. local authority workers, teachers, civil registrars and chaplains. Existing procedures and UK Employment Law do not offer enough protection for these workers and recent decisions in the European Court show this to be the case. The Equality Act needs to include a specific reference to protect those workers opposed to same sex marriage on the grounds of religious conviction. It is inconsistent for the Scottish Government to propose changes to the Equality Act to protect choirmasters, choirs and organists against discrimination but yet registrars, teachers and other workers are afforded no such protection.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The guidance from the Lord Advocate is totally ambiguous and needs to spell out the details. For example, will a church be able to broadcast a sermon online opposing same-sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

It is unacceptable that parents will not be allowed to remove their children from all same-sex marriage related lessons. This should be amended, so that the subject is in line with provision offered to sex education (where opt-outs are available and advance warning given to parents). It is also puzzling why atheist teachers are not obliged to teach religious education on the grounds of belief, and again, supporters of traditional marriage are being made to promote this new definition by the state. This, again, is unacceptable - if not blatant discrimination. Surely this inconsistency should be resolved? Or perhaps reasonable accommodation should be the principle applied?

Additionally, given the complete lack of clarity from the Scottish Government on how this legislation will affect individuals who believe marriage is only between a man and a woman, I suggest the legislation is amended and adopts a conscientious objection clause similar to that of the 1967 Abortion Act (section four) with regards to the celebration of same-sex marriages. This would provide indisputable guidance which would be hugely helpful, rather than having to establish precedents through the courts. Given that the legislation has worked well for abortion, another deeply contentious moral issue, it would make sense to make similar provision for same-sex marriage.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Gordon Bell
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM REV. STEPHEN BENDER

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Marriage between a man and a woman is universal to the human experience no matter what culture, religion, geographic location, or historical era. Biologically, it will always take a sperm and an egg to produce children. Nature itself dictates what marriage is. To change the definition of marriage is to create a legal fiction.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Same sex couples already enjoy all the economic and social rights of a married couple through civil partnerships. There is NO compelling need to redefine something as universal to the human experience as marriage itself. Redefining marriage will, however, have profound implications far beyond allowing same-sex couples to call each "Mr." & Mrs." which in itself is rather ridiculous. These implications will have profound affects in the workplace (e.g. civil servants, teachers, social workers, etc.), upon education, religious freedoms, and individual liberties.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As the law stands at the moment, homosexuals enjoy all the legal and economic rights and benefits of marriage through their civil partnerships. Nobody has to lose their job or run foul of the law. But redefine marriage, and suddenly the rights and freedoms of tens of thousands of employees all across the country will be profoundly affected. This is not scare-mongering, but fact! We have already seen that people of faith will lose their jobs over this issue! Not just religious workers, but also social care workers, teachers, public employees (e.g., registrars, counsellors), charities, volunteers, etc., who also happen to be people with religious conscience will suddenly be marginalised and left outside the protection of the law. Do we really want to do this? Does Parliament really consider the rights of one group less valid than those of another? If so, then we no longer have a democracy, but a tyranny by the few.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The government cannot in good faith guarantee that religious freedoms will not be eroded in the future if Parliament votes to redefine marriage. We have already seen the freedom of religion (e.g., religious thought, religious conscience, religious expression, etc.) under attack over these very issues, and the law has not even been changed yet! Regardless of the safe-guards that Parliament thinks it can put in place, it cannot offer any fail-safe guarantees that individuals of faith will not find themselves on the wrong side of the law if this measure is passed. The assurances that no minister of religion will be forced to conduct same-sex marriages against his conscience shows an appalling lack of appreciation as to whose freedoms will actually be diminished. The threat to religious freedom does not just affect ministers of religion, but any individual with religious faith. The religious freedom of every individual in society will potentially be compromised. We have already seen some highly disturbing examples of individuals who have lost jobs, been harassed and suffered abuse because they stood for the deeply held values of their religious faith. This is not liberal democracy. Again, do we really want to go down this road? By the way, why does it not count that every single major religious denomination in the country has spoken out against the redefinition of marriage? Do you have any idea as to why this is so? Perhaps, it is because they see more clearly than others (since it most directly affects them) that religious freedoms are actually at stake! It is quite simply arrogant and short-sighted of any politician to suggest that these religious denominations do not know what they are talking about and to ignore their united protest! Redefining marriage not only affects ministers of religion and religious adherents, but it affects those individuals in society with no particular religious affinity who also feel strongly about traditional marriage. What possible guarantees will be put in place to protect their consciences? In other words, by redefining marriage to satisfy the protests of what is in reality an extraordinarily tiny minority of the population (which, by the way, already enjoys all the rights of marriage through the legal framework of civil partnerships already in place), the rights and freedoms of a great many more in society will be compromised.

Contrary to the vociferous protestations of a hysterical few, redefining marriage has little to do with promoting social equality. If one is truly interested in social equality, there are other issues of far greater significance than this one (e.g., economic, educational, social mobility, etc.). In fact, if marriage were redefined, it would most certainly have the negative effect of increasing inequality within our society.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

By redefining marriage, Parliament is unwittingly opening up the possibility that any sort of human relationship can be legally challenged as a “marriage.” This debate will not end with calls for same-sex marriage. What about polygamous relationship?

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief local group or congregation

Rev. Stephen Bender
20 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM LORNA BENNET

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
All people are different, but people are still people and true love (not lust) is precious no matter who is involved. People should be able to make their own choices about how they want to express their love to the world. I know straight couples who do not believe in marriage and gay couple who are desperate to get married. Who has the right to tell people that if they do not conform to the conventional man/woman pairing that they are really so horrifically different?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Lorna Bennet
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Steven Bentley
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

John Beresford
15 August 2013
At a recent conference the Lewis Christian conference – I was given from the Christian Institute person – a note to ask us to write our comments to the various questions. I have written countless letters and said countless things and the paper said try not to exceed 6 sides of A4. I should think that only one side of A4 would be too much to be read from each person who writes in.

I therefore prayed about in view of all the countless letters and petitions that I have signed as well and it came to me that the final word should be God Almighty – Father Son and Holy Spirit – One God, Almighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace, Saviour, Lord and so now I quote what God's word says about the question.

From King James version it says – Leviticus chapter 18 verse 22 – YOU SHALL NOT LIE WITH A MALE AS WITH A WOMAN, IT IS AN ABOMINATION.

And from Living Bible it says – Leviticus chapter 18 verse 22 – HOMOSEXUALITY IS ABSOLUTELY FORBIDDEN FOR IT IS AN ENORMOUS SIN

AND FROM Romans chapter 1 verse 27 – Likewise also the men leaving the natural use of the woman burned in their lust for one another, men with men committing what is shameful and receiving in themselves the penalty of their error which was due and from the Living Bible in Romans chapter 2 verse 27 – AND THE MEN INSTEAD OF HAVING A NORMAL SEX RELATIONSHIP WITH WOMEN BURNED WITH LUST FOR EACH OTHER, MEN DOING SHAMEFUL THINGS WITH OTHER MEN AND AS A RESULT GETTING PAID WITHIN THEIR OWN SOULS WITH THE PENALTY THEY SO RICHLY DESERVED.

Christine and John Bestwick
16 and 29 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jim Bevington
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I support the Bill first and foremost because I am a lesbian woman who wishes to marry the love of my life in the country which I love living. Secondly, I support the bill because the 'separate but equal' way in which we are living now is no different to the segregation experienced in the United States between people of Black and White Skin Colour. Inequality is not a solid or positive foundation upon which to raise our children or future generations and surely will keep us farther from our universal goal of peace.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Marriage’ is just a word to explain the union between two people living as a couple and representing each other in matters of life and death. Of course it is also an expression of the feelings two people have for one another. Although religion would have us focus on the definition of marriage being the union between one man and one woman, that is a very old way of seeing things. And now that Christianity is itself a minority, I think the laws should be updated to reflect the new true separation of church and state. For, how can you use religious laws to govern a people, the majority of which are non-religious? That creates a brand new imbalance and inequality all together. Therefore, the name we give the union between same-sex couples is really the least of our problems. Having said that, I believe that if two people, gay, straight or otherwise wish to be married they should have the right to do so. And on the same token, if they choose to be civil partners, they should also have that right. True equality will breed a more civilized society and give a great example for other countries and societies.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Equal Equal Equal. Although I don’t believe that religions should be forced to take part, I believe they should have the right to do so if they choose.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

If people wish for their civil partnerships to change to marriages then I think they should have that option. However people should still have the option to keep their civil partnerships if they prefer it that way.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

I don't think religion should really have anything to do with it. Speaking from experience I can say that there were places I would have wanted to have my civil partnership ceremony but couldn't because it was 'religious premises'. I think it should come down to the venue agreeing with the ceremony and going from there.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I understand that some people are not comfortable with the idea of same-sex marriage and a lot of those issues are spawned from either religious views on same-sex relations or a lack of understanding. Some people think that homosexuality is a choice, which has clearly been proven to be a false. So it is important for us not to just change the laws for Equality but to also help educate those who don't understand. I do not believe that religion or ideas of religions should be taken into account when law making across the board. Not just in the matters of same-sex couples. After all, governments don't really take pagan beliefs into consideration when law making, so why should Christianity be extended a courtesy like that? It creates more inequality.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People should be allowed to speak their minds without fear of prosecution for their honesty. We should not be afraid to tell our governments where/when we think they are in error or how we think they could make things better for everyone. After all, we vote for our MPs and shouldn't let that be the only way in which voices are heard.
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Erin Beyer
18 July 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM LESLEY BHATTI

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Lesley Bhatti
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

We welcome the introduction of same-sex marriage. Our reader survey last year showed great support for this. We echo concern about the amendments to the 2004 Gender Recognition Act to have the "spousal veto". Legislation like this should be gender-free, not discriminatory against trans and other minority gender people. It is a shame, despite initial indications, the Scottish Govt is not planning to introduce mixed-sex Civil Partnerships too - our reader survey showed clear support for opening up both marriage and civil partnership regardless of gender.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

A positive step. We believe that the current segregation encourages biphobia and homophobia, and especially highlights to bisexual people that their relationships are treated differently and with differing amounts of respect in law according to the gender of their partner. We further believe that there is no good reason to restrict willing religious and faith organisations and their willing celebrants from conducting religious and faith-based marriage ceremonies for same-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

One system for all, all treated with equal respect and no special privilege.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

We are troubled by the lack of symmetry between authorising bodies. If a religious or belief celebrant does not wish to solemnise a same-sex marriage, even when their religious or belief body permits this, then they are not compelled to do so; we support this. However, if a celebrant wishes to solemnise a same-sex marriage when their religious or faith body does not, then they are not permitted to do so, and this seems unfair. In one case, the wishes of the celebrant are allowed to override the position of the body; in the other they are not.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

We think it should be possible to convert for the longest possible period of time. Many people may have accepted Civil Partnership as the Best Option Available rather than their preferred arrangement, and there may be a host of reasons why people cannot make a speedy switchover from one to the other.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Let marriages reflect the lives of those being married.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

It should be allowed and regardless of the genders of the couple.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Support and without 'spousal veto', this is a matter for the trans person themselves and noone else. "Fast track" procedures for people who have been transitioned for a long time should be permitted.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The Bill provides protections for people who due to personal bias do not wish to perform religious same-sex marriages. We believe that people carrying out civil same-sex marriages are not taking part in a faith or belief ceremony and therefore should not be allowed to refuse on the grounds of religious conviction - it is a matter of "goods and services" provision.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

10 years ago, how a bisexual person’s relationships were seen in law varied hugely dependent upon the gender of their partner. After the Civil Partnership Act, this remained the case still. This is a first step in the law starting to respect bi people's loves and choices, but it will not complete that process.
Are you responding as...

an LGBT group
Community Press publication

Jen Yockney
Bi Community News
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I think the definitions of words like "marry" and "marriage" need to be reworked and rewritten for the modern day. Too many arguments are being based on these 'dictionary' definitions. To marry something is to combine two different things to create a new one. Two men or two women are as different as a hetero couple... no two humans are the same. There should be no difference made between one loving couple and the next wanting to form a union and spend their life together.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

Why should civil ceremonies or same sex partnerships NOT have their ceremonies performed in religious premises? There are hundreds of religious believers from many faiths who are gay/lesbian/trans. They should be given the choice of being able to marry where they preach. It is simply a form of racism to forbid this! civil marriages already happen in parks, beaches, hotels, registry offices, civic halls.... but I believe the point here is to put ALL marriages under one umbrella and give EVERY single person an EQUAL opportunity to marriage in any way they choose.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think they should be re-educated and have their eyes open. Society needs to be taught that being gay/lesbain/bi is as incontrollable as choosing the colour of your eyes. It should be widely taught and understood that people do not choose to be LGBT as a way of life... it is about accepting and embracing that it IS a way of life and that it is unavoidable. The sooner this is made aware in society... the easier life will become for everyone. I always ask bigoted straight people "when did you choose to be straight?"

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is fine if it is from an educated point of view... what gets me mad is people telling me that I chose to be gay and am going to hell for it, I don't care to hear from people who tell me that I am an 'abomination of nature' as has been done in the past. Some may see this as freedom of speech... I see it as abuse! So unless the Freedom of Speech comes from an educated substantiated source in an intelligent manner...I have no time for it.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

David Black
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM HELEN BLACKBURN

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither
I don't know that there's much difference between the two. Religious celebrants also believe.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
As a Christian I believe in monogamy in relationships and equal marriage for Christians will help to promote this.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition
Churches and other places of worship need to be included first.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
As a Christian I believe this is the right thing to do. Lots of LGBT people have a deep faith and would want their union blessed by God.
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

The marriage certificate would need to change.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There’s a lot of bigotry and homophobia out there and the more protection we give these people, the more they will oppose equality.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

If I made racist or sexist comments I would be hauled over the coals for it, so why do we allow so much hate speech against LGBT people?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Helen Blackburn
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

A private individual

Darren Blance
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
There should be the option to have your civil partnership converted into a marriage but civil partnerships should remain as an option and also be opened up to opposite-sex couples

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Declan Blench
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
It's one of the most basic human rights, Scotland cannot be seen to be a diverse nation that supports equality without it.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Fergus Boden
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The institution of marriage predates the establishment of any human law, nation and church and although the law relating to marriage has been modified over the centuries it has never fundamentally altered the essential nature of marriage as given by God: that is marriage is a lifelong commitment between one man and one woman. The plan to redefine marriage is therefore a radical departure from God’s loving purpose for humanity and it is unprecedented in the course of human history. To change marriage in this way opens the door to other forms of legalised sexual relationships. For example in Canada and the USA, where marriage has been already been redefined, there have been attempts made to legalise polygamy. Also in Brazil and the Netherlands a three-way relationship was given legal recognition making it comparable with marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

My fear is that despite any safeguards put in place churches and ministers who refuse to marry same-sex couples will be susceptible to legal action. Recently a homosexual couple in England have made it known they are already planning to go to court to force churches to host gay weddings. The European Court of Human Rights could overturn and protections put in place and we have no guarantee that this court will not rule that Christian ministers must either solemnise all marriages or cease to be permitted to marry people altogether. It was recently reported that Sikh temples have been advised to halt all civil marriage ceremonies on their premises to protect them from possible legal challenges for refusing to conduct same-sex weddings. Believing in the traditional, biblical definition of marriage must not be used by public sector employers to dispute or question the equality and diversity credentials of existing or prospective employees.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The issue of freedom of speech is essential to this issue because it is the expression of beliefs about marriage that tends to get people into trouble. People who express disagreement with same-sex marriage are already facing difficulties. For example Adrian Smith, a housing manager in Trafford, was demoted for gross misconduct after a colleague complained when he described same-sex marriage in church as an equality too far. In Scotland, the Rev Brian Ross was removed from his post as a police chaplain because he disagreed with gay marriage on his personal internet blog. Apparently this breached Strathclyde Police’s policy of equality and diversity! Specific amendments are necessary to protect the right to free speech and debate. They need to apply across public order and equality laws, including employment and goods and services. As a bare minimum amendments need to make clear that merely discussing or criticising same-sex marriage is not, on its own, a form of discrimination for the purpose of equality law or a breach of public order legislation. Such changes would help those who believe in traditional marriage to feel free to discuss the issue with their colleagues or customers, employees or employers. It would send an important message to those who are quick to label any disagreement with same-sex marriage as homophobic or bigoted.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

As a Christian minister I believe the Word of God (i.e. the Bible) to be supreme rule of faith and life and it is perfectly clear that marriage is only for one man and one woman. Any other sexual union is sinful and separates us from God. To celebrate sin (which is what a religious celebrant who marries a same-sex couple would in fact do) is abhorrent to God who loves all people and calls them to repent and believe in His Son, the Lord Jesus.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

Rev Douglas Campbell
Bo'Ness Old Kirk (Church of Scotland)
13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I believe the bill has been ill-conceived and, despite warnings from a variety of experts and professionals, little thought has been given to the effects it may have on many aspects of people’s lives.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

I have seen no specific definition of 'belief celebrant'; however, many Religious Celebrants have strong beliefs regarding marriage and this bill puts them in an untenable position. It may be that some belief celebrants are similarly affected, however, in my opinion, this question is simply leading to this government compelling Religious Celebrants to act against their conscience or fall foul of the law.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

The arrangements have failed to recognise that many Celebrants will, as a result of this bill, be put in the position where they are unable to express their beliefs without falling foul of discrimination legislation.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Can this government explain what benefits a so-called 'same-sex marriage' will provide to a couple which has already entered into a civil partnership?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition
While this matter is not of any great relevance, as far as I can see, I would repeat that I am not in favour of a government taking it upon itself to redefine marriage and so am 'in opposition' of the question. I understand that Registrars will have no right to exercise their conscience once this government has passed its bill and I find it deeply troubling that some people in this country are now to face discrimination for holding a view contrary to that of the government.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

It would appear paradoxical for someone to remain married in these circumstances. This defies common sense; sadly, common sense does not appear to figure in any of this.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

From published material by legal experts and from recent case law, it would appear that there is (or will be) no protection whatsoever from penalty as well as discrimination and persecution for people who dare to disagree with this government and the minority lobby which has dragged this country to the point where, despite all the economic and social problems resulting from recession requiring finance, vast amounts of parliamentary time and tax-payers' money is being spent on a piece of legislation which will benefit very few people but will criminalise many ordinary and decent people who never voted for a party which included this in its manifesto and yet will find themselves alienated and in breach of legislation which is flawed and unfair. No good legislation should create an atmosphere where the rights of one group come at the expense of those of another. Forcing Churches which, because of their faith cannot countenance same-sex 'marriage' to fall foul of the law, seems a brutal way to alter society, while the irony of doing so in the name of discrimination and inclusivity is typical of this government.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

This government is well on its way already to repressing freedom of speech and thought for anyone who disagrees with its agenda. There is no obvious protection for Religious Celebrants, other Religious people, teachers and even parents who dare to express an opinion contrary to the ethos behind the bill.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

As far as the bill is concerned, the so-called 'protections' this government is putting in place are limited in their scope, as well as unsustainable in the face of European Human Rights' legislation according to eminent Human Rights' lawyers. I must also express my distaste at the way this government invites comment from voters on this matter with scarcely-veiled threats about how opinions may be used.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Anne-Marie Boyle
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Samuel Bradley
21 August 2013
I write both in my capacity as a long-time lecturer at the University of Aberdeen, still involved in counselling students, even though I am now retired, and in my capacity as a general and observant citizen.

I am willing that my evidence be public, and in my name. I am willing to be contacted in regard to it.

Since it concerns the matter of equality, and the prospect of unending litigation, public protest, and even continuing civil disobedience, my views on the questions about marriage and same-sex marriage are not the concern of this letter - they are quite complex and nuanced, whereas the issue of equality is quite straightforward.

My comments relate to two of the questions raised by the Committee.

Firstly, they relate to Question 12: Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same-sex marriage?

Secondly, they relate to Question 13: Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Throughout the discussion both in public and in the two Parliaments, the Scottish and the United Kingdom Parliaments, two different issues have constantly got confused. The first is of the meaning of marriage and the legitimacy of same-sex marriage, and second is of Freedom of Speech and Expression of Opinion in regard to the issues concerned. This letter concerns the equal right to hold and express opinions in regards to the matters concerned.

Beliefs about the nature of marriage and legitimacy of same-sex marriage are plainly beliefs about a religious or serious life style matter, and could therefore plainly be protected under any Equality Acts whether in Scotland or the UK as a whole. There are plainly a great many people who hold opinions on these matters with the kind of seriousness that relatively orthodox Christians, Muslims, Jews, and Hindus hold it, even though they would not describe their belief as "religious".

The problem arises both in the sphere of Public Service, and in the sphere of private employment.

The first problem is that the Equality Act does not clearly distinguish when a public servant is speaking in a public capacity and when not.

There is also a problem when students and others begin to feel reserved in expressing their opinions in case what they say be taken into account in job applications, whether for public or private service.
It is also obscure when a person should be considered as acting in a public capacity and when not.

When I have given a class teaching philosophy on a disputed serious matter I have made it clear that there are two or more views and given reasons of either side. But outside the teaching context I have felt quite free.

I think it would be very bad if everybody who might in future apply for jobs should have to be worried in the years before they had even decided what they wanted to do.

This is a quite separate matter from principle of the acceptability of same-sex marriage itself, on which, judging there are plainly disagreements. The question is of the equality of treatment of those who hold opposite opinions on the questions concerned.

People have different opinions on the matter of same-sex marriage, and here Parliament may decide in accord with its conscientious view (it should be a matter of a free vote), taking account of desired liberties, and also of the majority opinion amongst the public.

The question of the Equality Act is quite different and affects freedom of speech in unforeseeable ways - the decisions of the European court have been quite surprising (it has nothing to do with the EU and its court at the Hague, but has to do with the quite separate European Convention on Human Rights originating with the council of Europe with its court sitting in Strasburg)

I predict that if the two matters are not separated there will be an unending series of legal cases and unending problems with civil disobedience involving Muslims and Hindus as well as Christians, going on for years.

There will also be a constant insecurity in making job applications and in giving response in interviews as to whether opinions in this area are going to be taken into account. The law ought to make it clear that they are not going to be taken into account, except in so far as they are relevant to limited areas of Public Service.

To avoid these evils what is required is a extension of the protected areas of belief indicated in the 2010 Equality Act, Chapter 10 - or other provisions in the law which have the effect of introducing such an extension in protection.

David Braine
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
There are 'belief' celebrants and organisations who actively support marriage for all, and who are denied the chance to practice this with the current set up. If the bill is supported it would given them the freedom to choose alongwith religious celebrants

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Everyone should have the right to choose, and not to be vilified for it. Which includes those who choose not to marry any couple, and those who choose to do so. There should be no punishment or penalties for anyone.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I believe everyone has the right to be married, and to use that word for their union.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
I married in a garden, in the summer last year and my marriage is no more legal or illegal than any others registered that year in registry offices, churches and other official buildings. I was lucky that my inter-faith minister agreed to perform this (and that the sun shone in Aberdeen!), but also that my country had the foresight to allow this. Everyone should be able to choose this option, should everyone connected to the ceremony agree.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Should both parties in the marriage be accepting of this then I see no reason why the state should force their relationship to change.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Anyone should be free to believe what they want, as long as they don't discriminate or abuse others because of it. My hope is that in generations to come the discrimination against homosexual people will be as abhorrant as racism is to the majority of the scottish population now.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Everyone should have a right to the freedom of speech, but not the freedom to abuse, frighten, threaten or mistreat in their words.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am so proud that Scotland is bringing forward this bill, thank-you.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Megan Braithwaite
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Derek Brash
14 August 2013
I am writing in response to the Scottish Government's call for Evidence in relation to the Marriage and Civil Partnerships (Scotland) Bill.

I am concerned about the implication of doing so for civil and religious liberties. A poll conducted by Comres in 2012 showed the majority (55%) agree that "marriage should continue to be defined as a life-long exclusive commitment between a man and a woman.

I am very concerned about the subsequent results that are possible. If marriage is redefined, something that has never be done before, an important precedent is set, opening the door for further redefinition.

In Canada and in some US states, where same-sex marriage has been legalised, attempts are now being made to legalise polygamy. In the Netherlands, three-way relationships have been recognised in law, and there may well be demands for marriage to be redefined in this way in the future.

There is the danger that people working in the public sector will be penalised if they express views to the same-sex marriage views, even if and before they become law. I know of an example of an applicant for the police force: at an interview he was asked about his views on same-sex marriage. He expressed his belief that marriage should be only between a man and a woman. He got no further in his application. There is also danger for religious liberties. Churches and ministers who refuse to marry same-sex couples will be subject to litigation. Although Scottish law may seek to defend those who do not wish to conduct same-sex marriages, ultimately such matters would be decided by the European Court of Human Rights. In England, a homosexual couple are planning to go to Court to force churches to host gay weddings.

But the European Court of Human Rights does not in some cases, provide protection, in the right of freedom of thought, conscience and religion, where there is conflict between it and other rights.illian haley, a registrar from lofbington, was forced out of her job because she felt unable, for faith reasons, to officiate at civil partnership ceremonies. She requested that other colleagues without a faith objection manage such cases. However, her employer was unwilling to accommodate her. In January 2013 the European Court said it could not help Miss haley.

In Education, there are concerns. Senior figures in the UK Department for Education have already expressed concerns that teachers could be sacked for opposing same-sex marriage. A senior source said that the UK was not "in control" and that the ultimate decision might "inevitably" be taken by the European Court of Human Rights.
Qu 4. In my view, the bill does not go far enough to place safeguards with respect to civil and religious liberties.

Qu 5. I am not in support of the introduction of same-sex marriage, for faith reasons.

Qu 8. In my view civil partnerships should remain as they are.

I am responding as a private individual.

Qu 6. I have reservations about allowing belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants.

Isobel Bray
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM MARC BREW

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Marc Brew
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support and welcome the bill. Equality for all is essential and this bill will go a long way towards making this possible.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

As a gay man, the introduction of same sex marriage is very important to me. I believe it is important that the bill does not create two different versions of marriage - same sex marriage and mixed sex marriage because that would lead to continued discrimination. The law should treat all marriages the same, regardless of the genders of the spouses. Issues such as adultery should be treated the same for all types of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I would very much like to consider changing my civil partnership to a marriage, although I would prefer this to be through a simple and inexpensive administrative procedure.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. Spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It has been proposed by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. I strongly oppose that. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race. It has also been proposed by some people that teachers should have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. I strongly oppose this. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, which is equally controversial for some people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

David Brian
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM ANDREW BRODIE

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I think this bill is a huge step forward for LGBT equality and signals an end to institutional discrimination on the part of the state. Some of the bill's finer points merit scrutiny but, on the whole, all parts of the bill exhibit common sense and a true commitment to equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Same sex marriage is a common sense policy that extends the right of marriage to all couples, regardless of sexual orientation. The current situation, where marriage is limited to heterosexual couples, is simply discriminatory. Marriage is a hugely important institution within society and denying marriage to same sex couples is to the detriment of the state as well as to LGBT people. Studies have already shown the same sex couples exhibit exactly the same love and commitment to one another as opposite sex couples, and are as capable as parents. So prohibiting same sex marriage is not only discriminatory, it doesn't make any sense.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I agree with this principle. All people should be equal before the law, regardless of what they believe.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

No religious body will be forced to conduct same sex marriage, just as they are not forced to remarry divorced people. The legalisation of same sex marriage will not affect the nature of pre-existing heterosexual marriages. Opponents of same sex marriage have no reason to be concerned by its introduction.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Andrew Brodie
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Really, I fail to see any reason for debate here. If two people love each other then they should be free to marry and that's that. How anyone feels they have the right to dictate what is and isn't proper love worth celebrating is beyond me. It's sickening

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
To those who have concerns about gay marriage, get a grip. How two people chose to celebrate their love is nobody’s business but their own.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is important. And as such, people should be allowed to moan about this bill as much as they want. That does not mean they have the right to be listened to though. I think the majority of Scots in this day and age are very progressive, so

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Allan Brown
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Shut their mouths and keep them shut? You are not under threat and who are you to deny other people happiness
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I'm not certain a lot of people know what that truly means. But a lot of people will still comment

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ian brown
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Miss Lesley Anne Brown
17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

With the exception of some parts of the bill, as will be detailed later.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It is extremely important that the difference that has held through civil partnerships being the only option for same sex couples is removed. Same sex couples unfortunately still suffer from discrimination within our society and removing this difference.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Marriage is not about religion, but about love and commitment. It is only right that belief celebrants are on the same footing as religious celebrants in order to allow couples who have no religion to have an equality of ceremony to those who have religi

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

This allows for freedom of religions to do as they feel is right. However, 11(2)(g) should be amended to allow religious and belief celebrants to use the gender free form of the marriage ceremony for mixed sex couples if those couples want that.

This s

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

But feel that couples who have a civil partnership that was registered outside of Scotland should be enabled to change to a marriage through the options provided within the bill. It is unfair on those who have a civil partnership registered outside of Scotland, as if they wished to change their partnership to a marriage, they would have to show the dissolution of their civil partnership, which is categorically NOT what they would be wanting, as that would need to be shown by a breakdown in their relationship. This prevents those who had a civil partnership registered outside of Scotland to be able to marry, which is discriminatory.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

However, the requirement of the consent of the transgenders spouse before a married transgender person can have their gender recognition is unacceptable. This could lead to cases where the spouse both refuses a divorce or causes problems so that the gain

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I feel that it is unacceptable for civil registrars to be able to opt out of performing same sex marriages. They are performing a civil duty on behalf of the state and as such they must not be able to opt out of the grounds of religion. If this was allowed it could set a dangerous precedent where other public service providers then refuse their duty when it comes to same sex couples, which is unacceptable and discriminatory. Also it has been suggested by some that teachers should be able to opt out of discussing same sex marriage if it should come up in class etc. This is extremely discriminatory and would seriously affect young people growing up within our tolerant society to give them the message that same sex marriage can be "hidden" away. What of the child in that class who has same sex married parents. This must not be allowed.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Civil partnerships should be extended to mixed-sex couples, by not doing so is discriminatory. It is particularly problematic to those who are in a civil partnership who change their gender. I also feel that the current situation with regards to pension
Are you responding as...

a private individual

Talitha Brown
21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM PHIL BROWNE

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I have a family photo taken at my sister’s wedding. In the photo are myself, my Dad, my Mum, my sister and my brother-in-law. - All the people in the photo are hard working, law-abiding, upstanding citizens with good values, and they contribute to society. - All the people in the photo are celebrating the joy of two people in love having their relationship recognised both legally and by the extended family, friends and society. - Sadly not everyone in the photo has equal rights under law. - Despite being an upstanding citizen, I am denied the right to have my loving relationship recognised. - My relationship is denied the validity given to couples by marriage. - My relationship is denied the legal protections of marriage - e.g. hospital visitation rights if one partner is critically ill, legal certainty if a couple has any children, and legal/financial certainty if one partner dies. - Why? - all because I happen to love someone of the same sex. - My love for another man is identical to the love felt by opposite sex couples - so why the different treatment under law? Everyone in the photo should have the same right to marry the person they love. Love is love, regardless of who you love, it is all the same. - I have been in love and know how special the love between two people can be. My family value and respect my relationship with another man, and treat my same sex partner the same as they would if we were legally married. I want my country to allow me to marry the person I love. This is important because I should have the same rights, and have my country treat me with the same respect and dignity as all other citizens. I should be allowed to marry, and my relationship given identical standing to the relationships of my parents and my sister. My desire to have the choice to marry is supported by my entire community - my family, friends, work colleagues, and neighbours. I can go out, find a woman I barely know and who I do not love, get married and immediately have all the rights and recognition of marriage - despite this being a sham. However, if I cherish, adore, respect and love another man so much that I can not imagine a world without him - fulfill each other and love him so much that our love is greater than the sum of us - this is not recognised!! Society is ahead of the govt and the government needs to catch up by legalising marriage equality. Numerous other countries legalised same sex marriage when public support was less than it is in Scotland - the world has not ended and people live their lives normally in these countries. Inter-racial marriages, de-facto relationships (living in sin), inter-religious marriages, and divorce were all previously frowned upon and seen as a threat to society. Now these are all common place and accepted in society - just as same sex marriage will be. One day soon, society will look back and think what was all the fuss about with legalising same sex marriage. Two people who love each other (regardless of their sex) and aspire to marry, being allowed to marry can only strengthen the institution of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual
Phil Browne
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

It is a very good Bill in that it represents something Scotland is likely to coalesce around, with the exception of a relatively few extremists on the edges.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It represents the removal of a major piece of discrimination, discrimination that is comparable to denying marriage members to a religious or racial group.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Religious celebrants should have no special privileges in such matters.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

There should be a simple and cheap upgrade facility for those who were in civil partnerships before the introduction of same-sex marriage. To deny this would be to penalise those same-sex couples who took advantage of civil partnerships as representing the best public acknowledgement of their union that was available at the time.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I am in support of this provided the location in question allows a degree of seriousness to be maintained commensurate with the seriousness of the commitment being entered into and of the legal and other public support that accrues to marriage. Marriage on the roller-coaster at a theme park, for instance, would not satisfy this condition.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

If civil partnerships are to continue (and there appears to be no present intention to abolish them for same-sex couples), then I would want to see religious and belief organizations allowed to register them. But my hope is that with the introduction

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The Bill is more than generous in its protections for such people, who often seem to feel a peculiar animosity towards same-sex couples far more intense than they feel, if they feel it at all, towards, say, adulterous couples, divorced-and-remarried couples and unmarried mixed-sex couples. Neither public officials nor employees of privately-owned firms should be allowed to opt out of dealing with same-sex couples. To allow this would be comparable to allowing public officials or private employees to refuse to have dealings members with other groups. It would be outrageous for a planning official to be allowed to opt out of processing an application by the Roman Catholic Church on the grounds that "I believe the RC Church to be a bastion of idolatry hateful to the Lord and have a conscientious objection to processing its application for a new church building." In just the same way it would be outrageous for, e.g., a registrar to be allowed to say, "The civil marriage of this couple is an abomination to the Lord and I demand to be allowed to have nothing to do with it."

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I have seen in the press frequent expressions of concern that schoolteachers should not have to 'teach' same-sex marriage and that this is a matter of freedom of speech. In general, teachers are required to teach a publicly-agreed syllabus, not to foist their private views on children. It would be outrageous for a teacher to claim on freedom-of-speech grounds to be allowed, for instance, to tell a child that his or her unmarried mother "is a whore" or that a child's divorcing parents "will go to hell", no matter how sincerely the teacher believes it. Things should be no different in regard to same-sex marriage. Children need to be educated about the sorts of relationships, and the institutional forms of those relationships, that are available to them and to their family members, and that includes mention of the option of same-sex marriage. Teachers should not be allowed to suggest to children that there is 'something wrong' with Uncle Ted's and Uncle John's marriage--or, indeed, with their own parents' same-sex marriage. Relatedly, teachers should not be allowed to refuse to deal with same-
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am entirely opposed to opening civil partnerships to mixed-sex couples. To allow this option would be to truckle to the common but false view that all marriage, even civil marriage, is essentially a religious institution, as though civil marriage were carried out by the state under a sort of franchise agreement with religious organizations. I know intelligent people who think like this. The tendency to think that all marriage, including civil marriage, is at bottom religious may in part be a consequence of the fact that religious leaders tend to speak as though they have a special claim to pronounce on all marriage, including civil marriage, not just marriage ceremonies as provided by religious organizations. This claim needs to be resisted, not pandered to by opening civil partnerships to mixed-sex couples. Relatedly, a lot of people seem to think that civil partnerships are the same as genuinely civil marriage, as though existing civil marriage (for mixed-sex couples) were still at heart a religious institution. The state should not be in the business of reinforcing such muddles. So far as concerns legal unions, there should only be civil marriage, available to same-sex couples and mixed-sex couples; with the option of appropriate religious ceremonies where religious organizations and celebrants can be found to provide them. Civil partnerships should be allowed to wither way as an anomaly, as an institution that at a historically specific time was a means of allowing same-sex couples some of the benefits and status of marriage. With the introduction of same-sex marriage, there is no need for them.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Paul Brownsey
8 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Gay people getting married in Scotland will have no impact on opponents of gay marriage whose ‘against’ stance is based on religious beliefs. On the other hand, religious opponents want their opinions to have a direct impact on the lives of gay people and are trying to impose their beliefs on everyone. This is unfair and should not be allowed to happen.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is one thing, allowing nonsense such as Section 28 back in schools to protect those wishing to vocalise religious beliefs is a potential danger. Look at what has happened in France!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am a Scot, living in England who would like to get married - however, the only place my partner and I wish to be married is in Scotland, where we met and lived together for 10 years. We have only been in England for a couple of years and as yet have nowhere as special as Scotland that we’d like to get married. Same-sex marriage is now legal where we live, so it seems ridiculous that less than 200 miles away I cannot be married in my home country.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Rowan Burn
24 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I find that the attempt to redefine the characteristics of the institution of Marriage to be unnecessary as homosexuals can currently enter into civil partnerships which legally define their relationship as co-habitees. I feel that the extension of a family group to include two "parents" of the same sex to be morally reprehensible whether by adoption or by surrogacy.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage is universally the forum for the binding of two heterosexuals for life with the primary purpose of conceiving and rearing children between them. Love per se is not an issue, but can generally be the foundation for a lifetime commitment between the couple publically expressed by the couple voluntarily entering into the institution of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

Spiritual leanings are irrelevant to the institution of Marriage one does not need to have religious beliefs or leanings to enter into the Institution of Marriage. Couples can enjoy a religious celebration of their union whether by Marriage or Civil Part

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

See my comments at 6

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

There can be no justification in law or based on so called human rights to entertain the concept.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

See my comments at 6

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

See my comments at 6

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Transgender deformities should annul a Marriage on discovery of same

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There has been no overwhelming public movement for the reconstitution of Marriage to enable homosexuals to enter that institution. This has been promoted by political party members with a specific agenda related to their own sexuality. Homosexual Marriage has not been put before the electorate in any specific Manifesto for express approval for such a fundamental reorganisation of Society's moral compass. Changing the constitution of marriage without the patent approval of the overwhelming majority of Society is a crass abuse of process by politicians applying their own agenda.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual and an elder emeritus of the Church of Scotland

Alan Mark Bush
13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Frances Butterworth
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

It is about time that we removed all impediments to equal treatment for those that are different to us. This is about building peace in our communities.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Love is universal, we should stop saying one sort of love is better than another. Being judgmental causes conflict in communities.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Why not- humanists fall in love as well.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

If they wish, if they do not want to do this that is also fine.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

I think civil partnerships should be open to everyone including heterosexual couples. I am not in favour of civil partnerships becoming marriages they are not the same thing.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

We already have civil marriages between heterosexuals allowed anywhere so extending this to all relationships is rather obvious.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Part of the stigma attached to gay and lesbian relationships suggests that they have no spiritual soul. Allowing religious groups to celebrate and perform civil partnerships if they wish recognized the falseness of this statement.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I think these cases need to be considered on an individual basis and that there should be no legal impediment to either remaining married to the existing partner or of dissolving the marriage should that be the agreed course between the couple.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think that religious congregations and individuals who have concerns about this should not have it imposed upon them. So existing registrars should be able to opt out of same sex marriages if they have a problem with it but they should not be able to propagate their ideas. I would see that any new registrar must be open minded enough to conduct all kinds of ceremony.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is fine providing it does not inflame division and is seen and taken as the view of the individual. Some of the media are about trying to provoke division and this should not be allowed.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Anthony Buxton
30 June 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Marriage is simply a matter of two people, joining themselves by law in recognition of their love. There is debate as to whether same sex marriage demeans the institution of marriage. I am of the opinion that any degradation to the institution of marriage suffered thus far, could only logically have happened between partners of an opposite sex. United Kingdom law is set on precedent and not on constitution. We learn from history, and allow it to form our laws of today. I simply don't see how the impact of gay marriage could be determined as positive or negative, without having any precedent. There is a matter concerning gay marriage that I would like to draw attention to. Many view Gay Marriage as potentially ruining families; breaking down a structure that apparently the modern world has not already eroded with countless "nuclear families" developing every day. On this, however, there is precedent. There have been children, nurtured and cared for by gay parents who have grown to lead very successful lives. There are studies which even suggest that same sex parents provide a better environment for children. I believe there may be some store in that, owing to the fact that same sex parents would only ever be able to have a child through a mutual decision to care for one.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I believe that gender should be of no significance in anyone's eligibility to marry another person, and that of course any transgender person's marriage should be made no less valid by their change of gender. It is a physical change, having no effect upon their heart or soul in regards to whomever they love.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I find the idea that anyone who is not involved in a same sex union, or relationship, should have any need of protection from one to be ludicrous. It is a matter of equal treatment, that I think should work both ways. It is my view that unions should be equal amongst sexual orientations. If Civil Partnerships are to be kept in existence then I would support legislation allowing opposite sex couples to become Civil Partners, too. Every couple should have a choice as to how they are joined, supported in law.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Calum Calder
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
No

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
No

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Stephen Calder
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM CALVARY CARLUKE..CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

This Bill is in real danger of destroying the timeless fabric of society..Marriage between a man and a women has been a bedrock of society since time began..and there is no real reason to change...the gay community(small as it is ) seems to punch way above it's weight to the point where people like me who disagree are labelled "bigots"...A number of public officials have already lost jobs or been demoted because of their opposition.. How much worse will this become if this bad law is passed.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

As a marriage celebrant it disturbs me that at some point in the future I will be challenged to perform a homosexual marriage..On Christian grounds I could not do this..as although I have no underlying issues with homosexuals...I consider homosexuality wrong in The Lord's eyes.....just as every sexual sin outside of a heterosexual marriage is wrong...I rent a public building for our services and I can see the day coming when I will be stopped from rentals because I do not comply with a bad law..!!

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

I don't understand the question? Many faith and religious groups celebrate marriage..and none of the major religions in the world would proclaim homosexuality to be right in their eyes...I am not a religious person..I have a simple faith in Jesus Christ..

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

Homosexual practice is wrong and should not be part of marriage...Why is it that Homosexuals are alraedy allowed civil partnerships, and now possibly marriage..When hetrosexual couples will not be allowed civil partnerships if they wish.....

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

For all of the above reasons..given previously

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

There are two sides to marriage..the civil side which involves compliance with the law of the land..and there is the religious side which means that a couple take their vows before God...It is not where a marriage takes place but to whom you make your vow

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

for all of the previous reasons..64% of the people who responded to your survey did not want marriage redefined..but this government has chosen to ignore it!!

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

If a law in this country requires that our people need protection from the law ..then surely this is a divisive and bad law...People have already lost their jobs or have been demoted..and this before the law is passed...If we redefine marriage now what's to stop the polygamists from demanding a further redefinition at some future date...

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a celebrant
a faith/belief local group or congregation
a private individual

james tatton
calvary carluke..christian fellowship
23 August 2013
I am writing in response to the call for evidence for the committee stage of the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. I intend to respond first as a parent with children in the state education system, and then to some of the general questions about the proposed legislation.

Response as a parent

I am the father of three children under the age of six. My children are currently in the state education system, or are shortly due to be. I am concerned about the impact of this legislation on my natural rights to educate my children, and on the welfare of the society in which they will have to live.

As my children grow, I intend to teach them about marriage. I will explain to them the important nature and purpose of marriage, how authentic marriage is not an arbitrary and subjective legal, religious or political construct, but rather an objective anthropological reality, rooted in the human person. I will explain how male and female are human realities and that gender is not a construct (two facts this legislation wilfully obscures). I will explain that marriage is the sexual union of a man and a woman: that its purpose is to join a man and a woman to one another and any children they may have and to provide those children with a ordered upbringing with mother and a father united for life.

I will explain why human societies have evolved marriage to provide an ordered context for procreation and sexual activity, and that sexual activity belongs between a husband and wife within marriage. I will explain to them that sex outside marriage, including homosexual activity, is potentially harmful: socially, physically, emotionally and psychologically. I will also explain to them how the state has no purview over the substance of marriage, and that its only licit relationship to marriage is to legally recognise and protect it, because physical marriage produces mothers, fathers and children, all of whom have rights and responsibilities. Consequently, I will teach them that same-sex "marriage" is a legal fiction because it is a physical and logical impossibility, and that it is impossible to understand anything about marriage if it is confused with same-sex relationships, romantic or otherwise.

My concern is that this legislation will undermine my rights to explain these facts to my children. I am concerned that agents of the state will interpose themselves between myself and my children against my will to contradict me. I am concerned that this legislation, in conflating physical, factual marriage with same-sex relationships in a single law called "marriage", will make it very difficult for teachers, parents and others to explain what actual marriage is to children, and to give them an ordered view of human society and sexuality.

In truth, I think that this legislation will cause a great deal of conflict in schools, because the demographic that has children tends to be very different from the demographic that created this legislation and supports it. That is to say that people who have children tend to be more pro-marriage, pro-family, socially conservative, respectful of the sexual difference enshrined in authentic marriage, more religious and often from immigrant backgrounds. For many of them, the proposed legislation is anathema, and brings the state and the democratic process into disrepute.

Question 8 - How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriage?

It's physically impossible.

Question 12 – Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same-sex marriage?

If the state transgresses onto civil society by creating a legal definition of marriage that conflicts with and obscures its vital pre-political, extra-legal nature and purpose, the state will enter into a state of conflict with the society it is supposed to serve. It will therefore become necessary for civil society itself to take on the responsibility of promulgating the facts about marriage, to explain how it works, what it does and why we have it. It is therefore vital that there is no legal impediment to this happening, that any legislation specifically protects the right of people in all areas of civil society; in the workplace, in schools and in other institutions, to uphold and explain what authentic marriage is and how the proposed legislation confuses, obscures and denies it, and to be able to do so without fear of prosecution or any other penalty. This is vital for society itself and for the future of the nation, as authentic marriage is essential to the health and functioning of society.

Question 14 - Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

If legal marriage is separated from physical marriage, then the state will have no rational and objective criteria to assert what is and what is not "marriage". In truth, the "marriage" of two men makes no more or less sense than then "marriage" of ten men. Divorced from physical marriage and sexual complementarity, the "twoism" of marriage becomes arbitrary and baseless. Some critics claim that this debasing of legal marriage will lead to legal recognition of polygamy and "polyamory". However it is more likely that it will lead to the abandonment of legal marriage entirely, as it will become indefensible to "deny marriage" to one arbitrary group but not another. Given that legal marriage only actually exists to protect and uphold the rights of mothers and children within physical marriage, this will cause damage to the most vulnerable people in society, and will act as a disincentive to start a family in the first place.

If this legislation is well intentioned, then it is short sighted and irrational: its likely consequences have not been thought through. If, on the other hand, it has been thought through, then it is really an act of violence against the whole of society, the weak and the vulnerable especially, and it will cause enormous problems for people who seek to defend the common good by upholding marriage, the family and the rights of children. It should be stopped at committee stage - indeed it should not have been proposed at all.

It is very unclear where this legislation came from. Nobody has ever really demanded it, certainly not homosexuals, only 4% of whom have entered into Civil Partnerships. It seems probable that is it really part of a much bigger "gender agenda”, an agenda which seeks to undermine and challenge our identity as men and women, and whose influence to this end can be seen in many other areas of life and legislation. It is therefore dishonestly motivated.

Michael Calwell
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I can think of no reason why recognition of a couple's commitment to each other should viewed differently based on the gender of the couple in question.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Having legal and societal recognition should be the choice of the couple. If they wish to make that commitment to each other then that should be their right.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
So long as both partners in the relationship are in support I see no legal or moral reason why this shouldn't be allowed.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ross Cameron
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I strongly support this Bill as all people, irrespective of their sexuality, should have the right to marry.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I think the Bill adequately protects those faiths that are against same sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

I am in a Civil Partnership and I would rather have married my partner but that was our only option to show how committed we are to each other. To me a Civil Partnership is second best and when I tell people I feel slightly ashamed. A Civil Partnership does not have the same gravitas and recognition as a marriage does. Everyone should have an equal right to get married.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As stated previously I think this Bill contains enough protections for those who do have concerns.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I think freedom of speech is very important for all individuals but if people want to air their opinions then they should be sensible and intelligent and definitely not hate speeches.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The only comment I would like to make is that I thought this Bill was to change the legal definition of civil marriage to incorporate all people irrespective of their sexuality. I totally abhor the spurious arguments from Scotland's three main faith groups. Their campaign against this Bill has been outright hypocritical and downright nasty. Jesus taught love, tolerance and inclusion and we have seen none of that from any of these faiths. I consider myself a Christian and I am fed up hearing if I'm gay I cannot be Christian or if you are a Christian then you cannot be gay. Do they realise how hurtful that is? I am a law abiding citizen and I live my life the best I can using the moral foundations I received as a child. I am a mother, a grandmother and I want to be able to legally call my partner my wife. Is that too much to ask??????

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Georjean Cammisar
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM ANNA CAMPBELL

To enable you to have a true picture of the feeling of the people of Scotland regarding this bill, I wish you to record that I am not in favour of same sex marriage – in other words redefining the meaning of the word marriage. As far as I am concerned Civil Partnership already gives same sex couples equality with male/female couples. For those insisting on church ‘marriage’ for same sex couples, this merely takes away the freedom of ordained clergy to practice their religious beliefs, so where is their equal rights!

I would therefore request that same sex marriage should not be permitted.

Anna Campbell
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

craig campbell
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support this bill as a step towards equality of civil rights irrespective of sexuality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It is essential in a society that basic civil rights such as marriage should not be denied to people on the basis of their sexuality.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

This is a very welcome proposal. It cannot be right that only Registrars can officiate at civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I fully support the proposal to permit civil partners to change their partnership to a marriage by means of a low-cost administrative arrangement. I commend to you the comments of the Equality Network in respect of couples now living in Scotland but whose civil partnerships were registered abroad.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This provides a very welcome flexibility.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

If a religious body wishes to provide this service then it should be made possible for them to do so.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am more inclined to be concerned about protections for LGBT people who for years have suffered discrimination and abuse. It would be intolerable to allow those who may have concerns about equal marriage a means of continuing such discrimination. I believe the bill has struck the correct balance. Those in civil employment such as registrars and teachers who might have concerns about same sex marriage are not being asked, of course, to change their personal views. However, in the conduct of their professional duties it would be intolerable if such personal views were allowed to intrude.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I cannot see how the bill will have any negative effect on freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I continue to believe that civil partnerships should be open to mixed sex couple and am disappointed that the bill does not include this provision. Notwithstanding this concern I very much welcome this bill and thank all whose work has brought it to fruition.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Douglas Campbell
23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM CARE

Introduction

CARE is a Christian charity which provides resources and helps to bring Christian insight and experience to matters of public policy. CARE has been working to influence the Scottish Parliament on matters relating to education, marriage, family life, sexual health and bioethics since 1999. We have about 3000 supporters in Scotland which are drawn from all the major Christian denominations. We welcome the opportunity to submit written evidence to the Equal Opportunities Committee and would be pleased to give oral evidence.

Question 4 – How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

The Bill is unnecessary and a distraction from matters which are of importance to the general population. All the legal rights of marriage are already available to same-sex couples through civil partnerships. There is no great demand for the same-sex marriage and the other measures contained in the Bill. The disproportionate impact of the Bill in terms of potential infringement of civil liberties (particularly freedom of conscience and freedom of speech) outweighs any benefits which might be accrued by those who wish to see the law changed in the manner proposed. Moreover, the Bill may be in contravention of the European Convention of Human Rights. If this is so, the Bill is in danger of being struck down in the Court of Session.

Question 5 – How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

The Nature of Marriage

Marriage is an institution which was ordained by God at the dawn of human history. It is given for the good of individuals and human societies. It benefits humanity in three ways. First marriage provides life-long companionship for adults, within the context of the complementarity and distinctiveness of male and female. Second marriage provides the appropriate context for procreation and the raising of children. Third, marriage is sacred in nature in that it is prophetic of Christ’s eternal relationship with the Church and reveals the nature and purpose of God to humanity.

In the Christian tradition, procreation has been viewed as the primary good of marriage since at least the fourth century. The procreative potential of the institution of marriage is intrinsic to its nature and role in society. This is the key factor which gives the state an interest in recognising marriage within the framework of civil law. The introduction of so called ‘same-sex marriage’ reduces the institution of marriage to a subjective expression of affection between two individuals. Its objective purpose, the procreation of children within a stable and secure environment consisting of the complementarity of male and female parents, is removed.

By redefining marriage in this way, the state assumes a power which is beyond its legitimate authority. The authority to define marriage rests with God alone. In seeking to acquire this power, the state exceeds the bounds of its limited authority. It become tyrannous and government assumes that it has absolute authority over all of human life. However, the Christian understanding is that the civil authorities have a limited mandate to govern under the authority of Christ. It is this principle which has underpinned the governance of Western societies since the time of Constantine and which is now being placed under threat by legislative measures such as those proposed in this Bill.

The institution of marriage is of fundamental importance of the cohesion and stability of society. The declining rate of marriage and increasing relationship breakdown within the UK has had adverse consequences for society in terms of an increase in dysfunctional families, poverty, welfare dependency, crime, costs of elderly care and housing supply. The negative consequences for society of rejecting the Christian model as a context within which to raise children are only likely to increase by redefining ‘marriage’ in the way proposed in the Bill.

Equality

This Bill does not advance equality for those in same-sex relationships as all the legal rights of marriage have already been given to those in same-sex relationships through civil partnerships. Moreover, the Bill proposes to continue to allow same-sex couples the opportunity to register for a civil partnership whilst denying this status to heterosexual couples. CARE is of the view that extending civil partnerships to heterosexual couples would further undermine marriage and, therefore, we do not support this proposal. However, we note that the proposal in the Bill to allow same-sex couples access to a legal status which is not available to heterosexual couples is discriminatory and most likely in breach of Article 14 of the ECHR.

Whilst claiming to be legislating in order to ensure equality, the Bill proposes a two tier system of marriage. For those in a heterosexual marriage the concept of adultery will remain in law as evidence of the grounds for a divorce. For those entering same-sex ‘marriages’, this will not apply. If the Scottish Government is committed to bringing same-sex relationships into the definition of marriage, its failure to draw such relationships into the same legal framework as marriage means that the entire project breaks down. It has not created same-sex marriage. The failure to require same-sex couples to meet the demands of marriage in terms of the same basic faithfulness-adultery obligations is not equality. If the relationship obligations are different then the relationship is different and must logically be categorised differently. We suggest that the status quo whereby marriage is only available to heterosexual couples and same-sex couples can receive legal rights by registering a civil partnership is preferable to the proposals contained in the Bill. This does not detract from the principle of equality.

Question 12- Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same-sex marriage?

Religious Celebrants, Churches and other Faith-based Organisations

The Committee will be aware of the duty placed on public authorities by the Equality Act 2010 to counter discrimination, promote equality and foster good relations. We consider that it is important when public bodies seek to do so that they maintain a proportionate approach which recognises not only individual rights, but also the rights of association of religious groups, faith-based welfare providers and charities which have trust deed reflecting a religious ethos. The Equality Act contains exemptions allowing such groups to protect their ethos by restricting services to specific communities. The importance of this principle cannot be underestimated. Otherwise the danger remains that religious communities will come under pressure to secularise their ethos and operations. Whilst in some cases it would be appropriate for churches and religious organisations to provide services without regard to the religious affiliation or lifestyle choices of their beneficiaries, there may be occasions when such restrictions are necessary in order to protect the ethos of the organisation or to comply with doctrine. The solemnising of marriages is one such occasion.

---

An important principle which should be prioritised in assessing how to fulfil the public sector equality duty is that of reasonable accommodation. Public bodies should seek to make reasonable accommodation for religious groups in order to facilitate those organisations to maintain their religious ethos. Sadly this principle has not been implemented to date. For example, in the case of faith-based adoption agencies public bodies should not seek to impose a uniform policy on all adoption agencies. If there is more than one provider of a service in a locality, then it is unnecessary to require all providers to provide the service to all of the community. By seeking to do so, public bodies are not promoting genuine equality and diversity, but rather promoting uniformity and denying the rights of association of religious groups.

We are concerned that churches and other faith groups may come under pressure to marry same-sex couples. The danger of churches and/or religious celebrants which refuse to ‘marry’ same-sex couples being subject to litigation. Although the Scottish Government has given assurances that no religious celebrant or faith group will be forced to marry same-sex couples, ultimately this matter may be decided by the European Court of Human Rights. Although the Court has made it clear that there is currently no automatic right to same-sex marriage throughout the Council of Europe area, if a country makes it available in some contexts it must be made available on an equal basis. Discrimination in the provision of same-sex ‘marriage’ could be ruled to contravene the Convention. There is no guarantee, therefore, that at some future date the court will not rule that religion and belief celebrants must either solemnise all ‘marriages’ or cease to marry people altogether. The civil legal aspects of a marriage ceremony remain the same regardless of whether it is conducted within a religious or civil setting. Moreover, the Scottish Government is unclear as to whether the term ‘public function’ will apply to religious celebrants when solemnising marriages. There is a danger, therefore, that religious celebrants will be considered to be a ‘public authority’ and, therefore, they could be sued under Article 14 of the Convention or under the Equality Act either for discrimination on grounds of sexual orientation or of sex.

The Scottish Government has negotiated (with the UK Government) some protections in the Equality Act for church trustees who refuse to let premises for the purpose of a same-sex marriage and for chaplains working in the public sector who preach against same-sex marriage. CARE welcomes these protections. However, we remain concerned that churches which do not ‘marry’ same-sex couples may be targeted by over-zealous officials in public bodies. In particular, we are concerned that the Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator (OSCR) may seek to remove charitable status from, or local authorities and other public bodies may refuse to partner with, churches and other faith groups which are unwilling to marry same-sex couples. For example, a local authority may claim that it would be in breach of the Public Sector Equality Duty if it were to give a grant towards the cost of a community project to, or to enter into a contractual relationship with, a local church if the church concerned is unwilling to marry same-sex couples.

Religious charities which provide welfare services or engage in political lobbying may be subject attempts by OSCR to remove their charitable status. The Scottish Government’s view is that as long as a social service is available to all people regardless of their sexuality then there should be no problem, but whether the Equality Act supports this view is unclear. Despite previous Ministerial assurances regarding the future of the Catholic adoption agencies, OSCR is in the process of removing charitable status from St Margaret’s Children and Family Care Society because St Margaret’s gives preference to married couples. That which is politicians currently find unacceptable, may very quickly become normal practice if there are not robust legal protections in place. A court would need to balance freedom of religion against the requirements of the Equality Act and it is to be hoped that the judges would prioritise religious liberty. However, the balance which is struck between competing rights may depend upon the nature of the case and the charity concerned. Over time the view of the courts as to what is a proportionate balance between competing legal rights could change. In the future, a court could determine that equality of opportunity is not promoted by giving charitable status to a church which refuses to marry a same-sex couple. Similarly a court might rule that good relations are not fostered by giving charitable status to religious organisations which are involved in political campaigning in support of marriage or to churches which preach that homosexual behaviour is a sin.

Individuals Working in Public Life

The main concern remains, however, that people who have a conscientious objection and who work throughout the public sector in roles which are not specifically religious may lose their jobs (or be unable to find employment in certain professions) if they refuse to endorse same-sex marriage. For example, the Bill does not protect civil registrars who do not wish to officiate at ‘same-sex marriages’. The Scottish Government claims that as registrars conduct a civil function it is not appropriate to allow them an opt-out on conscience grounds. This position wholly ignores the fact that the Christian faith affects the whole of life and is not limited to activity within church buildings. Christianity is a public faith rather than a purely private matter. It is misleading to suggest that a distinction can be made between the activities of civil registrars and religious celebrants in relation to the civil aspects of marriage. In Scotland, the legal aspects of a marriage ceremony (signing the register) are civil in nature whether they are conducted by a registrar or by a minister of religion. The issues of conscience which apply are the same for both groups. The Abortion Act 1967 allows doctors and other health professionals to have an opt-out if they have a conscientious objection to participating in abortions. The same principle should apply with regard to same-sex ‘marriage’.

In the case of Lillian Ladele, a civil registrar was forced out of her job because she was unwilling to register civil partnerships. This case was taken to an Employment Tribunal which Ms Ladele won. However, her employer appealed and the initial ruling was overturned. In January 2013, the European Court of Human Rights ruled against Ms Ladele. Two of the judges strongly dissented from this judgement arguing that Ms Ladele’s freedom of conscience should be respected. This case highlights that if ‘same-sex marriage’ is introduced, civil registrars may well be subject to disciplinary or legal action if they refuse to solemnise such relationships. Conscientious objection will not be respected unless the Bill contains a specific conscience clause requiring local authorities to do so. In addition, the Bill should include a clause which requires individual civil registrars to opt-in along the lines of that proposed for religion and belief celebrants.

Teachers should not be forced to conduct ‘same-sex marriage’ lessons if they have a conscientious objection to doing so. However, there is a real danger that a teacher who refuses to teach that marriage can be between two people of the same sex will face disciplinary action and may lose his/her job.\textsuperscript{2} Despite assurances from the Scottish Government that this is not their intention, such a case may need to be referred to the European Court of Human Rights for resolution.

The Scottish Parliament’s Equal Opportunities Committee should ask the Westminster Government to amend the Equality Act 2010 in order to incorporate the principle that an employer must make reasonable accommodation of the manifestation of religious belief by employees. It is essential that this protection is provided. Until a commitment is obtained from the UK Government, the Scottish Parliament should refrain from pursuing the introduction of ‘same-sex marriage’.

Other Concerns

Concerns have been expressed that should so called ‘same-sex marriage’ be introduced it is likely that children will be taught in school sexual health education that marriage can be between two people of the same sex. CARE believes that children should be taught about the benefits of marriage (defined as being between one man and one woman with the intent for life) for society and for families in sexual health and religious and moral education. In relation to these two areas of the curriculum, it is the Scottish Government’s intention to continue to allow parents the right to withdraw their children from classes. However, the strength of this right may be called into question as it is contained only in non-statutory guidance rather then in primary legislation. CARE is of the view that such a right of withdrawal should be given legal weight by an amendment to the Standards in Scotland’s Schools Act 2000 which puts this right on statutory footing.

The parental right of withdrawal is directly proportional to the age of the child and the quality of information provided by the school to parents. It may be difficult, therefore, for a parent to exercise their right of opt-out if the child is of secondary school age and the subject of same-sex relationships is being taught in sexual health education or if they are not consulted by the school (at primary or secondary level) with regard to the timing and content of their child’s sexual health education. Moreover, with regard to other areas of the curriculum, the Scottish Government has no intention to allow parents the right of opt-out for their children if the subject of same-sex marriage is discussed. For example, in Modern Studies, History and English it is possible that ‘same-sex marriage’ may be discussed. Indeed it is likely that attempts will be made to mainstream ‘same-sex marriage’ by groups such as Stonewall in the guise of tackling alleged homophobic bullying by seeking to have it discussed across the curriculum. A range of books which discuss same-sex relationships is being promoted by Stonewall for use at the early stages of primary school. If ‘same-sex marriage’ is legalised, schools will come under huge pressure to use these resources. Even denominational schools may not be exempt from such pressures as only the ‘faith aspects’ of the curriculum require approval by the Scottish Catholic Education Service.

The ideology which lies behind the promotion of Stonewall’s resources in schools is fundamentally contrary to a Christian understanding of human sexuality. Included in this ideology is the view that the heterosexual norm in society is responsible for ‘homophobia’ and that gender is a subjective construct. It is argued that in order to combat ‘homophobia’, it is necessary to eliminate the heterosexual norm within the public consciousness, legislation and policy making.\textsuperscript{3} Moreover, the complementarity of male and female is denied and it is claimed that there are more than two genders. Education is at the forefront of this battle. It is unclear the extent to which parents will have the right to opt-out their children from lessons which are based on this ideology. Yet failure to allow parents to opt their children out of lessons which the advance this ideology is likely to contravene Article 2 for the First Protocol of the ECHR which states:

\textsuperscript{3} See the reference to heterosexism on Wikipedia for more information on this ideology.

"the State shall respect the right of parents to ensure that ... education and teaching is in conformity with their own religious and philosophical convictions."

Clearly the teaching and promotion of same-sex marriage will conflict directly with the religious and philosophical convictions of many parents. It contradicts the rights of Christians and others to have their children educated in accordance with their religious and philosophical beliefs. Same-sex marriage is not only a civil matter; it impinges directly upon the religious beliefs of many parents and the wider population. Parents have the right to withdraw their children from religious observance, as well as from sex education. Many parents have deeply held views about their children being taught about same-sex marriage in the classroom. The law should not undermine these views, but rather it should protect parents’ right to withdraw their children. Parents should have a legal right also to know what will be taught to their children in sexual health or sex education and when such lessons will occur.

Concerns remain that those who disagree with same-sex marriage will be excluded from fostering or adopting children. Although the Scottish Government has promised guidelines in this area, these may not be sufficient to prevent those who have a religious faith being excluded as foster or adoptive parents. The legislation should include a clause which says that views on the nature of marriage cannot be taken into consideration during the process of approving prospective foster or adoptive parents.

The Lord Advocate’s new prosecutorial guidelines with regard to hate crimes are inadequate. Although expressing opposition to same-sex marriage would not be the sole grounds for prosecution, it may be a factor used to justify the prosecution of street preachers, football fans and, should and incitement to homophobic hatred offence be introduced at a later date, academics, ministers of religion or those in churches who record sermons for distribution via the internet or other means. As such, it represents a significant threat to freedom of speech and religious liberty.

Dr Gordon Macdonald
Parliamentary Officer
CARE for Scotland
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

It's vital and should happen as quickly as possible.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
What does "concerns" mean? Strange question. If two people wish to get married, they should be able to do so. No one else should have any say in that. Nobody needs protection from people choosing to get married. More often, same sex people need protection from the prejudice, bigotry and stigma of other people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

If two people wish to get married, they should be able to do so. No one else should have any say in that. Nobody needs protection from people choosing to get married. More often, same sex people need protection from the prejudice, bigotry and stigma of other people. And too often excused under the banner of "religion". God is Love.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

If two people wish to get married, they should be able to do so. No one else should have any say in that. Nobody needs protection from people choosing to get married. More often, same sex people need protection from the prejudice, bigotry and stigma of other people. And too often excused under the banner of "religion". God is Love.

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Eric Carlin
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Alison Carmichael
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

In general I support the Bill in that those in existing CPs can either have a marriage ceremony or change their CP to a marriage through an administrative process. However, it leaves those who have registered their CP elsewhere in the world unable to marry in Scotland as they would first have to dissolve their CP, a lengthy and costly procedure which no one is going to choose to do as it will often require partners to prove their relationship has broken down and that they are living apart. They would also need to dissolve their partnership in the country their CP was registered in, not feasible if they now live in Scotland. Can ALL Civil Partnerships be able to either marry through the normal process or via an administrative one?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

As the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. This enables the spouse to effectively “veto” the trans person’s gender recognition, or at least to delay it while the trans person applies for it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am aware that it has been proposed that civil registrars should be granted an opt-out of conducting same-sex civil marriages. They are public servants and should not be allowed to pick and choose who they serve based on personal opinion. The same applies to teachers. They should not have an opt-out of teaching about same-sex marriage, they have a duty to teach the facts not their personal feelings.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I cannot see how this Bill affects freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Is there any work to be done on opening up Civil Partnerships to mixed-sex couples? Also under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Helen Carmichael
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The bill is mostly good, lifting a ban on marriage for which there is no reason or purpose. But it isn't perfect and could be improved in places.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

There is no reason to ban marriage between same-sex couples. Marriage is a human right. Where there is no reason for banning access to a human right, the ban should be lifted.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Humanist celebrants can already marry mixed-sex couples and register civil partnerships for same-sex couples. This is a sound, popular option: people without religious beliefs should be able to have a celebrant and a ceremony. There seems no reason to ban

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Every religious body and each of their celebrants should have the right to decide for themselves whether their religion and their faith celebrates same-sex marriage. Some religious bodies believe LGBT people are equally included in their faith, and some do not: whether or not a religion celebrates equal marriage is a matter of religious freedom, and just as religions that include LGBT people should be free to celebrate same-sex marriage, religions that only include heterosexual people should be free to refuse. The bill's opt-in provisions and the change to the Equality Act 2010 will allow this to happen: it's a fair balance.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
Same-sex couples who want to stay in a civil partnership should be able to do so. Same-sex couples who registered a civil partnership should be able to simply change it to a marriage by a quick (and cheap) procedure if they wish, at any point in their lives together. Same-sex couples who registered a civil partnership and now want to marry each other should be able to do so. The bill suggests restricting this only to couples who registered a civil partnership in Scotland, and that seems like a strange restriction: providing a couple can show they are in a civil partnership together, why should it have to have been registered in Scotland?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Why not? If the couple want to marry, and they've got a suitable location, why should the location have to be specially approved for that purpose? The registrar should have a veto on what constitutes a suitable location, but why shouldn't couples be a

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

If a religious body wishes to allow their celebrants to offer a civil partnership in religion, there seems no reason to ban them from doing so. It would be wrong to permit civil registrars to do so, because no civil registrar should ever be asked to perform a religious service which may not be according to their conscience or their faith. Civil registrars are bound to carry out all civil ceremonies regardless of the faiths or genders of the couple: but they are protected and should continue to be from ever carrying out a religious service.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Very strongly in support. It is very wrong to force a couple to divorce in order for the trans partner to obtain a gender recognition certificate. The ban on same-sex marriage should be lifted for this reason alone, and the forced divorce legislation in the Gender Recognition Act should be changed. If one of a couple is transitioning and they feel the marriage has come to an end because of this, then either spouse can obtain a divorce if they need to using ordinary divorce law. But no couple who wish to stay married should ever be forced to divorce unwilling.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Where these concerns are religious, they are rightly protected as a matter of freedom of religion. No religious body will be forced to opt-in: individual celebrants within a religious body can refuse to opt-in. And as a general rule, all religious celebrants have a right of conscience already to refuse to wed any couple they decide against. Those protections are sound and just and should stand. Other concerns have been aired - claims that same-sex couples make bad parents and so shouldn't be allowed to marry, arguments that marriage is only for interfertile couples who'll have children together; claims that if same-sex couples get married mixed-sex couples won't want to. None of these concerns seem sound or just and appear to be based primarily in ignorance. While people are allowed to express their views freely, ignorant bigotries should not be allowed to ban couples from accessing a basic human right. It's also been suggested, during the debate on the Westminster legislation, that anyone providing a service to a couple who wish to or who are married, should have a protected right to discriminate against same-sex couples if they "don't believe in gay marriage" - for example, a baker who makes wedding cakes should have a protected legal right to refuse a cake to a lesbian couple, a chauffeur who works for a wedding car company should have a protected legal right to tell his employer he won't drive a gay couple. This is an absurd and unworkable approach. Businesses that provide services to the general public do not have the right to pick and choose who can pay their services based on their own personal prejudices. We don't allow this kind of discrimination for race, religion, or disability: why should anyone expect to have a right of discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity? Finally, concerns have been expressed that teachers will be "forced" to promote same-sex marriage, and parents will not have the right to withdraw their children from classes "teaching" gay marriage. Teachers have a professional obligation to treat all their students with kindness and respect: no teacher should feel it an imposition to be required to teach the facts of the law, or to treat their students and their students' families, with equal respect regardless of their students' sexual orientation, or whether their families include same-sex relationships. A demand that teachers should be allowed to denigrate some parents by arguing that same-sex marriage is inferior or that same-sex relationships are wrong, is unprofessional and unkind. Parents obviously have the right to express their own views to their children. But they don't have the right to expect that the school will cover their children's ears or send them out of class whenever the children might hear something from the teacher that contradicts parental prejudices. Not all LGBT children have sympathetic/supportive parents: an LGBT child with parents who don't like or approve of LGBT people needs to know they have somewhere to turn for help and support and information, and where better than their school? Civil registrars are obliged as part of their job to conduct a civil marriage ceremony for any couple legally entitled to marry. Any private/religious concerns a civil registrar feels about any of the couples they wed should not be allowed to affect their work. This applies to same-sex couples as well as mixed-sex couples.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill has no affect on freedom of speech. Everyone has the right to speak their mind.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Pensions equality. Private sector pensions are entitled to discriminate against the survivor of a same-sex couple, paying them fewer benefits than they would have to for the survivor of a mixed-sex couple. This is wrong, and should be amended: at the very least, the surviving spouse of a same-sex marriage deserves equal treatment to the widower in a mixed-sex marriage. Once the ban on same-sex marriage is lifted, there will be no reason to keep the ban on mixed-sex civil partnership. Mixed-sex couples who had rather register a civil partnership should be able to do so.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jane Carnall
23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM SINEAD CARROLL

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I fully support this bill and would like to see it passed.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

This is a human rights issue, and I believe that same sex couples should be afforded the exact same rights as couples of the opposite sex. The bill should not create two separate definitions of marriage, and all marriage between two consenting adults should be treated equally.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I am fully in support of this.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I believe that people should be allowed religious freedom, and agree with what the Equality Network have written here: We agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well. Some religious bodies want to conduct same-sex marriages, including the Quakers, Unitarians, Liberal Jews and others. Other religious bodies, including the larger churches, do not want to conduct same-sex marriages. Religious freedom should apply to both groups, and the bill gets the balance right. We think that the opt-in procedures in the bill are the appropriate way to do this, and, together with the amendments to the Equality Act 2010 which have been agreed with the UK Government, protect the religious freedom of religious bodies and of their members who participate in marriage ceremonies. We think that a small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the husband and wife gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so. For more details, see our more detailed briefing.
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sinead Carroll
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Catholic Truth is totally opposed to the interference with traditional marriage by politicians. The ramifications are very serious indeed and can only worsen the current decadent state of Scottish society.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

It is nothing short of ridiculous to allow two men or two women to marry each other. This will lead to teachers and parents feeling constrained in how children are taught about marriage and family life. I am already hearing of parents who are planning to home-school their children to remove them from the immoral influence of state education.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

I believe this move is indicative of the way our society is now dominated by a ruthless secular totalitarianism.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I am completely opposed to the whole idea of the Government - any Government - interfering in traditional marriage. It is a temerity too far.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Marriage is between one man and one woman for life. Calling a partnership between two people of the same gender, or a person and an animal, "marriage" doesn't make it so. It is NOT the business of Government to be redefining marriage in this way.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

I am completely opposed to the whole idea of the Government - any Government - interfering in traditional marriage. No Government has the right to meddle with a basic building block of society in this way.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

The Government should not be supporting, in any way, the unnatural unions of homosexual couplings.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

That the question should even be raised, is evidence of the decadent state of the political class. Ridiculous. Enabling people to "acquire" a "gender" is not the business of Government any more than redefining marriage is the business of Government. Utterly ludicrous.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Yes I most certainly would. How long will it be before people with the "views" published by me in this submission, will be an imprisoned or sent to be "re-educated" into the new morality? There is a real danger that the totalitarianism already at work in our society will worsen if this Bill goes through. Teachers, parents and priests who teach and preach that marriage is only morally correct between one man and one woman for life, will be regarded as oddballs and we will be at risk of losing jobs, having children removed from the family home and even at risk of losing their liberty. As G.K. Chesterton said: "there is no-one so intolerant as a full blown liberal" and we are already seeing that in our society today, through the dominance of the homosexual/transgender lobby. Homosexuality has gone from being illegal to being almost a state religion. And I do not believe for a second that it is possible to put in place protections for those of us who will never conform to this evil legislation and its offshoots. Already, in England, one homosexual couple have instigated legal action against the Church of England, because of the "protection" put in place by the Westminster Government to prevent Anglican clergy being forced to perform same sex marriages. We all know perfectly well, including the hypocritical politicians who pretend that this sort of thing won't happen, that it WILL happen. There can be no protection against the tiny but powerful homosexual community. They have politicians in their pockets.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe that there will be little or no freedom of speech on the issue of homosexuality and related issues, if this bill goes through.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The fact that the homosexual community is at greater risk of contracting sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS, and that the statistics are a matter of the gravest concern is something that is being swept aside. Encouraging homosexual couplings i

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation

Patricia McKeever
Catholic Truth
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

A socially just Scotland should not discriminate against anyone on the grounds of their gender or sexual orientation.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sheila Cavers
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Fiona Chandler
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

There are some specific points to the Bill which we would seek to amend, but Changing Attitude Scotland, which is a group existing within the Scottish Episcopal Church, is in general very supportive of the Bill.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

It is the view of Changing Attitude Scotland that the requirement for a whole denomination to opt in in order for an individual religious celebrant to solemnise same-sex marriage denies religious freedom to individual celebrants. Our group includes a number of Episcopalian clergy who are already authorised celebrants of opposite-sex marriage and would be eager to celebrate same-sex marriage, but under the proposed legislation will be unable to do so at present.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

We do not believe that there should be a requirement for individuals who have gone through civil partnership ceremonies to go through a second ceremony in order to be married.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

We believe that religious bodies should not be involved in a civil contract. We note that religious bodies have never been able to register civil marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

We welcome this proposed change.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We believe that the protections laid out in the proposed legislation are more than sufficient. As we have already mentioned, we believe that the opt in proposals for whole religious denominations actually take these protections too far as they infringe on the religious freedoms of individual celebrants.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We believe that children from all family backgrounds have the right to an education in which their family background is recognised positively.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation

Beth Routledge
Changing Attitude Scotland
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Discrimination in the work place regarding being married to a person of the same sex

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a public body

Vaila Chapman
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Marriage has always been more than marking love between two people, but the foundational unit of society that provides a loving and secure environment for the raising of children that come from that union. This legislation fundamentally redefines the nature of marriage to focus simply on the rights of individuals and undermines this societal unit that will further bring harm to our society. There is no need to legislate for how people love each other and there is no increased benefit legally to introduce same sex marriage on top of current civil partnership arrangements.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There will be many people who will not be able to accept the whole idea of same sex marriage. My fear is that those who hold to traditional marriage by conscience will be discriminated against within society. I fear as a pastor of a church that the day will come when people will seek to take legal action against us a church that will only conduct marriages between people of the opposite sex. I fear that many of my church members will find it increasingly difficult to be considered as suitable foster carers and adopters of children. Thus those who could do much good to some of the most disadvantaged in society could be prevented from doing so. I fear that people who hold to traditional marriage will find it increasingly difficult to be accepted as social workers and teachers because they cannot accept this redefinition. During the introduction of abortion, conscience clauses were added for those who ethically could not participate in such procedures. Could such conscience clauses not be introduced into this bill if it should go ahead?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

As a minister of a large evangelical congregation in the city centre I am concerned that courteous disagreement to the acceptance of same sex marriage will one day face legal challenge. I am bound to preach the ethics of the bible that calls all sexual activity outside traditional marriage, of whatever type, as sinful. The bible says that we are all sinners and yet there is the offer of forgiveness in the gospel of Jesus Christ for all who repent and believe. I am concerned that my freedom of speech, as a preacher of the Bible will be under attack by this legislation and that in addition the charitable status of our congregation would be put under threat for not toeing the political line of this proposed change to Scottish life.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation

Paul Rees
Charlotte Baptist Chapel
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Taylor Charleston
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
All people should have the right to choose full marriage or civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Same sex couples should not be treated any differently than mixed sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
Beliefs and Faiths are in my mind one and the same.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
I believe that people should have the right to opt-in. I would not want someone to marry me if they disapproved as it would feel like the union was not fully supported by the celebrant.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
I feel that both Civil Partnerships and Marriages should be available to all.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
This should be a personal decision.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

In many religions eg. Jewish same sex celebrations are welcomed and supported.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

If that person wishes to stay married then the marriage should not be revoked. That is a nasty and unnecessary thing to do.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

These people need to understand that times are changing and Equality for all does not mean they will be worse off, moreso those who have not had the same privileges will be on a similar footing. They do not need protection - they are not the minority and this will not affect them, they are free to live their lives.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I look forward to a day when I can truly speak my mind!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Lisa Charlwood-Green
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM SUSAN CHEYNE

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

The ability to form a lasting and legal relationship between 2 people who want to commit to each other should not be dictated by sexual orientation in the same way that race is not an issue in marriage. Gay couples should not be forced to have a second cl

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Humanist celebrants in Scotland can already conduct legally-recognised marriages. The bill clarifies that in the law, and makes clear that other philosophical belief organisations can also apply to conduct marriages. I welcome this.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well. Some religious bodies want to conduct same-sex marriages, including the Quakers, Unitaria

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I agree that conversion of a CP to marriage can be done by either an administrative procedure or by the couple having an official marriage ceremony in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
I agree that this should be an option for all people. Heterosexual couples can marry in religious ceremonies so providing the religious organisation/premise agrees this should be an option.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I agree that this should be an option for all people. Heterosexual couples can marry in religious ceremonies so providing the religious organisation/premise agrees this should be an option.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Equality is a human right. Non-heterosexual people are functioning and contributing members of society and are therefore entitled to full recognition as such and to be able to live without prejudice. No one will be forced to attend a same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is no impact on freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. Apart from the issues mentioned under questions 7, 8 and 11 above, the main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. That

Are you responding as...

- an academic
- a private individual

Susan Cheyne
21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM CHILDREN IN SCOTLAND

Views from across the children’s sector on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill are varied, therefore as an organisation with a vast and diverse membership we cannot offer a representative view on behalf of our members on the general issue of same sex marriage.

However, Children in Scotland and our members are committed to equality and human rights and are concerned with any legislation that may impact upon the lives and wellbeing of children in Scotland. We are not aware of any evidence that suggests children brought up within same sex relationships may achieve outcomes any different to children who are not. Moreover, there is no evidence to suggest that same sex partners have any different or poorer parenting ability.

In this sense, we see no problem with references to same sex relationships being included within the curriculum where marriages and relationships are discussed, and would urge the Equal Opportunities Committee to oppose any amendments suggesting otherwise.

Finally, bullying in any form can impact significantly on the life chances of children and young people, and equality for LGBT people in law could help to prevent homophobic bullying in schools. Children in Scotland strongly support any proposals that could aid in the prevention of bullying.

Sara Collier
Policy Officer
Children in Scotland
23 August 2013
Children in Scotland receives funding from the Third Sector Early Intervention Fund

Children in Scotland is the national umbrella agency for organisations and professionals working with and for children, young people and their families. It exists to identify and promote the interests of children and their families and to ensure that policies and services and other provisions are of the highest possible quality and are able to meet the needs of a diverse society. Children in Scotland represents more than 400 members, including most of Scottish local authorities, all major voluntary, statutory and private children’s agencies, professional organisations, as well as many other smaller community groups and children’s services. It is linked with similar agencies in other parts of the UK and Europe.

The work of Children in Scotland encompasses extensive information, policy, research and practice development programmes. The agency works closely with MSPs, the Scottish Government, local authorities and practitioners. It also services groups such as the Cross Party Parliamentary Group on Children and Young People (with YouthLink Scotland). In addition, Children in Scotland hosts Enquire - the national advice service for additional support for learning, and Resolve: ASL, Scotland’s largest independent education mediation service.
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM ROSS CHMIEL

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

There should be no automatic changing of CPs to marriage, but those who wish to do so should be allowed to

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Teachers should teach the facts about the law, not state their own opinions on it. This will allow students to form their own opinions. Registrars employed by the state/local councils should be required to provide full access to services to all people regardless of sexuality. There should be no opt out for them.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I support the right for mixed sex couples to have civil partnerships

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ross Chmiel
15 July 2013
4. How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

The Christian Institute is opposed to the Bill in principle, including the introduction of same-sex marriage (qu. 5) and issues relating to civil partnerships (qu. 8 and 10). Marriage has served Scotland well for centuries. The potential consequences of redefining it surely warrant greater consideration by the Scottish Government, and require far more significant protection than is currently proposed in this Bill.

5. How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

Redefining marriage for the whole of society

Protecting marriage has always been vital to Christians given its important place in the Bible and Christian theology. It is natural, therefore, that Christians will want to oppose any redefinition of marriage such as that contained in this Bill. Across the world and throughout history marriage, the union of a man and a woman, has been the bedrock of society and enabled communities to prosper. Marriage benefits society as a whole. Abandoning the true meaning of marriage will have damaging consequences for generations to come.

Marriage was not created by government, and it is wrong for government to redefine it. If politicians are considering redefining something as fundamental as marriage, the public must be given an opportunity to vote directly on the matter. The question of redefining marriage should be the subject of a referendum, as also advocated by the Roman Catholic Church and former SNP leader Gordon Wilson.¹

Procreation

One of the key purposes of marriage is the procreation of children. This is not the only purpose, but it is an important one. If marriage is redefined so that it is detached from this purpose, then marriage can become all about the demands of adults rather than the best interests of children.

Evidence shows that children do best when raised by their married mother and father, but same-sex marriage denies children either a mother or father.² If the Scottish Government is going to base its conclusions on the evidence from social science, it needs to ensure that it has conducted a thorough survey of all the available literature, and we do not believe this is the case. The Scottish Government therefore risks taking a decision based on an incomplete understanding of the issues involved.

¹ The Scotsman, 12 October 2011
Polygamy
Once marriage becomes detached from nature and becomes all about the rights of adults, then what assurance can there be that it will not be redefined further? If marriage can be defined by a Parliamentary vote, then there is nothing to say that the redefinition will stop at removing the requirement for it to be between a man and a woman. In Canada and in some US states where marriage has been redefined, attempts have been made to legalise polygamy. In Brazil and the Netherlands, three-way relationships have been given marriage-like recognition.

Liberty of conscience
Christians tell us they simply do not find Government promises to protect their religious liberty believable. Disagreement is not hatred, but if same-sex marriage is legalised those who disagree with it will be labelled as intolerant – particularly in the public sector. This issue is addressed in more detail in question 13.

6. How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

The key concern is to ensure that sham and forced marriages are guarded against so that the integrity of marriage ceremonies in Scotland is preserved. It will be crucial that those holding frivolous ‘belief systems’ (e.g. Jedi) are not permitted to solemnise marriages.

7. How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

We do not support any proposals to redefine marriage. The question of religious bodies or celebrants being required to solemnise same-sex marriage would therefore not arise.

If same-sex marriage was to be introduced, it should be self-evident that no religious body or celebrant should be required to solemnise such ‘marriages’. In any civilised and democratic society, religious bodies and individuals cannot be required to act against their religious beliefs.

The Scottish Government would have to ensure first that amendments are made to the Equality Act 2010 and other statutes to guarantee robust protections for religious freedom. A gay couple in England claim to have already launched a legal action to challenge the Westminster Government’s ‘quadlocks’ which are designed to prevent

---

3 PinkNews.co.uk, 4 February 2009, see http://www.pinknews.co.uk/2009/02/04/mormon-accused-of-polygamy-to-use-gay-marriage-as-defence/ as at 22 August 2013
4 The Daily Telegraph, 28 August 2012: The Brussels Journal, 26 September 2005, see http://www.brusselsjournal.com/node/301 as at 22 August 2013 – This was an example of a cohabitation agreement [Government of the Netherlands, Marriage, Registered Partnership and Cohabitation Agreements, see http://tinyurl.com/bdykz59] churches from being forced to conduct same-sex weddings. Should a case be brought against the Scottish Government’s opt-in system, as we believe is inevitable, it could well end up at Strasbourg. Given the Court’s evolving case law, the safeguards for celebrants and religious organisations could well prove worthless.

It will be essential that religious organisations and celebrants are given clear guidance on the operation of whatever system is introduced, including a thorough briefing on the safeguards.

8. How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriage?

As our response to question 4 says, we do not support the redefinition of marriage to allow same-sex couples to get married. The question of a same-sex couple seeking to change their civil partnership to a marriage would therefore not arise.

9. How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

No comment.

10. How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Threat to religious liberty

By changing the law to allow civil partnerships to be registered through religious ceremonies the Scottish Government would be opening up religious groups and individuals to the possibility of legal action. There are extremely complex issues surrounding both the organisation of religious groups and the ownership of religious premises. We do not believe that any scheme can adequately account for this reality.

There are two main areas of concern in response to any scheme:

can it prevent litigation against religious celebrants or groups who don’t agree with civil partnerships, and can it prevent religious celebrants who do agree with civil partnerships going ahead in defiance of their religious group?

The Scottish Government has acknowledged that ensuring that religious bodies and religious celebrants do not have to carry out civil partnerships against their will “may require an amendment of the Equality Act 2010, which is generally reserved”. Religious civil partnerships must not be introduced unless the Scottish Government can guarantee religious freedom. It clearly cannot make this guarantee if, on its own admission, some of the necessary legislative changes are outside its powers.

---

Little demand for the change

As well as the threat to religious liberty, we question the demand for this change. There were only 554 civil partnerships registered in Scotland in 2011, and only 3,861 between the introduction of civil partnerships in 2005 and 2011. The number of religious civil partnership ceremonies each year is likely to be very small. The risk to religious liberty posed by introducing religious civil partnership ceremonies greatly outweighs this small demand.

The secular nature of civil partnerships

By their very nature, civil partnerships were always intended to be a civil, not a religious matter.

The civil partnership scheme was designed and introduced on the basis that it would be “purely secular”. The then UK Government gave repeated assurances on this point during the passage of the Civil Partnership Act in 2004. Permitting civil partnerships to be registered through religious ceremonies is a radical departure from this clear undertaking, and represents a fundamental change in the nature of civil partnerships.

The Scottish Government admitted in its own consultation paper that “the proposed religious registration service outlined here would be very similar to a religious service for the solemnisation of marriage”. Here we see a clear statement of the blurring effect that would be caused by introducing religious civil partnerships.

Religious blessings for civil partnerships are already possible

Same-sex couples wishing to have a religious blessing prior to or after their civil partnership registration are entitled to do so. This separation of the religious element from the registration is entirely appropriate given the secular nature of civil partnerships. It is also entirely consistent with civil marriage registration.

11. How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

---

6 The Registration of Civil Partnerships – Same Sex Marriage: A Consultation, The Scottish Government, September 2011, para. 2.35
8 House of Lords, Hansard, 12 May 2004, col. 139GC; House of Commons, Hansard, Public Bill Committee, 21 October 2004, col. 101
9 The Registration of Civil Partnerships – Same Sex Marriage: A Consultation, The Scottish Government, September 2011, para. 2.25
No comment.

12. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Although Section 14 of the Bill attempts to address protections for freedom of expression, it remains narrow in its focus and fails to fulfil the Scottish Government’s promise that the “legislation will be accompanied by important protections for freedom of speech”.¹⁰

- A key area of concern relates to the multiple implications of redefining marriage in the sphere of education. Some teachers will inevitably be asked their personal views about same-sex marriage. They should be protected from being forced to actively endorse it, and protected when expressing any deeply-felt objections they may have. Under proposals for England and Wales, the UK Government said that “no teacher is under any obligation to endorse a particular view of marriage...Teachers are and will continue to be free to express their personal views or those of their faith about marriage or any other matter, provided they do so in a balanced and sensitive way.”¹¹ But already here in Scotland, a secondary school teacher was required by his school to teach a relationships course promoting same-sex marriage “without exemptions or safeguards” in a way which he could not in good conscience do.¹² The Government should also make positive steps to protect, and not undermine, the rights of parents who may wish to withdraw their children from any lesson that includes teaching about same-sex marriage.

- Our legal system’s well-established provision for conscientious objection should be applied to registrars who may wish to object to solemnising same-sex marriages. Article 9 of the European Convention on Human Rights makes it clear that religious freedom includes freedom of conscience and the right to manifest beliefs. In a recent case against the UK in the European Court of Human Rights involving a registrar who was forced out of her job for refusing to conduct same-sex civil partnerships, dissenting judges asserted that the State is obliged to respect an individual’s freedom of conscience by taking measures to protect the right of the conscientious objector. According to the judges, such a right is one of the most fundamental rights inherent in the human person.¹³ Although the registrar did not succeed in her claim, this was down to the majority of judges holding that the actions of the UK were within the margin of appreciation afforded to member states.

- The Scottish Government must broaden its understanding of religious freedom and recognise that religious liberty means more than freedom to believe things

---

¹⁰ Scottish Government Press Release, Same sex marriage to be legalised, 25 July 2012
¹¹ House of Lords, Hansard, 19 June 2013, col. 351
¹² Memoranda submitted by Samuel Webster (MB 97) and Ralph Manning (MB 122), House of Commons, Public Bill Committee on the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Bill, Session 2012-13
¹³ Eweida & Others v. The United Kingdom [2013] ECHR 37 (15 January 2013), see Joint Partly Dissenting Opinion of Judges Vucinic and De Gaetano inside your church and inside your head, but living and working in line with those beliefs in everyday life.

- The Public Sector Equality Duty (PSED) in section 149 of the Equality Act 2010 places public authorities under a duty to have regard to the need to “eliminate discrimination”, “advance equality of opportunity” and “foster good relations”, including the need to “tackle prejudice”. The effect of this sweeping Duty could mean that actions of public bodies undermine the robustness of protections provided in the Bill.

- Chaplains work in a variety of spheres in the public sector, often on a voluntary basis. Volunteers would have no statutory employment rights, so it is imperative that serious thought is given to such situations.

- We welcome the Scottish Government’s readiness to look at changing current fostering guidance “to make it clear that a would-be fosterer should not be rejected just because of his or her views on same sex marriage”.14 A case in Derby saw a Christian couple unable to become foster carers apparently on the basis of their religious views on homosexuality. The High Court ruled that in placing children with foster carers who object to homosexuality and same-sex relationships “there may well be a conflict with the local authority’s duty to ‘safeguard and promote the welfare’ of looked-after children”.15 Aidan O’Neill QC has affirmed that there “is no doubt that similar considerations would apply in Scotland” and is of the view that it would be lawful for a local authority to refuse a couple’s application to be foster carers on this basis.16

- The Policy Memorandum states that: “Many people and organisations hold the view that marriage can only ever be between a man and a woman. The Government has made clear its respect for this view…” [para. 97]. It is crucial that this notion is enshrined on the face of the Bill.

13. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The potential impact of the redefinition of marriage on religious individuals can be seen from the cases that have arisen since civil partnerships were introduced. Registrars who were not willing to conduct civil partnership registrations have been forced out of their jobs. Expressing a view in a private capacity that civil partnerships in churches would be “an equality too far” has led to the demotion of an employee.17 Guesthouse

---

14 Policy Memorandum to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill, 27 June 2013, page 22
15 BBC News Online, 28 February 2011, see http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-england-derbyshire-12598896 as at 22 August 2013
16 Re: The Implications for Freedom of Conscience and Religious Liberty Arising from Redefining Marriage in Scotland – Advice, Aidan O’Neill QC. June 2012, para. 11
17 The Times, 17 November 2012. Although Mr Smith won his case for breach of contract, he did not regain his previous job.
owners in both Cornwall and Berkshire have been fined for upholding a married-couples-only policy for double rooms.18

When Rev Brian Ross expressed his traditional view of marriage on his personal blog, this was deemed to be incompatible with his position as a chaplain to Strathclyde Police.19 Gordon Wilson was removed from his role with Dundee Citizens Advice Bureau, because of his views on marriage.20 Scottish Borders Council deputy leader, Catriona Bhatia, has made it clear that the traditional view of marriage should not be introduced by school chaplains.21 Shortly after homosexual adoption was legalised there were calls to close religious adoption agencies which disagreed. There have been other similar examples.

The sheer quantity of these cases, even before marriage has been redefined, surely warrants greater consideration by the Scottish Government, and requires far more significant protection than is currently proposed. Especially in light of the frequent, categorical statements Alex Salmond made just last summer about protecting freedom of speech and religion, such as to “entrench” and “make sure” the rights of “freedom of speech, the freedom of articulating, the freedom of practice and process of religion” are “inviolate, as they should be”.22

14. Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The Scottish Government has announced plans to review the Civil Partnership Act 2004 to “consider the position on opposite sex civil partnership”. Proposals to extend civil partnerships to heterosexual couples would only serve to undermine the institution of marriage. It would introduce a marriage-lite alternative for opposite-sex couples by enshrining in law the possibility of obtaining all of the rights and privileges of marriage without the responsibilities.

The Westminster pensions minister said that in England, allowing heterosexuals to have a civil partnership instead of a marriage would cost the country up to £4 billion in public service pension rights alone.

The Scottish Government’s review of civil partnerships should also include consideration of the case for extending civil partnerships to house-sharing family members or those in a non-commercial relationship of care where the carer lives with the person being cared for.

23 August 2013

---

19 The Scotsman, 1 March 2013
20 The Scotsman, 29 October 2011
21 Southern Reporter, 16 March 2013
22 Alex Salmond, First Minister, speaking at a Scottish Cabinet public meeting in Renfrew, 23 August 2012, see http://soundcloud.com/scotgov/the-scottish-cabinet-in as at 11 October 2012
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This Bill is the way we need to move forward. We are ensuring our future as secure and equal country.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

We cannot claim equality while we still discriminate.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

All people should be treated as equal. If a person is removed from a job on the basis they were gay it is called homophobia and is criminalised. If the same person is removed from a church for being gay it is called religion. Why is religion exempt from the law? Surely no-one is above the law of the country, that's why it is the law.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There are always people who will oppose the decisions of government whether out loud or in private. We need to look at what is best for the majority of people. When same-sex marriage is legalized the opponents will have to live with it. Why should they be exempt? If I am opposed to interracial does that mean I am allowed to discriminate against it. No, of course not. Allowing some people to be homophobic is not a way to provide equality.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am deeply saddened today by how far the Scottish Parliament seems to have failed in its promises. We used to be a nation on the fore front of the world, making new dynamic decisions quickly and leading our allies in the rest of the world. Today the other constituent countries of our country passed an equivalent bill, showing that they are making changes to make the country better for their citizens. Up here all I here is endless campaigning about Independence. When I look at these two issues I see a major decision which will change the our country for the better and allow us to have more respect and national pride. The other is taking time and effort away from my government making important and life changing decisions across a whole host of areas. The Scottish Parliament have chosen to spend untold amounts of money on the second, Scottish Independence. I wish the vote for Independence was sooner only so that we could vote No and remove this ulcer from the political agenda. When Scotland can start making great decisions for its people instead of chasing an unnecessary future maybe then I will regain my national pride.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Neil Christy
17 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Brian Elder
Chrstyon Church of Scotland
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

no teacher, minister, lawyer, registrar or any other person should be prejudiced against because of their views on same-sex marriage
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

REV DR HUGH WATT
CHURCH OF SCOTLAND
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

It is for no other person to decide who can and can not love one another enough to spend their lives together, or, realistically, however much time they would like, to spend time together. The case goes for heterosexual couples and homosexual couples alik

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

Religion should not be imposed upon those who do not wish to receive it. In this day and age, in the western world where we call ourselves civilised and educated, we should treat each other and our opinions with respect without a government jerking around

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

Fully in support. This isn't and shouldn't be an era run by religion and its limitations.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

Heterosexual couples can get married anywhere. Whats the difference?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

The government cannot categorise a relationship based on sex if it is to open the way to same sex marriage. This age old system must be done away with to pave the way for a more open and accepting society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't think those not in favour of same sex marriage are the ones that need protecting. They need to accept that their limitations on what love is and who can love are narrow minded and belittling, causing social rifts. Times have changed and for the better if propositions such as same sex marriage are carried out.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jessica Clark
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Matthew Clark
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I'm very pleased the Scottish government has brought forward this Bill. If the Bill passes it will be a great step forward for our country.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Strongly in support of this Bill. It will correct an inequality that has existed for too long.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I think this is the right step. With the introduction of marriages available for all, there is little need for a separate civil partnership option, so I think it should be phased out/abolished, with all those currently within a civil partnership becoming married.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I think a couple should be able to get married in the location if their choice.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I think it is very important this is included in the Bill.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the opt-in system for churches to carry out same sex marriages satisfies everyone's needs surrounding this Bill.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Even though I am for equal marriage, I think it's very important that people on both sides of the debate are able to speak freely over this issue.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Jamie Clarkson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Not needed as I think Civil Partnership is sufficient in Law

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Why? Civil Partners we were once told was all people wanted

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

What is a belief celebrant? Marriage is a religious ceremony.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I would question the integrity of people who did this.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

This would be a waste of time. Can an apple change into a pear?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Does this question mean a civil marriage between a man and a woman? This already happens. Or has someone jumped the gun?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

This is a contradiction in terms.
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

How many people in the UK have these problems I would like to know.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

A marriage has to consummated and we all know what that means. Who decides what the same sex couples have to do? This is why the whole idea of same sex marriages is a current day fashion.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

No

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

no

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Kevin Clayton

14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Rebecca Clement
21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM MICHAEL CLINTON

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I grew up when it was frowned upon to be "different", when coloured children could not go to a white children school, where coloured men and women could not date or marry a white man or woman and if you were thought to be gay you were beaten up just for walking along the road. If we can change the law based on the colour of ones skin then why cant we change the law based on someones sexuality and who they wish to be with and to marry ?????????

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I am 100% gay, I met my partner over 12 years ago,( we cant pick and choose who we fall in love with) we fell in love and we were the 1st non-Spanish gay couple to marry in the history of Spain in 2005, we have been together now for over 12 years and happily "married" under Spanish Law for the past 8 years. Being in a "marriage" no matter what the combination of sex is, is important as it gives you real commitment, stability and legal status.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

love and marriage is a human thing and should not be down to specific religions as to who has or has not the right to marry or be married

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

this bill is all about peoples rights and if someone wants the right to marry then they should have that right as a basic human right, but if someone has strong feelings about conducting "ANY" marriage between any two people then it has to be questioned as to why such a person is in that particular job, descrimination is, the last time I checked anyway "illegal"

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
I am already in a gay legal marriage under Spanish law but here in the UK it is only "recognized" as a Civil partnership. If a mixed sex couple can have full rights why cant a same sex couple be treated the same

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Same sex marriages can be performed anywhere that is agreeable between the couple and the registrar, priest, minister etc, so why should it be treated as different for same sex couples, at the end of the day it is just as special a day for the couple being married regardless of what the sex combination is

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

EVERY living human being has the right to marry, we dont choose our sexuality, we are born to be who and what we are, also we cant choose our friends etc, but we cant choose to be born, what our sex will be and who we will fall in love with

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Nature doesn't always get it right, and sometimes people can be born with the wrong sex and its up to that individual as to how they live their own lives, no one should have the right to determine anyone elses sexuality or life

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

DISCRIMINATION is a terrible thing and sometimes this can be based on jealousy, the colour of your skin, your ethnicity, your sexuality, your job etc etc. EVERYONE has the same rights or should have the same rights to make society a more balanced place to live in

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

everyone has the right to "freedom of Speech" as long as they are stating an opinion but when someone wants to "exercise " that right this should NOT then allow them to do so in a discriminative manner slavery was once legal, not having mixed white/colour marriages was not accepted, foreigners living here were once frowned upon, the mentally ill and disabled were once shunned from society and the gay and lesbians were once locked up for their sexuality as well as beaten up with no one being charged. IF WE CAN CHANGE ALL THESE OTHER THINGS AND OPENLY ACCEPT THEN IN TODAY’S SOCIETY THEN WHY CAN WE TAKE THE LAST STEP AND MAKE EVERYONE EQUAL????????

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Michael Clinton
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Audrey Cochrane
18 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Flawed but basically promising

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
There should also be an option for gender free marriage ceremonies for all.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

Should be optional but uncomplicated for any who wish including those already in civil partnerships whether registered in Scotland or otherwise.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
I don't honestly see how anyone can object to this.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As long as no one is actually forcing them to marry a person of the same sex, I don't see why it's any of their business.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Emma Coleman
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition
If marriage is redefined, then we can redefine, right and wrong.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
Same sex marriage does not and cannot exist.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition
Nobody has the right.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition
Call them civil (whatever you like) BUT NOT marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The bill belittles my being married for 50 years and insults the memory of the millions like me, before me in a similar position.

Are you responding as...

a private individual
A real married person

Owen Collins
13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

The Scottish government is trespassing on faith communities' ground by seeking to unilaterally the definition of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

In common with a great number of Scottish people, I recognise marriage to be restricted to a man and a woman. This is the definition used by, and which will continue to be used by the overwhelming of faith celebrants in Scotland. The move to redefine marriage is a divisive and unnecessary one.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

The overall effect of this legislation will be to cause many religious celebrants to deregister from officiating for state marriage. This is already happening with the Sikh community in England and as a celebrant myself I am considering this course of action, in common with a number of others who do not trust the promises of government. Already in England moves are under way to legally challenge the churches who dissent from the government's attempt at redefinition of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

Civil partnerships already affords full protection under the law.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither
I am generally in favour of marriage generally being permitted where the couple wish

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

My own tradition does not have any practice of a man and woman coming together other than as husband and wife in marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

In common with a large number of other celebrants in Scotland, I do not believe there is protection offered in this legislation for those who dissent from the government's view. Already in England the legal protection is being challenged, and much costly wrangling will no doubt go on in the process. I would see the only way forward to be for faith communities to uncouple from registration of marriage on the state's behalf, so that they may pursue faith marriage away from the patronage and vicissitudes of the political system. I would welcome separation of the state's role in registration, to prevent any coercion of conscience.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I do not believe there will be freedom of speech guaranteed by this law. There is a growing sense that to voice dissent is to court angry opposition, which would go as far as to silence any expression of disagreement with the prevailing orthodoxy.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

Colin Symes
Community Church Edinburgh
9 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Having separate unions in the eyes of the law, purely dependent on the sexes of the two people that make a couple, has an obvious degree of segregation and thus only goes part-way in giving equal rights to opposite-sex and same-sex couples. This is the 21st Century - we can no longer allow religious beliefs to dictate our societies, which can be seen by the approval of Humanist opposite-sex marriages yet not same-sex ones, despite both being performed outside of any religious body. Love is love.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It's about time!

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Despite being pro-gay marriage, I also believe people nor the state have the moral right to force someone to conduct a ceremony they are against.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

The option of civil partnership should still exist for those who may be against being married because, for example, they may see marriage as a religious ritual that has been set mostly for opposite-sex couples, and so they may feel they don't want to be part of a (religious) ceremony that has discriminated against same-sex couples (rather than feeling that gays shouldn't be married purely because most - if not all - religions say that people of the same sex should not be allowed to do so). However, I think civil partnership should only exist if it is available to same-sex and opposite-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

Couples' preference of location for marriage can reflect their personalities, for better or worse.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Variety can be a good thing. It may turn the religious world on its head a bit, but it can cope, and not every sect of every religion has an outright obligation/duty to change (although some should...)

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Think of the mental effects that not allowing this would have on someone - if it were me, I'd feel angry and maybe even undervalued.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

To those who may be concerned (above): just because some people of the same sex want to marry each other, it doesn't mean you have to marry someone who is the same sex as you. You have your lives, others have theirs.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People are always entitled to their opinions, yet some views are hugely dangerous and shouldn't be voiced, eg plans of terrorism. I believe people have moral obligations to keep certain beliefs they have to themselves, eg racist/sexist ones.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

A humanist.

Maeve Convery
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Marriage shouldn't be about gender. If two people love each other and are committed to each it should be a sign of that commitment that heterosexual couples get the pleasure of doing.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

In full support, I don't see why LGBT couples can't marry each other!

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I believe it should be a marriage because it isn't any different to heterosexual marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I believe they should be entitled to get married wherever they wish.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Gender doesn't define sexuality. It should be perfectly okay.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Think about more about your own lives than worrying about other people's! We need more love and acceptance in the world regardless of gender or sex!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Lucas Jaiden Cookson
21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM REBECCA COROON

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Rebecca Coroon
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

I am in support of the motion but I am in opposition of the spousal's approval before the said transgender person, who has obtained full gender recognition, can remain marry. If the spouse felt strongly against their partner's transition then they could apply for divorce, not give their approval.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Everyone has the right to freedom of speech until what they say targets an individual or a minority

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a celebrant
an LGBT group

Kevin Mark Stephen Cowie
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I object to the amount of money being spent on this for the sake of gaining popularity with a small but very vocal group who have all the rights of married people, when there are so many needs in N.H.S., Education etc.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

If we begin to redefine marriage where will it stop? Will it eventually call incestuous or bestial behaviour marriage? What about the confusion and insecurities caused to young children who will be trained to accept this as the norm and what about the long term health effects on a huge number if all restraint of behaviour is cast off?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

Celebrants ought to have the freedom to refuse without being penalised. We hear much of the rights of LGBT etc but I have never known a time when now so many who have strong beliefs are no longer being free to express them or are now beginning to be penalised at job interviews and in the workplace. What of their rights?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Totally unnecessary --- all this will lead to is confusion in many areas of society. After all, if I want to buy a bungalow I'm not going to want to buy a shop just because someone has redefined it and called all buildings bungalows!

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

Unsure what is meant by this but if it means that religious establishments would be forced to permit these ceremonies to take place in their premises, then I would oppose this.----- Those responsible for the care of a golf-course presumably have the right to refuse permission to those who would want to play football or rugby on the course. This issue seems to have thrown common-sense out the window!!!!!!!

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

This is an example of how, having thrown out the basic standards of acceptable behavoiour we are now tying ourselves in knots!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Deeply concerned! I was shocked at the short-sightedness that resulted in adoption agencies etc being forced to close because they had a pro-marriage policy. I spent many years working with youngsters many of whom came from confused or needy situations----- would I have been prevented from doing so if I had expressed my belief in traditional marriage? If I had a spare room and decided to do B&B would I not have the right to say what kind of behaviour was acceptable in my home? Should people be penalised in job interviews etc. because of their beliefs -- after all if I was going through an operation I'd want to have a good surgeon regardless of personal living rather than one who shared my faith or lack of it but who was incompetent in their work.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Far greater protection is needed for those who express concerns or disagree about this issue. We no longer have freedom of speech in our land when people particularly those in contact with the public through their work are fearful of expressing their opinions about this area. People should not be removed from their posts for expressing personal viewpoints ---- this is not discrimination, it is just healthy debate.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
If two people love each other they should be able to marry....thats it nothing to do with god etc love is love.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Lisa Cree
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I'm confused as to how such a Bill has evolved since there has been no need of it and certainly prior to it's inception there was no talk or wish for it from the main homosexual lobby groups. Regardless of this I'm more confused as to how the government can decide after thousands of years that 'marriage' can actually encompass other lifestyles other than that of men and women marrying and having children.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

It's not possible for same two people of the same sex to 'marry'. It's basic common sense and the natural law dictates that it takes two members of the opposite to sex to marry and bring forth children, hence replenishing the population. A homosexual relationship is already sterile.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

What is a belief celebrant? I don't understand the question.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I'm really worried that we are entering the preliminary phase of that which was tantamount to socialist Germany, where any dissent is ridiculed and those opposed are 'brought into line'. Over and over again I'm seeing what happens when people oppose the 'gay rights' agenda. The force of the law is being brought down upon them. The fact that the majority of the population oppose this is even more akin to a totalitarian government hell-bent on pushing one particular agenda.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

What freedom of speech? I meet many young people nowadays intent on leaving Scotland because they see a country where the right to disagree is being quickly discarded.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I don't see a bright future for Scotland if this is the value we place on Marriage. What next, marry your sister, your auntie, your pet animal ........

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Henry Creechan
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

No Bill was mentioned in the SNP Manifesto, the weighted Consultation Question10 "Do you agree the law should be changed to allow same-sex marriage" was rejected by a number equivalent to the combined total of all Scottish political party memberships, no referendum has been held to seek the view of the electorate and the Bill has, therefore, no electoral validity.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights declares the Family to be 'the natural and fundamental building block of society'. Families can only naturally consist of two parents with offspring. Homosexual activity precludes offspring. Same-sex marriage, consequently, precludes family and therefore militates against the development of society.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I don't understand the question.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Unnecessary and vexatious.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

A police chaplain in the now defunct Strathclyde Police was displaced for stating, in a personal capacity, his belief that marriage should take place only between a man and a woman. Strathclyde Police stated that they respected the religious and political beliefs of all employees, but they could not be publicly stated as representing the Police, an apolitical body. Strathclyde Police, however, allowed homosexual police officers to, off duty, in uniform, participate in homosexual parades known as Gay Pride. No such suppression of one viewpoint while advertising another should be permitted in any public service.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is a prevalent attitude in much of the media and in politics where a person prepared to demand or even request freedom of speech for those not in favour of all and every demand of homosexual lobbies are bigoted homophobes. ('a person' should read 'persons' or 'people'.)

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

As previously stated, I believe the Bill to have no democratic legitimacy unless backed by an election or a referendum.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Michael Creechan
August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support the bill and think that Scotland is leading in equality by proposing it.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It is very important that the bill does not create two different versions of marriage, same-sex marriage and mixed-sex marriage, because that would lead to continued discrimination. The law should treat all marriages the same, regardless of the genders of the spouses. We welcome that the bill achieves that, with the exceptions of the arrangements to allow religious and belief bodies to choose to conduct mixed-sex marriages only, and the outdated rule of law that in a mixed-sex marriage the wife cannot be charged with resetting goods stolen by her husband. The treatment of those issues in the bill is appropriate. - See more at: http://www.equality-network.org/our-work/equal-marriage/our-views-on-the-equal-opportunities-committees-questions/#sthash.PzyS6wFb.dpuf

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Humanist celebrants in Scotland can already conduct legally-recognised marriages. The bill clarifies that in the law, and makes clear that other philosophical belief organisations can also apply to conduct marriages. We welcome this. - See more at: http://

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

We agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well. Some religious bodies want to conduct same-sex marriages, including the Quakers, Unitarians, Liberal Jews and others. Other religious bodies, including the larger churches, do not want to conduct same-sex marriages. Religious freedom should apply to both groups, and the bill gets the balance right. We think that the opt-in procedures in the bill are the appropriate way to do this, and, together with the amendments to the Equality Act 2010 which have been agreed with the UK.
Government, protect the religious freedom of religious bodies and of their members who participate in marriage ceremonies. We think that a small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the husband and wife gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so. For more details, see our more detailed briefing here. - See more at: http://www.equality-network.org/our-work/equal-marriage/our-views-on-the-equal-opportunities-committees-questions/#sthash.PzyS6wFb.dpuf

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

From consulting with many people in civil partnerships, we know that at least half are likely to want to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Some couples who want to change would like to do so by marrying in the usual way, in a civil ceremony or a religious or belief ceremony conducted by an organisation that chooses to conduct same-sex marriages. However, many couples in civil partnerships would prefer to change their civil partnership to a marriage via a simple and inexpensive administrative procedure they have already had their big ceremony when they had their civil partnership. The bill provides both those ways of changing a civil partnership to a marriage, which we welcome. However, in the bill, couples who are already in a civil partnership can only marry in Scotland if their civil partnership was registered in Scotland. Clearly the lightweight administrative procedure for changing to a marriage can only work with civil partnerships registered here in Scotland, but we see no reason why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should not be allowed to marry in Scotland in the usual way. Not allowing this would cause real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland. They will be unable to change to a marriage unless they first dissolve their civil partnership. But that requires proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down, by living apart for a year. It is very unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry. Even if they return to the country where they registered their civil partnership, if that country does not allow same-sex marriage, they would need to dissolve their civil partnership there in a similar way before coming back to Scotland to marry. The practical result will be that the couple will effectively be barred from marrying. In contrast, same-sex couples from any part of the world who are not in a civil partnership will be allowed come to Scotland to marry, whether or not that marriage would be recognised in their home country. We see no reason why this should not also apply to couples who are already in a civil partnership, and we believe that the bill should be amended to allow this. - See more at: http://www.equality-network.org/our-work/equal-marriage/our-views-on-the-equal-opportunities-committees-questions/#sthash.PzyS6wFb.dpuf

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

We believe that most same-sex couples will prefer a civil marriage, a religious or belief marriage, or a civil partnership conducted by a registrar. However, allowing the registration of civil partnerships in a ceremony conducted by a religious or belief

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

We strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. In our view, however, a number of amendments are needed to the parts of the bill that deal with gender recognition. As the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. This enables the spouse to effectively "veto" the trans person’s gender recognition, or at least to delay it while the trans person applies for a divorce. If the relationship between the spouses is difficult, the divorce proceedings could take a long time, during which the trans person is unable to access their human right to legal recognition in their true gender. When a trans person applies for gender recognition, they have already been living in their acquired gender for at least two years. Obtaining gender recognition does not therefore change the practical nature of their marriage, which has been same-sex for at least two years. But it does free the trans person from discrimination by bringing their legal status into line with reality. That should be available with or without the spouse’s consent, because it is a matter personal to the trans person, and has no direct effect on their spouse. It is the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition where both spouses have a direct interest, and where a requirement for the consent of the trans person’s spouse would be appropriate. We therefore believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. When a person has been transitioned for a long time, it can be very difficult indeed to obtain all the medical evidence that is required from people who have only been transitioned two years. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. We therefore believe that a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill - this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. We would also like to see the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16. - See more at: http://www.equality-
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We think that the bill strikes the right balance, and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to. Even where an organisation does agree, individual marriage celebrants within that organisation will be free to opt-out of same-sex marriages, as will any person who plays a part in the religious marriage ceremonies of that organisation (e.g., the church organist). These are strong protections. It has been proposed by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. We would strongly oppose that. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc.) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race.

The registrars’ organisation, the Association of Registrars of Scotland, is not calling for an opt-out. The registering of civil partnerships in Scotland by civil registrars has worked well without any such legal opt-out, and we expect the registering of same-sex marriages to work equally well in a similar way. It has also been proposed by some people that teachers should have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. We would strongly oppose this. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, which is equally controversial for some people. - See more at: http://www.equality-network.org/our-work/equal-marriage/our-views-on-the-equal-opportunities-committees-questions/#sthash.PzyS6wFb.dpuf

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. Apart from the issues mentioned under questions 7, 8 and 11 above, the main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. That has always been a part of the wider Equal Marriage campaign in Scotland. We believe that the same choices - marriage or civil partnership - should be open to all couples regardless of their gender. We therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law, driven by the need to consider the position on opposite sex civil partnership. We believe that review should start without delay, and, once it is complete, there should be prompt legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally, we note that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and that under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clear discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation, to report by July 2014. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and we strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete. - See more at: http://www.equality-network.org/our-work/equal-marriage/our-views-on-the-equal-opportunities-committees-questions/#sthash.PzyS6wFb.dpuf

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Deborah Crockard
14 August 2013
PROSECUTION GUIDANCE IN RELATION TO SAME SEX MARRIAGE

Criticism of same sex marriage or homosexuality is not in itself an offence nor is the expression of religious views or the display of religious symbols. The European Convention on Human Rights and the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union state that all people are guaranteed the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion along with the freedom of expression. These freedoms include the freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority. It is important that those wishing to debate the issue of same sex marriage are able to express views and opinions which may be disagreed with and which may cause concern.

Crown Office and the Procurator Fiscal’s Service recognise the sensitivity of the issues and the strength of opinion surrounding same sex marriage. COPFS will consider any incident reported to it involving criticism of or support for same sex marriage on its facts and circumstances. Views expressed or comments made in relation to same sex marriage in ways which do not incite hatred or violence towards a particular person or group of people and which do not cause or intend to cause public disorder will not be the subject of criminal prosecution.

In considering whether a prosecution is appropriate, consideration will be given to the facts of the case, the context in which any statements are made or actions taken and wider issues in relation to public safety, the protection of public order and the protection of the rights and freedoms of any victims. Any decision to take proceedings in relation to cases of this nature will be approved by Crown Counsel.

Version 11 June 2013.
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I think that same sex marriages should be allowed for mixed sex couples

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Caroline Crozier
5 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
It is a step in treating heterosexuals and homosexuals equally. Additionally, it will help 'normalise' homosexuality within society.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
The overall legal effect is the same regardless of the nature of the marriage - and the belief organisations operate similarly to religious ones - so there should be an equal footing.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
The opt-in procedure is probably the best way to allow some religious/belief celebrants to celebrate same-sex marriage, while will allowing others not to. The same procedure, however, should not be available to Civil Registrars, since they are servants of the state, not an private organisation.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I think it is the best and simplest idea - but it must be uniform. Either Civil Partnerships must be abolished, or they must be available to all people. The objective of the Bill is to promote Marriage equality.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
If it is possible and costed, it should be an option.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

If Civil partnerships must continue, R&B Orgs should be allowed to register them as well as Civil Registrars.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People should still be allowed to say what they feel (i.e Same-Sex marriage is right.wrong/and abomination etc.). However, as part of that, they must allow opposition to their stance. If that opposition heavily outweighs their proponents (as it often does

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

A private individual
4th year law Student

Paul Cruikshahnk
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think that whilst people may have concerns, they should recognise that same sex couples are currently being treated like second-class citizens as their right to marry is being denied; a right which every citizen should be able to enjoy. Same sex marriages would make many same sex couples and their families and friends happy and I think it is selfish if people want to take this opportunity away from them. It would be hypocritical to criticise Russia’s treatment of the LGBT community when Scotland is also currently treating same sex couples as if they are not full citizens. I hope that Scotland becomes more liberal and same sex marriage is legalised, and hopefully other countries will follow suit.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Chelsea Cummings
8 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Stephanie Cunningham
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I believe that Scotland, and the United Kingdom have, since its inception, been at the forefront of progress in the concept of the 'Night watchman government', and that any step we, as a nation, are able to make that grants, and encourages our people to decide for themselves what is right (In this case, whether they wish to marry or not) is a step in the right direction.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I believe that marriage is a union of two people. Gender should not play a role in marriage, as gender is not supposed to play a role in business, education, or any other areas of life without very strong and understandable reasons, such as why treatment f

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

As I believe that people being asked to preform a marriage ceremony should always have the right to refuse on any grounds, and many religious institutions are unlikely to be supportive of marriage out-with their antiquated moral code, I believe that there needs to be a system which would allow for marriage without a religious approval, similar to present humanist marriages.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

The system described in the bill allows all participants in a same sex marriage the right to decide if they wish to participate or not, protecting people from a situation where they would be forced to take part in something that they do not agree with.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
I am entirely in support of breaking the chains that bind people, and therefore I believe that anyone wishing to change their civil partnership to a marriage should have that right. As it stands the current proposal seems to be leaving a rather large hole

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Again, providing a greater degree of freedom, without infringing upon the rights of others can (in my opinion) only be a step in the right direction.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Again, as ever, I am in support of allowing a greater freedom of choice.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Define gender. Or rather define feminine and masculine, and without referring to a persons actual sex (ie, what type of 'plumbing' they have installed 'downstairs') but rather the roles that the two genders play within society, and how they need be a conc

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There is still one major flaw in this bill, in my personal opinion. The state is an institution built by the people of the nation, for the people of the nation, paid for by the taxes collected from the people of the nation. As such, allowing any public service to have to option to opt-out of serving any member of the nation, based upon the beliefs of the individual civil servant/ state school teacher or an other person employed by the government is a gross failure of the government. If a business was to allow someone to pay for their services, and then were to refuse to provide said services, it would be a breech of contract, likewise, the Scottish parliament, and all public services in Scotland exist to serve all the Scottish people, not to pick and choose who is allowed access to public services and who isn't. Private schools, and religious institutions are separate from the state and as such may be free to have their own policy, but if I should have a child who is gay, I would expect my nation to provide him/her with a full education, and with access to the same services as any other citizen. People who do not feel comfortable working for the government have the right to quit their job for personal reasons, just as I have to right to quit my job in the private sector for personal reasons (a right which I recently exercised, and will exercise again if I feel that I cannot in good conscience work for my employer) and seek work elsewhere.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I do not believe that this bill has any affect on freedom of speech, though the success of what was only 20 years ago a minor organisation shall hopefully embolden people to speak out for other causes that we may be ignorant of today.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Whilst the bill is very successful in aiming to liberate same sex couples, outside of the point I have already mentioned, I believe that mixed gender couples should have the right to be joined in a civil partnership if that is their choice. As it stands I believe that the current proposal is lacking in this regard.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Hugh Custodio-Forbes
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The state should not discriminate on the grounds of sexuality - so marriage should be open to all couples, gay or straight - this is a long overdue step towards equality; we will never get cultural equality if we don't have institutional equality as a basis.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
All state employees should be required to carry out their job role in a non discriminatory way, so if that role requires them to conduct or register marriages, then they should do so for both same sex and opposite sex couples. For other organisations, they should be subject to the same non discrimination obligations and exemptions for services related to same sex marriage as they are for opposite sex marriage. A religious institution can deny the right to be married within it on various grounds, such as not adhering evidently enough to that faith; this Bill does nothing to undermine that. Support, witness or conducting a same sex marriage should not be permitted grounds for disciplinary action by any employer, including, for example, a religious institution, as this contradicts the spirit of the Equalities Act and its permitted exemptions.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Amy Dalrymple
21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM KIRSTY DALZIEL

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Kirsty Dalziel
11 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM GEORGE AND LINDA DANIEL

I understand that the Equal Opportunities Committee is considering same sex marriage and I have some views on the subject. I understand that this legislation is driven by a desire for equality and human rights, but marriage is not about rights or equality it is about responsibility for the children of that marriage. It is for a man and a woman to commit to each other for life so that they do not have children by other partners to the detriment of their legitimate children. As same sex couples cannot have children naturally same sex marriage is pointless, they can of course adopt but in that case we must consider the rights of the child, surely a child has a right to a normal upbringing with a father and mother. In this hedonistic society where everyone is concerned about their rights who stands up for the rights of the unborn child? Surely that is the responsibility of parliament. Do children not deserve equality?

George and Linda Daniel
19 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM EUAN DAVIDSON

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
This bill is vital to creating a more equal society, it is a travesty that this has not happened a long time before now. My relationships shouldn't be treated differently to straight ones!!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
As a campaigner for equality I welcome this wholeheartedly. It is crucial that the state does not treat relationships differently, this includes implementing the adultery principle to same sex marriages.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
Humanists can already conduct legal marriages so it is only correct that this right is expanded to other non religious belief systems. It is time to end religious privilege.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Choice has to be crucial, organisations can decide for themselves. The vast majority of same sex couples would not want to be married in a body which does not respect them. This choice should include allowing bodies to use non gender specific language, this makes it easier for intersex and transgender people to solemnise their relationships.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
Again choice is crucial those wanting to change their partnership into a marriage must have the choice of either a full blown ceremony or a simply filling out a form, there should be no cost to changing this as it is the government's fault that marriage was not in place for these couples at the time of solemnisation. The bill currently does not allow those with civil partnerships elsewhere to marry in Scotland, there is no reason for this. In fact this results in a cruel situation where those who have moved to Scotland have to prove their civil partnership has broken down in order to dissolve it. There is no logical reason to put couples in that situation.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I see no reason why this would present a problem if the premises and couple are happy why should the state interfer.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

At the core of this bill, is enshrining choice, if couples want civil partnerships conducted by religious bodies I see no reason to prevent them having them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

The idea that Trans people would be forced to divorce to change their gender identity is an absolute disgrace. This is discrimination of the highest order and causes unnecessary heartbreak. The practical nature of the marriage does not change as a trans person has to have been living as their preferred gender for two years before transition occurs. There should be no spousal veto on transition as this is a personal matter for the trans person alone. It is also crucial that the minimum age for gender recognition is brought into line with the age for marriage, i.e 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The bill strikes the right balance, there should be no opt out for registrars they are there to serve the public not trumpet their own belief’s if they have an issue they can easily find another job more suited. This should also apply to teachers.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill has no effect on freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The only addition I would make to the bill, as well as some concerns raised above, is that mixed sex couples should also be able to enter into civil partnerships further enshrining choice at the heart of the bill.
Are you responding as...

a private individual

Euan Davidson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

there should be no fee, as fee already paid when civil union was performed

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I don't believe they should receive special protection. They are cherry picking which parts of their religion they wish to follow, and ignoring those that are too inconvenient. This makes them bigots hiding behind a false premise. Racists shouldn't be and aren't given special protections, so religious bigots should either

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech should apply to everyone. Religious organisations and their members should not be given protected status, or special rights.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Hugh Davies
26 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Marriage stems from the Bible, therefore is a Christian, solemn event which should be taken before God and shouldn’t be taken lightly as the next step for same sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

As above.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I do not fully understand this question.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

Again, as above, I am in opposition of same sex marriage and in opposition of civil ceremonies. The Government are now trying to change one of the most solemn Christian practices, which has been in place since Biblical days. As Romans says “man shall not lie with man”, this still stands, it is an unnatural relationship and as a Christian country we should embrace our religion rather than standing back to accept the changes which the minority want.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I believe that ministers should not be expected to carry out such ceremonies. I also think that anyone, whether they are florists, hoteliers or any role, should be able to exercise their beliefs and if they do not wish to aid in a civil partnership / same sex marriage due to this religious beliefs then this should be accepted rather than fought in Court, as many cases are. Just as the Government are trying to increase the voice of those who are gay, the voice of the Christian is being slowly but surely quietened to allow way for a minority to stand tall. In my opinion and with Christianity at my core I believe this is not acceptable. One group is being marginalised so another group can flourish. A the heart of the Christian faith is love, God loves you, me and anyone who is willing to come to Him. As a country we need to understand that God loves us despite ourselves, once we embrace this the country will and can begin to flourish again.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Laura-Jayne Davis
10 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
While the law requires schools to provide religious education, it also protects atheist teachers from being compelled to teach it. Similar space should be given to teachers who, for religious convictions or otherwise, do not feel able to teach about same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The issue of freedom of speech in this context is crucial because it is the expression of beliefs about marriage that tends to get people into trouble. Aside from a declaratory clause which has no practical impact (Clause 14), the Government’s Bill does not address this issue. More robust safeguards are needed to ensure that no person will be compelled to express agreement with a same-sex marriage or be punished for expressing their disagreement with it.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
a faith/belief-based organisation
a faith/belief local group or congregation

Robert Hamilton
Deeside Christian Fellowship Church
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Like the majority of reasonable people - I understand that a majority hold these views - I am in favour of marriage equality regardless of gender orientation. At this point in our developed society, it is far past time that such gender marriage prejudice be put behind us and full equality be adopted by the parliament and the populace.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I have been in favour of marriage equality since I became aware of the irrational opposition to such a concept. Such irrational opposition has tried to put forward spurious and bigoted views that serve to divide the community. There is no danger in marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Marriage celebrants need to be registered within the legal system regardless of their beliefs or the beliefs of the organisations they belong to. It is the constant need to divide and categorise these non-issues (in my mind) that delay and obfuscate legislation.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

No celebrant can be forced to conduct ceremonies that he/she does not wish to conduct. There can never be any coercion. Celebrants (and their organisations) that wish to exclude one group or another should be free to do so. So, of course, opting in is far

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

If the term marriage is to remain the chosen form of union then all civil partnerships should be able to convert their legal relationship to that of marriage should they so desire. It should consist of bureaucratic paperwork only. Those who prefer a totally non-religious or belief ceremony should always be able to access a civil marriage registration for their purpose. It is the false differentiation of partnership unions that needs to be eradicated.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Of course the participating couple should be able to choose the venue in which they and their celebrant conduct such ceremonies. All marriages have (by law) to be registered under Births, Deaths and Marriages. It is of no consequence, nor should it be,

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

There should be no difference between marriages and civil partnerships regardless of the celebrant (or organisation). If the participants want a civil partnership they should be free to seek a celebrant to conduct such a ceremony. It would, however, be

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I haven’t had much thought about this but understand that, at present, the Gender Recognition Certificate can only be issued with the consent of the other partner. I seriously think that anyone who takes the step of trans gender assignment needs to be

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There has been some issue with Registrars possibly objecting to conducting same sex marriages. I do not think that public servants have the right to dictate their personal preferences within the confines of their employment. They can, of course, resign their employment should the requirements of their work be at odds with their personal preferences. Or they can organise another person to undertake their role. There are numerous other societal, educational and health issues that can and, of course, will arise. They will have to be addressed as and when they arise, however, the guiding principle needs to be based on equality, compassion and honesty.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Gosh - where to start. Freedom of speech is a right that carries responsibilities. As does membership to any society in which one lives.
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Veronica Denyer
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

Civil partnerships should remain as they are and eventually be opened up to opposite sex partners. Those in a civil partnership should not be forced to change their legal arrangement against their wishes.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ian Diamond
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

The law should treat all marriages the same, regardless of the genders of the spouses. - See more at: http://www.equality-network.org/our-work/equal-marriage/our-views-on-the-equal-opportunities-committees-questions/#sthash.kPnmkLFc.dpuf

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think that the bill strikes the right balance and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech as section 14 of the bill confirms.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. The main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jenny Dian
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

more work needed on this section; civil partnerships registered outwith Scotland should have the same rights as those registered in Scotland

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I think the bill has it about right; schools must be allowed to answer any questions re same-sex marriages in the same way they answer other questions - factually and without personal bias

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Is there a problem here? Of course people will be able to disagree with same-sex marriage and say so.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

big step towards equality but more is needed in the spirit of fairness. For instance - why not have civil partnerships for same sex couples?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mrs Eileen Dickie
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

If we are all created equal under God, then surely all people should all have equal rights. Not allowing LGBT people the same right to marriage is a violation of there rights and shows clear discrimination.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is important, as is the need to communicate with all sides to work out a solution.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Karen Dickson
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

This is a human rights issue.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

I am not certain I understand this question.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

If it is optional, then I am in favour.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
What protection is necessary? Substitute the words 'mixed race' for 'same sex' - the question becomes irrelevant. This is a rights issue; sexual orientation, like race, is not a choice. The prejudices of those 'who may have concerns' are irrelevant.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Karen Dietz
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

Claire Digance
Humanist Society Scotland
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Fiona Dix
21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM DR EUAN DODDS

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I think the bill is unnecessary. I believe it’s aim is to further the normalisation and full acceptance of homosexual practice. One Danish church minister wrote: “But now that we have given them the opportunity to get married, we have lifted the level of equality to a whole new level compared to 1989. Couples of the same sex will be put on the same footing as couples of different sex and that is a huge change.”

http://cphpost.dk/news/national/gay-marriage-legalised This would the true in the UK as well; marriage is society's 'crown' upon a relationship. Consequently, this bill will further normalise homosexual practice, and further demonise any who may, for whatever reason, not condone such behaviour. Secondly, I question whether the full ramifications have been thought through. Writing about the Argentinian experience Dr Ursula Basset for the Pontificia Universidad Católica Argentina wrote: “It quickly became clear that legalising same-sex marriage required a revolution to our internal law. It impacted laws regulating public order, identity, gender, rules of kinship, filiation, marriage, names, marital property arrangements, divorce, alimony, parental rights, succession, domestic violence, adoption, artificial reproductive techniques, surrogate motherhood, liberty of conscience, criminal law, tax law and employment law, among other topics. All of these subjects would need to be attuned to the gender-neutral paradigm … same sex marriage law in Argentina has turned the law upside down - no stone has remained unturned.”

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The Scottish Government is either knowingly or unknowingly being led down a radical, social path. Legalising same-sex marriage will be a fundamental change in the fabric of society and, as has been the experience elsewhere, will lead to marriage itself being devalued. Speaking of this agenda, Peter Tatchell (a prominent voice in the debate said): “Whereas mainstream society saw homosexuality as a problem, we said the problem was homophobia. Straight supremacism was, to us, the equivalent of white supremacism. Our vision was a new sexual democracy, without homophobia and misogyny. Erotic shame and guilt would be banished, together with socially enforced monogamy and male and female gender roles. There would be sexual freedom and human rights for everyone” queer and straight. Our message was "innovate, don't assimilate". GLF never called for equality. The demand was liberation. We wanted to change society, not conform to it.

http://www.guardian.co.uk/commentisfree/2009/jun/26/gay-lgbt-victimhood-stonewall Those pushing for SSM want to do away with the definition of a ‘normal, nuclear family’ and pave the way towards a brave new world. The Scottish Government appears to be quite comfortable with this radical social engineering (and that at a time when almost half of marriages breakdown with untold of emotional and psychological damage)

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

I notice the Supreme Court in the U.S. consider Humanism a religion, does this mean that they would not be considered a 'belief' celebrant? Secondly, where will the lines be drawn. In the 2001 census, almost 400 000 British citizens described their religion as Jedi; will it be long before we have Jedi weddings on the shore of Loch Lomond?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

Although one wonders how many would change. Since their introduction, the number of civil partnerships in Scotland has been steadily falling each year (1047 in 2006 to 465 in 2010).

https://docs.google.com/spreadsheet/ccc?key=0AonYZs4MzlZbdG1CZnVlc2lVbElVbXZ3eFJwc19tZEE&hl=en#gid=0 According to Stonewall estimates, â€”no-one knows how many gay people there are in Britainâ€™ http://www.stonewall.org.uk/what_we_do/research_and_policy/2880.asp Based on their estimates, they approximate 3.04 million, meaning just over 3% have had a civil partnership. The ONS Integrated household survey (2010) suggests 0.9% were homosexual, suggesting 19% had a civil partnership. The â€˜take-upâ€™ rate has been modest. Recent surveys have suggested that the uptake for same-sex marriage would be about the same.
http://www.rnw.nl/english/bulletin/dutch-gay-couples-marry-far-less

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

Once again, this would simply highlight the failure of the bill to deliver 'equal marriage'. At the Pride rally in Edinburgh last Saturday (29/06), Tom French of the Equality Network said, “We want to send a clear message to the Scottish Government; LGBT people deserve equal rights and will settle for nothing less.”

If SSM can take place anywhere EXCEPT in religious premises, will the ‘inequality’ not be even more stark and will it be only a matter of time before the pressure mounts to allow these weddings to take place in churches etc?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Writing in the National Review, Michael Coren studied the Canadian experience. He argued, “Once gay marriage becomes law, critics are often silenced by the force of the law. It’s estimated that, in less than five years, there have been between 200 and 300 proceedings in courts, human-rights commissions, and employment boards against critics and opponents of same-sex marriage.”

The Mayor of Arcangues faced a five year prison sentence and a colossal fine if he refused to marry a same sex couple:

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It is fair to say that those who have opposed legislation have face a lot of abuse. “Out of touch,” “intolerant,” “bigots,” “no better than racists,” “homophobes,” “stuck in the dark ages” are just some of the terms being slung. Moreover, those who uphold traditional marriage have suffered in their workplaces. Gordon Wilson was voted off Dundee City Council for holding certain opinions.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

David Burrowes, a London MP received death threats.
A Newly-wed couple who delivered a petition supporting traditional marriage to Downing street were bombarded with hate mail. http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/politics/9349353/Gay-marriage-newlywed-couple-bombarded-with-internet-hate-mail.html

Others have suffered loss of their earnings: The Bulls in Cornwall, the registrar Lillian Ladele, the housing officer Adrian Smith (who had a 40% payout after employers objected to comments on his personal facebook page). All of this creates a frightening Orwellian picture of a society where one cannot challenge (for whatever reason) the dogma that homosexual relationships are entirely natural and equally valid as heterosexual marriage. It seems that liberals become illiberal in this issue and anyone who speaks out is demonised. We fear that, should the government lean toward legalising same-sex marriage, those who uphold traditional marriage will not only be demonised, but even potentially criminalised for homophobic speech (so called). It is interesting to notice that the Gay Policeman's Association complained (with the support of UNISON) about Bibles being given to officers. They believed the force should not ‘endorse a book containing text which condemns homosexuality’. The Book which all those in our courts must swear upon is now beginning to be considered, by some within the police, as 'condemning homosexuality'. Anyone, therefore, who reads or speaks about such things may be accused of homophobia, or worse a hate-crime.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

This bill is being touted as an example of how 'progressive' Scotland is in the eyes of the world. It is, in fact, regressive - taking us back to the classical world where all sorts of marriages were permitted. The grassroots desire for this is small, the public opposition is large; it will lead to all sorts of legal gymnastics and no shortage of litigation. Might we not be better off dealing with the other inequalities in society; the difference in lifespan between the East and West of Glasgow, the rich-poor divide-than playing to the gallery and trying to present ourselves as 'tolerant and enlightened'.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Dr Euan Dodds
16 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM DOUGLAS DOLBY

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I think it is only right in a fair society that we all have rights and therefore it equal rights to marry should apply to everyone regardless of their sexuality.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

In both parties are in agreement this seems obvious to me.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Douglas Dolby
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Provided no religious organisation is required by law to carry out same sex marriage, I see no valid reason why those opposed to same sex marriage have the right to deny religious bodies who would marry same sex couples the right to do so.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

David Doran
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Lewis Dorigo
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Couples would have no more rights than they already receive in civil partnerships. The Biblical basis of marriage is for heterosexual union of a man and a woman primarily, to give each companionship and to create children. Same sex unions cannot create children!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Religious celebrants who refuse to marry same sex couples may be liable to prosecution Adoption by same sex couples is not, in my opinion, in the interests of children Some employees would run into legal penalties if they refuse to endorse same sex marriage Prospective employees, who believe in the current definition of marriage, could face discrimination at job interviews Teachers who believe in the present definition of marriage could be forced to teach same sex marriage even if they find it abhorrent Charity Law would have to be amended to allow charities to disagree with same sex marriage The vast majority of parents would disagree with their children being taught that same sex marriage is "normal"

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Heterosexual Marriage is an institution started by God (of the Christian Bible) and as such has a supernatural dimension - it comes with the blessing of God. All other forms of marriage do not have this same dimension

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

The vast majority of celebrants would only officiate at heterosexual marriage The Church of Scotland is right now risking total breakdown on this same sex issue

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition
Different dynamics are involved in each of these relationships and they would not be compatible or interchangeable.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

No firm views

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I personally do not recognise them as being worthy of registration

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

I do not believe in transgender change. I believe we remain as we are born - male or female

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

See my answers to questions 4 & 5

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Specific amendments need to be made, if the bill is to become law, to protect the right of free speech; so that criticising same sex marriage is not rendered unlawful. I preach the Christian message on the streets and in secular venues, as well as churches, and I would want the Bible’s message to be free of any retribution. The Bible advocates heterosexual marriage. More robust safeguards are needed to ensure on-one is compelled to agree with same sex marriage or face legal penalties; people who support the present marriage laws must not be put in the position of facing potential legal penalties; religion and belief must be protected under any equality law.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Gay and lesbian websites comment on the increased violence between such couples as opposed to ‘straight’ couples, together with the increased incidence of sexually transmitted disease and suicide in gay and lesbian partnerships. It appears not to be a normal healthy form of partnership!
Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation
private individual

Douglas Renton
Douglas Renton Ministries
13 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

There is no difference between heterosexual people and homosexual people except both are male or female. Its a bloody disgrace!

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
The whole thing is an absolute farce. Two people in love should be able to marry without any of this crap going on because that is exactly what it is crap and nonsense just like all the stupid religion in the UK. We no longer are the UK were a place for anyone welcome rob benefits penalise BRITISH CITIZENS and robs us homosexuals of our right to get married

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

david nathan downie
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

My opposition is one of principle - I do not believe that this or any government has the right to redefine marriage; and of practice - there is no protection that will hold for those who disagree with same-sex marriage, which is both a violation of free speech and also of freedom of conscience. I am not homophobic, and have relatives in same-sex relationships, which I accept. However, neither they nor I believe this should lead to a redefinition of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I do not believe this is a matter of equality and/or human rights; same-sex couples already have the option of civil partnerships (which could be strengthened if there are deemed to be necessary areas). Marriage since time immemorial, in almost every culture in the world with very few exceptions (e.g. polygamous societies), and in every world religion, has been understood and practised as between one man and one woman. This has underpinned social stability, the welfare of children, and human flourishing.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I am not sure what is meant by the term 'belief celebrants', unless that refers to humanists etc.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

None of the proposed safeguards for religious celebrants who wish to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages are adequate. Lawyers state clearly that none of the so-called safeguards will stand once they are challenged on the grounds of equality and/or human rights law, because these have come always to trump all other considerations, and are interpreted accordingly. So while I know that those who wish to conduct these celebrations will have the freedom to do so, those who do not wish to do so will be hounded and prosecuted. This shows how utterly inadequate the proposed legislation is.
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

I do not see any reason why such a change should be necessary.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

I think this would be the least bad solution, and no doubt will happen, but I still believe it to be fundamentally wrong.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

If by 'belief registration' you mean for example by secular humanists, then we already have this, and I can accept the case for civil partnerships anyway. But I do not think this should be conducted in Christian churches.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

I recognise that there are a small number of cases where after marriage one partner acquires the reverse gender, and that in an even smaller number of cases the two people concerned wish to remain married. However, this is a statistically very small group, and while I would be very sympathetic to protecting them, their case should be regarded as exceptional, not normative. Making exceptional cases the basis of changes in the law for everyone almost always leads to very bad law.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am very deeply concerned. There are already cases where people have lost their jobs and/or been harassed for merely expressing their belief that marriage is between a man and a woman, as it always has been. It is already clear that believing in traditional marriage and expressing that belief, however politely, and in personal as well as employment contexts, can lead to prosecution. I find that appalling, as a total violation of conscience and freedom of speech. I have three adult children, respectively a minister of religion, a doctor and a teacher, and all three of them risk losing their jobs if they so much as hint that they believe in traditional marriage. I have close friends who are social workers and teachers and civil servants, and they all feel threatened. I have grandchildren, and while they need to learn to respect homosexual relationships (which they do), I find it offensive that their schools are increasingly under pressure actively to promote homosexuality and same-sex marriage, in preference to traditional marriage and male-female relationships. I also find it offensive that those who argue on the grounds of equality and human rights for same-sex marriage, apparently have no respect whatsoever for the human rights and equality of those who disagree with them. If this legislation goes through, it must be on genuinely equal grounds, with absolutely as much protection for those who disagree as for those who champion it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Rosemary Dowsett
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Judi Ducker
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
concerns? protections? sheesh

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
I have nothing to say

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Chris Duffy
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

I strongly support and welcome the bill. It is a huge step towards equality for a nation which prides itself on equality and fairness. Religious freedom is thoroughly protected which removes any legitimate opposition to the bill. However some improvements could still be made as outlined in later questions.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I fully support equal marriage. I find it genuinely baffling how people living in a country which promotes freedom and equality can even begin to try and justify structural inequality. LGBT citizens are full citizens and should therefore be afforded the s

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

Humanist celebrants in Scotland can already conduct legally-recognised marriages. The bill clarifies that in the law, and makes clear that other philosophical belief organisations can also apply to conduct marriages. This is extremely positive as it ensur

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

We agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well. Some religious bodies want to conduct same-sex marriages, including the Quakers, Unitari

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

I think this is extremely important as it allows those who were previously subject to discrimination to enjoy full equality under the law and many people in civil partnerships have been found to be keen to change this to marriage (please find this information on the equality network website if more details are needed). The bill provides both those ways of changing a civil partnership to a marriage, which we welcome. However, in the bill, couples who are already in a civil partnership can only marry in Scotland if their civil partnership was registered in Scotland. Clearly the lightweight administrative procedure for changing to a marriage can only work with civil partnerships registered here in Scotland, but we see no reason why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should not be allowed to marry in Scotland in the usual way. Not allowing this would cause real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland. They will be unable to change to a marriage unless they first dissolve their civil partnership. But that requires proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down, by living apart for a year. It is very unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry. Even if they return to the country where they registered their civil partnership, if that country does not allow same-sex marriage, they would need to dissolve their civil partnership there in a similar way before coming back to Scotland to marry. The practical result will be that the couple will effectively be barred from marrying. In contrast, same-sex couples from any part of the world who are not in a civil partnership will be allowed come to Scotland to marry, whether or not that marriage would be recognised in their home country. We see no reason why this should not also apply to couples who are already in a civil partnership, and we believe that the bill should be amended to allow this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This is not specifically an issue for LGBT people, but the additional flexibility that will be allowed in choosing the location of civil marriage ceremonies is welcome. Frankly, this should not be an issue in this day and age. Couples should be allowe

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

From a personal standpoint I think it is problematic to maintain separation of "civil partnership" and "marriage". I think this creates a divide where by one type of relationship or commitment can be deemed different or better than another and it would be

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly believe that transgender people who are married should be able to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. Not allowing this would be a clear case of discrimination. And forcing people to divorce to remarry would

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The bill strikes a good balance, and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to. Even where an organisation does agree, individual marriage celebrants within that organisation will be free to opt-out of same-sex marriages, as will any person who plays a part in the religious marriage ceremonies of that organisation (eg the church organist). These are strong protections. It has been proposed by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. We would strongly oppose that. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race. Discrimination at a state level (or any level really but unfortunately people do have the right to behave like idiots if they so choose) is completely unacceptable and should not be institutionalised. It has also been proposed by some people that teachers should have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. We would strongly oppose this. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, which is equally controversial for some people. I feel that pandering to such beliefs creates a dangerous precedent. School as mentioned is about facts and learning. It is a fact that same sex couples exist and it is important we teach about this fairly. Ignorance is a key cause of discrimination and should not be encouraged. Furthermore this could be extremely damaging to children in the class who are LGBT who are then given the impression that they are somehow less than or to be avoided.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech, as section 14 of the bill confirms. People will remain free to disagree with same-sex marriage and to express that disagreement publicly. However as with any freedom of speech, hate speech can no

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. Apart from the issues mentioned under questions 7, 8 and 11 above, I note that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and th

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Danielle Eadie
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

There are some who commit murder and atrocities in the name of religion.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Yes,live and let live.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Nancy Earlie
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

This makes sense to keep only two categories of marriage and grouping the religious and belief system together is less confusing for the public. It is very important that the bill does not create two different versions of marriage, same-sex marriage and mixed-sex marriage, because that would lead to continued discrimination.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

If a couple have already gone through a Civil Partnership and Civil Partnership is remaining then they should have to go through a Civil Marriage is they wish to be married, but there should be an inexpenisve, administrative, option for this. Furthermore, clarification is needed for those who have a Civil Partnership which was registered abroad.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This would put registrars on the same footing as humanists and ministers who are allowed to marry couples anywhere.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

It should be marriage for all. If same sex couples are to be allowed to have a marriage or a civil partnership, heterosexual couples should be allowed the same option.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

N/A

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

N/A

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

N/A

Are you responding as...

a public body

Sarah Collins
East Ayrshire Council
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Strongly in favour.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I see this as a fundamental human right.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
I agree with the equality network in that: “...a small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I would also like to see an introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Andrew Edwards
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

Myself and my partner are engaged and waiting to get married. It's ridiculous the bill isn't already passed. Seems Scotland is behind the times after all.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Same sex couples are the same as every other couple. Marriage came before religion and it has no place here.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

I am not religious as such, but each to their own. I feel that every human being should have the right to marry religiously if they wish.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

I don't believe in hocus pocus, but if others wish to get married in a religious building to sign a LEGAL Contract, then so be it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

This bill is about heterosexual and homosexual marriage becoming equal, no where has it stated anything about transgender. It has no place in this fight, that should be a separate issue.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

To put it politely. "Protection" Mind your own business I say, and let others have the equal right to do the same.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Scotland is a great place for freedom of speech, let it be an equal one too.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Julie Edwards
21 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM EMILY

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Overwhelmingly in support.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Same sex couples should not be discriminated against for loving someone. To suggest that they have a civil partnership instead of a marriage is suggesting that their love and commitment for each other is less than an opposite sex couple.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

This is a secular society, so religion should have no part in government laws.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Civil partnership' seems a ridiculous term - as if same sex relationships are any different to a marriage (Commitment, love and family)

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

If you treat people like they are different, they will act that they are different. Is it ok to put black people at the back of the bus and white people at the front, purely for being different and misunderstood?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Stop being concerned and allow people to love on another, regardless of your views. How can love go wrong?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Stop being concerned and allow people to love on another, regardless of your views. How can love go wrong?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic a faith/belief-based organisation a faith/belief local group or congregation an LGBT group

Emily
15 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
The issue is about about love and commitment, not gender, so I am fully in support of same sex couples being able to marry.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I think this is a personal issue, there are some distinct differences between marriage and civil partnership, I believe both options should be available to opposite sex and same sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
a private individual

Mandy Evans Ewing
Humanist Celebrant (HSS)
21 August 2013
The Faculty of Advocates is the independent bar in Scotland. The Faculty is committed to human rights and to equal opportunities for all. Its members include advocates with expertise in all fields of law, including family law. The Faculty welcomes the opportunity to offer evidence in relation to the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill. The comments which follow are concerned with the legal effects of the Bill. The Faculty does not generally take a position on matters of social policy.

- The Faculty has identified a small number of technical matters – in relation to clauses 4 and 25 and Schedule 1 - upon which it offers comment.

- The Faculty has identified one respect in which the policy intention as regards the protection for freedom of conscience appears not to be reflected in the provisions of the Bill.

Clause 4

In responding to the Consultation on the draft Bill the Faculty drew attention, in particular, to the definition of “cohabitant” in section 25 of the Family Law (Scotland) Act 2006, where a cohabitant is defined to include “either member of a couple consisting of …two persons of the same sex who are (or were) living together as if they were civil partners”. It is assumed that clause 4(2) to (5) is intended to change this to refer to persons living together as if they were married. The drafting is awkward and does not clearly achieve this purpose. Clause 4(4) provides for cessation in effect of a provision such as that in section 25 of the 2006 Act, but sub-clauses 4(2) and (3) only apply to statutory provisions that refer to persons living together as if they were married. Added to that, clause 4(5) disapplies the new provision if there is a conflict with existing law. The result is at best confusing, and at worst ineffective to change the law. It would be useful to amend section 25 of the 2006 Act specifically and this could easily be done by substituting “two persons” for “a man and a woman” in section 25(1)(a), or by adding after the reference to civil partners the words “or married”.

Clauses 10, 11 and 14

These provisions seek to safeguard Article 9 rights (the rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion). Annex A to the Scottish Government’s Consultation on the draft Bill contained the following statement: “The Scottish Government has made it clear throughout that no religious body and no religious celebrant should be required to solemnize same sex marriage or to register a civil partnership”.

"February 2013"
The Faculty is not convinced that this policy intention has been fully implemented in the Bill so far as individual religious celebrants are concerned. The Bill does not contain provisions equivalent to those which appear in section 2 of the Marriage (Same-Sex Couples) Act 2013 (which applies in England and Wales). Section 2 of the 2013 Act provides that a person may not be compelled by any means to undertake certain specified activities, including conducting a relevant same-sex marriage.

Religious celebrants who belong to a religious or belief body which is in favour of same-sex marriage, but who have a conscientious objection to same-sex marriage, might be open to pressure from their religious or belief body to solemnise such marriages. In effect, the pressures that have existed for civil registrars might come to be applied to such celebrants: in Ladele v United Kingdom (2013) 57 E.H.R.R. 8, the European Court of Human Rights held that the dismissal of a civil registrar who declined to solemnise civil partnerships was not incompatible with her Convention rights. Having regard to section 149 of the Equality Act 2010, there may be particular implications for persons employed in the public sphere, such as hospital, prison and army chaplains.

The Faculty notes the joint statement by the Scottish Government and UK Government on amendments to the UK Equality Act 2010. Paragraph 18 of the joint statement suggests that the proposed amendment to that Act will follow section 2(6) of the Marriage (Same-Sex Couples) Act 2013, to provide that a celebrant does not contravene section 29 of the 2010 Act by refusing to solemnise a same-sex marriage or register a civil partnership. It does not, however, appear to be envisaged that the legislation will replicate the other provisions of section 2 of the 2013 Act.

The Bill seeks to offer reassurance by re-iterating, in clause 14, the rights to freedom of thought, conscience and religion and to freedom of expression found in articles 9 and 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights. While the express acknowledgement of these rights may be useful, it is doubtful whether express reference to them adds anything of substance since these freedoms are already built into the law by the Human Rights Act 1998 and the Parliament does not have the power to pass a measure that conflicts with them (Scotland Act 1998, section 29).

Clause 25

The Faculty drew to the attention of the Scottish Government the problem which this Clause is intended to alleviate – namely the failure to appreciate that civil partnerships could not be dissolved on the basis of evidence solely from one of the partners. There are, however, objections in principle, to which the Faculty has drawn attention, to retrospective measures, such as the provision in the Bill. The Faculty suggested an alternative, and prospective measure, which would reduce the risks of future challenge.
Clause 26

The Faculty is pleased to note that its concerns about the serious and potentially damaging effect of bigamy have been recognised by an increase in the possible financial penalty from £1,000 to £10,000.

Schedule 1

The Faculty has concerns about the possible interaction of the exclusion of jurisdiction to entertain an application for financial orders (in paragraph 1) with the terms of regulations that are not yet available. There is potential for serious injustice if financial provision cannot be claimed. Further, if the sheriff at Edinburgh is to have extended jurisdiction to entertain proceedings for divorce pursuant to paragraph 3(3), there should be clarity that the sheriff can also deal with ancillary orders, including financial provision.

While it is a matter for the regulations, there is a difference in treatment between persons domiciled in the UK or Republic of Ireland where domicile is the test of jurisdiction and the rest of the EU where nationality is the test. This is recognised in paragraph 2(1)(a)(iii), but should perhaps be reflected in 2(1)(a)(ii).

Faculty of Advocates
26 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

This will work well for My husband and I, there are still lots of area’s that need sorting out. but hopefully this is the first step towards us being able to be a full time couple. We have been in a civil partnership for almost two years and at the moment

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

The celebrants are government employees employed to do a specific job. If they are not prepared to do their work then they must be either redeployed or find alternative employment. we are not talking about churches we are talking about ordinary people. it

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

no one wants a homophobe to be the celebrant in a same sex marriage, so no one will use their services, If a church does not approve of same sex marriage, again why would any one want to force them, It is a civil marriage, a civil servant does their job

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

I have been in a civil partnership for almost two years why should I change our marriage date. I know it is a civil partnership but to us it was the closest to marriage and that is our special day

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

As I said no one want to be married by someone who does not approve of your relationship, I feel the same way about churches, if they approve of us, that is fine. If not, I will find someone who does approve of us.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

civil partnerships have to be available to everyone, marriages have to be available to everyone. it should not matter if you are in a same sex relationship or a mixed relationship. relationships should be equal regardless of who the parties are.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I am against discrimination. many trans people need their support group and family, it is not up to the government to stop them enjoying full and equal protection.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Simply put, if you don't like same sex marriage, don't have one. There is no need for protection, being gay is not a virus, it is not learned, and no one can make you gay. You either are or not. No one chooses who they will fall in love with or why they fell for someone.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

You are free to say what you want so long as you respect others. I feel some preachers stand on the street telling people what to do, save that for in your churches, if you cannot teach love and equality then you should not be allowed to teach hate.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The big problems I have are with regards to civil partnerships or marriages that would be between foreign nationals and citizens. My husband is Filipino I am British. after our first year together, I had health issues. in the end we could not live together.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Keith Francis Farrell
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Allan Faulds
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Emma Faulkner
14 August
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The right to freedom of choice is a fundamental pillar of my beliefs. I therefore support any bill that gives legal recognition to what is essentially a consensual and harmless activity. Furthermore, by legitimizing gay relationships within a legal framework, the Scottish government can take large strides towards ensuring further tolerance and acceptance of a historically persecuted group of individuals. It is my hope that bigotry towards the LGBT community will be largely reduced within the next generation as a result of this bill.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

A marriage which is based on love should always be supported by our government - regardless of the gender mix within the marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

If that is how the couple wish to define their relationship, they should be permitted to change from a civil partnership to a marriage. They should equally have the right to retain their civil partnership status if that is their wish.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
This links back to my belief about freedom of choice. If the couple have agreed a venue with the registrar and are happy with it, I see no reason why the government should feel any need to be involved.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Providing it has been agreed between the couple and the religious body, I have no problem. However, if the religious body does not wish to conduct the ceremony, it should be within their rights to refuse.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

A loving couple should have a right to marriage, irrespective of their gender - this includes those who have changed gender at any point in their life.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Gavin Ferguson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition
it is against nature and is not allowed in Islam

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition
they should not get marry each other at all

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition
we strongly oppose this because this is a religious matter it can not be same

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition
It should not be allowed in the Mosque

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Saeed Ahmed
Fife Islamic Centre Glenrothes
29 June 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Craig Figures
15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM ALAN FINDLAY

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

If LGBT people are to be GENUINELY regarded as equal to other members of society, there is no justification for excluding their relationships from the union of marriage. Virtually all opposition to this step appears to be rooted in thinly-veiled homophobic prejudice.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Covered in 4 above

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I presume this relates to, for example, humanist celebrants, although humanism is not a 'belief'. However, I do not think that religious celebrants should be given special treatment.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I feel these are fully adequate to protect all points of view, including those individuals or faith groups who do not wish to be involved in same-sex marriage ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Many couples who have entered Civil Partnerships did so as a 'second best' to marriage, because marriage was not open to them. Where marriage becomes available, these couples should be able to 'upgrade'.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

I can see absolutely no objection to this in a modern, free society. Many couples will have venues which have great significance for them, and in which they'd like to get married.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

As with marriage, if all are in agreement, it should be possible to do this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This will be one of the major pluses of same-sex marriage legislation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

This is, sadly, a divisive issue. I, and many others, see these concerns as rooted in prejudice. Prejudice CAN be backed up by one's interpretation of scripture. People are perfectly entitled to believe that same-sex marriage is wrong, but they do not need this belief backed up or protected by any legislation. No-one is going to threaten them because they believe this, unless they themselves cause hurt or offence by excessive public statement of their beliefs.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

This should be common sense. Everyone should be free to state their views, but not deliberately to hurt or offend others. We have recently seen examples of suicides apparently caused by careless or malign use of social media, so, sadly, there needs to be some restraint on hate speech and bullying. The law should be used sparingly, but in a way which will encourage people to think before they speak.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are LGBT people 'as good as' others? If so, they should be treated no differently. When people say, "I just see LGBT people as different, not as second-class", this usually proves to be a veil for some degree of homophobia. Religious objections to LGBT people do not stand up to rational examination, based as they are on carefully selected scriptural texts.

Are you responding as...

a private individual
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I wholeheartedly support the bill and I only recommend that it is finalised appropriately to ensure the full equality which it sets out to achieve without being discriminatory to the opposition.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

There is absolutely no reason why same sex couples should have to have their legal relationship represented in a way which is different to that of a heterosexual couple. It is the principle which is important. It is extremely important that the bill achieves same sex marriage without creating a separate form of marriage from the current definition of marriage which would of course continue the current issue of discrimination. As it is absolutely possible to recognise adultery in a same-sex relationship as is the case with heterosexual relationships, I welcome this inclusion and I also welcome the fact that consummation is not a requirement in same-sex marriages as is the case with all marriages because it is, quite frankly, ridiculous that such a thing even exists. Some people who marry are celibate.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I support the fact that belief celebrants and religious celebrants are treated the same in terms of their rights and responsibilities under the act however, I also feel it is important to recognise that they are different within that. It would also be interesting to see whether a philosophical objection (or philosophically motivated semi-discriminatory language) would be treated differently from a religious objection.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I believe that religious freedom should apply to both supporters and opposers of same-sex marriage and the opt-in process which the bill proposes gets that balance right. I believe that the amendments to the Equality Act 2010 adequately protect the religious freedom of both supports and crucially, opposers of same-sex marriage. And argument which suggests that those in opposition to same-sex marriage are being persecuted is simply untrue. I agree with the Equality Network who think that a small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the “husband and wife” gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I support civil partnerships being transferrable into marriages - this is essential - particularly in the sense that a small administrative process can take place rather than a full ceremony if preferred. However, as the Equality Network highlights, in the bill, couples who are already in a civil partnership can only marry in Scotland if their civil partnership was registered in Scotland. Clearly the lightweight administrative procedure for changing to a marriage can only work with civil partnerships registered here in Scotland, but we see no reason why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should not be allowed to marry in Scotland in the usual way. Not allowing this would cause real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland. They will be unable to change to a marriage unless they first dissolve their civil partnership. But that requires proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down, by living apart for a year. It is very unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry. Even if they return to the country where they registered their civil partnership, if that country does not allow same-sex marriage, they would need to dissolve their civil partnership there in a similar way before coming back to Scotland to marry. The practical result will be that the couple will effectively be barred from marrying. In contrast, same-sex couples from any part of the world who are not in a civil partnership will be allowed come to Scotland to marry, whether or not that marriage would be recognised in their home country. We see no reason why this should not also apply to couples who are already in a civil partnership, and we believe that the bill should be amended to allow this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This is absolutely essential, often marriages do not take place on religious premises and this should be no different for same-sex marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
I support the Equality Network’s opinion which is "We believe that most same-sex couples will prefer a civil marriage, a religious or belief marriage, or a civil partnership conducted by a registrar. However, allowing the registration of civil partnerships in a ceremony conducted by a religious or belief body that chooses to do so, adds a useful extra option. There may be some religious bodies that would not wish to conduct same-sex marriages, but would want to offer religious civil partnership ceremonies to same-sex couples who are their members. There may also be some couples with religious beliefs who would prefer a civil partnership to a marriage."

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support the entirety of the below quoted stance of the Equality Network which is: "We strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. In our view, however, a number of amendments are needed to the parts of the bill that deal with gender recognition. As the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. This enables the spouse to effectively veto the trans person’s gender recognition, or at least to delay it while the trans person applies for a divorce. If the relationship between the spouses is difficult, the divorce proceedings could take a long time, during which the trans person is unable to access their human right to legal recognition in their true gender. When a trans person applies for gender recognition, they have already been living in their acquired gender for at least two years. Obtaining gender recognition does not therefore change the practical nature of their marriage, which has been same-sex for at least two years. But it does free the trans person from discrimination by bringing their legal status into line with reality. That should be available with or without the spouse’s consent, because it is a matter personal to the trans person, and has no direct effect on their spouse. It is the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition where both spouses have a direct interest, and where a requirement for the consent of the trans person’s spouse would be appropriate. We therefore believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. When a person has been transitioned for a long time, it can be very difficult indeed to obtain all the medical evidence that is required from people who have only been transitioned two years. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. We therefore believe that a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. We would also like to see the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16."
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I strongly support the entirety of the below quoted stance of the Equality Network which is: “We think that the bill strikes the right balance, and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to. Even where an organisation does agree, individual marriage celebrants within that organisation will be free to opt-out of same-sex marriages, as will any person who plays a part in the religious marriage ceremonies of that organisation (eg the church organist). These are strong protections. It has been proposed by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. We would strongly oppose that. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race. The registrars’ organisation, the Association of Registrars of Scotland, is not calling for an opt-out. The registering of civil partnerships in Scotland by civil registrars has worked well without any such legal opt-out, and we expect the registering of same-sex marriages to work equally well in a similar way. It has also been proposed by some people that teachers should have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. We would strongly oppose this. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, which is equally controversial for some people."

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill does not affect freedom of speech; those who wish to publicly express their disagreement of same-sex marriage should be able to do so and not be discriminated against as a result in terms of the services they receive from the government. This is obviously different when somebody clearly uses hate speech against LGBT* people which would be wrong and should be dealt with - the offending party should not be able to hide behind the notion that they were expressing their opposition to same-sex marriage as this is different to using offensive language surrounding LGBT* people e.g. homophobic slurs.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The Bill does not yet provide full equality in the sense that it does not offer the opportunity for mixed-sex civil partnerships which results in continued discrimination. It still highlights that fact that everyone is entitled to marriage but, there's still that other thing for those people. That is wrong. I fully support the Equality Network’s comments which are: "The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. Apart from the issues mentioned under questions 7, 8 and 11 above, the main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. That has always been a part of the wider Equal Marriage campaign in Scotland. We believe that the same choices – marriage or civil partnership - should be open to all couples regardless of their gender. We therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law, driven by the need to consider the position on opposite sex civil partnership. We believe that review should start without delay, and, once it is complete, there should be prompt legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally, we note that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and that under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clear discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation, to report by July 2014. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and we strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete."

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Connor SP Finlayson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The Fire Brigades Union is committed to promoting equality and the members who identify as LGBT have made clear through the national LGBT Committee that they want marriage equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Civil Partnership may have been a step towards equality but there has still been elements that resulted in less favourable treatment to members of the Fire and Rescue Service. In terms of the Firefighters Pension Scheme (FPS) access to partner entitlement was previously exclusive to members who were married. With the enactment of the Civil Partnership Act in December of 2005 members of the scheme in same sex relationships could receive partner benefits in the event of death if in a Civil Partnership. However the accrued entitlement was only eligible from December 2005. This means for example a firefighter in the FPS with twenty years service who is married to someone of the opposite sex and who dies would leave partner benefits from the scheme reflective of 20 years of contribution but should the same firefighter be in a Civil Partnership the benefit entitlement would only be 8 years to there partner despite having made the exact same level of contribution to the scheme.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

Our LGBT members have indicated that the desire obtain same sex marriage is not about access to religious ceromonied but about the title and entitlesments associated with marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

The LGBT Committee that those who wish to afford opportunity to perform same sex marriage should be given the right to opt to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

It is widely felt that Civil Partnership is an inferior form of marriage and we would welcome a single title.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

The FBU LGBT Committee supports the right for freedom of choice.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

The overwhelming desire of the LGBT Committee is to achieve a single title for legal recognition of union and that should be marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This issue has been problematic for some members of the FBU. One member who was male and a watch manager with 24 years service and married to a woman transitioned in 2010 to a woman. The member was in a stable relationship and desired to remain married to their partner. However their membership of the Firefighters Pension Scheme did not allow for recognition of the relationship as in law they were now a woman and so in effect the relationship was classed as lesbian. This meant the marriage had to be dissolved and a civil partnership registered. This is a process that does not happen over night and the member was left without financial protection to death benefits to their partner during the time of transition from marriage to civil partnership. Again because the accrual of pension entitlement only started for those in civil partnership from December 2005 the contribution period of 24 years to the pension scheme has been reduced to 8 years for the purpose of benefits to their partner in the event of death again presenting less favourable treatment.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Marriage is primarily about the two people who wish to engage in that legal union. We do not believe it impacts significantly on wider society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The debate on same sex marriage has produced many views that are without foundation and are often homophobic and transphobic.
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

As has been highlighted Civil Partnerships has not delivered equal benefits in terms of some public sector pension schemes. Same sex marriage must take account of this omission if equality is to be achieved.

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group
National Secretary FBU LGBT Committee

Pat Carberry
Fire Brigades Union LGBT National Committee
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Why should two people not be allowed to commit to each other if they so choose whether same sex or not

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

storm Potratz Fitzpatrick
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

There is no great demand for the same-sex marriage and the other measures contained in the Bill. A Poll conducted by ComRes in 2012 showed that the majority (55 per cent) of people in Scotland agree that "marriage should continue to be defined as a life-long exclusive commitment between a man and a woman.". Only 38 per cent disagreed. Once you have redefined something that has never before been redefined, an important precedent is set, opening the door for further redefinition. In Canada and in some US states, where same-sex marriage has been legalised, attempts are now being made to legalise polygamy. In the Netherlands, three-way relationships have been recognised in law and there may well be demands for marriage to be redefined in this way in the future.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The laws regulating marriage may have evolved and changed over the years but the fundamental terms of marriage—that marriage is the voluntary union of one man and one woman for life to the exclusion of all others—have never been altered. Marriage promotes a unique relationship within which children are conceived, born and reared. Further more, it recognises the objective complementarity of male and female. Such an institution benefits children. However, under the new proposals procreation and the rearing of children is no longer a fundamental purpose of marriage and male-female complementarity becomes irrelevant.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There is a significant danger that churches and ministers who refuse to marry same-sex couples will be subject to litigation. Although Scottish law may seek to defend those who do not wish to conduct same sex marriages, ultimately such matters would be decided by the European Court of Human Rights. Interestingly, in England, a homosexual couple are planning to go to Court to force churches to host gay weddings. Certain cases in the European Court of Human Rights show that the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion does not provide protection when there is conflict between it and other rights. Lillian Ladele, a registrar from Islington, was forced out of her job because she felt unable, for faith reasons, to officiate at civil partnership ceremonies. She requested that other colleagues without a faith objection manage such cases. However, her employer was not willing to accommodate her. In January 2013 the European Court said it could not help Miss Ladele. Aidan O’Neil QC has provided detailed legal advice as to how people working in the public sector could be affected should same-sex marriage be legalised. He advises that civil registrars’ as in the case of Miss Ladele—may be required by their employers to marry same-sex couples, and teachers may be forced to promote same sex marriage, even if this goes against their conscience or their strongly held religious views. The Abortion Act 1967 allows doctors and other health professionals to have an opt-out if they have a conscientious objection to participating in abortions. The same principle should apply to registrars who do not wish to conduct same sex marriage. In the Netherlands, for example, courts have ruled that registrars should not be compelled to solemnise same sex marriages against their consciences, if they were employed as registrars before the new law was introduced. Similarly, there should be a conscientious opt-out for all public sector employees for duties that can be interpreted as promoting same sex marriage. The principle of reasonable accommodation should be required of all public bodies in Scotland in their provision of public services. The Scottish Parliament’s Equal Opportunities Committee should ask the Westminster Government to amend the Equality Act 2010 in order to incorporate the principle that an employer must make reasonable accommodation of the manifestation of religious belief by employees. The Scottish Parliament should not pass the Marriage and Civil Partnerships (Scotland) Bill until such an amendment has been obtained.
The Public Sector Equality Duty requires public authorities, such as local authorities, to have due regard to the need to remove or minimise disadvantages suffered by persons who share a relevant protected characteristic (e.g. sexual orientation) that are connected to that characteristic. According to Aidan O’Neil QC those religious groups that oppose the new definition of marriage are likely to be treated less favourably by public authorities and may be refused contracts, grants or facilities. The Scottish Government claims that churches should be protected under human rights law from losing their charitable status for refusing to marry same-sex couples. But the Government cannot guarantee this, as the Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator has the ultimate say. Virtually all of Britain’s faith-based adoption agencies have been shut down, or have dropped their religious ethos, because of equality laws. Recently a Scottish adoption agency was told to end its pro-marriage policy by officials who say it discriminates against gay couples. This is despite the fact that numerous assurances were made by the Scottish Government that such groups would not be deprived of their charitable status.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Parents should have a right (protected in law) to remove their children from lessons where same-sex marriage is being taught. They should also have a legal right to be informed in advance of when such lessons are going to occur.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Donald Fleming
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

We must put the legislation in place first in order to work towards a truly equal society. Once the legislation is there, it will be easier to challenge inequality and change attitudes through true education, accepting the equal dignity of each person. This bill strikes the right balance through allowing those who do not wish to get involved in same-sex marriage ceremonies to walk quietly away.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

There is simply no doubt in my mind that same sex couples should enjoy all the same rights and status in society as mixed sex couples. Following from that point of view, I cannot accept that any hierarchy of marital unions would be just, nor that it would be just to term some unions as ‘marriage’ and other unions as anything else.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

It seems to me that the couple intending to wed should be in a position to decide whether they would like to have their union conducted by a Humanist celebrant or by a religious celebrant and that their union should enjoy the same status, however I can see a need for some form of regulation of celebrants so that people cannot be wed by just anybody on the spur of the moment.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I agree with the bill. No celebrant should be forced to conduct a wedding ceremony if he or she objects for any reason at all and, so far as I am aware, the bill does not expect any such restriction of choice. It is difficult to imagine anyway, why any couple would want to be wed by a reluctant celebrant. The bill strikes the right balance.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
For those couples who wish to change their civil partnership into marriage, I recommend that administrative procedures be put in place to make this arrangement as quickly and cheaply as possible.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I take the view that it is for the couple to decide on where to hold their big occasion, with due regard for the health and safety of the couple, the registrar and any guests. I don't really hold any strong views here, but some regulation might be necessary.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

I'm not really in favour of civil partnerships in so far as that they allow a hierarchy of unions, as I stated earlier. If people want them, I have no desire to stop them and if religious celebrants want to offer civil partnerships short of marriage, it's

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support everything which promotes equality for the transgender community. Transgender person should be allowed to stay married when obtaining a Gender Recognition Certificate for so long as both parties of the marriage desire, but nothing should be allowed to impede the transgender person from recognition in their true gender.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It is difficult to see from what people need protection. I recommend that people who have concerns about same sex marriage decline to enter into such a relationship. No religious celebrant will be required to conduct a same sex ceremony against their will, nor should they have to. On the other hand, registrars are public servants, paid for by the public purse and any refusal to carry out the public function to which they have been appointed could be considered a breach of contract. Teachers, whether in the private sector or the public sector, should put the rights of their pupils first. All pupils, whether or not they are LGBT, should have the right to be aware of the laws of the country in which they live and should not be withdrawn from lessons in which same sex marriage discussion may arise, just as they are not withdrawn from lessons in which female celebrants are raised even though some denominations still find women priests unpalatable. Similarly, schools and teachers must not be permitted to discriminate against pupils who live in same sex households. There must be no difference here for denomination or non-denominational schools, both of which are paid from the public purse.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I strongly support the principles of the bill. Others disagree and it is their right to do so. The bill will not restrict their right to object, and for so long as they do not use the public purse, e.g., as teachers or registrars, to promote their views, I shall support the principle of their right to hold a wrong opinion. However, for so long as some people oppose same sex marriage, they will find opposition and I shall be stand by that opposition for life.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

This bill is a marvellous step in our progress towards a modern and equal country. I have nothing but praise for the Government for bringing this forward and also for other politicians for their support. Well done Scotland!

Are you responding as...

a private individual

James Forbes
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I support the bill as it would be an important step towards equality for LGBT people in Scotland. However I have some concerns should bill go through in the same way as the one in England and Wales.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I would be very pleased to see this made law. There should be no legal distinction between 'same sex marriages' and 'opposite sex marriages'.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

I personally am not interested in having a religious marriage. Many people are however and I do not see why they should be denied this. I do not want to force any individual person to conduct a marriage of any couple. However, it makes me uncomfortable that we are enshrining in law that religious bodies will be allowed to refuse to conduct 'same sex' marriages where secular bodies are not allowed to do this. In my view religious bodies who wish to conduct a legally recognised ceremony such as marriage should be treated the same as any secular body. I agree with the following statement from the Equality Network: We think that a small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the husband and wife gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither
People should be able to do this easily if they so wish. However I would prefer if civil partnerships still existed and were not automatically converted to marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I would prefer civil partnerships to remain secular.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support this. The current situation where a couple are forced to divorce in order for one partner to obtain a GRC is cruel and unnecessary. However I disagree with the 'spousal veto'. As the partner of a trans person and having supported numerous other partners, I do not feel that it is right or necessary that a spouse should have that control over the legal recognition of their partner's gender. Cisgendered (non-trans) partners’ thoughts and feelings are often disregarded or minimised when it comes to transition. I believe much more support should be available. However this aspect of the bill will not resolve any of that. I agree with the Equality Network's suggestion: We therefore believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

They should shut up and get on with their lives. They will not be required to be part of a same sex marriage. Their opinion is irrelevant.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Mixed-sex civil partnerships should be introduced. The system MUST be truly equal or what is the point of anything?

Are you responding as...
a private individual

Amanda Forde
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I am opposed to any discrimination or inequality in society against any individual, other than what occurs naturally by virtue of our biological differences. Since the beginning of Human existence, a man and a woman have through a natural sexual union, enjoyed the opportunity to produce children. Society has celebrated this sexual union in the act of Marriage, offering stability and structure for family, essential for any growing stable community. As I understand it, current legislation offers exactly the same legal rights and protections for Same Sex Civil Partnerships, as enjoyed by Married couples. The essential and important difference is Marriage is recognised as the human ideal for the producing and raising of children.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Marriage has it's roots in Religious tradition, many celebrants have studied and trained very carefully to fulfil this role as part of the Human narrative. People are of course free to choose a non religious ceremony (civil marriage). Belief without tradi

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

I am opposed to any discrimination or inequality in society against any individual, other that what occurs naturally by virtue of our biological differences. Since the beginning of Human existence, a man and a woman have through a natural sexual union, en

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
Marriage is a celebration and couples should be allowed the freedom to chose a mutually agreeable venue.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Whilst such issues require great sensitivity and compassion, I believe common sense indicates that with the change of gender comes the change in the sexual union and is therefore no longer marriage capable of procreation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Scotland has a rich heritage of traditional beliefs and values, many people right across this nation hold these values and beliefs. I believe from Registrars to Teachers, if they experience a conflict in the exercising of their profession due to their beliefs or religious position, their should be an opt on the grounds of conscience. To penalise them would be unfair and cause unnecessary strife and anguish, resulting in potentially excellent people being barred from certain lines of employment on the grounds of their traditional religious beliefs etc. There should be an opt out without fear or favour clause.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Sadly some of the language surrounding this proposed bill on same sex marriage, has become very polarised and intolerant. Clearly the Bill's main objective is to ensure a more just society, where hatred and discrimination are positively addressed. Many people hold a traditional understanding of marriage (one man, one woman), but would be deeply offended as being described as being discriminatory, or Homophobic. People should always be free to discuss and debate political policy/proposed legislation without fear from opposing positions, or the state.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

Rev Andrew Fothergill
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I consider it would undermine core values in our society. Marriage does not need to be re-defined to provide equalities for all.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage has been understood throughout history as between a man and a woman. The meaning of this has important Christian significance and should not be altered.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Marriage has significant religious meaning. The meaning is quite specific in the present definition and should not be tampered with.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

The word marriage should not be used for same sex relationships. I have no opposition to same sex persons entering into a legal partnership but the word marriage should not be used as it interferes with fundamental Christian values and traditions.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

The word marriage should remain as defined at present as the word has important Christian and religious meanings.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition
I object to the redefinition of the word marriage. I have no objection to civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I am in favour of this if does not mean changing the meaning of the word marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

The word marriage should only apply to ceremonies between a man as a woman.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I fear interference with the freedoms of people who believe in the current definition of marriage. Already people who oppose this bill have been victimised. Same sex couples already have protections of their freedoms and the right to civil partnerships.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I am very concerned at people who oppose this bill will be victimised and potentially have their freedoms affected. They are already being victimised and are not being allowed the core freedom of freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Tis bill is an attack on fundamental family values and will lead to a further breakdown of core values in society. Same sex couples already have the same legal rights and should not be allowed to change the meaning of the word marriage.

Are you responding as...

a private individual am concerned that my views may in future prevent me form my children's panel work.

Richard Fox
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The Bill has undergone a great deal of work to get it to this point, ensuring that a range of views are considered.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It is clearly the next step in terms of creating true equality for all of Scotland's people. Civil partnership was an important step forward at the time, but as society has evolved, it is only right that we move to allow marriage for all...after all, if it's called the same thing, it will not be seen as equal.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

All belief and religious celebrants should be entitled to perform or refuse to perform any form of marriage - be it same-sex or mixed-sex. As they are not state employees, they should not be compelled to perform a marriage ceremony.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Celebrants that work for a religious organisation should be entitled to choose. State employed registrars should perform any marriage ceremony requested.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

It would feel odd to have another ceremony of 'marriage' when my family and friends have already celebrated our relationship. I would hope that it would be a simple administrative procedure to 'upgrade' and that the marriage would be back-dated to the date of our civil partnership ceremony.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Absolutely in favour.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

People should be able to have the kind of ceremony they wish.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

The trans community feels let down by the law in England & Wales requiring a spouse to give permission for gender re-assignment surgery. We must ensure that the law does not provide for a spousal veto, while at the same time allowing for the non-trans spouse to seek a solution which does not require them entering into a same-sex marriage against their will.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

If people are against same-sex marriage, they shouldn't marry someone of the same sex. My relationship has no bearing on someone else's life.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

With regards to the continuation of civil partnership, we cannot move to a situation where we have extra rights for same-sex couples who would have the option of either marriage or CP. Civil Partnership should either be removed and all current CPs 'upgraded' or CP should be available to all couples. It would be absurd to have the LGBT community fighting for equality, and then to be afforded greater rights than mixed sex couples.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Grant Fraser
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

An upgrade to marriages shouldn't be compulsory since some couples prefer civil partnerships to marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Tim Fraser-Granados
27 June 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The Free Church of Scotland is opposed to the Bill. We believe the Scottish Government has pushed this Bill forward despite the views of the majority of people in the first consultation who were opposed to the redefinition of marriage and the introduction of same sex marriage. There is little, if any, evidence that sufficient protections are included in the Bill for those opposed to this legislation. The expression of faith of the LGBT community is used as a justification for introducing same sex marriage, yet the beliefs of those opposed to same sex marriage do not merit protection in the legislation as it stands. In our view this is unacceptable.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

We are completely opposed to the introduction of same sex marriage and the redefinition of marriage for everyone in Scotland. We believe that the traditional, historic definition of marriage as the union of one man with one woman should not be changed. The proposed new definition of marriage is open to interpretation and could pave the way for a further redefinition of marriage in the future. The government is embarking on a social experiment which we believe will cause untold damage to society in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Our concern with belief celebrants is that the definition of belief in the Bill is so wide ranging that associated celebrants may have little or no training or qualifications. This could lead to a further dissolution of the meaning and integrity of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

We are opposed because we do not wish to see the introduction of same sex marriage. There must be protections enshrined in legislation to protect those celebrants, churches and religious bodies that are opposed to same sex marriage. The UK Equality Act needs to be amended to include these protections.
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

We do not wish to see civil partnerships changing to civil marriage. Though the rights afforded are very similar, civil partnerships are not marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

We would not want to see these ceremonies held in a place of worship.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

We are opposed to the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships and believe that there is no evidence of the demand for this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

We have no views on this.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The Bill is lacking in protections for local authority workers, teachers, civil registrars, chaplains and others opposed to same sex marriage on the grounds of religious belief. This has been raised with the Scottish Government on a number of occasions and it is disheartening that they are not listening. We do not believe that existing procedures and UK Employment Law offer enough protection for these workers and recent decisions in the European Court show this to be the case. The Equality Act needs to include a specific reference to protect those workers opposed to same sex marriage on the grounds of religious conviction. It does seem inconsistent that the government is proposing changes to the Equality Act to protect choirmasters, choirs and organists against discrimination but yet registrars, teachers and other workers are afforded no such protection.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Our concerns on the potential impact of the Bill on freedom of speech remain. We welcome that the Lord Advocate’s statement indicates that criticism of same sex marriage or homosexuality is not in itself an offence. However, there are many grey areas e.g. will a church be able to broadcast online a sermon opposing same sex marriage? We believe further clarification is needed on issues surrounding freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

We have deep concerns about the teaching of same sex marriage in schools. The government has made it clear that while parents will still be able to remove their children from sex and religious education classes, if they so choose, they will not be able to remove their children from all classes where same sex marriage might be taught. In our view this is unacceptable and parents should be given this right. We are also concerned about the marginalisation of individual Christians, Christian churches and religious bodies opposed to same sex marriage in terms of, for example, the ability to hold public office and having access to public funds. Furthermore, we do not wish to see same-sex marriage being used as a barometer for a person’s moral outlook and values in job interviews and used subtly to discriminate against or weed out prospective candidates. Given the complete lack of clarity from the Scottish Government on how this legislation will affect individuals who believe marriage is only between a man and a woman, we suggest the legislation is amended and adopts a conscientious objection clause similar to that of the 1967 Abortion Act (section four) with regards to the celebration of same-sex marriages. This would provide indisputable guidance which would be hugely helpful, rather than having to establish precedents through the courts. Given that the legislation has worked well for abortion, another deeply contentious moral issue, it would make sense to make similar provision for same-sex marriage.

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation

Dr John Morrison
Free Church of Scotland
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

It is a sad day for Scotland when the Scottish government is prepared to introduce a Bill which is in direct opposition to the teaching of the Bible and so obviously at variance with our Christian heritage. Same sex 'marriage' is contrary to nature, history and even reason. The average person will continue to regard marriage as between a man and a woman and will view same sex marriage as a sort of pretend marriage. The proposed legislation will have a demeaning and weakening effect upon an institution which contributes so much to society and is vital for its stability. Marriage is already under attack on many fronts and the last thing it needs is for government to deal it another blow by attempting to redefine it completely. The politicians who are behind this Bill or who give it their support will ultimately bear the main responsibility for the evil consequences which will undoubtedly follow if it is finally passed.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

On every moral issue we must be guided by the Bible for as the inspired and infallible Word of God it is the only rule to direct us in what we believe and how we behave. According to the Bible's teaching marriage is a divine institution and by definition is always and only between a man and a woman. Same sex marriage is a contradiction in terms. It is a transgression of the moral law and a sinful perversion of God's order for mankind.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Scotland, in common with the rest of the United Kingdom, is constitutionally a Christian country with the Protestant reformed religion being established by law. In the light of that fact we think it is wrong for the state to effectively countenance each a

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition
As same sex marriage is forbidden by God the state has no right to authorise anyone to conduct it. If the Bill is passed in its present form then the state will be authorising people to solemnise something which God has cursed.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

According to the law of the land civil partnerships are only available for two people of the same sex. Therefore civil partnerships cannot be changed to marriages as marriage according to its divine author is always and only between two people of opposite sex.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

The Marriage (Scotland) Act 2002 requires that in ordinary circumstances civil marriages are to be performed in "approved places" and not simply anywhere that the couple may choose for whatever reason. When a couple marry they make serious promises to one

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

As noted in our response to Q.8, according to the law of the land civil partnerships are always between two people of the same sex. Same sex unions are contrary to the law of God and therefore they should not be registered by anyone.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Our sex is fixed from our conception to our death and cannot be changed by any means, least of all by obtaining a certificate. Rather than trying to alter their God-given gender people should live according to it. Those who are married should stay married to their wife or husband and continue to fulfil the role in that marriage which is appropriate to their sex.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Safeguards for those who object to same sex marriage are found in Section 14 of the Bill (‘Same sex marriage: protection of freedom of expression etc.’). They amount to just seven lines of text and contain nothing specific. The Policy
Memorandum in Section 93 refers to protection against discrimination claims generally for marriage celebrants, others who play an integral part in the religious or belief aspects of the marriage ceremony and persons controlling the use of religious or belief premises. The protection is dependent upon an amendment to the 2010 Equality Act relating to Scotland being passed in the UK Parliament. In no way is this protection to be regarded as an act of generosity or a ‘concession’. The Scottish government has no authorisation to interfere with the beliefs, practices, work and witness of the Christian church, especially given the fact that the Protestant reformed religion is established by law in our country: rather the government should recognise, support and nourish the Christian faith. Protection for other individuals is dealt with in Sections 119-126 of the Memorandum. Again there is little specific detail. The government plans no changes to section 9 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980, which allows parents to withdraw any pupil from any instruction in religious subjects. The government is committed to maintaining the right of parents to withdraw children from specific programmes of sexual health education yet it does not consider that it would be appropriate to allow parents to withdraw children from any lesson where same sex marriage, civil partnerships or homosexuality might be mentioned. The inequity of the present state education system is evident when we read that the government is committed to maintaining the arrangement whereby the faith content of the curriculum in Roman Catholic state-funded schools is decided by the Roman Catholic Church. By contrast if the Bill is passed Protestants, who have no state-funded schools, will have to put up with a curriculum which will include an unbiblical and indeed antichristian approach to marriage. In one case the Memorandum actually specifies that there will be no protection for people opposed to same sex marriage. Section 125 informs us that the Bill contains no provision that civil registrars do not have to solemnise same sex marriage. The one (possible) exemption from the obligations of the new orthodoxy which is specified is fosterers, as seen in Section 126: the Government is considering if it would be helpful to amend existing guidance on fostering to make it clear that a would-be fosterer should not be rejected just because of his or her views on same sex marriage. We regard these safeguards as wholly insufficient and do not believe for a moment that they will be adequate to protect those who believe in real marriage from the efforts which the homosexual lobby will continue to make to suppress all opposition to the normalisation of their perverse and destructive lifestyle.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Going by past experience we have no confidence that those who oppose same sex ‘marriage’ out of their Christian or other convictions will escape penalties in the workplace or in wider society if this legislation is passed. We believe that it will be only a matter of time before such people find themselves charged with a ‘hate’ crime or something similar and brought before the courts when all they have sought to do is follow the teaching of the Bible, maintain the faith of their fathers and uphold the established religion of our land.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
The content of the Bill demonstrates our national descent into immorality and a government completely out of touch with reality. The government may think that it is creating a more 'tolerant' society but no government should tolerate a moral evil which God so clearly hates. God judges nations during time according to whether they have served and honoured Him or not. The Bible issues this plain warning: "the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee [i.e. God] shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted" (Isaiah 60:12). We implore the government to take note and to abandon this wicked Bill.

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation

Rev David M Blunt
Convener
Public Questions, Religion & Morals Committee
Free Church of Scotland (Continuing)
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I strongly feel that the redefinition of marriage is unnecessary and damaging for our society. Marriage throughout history has been between one man and one woman, it seems ludicrous that our nation feels it has the right to redefine this. The proposals are radical, unprecedented and alarming. It is unclear what moral basis the government has for desiring such a change and it is equally unclear whether or not further changes may not arise in the future. What is to stop the introduction of polygamy or incest if certain people desire these things? No-one is stopping same-sex couples from having the right to be part of our society, but why are many in our nation being threatened with the denial of the right to maintain the long held definition of marriage?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am deeply concerned that my right to have freedom of thought, conscience and religion will be taken away by this bill. What will happen to me if I refuse to conduct the marriage of a same sex couple and I am taken to court by them? I am not at all convinced that this bill will protect my human rights, and I believe this bill should be abandoned until all uncertainty is removed. If someone has the right to say that same sex relationships should be called 'marriage' then someone else surely has the right to say that it is not a marriage. How is this bill going to protect the rights of all points of view?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Our democratically elected government has the duty and responsibility of protecting the rights of its citizens. If we are a democratic country then this bill must ensure that under no circumstances will any minister, or teacher, or any other individual be penalised or discriminated against for holding the traditional view of marriage and for acting according to that belief. To impose a new definition of marriage on people who are unable to accept it is nothing short of a dictatorship, and it makes a mockery of any notion of democracy in our nation.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation

Thomas Davis
Free Church of Scotland
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The Free Presbyterian Church has previously submitted responses to the proposal of a Bill and to the consultation document issued by the Scottish Government outlining in detail its principled serious objections to the Bill and its complete rejection of the legitimacy of so-called same sex marriage. We refer the Committee to these responses and to all accompanying documents sent to the Scottish Government, including protestations and public statements of our opposition.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

We are strongly opposed to this measure as illegitimate and irresponsible. We can and will have nothing whatever to do with the legislation and protest that it is in contravention of our rights and privileges as celebrants who have vowed to carry out our functions with respect to marriage in accordance with the terms of the Westminster Confession of Faith (1647) and the Directory for the Public Worship of God, both of which are recognised and expressly identified in statute law and protected by the terms of the Act of Security in the Treaty of Union (1707) to which we appeal as our constitutional protection from any consequences that this proposed Bill may force upon us in our avowed adherence to our ordination vows.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

We do not recognise the legitimacy of what are called "belief celebrants" distinct from religious celebrants and consider the distinctions already created between civil and religious marriage to be illegitimate and erroneous. Marriage is an institution defined and regulated by the Word of God and the solemnisation of marriage implies a recognition of his authority. For those who do not believe in God there can be no true "solemnisation" of marriage, and the registration of marriage by the state is not equal to solemnisation. This applies to so-called "belief celebrants" who, by this proposed legislation wish to be treated distinctly from religion and civil registration. They ought not to be viewed as solemnising marriages as ministers of religion are recognised in law as doing.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition
We oppose the measures proposed as an undue interference with an already suitable arrangement for the registration of marriages in Scotland. We do not believe that the "opt-in" procedures provide sufficient security to ministers of religion authorised under the present legislation and consider the details in the Bill to be utterly inadequate for us to be able to comment on what is eventually to be the new procedure. We respectfully urge the Scottish Parliament not to meddle any further with marriage legislation in Scotland and to recognise formally the security provided in the Treaty of Union for all ministers of religion who are committed to upholding the securities identified in the terms of that treaty in their ordination vows. We do not recognise the legitimacy of any permissive legislation which gives such ministers any right to perform marriages contrary to the terms of the Westminster Confession of Faith and do not consider the State to be empowered to give the ministers of any Church or none that right.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Marriage is the union of one man with one woman for life. Any definition or arrangement which contravenes this is not marriage and no legislation by any government can make it so. Therefore we are opposed to the concept of calling something constructed by the Scottish Government a marriage when it is self-evidently not a marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

We do not wish to take to do with civil registration of marriages and the regulations surrounding it, and do not consider that civil registration is equal to solemnisation of marriage. However if the civil registration of marriage requires a solemnisation ceremony we consider it unwise to propose that such a ceremony could take place anywhere at all. We do not consider the concept of religious premises suggested by the proposed legislation to have great significance in that the Church of God may meet in any place at any time without the prescription of laws and regulation sanctifying any particular building or place. However we would be very strongly opposed to any legislation which made any demands whatever on the ministers of religion or any Church court to permit or give access to any Church property for any purpose other than those for which these buildings are held in trust. We consider interference by the State in this matter to be dangerous and subversive of a very positive relationship hitherto between Church and State relative to property and the use of Church buildings.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition
We are opposed to the concept of civil partnership as presently defined and regulated. We therefore oppose any further extension of the regulations regarding this practice.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

We do not recognise or agree that there can be any legitimate recognition of what is called "transgender recognition" and view the whole issue with dismay and disgust. We consider legislation in this area to be deeply hurtful and offensive to God and to the souls of those who are tempted to think of themselves in any other way than in the gender they were born in. We consider legislation here to be a purely social construct without legitimacy. We are therefore opposed to any legislation which treats people as anything other than what they really are and do not consider a gender recognition certificate to have any substantial meaning in reality. However, if a man and a woman are married they ought to be married for life and so should not be parted by laws of men which are founded on what is a sin and temptation. In order to protect innocent parties in a case of so-called transgender recognition, we consider the law of divorce on the grounds of adultery or wilful and irremediable desertion to be sufficient.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We do not consider the proposed securities for ministers of religion, teachers or registrars to be anywhere near sufficient given the momentous nature of the proposed changes and their moral implications. We have no confidence in Acts of Parliament to secure rights and freedoms for the future as future Parliaments could easily overturn these. We are quite certain that the lobby groups responsible for pushing this proposed legislation on to the agenda of the political class will do their utmost to press for further impositions on all who oppose their life choices on moral grounds and that therefore present securities are extremely vulnerable. We have always asserted that the securities of the Act of Union which have served both Church and Society well for 300 years should be honoured and safe-guarded and that by following these carefully the Scottish Government will prevent a damaging and lasting clash between conscientious and committed Christians and the law of the land.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
Are you responding as...

a celebranta faith/belief-based organisation

David Campbell
Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland
12 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support and welcome the bill. It will be a huge step forward for equality in Scotland, and it balances equality with respect for freedom of religion and freedom of speech. We think that some parts of the bill could still be improved further - see questions 7, 8 and 11 below.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

The Equality Network has campaigned for the introduction of same-sex marriage for many years, because LGBT people across Scotland have told them how important that is for them. It is very important that the bill does not create two different versions of marriage, same-sex marriage and mixed-sex marriage, because that would lead to continued discrimination. The law should treat all marriages the same, regardless of the genders of the spouses. I welcome that the bill achieves that, with the exceptions of the arrangements to allow religious and belief bodies to choose to conduct mixed-sex marriages only, and the outdated rule of law that in a mixed-sex marriage the wife cannot be charged with resetting goods stolen by her husband. The treatment of those issues in the bill is appropriate. I also note that the bill applies unchanged the existing meaning of adultery as evidence for divorce, to same-sex and mixed-sex marriages. Under the existing law, sexual intercourse with a person of the opposite sex is adultery; other forms of sexual infidelity, with a person of the opposite sex or the same sex, do not fall within the existing legal definition of adultery but can form the basis of a divorce under the “unreasonable behaviour” rule. I agree with the approach taken in the bill, which applies the law on adultery and other sexual infidelity equally to same-sex and mixed-sex marriages, and allows divorce on grounds of sexual infidelity for all marriages. In Scotland, there is no consummation requirement for marriage, and so there is no need for the bill to address this for same-sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Humanist celebrants in Scotland can already conduct legally-recognised marriages. The bill clarifies that in the law, and makes clear that other philosophical belief organisations can also apply to conduct marriages. I welcome this.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well. Some religious bodies want to conduct same-sex marriages, including the Quakers, Unitarians, Liberal Jews and others. Other religious bodies, including the larger churches, do not want to conduct same-sex marriages. Religious freedom should apply to both groups, and the bill gets the balance right. I think that the opt-in procedures in the bill are the appropriate way to do this, and, together with the amendments to the Equality Act 2010 which have been agreed with the UK Government, protect the religious freedom of religious bodies and of their members who participate in marriage ceremonies. We think that a small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the "husband and wife" gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

From consulting with many people in civil partnerships, I know that at least half are likely to want to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Some couples who want to change would like to do so by marrying in the usual way, in a civil ceremony or a religious or belief ceremony conducted by an organisation that chooses to conduct same-sex marriages. However, many couples in civil partnerships would prefer to change their civil partnership to a marriage via a simple and inexpensive administrative procedure – they have already had their big ceremony when they had their civil partnership. The bill provides both those ways of changing a civil partnership to a marriage, which we welcome. However, in the bill, couples who are already in a civil partnership can only marry in Scotland if their civil partnership was registered in Scotland. Clearly the lightweight administrative procedure for changing to a marriage can only work with civil partnerships registered here in Scotland, but I see no reason why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should not be allowed to marry in Scotland in the usual way. Not allowing this would cause real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland. They will be unable to change to a marriage unless they first dissolve their civil partnership. But that requires proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down, by living apart for a year. It is very unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry. Even if they return to the country where they registered their civil partnership, if that country does not allow same-sex marriage, they would need to dissolve their civil partnership there in a similar way before coming back to Scotland to marry. The practical result will be that the couple will effectively be barred from marrying. In contrast, same-sex couples from any part of the world who are not in a civil partnership will be allowed come to Scotland to marry, whether or not that marriage would be recognised in their home country. I see no reason why this should not also apply to couples who are already in a civil partnership, and I believe that the bill should be amended to allow this.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This is not specifically an issue for LGBT people, but I welcome the additional flexibility that will be allowed in choosing the location of civil marriage ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I believe that most same-sex couples will prefer a civil marriage, a religious or belief marriage, or a civil partnership conducted by a registrar. However, allowing the registration of civil partnerships in a ceremony conducted by a religious or belief body that chooses to do so, adds a useful extra option. There may be some religious bodies that would not wish to conduct same-sex marriages, but would want to offer religious civil partnership ceremonies to same-sex couples who are their members. There may also be some couples with religious beliefs who would prefer a civil partnership to a marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. In my view, however, a number of amendments are needed to the parts of the bill that deal with gender recognition. As the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. This enables the spouse to effectively “veto” the trans person’s gender recognition, or at least to delay it while the trans person applies for a divorce. If the relationship between the spouses is difficult, the divorce proceedings could take a long time, during which the trans person is unable to access their human right to legal recognition in their true gender. When a trans person applies for gender recognition, they have already been living in their acquired gender for at least two years. Obtaining gender recognition does not therefore change the practical nature of their marriage, which has been same-sex for at least two years. But it does free the trans person from discrimination by bringing their legal status into line with reality. That should be available with or without the spouse’s consent, because it is a matter personal to the trans person, and has no direct effect on their spouse. It is the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition where both spouses have a direct interest, and where a requirement for the consent of the trans person’s spouse would be appropriate. I therefore believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. When a person has been transitioned for a long time, it can be very difficult indeed to obtain all the medical evidence that is required from people who have only been transitioned two years. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. I therefore believe that a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill – this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. I would also like to see the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think that the bill strikes the right balance, and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to. Even where an organisation does agree, individual marriage celebrants within that organisation will be free to opt-out of same-sex marriages, as will any person who plays a part in the religious marriage ceremonies of that organisation (eg the church organist). These are strong protections. It has been proposed by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. I would strongly oppose that. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race. The registrars’ organisation, the Association of Registrars of Scotland, is not calling for an opt-out. The registering of civil partnerships in Scotland by civil registrars has worked well without any such legal opt-out, and we expect the registering of same-sex marriages to work equally well in a similar way. It has also been proposed by some people that teachers should have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. I would strongly oppose this. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, which is equally controversial for some people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech, as section 14 of the bill confirms. People will remain free to disagree with same-sex marriage and to express that disagreement publicly. The Lord Advocate’s guidance published with the bill makes clear that it is not a crime to disagree publicly with same-sex marriage. The case of Smith v. Trafford Housing Trust demonstrates clearly that it is against the law for an employer to take action against an employee simply because they say publicly that they disagree with same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. Apart from the issues mentioned under questions 7, 8 and 11 above, the main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. That has always been a part of the wider Equal Marriage campaign in Scotland. I believe that the same choices – marriage or civil partnership - should be open to all couples regardless of their gender. I therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law, "driven by the need to consider the position on opposite sex civil partnership". I believe that review should start without delay, and, once it is complete, there should be prompt legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally, I note that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and that under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clear discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation, to report by July 2014. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and I strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

DEBORAH FRENCH
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

It is time that Scotland changed the existing laws to let same sex couples marry if the wish and if certain religions want to conduct these services they should not be stopped by law from doing so.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

See previous answers

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I think for those who have already had civil partnerships they should have the option if they want to change these to marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I agree with this as some people want to marry in places which are special to them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Again if this is what people wish they should not be barred by law from doing so
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

If both parties still wish to remain married then this should be allowed as it would then be the same as a same sex marriage and should not automatically mean they are no longer married.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As mentioned before I would not like to see any backward looking/thinking religion from being 'forced' to perform these marriages against their wishes, peoples beliefs however warped should be respected even if they are out of tune with society. I do not believe however that they have the right to dictate to other religions on what is 'right' or 'wrong' and should not be able to lobby against the changes unless they directly affect them which these proposals do not.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe that everyone has the ability to speak out for or against these proposals as long as they accept the outcome of the majority with good 'faith'. Much as I disagree with the majority of the arguments against and some have been particularly vulgar to say the least, I would still fight for the right for them to be expressed. If anything it just shows these small minded people for what they are and is doing them more damage than good in the most part.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Iain Frew
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Everyone should have equal rights regardless of sexual orientation.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
As above. I can't really understand why there is a debate. Love is a human right.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
I had a civil ceremony when I got married and it is on the same footing as a religious ceremony so it should be the same for this.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither
I don't really understand this question - what is opt-in procedures?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Depending on the wishes of the individuals - if they prefer to be married they should be allowed to do so, but if they are happy with a civil partnership, they should be allowed to keep it that way too.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I am in support of anyone of any kind, be it transgender, gay or straight being allowed to be married if they want to be married. I dont think it should matter.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I dont think anyone needs any protection on this issue. At the end of the day, love is a human right and no one is going to be harmed in any way by two people of the same sex or otherwise saying 'I do' in a celebration of love. The government, media and education need to do a better job at educating people on equality and by passing this law, allowing same sex marriages, is one further step towards doing just that - showing that we stand up for equal rights and celebrate them.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Just that I believe its important.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Kirsty Fulton
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Protections from?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Aodhan Gallagher
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I think the inequality here is vile and indefensible. I think that opposition should be called on the bigotry that it is - even if religious. Sanctioned discrimination is still discrimination.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I want to be free to get married in my homeland.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

This is only fair.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I agree with the opt-in for practical reasons, thought I would prefer an opt-out system. As long as all couples have equality then I am happy.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I think all CPs should be upgraded but only because I disagree with the tiered system. I think that civil partners should be free to upgrade or keep their CP but I think that civil partnerships should be stopped and no more given out.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I don't see why religious premises can't be used with consent but I think this is a brilliant idea. Marriage should be a liberal and loving ceremony, not confined.
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I think civil partnerships should be ended.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This is absolutely necessary. There is no justifiable opposition.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Bigotry does not need to be protected. Though people can have their opinions against equality there is no need to enshrine them in legislation and no need for bigoted actions and statements to be protected. Disagreeing with equal marriage does not require we trip over ourselves not to be equal, it means that some people should get perspective and stop their hatred. We need more education on sexuality in general and ESPECIALLY on non-straight sexualities in schools to protect people from themselves as regards bigotry.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There has been no infringement on freedom of speech that I’ve seen. I think there should be louder condemnation of the opponents of equality - protecting your voterbase by failing to stand up for your marginalised constituents is deplorable. It's popular to stand up for women and racial minorities but still not cool to defend LGBT people and you all need to consider why you aren't tearing up headlines in condemning the bigotry of equal marriage opponents.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am exceptionally pleased by the provisions for Humanist ceremonies and the liberalisation of location if agreed with the registrar.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Daniel Arthur Gallagher
30 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Re-defining marriage is not required. LGBT people already have equal rights through civil partnerships. Marriage is not possible between 2 people of the same sex as they cannot procreate.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Same sex couples will not gain any more advantages than they already have through Civil Partnerships. If you start to alter the traditional view on marriage because of a vociferous minority, then that will not be the end of the matter. Other equally vociferous minority groups will appear a few years down the line trying to move the goalposts further. It could be polygamy, or sexual relations and marriage with under 16s or marriage for animals. Who knows. Traditional marriage between 1 man and 1 woman has stood the test of time down through the millennia. Why do you need to force this change through undemocratically? It has not been requested by the majority of subjects in this realm.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I'm not sure what you mean by this question. If you mean "Belief" celebrants are civil registrars and humanist society etc., then they should be able to opt out of performing same sex ceremonies if it is against their private and personal beliefs.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

I'm against same sex marriage, therefore against Celebrants performing such ceremonies. If same sex marriage were to become legal, then celebrants must have an opt-out option on grounds of personal faith or belief (similar to abortion law within the medical profession).

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition
I'm against same sex marriage, therefore no to civil partnerships becoming civil marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

I am opposed to religious celebrants performing civil partnership ceremonies. Religious celebrants should be confined to performing existing religious ceremonies (i.e. marriage). Civil celebrants only, should be allowed to perform civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

If the result is 2 people of the same sex remaining married, then that is not acceptable and they should be divorced.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I do NOT believe under current legislation that any safeguards worthy of the name, can be given to anyone who opposes same sex relationships and same sex marriage. Various people have already lost their jobs through opposition, and it is becoming increasingly difficult to oppose the state in this matter. It smacks of King Henry VIII v Sit Thomas More. No freedom of conscience allowed. So I do not believe the state when it says there will be protection for all who oppose this matter and who openly state their opposition.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is in great danger. It's a bit ironic that an 18th century French Republican - Voltaire - said "I do not agree with what you have to say, but I'll defend to the death your right to say it." This Scottish government and this United Kingdom government are gradually removing freedoms of speech. It matters not if what I say is offensive to others. It's how it is said and arguing your case on your beliefs that is of vital importance.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Do NOT proceed with this bill.
Are you responding as...

a private individual

Roger Gann
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
an LGBT group
a private individual

Chris Garman
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Charlene Gay
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
yes their should no persicution or prosicution in there workplace or public life

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
yes this should be guarded

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Alexander W Gibson
4 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support this bill. I think it is an important step forward for our country and shows that we act on our belief in equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I think it is important that same sex couples be entitled in law to be married by the state in the same way that opposite sex couples can. I also think that the bill allows the many churches and religious bodies to choose to marry opposite sex couples if they wish whilst also respecting the wishes of those who do not wish to do so.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Humanists can already carry out marriages. I think the bill clarifies this and allows other belief celebrants the opportunity to do so.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves. Some religious bodies want to conduct same-sex marriages and others do not. Religious freedom should apply to both groups, and I think the bill gets the balance right. I think that an amendment should be made to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the “husband and wife” gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
I think that the bill should be amended so that people who have a civil partnership registered elsewhere, can convert it to a marriage. Not allowing this would cause real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland. They will be unable to change to a marriage unless they first dissolve their civil partnership. But that requires proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down, by living apart for a year. It is very unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This is a good thing which provides more flexibility for all who wish to marry.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

This provides options and flexibility which is a good thing.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. However, I believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, which is a personal matter, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. I believe that a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill. I also believe that the minimum age for applying for gender recognition should be brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I believe that the bill includes appropriate protections for religious bodies and celebrants who choose not to carry out same sex marriages. I strongly oppose allowing civil registrars the right to opt out of conducting same sex marriage. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. I also believe that teachers should not be allowed to opt out of mentioning same sex marriage. However I know that in Catholic schools this will be a controversial issue as is already the case when discussing contraception.
Teachers in Catholic schools already have a difficult time in teaching children the truth about sex and sexuality.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I don't think the bill will have any effect on freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I believe that mixed sex civil partnership should be introduced to allow complete equality. I also believe that private sector pensions should not be allowed to pay a smaller survivor pension to people in same-sex marriages than they pay to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clear discrimination.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Catriona Gill
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither
I think both should be available

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Paul Gilmour
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

Glasgow City Council welcomes the Bill. Public opinion increasingly supports equal marriage rights for same sex couples. We believe that the Bill as drafted strikes a careful balance in promoting equality for same sex couples whilst at the same time protecting freedom of religion, belief and expression.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

We welcome the introduction of equal marriage rights for same sex couples as an important step forward in promoting equality of opportunity for same sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Glasgow City Council supports these provisions in the Bill which respect people’s belief systems and the value and diversity of bodies authorised to solemnise marriage in Scotland. We would however wish to ensure that the processes which support the establishment of belief ceremonies are robust, well maintained and monitored and ensure a consistent approach. We understand that the qualifying requirements for religious and belief bodies who wish to solemnise marriage may be laid down in regulation and that the Scottish Government will consult separately on these regulations once available. We welcome this further stage of consultation.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

The proposed process is of relevance to the religious or belief bodies who will be directly affected. We have no comment to make.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriage?

Glasgow City Council welcomes this practical proposal which allows people who have entered into a civil partnership to change their civil partnership into a marriage through an administrative process rather than requiring a marriage ceremony. This would require some changes to existing forms and the process should have a fee attached similar to the existing process for a civil partnership or marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Glasgow City Council recognises that there is a benefit in allowing ceremonies to take place in a wider range of locations. There may be a financial impact from carrying out additional health and safety assessments at additional locations, in order to ensure the safety of our staff. There may be a requirement to charge a fee to cover these costs although this could be included in the existing fee. We are currently looking at interim licensing costs for venues until the legislation is passed.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

We welcome the wider choice that this provides for those who wish to enter a civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Glasgow City Council welcomes this positive step to increase equality for the transgender community.

12. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

13. Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

In relation to 12 and 13, Glasgow City Council believes that the legislation as drafted provides an appropriate balance in respecting competing views and protecting freedom of speech.

14. Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Given that civil partnerships are being retained alongside marriage, Glasgow City Council believes that the Scottish Government should consider the inequality of mixed sex couples not being allowed to enter into a civil partnership.

We consider that the existence of two very similar processes (civil partnership and marriage) may be confusing and clear public information will be needed. The uptake of civil partnerships may reduce as same sex marriage becomes established, in which case the continuing need for civil partnerships could be reviewed.

Glasgow City Council
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
The Unitarian Church supports equal marriage and the need for other reforms.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Unitarian celebrants are willing to conduct same sex marriage ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
Generally supportive. Some form of accreditation of celebrants is required with a commitment to maintaining standards of practice.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
It is very important to us that our church can solemnise both opposite sex and same sex marriages. We accept that the liberty of conscience must be recognised and that opt-in procedures are necessary to fulfil reassurances given to the major faith communities.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
In practice there is little observable difference between civil partnerships and civil marriages. It is important that those same sex couples who would choose a religious ceremony have that option.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

Our observation is that the opposition to marriage comes mainly from those who associate it with traditional religious and patriarchal connotations. In fact civil marriage is a contract between two people based on a public commitment. Those who seek a religious or belief ceremony are likely to be comfortable with being married rather than "civil partnered".

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

We welcome this change for the sake of those faced with the current dilemma.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As we stated at 7, we accept that the liberty of conscience must be recognised and that opt-in procedures are necessary to fulfil reassurances given to the major faith communities.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We support protection for freedom of speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

We observe a widespread confusion about the distinction between marriage and civil partnership. The origin of civil partnership was to provide for same-sex couples the same or similar rights and responsibilities as apply to those opposite sex couples who are married. We have observed no difference between a civil (non-religious) marriage ceremony and a civil partnership ceremony.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
a faith/belief local group or congregation

Alastair Moodie
Glasgow Unitarian Church
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Not allowing two people the same rights as enjoyed by wider society is discriminatory. Bigotry wrapped up in religious myth is still bigotry and should therefore be fought.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Adam Goodhall
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I believe this is good and timely legislation that should be enacted as soon as possible.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I believe civil marriage should be offered to all citizens, regardless of gender, as it is a function of the state.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I think this is a good thing - citizens with non-religious beliefs or no beliefs at all should be treated no differently than those with religious beliefs.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I support both allowing celebrants to solemnise same sex and opposite sex marriages, and allowing religious celebrants to opt-in as dictated by their faith and their religious organisations. I strongly disagree that civil registrars should be allowed to opt-out, as they are delivering a state function and should not allow personal prejudices or beliefs to affect the delivery of their role.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I am in support, although I believe civil partnerships should also be open to opposite sex couples, so that all individuals can choose from all options.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

The tying of marriage ceremonies specifically to religious premises outside of civil registrar offices is outdated and unneeded in modern Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

If a couple wishes to remain in or enter into a civil marriage, but have it registered under a particular belief system, I believe they should be allowed to.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Gender (or a change in gender) should have nothing to do with the legal status of a marriage or civil partnership between two people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Individuals who have concerns about same sex marriage should not be allowed to dictate whether they are permitted for all citizens. However, they should also not be forced, if they are part of a particular church or religious order, to provide them, much as Catholics are not forced to marry divorcees. The topic of same sex marriage as a religious ceremony (as opposed to a civil, state function) should be left up to each religious group to decide for themselves over time, with much reflection. But as a state function, it must be accessible to all.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People should be free to speak their minds on any topic. However, they should not use their membership of a particular religious group or any factor about themselves as a foil to discussion - if someone says something that other people believe to be bigoted or homophobic, they should not be surprised when they are criticised. Freedom of speech does not equal freedom from consequence or criticism.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I believe this is good legislation, long overdue. I am heartened that the Scottish Government has taken a lead on this topic.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

David Goodman
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Supportive in general, but not also allowing opposite sex couples to have a civil partnership appears to be an oversight.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

To not be in support would be to instead support the continuing discrimination against the LGBT community.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

To not be in support would be to instead support the state continuing to favour some faiths and belief structures over others.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

I don't know what this means. Plain English should be applied here unless you are only looking for evidence from people from academic of legal backgrounds.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Frankly, it is not clear what this question is asking.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

They should also be allowed in religious premises if approval is granted by the relevant religious institution and local clergy.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
To not support this would be to continue to support discrimination of those in the LGBT community, many of whom may wish for a religious or spiritual element to their acknowledging their union, whether this involves marriage per se.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

To not support this would be to continue to support discrimination against transgender people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Religious institutions and individual clergy should be allowed to opt out of performing ceremonies. This choice should remain with those churches. They should not be legally obliged, not legally forbidden, from performing said ceremonies.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The relevant issue is not that of freedom of speech but of freedom of religion. While steps should be made to end discrimination against the LGBT community being sanctioned by the state, it is important that freedom of religion is protected. These are both human rights issues. Churches, meaning both institutions and individual clergy, should therefore have the choice to conduct same gender marriage ceremonies or not, and the general public will decide whether or not said churches should have their support. The state should not attempt to legislate on behalf of any churches. However, churches should be held to account to the same degree as private individuals in terms of human rights, hate crimes, etc.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

While I admire the Scottish Parliament's focus of consultation on this matter, particularly in comparison to the Westminster parliament rushing through legislation that has had adequate consultation attached, it seems that this consultation and the number of individual steps involved have been excessive and have caused unnecessary delay to this legislation being implemented. Until it is implemented, we in Scotland continue to discriminate in a way that other countries are no longer doing.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jimmy Gordon
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Caroline Gorman
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I am a transgendered person and total equality in everything is important.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Same sex couples can be far more loyal to their commitment to a partnership than those who marry opposite sex at a whim to then go through a chain of divorces.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I often hear religious leaders claiming that marriage is only something they can allow and carry out, and that their views and beliefs should be above any consideration. Well marriage isn't wholly owned by any religion, but by people who support that ideal of marriage commitment what ever the circumstances.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I have no issue with this. If people want a marriage that isn't backed by any religion that is fine with me, even no matter what genders make up that loving committed couple.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

This should be down to the individuals concerned if they want to have their CP's turned into "same sex marriages". Some may still prefer to have a marriage with no religious solemnising element. You need to ask those involved at the time.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

You should be able to get married in any "public" building in my opinion .. I still have my doubts about it being done in private places and homes where one of the couple maybe under duress, as in arranged marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

I would have thought those wanting to have a religious / belief based ceremony would want to have it in an arena where they would normally practice that religion or belief.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I fully support this. I am waiting for the UK law to kick in so that I can do that. My partner and I have been married for nearly 31 years and we are still together. I transitioned 8 years ago and had surgery 5 1/2 years ago. This has changed nothing for us. Sadly the British parliament has made that embarrassingly difficult by requiring the partner to supply written consent when I apply for a GRC. This is a nonsense, if the non trans partner in a relationship had any objections to being married to that trans person then she would have terminated that marriage, as about 92% ( from my experience in support groups ) still do.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Most of the objections are on purely religious grounds. If they don't want a same sex marriage, they don't have to have one. I am a Christian .. I have no objections to any one of another faith getting married across religious groups, or across religious groups and genders. People who have a belief that a certain books proclamations are the truth and not a work of fiction that people have started to believe is fact from a work of fiction are clearly mislead by their leaders or that possible work of fiction book. The Christian bible has only been in existence for a little over 2000 years, other religious books go back a lot further .. how ever none are supported by hard provable fact rather than and scientific evidence.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I am all for "freedom of speech" .. but with that freedom should come respect for each others views, especially if based on misguided, unprovable religious dogma.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
I would hope that the Scottish Parliament are at least as brave on the Bill as the British Parliament and House of Lords were, on the Trans issues they should be taking representation from organized bodies that truly support those people as to what would be right and wrong.

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group
a private individual
a Transsexual woman

Sarah Gosling
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

Belief in some imaginary being, force, or whatever should not be considered legitimate grounds for discrimination. Religious or other beliefs should not be considered reasons for exemption from equality legislation.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Regardless of equal marriage legislation it is appalling that married transexual people should have to choose between ending a marriage or giving up their right to legal recognition of their true gender. On the same topic I find it very unsatisfactory that there should be a register of transexual people who have exercised their rights to amend their birth certificates.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People who have 'concerns' about same sex marriage should be protected in the same way and to the same extent that we would regard it proper to protect those who believe wives should be the property of their husbands or that white people should not marry black people. If people want to discriminate against others because of what it says in some ancient book of creation myths or because of ignorance or prejudice then it is not the place of wider society to 'protect' them in this view. If two people want to get married then it their business and their's alone. What anyone else might think of it is irrelevant.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Natalie Graham
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I'm concerned about the nature of protections for those who have concerns about same sex marriage. While I do not wish to force my beliefs on them in the same way they have forced theirs on me, I would not expect the Catholic Church to be forced to conduct same sex marriages. I would, however, expect to see a teacher who espoused the view in the classroom that same sex marriage was "evil" should be investigated under the usual disciplinary procedure and possibility terminated is that was considered the best course. Being Gay is neither criminal nor wrong so to with same sex marriage neither criminal nor wrong. If the issue were "Black" rather than "Gay" you wouldn't even be asking this question here. Substitute the word "Black or Muslim" in your deliberations and ask the same questions of yourselves how you would frame protections for racists. This is exactly the same.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Michael Granados
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
This is a vital step towards Scotland becoming a more equal society.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
It is embarrassing that for so long it has been acceptable to deny a significant proportion of Scottish citizens the right to marry if they choose. This is an important step forward and should not be blocked. This has been a long time coming and I will be proud to live somewhere that has same sex marriage if the bill is passed.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
I think it is great that Humanist celebrants can legally conduct marriages in Scotland and that other groups should be welcomed if their beliefs do not incite hate or violence.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
It is a shame that there are celebrants who would not want to solemnise same sex marriages, but I respect their choice and it is good that the bill allows for this considering the controversy. I believe that civil registrars should not be given the option to opt in or out as their role is on behalf of the state.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
This should be a straightforward and inexpensive process for couples that wish to convert their civil partnership to marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

I think this is nice. Why not allow people to marry in locations of their choice? It would also be a boost for the hospitality industry.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

There are a number of religious groups who wish to carry out same sex marriages and religious couples who wish to marry in a religious space. If all agree why should they be denied this right. Liberal Judaism has been in favour of this for a long time.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This should be up to the individual and going through this process is probably difficult enough without having to enter into a legal battle around their marriage status.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The bill seems to allow people to opt out and this offers enough protection. I don't feel that as a society we should go much further than this and condone the homophobia that is still rife in society. We should be looking at how to protect the rights of LGBT citizens who still face so much discrimination today. If this question was rephrased in terms of race or religion people would be up in arms.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Teachers should not have the right not to talk about same sex marriage if asked. This is perpetuating discrimination in an important role which is shaping the future of Scottish society.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Liz Green
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

if people in civil partnerships wish to make their union a marriage

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
you have the right of freedom of speech, but not the right to discriminate. No one should be forced to agree with it and no religious body should be made to agree with it or hold same sex marriages

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

already have

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

no

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Shaun Greig
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I fully support the Bill - it is the right time for it to be passed through the Scottish Parliament in the name of Equality For All. Firstly, I wonder why the Scottish Parliament has chosen to exclude mixed-sex Civil Partnerships with this Bill when this was one of the core statements at the outset. Is this being done because Westminster chose not to include it? If so, it is extremely disappointing for those couples who were expecting a part of the Bill to include same-sex Civil Partnerships as an outcome of one of the original core concepts of the Bill. What I am also very concerned about is the fact that, with the amendment in respect of Gender Recognition Act of 2004, where a couple is married and where one is seeking to be gender re-assigned and one of them objects to the granting of a Gender Recognition Certificate, the objecting spouse must not be allowed to hinder the progress of the other one in gaining a Gender Recognition Certificate [GRC]. If the gender change is likely to be the cause for divorce, the one seeking a GRC must not be prevented from doing so by their spouse. Let the one obtain a GRC first and then let the other seek a divorce on those grounds. It would be inconceivable that the introduction of the Bill should give rise to more problems for the person seeking a GRC - this safeguard needs to be built into the Bill firmly in the strongest terms and the text amended to give the trans-gender person rights over his or her own status without interference from the spouse in an effort to prevent this being granted. That is a provision which must be within the Bill.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I think that same-sex couples should have the same rights to Marriage or Civil Partnership those who are in different-sex relationships. If people have a religious objection to same-sex Marriage or to same-sex Civil Partnership they are free to choose not to do so. If a religious body or a belief body is willing to conduct same-sex marriages and if there are ministers of religion and of belief who are willing to conduct same sex marriages, the should be allowed to do so. They should not be prevented from doing so and more than they or we would force anyone to conduct such marriages against their conscience. This is a matter of equality for all people without exception and will end once and for all the discrimination which people are suffering at the moment.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support
It is my opinion that belief celebrants should be on the same footing as their counterparts in religious organisations. I would also add that, where there is a religious celebrant who is an Independent celebrant of a Faith tradition, but not of a particular

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

This is a key issue and one which must be considered most carefully and have the necessary safeguards enshrined in the language and provisions of the Bill. Celebrants who are willing to solemnise same-sex marriages should be authorised to do so in addition to solemnising opposite-sex marriage. If they are of a Faith tradition which does not endorse the solemnisation of same-sex marriages but feel personally that they would be willing to do so, then there is likely to be an issue between the celebrant concerned and his or her particular faith tradition. This may be decided by the Executive Body of the Faith tradition concerned. There needs to be a protection in law put into place for such celebrants who wish to perform same-sex Marriages so that they may "opt-in" without being subjected to any form of penalisation. Conversely, there should be protections built into the Bill for those celebrants and Faith communities who do NOT wish to solemnise same-sex Marriages or Civil Partnerships so that they are not censured or subjected to any form of persecution or coercion. In either case, the views of one group [pro Same-Sex Marriage] should not be allowed to override the views of others groups who are opposed to Same-Sex Marriage and to be imposed upon them against their wishes. This applies both ways - neither group must be allowed to dominate the debate and there should be a completely FREE CHOICE without prejudice for different communities and congregations to "Opt-In" or to "Opt-Out" according to their choices.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

If couples who have previously had a Civil Partnership wish to convert this into a Marriage they should be allowed to do so. Conversely, the same should apply to couples who have had a Marriage previously to be able to convert this into a Civil Partnership if they so wish. Both states should carry equal standing both Lawfully and Socially as well as by convention or custom. In both instances, costs to make this conversion should be kept to a minimum and not seek to make a profit at the couples’ expense! I think that all Civil Partnership and/or Marriages wherever they have taken place [both within the UK and outwith the UK] and have been recognised should also be recognised and accepted in Scotland by Scottish Law.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
I believe that Civil Marriage ceremonies should be allowed to take place in any venue of the couples’ choice which has been approved and registered as a premises for such ceremonies. Where these premises may belong to a Church or other Faith community, th

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

If couples wish to have a religious or belief registration of Civil Partnerships they should be allowed to do so. I see no barrier to this to be implemented. Many people have a civil marriage followed by a religious or faith Blessing. To allow the religious and belief registration of Civil Partnerships would eliminate the need for two separate ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I am very concerned about is the fact that, with the amendment in respect of Gender Recognition Act of 2004, where a couple is married and where one is seeking to be gender re-assigned and one of them objects to the granting of a Gender Recognition Certificate, the objecting spouse must not be allowed to hinder the progress of the other one in gaining a Gender Recognition Certificate [GRC]. If the gender change is likely to be the cause for divorce, the one seeking a GRC must not be prevented from doing so by their spouse. Let the one obtain a GRC first and then let the other seek a divorce on those grounds. It would be inconceivable that the introduction of the Bill should give rise to more problems for the person seeking a GRC - this safeguard needs to be built into the Bill firmly in the strongest terms and the text amended to give the trans-gender person rights over his or her own status without interference from the spouse in an effort to prevent this being granted. For those who wish to remain married after having obtained a full Gender Recognition Certificate it should be equally possible for this to be written into the Bill as Law which protects each of the parties who are in the marriage. In addition - there should be a "fast track" procedure put into place at the earliest possible time for those people who have already made the transition and are now gender re-assigned.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The Bill, as it has been formulated already, has been assiduous in providing the necessary protections for those in society who have concerns about Same-Sex Marriage. There should be no doubt about this nor should people who have concerns fear for themselves or for the future.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
All members of society have the right to freedom of speech and this should continue, provided that what is said does NOT incite hatred or prejudice or provoke acts of violence against those of the opposite persuasion. We may not all agree but we will have to agree to disagree! The rights to freedom of speech must continue to be protected by Law as they are now.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The introduction of this Bill will be a landmark in the history of Scotland. It will provide a better opportunity for a more equal society and will provide a means to put right the many wrongs which have been perpetrated in the past against people who have been persecuted for their gender status.

Are you responding as...

an academica private individual

Dr Rebekah Gronowski
23 August 2013
MARRIAGE & CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM GUSRC

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
We at the GUSRC are in support of the bill as it will be a step forward in promoting equality with respect for freedom of religion and freedom of speech.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that the same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
The GUSRC fully support the introduction of same sex marriage as we believe that it is an important step in reducing discrimination.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
There ought to be nothing in law that sets religious belief as more valuable than other belief systems

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including opt-in procedures)?
In support
We support that religious organisations should opt in to same sex marriage and we believe that the bill gets the balance right.

Within this there are two issues: organisation and individual opt-in
We support the freedom of individuals within organisations to decide if they want to officiate same sex marriage. But understand that this may make individuals in an organisation feel uncomfortable and singled out for their decision either way. The long-term goal ought to compel through social change religious organisations to accept same-sex marriage. But for the mean time making opt in on an organisational basis in an acceptable concession in view of other gains.

Opt in is a sufficient way of protecting the religious freedom of organisations who don't want to officiate same sex marriage. But as above the goal ought to be to get them to change with this time.
We believe that there should be an amendment made to Section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony for mixed couples who would prefer that form. This is important for mixed-sex couples who are intersex or trans. Religious bodies that wish to always use the ‘husband and wife’ gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

The GUSRC supports this however we see no reason why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere cannot get married in Scotland. Not allowing this could cause problems for couples who had moved abroad and then moved to Scotland who then would have to dissolve their civil partnership first before their marrying again in Scotland. Even if couples were in a civil partnership and returned to the country where they registered, if they did not allow same-sex marriage then they would need to dissolve their partnership before they were allowed to marry. In contrast, any couple from anywhere in the world would be allowed to marry in Scotland if they were not already in a civil partnership. It is unfair to discriminate against those who are already in a civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and the registrar?

We support the choice given for people to hold their civil marriage ceremony wherever they choose.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

We believe that this gives an appropriate extra option particularly for same-sex couples who are maybe members of catholic church which doesn’t support same sex marriage so would not opt in but may opt in to a religious civil ceremony.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

We support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
We believe that the bill strikes the right balance. We however, don’t believe that civil registrars should be given an opportunity to opt-out as they are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state.

For religious organisations they are currently given a lot of protection in terms of opting in as an organisation and then individuals opting out if they don’t agree with it.

We strongly oppose the proposal that teachers should be able to opt-out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil were to ask about it. We believe this is not necessary as teachers are there to teach fact and not their personal opinion.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech

We believe strongly in freedom of speech and welcome people criticising same-sex marriage if they want. Hate speech regarding LGBT people is already covered in law.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

GUSRC are fully supportive of the bill as we believe that it is a step in the right direction for equality. However, it does not introduce full equal marriage. The main thing missing from the bill is the mixed-sex civil partnerships. That has always been a part of the wider Equal Marriage campaign in Scotland. We believe that the same choices – marriage or civil partnership- should be open to all couples regardless of gender.

GUSRC
4 September 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM MARY AND JOHN GUSTERSON

As a Christian, I'm disappointed by the SNP, the only party we, my husband and family voted for, as showing our country. And I can't vote for you again, as your doing things against the Christian faith, by the same sex marriage in church's. I'm not hearing about you doing the same about other faith's. Look how many Christians do have gone to court and lost, because they're not going against there belief, you known about those case, and in year to come, there will be much more. God told us in this land, a marriage between a man and woman, was his way and thats the right way, and has been all that year, and look how well that worked.
Christian liberty in our country, stands for nothing with you. I never thought I'd live to see this happen. When I think of Donald's Christian stewardship, of our old soul, I would think of what is happening to his party.

You as a party have not kept your promises to defend civil liberty. This I believe will be one of the biggest threats to religious freedom in my lifetime.

I pray that your eyes will be open to what you are doing to the Christian faith, as a Christian, as a Christian. I'm heartened to what's happening.

Mary and John Gusterson
29 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Same sex marriage is undesirable. It gives no new rights to same sex couples, other than to call their relationship a marriage. However it will cause problems to the millions of people who consider marriage should only be between a man and a woman. These include people who hold such views for religious reasons as is the case for Christians and Muslims taking the traditional view as expressed in their scriptures. Such views are not going to go away. The numbers of such people far exceed the numbers of gay people who wish to be married. Everyone can live with the present system of Civil Partnerships. I know no one who objects to them. However I know many people who oppose gay marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As a parent, I think parents should have a right to withdraw primary school children about lessons on marriage after the law is changed. They should also have a right to limit the books and other material that their children see. Teachers with conscientious objection should not be required to teach about gay marriage. As a Civil Servant I am concerned that holding traditional views on marriage will be a barrier to recruitment or promotion in the public service. It has been reported in the press that this has already occurred in some cases. As a trustee of a church I am concerned that charitable status should not be at risk for charities supporting the traditional view of marriage. The legislation should be amended to give freedom of conscience to individuals in employment and groups who are not in agreement with same sex marriage. This would be similar to the protection in the abortion legislation. I am also concerned that court cases under equality legislation may force churches and mosques against their will to either conduct same sex marriage or cease doing all marriages. I am concerned that holding the traditional view of marriage should not become a barrier to fostering or adopting children.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech will be at risk because people expressing opinions against same sex marriage may be at risk, or think themselves at risk, of prosecution under equality or anti hate legislation.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

M. Hadfield
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ismar Haga
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Although I feel that some parts of the bill could still be improved further, I strongly support and welcome the bill because it will be a major step forward for equality in Scotland - and it balances equality with respect for freedom of religion and freedom of speech.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

To avoid continued discrimination, it is very important that the bill does NOT create two different versions of marriage: same-sex marriage and mixed-sex marriage. The law should treat all marriages the same, regardless of the genders of the spouses. I am pleased that the bill achieves that, with the exceptions of the arrangements to allow religious and belief bodies to choose to conduct mixed-sex marriages only and the outdated rule of law that in a mixed-sex marriage the wife cannot be charged with resetting goods stolen by her husband. The treatment of those issues in the bill is appropriate. I am also pleased that the bill applies, unchanged, the existing meaning of adultery as evidence for divorce to same-sex and mixed-sex marriages. Under the existing law, sexual intercourse with a person of the opposite sex is adultery, while other forms of sexual infidelity, with a person of the opposite sex or the same sex, do not fall within the existing legal definition of adultery but can form the basis of a divorce under the property unreasonable behaviour rule. I agree with the approach taken in the bill, which 1) applies the law on adultery and other sexual infidelity equally to same-sex and mixed-sex marriages and 2) allows divorce on grounds of sexual infidelity for all marriages. Because there is no consummation requirement for marriage in Scotland, there is no need for the bill to address this for same-sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Humanist celebrants in Scotland can already conduct legally-recognised marriages. I am pleased that the bill clarifies that in the law and makes clear that other philosophical belief organisations can also apply to conduct marriages.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support
I agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages or same-sex marriages as well. Some religious bodies want to conduct same-sex marriages, including the Quakers, Unitarians, Liberal Jews and others. Other religious bodies, including the larger churches, do not want to conduct same-sex marriages. Religious freedom should apply to both groups, and the bill gets the balance right. I believe that the opt-in procedures in the bill are the appropriate way to do this. Together with the amendments to the Equality Act 2010, which have been agreed with the UK Government, they would protect the religious freedom of religious bodies and of their members who participate in marriage ceremonies. On the other hand, I would like to see a small amendment to section 11(2) of the bill in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is especially important for mixed-sex couples where one partner, or both, is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the husband and wife-gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

From my discussions with many people in civil partnerships, I know that at least half are likely to want to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Some couples who want to change would like to do so by marrying in the usual way, in a civil ceremony or a religious or belief ceremony conducted by an organisation that chooses to conduct same-sex marriages. However, many couples in civil partnerships would prefer to change their civil partnership to a marriage via a simple and inexpensive administrative procedure (in many cases, they have already had their big ceremony when they had their civil partnership). I am pleased that the bill provides both those ways of changing a civil partnership to a marriage. However, in the bill, couples who are already in a civil partnership can only marry in Scotland if their civil partnership was registered in Scotland. Clearly the lightweight administrative procedure for changing to a marriage can only work with civil partnerships registered here in Scotland, but I see no reason at all why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should not be allowed to marry in Scotland in the usual way. Not allowing this would cause real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland. They would be unable to change to a marriage unless they first dissolve their civil partnership, which would require proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down by living apart for a year. It is very unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry. Even if they return to the country where they registered their civil partnership, if that country does not allow same-sex marriage, they would need to dissolve their civil partnership there in a similar way before coming back to Scotland to marry. The practical result will be that the couple will effectively be barred from marrying. In contrast, same-sex couples from any part of the world who are not in a civil partnership would be allowed come to Scotland to marry, whether or not that marriage would be recognised in their home country. I believe that this should also apply to couples who are already in a civil partnership, and the bill should be amended to allow this.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Although not specifically an issue for LGBT people, I would like to see additional flexibility allowed in choosing the location of civil marriage ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I believe that most same-sex couples would prefer a civil marriage, a religious or belief marriage, or a civil partnership conducted by a registrar. However, allowing the registration of civil partnerships in a ceremony conducted by a religious or belief body that chooses to do so adds a useful extra option. There might be some religious bodies that would not wish to conduct same-sex marriages but would want to offer religious civil partnership ceremonies to same-sex couples who are their members. There may also be some couples with religious beliefs who would prefer a civil partnership to a marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. In my opinion, however, a number of amendments are needed to the parts of the bill that deal with gender recognition. As the bill stands, a married person would be required to obtain the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. This enables the spouse to effectively veto the trans person’s gender recognition or at least to delay it while the trans person applies for a divorce. If the relationship between the spouses is difficult, the divorce proceedings could take a long time, during which the trans person would be unable to access their human right to legal recognition in their true gender. When a trans person applies for gender recognition, they have already been living in their acquired gender for at least two years. Obtaining gender recognition does not therefore change the practical nature of their marriage, which has been same-sex for at least two years. However, it does free the trans person from discrimination by bringing their legal status into line with reality. That should be available, with or without the spouse’s consent, because it is a matter personal to the trans person and has no direct effect on their spouse. It is the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition where both spouses have a direct interest and where a requirement for the consent of the trans person’s spouse would be appropriate. I therefore believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to... be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances if they wished to end the marriage. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. When a person has been transitioned for a long time, compared with people who have only been transitioned two years, it can be very difficult indeed to obtain all the medical evidence that is required. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. I would therefore like to see a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people added to the bill – this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. I would also like to see the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, which is 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I feel that the bill strikes the right balance and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to do so. Even where an organisation does agree, individual marriage celebrants within that organisation will be free to opt-out of conducting same-sex marriages, as will any person who plays a part in the religious marriage ceremonies of that organisation (e.g., the church organist). These are strong protections. I strongly oppose the proposal by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore, an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc.) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race. Furthermore, the registrars’ organisation, the Association of Registrars of Scotland, is not calling for an opt-out. The registering of civil partnerships in Scotland by civil registrars has worked well without any such legal opt-out, and I expect the registering of same-sex marriages to work equally well in a similar way. I also strongly oppose the proposal by some people that: 1) teachers should have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class and 2) parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available for lessons where divorce is mentioned, something that is equally controversial for some people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill is indeed a major step forward for equality, but it does not introduce FULL equal marriage. Apart from the issues mentioned under questions 7, 8 and 11 above, the main feature missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. That has always been a part of the wider Equal Marriage campaign in Scotland. I wholeheartedly believe that the same choices – marriage or civil partnership - should be open to all couples, regardless of their gender. I am delighted with the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June, 2013, to conduct a review of civil partnership law driven by the need to consider the position on opposite sex civil partnership. I believe that review should start without delay, and, once it is complete, there should be prompt legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples, regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally, I wish to point out that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and that under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clearly discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation to be reported by July, 2014. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and I strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech, as section 14 of the bill confirms. People will remain free to disagree with same-sex marriage and to express that disagreement publicly. The Lord Advocate’s guidance published with the bill makes clear that it is not a crime to disagree publicly with same-sex marriage. The case of Smith v. Trafford Housing Trust demonstrates clearly that it is against the law for an employer to take action against an employee simply because they say publicly that they disagree with same-sex marriage.

Are you responding as...

a private individual, person of faith and member of the LGBT community

Linda Haggerstone
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I am currently in a civil partnership, and when these were introduced in 2005 I felt that they would provide sufficient equality. However I now think that the "separate but equal" approach has not worked. There are still a large number of goods and service providers who do not acknowledge civil partnership - for example, on application forms, the question Marital Status often still only allows Single / Married / Divorced / Widowed, with no option for Civil Partner.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I welcome the "conversion" approach with the backdating of accrued rights to the date of the Civil Partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The whole point of equality legislation is undermined if individuals are allowed to pick and choose which bits they will abide by. For example, registrars have not needed "protection" from having to marry divorcees or mixed race couples, despite there being biblical grounds for objecting to these.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Tim Hall
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I am strongly for the introduction of same sex marriage. LGBT people in Scotland need to be stood up for by their own government before we can move forward when working towards equality. The law needs to put everyone on the same footing, how can discrimination in schools, workplaces, etc be ended if it exists within the Law?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Amy Denise Halliday
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I do not believe that those who have concerns have anything to worry about. Love is love and if two men or two women want to get married then they should be allowed to do so.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There is a fine line between freedom of speech and hate speech. I believe that everyone should be able to have the opportunity to say what they believe in, but not to drag it down to blaming a race or a sex or a sexuality for anything that appears to be wrong in society. That is when it becomes hate speech, and that's where I draw the line.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I would just hope that rational minds are the ones deciding on this issue and not being dragged to the side of the loud religious right on the issue. It's going to affect all gay men and women no matter their own religion and I would hope that notion is taken into consideration.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Anthony Harkinsson
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jennifer Harris
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support the bill, which I believe to be well overdue. It will be a significant step forward for equality in Scotland, and it balances equality with respect for freedom of religion and freedom of speech.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Even though the legal rights and responsibilities of civil partnership and marriage are almost identical, the two are not perceived as of equal status and value. Civil partnership is seen as a legal contract, while marriage is seen by many as the gold standard for celebrating the joy of love and commitment. Marriage is very widely understood for its symbolism and its personal, community, and in some cases, religious significance. Very few people propose to their partner by asking “Will you civil partner me?” Civil partnership just does not have the same meaning.

The current ban on same-sex couples marrying is discriminatory and unacceptable. I personally am in a long-term, committed relationship with someone of the same-sex who I love very deeply, and whom I will spend the rest of my life. We should have the same rights as heterosexual couples to celebrate this commitment through marriage if we chose. That would be equality. Civil partnership was invented specifically to deny same-sex couples access to marriage, and is seen by many same-sex couples as a second-class status. Put simply, equality means making the same choices available to all. If mixed-race couples were denied the opportunity to marry, and instead offered civil partnership with the same legal effects, that would readily be seen as unacceptable racist discrimination. The ban on same-sex couples marrying is equally unacceptable. It is very important that the bill does not create two different versions of marriage, same-sex marriage and heterosexual marriage, because that would lead to continued discrimination. The law should treat all marriages the same, regardless of the genders of the spouses.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I would like the opportunity for Humanist celebrants in Scotland to be given the same respect and legal footing as religious celebrants. As a modern, secular society Scotland to aim for this.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well. Some religious bodies want to conduct same-sex marriages, other religious bodies, including the larger churches, do not want to conduct same-sex marriages. Religious freedom should apply to both groups, and the bill gets the balance right. I think that the opt-in procedures in the bill are the appropriate way to do this.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Paula Harris
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM ERIC HART

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

As a gay man I know what it was to grow up as the focus of other people's and society's jokes. I was even against the law for many years when a young man. All for something that was no choice of mine. I didn't choose to be a man and I didn't choose to be gay. But I wouldn't change my life an iota. Granting equal marriage to all people is yet another major step in the process of redressing the balance of poor treatment from society for so many years.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Very strongly in favour of the ability for all people to be married or enter into civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

I don't understand this question fully enough to answer. I firmly believe that churches should not have an opt-out clause under any circumstances. Granting such a thing is to grant one of the largest organisations in the country the right to discriminate.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

As per previous answer the Church should not be allowed to opt out. This is simply granting their right to discriminate.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

One or the other for all people.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

Of course. Marriage, Civil Partnership, Gay Marriage. All should be possible anywhere. Granting this will not make the sky fall in.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I need explanations on this - what are you asking? But I support all organisations being able to conduct marriages and civil partnerships with no opt outs.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Why not as long as it suit the parties involved.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People who oppose gays getting married say that letting gays get married will damage the institution. Well, the straight divorce rate is hardly a strength for straight marriage. So the institution is damaged by straights already. Gay couldn't make it any worse.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Eric Hart
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

I'm glad that the current administration has brought forward this important legislation which will help take Scotland into the 21st century. I disagree with opponents who say they have no mandate for this. Any elected Government would have a blanket mandate to bring forward legislation that promotes fairness and equality for all.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I prefer to call it "Equal Marriage" but otherwise I am just fine with it.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I understand there is a part of the bill that should be amended to allow those conducting the ceremony to use gendered or non gendered language. So that those who wish to conduct mixed sex ceremonies can continue to use 'Husband & Wife' etc. as laid out by the Equality Network.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I don't think a spouse should be allowed to 'Veto' the gender recognition of their partner, so this needs changed. It should be simpler for people who have been trans gendered for longer periods of time to gain legal recognition.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the bill provides adequate protection for those that wish to opt out of conducting same sex marriages, as well as protecting those that wish to conduct them.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I do believe it is right and fair to allow people the right to speak out against Same Sex Marriages, except where that person is employed by the people of Scotland. Teachers, for example, should not be allowed to criticise same sex couples to their classes, as this could lead to a child with same sex parents to be bullied. I don't think this should be legislated against, however guidance would have to be issued by the Education Minister that teachers should only refer to marriage as being between two consenting adults who love each other.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

David Hearty
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a public body

Louise Heggie
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I am 100% in support of same sex marriage, I have many friends who are either gay or bi, and I love them for who they are! I myself is straight, but what baffles me is why this has taken so long to be proposed and introduced. Love is love, what is the difference whether its a man who loves a man, or a women who loves a women or simply a man and a women. What's the difference, we are all human and we all deserve to be loved!! I was at a free comedy gig outside the Russian Consulate, to support our Russian friends over the issue of equality which occurred yesterday (22nd of August 2013) Love is Love!! As a 19yr old Catholic am glad the church is moving forward, as at the end of the day, we are just humans trying to be happy, where is the harm??

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

I am a Catholic, but I don't believe this is a church issue, I support equal marriage and equality!!! If they don't like it, then what's the problem. The Church (i.e all religions) message is to love - well they aint be doing their job if they oppose

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I support Equal Marriages - It's simple!!!

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Their marriage and the church should respect that, if they are religious and want to get marry in their church then why stop this. WE are moving forward, for a long time mixed marriages such as the colour of your skin was frowned upon, that is just crazy!
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

I think in the end all religions will accept same sex marriages, and if they look in the bible, they will know that some of the stuff makes no sense in modern day society. The bible is mainly stories filled with Morales on how to lead a good life. I.e love everyone and help make this world a better peaceful place

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

A student who believes in world peace and love for all

Roisin Henderson
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I think this bill is much better than any other bill I've seen regarding same sex marriage. Scotland is going for marriage equality for everyone LGBT and straight people. In my opinion, that is the most important fact here.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I honestly do not understand why people have a problem with this. I am a lesbian myself, and I can definitely it's not a choice. Personally, I am not religious, but just being able to say "we are married" when the right time comes would make me really del

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I don't really understand the question. Sorry :/

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

If a same sex couple wants to get married in a religious setting, then they should be allowed. Personally, I'm not religious, but other people have different beliefs.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I just want us all to have the same opportunities as human beings. Anyone should be able to choose a civil partnership, or a marriage. Some people prefer to call it marriage, some don't.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

If a religious premises does not want to conduct a same sex marriage, then there is no way they can be made to. After all, if they did conduct it, and weren't happy with it, then the service would not be great. Anywhere that allows it is absolutely brilli

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Same sex couples can still be religious. Why should they miss out on that opportunity? Some religious venues disagree, but some do not. If they can find a place, then there is no problem.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I do not see why there would be a problem. Transgender persons should have equal rights, like everyone else.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I personally think they have to get over it. They have to move with the times, some people are racist. Would they be issued protection for that? I certainly do not think so.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It is freedom of speech within reason. You can't use discriminative language, bully people etc. I have heard people such as the Archbishop of Glasgow use discriminatory language, comparing homosexuals to paedophiles. That is just disgusting.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I think everything has been mentioned so far.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Courtney Hendry
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

Non religious heterosexual couples can marry so I feel the option to get married should be available to everyone, no matter what gender. I do feel religious groups should be allowed to form ceremonies but should also be allowed to opt out if it goes against their beliefs.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think religious groups should be able to opt out of performing ceremonies but equally they shouldn't be prevented from carrying them out if they want to.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Lynne Henry
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

It is fair and right to give same sex couples the right to marry in the same manner as heterosexual couples, and to treat marriage celebrants with the same regard to equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

As a humanist I would see it as fundamental to a society that respects equality to give same sex couples the right to marry each other. On a personal level I think that we should not regard the love between two people and their desire to marry as anyone’s

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

We live in a secular society and elevating one type of celebrant above another is just inconsistent and suggests that one is of lesser than another. There is no justification for making separate - and oftne preferential treatment to religious celebrants.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

It is the opt-in procedure I object to although I understand the consideration to allow for opting-out. This seems a mealy-mouthed approach to a very desirable change in the law.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

If those in civil partnership wish to marry then I see no reason why they should not.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Currently humanists authorised by the General Registrar are able to conduct ceremonies in places that are safe and dignified and if the registrars and their employers wish to follow this pattern I see no reason why they shouldn't. Ceremonies which take

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

Sorry, I didn't quite understand this question.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

This seems an unacceptable and unprecedented concession. I am aware that this Bill is responding to changes that have taken place in society in the last 50 years and in time to come it will be just accepted. If we had taken a similar view of say anti-slavery, child labour laws, racial and sex discriminations and "protected' those in opposition we would have had a situation where those who opposed what is now regarded as unacceptable discrimination and unfair treatment would have been treated with a respect that is unwarranted. The opt-out arrangements are there for those who are against the arrangements in the Bill because of their religious beliefs.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

Pat Heppell
Humanist Society Scotland
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support and welcome the bill. It will be a huge step forward for equality in Scotland, at a time when we should be proud to promote the rights of all citizens to have their relationships recognised.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

The law should treat all marriages the same, regardless of the genders of the spouses.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

All appropriate celebrants whatever their beliefs should be on an equal footing.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I think they are pragmatic

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I am in support for those who wish this to happen

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
I think all options should be available

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I support the principle and would expect the law to ensure individuals are not discriminated against in its operation

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I do not understand what they need to be protected from.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is essential to a civilised society. It is not just saying what we think, it also encompasses ensuring that we listen to the disenfranchised and those who have historically been discriminated against.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jane Heppenstall
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I don't see why they shouldn't. Why should there be any difference between same sex and opposite sex couples?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Those who want to be "married" should be allowed to, to be wholly equal.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Again, I don't see why that shouldn't be allowed.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Being married shouldn't have anything to do with gender
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sherrie Higgins
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I am in favour of gender-neutral marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Why does society need protection from same sex marriage? You're not making it compulsory!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Religion and state should be completely separate. If people wish a religious ceremony, fine, let them have it but they should be obliged to register the marriage with the registrar too, just as they do in France or Italy.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ashley Holdsworth
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

Love is love. In a secular state freedom of choice is important to all.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mark Holmes
July 17 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support passage of legislation in Scotland for equal marriage regardless of the genders of those wishing to marry. This seems an obvious issue of fairness, or removing a discrimination. I applaud the faith bodies who have accepted the principal of equality of love and commitment; these are issues of the head and heart, not anatomy. I would also add that as someone who had a humanist wedding three years ago, their inclusion as celebrants of weddings is an extraordinary and wonderful thing that should be treasured and maintained. I would like to see civil partnership expanded to mixed gender couples. The word marriage carries too much baggage for some people to be happy with it and I can see why that might be. To summarise: Please vote in favour of same-sex marriage, and support considered steps to allow mixed-sex civil partnership in Scotland. Please support the clauses in the proposed bill that make marriage gender blind where gender reassignment takes place within a couple who wish to stay committed. But also don't allow the correct requirement for the other spouse to signal this agreement or not as a way for gender reassignment to be blocked or delayed. Thank you

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

This seems an obvious issue of fairness, or removing a discrimination.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Strongly in favour so long as they meet the requirements. I am concerned that it may be difficult to get to that status if they do not already hold it but I think the Humanist option works for most people.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support
If that is what the partners wish, not mandatory.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

If the organisation supports it I guess why not? But then what is the difference between the two? On balance, I think keep civil partnership for civil ceremonies and possibly non-religious belief systems such as the Humanists.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

I urge that the legislation allow willing partners to remain married if one partner obtains a gender recognition certificate that shows that they have changed their assigned gender to the gender that they identify with. At the same time, it should be made clear that the requirement for a spouse of someone undergoing gender reassignment cannot use the step of agreeing or not to remain married as a way of blocking the reassignment. There should be a limit on the time between requesting this agreement and receiving it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am sensitive to the objections of some of the faith bodies in Scotland to this legislation so it is important that no such body be required to carry out same sex weddings or any other wedding that contravenes their belief systems. That is an issue for their adherents and celebrants amongst themselves. They hold their beliefs sincerely but this cannot be used as a justification for preventing those who do not share their beliefs from enjoying a basic human freedom. They should accept that whilst their rights are protected, they cannot restrict those of others who do not share their beliefs. It has been said that if someone has a problem with same sex marriage, the solution is simple; don't marry someone of the same gender.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
Are you responding as...

a private individual

Nick Honhold
17 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
This is an essential step towards true equality for all, and a truly important issue. I am delighted the Scottish Government has introduced this Bill. I would urge parliament to pursue the cause of equality to its fullest throughout the details of the Bill, and make sure not to create new inequalities by having any differences between same-sex or mixed-sex marriages, and as far as I can see this has broadly been achieved.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
There are now many different religions in Scotland, as well as belief organisations - all of these are important to the people they represent, and any that want to conduct marriages (either mixed-sex or same-sex) should be allowed to do so.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Religious denominations and belief organisations should be free to choose for themselves whether or not to conduct marriages of either mixed-sex or same-sex. As such, I feel it is important to protect their right to choose whether or not to exercise the powers introduced by the new legislation, and in order to protect the religious freedom of established bodies, the opt-in procedure is probably the most appropriate solution. I would like to see the option of using gender-free marriage ceremonies included in the bill, to ensure absolute equality for transgender or intersex people, and to recognise that the "traditional" view of the gender binary does not apply to all people.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Large numbers of people in existing civil partnerships will want to change this to marriage - and I believe this should be made as simple as possible. As such, I fully support the bill providing for this with the two options of a new marriage ceremony, or a simple and low cost administrative procedure. The bill does not allow for civil partnerships registered outside Scotland to be changed to marriages, however, which is inherently unfair because it requires the couple to dissolve their partnership by proving it has irretrievably broken down. I believe this is raises damaging and unfair obstacles to couples in existing civil partnerships who wish to change them to marriage, which they may find insurmountable, thereby effectively preventing them from becoming married. In contrast, same-sex couples from outside Scotland will have no barriers to becoming married in Scotland, and I believe the bill should be amended to ensure this also applies to same-sex couples who registered civil partnerships outside Scotland. At the end of the day, despite the legal differences, a civil partnership and a marriage both celebrate the lifelong commitment of two people to each other, and this is the most important factor.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

If all parties agree, there is absolutely no reason not to allow this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

It is absolutely right that transgender people should be allowed to obtain full gender recognition without being required to divorce, and in the interests of their human rights, this process should be made as simple as practically possible. I object, however, to the spouse of a married transgender person's spouse being required to consent to the gender recognition, because this allows the potential for a difficult relationship to get in the way of the transgender person's human right to be recognised properly, by effectively giving the spouse a way of delaying the process. It is certainly true that the spouse has a direct interest in the marriage and its re-registration after the gender recognition (at which point consent of both parties is appropriate), but they should not be allowed to block the recognition itself. I would also urge the government to reduce the minimum age for a gender recognition application to 16, in line with the minimum age for marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
As far as I can see, the protections in the bill for people who have concerns about same-sex marriage are strong and appropriate. My only comment on the wider issues in society is that education is extremely important in the fight for equality, and teaching attitudes of tolerance and love in schools is appropriate. More particularly, while I would fight for the rights of teachers who do not agree with same-sex marriage to believe what they feel is right, I would put the rights of the children they teach to an unbiased and fully inclusive education above the beliefs of the teacher. Modern society now recognises that same-sex relationships and marriages are entirely equal to mixed-sex relationships and marriages, and there may well be a child (or children) in any class who has same-sex parents, or identifies as LGBTQ themselves (or may in the future). For these children, it is exceedingly important for their mental health that teaching treats mixed-sex and same-sex relationships and marriages as exactly equal, and to know that the education system supports them.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

In the march towards full equality for all, I believe it would be appropriate to include the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships for those who wish to enter it (and allow transgender people in existing civil partnerships to get gender recognition without dissolving the partnership). I am also concerned about the inherent discrimination in the Westminster-regulated private sector pensions system that will allow pensions schemes to pay smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than those in mixed-sex marriages. The UK Government has agreed to review this, and I would urge the Scottish Government to use their full weight to correct this discrimination.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Al Hopkins
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
The bill is necessary and overdue.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
This is a vital righting of a long-standing wrong. Love isn't about gender, and the state’s recognition should be available without prejudice.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
There should be no two-tier system.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
This is a critical requirement.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

They should receive the same thought and protection as those who may have concerns about mixed race marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Duncan Hothersall
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

C B HOWARD
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Alexander G Howie
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jamie Howitt
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
I want others to have the same rights as I do.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Everyone deserves it.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
It should be their choice and open

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Claire Hoyda
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM HELEN HUGHES

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

no one has the right to choose other than the people involved .......... its their choice not yours

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Just because they are of the same sex does not deter from their belief’s

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

this should have been done long ago and its a disgrace it has not

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

if all parties are agreed then there should be no difference where they choose to get married .......... equal rights should be given to all same sex couples

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

I am in support of allowing this .......... divorce should be a choice should they want it........

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

If it doesnt concern them why put barriers up in other peoples choices .......... they dont comment on the falling marriages between same sex couples .......... or the increasing divorce rates .......... so why should people be allowed to discriminate on same sex couples choices because it does not fall in to their boxes of how they perceive society should be .......... we have had that for far too long and lets just say it doesnt make good reading !!!!!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

we dont have freedom of speech in the UK ..........this over the last few months has been proven .......... we are only allowed too say what is PC not how we really feel ................. Russia's people have more freedom than we do !!!!

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I want Scotland to stand up and be counted .......... give same sex couples the same rights as every one else .......... nothing more nothing less ..........dont white wash it as you will only be making fools of yourself's yet again ............ try and get something right ..........

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Helen Hughes
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM IAN HUGHES

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
It's long overdue that gay people had the same rights as everyone else.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
It's all about equality and having the same rights and privileges as everyone else - nothing more and nothing less.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
Whatever people's views and beliefs they should be allowed to have their ceremony how and where they want.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
It would be good if people who were already in a civil partnership got "upgraded" to marriage rather than having to go through the cost of another ceremony.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither
I think if the couple want to have their ceremony in a religious premise they should have that right.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

Everyone should be entitled to have their ceremony wherever they want.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Again, it's all about equality and not discriminating.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People have free speech if they wish to object.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Everyone has the entitlement and right of free speech to praise or condemn and we all the right to use it.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

N/A

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ian Hughes
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
If it works for people, it works.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Laura Hughes
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The Humanist Fellowship of Scotland broadly supports the Bill.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

The Humanist Fellowship of Scotland supports same sex marriage. If Scotland is a society which sincerely respects individual choice, values the differences amongst us and embraces equality, then this is only just. We support both the aim of the Bill, in allowing same sex partners to be married, as well as enabling freedom to choose the type of ceremony according to individuals’ beliefs and way of life.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

The Humanist Fellowship of Scotland believes that the proposals, designed to place all persons permitted to solemnise marriage on the same footing, should help address an inherent contradiction in the current definition and reduce current confusion amongst the general public which exists at present. All couples seeking to marry should have a choice of persons able to solemnise their marriage according to their personal views and lifestyle. Celebrants - whether religious, belief or civil registrars - should be permitted to conduct marriages and civil partnerships on the same footing.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

The Humanist Fellowship of Scotland considers that respecting individual beliefs and conscience must mean that there should be an opt-out system for celebrants as proposed. Celebrants should not be required to go against their values or beliefs and no couple would choose to be married by a celebrant in those circumstances. We accept the rationale for excepting local authority celebrants from opt out. The Humanist Fellowship of Scotland agrees that is necessary to have in place processes designed to maintain the integrity of Scots law whilst also recognising that this can only be achieved if regulations are applied uniformly to all persons permitted to solemnise marriage and register civil partnerships. Regulations setting out qualifying requirements should apply to religious, belief and civil celebrants.
Appropriate tests, such as those examples cited, are no doubt already practiced by civil registrars as part of local authority procedure while not required by law. Extending these to other celebrants is sensible. It is, nonetheless, important that the law should be seen to be uniformly applied equally to public officials and tests laid down by regulation must bind all religious bodies, belief bodies and local authority civil celebrants to the same requirements. It will be necessary to consider these tests in more detail to ensure workable arrangements for establishing and monitoring them. We note that there will be further consultation on draft regulations and wish to participate in that.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

The Humanist Fellowship of Scotland supports the ability of civil partners to have their union recognised in law as a marriage retrospectively. It is our understanding that a large proportion of couples who entered into a civil partnership regarded it as a wedding ceremony and consider themselves married but for a legal technicality. The approach proposed is compatible with a humanist ethos in which freedom of choice, belief and expression is central. We are pleased to note that the Bill allows existing civil partners to convert their civil partnership to marriage administratively without a renewed ceremony, as proposed in our consultation response. The consultation paper was unclear regarding the Scottish government's reasons for continuing civil partnership as an option once same sex marriage is introduced. There seems little merit in this and it will cause confusion. Civil partnership was essentially a stopgap, or stepping stone measure, introduced pending further debate and broader social acceptance of same sex marriage. Continuing with both will add an unnecessary layer of legislation, bureaucracy and confusion. Our celebrants will be asked about the differences and relative merits between civil partnerships and same sex marriage. It would be helpful to know the government's reasoning and position on this and whether the Committee supports it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

The Humanist Fellowship of Scotland supports this as we consider it essential that all persons permitted to solemnise marriage should be able to do so within the same parameters.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

The Humanist Fellowship of Scotland supports this as we consider it essential that all persons permitted to solemnise marriage should be able to do so within the same parameters.
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

The Humanist Fellowship of Scotland supports this as it seems to be a thoughtful, caring and sensible approach taken with the intention of avoiding technical legal changes impacting adversely on people’s freedom of choice, belief and expression.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisation

Duncan Robertson
Chairman
Humanist Fellowship of Scotland
31 July 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM HUMANIST SOCIETY SCOTLAND

Draft position document for Scottish Parliament Equal Opportunities Committee with respect to Stage 1 Inquiry Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

1. Humanist Society Scotland is a charity with over seven thousand members whose aim is to promote a secular state where the worth, dignity and autonomy of every person is respected and individual freedom is balanced with social responsibility and a duty of care for future generations; Scottish civic institutions are democratic and human rights are developed, embedded and protected; ethical and moral problems are addressed with compassion, knowledge and reason; and no belief system (religious or not) should have, nor expect, privilege in the democratic process. Until that is achieved we seek to represent the millions of Scots who live lives within an ethical, non-religious, moral framework.

2. We want to help build a society with equal treatment for all irrespective of inherent traits such as gender, disability, sexual orientation and ethnic background, as well as any religious or philosophical viewpoint which individuals may choose. The vision of a more equal society, where peoples’ rights and dignity are upheld, is supported by the Equality Act and would be enhanced by this legislation, which we strongly support.

3. Scotland has seen a huge demographic shift in religious belief which has been reflected in how people choose to marry. Since they were legalised in 2005 Humanist weddings have become the third most popular form of marriage ceremony in Scotland. Most couples are now married without the involvement of religion with some 58% of marriages in Scotland of a secular nature in 2010 and Humanist weddings are now more numerous than those celebrated by the Catholic Church. The HSS agrees it is time to reframe the law to recognise that demographic reality.

4. HSS is the third biggest marriage organisation after Registrars and the Church of Scotland with over one hundred celebrants who conduct secular funerals and baby namings, of which 110 have also been approved to conduct legal marriages by the registrar general.

We would like

a. to be treated equally to other organisations and therefore would like the preferential status of the Church of Scotland as well as references to specific religions removed from the Bill, making all celebrants equal in law.

b. minor changes to be made to the bill to ensure equality for same sex couples and to provide couples will a choice over wording that reflects how they wish their relationship to be described.

c. to see Civil Partnerships opened up to all couples

Humanist Society Scotland
9 September 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The Humanist Society Scotland (HSS) heartily endorse the thrust of the Bill and the intention behind it, to create a more equal Scotland. As the fundamental principle behind Humanism is that every human deserves equal rights, the HSS fully supports both allowing same sex couples to marry and equalising the status of Belief celebrants. As believers in a secular state where all are treated equally, the HSS regrets that within this Bill heterosexual couples will not have a right to form civil partnership but welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law and promptly enact legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally the HSS would like to see the criteria on which organisations are judged as suitable to conduct marriage being applied equally. In chapter 3, section 2 of the Bill this would require an amendment to the Bill which would remove the privileged status of The Church of Scotland currently enshrined in section 8 (1) (a) (i) of the Marriage (Scotland) Act 1977. For clarity and to reflect their equal status in law, where previously some titles of Christian Celebrants eg, minister, priest or pastor have been specifically included, these specifics in the Bill are replaced throughout by the phrase “Celebrant of a Religious or Belief body”.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Humanist philosophy is about treating people equally and the HSS welcomes this move towards creating a more equal and accepting society by recognising the equal validity of love between partners of the same sex and affording the same rights and responsibility of marriage to same sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

As would be expected, the HSS strongly welcomes the move toward equal treatment of all marriage celebrants.
How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

The HSS supports the right of celebrants of all beliefs and religions to opt out. We appreciate the care that has been taken to allow a conscience opt-out for individual celebrants where their organisation has opted in to conducting same sex marriages. We are therefore disappointed that the reciprocal freedom of conscience has not been granted to allow individual celebrants within opted-out organisations from individually choosing to conduct same sex marriages and civil partnerships. A small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious or belief bodies that wish to, should be permitted to continue to use the “husband and wife” gendered form of the marriage ceremony, and same sex couples should be also be given the choice of wording within a civil marriage.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

The HSS believes that both civil partnerships and marriages should be available to both same-sex and opposite sex couples. The HSS also believes that there should be no cost incurred if a couple in a civil partnership wish to change to a marriage. We consider it unjust that a group of individuals who have been discriminated against should have to pay to have that discrimination corrected. We do also think an amendment is needed to allow couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland to marry here.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

The HSS agrees that more freedom should be accorded to all individuals to have their marriage solemnised in a way, and in a place that suits them and so support this increased freedom for civil marriage ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

Once again the HSS support increasing freedom of choice and that all couples should be free to choose the type of legal recognition they want for their relationship, as well as who conducts the ceremony and where it takes place.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

The HSS strongly supports the ability for a transgendered person to remain married when obtaining a full Gender recognition Certificate.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The HSS does not perceive there is any legal risk to individuals who choose to speak against same-sex marriage and the provisions set out in chapter 4 reinforce that no presently existing freedom of expression will be curtailed. As regards calls for a conscience clause for registrars, it is unthinkable that a public official carrying out a public service be allowed to discriminate on the grounds of sexuality/sexual orientation. It would also be contrary to statutory obligations under the Equality Act 2010. The HSS considers that in the public sphere everyone is either equal or we are not. If the Bill becomes law, public servants will, like anybody, be free to think and believe whatever they like about anyone else. Indeed it is a fundamental human right. However, personal beliefs must not intrude in the performance of a public duty, particularly not to the detriment of those seeking a service to which they are legally entitled. Like everybody else registrars will be subject to the laws of the land. The HSS considers the existing safeguards which prevent teachers and others in authority using their position to promote a particular viewpoint sufficient.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

When considering calls for conscience clauses or protection of freedom of speech on this issue, the HSS would ask for equal marriage to be treated in the same way as equality law on race, gender or disability and those with other protected characteristics. When these laws were framed lawmakers did not consider enshrining in law special rights for those opposed to treating women, minority ethnic people or disabled people equally. In deciding to allow same-sex marriage MSPs will have decreed that the state will no longer allow discrimination against gay and lesbian people in the public sphere. If individuals opposed to equality experience social disapproval for their opposition to same sex marriage, the HSS would welcome this, in the same way it welcomes social disapproval of sectarian behaviour or racism and sexism.
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The HSS agrees with politicians and the Registrar General that conducting marriages should not be a business. As a charity, the ceremonies carried out by our celebrants are only part of our work but we are concerned that some charities have been set up which appear to be operating as marriage businesses. We therefore welcome the modification to Section 12: Temporary Authorisation and, for clarification, that the criteria for suitable organisation should be defined as in section 10 (4) (a), and we request that if no other criteria for temporary authorisation should be permitted.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant faith/belief-based organisation

Liz Rowlett
Humanist Society Scotland
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I look forward to the day I can legally marry my girlfriend in Scotland and our love I considered just the same as any couples’.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It’s been a long time coming. It also finally means that trans people getting a GRC that are married don't need to get divorced to get their gender recognised.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Of course they should be equal. No belief or religion is any more important than any other.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I believe celebrants should automatically be included and have to opt out if they don't want to solemnise them to avoid creating a needless barrier for those that wish to.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Some may wish to keep their civil partnership and I don't think the date should take that away from people.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This is an excellent addition to the bill and the same should be the case for civil partnerships. Also there should be no spousal veto. This is inappropriate.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think we should protect all members of society from harm and hate - as someone that experiences homophobia in Scotland weekly I would hope your focus would be to protect those in same sex marriages.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is fabulous as long as freedom from hate speech is also taken seriously. You should not be able to say what you like when your words can cause harm and injury to others.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Rhianna Humphrey
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ciaran Hunter
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This is a milestone opportunity in equality and brings Scotland into line with other enlightened nations.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Members of the publics are entitled to their views, however government officials, school teachers, registrars must respect the proposed legislation eg a Christian registrar cannot be allowed not to officiate at a same sex ceremony.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Dr Ross Hunter
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I support this bill as it brings more equality to Scotland and allows everyone within Scotland to get married.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

As a young LGBT person myself, I strongly support this decision as it gives me a chance to marry someone in the future.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

I'm in favour of the ceremonies being held within religious buildings but I do respect that if some religious buildings don't want to allow same sex marriage then it's their decision.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It’s nothing to worry about. Everyone has the right to get married regardless of their sexuality.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

N/A

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I’m wondering why mixed sex civil partnerships haven’t been preposed in this Bill.

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group
a private individual
a public body

Glen Hunter
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I absolutely believe that same sex couples should have equal rights to marry under law.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Belief celebrants should be on the same footing as religious celebrants. In fact, if a couple wished to marry each other in a self-uniting ceremony (as per Quaker belief), I would support this also.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

I would like to see the individual celebrant able to opt-in to solemnise marriages with protection under the law so that in cases where the celebrant's organisation did not opt-in, there could be no negative consequences for the individual opting in.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I support the ability to convert civil partnerships to marriages. However, I would also like to see the opposite conversion available and would not condone an automatic conversion of civil partnerships to marriages.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I am unclear about what 'protection' is required for those who have concerns about same sex marriage. If these people are part of an organisation/group that decides to participate/accept this change and these individuals do not wish to comply or be part of an organisation that participates, they should feel free to find like-minded people in another group/organisation. The legal marriage of two consenting adults should be of no consequence to anyone else other than the two consenting adults.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sunil Hutchin-Bellur
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ellie Hutchinson
27 June 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

I believe it is appropriate for people to have choice over whether to opt purely for civil partnerships or to solemnify their relationship through religious/spiritual/belief systems.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

Not to do so would be discriminatory - not all faith systems are opposed to same-sex relationships, and even within those which have historically been opposed to homosexuality, there is a diversity of views which would exclude some practitioners from practising in line with their beliefs (e.g. buddhism, some paganism, some liberal Christianity and Judaism, Quakers etc).
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Someone's gender identity does not give an indication of their sexual orientation, and some transgender people may indeed wish to remain married, as may their partners. Not to allow this would be non-sensical and unnecessary.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I do not believe special 'protections' should be offered - there is no justifiable right to discriminate. Those who have concerns about same-sex marriage are free not to marry people of the same sex! To go beyond this is to begin to provide legal protections for bigotry, discrimination and prejudice.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People are free to dislike and disapprove of same-sex relationships, and free to say so, as long at their rhetoric does not constitute a hate crime or incitement to hatred/violence.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual. As well as being a private individual, I am also an academic working in the area of prejudice

Craig Hutchison
16 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
I believe that this is an important matter of equality.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
You can't control who you fall in love with and everyone should have the right to marry that person. You say to the world 'we are committed to each other' and vow to stand beside one another.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I know my sister and her wife would love to convert their civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Kirsty Hutchison
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

About time that there should be equality for all our citizens.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

Again this is to do with equality and not giving undue privilege to certain groups.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

This gives all couples equality regardless of sexual orientation.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Of course! Why not?!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Why on earth should such people need 'protection'? It's not as if anything is being forced upon them or threatening them. However if they feel free to make aggressive and disgusting comments about same sex marriage, publicly, why should they be protected?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

In a democratic country we are free to say what we like, but within certain parameters. For example racist and sectarian comments made in public and likely to incite hatred do constitute acceptable 'freedom of speech'.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

If we pride ourselves in being fortunate to live in a truly equal and democratic society then this Bill, which affords equality to all people regardless of sexual orientation must become a key part of Scottish law.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant
a faith/belief local group or congregation
a private individual

Maureen Hutchison
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
I strongly support the bill enabling same sex couples to marry if they choose to do so.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
The option of religious or belief should be open to everyone

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Cheryl Hyams
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM JAMIE HYLANDS

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I think it is a prime example of a nation who is trying to embody the very sentiment behind the word 'equal'. I think we have a long way to go but this is a great step forward. I have lived in Scotland for nearly ten years and am bringing up my family here too. It is important than when we travel and when we look back that we have found a reason to be proud to live here. Make it happen.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jamie Hylands
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM STEWART INGLIS

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People can hold whatever views they like, but they should not unduly constrain those who do not share them. Public servants have a duty, first and foremost, to serve the public. Registry office staff, for example, wouldn't be allowed to refuse to marry couples on the basis of their race or religion. Sex, gender and sexuality should be no different.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Stewart Inglis
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I get the sense that right from the start this is a Bill that has been pushed forward by a small but vocal and very determined minority. This is not something for which there was or is now a popular mandate. It is unnecessary given that all the legal rights of marriage currently exist for same sex couples in the context of civil partnership.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

The understanding of marriage as being a voluntary union for life of between one man and one woman has been accepted as far back as any of us can remember and further. It secures the equal value of men and women as it recognises the complementary nature of the differences between them. It also promotes the welfare of children providing a unique relationship for children to be brought into the world and reared. All the evidence of which I am aware supports the notion that marriage between a man and a woman provides the best environment for children to prosper. Surely every child has a moral claim on her natural mother and father, based on the fact that they brought her into being and that it is in principle good for every child to be brought up by her natural parents, committed in relationship to each other and to her. The UN convention on the rights of a child recognises the right of a child to know and be cared for by both of its parents. Redefining marriage as proposed in the Bill undermines all this. (See Redefining Marriage: the case for caution Julian Rivers http://www.jubilee-centre.org/document.php?id=432)

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I must confess to being very sceptical about the cash value of any of the proposed protections - we have already seen examples of discrimination against those who hold to the traditional understanding of marriage between a man and a woman even before any proposed changes in the law - people being disciplined and losing their jobs.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I do fear that the freedom to express the position of being in support of traditional marriage and on conscience grounds being unable to endorse same sex marriage is going to be seriously curtailed if the legislation goes through.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The general issue of protection of those who on conscience grounds cannot endorse same sex marriage needs to be given much greater scrutiny and needs to be addressed. I am also concerned that this redefinition of marriage will not be the last - if you can change the meaning of marriage in this way - why not change it to include polygamy for example. We are on a slippery slope.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

David Scott
Inshes Church of Scotland
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
The privilege of religious celebrants, and religious groups in general, is long overdue a reassessment in an increasingly multi-cultural and secular society. Putting belief celebrants on an equal footing goes some way to reducing discrimination against people with no religious belief or beliefs not represented by mainstream institutions.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither
All celebrants working outside of religious institutions should be required to solemnise any marriage which is legally valid. Allowing employees of the state to opt-out (or not opt-in) is to sanction discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. We would not tolerate racial discrimination like this, even if the celebrant claimed that his or her religion disapproved of such unions.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

This should be a matter for individuals and not the state. The idea that the state could force a couple to divorce under such circumstances is disgusting.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We do not legislate to protect the interests of racists. We do not tolerate sexual discrimination although many mainstream religions are mired in misogynistic teachings. We should not protect those who hold out dated and bigoted opinions based on sexual orientation because to do so suggests that there is validity to their prejudice. Plenty of people had "concerns" about inter-racial marriage in the 1960s. This was racism dressed up as a valid concern. The "concerns" about same-sex marriage now are no different. We should not pander to prejudice.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is important and must be preserved. However, attempting to foist one's prejudices on others is not freedom of speech. People should be free to express whatever bigotry and prejudices they will, however ugly it may be, but they should not be able to halt equality by doing so. No one is forced to enter into a same-sex marriage. No one should be prevented from doing so because those who oppose it are loud.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

True equality would allow mixed-sex couples to enter into civil partnerships if they want to.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Gillian Jack
28 June 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

It will be a huge step forward for equality in Scotland, and it balances equality with respect for freedom of religion and freedom of speech.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It is important that this law treats all marriages the same regardless of the genders of the spouses and not just create two different versions of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ross Jack
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Fiona Jackson
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Strongly in support of this; Scotland should be proud to introduce such legislation

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

More and more people are leaving traditional religions. I firmly believe that Humanist marriages should be on equal footing to church ones or civil ones (so long as the celebrant is from a bona fide organisation, and not one of those that have recently s

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

Those who want a CP (including opposite sex couples) should be allowed to have one. But there should be the opportunity for those in a CP who wish it to "upgrade" for little or no fee.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
If both parties to the marriage want to stay married they should be allowed to do so; it is daft at the moment that they have to divorce before changing gender.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

What protection do they need?! No-one, hopefully, is going to be forced into a marriage of any sort so how on earth will the bigots be affected? More people living in stable recognised relationships can only be good for society.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Marilyn Jackson
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This is long overdue and a giant step towards full equality for homosexual relationships.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Hugely supportive, two people of any sexual orientation should be able to enter loving, committed relationships on a par with their peers.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I support in as much as I believe if we have religious celebrants, there should be no difference. However, I don't actually agree with the existence of religious celebrants. As I understand it, "marriage" is a State institution with rights and benefits provided by the State. Religious celebrants are only able to perform marriage ceremonies as the State has allowed it. I would much rather see a situation where ALL marriages are conducted in civil ceremonies. If a couple are religious and then choose to have a "wedding" blessing conducted in their place of worship by a minister/priest/imam/rabbi etc. then they should absolutely be free to do so, but this is a separate event with no legal meaning.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

Please see my comments in Question 6. I don't believe ANY marriages, the legally binding procedure, should be conducted by religious figures.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

I don't think it really matters where the ceremony is conducted.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

I'm unsure that I see the need to continue with civil partnerships should the Equal Marriage bill be passed. If it does, then it should be open to any who want it but again, there should be no religious element to it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I don't really see that those who have concerns should have any particular protections. Religion should entirely be taken out of marriage ceremonies. Once that's removed, the only people with "concerns" only hold them based on their personal prejudices and ignorance. Same Sex Marriage is only going to affect those couples who chose to have them. I also believe that there's an economic benefit that's not being consider (or publicised at least). With an average wedding day currently costing in the region of £10-15 thousand pounds, allowing a significant section of society access to that may provide a nice boost to the economy!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of Speech is an intrinsic part of any democracy, however the debate surround Equal Marriage has frequently turned unpleasant, with opponents adopting an "How dare you not be tolerant of my intolerance" approach. It has to work both ways and I don't think that fact is appreciated by all parties.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Peter Jeffrey
22 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM JEWISH GAY AND LESBIAN GROUP

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

The Jewish Gay and Lesbian Group (JGLG), founded in 1972 as the main social and representative group for LGBT Jews in the UK, warmly welcomes the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill, as a huge and positive step forward for LGBT people and for Scottish society at large.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Marriage symbolises not only the committed love of a couple who wish to spend their lives together, but also society's support for such loving family relationships that create strong families and help to build society. Judaism has always promoted marriage

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

The JGLG broadly supports the aims and methods of the Bill, and understands the double opt-in procedure as providing protection for those religious bodies that are conscientiously opposed to same-sex marriage. However, we also support the amendments put f

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

The JGLG broadly supports the proposals in the Bill, but agrees with the view of the Equality Network that couples whose civil partnership took place outwith Scotland should be able to change their civil partnership to marriage in Scotland by bureaucratic means without dissolving their civil partnership and without the need to have a formal wedding ceremony.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

We strongly agree with this proposal.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

There are some same-sex couples who, while religiously committed, find the historical meaning and symbolism of marriage to be inconsistent with their values. The option of a religiously celebrated civil partnership which does not use the language of marriage

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

We support the proposed measures as a significant step towards freedom and equality for trans people, but also strongly support the suggestion of the Equality Network that the permission of the partner of a trans person should NOT be required before the g

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We believe that the Bill rightly grants fully adequate protection for those who have concerns about same-sex marriage. We respectfully oppose the proposal of ScoJeC that further protection should be given, e.g., to civil celebrants in post before the passing of the Bill or any other religious functionaries (e.g. teachers) other than those who would be directly involved in carrying out a same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The freedom of speech protections offered by the Bill are adequate.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a faith/belief-based organisationan LGBT group

Rabbi Mark L Solomon
Jewish Gay and Lesbian Group
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

FIONA JOHNSTON
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Same sex couples deserve exactly the same rights and protections as opposite sex couples in all things, including marriage (both religious and civil).

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Hefin Jones
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I am in support because I consider it ridiculous that the state, the church or any other organisation should have the right to decide whether two people who love one another should be allowed to get married or not.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

It should be up to the individuals concerned.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
It is ridiculous that those who are already married to have to dissolve this in order to obtain a GRC.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

What concerns..? Why on earth should anyone have concerns..? I don't understand.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Ria Elaine Jones
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
About time!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
As am in a heterosexual marriage. I would find it discriminatory if only people of the same sex could marry each other and people of the opposite sex could not. QED I believe that people should be free to marry whom they chose.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
I know gay and lesbian friends who would love to have a religious ceremony.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I suspect that many people had civil partnerships because they wished their partnerships to be legally recognised and would have gone for marriage had the option been open to them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Why not? Straight couples get married in hotels on boats etc.. so why not same sex couples?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People are entitled to their views, however I feel that a lot of it is prejudice and bigotry and that I find hard to stomach.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

With freedom comes responsibility, and people have to acknowledge that there has been a sea change of opinion about this issue in the last twenty years.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I would like to say that even as someone in a heterosexual marriage who had a church wedding I do not feel that same sex marriages make my marriage any less valid or special.

Are you responding as...

a private individual
A private individual with LGBT friends

Ed Jupp
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I am a Bible believing Christian and find the idea to be anti-God, and to undermine the very fabric of our community and society. God's way has always been one man and one woman and for children to be raised and nourished by their own mother and father. I am all for giving folks their individual rights but this is taking things too far. Marriage as it stands should never be redefined. Later it will be attempts to legalise polygamy or three way relationships and to lower the age of consent to 15 then to 14. We could open the door for horror upon horror!

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Churches and registrars who refuse to marry same sex couples will possibly be charged and have to face court proceedings and registrars may be dismissed. Churches may later be refused the rights to marry altogether. Parents' rights to remove their children (espec. primary) from same-sex marriage lessons in schools should be protected. Charity law should be amended so that churches who stand against same-sex marriage will not lose their charitable status.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Total freedom of speech should be legally granted to all, so that individuals can speak out either privately or publicly against same-sex marriage without fear of being reported to the police and charged with an offense. Open-air preachers and the like should be free to proclaim their stand on same-sex marriage without fear of arrest.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual
I have been a full time Christian Youth Worker for 32 years in Motherwell.

Ray Keilty
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

As someone in a civil partnership, I do not understand why I must have a contract considered to be of less value than a marriage, just because I am gay.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I would love to be legally allowed to marry my partner, we deserve the right as much as any other couple.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

Religions that want to conduct civil partnerships or marriages should be allowed to, they should not be restricted by the views of Christianity.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

It seems bizarre to force someone to go through a divorce when their relationship has remained intact.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I do not believe that the concerns are valid, I believe there is an irrational fear that their lives will somehow be effected by same sex marriage. In reality it will not effect them and it will not take away from their marriages.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech should be allowed but it does note an that we are free to abuse others.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Anna Kellner
23 August 2013
IN DEFENSE OF TRADITIONAL MARRIAGE

Marriage has been defined by nature as a union between a man and a woman with the potential for natural procreation. Neither State nor Church has the power to change this reality, however well meaning the intention may be.

Up until a few decades ago, both civil and religious authorities protected and regulated the institution of Marriage with wisdom in the knowledge that it is the bedrock of society. Every individual is free to enter this time honoured institution; and it requires remarkably low qualifications to do so.

The recent introduction of civil partnerships means that we now have three entities – co-habitation, civil partnership and Marriage, and the straight forward thing to do is have a clear distinction in nomenclature as there is a clear distinction in the nature and purpose of these partnerships.

Despite modern trends, traditional marriage is proving that it is the best environment,( with fewer breakdowns,) in which children can have a stable upbringing enjoying the benefits of the complementary qualities which a mother and father.

Legislation must ensure that traditional Marriage is encouraged and strengthened to encourage an organic growth in population able to support the economy and our ageing population in future years.

The legal rights of couples in civil partnerships are so similar to marriage that the electorate will come to question why so much time and effort is being spent to satisfy the wishes of a tiny vocal minority within a minority who have a same sex attraction. The electorate will come to realise that what we have here is a Bill which does not address real needs within our society and endangers the most important institution in society.

The Bill as read now, appears to recognise that the notion of same sex marriage violates the beliefs of a majority, particularly among the Judeo-Christian and Moslem communities, and attempts to offer some protection to individuals and celebrants. But, if enshrined in law, it is inevitable that litigation will follow and individual career prospects of those opposed to or have concerns about same sex marriage will be blighted.

On the introduction of civil partnerships, legislators failed to protect the rights of individuals and institutions who believe that traditional marriage is the best vehicle for a stable family and for the long term well being of society. This gives cause to believe that any expression of disapproval of the notion of same sex marriage will result in some form of punishment by way of career prospects and loss of charitable status. Put another way – plain, honest speaking will be seen as a violation of equality laws. There will be questions in the voter’s mind:

In the drive for equality why were heterosexual couples excluded from civil partnerships?

Given that there was a far greater response to the consultative process for the redefinition of marriage than that for independence (the great majority against change) – why were their wishes ignored?

If legislators have concerns about the future of individuals and institutions who disapprove of same sex marriage and civil partnerships – why is there no provision for a conscience clause?
In conclusion, there are no discernable differences in the legal, fiscal and financial benefits between civil partnerships and marriages, so one is forced to the conclusion that there is some other agenda at play. The legislation does not address equality issues, but rather is an attempt to make everyone the same. Definitions of parenthood and familial bonds will be blurred, and in the long term deemed as undesirable and unnecessary. Although I do not profess to see round corners, I do see that this proposed legislation brings no benefits to society and has the potential to do great harm.

Andrew Kellock
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

Respecting the rights of Lgbt citizens is essential

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an academic
a private individual

Blair Kelly
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
no
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

no

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Kathleen Kelly
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I fail to see the need for protection. I do not feel that my heterosexual relationship will be threatened in any way by allowing same sex marriage.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Maureen Kennedy
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I am concerned that marriage needs to be opened up to persons of any sex, not restricted to 'same sex'. As an intersex person who does not identify as male or female, I feel I could not consider marriage under a system that required me to lie about my identity, as to do so would be to make a mockery of what ought to be a solemn vow.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Aside from anything else, this would serve to future proof the legislation. Social trends suggest that it will become increasingly difficult to divide religion and belief into neat categories in the future.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

I feel it important that people in civil partnerships should have the option of converting them to marriages, but equally important that this should not happen automatically, as I have friends in civil partnerships who would definitely not want to be married and have told me they would divorce if that happened to them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
I see absolutely no reason why this should be considered inappropriate. Let people have what is special for them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

The requirement to divorce in order to obtain legal gender recognition is one of the cruellest aspects of the current system, putting unnecessary pressure on couples who may already be going through a very difficult situation. Everything in marriage law should be about helping loving couples stay together, not forcing them apart. Furthermore, the requirement to divorce has an impact on pension rights, creating significant fiscal inequalities that run contrary to the spirit of the Equality Act (2010) and Scotland’s various legal and practical efforts to make people more equal.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Nobody should be forced to perform a marriage they disapprove of, regardless of the genders of the persons being married. Applying this provision universally would obviate the need to employ a special instance of discriminating in regard to non-opposite-sex couples.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I feel it is very important that the bill make provision for intersex people and for people who do not identify as male or female. Ongoing legal changes around the world (e.g. in Australia and Germany) illustrate that these groups will not continue to be elided in future, so to provide for them now would remove any need to adjust the legislation in future in order to do so when this becomes a bigger political issue. It would also be in keeping with the Scottish Government’s professed commitment to ensuring equality of opportunity for all its citizens.

Are you responding as...

An individual who works for an LGBT group.

Jennie Kermode
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

It is time for equal rights for all... it is that simple.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Everyone in love should have the same rights as the next person

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

It is time for celebrants to have the right to do this. There is no difference between same sex and opposite sex couples when they are in love and want to get married, it is time to reflect this in the law and churches that wish to join in this cause should definitely be allowed too!!

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

It would be cruel and unkind to let the people who have got a civil partnership just because they could not get married and wished to do so not to be allowed to "upgrade" (for wan of a better word) their civil partnership. This is all LGBT people were allowed in law, if the law is to change is should look at helping everyone who wants to be married be so!

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support
I think it is very important, not everyone want a marriage in church but they do want a marriage!

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I am a Christian and wish to get married in my church, they may well be receptive to that so why should they be barred from doing so??? I think it should be up to the individual church, for goodness sake this is about two people loving each other!

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Transgender people et the hardest lot in life of the LGBT community and just this goes to show it. It is time to allow trans people to stay married to the person they love, it seems cruel to make them divorce just to get married again, stupid waste of money and discriminatory to say the least

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the churches that do not want to do the marriages to be protected then they have no foothold on the fact you are making them marry people... government should not be run by churches in the same way churches are not run by government!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

LGBT people re like any other we just want the same rights as anyone else, we seem to be the last people bein discriminated against in this way! (apart from straight people wanting to get civil unions)

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Straight people should be able to get a civil partnership as much as a LGBT person can get married!

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Benjamin Kidd
August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Roslyn King
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

This change to the law is long overdue and very welcome, and is an important step in continuing to give equal validity to gay relationships.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

That this is a legal issue and not a religious one. Everyone, religious or not, should be allowed to marry and this is about equality before the law.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

This is the other side of the coin. Why should only religions be able to supply celebrants/ministers for relationship ceremonies. To the couple the celebrant is their choice and the way I understand this part is to cater for those of alternative belief

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

There are those who want to so why should they not?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

This was not an option for those signing civil partnerships so should be automatic for those who want it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Absolutely. Good grief, why not?
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I would not understand the objection to this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Social justice issue. Overdue. Gender recognition is a personal issue and the relationship is separate. If this is the wish of the couple it should be possible.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

No-one will be forced to attend such a ceremony if they don't want to be there, no-one will be forced to conduct them I understand (but I think there should be an obligation for the objector to provide a replacement, except registrars who are conducting a contractual duty to apply the law and may need to consider a new career if they object).

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Have a right to protection from hate and bigotry. People will disagree and it is their right to do so, but some of the debate from those who do so has fuelled anti-gay sentiments and violence and this is not acceptable in a modern society.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Please get on with it and follow England's lead. It would be shameful beyond words if we don't. For some Scotland has aspirations of independence. Would missing this opportunity for better equality in our society be our first ignoble act?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sam King
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jane Kingswood
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Am 100% in support of same sex marriage as Scotland should be leading the way with this as a country of NO discrimination and everyone being equal regardless of race, age, sex etc and have no opposition to same sex marriage as marriage is marriage and there should be no differences as heterosexual and gay people should have the same rights as each other

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Gives people the choice that everyone should have regardless of sexuality as marriage is a union of love between 2 people

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Fully support this as believe in equality for all

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Marriage between gay people will not destroy or undermine marriage between a man and a woman but will show that marriage is for anyone who wishes to show their feelings and commitment between each other and give them the same legal rights as any other couple would have

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

James Kinmond
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The bill supports equality and I am very much in favour of that. To my view people have the moral right to marry as they like, be it a couple of the same sex or different sex. This moral right should be reflected in the law as a legal right. I think it is immoral to prevent same sex people to marry, so the bill helps raise the moral standard of the law.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

The bill should treat marriage between different sex people and same sex people exactly the same.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I think a religious body should be free in choosing to solemnise or not to solemnise same sex marriages, because they should be free to act according to their belief systems.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

The bill has one element with which I don't agree, which is that a couple that registered a civil partnership abroad can't change this to a marriage in Scotland. It should be possible that people in this position could actually change this civil partnership to a marriage, because not allowing it would make it difficult and burdensome for them to get married in Scotland.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

However, I would want to see the bill changed in such a way that a married person who wants to change their sex, doesn't need consent from their partner, to prevent possible delay in starting the medical transgender process.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

People should be free to publicly express their views on same sex marriage, be they in favour or against it.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The bill doesn't entirely end discrimination between same sex and opposite sex couples. there are still two points that need changing. 1. Same sex civil partnership should also be legal. 2. Married people of the same sex should have exactly the same survivor's pensions as opposite sex married couples.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Hugo Klip
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I am opposed to the redefinition of marriage to include relationships between people of the same sex so my views on the Bill in general should be read against that background.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Constitutionally, culturally and emotionally, marriage has always been a relationship between a man and a woman. Whatever provision can and may be made for relationships between two persons of the same sex, there is no need to define this as "marriage" in order to provide for civil equality if that is the intention. Needless offence to those who share my viewpoint is objectionable where there is a political and legislative route acceptable to the vast majority of people.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Insofar as the celebrant is performing a civil function I see no reason to exclude belief celebrants provided that some measure of solemnity is required in a ceremony in which promises are made and received.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

For the reasons stated previously this is simply unnecessary. If the equality imperative is that equal rights are given before the law, the civil law is perfectly capable of delivering rights and protections without adding the tag of "marriage" to a relationship which cannot be identical in every sense to a marriage between one man and one woman.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

I see no objection to removing restrictions on location but I expect that a registrar should always have the right to refuse to conduct a ceremony at a location which the registrar in his/her discretion considers inappropriate.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Those who marry as man and woman ought to remain married. Those who may marry under new legislation as persons of the same sex ought not to stay married after a change of gender is recognised.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

This is a very wide and complex issue. Much has been said by politicians about ensuring that protections are given to religious celebrants who are not willing to conduct same sex marriage ceremonies. My concern is that their colleagues, fellow members and organisations may find themselves discriminated against for holding the same views - how can the law ensure protection against unintended consequences?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech involves both the right to hold what one believes as the absolute truth while defending the rights of others to hold the opposite. The tone of the Government’s proposals has suggested that the minimum of protections will be introduced to ensure that people can say what they believe but there is no clear undertaking to ensure that they can live out their lives consistently with those beliefs. Guidelines are simply insufficient to ensure protections which, at a fundamental level, are assured by the ECHR. A citizen will need to be assured of protection in all his/her capacities – individual, celebrant, parent, consumer etc. Providing protections under employment law alone will not be sufficient. How will the Government legislate to ensure that public agencies do not brand as bigots those who disagree with the present Government’s morality agenda? In the field of education there is no point in limiting parental rights to areas of sex education or RME when a revisionist view of marriage may be taught and history re-written in other subject areas. I am concerned that individuals who are employed within, or appointed to roles in, public sector, third sector or grant receiving organisations (or the organisations themselves) may be penalised for making public “outside that employment or role “ views which do not support the proposed legislation.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No

Are you responding as...

a private individual

David Laing
1 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM THE LAW SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND ON BEHALF OF THE FAMILY LAW SUB-COMMITTEE AND THE EQUALITY LAW SUB-COMMITTEE

Introduction

The Law Society of Scotland aims to lead and support a successful and respected Scottish legal profession. Not only do we act in the interests of our solicitor members but we also have a clear responsibility to work in the public interest. That is why we actively engage and seek to assist in the legislative and public policy decision making processes. The Family Law sub-committee and the Equality Law sub-committee (“the committees”) have examined the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill and have the following comments to make.

General Comments

The committees would reiterate the point we made in response to the preceding consultation that while we do not seek to comment on the underlying policy of the bill, we would suggest that as it will expand the ways in which a couple can choose to define their relationship, whether different or same-sex marriage, cohabitation or civil partnership; in order to help people to understand the differences between them and/or choose between them, further definition or explanation of the status of each would be useful.

From the perspective of article 9 of the ECHR (freedom of thought, conscience and religion) we understand that the bill’s objectives seek to balance these rights with other rights although we do think that there is scope for conflict as a result of the public sector equality duties contained in section 149 of the Equality Act 2010. It is, of course, a matter for the Scottish Government whether such conflict is an acceptable consequence of the bill but we expressed concern that this issue was not considered in the previous equality impact assessment.

Part 1 – Marriage

Sections 4(2) to (5) would amend the definition of ‘cohabitant’ as contained in section 25 of the Family Law (Scotland) Act 2006 by providing that the reference to two persons of the same sex who are (or were) living together as if they were civil partners (however expressed) will cease to have effect.

This would appear to take away the prospect of establishing cohabitation between two people living together as if they were civil partners. We are of the view that these provisions as currently worded are difficult to interpret. It could also be argued that the intended effect of the provisions does not seem logical in the context of this bill, which seeks to allow a choice between marriage and civil partnerships as co-existing legally recognised relationships for same-sex couples. Further to the point we made in our introduction about the requirement to help society understand the different types of legally recognised relationship available, this could give rise to some confusion.
The proposed insertion into section 1 of the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 contained in section 5 of the bill is not clearly worded. To say that adultery has the same meaning in relation to a same-sex marriage as it does in relation to a marriage between people of different sexes could be construed to mean as equal grounds for divorce. As adultery is not statutorily defined but is instead a common law concept, it would be much clearer to use the wording contained in the policy memorandum, i.e. “the existing [common law] definition of adultery (sexual intercourse with a person of the opposite sex outwith marriage) will continue to apply”.

Sections 10 and 11 of the bill amend sections 8 and 9 of the 1977 Act to allow for the prescription of religious or belief bodies to solemnise same-sex marriage; and to permit the authorisation of ‘nominated persons’ from non-prescribed bodies to solemnise same-sex marriage. We think that the proposed amendment to the Equality Act 2010, which has been extended since the previous consultation to protect the beliefs of individuals ancillary to the marriage ceremony, such as organists and those controlling the use of religious or belief premises, will help to achieve compatibility on an intra-UK level. However, we think there is still the possibility that the provisions designed to implement this policy could be challenged in future as being discriminatory and contravening article 14 of the European Convention of Human Rights

In subsection (2)(a)(ii)(C) of section 10 “marriages” should be plural rather than singular.

Chapter 4

The rights acknowledged in section 14 are already enshrined in law by virtue of the Human Rights Act 1998. The Scottish Parliament cannot pass a measure that conflicts with the rights set out in articles 9 and 10 of the European Convention on Human Rights (Scotland Act 1998, section 29). It is not clear why this section is necessary. It remains unclear in any event how the rights mentioned in section 14 will interact with the public sector equality duties contained in section 149 of the Equality Act 2010. Given the profile of recent cases citing a breach of an individual’s article 9 rights in the course of their employment, individuals working in the public sector need to be clear that the equality duties of their employers can in some cases take precedence over respect for the employee’s article 9 and 10 rights to express and act on their own views.

Part 2 – Civil Partnership

Section 22 provides a similar opt-in system for the prescription of religious or belief bodies to register civil partnerships and for the authorisation of religious or belief celebrants to register civil partnerships, as sections 10 and 11 does in relation the solemnisation of same-sex marriage.

We think that this raises the same questions in relation to the possibility of future challenge on grounds of discrimination according to the European Convention on Human Rights.

---

1. Everyone whose rights and freedoms as set forth in this Convention are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity.
2. Eweida and others v United Kingdom (App. Nos. 48420/10, 59842/10, 51671/10 and 36516/10) [2013] All ER (D) 69 (Jan)
Section 25 corrects an anomaly where civil partnerships were dissolved using the simplified procedure but without obtaining third party evidence before the Evidence in Civil Partnership and Divorce Actions (Scotland) Order 2012\(^3\) came into effect\(^4\). Section 25 grants retrospective effect to the Order to validate the dissolutions that took place between 2005 and 2012 under the simplified procedure.

We are aware that the Faculty of Advocates has drawn the Scottish Government’s attention to the potential difficulties inherent in this approach and has instead suggested that the problem was corrected by imposing a prospective measure, precluding future challenge to the dissolution. However, the Scottish Government appears to be satisfied that by granting retrospective effect to the Order, this will have the same effect. We would suggest that further consideration is given to this issue to ensure that it does not result in unintended consequences for succession rights, pension entitlements, tax liabilities and benefit rights, as well as the future status of any civil partnership (or same-sex marriage) subsequently entered into.

The committee welcomes the decision not to proceed with the repeal of sections 3(3) and (4) of the Family Law (Scotland) Act 2006, while the provisions at section 29 of the Act conferring rights on cohabitants as drafted are restrictive in their terms.

Part 3 – Marriage and Civil Partnership: other provision

Section 26 removes the common law offence of bigamy and replaces it with a new statutory offence with a maximum of 2 years’ imprisonment on indictment (12 months on summary conviction) and a maximum fine of £10,000. We are pleased to note that these penalties are higher than those that were put forward at consultation stage (imprisonment not exceeding three months or to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale or both), as it is our view that bigamy is a serious offence, which can have potentially a very damaging effect on the parties involved.

Part 4 – Change of Gender of Married Persons or Civil Partners

Schedule 2, as introduced by section 27, introduces the concept of a “statutory declaration of consent” in relation to the issuing of a gender recognition certificate (GRC) to a person, namely a statutory declaration by the person’s spouse that the spouse consents to the marriage continuing after the issue of a full gender recognition certificate. While we appreciate that the bill aims to balance the interests of the transgender person and his/her spouse, we would ask the Scottish Government to satisfy itself that this provision could not have the unintended consequence of prolonging a transgender individual’s transitioning process by effectively placing the power to obtain a GRC in the hands of his or her spouse, and potentially contravening his or her right to gender recognition under Article 8 of the ECHR.

---

\(^3\) SSI 2012/111

\(^4\) The external evidence requirement was dropped for divorces under the simplified procedure by the Evidence in Divorce Actions (Scotland) Order 1989 but no equivalent dispensation was given for simplified dissolutions.
The Scottish Government recognises that having to divorce or dissolve a civil partnership where one party to the relationship is seeking a GRC can lead to the loss of some accrued rights. The provisions in sections 27 and 28 seek to ensure that this is not the case if both parties wish to stay in a “legally recognised relationship”. Following the Family Law (Scotland) Act 2006, cohabiting couples now also have a legally recognised relationship; however, the bill doesn’t make provision for spouses/civil partners where one party seeks a GRC who may wish to stay together but would prefer to cohabit rather than marry or enter into a civil partnership. For the sake of parity, such couples should be able to make financial claims as cohabitees and should have the full extent of their relationship recognised for the purpose of determining what their entitlements are upon separation or death.

Part 5 – Registration Services

We have no comment to make on this part.

Part 6 – General Provisions

We have no comment to make on this part.

Katie Hay
Law Reform
The Law Society of Scotland
23 August 2013

---

5 The Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill: A Consultation, Annex D, page 53
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Two consenting adults in love and wishes to marry should have no impact on anyone except the two concerned. Future generations will learn that it's possible to love and marry the person they choose. It's all about a better future for everyone.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Very important to have but what is freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Bryan Lee-Chan
17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Paul Leinster
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group
a private individual

Ross Harrison
LGBT Bristol
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

LGBT Labour Scotland strongly supports and welcomes the bill. We believe the legislation will be a huge step forward for equality in Scotland, and that it provides a balance between equality and freedoms of religion and speech. We believe it is the right time to introduce full marriage equality. It is a debate that is being had across the world and has the overwhelming support of the LGBT community and widespread support amongst the public. When this bill does pass, it will mean another major step towards equality for everyone regardless of your sexual preference. We do believe that some parts of the bill could still be improved further - we outline these in the responses to questions 7, 8 and 11 below.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

LGBT Labour Scotland believes that the introduction of same sex marriage in Scotland sends the message to all that we live in a modern and inclusive Scotland. It is vital that the bill does not create two different versions of marriage, same-sex marriage and mixed-sex marriage, because that would lead to continued discrimination. The law should treat all marriages the same, regardless of the genders of the spouses. We believe the bill achieves that, with the exceptions of the arrangements to allow religious and belief bodies to choose to conduct mixed-sex marriages only, and the outdated rule of law that in a mixed-sex marriage the wife cannot be charged with resetting goods stolen by her husband. The treatment of those issues in the bill is correct. The bill applies the existing meaning of adultery as evidence for divorce, to same-sex and mixed-sex marriages. Under the existing law, sexual intercourse with a person of the opposite sex is adultery; other forms of sexual infidelity, with a person of the same sex (or opposite sex), can instead form the basis of a divorce under the “unreasonable behaviour” rule. We agree with the approach taken which applies the law on adultery and other sexual infidelity equally to same-sex and mixed-sex marriages, and allows divorce on grounds of sexual infidelity for all marriages. As there is no consummation requirement for marriage in Scotland there is no need for the bill to address this for same-sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support
LGBT Labour Scotland welcomes that the bill clarifies that belief celebrants will be on equal footing with religious celebrants and that other organisations similar to the Humanist Society can also apply to conduct marriages.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

LGBT Labour Scotland believes that the bill upholds freedom of religion and that this should be applied to both groups of celebrants and that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide whether to perform only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well. We believe it is fundamental to liberty that churches should make their own decisions. That of course includes the right of those churches/faiths (such as the Unitarians, Quakers and Liberal Judaism) that wish to undertake same-sex marriage to be able to do so. We think that the opt-in procedures in the bill are the best way to do this and with the amendments to the Equality Act 2010, which have been agreed with the UK Government, protect the religious freedom of religious bodies and of their members who participate in marriage ceremonies. We also believe that there should be an amendment to the bill, to allow religious and belief bodies that want to, to use the gender-neutral form of marriage ceremony for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that. Some religious organisations will want to use the gender-specific terms “husband and wife” for all their marriages, and they should be free to do so. And those terms should continue to be available for couples that want to use them. We strongly believe that this is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

We are fully supportive of the bill’s proposal to allow couples in civil partnerships to convert their partnership into a marriage and research from the Equality Network shows that most couples in civil partnerships would want to convert to a marriage by means of a hassle-free administrative procedure. However, we note with concern that only couples whose civil partnership was registered in Scotland will be able to convert their partnership into a marriage will be able to do so in the manner outlined above. Couples who had their ceremony registered in another country and who have subsequently moved to Scotland will in effect have to dissolve their civil partnership in order to convert it to marriage. In order for a civil partnership to be dissolved, the couple would have to prove that the partnership is beyond repair by living apart for one year. If the couple returns to the country where they registered their partnership, if that country does not recognise same-sex marriage, they will still have to dissolve their partnership. LGBT Labour Scotland believes this is deeply unfair and recommends that all couples in civil partnerships be allowed to convert to a marriage by the same procedure.
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

We welcome this proposal.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Although we imagine most of our members would prefer a civil marriage, religious marriage or civil partnership, we welcome the option of religious and belief registrations of civil partnerships being there for those who wish to take advantage of it. This option may be of benefit to same-sex couples with religious beliefs who would rather have a civil partnership rather than a marriage and churches who are not happy about performing same-sex marriage but would be comfortable with religious and belief registrations of civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

LGBT Labour Scotland strongly supports allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. However we believe that there are amendments needed to the parts of the bill that deal with gender recognition. At the moment, unamended, the bill will allow a married person to require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. This enables the spouse to effectively “veto” the trans person™s gender recognition, or at least to delay it while the trans person applies for a divorce. The spousal consent provision in the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Act generated a great deal of criticism from trans people during the passage of the Act at Westminster and has led to many trans people feeling deeply unhappy about the legislation as enacted. We therefore strongly believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. We think that the bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding legislation at Westminster, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. LGBT Labour Scotland understands that when a person has been transitioned for a long time, it can be very difficult to obtain all the medical evidence as they may no longer be in contact with their medical team. We believe that a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill; this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. We would also like to see the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland to 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

LGBT Labour Scotland believes the bill makes a good balance between giving equal rights to the LGBT community and those who are not members of the LGBT community. However, we note with concern certain proposals to allow registrars to be able to opt out of performing a same-sex marriage on account of the celebrant’s own personal religious beliefs. We are firmly opposed to such an idea. When conducting a ceremony, registrars are acting on behalf of the state, not a religious organisation, and we would therefore expect them to perform a same-sex marriage if it is legal in the eyes of the state to do so. Allowing registrars to opt out of performing same-sex marriages because of their own prejudices sets a very dangerous precedent. It could lead to practitioners in the public service, e.g. doctors, nurses, etc. picking and choosing whom they want to treat on the basis of their own personal religious beliefs and LGBT Labour Scotland believes that this would send a perverse message that service provision for LGBT people should fall outside of these parameters. The present system which does not give registrars an opt-out for civil partnerships, works well and we see no reason why this should be any different for performing same-sex marriages. There have also been calls for teachers to be able to opt-out of discussing same-sex marriage and for parents to be able to withdraw their children from lessons discussing it. We are firmly opposed to this proposal as it is very much akin to reintroducing Section 2A of the Local Government (Scotland) Act of 1986 which the Scottish Parliament repealed in 2000. Pupils should be prepared for the world they live in. Same-sex marriages will be part of that and the chances are they will encounter them during their lives. As part of a comprehensive education that should be aware that such marriages exist on an equitable basis as others. The focus of teachers should be holistic education of the children in their charge, not their own views. We note that opt-outs are not available where other issues contentious for some people, such as divorce, are discussed.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We believe that the bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech, as section 14 of the bill outlines. People will remain free to disagree with same-sex marriage and to express that disagreement publicly. The Lord Advocate’s guidance published with the bill clarifies that it is not a crime to disagree publicly with same-sex marriage. The case of Smith v. Trafford Housing Trust has also clearly demonstrated that it is against the law for an employer to take action against an employee simply because they say publicly that they disagree with same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

We strongly believe that the bill is a huge step forward for equality, but recognise that it does not introduce full equal marriage. The main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. We believe that the same choices; marriage or civil partnership, should be open to all couples regardless of their gender. Many people in our modern society are uncomfortable with some of the connotations of marriage; it seems only fair that people are given the choice. We seek to move towards a society whereby institutions are not available based on who you love; but open to all. Everyone in the country should be able to decide whether they wish to marry or instead to enter into a civil partnership. We therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment to conduct a review of civil partnership law and we believe that the review should start without delay, and once it is complete, there should be legislation brought forward to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally, we understand that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and that under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. LGBT Labour Scotland strongly feels that this is clear discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation, to report by July 2014. The UK Government has the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and we strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete.

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group

LGBT Labour Scotland
23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
FURTHER SUBMISSION FROM LGBT SCOTLAND

I. Details on witness and organisation

LGBT Youth Scotland is the largest youth and community-based organisation for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender young people in Scotland. Our mission is to ‘empower lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender young people and the wider LGBT community so that they are embraced as full members of the Scottish family at home, school and in every community.’

Brandi Lee Lough Dennell is the Policy and Participation Manager within the Policy and Mainstreaming Team at LGBT Youth Scotland.

II. Facts and views on the Bill that will be presented

A. The Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill is a positive piece of legislation
   i. LGBT young people’s comments on what the introduction would mean for them show that they support the Bill.
   ii. Improves access to equality based on sexual orientation and gender identity while increasing and protecting religious freedoms.
   iii. Has the potential to greatly increase LGBT inclusion in society; particularly in education. Research on inclusive educational experiences and LGBT young people’s views on the positive changes in the learning environment that they expect to see as a result of the Bill.

B. Education
   i. The existing legal protections for teachers and other professionals are sufficient and Section 14 should remain in the Bill.
   ii. LGBT visibility in educational teaching and the role PSE plays in providing vital information.
   iii. Importance of not privileging the views of adults over the views and needs of young people when considering sexual-health class opt-outs. Includes responses on consultation with LGBT young people on their desire to opt-in to classes.
      a) Role of teachers to consider young people’s rights and well-being, particularly in regards to the Health and Wellbeing Outcomes in Curriculum for Excellence.
C. Transgender and Bisexual people may face discrimination under Bill
   i. Gender neutral language is important for all schedules and certificates
      a) Transgender individuals, particularly androgyne people and transgender people who do not wish to apply for a GRC, may be forced to use gendered language with which they do not identify (based on their legal documents).
   ii. The review on mixed-sex civil partnerships must take place
      a) LGBT young people have raised the issue since 2009.
      b) Comments from LGBT young people
   iii. Age of Gender Recognition Certificates
      a) This should be changed in Scotland to reflect the legal age of capacity of 16 within Scots Law.
      b) Transgender young people who have lived in acquired gender prior to age 16 face the choice between waiting for marriage and entering into a marriage with legal documents prior to GRC. This means that they will have to later re-register with updated information.
      c) Quotes from young people who have delayed marriage until old enough to apply for GRC.

For more information on LGBT Youth Scotland’s views on the Bill, please see our organisational written evidence.

Brandi Lee Lough Dennell
Policy and Participation Manager
LGBT Youth Scotland
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

The Liberal Democrats were the first major party and the first party of Government to adopt same-sex marriage as policy, and that began with the Scottish Liberal Democrats. This Bill takes Scottish law closer to Liberal Democrat policy. Our major concern is that the amendments to the 2004 Gender Recognition Act introduced by Schedule 2, section 3 of this Bill introduce a "spousal veto". This allows somebody to block their spouse's acquisition of a full Gender Recognition Certificate. Gender changes often can lead to breakup of marriage, and those situations may be bitter and acrimonious. It is wrong that an antagonistic spouse could delay both full GRC and then divorce to make life as difficult as possible for the spouse seeking gender recognition. We believe that it is sufficient that a spouse changing gender without the consent of their partner would be grounds for divorce, which does not need to block the applicant's gender recognition process. We are also disappointed that the Scottish Government, despite promising initial indications, is not planning to introduce mixed-sex Civil Partnerships with this Bill.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

We believe that there is no good reason to restrict the legal institution of marriage from same-sex couples. We believe that the current segregation encourages homophobia. We further believe that there is no good reason to restrict willing religious and faith organisations and their willing celebrants from conducting religious and faith-based marriage ceremonies for same-sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Liberal Democrat party policy is to enable belief celebrants to conduct weddings on the same footing as religious celebrants.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

We have concerns about the lack of symmetry between authorising bodies. If a religious or belief celebrant does not wish to solemnise a same-sex marriage, even when their religious or belief body permits this, then they are not compelled to do so; we support this. However, if a celebrant wishes to solemnise a same-sex marriage when their religious or faith body does not, then they are not permitted to do so, and this seems unfair. In one case, the wishes of the celebrant are allowed to override the position of the body; in the other they are not.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Many same-sex couples had civil partnerships when they were the only institution available, as they were better than nothing, but would have preferred to marry. We believe that those couples should be able to convert their civil partnerships into marriage with a minimum of expense and effort. However, there are those couples who prefer the legal and social standing of the institution of civil partnership to that of marriage, and they should not be compelled to convert. Similarly, civil partnerships should be available to all couples regardless of gender. We believe that all civil partnerships recognised in Scotland, no matter where they were registered, should be eligible for conversion into a same-sex marriage under Scottish law.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This seems like a sensible reduction in unnecessary regulation which will give couples more flexibility.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

It is entirely possible that people may have religious faith and wish to be joined in union in the context of that faith, but prefer the legal and social implications of a civil partnership than those of marriage. As Liberals, we cannot see a good reason not to permit this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

We have a major concern with the amendments to the Gender Recognition Act which will allow a spouse to veto an applicant from being awarded a full Gender Recognition Certificate. By the time an applicant is able to even apply for a GRC, they have been living as their acquired gender for at least 2 years. This should not come as a surprise to the spouse and by this point the spouse has had ample opportunity to divorce the applicant. It would be wrong to allow a vindictive or spiteful spouse the opportunity to hamper the applicant’s right to gender recognition in this way. We also believe that "fast track" procedures for people who have been transitioned for a long time should be permitted.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We believe that the Bill provides ample protections for people who do not wish to perform religious same-sex marriages. We believe that people carrying out civil same-sex marriages are not taking part in a faith or belief ceremony and therefore should not be allowed to refuse on the grounds of religious conviction.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

We believe it is right that people who disagree with same-sex marriage should be able to express that disagreement, provided they do not do so hatefully, incite violence or so on. We believe that that right is strongly protected by this legislation and support that.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

We believe that the Bill presents a good opportunity to correct a historical injustice. Prior to this Bill, married trans people were forced to divorce in order to obtain legal gender recognition, adding the pain of divorce to the stress of transition. Happily this will no longer be the case thanks to this Bill. We believe that there should be some process of restitution for people forced to divorce, particularly those who immediately entered into civil partnership with their former spouse. If these couples should convert their civil partnership into a same-sex marriage, the effective date of the marriage should not be that of the civil partnership (as per clause 9.1.b of the Bill), but the date of the original marriage. We are aware of recent legal developments in the UK and abroad towards recognition of people who do not identify as male or female, including increasing international adoption of the "X" gender marker on passports. We believe that it would be sensible for this legislation and its explanatory notes to allow for situations where one or both parties to a marriage or civil partnership is neither male nor female and what this implies for a "same-sex" or "mixed-sex" union.

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group

Dave Page
LGBT+ Liberal Democrats
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Protections should be in place so that no-one is forced to change a belief that marriage is only between a man and a woman. However, for those providing a public service they should not be able to refuse service to a couple just because they happen to be of the same sex.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The time has come for equal marriage. Opinion polls show consistently that the majority of people are in favour of it. In Scotland, legalising same sex marriage would mean that the Scottish law will catch up to the law of England and Wales.

Are you responding as...

an LGBT group

Matthew Sephton
LGBTory - The Conservative LGBT group
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

LGCM (Lesbian and Gay Christian Movement) strongly supports and welcomes the bill. It will be a huge step forward for equality in Scotland, and it balances equality with respect for freedom of religion and freedom of speech.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

LGCM has campaigned for the introduction of same-sex marriage for many years, because LGBT people across Scotland have told us how important that is for them, especially LGBT people of faith who have been denied the opportunity to celebrate their relationships before God and with their community of faith. It is very important that the bill does not create two different versions of marriage, same-sex marriage and mixed-sex marriage, because that would lead to continued discrimination. The law should treat all marriages the same, regardless of the genders of the spouses. We welcome that the bill achieves that, with the exceptions of the arrangements to allow religious and belief bodies to choose to conduct mixed-sex marriages only, and the outdated rule of law that in a mixed-sex marriage the wife cannot be charged with resetting goods stolen by her husband. The treatment of those issues in the bill is appropriate. We also note that the bill applies unchanged the existing meaning of adultery as evidence for divorce, to same-sex and mixed-sex marriages. Under the existing law, sexual intercourse with a person of the opposite sex is adultery; other forms of sexual infidelity, with a person of the opposite sex or the same sex, do not fall within the existing legal definition of adultery but can form the basis of a divorce under the unreasonable behaviour rule. We agree with the approach taken in the bill, which applies the law on adultery and other sexual infidelity equally to same-sex and mixed-sex marriages, and allows divorce on grounds of sexual infidelity for all marriages. In Scotland, there is no consummation requirement for marriage, and so there is no need for the bill to address this for same-sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

Humanist celebrants in Scotland can already conduct legally-recognised marriages. The bill clarifies that in the law, and makes clear that other philosophical belief organisations can also apply to conduct marriages. We welcome this.
How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

We agree that religious and belief organisations should be free to decide for themselves whether to solemnise only mixed-sex marriages, or same-sex marriages as well. Some religious bodies want to conduct same-sex marriages, including the Quakers, Unitarians, Metropolitan Community Churches, Liberal Jews and others. Other religious bodies, including the larger churches, do not want to conduct same-sex marriages. Religious freedom should apply to both groups, and the bill gets the balance right. However, it is important that where there are shared premises that one group does not have the right veto the ability of another group to opt in. We think that the opt-in procedures in the bill are the appropriate way to do this, and, together with the amendments to the Equality Act 2010 which have been agreed with the UK Government, protect the religious freedom of religious bodies and of their members who participate in marriage ceremonies. We think that a small amendment is needed to section 11(2) of the bill, in order to give those religious and belief bodies that want to, the option of using the gender-free form of the marriage ceremony, in section 11(2)(g), for mixed-sex couples who would prefer that form. This is particularly important for mixed-sex couples where one or both is transgender or intersex. Religious bodies that wish to always use the “husband and wife” gendered form of the marriage ceremony should be free to continue to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

From consulting with many people in civil partnerships, we know that at least half are likely to want to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Some couples who want to change would like to do so by marrying in the usual way, in a civil ceremony or a religious or belief ceremony conducted by an organisation that chooses to conduct same-sex marriages. However, many couples in civil partnerships would prefer to change their civil partnership to a marriage via a simple and inexpensive administrative procedure they have already had their big ceremony when they had their civil partnership. The bill provides both those ways of changing a civil partnership to a marriage, which we welcome. However, in the bill, couples who are already in a civil partnership can only convert to a marriage in Scotland if their civil partnership was registered in Scotland. Clearly the lightweight administrative procedure for changing to a marriage can only work with civil partnerships registered here in Scotland, but we see no reason why couples in a civil partnership registered elsewhere should not be allowed to marry in Scotland in the usual way. Not allowing this would cause real problems for couples who registered a civil partnership abroad and then moved to Scotland. They will be unable to change to a marriage unless they first dissolve their civil partnership. But that requires proving that the civil partnership has irretrievably broken down, by living apart for a year. It is very unfair to ask civil partners to do that in order to marry. Even if they return to the country where they registered their civil partnership, if that country does not allow same-sex marriage, they would need to dissolve their civil partnership there in a similar way before coming back to Scotland to marry. The practical result will be that the couple will effectively be barred from marrying. In contrast, same-sex couples from any part of the world who are not in a civil partnership will be allowed come to Scotland to marry, whether or not that marriage would be recognised in their home country. We see no reason why this should not also apply to couples who are already in a civil partnership, and we believe that the bill should be amended to allow this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This is not specifically an issue for LGBT people, but we welcome the additional flexibility that will be allowed in choosing the location of civil marriage ceremonies.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Allowing the registration of civil partnerships in a ceremony conducted by a religious or belief body that chooses to do so, is important as there are some religious bodies that would not wish to conduct same-sex marriages, but would be prepared to offer religious civil partnership ceremonies to same-sex couples who are their members. There may also be some couples with religious beliefs who would prefer a civil partnership to a marriage as they feel this type of contract is more relevant to how they understand their relationship.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Absolutely!! We strongly support the principle of allowing transgender people who are married to obtain gender recognition without being required by the state to divorce. In our view, however, a number of amendments are needed to the parts of the bill that deal with gender recognition. As the bill stands, a married person will require the consent of their spouse to obtain gender recognition. This enables the spouse to effectively veto the trans person’s gender recognition, or at least to delay it while the trans person applies for a divorce. If the relationship between the spouses is difficult, the divorce proceedings could take a long time, during which the trans person is unable to access their human right to legal recognition in their true gender. When a trans person applies for gender recognition, they have already been living in their acquired gender for at least two years. Obtaining gender recognition does not therefore change the practical nature of their marriage, which has been same-sex for at least two years. But it does free the trans person from discrimination by bringing their legal status into line with reality. That should be available with or without the spouse’s consent, because it is a matter personal to the trans person, and has no direct effect on their spouse. It is the re-registration of the marriage after gender recognition where both spouses have a direct interest, and where a requirement for the consent of the trans person’s spouse would be appropriate. We therefore believe that spousal consent should not be required for the granting of gender recognition, but should instead be required for the subsequent re-registration of the marriage and the issue of a new marriage certificate. As at present, the non-trans spouse would continue to be able to obtain a divorce in such circumstances, if they wished to end the marriage. The bill is also currently missing a provision that was added to the corresponding English legislation, allowing a person to obtain gender recognition with simpler evidence requirements if they have been transitioned for at least six years. When a person has been transitioned for a long time, it can be very difficult indeed to obtain all the medical evidence that is required from people who have only been transitioned two years. The doctors involved may have retired or even died. We therefore believe that a provision for simpler medical evidence for long-term transitioned people should be added to the bill; this would assist the Gender Recognition Panel as well as applicants. We would also like to see the minimum age for applying for gender recognition brought into line with the minimum age for marrying in Scotland, that is, 16.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

We think that the bill strikes the right balance, and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to. Even where an organisation does agree, individual marriage celebrants within that organisation will be free to opt-out of same-sex marriages, as will any person who plays a part in the religious marriage ceremonies of that organisation (e.g. the church organist). These are strong protections. It has been proposed by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. We would strongly oppose that. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race. The registrars’ organisation, the Association of Registrars of Scotland, is not calling for an opt-out. The registering of civil partnerships in Scotland by civil registrars has worked well without any such legal opt-out, and we expect the registering of same-sex marriages to work equally well in a similar way. It has also been proposed by some people that teachers should have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. We would strongly oppose this. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned.
Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce or abortion are mentioned, which are equally controversial for some people. We have developed a lesson plan to deal with this topic for use in secondary school and can be found at www.faithandsexuality.co.uk

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech, as section 14 of the bill confirms. People will remain free to disagree with same-sex marriage and to express that disagreement publicly. The Lord Advocate’s guidance published with the bill makes clear that it is not a crime to disagree publicly with same-sex marriage. The case of Smith v. Trafford Housing Trust demonstrates clearly that it is against the law for an employer to take action against an employee simply because they say publicly that they disagree with same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. Apart from the issues mentioned under questions 7, 8 and 11 above, the main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. That has always been a part of the wider Equal Marriage campaign in Scotland. We believe that the same choices – marriage or civil partnership - should be open to all couples regardless of their gender. We therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law, driven by the need to consider the position on opposite sex civil partnerships. We believe that review should start without delay, and, once it is complete, there should be prompt legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage. Finally, we note that the regulation of private sector pension schemes is reserved to Westminster, and that under the current rules, private sector pension schemes will be allowed to pay much smaller survivor’s pensions to people in same-sex marriages than to those in mixed-sex marriages. This is clear discrimination, and the UK Government has agreed to set up a review of the situation, to report by July 2014. The UK Government have the power to change the rules on this by statutory instrument, and we strongly believe that they should do that once the review is complete.

Are you responding as...

- a faith/belief-based organisation
- a faith/belief local group or congregation
- an LGBT group

Rev Sharon Ferguson
LGCM
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

As a Scottish Liberal Democrat, I am pleased to see a Bill that takes the law closer to the policy the party adopted. It's not perfect, but it is a better Bill than that passed south of the Border. I hope that the Government will consider amendments on the following: My biggest concern is that the amendments to the 2004 Gender Recognition Act introduced by Schedule 2, section 3 of this Bill introduce a "spousal veto". This allows somebody to block their spouse's acquisition of a full Gender Recognition Certificate. Gender changes often can lead to breakup of marriage, and those situations may be bitter and acrimonious. It is wrong that an antagonistic spouse could delay both full GRC and then divorce to make life as difficult as possible for the spouse seeking gender recognition. I believe that it is sufficient that a spouse changing gender without the consent of their partner would be grounds for divorce, which does not need to block the applicant's gender recognition process. I would like to see the bill amended to see the introduction of mixed-sex Civil Partnerships with this Bill.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

For me, it's very simple. If two people want to formalise their union in some way, then any option to do so should be open to them regardless of their gender. To have one system for a man and a women, and another for two men or two women is totally discriminatory and invites prejudice. I'm equally comfortable with mixed sex civil partnership and same sex marriage. They are slightly different institutions and I think that mixed sex civil partnerships could appeal to people for whom marriage represents a takeover of the woman's rights and identity.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

There is no reason not to allow this.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

Neither

I think there should be more symmetry between authorising bodies. If a religious or belief celebrant does not wish to solemnise a same-sex marriage, even when their religious or belief body permits this, then they are not compelled to do so; I support this. However, if a celebrant wishes to solemnise a same-sex marriage when their religious or faith body does not, then they are not permitted to do so, and this seems unfair. In one case, the wishes of the celebrant are allowed to override the position of the body; in the other they are not.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Many same-sex couples had civil partnerships when they were the only institution available, as they were better than nothing, but would have preferred to marry. We believe that those couples should be able to convert their civil partnerships into marriage with a minimum of expense and effort. However, there are those couples who prefer the legal and social standing of the institution of civil partnership to that of marriage, and they should not be compelled to convert. Similarly, civil partnerships should be available to all couples regardless of gender. We believe that all civil partnerships recognised in Scotland, no matter where they were registered, should be eligible for conversion into a same-sex marriage under Scottish law.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

As a liberal, I see no sensible reason why people should not get married where they wish. Why would the State wish to restrict such a thing?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

As a liberal, again, I think that it should be up to the couple to decide whether they want a marriage or civil partnership, and whether that is enacted in a religious or belief set up. The state should permit any combination.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

On this I support the position of LGBT + Liberal Democrats which states: "We have a major concern with the amendments to the Gender Recognition Act which will allow a spouse to veto an applicant from being awarded a full Gender Recognition Certificate. By the time an applicant is able to even apply for a GRC, they have been living as their acquired gender for at least 2 years. This should not come as a surprise to the spouse and by this point the spouse has had ample opportunity to divorce the applicant. It would be wrong to allow a vindictive or spiteful spouse the opportunity to hamper the applicant’s right to gender recognition in this way. We also believe that "fast track" procedures for people who have been transitioned for a long time should be permitted.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There are more than enough protections for those who religious celebrants to perform same sex marriages. I would oppose any attempt to give civil registrars the ability to opt out of performing same sex marriages. As public servants, they should be obliged to give, without fear or favour, their service to anybody who legally seeks it.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

If people wish to say that they don't agree with same sex marriage, then that should be their right to do so. Inciting hatred or violence, however, should not be tolerated.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I endorse what LGBT+ Liberal Democrats have said in their submission: "We believe that the Bill presents a good opportunity to correct a historical injustice. Prior to this Bill, married trans people were forced to divorce in order to obtain legal gender recognition, adding the pain of divorce to the stress of transition. Happily this will no longer be the case thanks to this Bill. We believe that there should be some process of restitution for people forced to divorce, particularly those who immediately entered into civil partnership with their former spouse. If these couples should convert their civil partnership into a same-sex marriage, the effective date of the marriage should not be that of the civil partnership (as per clause 9.1.b of the Bill), but the date of the original marriage. We are aware of recent legal developments in the UK and abroad towards recognition of people who do not identify as male or female, including increasing international adoption of the "X" gender marker on passports. We believe that it would be sensible for this legislation and its explanatory notes to allow for situations where one or both parties to a marriage or civil partnership is neither male nor female and what this implies for a "same-sex" or "mixed-sex" union."

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Caron Lindsay
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage is meant to be a loving relationship between a man and woman whose bodies are naturally designed to be able to produce children who then can be brought into a family with a father and mother which same sex couples although caring for one another cannot do.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Belief celebrants can develop and change their views but religious celebrants are meant to follow a religion which is meant to be followed and not initiated by their own ideas but the teachings of the founders or teachers of their faith.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

It seems that legal rights of same sex couples are given to them in civil partnership

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Very important that one can express ones views pro or anti .Seems that people can be victimised unjustly and

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mary Linton
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Eilidh Little
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Everyone should have the right to marry the person they love regardless of gender or sexual orientation

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Sexual orientation should not prevent two people in love getting married

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

But only if the religious body was not being forced to perform it

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Gordon little
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

People should still have the opportunity to have civil partnerships if they would prefer. They might have political objections to the notion of marriage given that it has developed out of an arrangement whereby the woman becomes the man's property (for example).

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

While people are entitled to their views whether those are religious, moral etc, where those views support the oppression or discrimination against minority groups then society should do nothing to accommodate those views/beliefs.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I support freedom of speech, but like all freedoms it has its limits (eg don't shout fire in a crowded theatre). However, I think people should be free to say that they don't support gay marriage, but people should also be free to criticise those people and say that they are mistaken.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

MON THE GAYS

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Marc Livingstone
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Beth Lloyd
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Raychel Lloyd
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

I believe all celebrants should be required to be registered by the State, and in order for the marriages they conduct to be recognised by the State, the ceremony they perform should be accepted by the State as being in accordance with the Law. I believe religious ceremonies are for the Churches to determine, but if not conducted by someone qualified and registered by the State, they should have no more standing than any other ceremony conducted by a club. So, all celebrants should be on the same footing, but should meet the same State requirements, whether or not they are religious.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

I believe that should be a matter for the Churches and their members who are in Civil Partnerships
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Providing both partners in a marriage which was formerly heterosexual wish to remain married, and that the partner who has retained birth assigned gender recognises and accepts the acquired gender of the other

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

One day, I hope Churches will accept a range of equality legislation from which they are currently exempt. Currently, some churches are unlikely to do so. I do not think the State should recognise the marriages conducted by these Churches or their celebrants, unless and until the Churches recognise all marriages conducted by the State

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mary Lockhart
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM EDWARD LOVE

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Edward Love
13 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM MARCAS MAC AN TUAIIRNEIR

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support
Get on with it.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
Get on with it.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support
Get on with it.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support
Get on with it.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
Get on with it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support
Get on with it.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Get on with it. This bill was passed in England and Wales months ago. There is no valid reason why it has taken so long up here, besides the ridiculous assertion that everything in Scotland should be done 'differently' to that in England for the sake of it. Equal marriage has been used as a bargaining tool for all parties in the UK for years. I'm sick of that. My liberty isn't a tool to boost your PR. If the SNP government wants to strengthen Scottish identity, perhaps it should have considered allowing me to fill in this form in Gaelic, as per the Gaelic Language (Scotland) Act 2003. I'm sick of being told that x is Scottish because it's not English. Emancipate Scotland using it's own culture, not by putting it into some ridiculous historical rivalry with its neighbours. It's about time the SNP started to pull their finger out instead of laying the blame for all Scotland's ills at Westminster's door.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Marcas Mac an Tuairneir
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

This is introducing an absurdity in the law.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Marriage requires a man and a woman. Nothing else will do. Unions between same sex couples will never be marriages whatever they call them. Legislators would do well to remember that you can can fool some of the people some of the time, you can fool some of the people all of the time but you can't fool all of the people all of the time.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Provided the individuals concerned had been properly married in the first place and both agreed to remain so after the change in circumstances.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Protection for individuals and organisations who oppose controversial legislation is difficult to frame in a watertight way with so many courts nowadays where these provisions can be challenged. Better not to have the controversial legislation in the first place.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Individuals have already been pilloried and persecuted for stating opposition to same sex marriage and the education aspects that come with it. This is even before the legislation is put in place. What will it be like afterwards? It used to be said in this country about freedom of speech "We might not agree with what you say but we will fight for your right to say it".

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I am old enough to remember the second world war if not quite old enough to have taken part in it and I do remember the reasons given at the time for fighting it i.e. to preserve world freedom, freedom from fear, freedom of speech and freedom of religion. This proposed legislation would seem to go a long way to undermining all of these especially considering that it was not included in any party's manifesto before the last election.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mr.F.J.MacConnell
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

The registration of civil partnerships may be necessary to protect property and inheritance issues but this would appear to be covered by previous legislation.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
As a retired primary school teacher I always taught according to the dictates of my conscience. Now teachers are being forced to teach against their conscience. If this bill becomes law then the so called safeguards can easily be overturned as evidenced by previous experience. This country fought for freedom of speech and freedom of religion. Are not these freedoms being compromised by the provisions of this bill?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

See comments in Section 12

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mrs. Angela MacConnell
23 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM ANGUS MACDONALD

I wish to express my views in connection with the Call for Evidence on the Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill.

I believe that Civil Partnership is a newly constructed legal definition of just two people (for whatever reason) living together, whereas marriage has always been an institution, generally accepted in our Society, whose definition has never been subject to any debate or scrutiny by young or old, and has always been considered as a natural relationship for man and woman.

For that reason I totally oppose this Bill.

My objection is not directed against any person or people group, but rather against your redefining something which will have far reaching effects in our society. No law can exist in isolation.

I write as a private individual.

Angus MacDonald
24 July 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM DON MACDONALD

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Don Macdonald
14 August 2013
I write as a private individual and have read the policy on treatment of written evidence by subject and mandatory committees.

I wish to express my views in connection with the Call for Evidence on the above Bill.

I am not in favour of this Bill as I believe Civil Partnership and Marriage to be two different entities, both adequately provided for with legal benefits, but instituted for different purposes. Marriage has always been an institution generally accepted in our society as a basis for a relationship between man and woman, and whose definition for centuries has never been subjected to any debate by young or old. I do not believe the former can be changed to the latter.

I also believe that bringing in this new law would have repercussions on individuals who would, by the very nature of their jobs, be subject to a redefinition of their function and therefore would not have freedom of conscience on the matter. I could only foresee disruption, even litigation, in any sphere of work directly or indirectly affected by this change.

My objections are not directed at any person or group, but against this move to redefine marriage.

Sheila MacDonald
26 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

It's quite simple about equality and allowing individuals and couples access the same options.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Moranne MacGillivray
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Loran macgregor
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Raymond Mackay
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Opt ins appear to provide sufficient protection I feel, but none for teachers or those performing civic ceremonies.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

There appears to be legal precedent of the ability to legally disagree with same sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Lets get this done and on the statute book. We should in my view build an inclusive society in spite of those who seek to put aside their laudable, high sentiments to insist on intolerance and division.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Bill Mackenzie
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

I am very happy living with my partner as a lesbian couple. we would prefer to have equality and live like other people in an equal marriage

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual
a public body

jennifer mackenzie
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I welcome the bill. As a person concerned with equality and inclusion in our society, I welcome the opportunity for same gender couples to have society and the law recognise their partnerships. I am delighted to think that the bill will give the rights to same gender couples that I enjoy now in my different gender marriage. Onwards to a fair society!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I would be delighted to see this as a legal right in Scotland. A fair society gives us all hope for the future.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I would like to see belief celebrants on a par with their religious colleagues. The reason for this is that I am not comfortable with the state selecting approved celebrants. I would expect all celebrants to attend to their duties to the law as is required of them.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

These seem to be in order...

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

This seems a fair idea, had they been available at the time I fell it's more than likely some civil partnerships would have been marriages. Let's let them get converted to married!
How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

I feel this follows on logically form the main thrust of the bill.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

This bit of the bill seems overly restrictive, I don't want to see trans people having gender recognition denied and delayed. It appears the English bill contains a better way forward.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I oppose an opt out for registrars in this matter and teachers.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

William Mackenzie
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Sarah Maclean
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Fraser MacLeod
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

It is unnecessary. Civil partnerships provide the same rights as marriage. The results of the original consultation demonstrated that the majority of people in Scotland are opposed to same-sex marriage although responses were deemed invalid if they were not submitted on the official pro-forma. Many accepted the initial request for the electorate to let its views be known in any way and so signed petitions, sent postcards etc.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Marriage is a unique relationship between a man and a woman in a lifelong union. Commitment and responsibility are key components. Under the new proposals for redefining marriage, adultery applies to traditional marriage only, so in fact there will now be two-tier marriage - which is not "marriage" at all, Children are a natural possibility in marriage, so children have a mother and father - both necessary in their upbringing. There are no long term studies on the effects of homosexual parenting; the short term studies, initiated by interested parties tend to give the desired results.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

In whichever category same-sex relationships may be placed, it cannot be marriage - they do not meet the criteria.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Cannot comment because I oppose redefining marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Although there is protection for clergy and churches that oppose same-sex marriage, it is very likely that this will be challenged. In England a church is being sued and the Bill has not yet been ratified. Conscientious objection appears to be set aside in our society and people are losing jobs and being arrested for expressing rational opposition to same-sex marriage. (a terrifying experience for innocent people) Children in school will be exposed to educational material from Stonewall, which under the pretext of dealing with bullying is in fact promoting homosexuality at a time when young people can experience attraction to the opposite sex that passes as they grow up. According to the Bill parents would not be allowed to remove their children from classes because it will be cross-curricular. There appears to be little protection for the rights of ordinary people, religious or not, who do not conform!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech is undoubtedly in jeopardy if this Bill is passed. Conformity is essential, otherwise there will be unpleasant consequences. Public servants are being told to find other jobs at a time when unemployment is high, if they refuse to set aside their beliefs and silence their consciences. Without true freedom of speech there can be no democracy - a high price to pay for equality for one small section of society.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The family, often referred to as the building blocks of society, is under threat. The destabilising effect of this Bill will provoke unrest in many ways and cause repercussions that only those with foresight can imagine.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Murdina Macleod

12 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I am in opposition to the Scottish Governments proposals to redefine the legal definition of marriage because I am a Christian who very strongly holds to the truth that God has defined marriage in his Holy Word contained in the Bible as being a lifelong

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Biblical marriage is a foundation of a stable society and of massive importance to bringing up children. Introducing Same Sex Marriage undermines and devalues the Biblical definition of marriage which will have further detrimental effects on society.

http://www.christian.org.uk/pdfpublications/childrenastrophies.pdf  (read p.127 onwards) The majority of the Scottish people do not want marriage redefined and it is scandalous that the Scottish Government has ignored that fact as shown by its consultation.

http://www.christiantoday.com/article/gay.marriage.consultation.makes.a.mockery.of.democracy/29477.htm  Also the majority of Gay men and women do not see same sex marriage as a priority so why is the Government pushing it through Parliament? See views of Russel Grant, Rupert Everett etc for evidence.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

Christian Ministers must be protected by the law from intimidation, and threat of being sued if they refuse to take part in a same sex marriage ceremony. Christian men and women who are marriage registrars must also be protected by the law if they exercise their freedom of conscience and exercise their right not to take part in a same sex marriage union based on their Christian beliefs that same sex marriage is Unbiblical and wrong in God's eyes. How can the Scottish Government guarantee that Christians will be protected by the law when recent cases like that of Lilian Ladelle the Christian Marriage Registrar who lost her job for refusing to take part in a Civil Partnership show that sexual rights trump religious beliefs?

http://www.christian.org.uk/issues/2012/ladele/  At the moment your promises of protection, based on recent cases such as this one, are at best highly questionable and at worst worthless.
How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

Can you guarantee that these arrangements (including opt-in procedures) will stand up to legal challenge, and will not be overruled by the European Court of Human Rights? Especially when recent cases like Lillian Ladelles (among many others) show that Christians rights are not valued by the European Courts.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

Changing the law so that Civil Partnerships could change to Same Sex Marriages would cost the tax payers of Scotland a fortune! And this in the midst of a recession!

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

Same Sex Marriage is wrong full stop. I, and my Christian brethren, are against it becoming legal no matter what premises it would be carried out on.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

If this refers to the 'opt in' procedure then I am against it as I said previously. If a church or denomination decides to 'opt- in' to allow same sex marriage within its buildings what happens to the individuals in that church who disagree with same sex

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

If a man or a woman has a 'sex change' operation then it is ridiculous for them to stay married to their spouse and have the new sex on the marriage certificate. What would it say Mr & Mr or Mrs & Mrs?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Christians are currently being persecuted in the UK for holding to the Biblical definition of marriage. So far a Christian police chaplain has lost his job for expressing his support for Biblical marriage [http://www.christian.org.uk/news/police-chaplain-dumped-for-opposing-gay-marriage/] also a primary school teacher was threatened with dismissal for objecting to having to teach from a same sex marriage children's book and parents wanting to withdraw their own children from a history lesson about gay marriage were refused and told that it is the schools legal duty to promote equality [http://www.christian.org.uk/news/compulsory-gay-marriage-lessons-in-schools/]. Also Christian foster carers have their application to foster refused because of their not supporting same sex marriage [http://www.christian.org.uk/news/cameron-wades-into-christian-foster-row/] also churches have been refused the hire of council owned community centres for holding to a Biblical view of marriage. These are just a handful of the cases of current persecution that Christians in the UK who hold to a Biblical view of Marriage and therefore do not support same sex marriage have faced. REDACTION admitted to me in an email that he does not see how the law can protect Christians from prosecution if they object to same sex marriage based on their freedom of conscience and religious beliefs. I ask you again, how can you promise that Christians will be legally protected when all the current evidence says that Christians are and will be prosecuted for holding to a Biblical view of marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of Speech was fought and died for in this country by our forefathers. As a Christian I support and pray for the Government, I pay my taxes and I try and work hard and be a good citizen of this country. But if the Government brings in a law that is contradictory to what the Bible teaches then I must go with what the Bible says. The Bible teaches that marriage is between one man and one woman for life for the procreation and raising of children (Genesis 1-3, 1 Corinthians 7). Same sex marriage goes against what God says so I oppose it. This does not mean that I do not love men and women who are gay because I do and I would defend any gay person from bullying etc. I am commanded by God to love everyone I come across and I try to by his Grace and mercy. Part of loving someone is telling them the truth. And I as a Christian have a duty to love and tell others that Jesus Christ came to save sinners and that if you 'believe the Lord Jesus you shall be saved.' Acts 16:31. Over the last 5 years or so there have been a number of cases of Christian evangelists being wrongly arrested for preaching the Good News of the Gospel that Jesus Christ came to save sinners, especially if they have mentioned at all that homosexuality is a sin in Gods eyes [http://www.christianpost.com/news/american-evangelist-arrested-in-london-for-preaching-homosexuality-is-a-sin-99420/] What is the Scottish Government going to do to uphold freedom of Speech in Scotland and ensure that these disgraceful instances of Christians being arrested for preaching never occur again?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I pray that you will do what God wants which is to keep the legal definition of marriage in Scotland as the Biblical definition of marriage. May God bless you all and have mercy on your souls in Christ Jesus.
Are you responding as...

A Christian Scottish Man

Alasdair BM Macleod
9 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

I feel that the role of marriage is between a man and a woman, redefining marriage is unnecessary as civil partnerships exits and this puts a lot of time and money that could be better spent elsewhere (eg health, education etc)

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

Marriage is an act between one woman and one man, this pre dates the law of the nation and even our national church. It is not clear what new rights this new marriage set up will give those in same sex partnerships that they do not have already other than opening up a clear avenue where the church leaves itself open to legal action if it holds to the scripture rather than the law of the land.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

As stated earlier, I feel that the definition of marriage is between one man and one woman. Changing this could result in further alterations such as the legalisation of poly-amorous marriages which is something that I feel would lead to further moral decline as I have never found any people in open relationships to be happy and often aggression and conflict are the norm.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition
Many ministers are opposed to homo sexual marriage and, if this bill is passed, would leave themselves open to legal proceedings if they refused to conduct the service based on their own conscience and beliefs. If anything I believe that homosexual marr

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Conscience clause should be introduced for those who are morally objected to the marriage of homosexual couples to ensure that they are not penalised by the law for making a concise decision based on their faith and beliefs. Ministers and church elders who are opposed to homo sexual marriage would leave themselves open to legal proceedings if they refused to conduct the service based on their own conscience and beliefs. If anything I believe that homosexual marriage should not take place in a religious establishment at all where membership for practising homosexuals isn't an option.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The freedom of speech act helps those who are "in the minority" as long as it sides with the governments view. However it doesn't help the like of the church where if they say that they believe homosexual practices are wrong due to the church being based and driven by the gospel. People that have a moral objection to something that is not the way the modern thinking goes have no protection and are often referred to as "bigots". In this day and age saying "God loves you" is deemed offensive, yet the secular community can proclaim from the rooftops that there is no God and Christians are misguided fools and this is done in free speech. A one sided cause here.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Kevin Macphail
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I have already given my views on this in the consultation and to MPs. The very nature of marriage is for one man, one woman, for life and is of great benefit to society and stability for any children. It is the best for society and encourages faithfulness. Redefining it is extreme and unnecessary. This issue wasn’t in any manifesto and has been rushed and pushed forward, despite such a huge response to the consultation. The government should be focussing on and spending our money on other matters. Civil partnerships already allow all the same rights to gay couples as marriage, so it is unnecessary to allow marriage and at the same time therefore re-define the whole profound meaning of the institution. What new rights could there be? Why re-define marriage, when they already have the same rights? Why should this be imposed on the whole of society, when such a minority actually want it and so many are against?

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

As above. I am opposed to the re-definition of marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Yes. I am very concerned about this. I feel that there will be repercussions and consequences far greater than has been foreseen and that even the freedom to have and express your own beliefs, thoughts or conscience is under threat. I am a teacher and am extremely concerned, obviously about the effect on our children, but also for teachers. No teacher is forced to teach religious education or take a religious assembly - an atheist or agnostic or a disinterested teacher can express their views freely to other staff, but not be forced to teach it. They also wouldn't lose their job. Neither would someone who believed in same-sex "marriage". Will the same be allowed for teachers who are against same-sex "marriage"? Will they be allowed to express their views and not be forced to teach it? Could they lose their job, just for expressing their conscience? People should be allowed to be "conscientious objectors" and be able to express these views, without fear of repercussions, or even of losing their job ( and I have heard of several cases of this already) Similarly for parents - at present, parents have every right to withdraw their children from religious observance. Will they be protected by law if they wish to withdraw their children from teaching about same-sex "marriage"? I also think that the school should be obliged to tell parents when such lessons were to be taught. But it is more than a legal thing too. Freedom of speech is under attack, but only for those who are opposed to same-sex "marriage", which is NOT the same as homophobia, but is commonly, ignorantly labelled as this. Adoption is another area where the law needs to protect those not in favour of same-sex "marriage" and who are keen to adopt. This shouldn't be a deciding factor in who is allowed to adopt, or not. I know of cases of this already and I have heard that some agencies have been told to get rid of their policies in favour of traditional marriage. I think that faith - based charities and adoption agencies need to be better protected by the law, or society loses out on all they can offer, apart from anything else. I feel that in every walk of life, those who uphold a traditional view of marriage need to be protected by law. Those who believe in same-sex "marriage" are free to believe in it and to express these views. But there is an increasing danger that those who believe in traditional marriage are in danger of losing jobs or being forced into situations against their deeply held beliefs or conscience. Are there laws in place to protect a church or minister who refuses to conduct a same-sex wedding? Could they be taken to court? Could they be forced to conduct such a wedding? In any job serving the public, are people opposed to this, protected? Are they free to express their deeply held beliefs without fear of losing their job or being forced to express agreement?. There need to be laws to protect people who are "conscientious objectors".

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Yes. I am extremely concerned about this. We live in a free, democratic country which values freedom of speech. Everyone has a right to their opinion and to be able to express it freely. However, it seems that freedom of speech is only becoming allowed, if what is believed is 'politically correct'. People who believe in traditional marriage and who say so, are branded as "homophobic" or accused of discrimination or of being bigots and I feel that there is a growing sense of fear of expressing one's opinion. We have a right to express our beliefs, without fear, fear of punishment or consequences, losing a job or being forced to "take back" and apologise for what was said, just as those who believe the opposite have a right to express their views. There needs to be safeguards and laws to protect those who are opposed to same-sex "marriage". Equality laws need to protect religious beliefs and freedom of speech and the freedom simply to discuss issues, without fear of being branded a bigot. Discussing such issues or openly expressing opposition isn't discrimination.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Society will reap the consequences.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Catriona Macpherson
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

I feel the bill is unnecessary and a distraction from matters which are of importance to the general population. All the legal rights of marriage are already available to same-sex couples through civil partnerships. There is no great demand for same-sex marriage and the other measures contained in the Bill. Marriage is a relationship between a man and a woman for the purpose of companionship and the procreation of children. It is based upon the objective reality of the complementarity of two created genders (male and female). The procreative potential of the institution of marriage is intrinsic to its nature and role in society. The is the reason the state recognises marriage in law. There is significant danger of churches and celebrants who refuse to 'marry' same-sex couples being subject to litigation. In England a gay couple has just announced their intention to sue the Church of England for refusing to conduct same sex marriages. Ultimately this matter may be decided by the European Court of Human Rights. If the law is changed as proposed there is a real chance that at some future date, the court will rule that religion and belief celebrants must either solemnise all 'marriages' or cease to marry people altogether.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I believe that as Christians we could be held accountable for denying same sex marriage in churches, in public life, in schools etc. The bible clearly states that marriage is between a man and a woman so we would be going against what the tenet of our faith believes. I have nothing against homosexuals or lesbians and I do believe that they already have the ability to get marriage in a registrar's office.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe that if anyone says anything against same sex marriage they will be held accountable.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jeanette MacRae
17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

If couples in Civil Partnerships wish to have their union converted into a Marriage then they should be able to if they wish and avoid having to dissolve their Civil Partnership first to then marry.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

Many same-sex couple have a faith based relationship and if the faith organisation they adhere to wishes to carry out civil partnerships then they should be able to if they choose to - I should stress that no faith organisation should be made to go against their beliefs and be forced to carry out civil partnerships unless they opt in.
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

James MacVicar
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM NIAMH MADDEN

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

niamh madden
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I believe this bill is a step in the right direction for a modern Scotland. With this bill Scotland is being progressive in promoting the rights and equality of same sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I believe in complete equality, I see no reason why I should not be able to marry the person I love due to the fact we are both the same gender.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe although people are free to speak their opinion there is a fine line before it becomes bigotry and hate speech.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Andrew Campbell Magee
20 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I strongly support the Bill; it is unfortunate for us that England and Wales got there first!

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

I think it is very important that same sex marriage and mixed sex marriage both be called "marriage"; any distinct phraseology for same sex marriage is continuing the discrimination of "civil partnership" for same sex couples as opposed to "marriage" for mixed sex couples.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

I am religious myself, but fully support non-religious celebrants being able to officiate at marriages

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I am a Quaker, and Quakers have discerned that God is calling us to marry both mixed sex and same sex couples. It is a matter of religious freedom that we be able to do this; at the same time the religious freedom of communities who do not agree with same sex marriage should be respected. It is important that gender-free language be available in the marriage service, if that is what the couple being married, and their religious community, want.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I think it is important that civil partnerships registered outwith Scotland should be treated in the same way as those registered in Scotland. (I'm not in a civil partnership myself, but had I been in one in England, and then moved to Scotland, I would have hoped it could have been converted into a marriage in just the same way as if the partnership had been registered in Scotland.)

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

This is of course an issue for all people, not just LGBT ones. But I would support the change.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

I think the broadest range of options should be available for all people who wish to register their relationships in whatever form. After all, every relationship is different!

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

It seems to be quite wrong to insist that transgender people have to divorce before their acquired gender can be recognised. I am not in favour of spousal consent being required for gender recognition; what if the relationship between the two spouses has broken down? Spousal consent should of course be required (instead) for re-registration of the marriage. I would also support equalising the minimum age of gender recognition to be the same as that of marriage (16).

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The arrangements in the Bill strike me as sensible. Registrars and teachers should not be able to opt out of its requirements; for example, registrars already re-marry people who have been divorced, even if it is against their religious convictions.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I think the Bill's approach is right; I don't agree with those who disagree with same sex marriage, but they have an absolute right to express their opinion in public.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?
I think that mixed sex couples should be able to register as civil partners (rather than marry) if that is what they wish.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Mark Manning
14 August 2013
Question 4: How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

I am writing to request you actively consider safeguards in drafting of the ‘Marriage and Civil Partnership (Scotland) Bill’, particularly in regard to those who hold a traditional view of marriage as being that between a man and a woman.

Question 5: How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage so that same sex couples can marry each other?

Marriage has been long established as between a man and a woman with encouragement and care being given naturally to the children within such a family. Marriage between a man and a woman in this form has stood for centuries. Changing its meaning after so long is a majorly radical step too far. Children should have the right to be in a family with two parents as a male and female role model.

Dismantling the traditional view of marriage as between a man and a woman only could lead to a three way relationship or other combinations being recognised. The legal definition should not be left so loose that such a variety of combinations in marriage becomes allowable.

Question 12: Would you like to comment on the wider issues for protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex-marriage?

My concern is for those celebrants (currently allowed to marry couples) who hold a view that same sex marriage is wrong will be compelled to marry same sex couples by being sued or by their right being withdrawn as a celebrant, who can marry couples.

Similarly teachers should be allowed to express their view on same sex marriage as a matter of conscience. They are likely to be gagged from expressing any view in fear of losing their job. If an atheistic teacher is not compelled to teach religious education on the grounds of conscience, or lack of belief, surely a Christian teacher, holding a traditional view of marriage, should not be debarred from expressing his or her view on the grounds of their conscience and their beliefs.

Such a stance could extend to those charities who also hold a similar view with their charitable status being withdrawn. Much good is done by very many of these charities. It could become ‘publicly myopic’ in the sense that these charities have to accede to a view on same sex marriage that leads to a whole raft of good charitable work being positively discouraged. Effectively through the new legislation's drafting insufficient room will have been allowed for conscience in these matters. Grants may then be withdrawn where they once were given freely, thereby failing to recognise and support the good work being done by them in society.

Those working in the public sector, who express a similar view in favour of marriage as defined between a man and a woman, may find they are gagged or, if they express a view in good conscience, they could suffer by losing their jobs. This may even be extended to those individuals in private sector companies who conduct work for government or local government in that they find they are similarly restricted or threatened with dismissal.

Parents similarly who hold a view that marriage should be between a man and a woman should be allowed to uphold this view as a family, if necessary by being permitted to withdraw their children from a class in school.
Question 13: Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

In a democratic society, there should be protections for freedom of speech. Religion and belief should be properly protected under equal equality law.

To express a view in public which supports a traditional view of marriage, as that between a man and a woman, should not lead to that person being in fear of being sued. Drafting of the legislation on same sex relationships should not open the door to a situation where a climate of fear comes in to play where to express a view publicly could lead to public vilification or to being sued in the courts.

Dr. Nigel R Mansfield
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
I strongly believe that everyone should be treated as equal no matter what gender but I do also believe that celebrants should be given the right in law to opt out according to their beliefs.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Everyone should have the right to state their views in a controlled and non aggressive manner

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Heather Marshall
18 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...
a private individual

Agnes Marszalek
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

I think there should be absolute equality of marriage, without distinction between same-sex and mixed-sex marriage.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I also support the additional opt-in of a gender-free form of the ceremony, to be used by any who wish to do so.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
I think this is an absolutely essential change to the law. Further, gender recognition, where the couple do not want to stay married should absolutely not require the consent of the spouse. There should also be a provision for a simpler gender recognition procedure for those who have been transitioned for some years, where the current evidence requirement can be difficult to meet.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think the provisions in the bill as it exists are fair, and no further protections should be granted.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It is not contradicted in any way by the bill.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

There remains a requirement for mixed-sex civil partnership.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Roushan Martens
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

Marriage is a creation ordinance and, by definition, cannot be between two men or two women. The second chapter of Genesis makes that plain.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

It is not for the state to try and re-define an ordinance laid down by the Creator in His word. Once the state starts interfering with basic creation mandates, it opens a Pandora’s box, with all kinds of disorders resulting. In Canada, for example, where marriage has been redefined, attempts have been made to legalise polygamy.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

It appears to me to be trivialising that which is a basic building block of society, something which is not a social construct but a creation ordinance.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

As, by definition, persons of the same sex cannot be married, I strongly disapprove.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

God’s word, in passages such as Romans chapter 1, makes it plain that such behaviour is evidence of a society being in moral decline. I was not in favour of civil partnerships. Furthermore, it is not clear what new legal rights, if any, same-sex couples will receive which they do not already have through civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

It will simply serve to trivialise what is a very serious undertaking.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Several cases in the European Court of Human Rights show that the Article 9 right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion does not provide protection when there is conflict between Article 9 and other rights. As a celebrant, if these proposals become law, I leave myself open to being taken to court by two vindictive homosexuals for refusing to marry them. Any attempted protections in Scottish law could be overturned in the European Court of Human Rights.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It is clear from some of the cases involving registrars and bed and breakfast owners, that equality laws trump issues of religious liberty in the eyes of judges. Individuals who contented for freedom of speech in past generations, such as John Milton, the author of Areopatigica, must be spinning in their graves.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

No.

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

David Martin
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support
It's ludicrous that they can't get married already.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Religions shouldn't be forced to do anything that goes against them. Other than that, nobody needs "protected".

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

It's important and should be protected.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Iain Martin
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I believe everyone should have the right to marry if they want to.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It's the correct way to go about this issue, it's about time gay people were recognised in society.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

There should be none as everyone should recognise that being gay is part of who a person is and they are in all walks of life.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Lee Martin
15 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither
Do not really understand the difference between religion and belief. To me they are the same.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition
You cannot change reality even if you change the law. Marriage was not created by mankind but by God and therefore cannot be changed.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither
They should not take place, but if they do, where is not significant.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

Jonathan Mason
9 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

I take the view that opt-out would be more appropriate because 'opt-in' tends to suggest that opting out is somehow the 'standard' and that opting-in is (or should be) the 'minority' position.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

Although I regard a Civil partnership as equally as valid as a marriage, many people see it as an 'inferior' sort of marriage and so (in a sense) it has in fact become 'inferior'. Some people in Civil Partnerships will undoubtedly wish to 'upgrade' their Civil Partnership to a marriage. They should be perfectly entitled to do so with the absolute minimum of bureaucratic procedure.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

The 'default' position should be that gender change has no automatic effect on the marriage. To do otherwise would tend to suggest that the gender change was in some sense 'wrong'. Evidently though, a gender change will fundamentally affect an existing marriage and there should therefore be a quick and 'painless' means to dissolve the marriage at the behest of either party.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

People do not need 'protection' from the views or preferences of others unless those views or preferences have a real affect on people who do not share them.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Freedom of speech should be the default position. Only if it has a real and demonstrable adverse affect on others should it be restricted.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Avery Mathers
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

I do not believe that there is substantial public support for this bill

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

I still believe that marriage is fundamentally between a man and a woman, and that this is one of the main building blocks of our society and family life

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

I have no strong feelings on this

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

I think civil partnerships have worked well and are adequate for same sex relationships

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

I don't understand this question
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think those who have concerns about same sex marriage should have full protection within the law to express such views and should not be discriminated against in any way

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe fully in freedom of speech

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

hugh alexander mathie
17 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUBMISSION FROM LAURIE MATTHEW

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Laurie Matthew
14 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM EMMA MAUCHLINE

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Emma Mauchline
19 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Fiona McArthur-Worbey
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I object to the term marriage being used for anything other than the union between an individual man and an individual woman.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

This redefinition of marriage is destructive, not simply to the nature of marriage, but also to the nature of society, and family life. I understand sexual activity to be essentially directed towards the good of society and not merely the pleasure of the individual.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

There has not been sufficient time to consider the effects of civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition
My understanding is that any transgender activity would render the marriage null. It seems to me that this is an aspect of the bill which requires a great deal more reflection. Has any consideration been given to the possible resultant anguish on the marriage partner?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

This whole subject has engendered an atmosphere of fear and intimidation amongst those who support the traditional understanding of marriage; such a state of affairs is so undemocratic as to be unworthy of any legitimate government.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I would certainly not support any denigration or name-calling of any member of the LBGT community all of whom should be treated with respect: however, it is amply evident that any effort to have a rational, non-confrontational discussion on same-sex matters seems to render those who propose the traditional definition of marriage automatically exposed to accusations of homophobia.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a celebrant

Kenneth Martin McBride
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Protections against this proposal are completely unnecessary. Equality isn't something people need to be protected against. Beyond not legally obligating religious organisations to perform same sex marriages there is no other protections, same sex couples should be able to marry with the same freedoms that opposite sex couples enjoy.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

A politics student, Catholic and liberal thinker.

Liam McCabe
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

A private individual

Seanpaul McCahill
15 August 2013
MARRIAGE AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP (SCOTLAND) BILL
SUBMISSION FROM ANNE MCCLURE

How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Strongly in support. This is the right thing to do. Marriage is about two people showing love, care and commitment to each other, gender is irrelevant. I am pleased and proud of Scotland taking this action to promote human rights and believe it will strengthen Scottish society.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

I support this, but reluctantly due to the opt in procedures. I would prefer opt out procedures. Making the procedures opt in gives credence to the view that same sex marriage is not equal, acceptable, valid or to be encouraged and celebrated.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Same sex partnerships should not have a "second class" status. I'm glad that solemnised marriages will be "backdated" to the the date of previously registered civil partnerships.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I would prefer some wording that reminded people that marriage is a serious commitment and that the place should reflect this. I wouldn't want to see Scotland creating a version of the Elvis Presley chapel in Las Vegas!
How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

If a couple desire to stay married when one or both of them go through a transgender process this speaks of an unshakeable love and commitment and allowing the renewal of the marriage is right.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Hearing and responding with respect the views and concerns of all parts of Scottish society is vital. However, if we allowed ourselves to be ruled by the status quo, by tradition, by the views of religion that we’d still think slavery was a good thing. There are times in a nation's history when the next step in promoting human rights has to be taken. We have to do what is right, trying to carry everyone with us by clear, courageous and compelling logical debate, but being ready to leave people behind if they are not ready to move forward with us.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Anne McClure
23 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

As an evangelical Christian, it leaves me at times feeling victimised and worried about the level of abuse the Church faces. If someone believes their religion requires them to only eat certain foods we do not force them to eat those foods - why then is it ok to move to a position which leaves ministers and Churches open to being forced to carry out same-sex marriages even if they believe them to be in opposition to what God asks of us.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition.

It is one thing to open this up in secular situations such as registrar offices but if this is to go forward it should not enforce religious groups to have to provide marriages for same-sex couples where those religious groups believe that to be against w

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

I believe this leaves many (particularly ministers and churches) open to legal suits in the future, forcing them to carry out same sex marriages even if they believe them to be wrong. This also leaves ministers and churches open to accusations of hatred t

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

From a number of reports it is clear to see that rights relating to sexuality are being placed above those of religious belief. An opt-in clause for today does not protect the rights of those who have these concerns in the coming years and the president set by these decisions today can have a massive impact in the future.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Carolyn McCrone
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
No religious organisation should be forced to act against their beliefs. That would be wrong. But marriage between people of the same sex should be regarded legally as identical to marriage between straight people. That's just common sense. Hopefully religious groups will come around. But if not, they shouldn't be penalised for this.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I believe in people's right to speak their mind. But religious people employed in a capacity not related to their religion should not be allowed to discriminate against gay couples. Eg A Christian hotel owner should not be allowed to ban gay marriages in

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

I think it's wonderful that there has been this domino effect around the world of gay marriage being made legal. Many countries are lagging behind however, and I would hate it if Scotland were left behind with the likes of Russia. We have proved ourselves a progressive nation, and taken the lead on many issues (smoking ban, alcohol pricing, NHS etc) - surely this next step towards equal marriage is an obvious one?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Eilidh McDonald
15 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In opposition

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
Yes, it concerns me that my view will make me then be discriminated for being opposed to same sex marriage.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Jacqueline Mcdowell
28 July 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

If Scotland is to move forward as a country, whether it be independent or continuing as part of the UK, it cannot afford to exclude any of it's citizens. It is the duty of every government to allow every person under its care the same rights. The Scottish Government must show itself to be progressive and fair, giving the same rights to all Scots.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

The only right thing to do. No person should ever be told that they are lesser than another, that they cannot be with the person they love and enjoy the same rights as everyone else, simply because of who they love. There is not one single good reason to deny these rights to anyone, there are only reasons of self-interest or prejudice and those in opposition of this bill and in opposition of any LGBT rights are holding back not only Scotland but the human race. This is 2013, for goodness sake: we should be reaching the stars and curing cancer. Instead we're arguing about whether to grant a person basic human rights. Let's get moving.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

If churches don't want to marry two people who are clearly in love, then to hell with them (yes, I meant that). Move with the times or get out of the way. Yes, it would be nice if the churches came along with us but if they don't, they should not be allowed to hold anyone back.

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

No-one should be forced to do anything that they don't want to do. I've heard various heads of the church say that they don't want to be forced into performing same-sex marriage. Nor should they be. However, I don't believe that anyone is saying that. By the same token, why should ministers or priests be forced NOT to perform same-sex marriages? Sadly, religious organizations must make the decision on whether or not individuals can perform marriages but ideally, each minister or priest would decide for themselves.
How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

Civil partnership was never and will never be a solution. It is to say "your love is lesser and does not deserve the same rights as mine". It should never be more complicated than for any two people, of any sexual orientation, to say "I love you, let's get married".

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

Anyone should be able to be married anywhere, unless of course, there is a good reason why not. Like in a building that's on fire, or the middle of an active battlefield. But that's just common sense. Yeah, beach, halfway up a mountain, the large hadron collider, whatever.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

Again, people should be allowed the option of being married the way they want, by the person they want. And anyone who wishes to conduct a marriage should be allowed to.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Let me read up on this a bit......... Okay. So, a person wouldn't need to divorce in order to gain the correct Gender Recognition? Sounds good. You might want to look at the whole "permission of the spouse" thing though; can't say I like the idea that a disgruntled partner could stop that whole process by not granting a divorce. Just sayin'.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I would but I don't know if you allow swearing on this form. Protections? What would they need protecting from? Is this the idea that same-sex marriage somehow destroys "traditional" marriage? I'm a man, married to a woman and someone has yet to explain to me how my marriage is under threat from gay people. You don't have "concerns" about same-sex marriage: you have a bigoted, outdated view about it. You have no place in modern society and your views should never, ever be listened to. You're probably also running for political office under the banner of the BNP, UKIP, or the Republican party in the USA. Here's your "protection" from same-sex marriage: get over yourself. The rest of us are keen to explore space and cure disease. *drops mic, walks off stage

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Perhaps another time. I feel it would take longer than I'm willing to give right now: I kind of want to go to bed.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Not right now. Like I said: bed.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Fraser McFarlane
17 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

Fully in support of this bill. My partner and I intend to marry as soon as it is legally possible.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

Fully in support of this bill. My partner and I intend to marry as soon as it is legally possible.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

Where religious celebrants wish to be able to solemnise same sex marriage then I am in support of this.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

I fully support this. I see no need for a separate ceremony if the couple involved do not wish this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I fully support this - I believe that same sex marriages should be permitted to take place anywhere that civil marriages can currently be conducted.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

Where same sex couples have a religion/faith/belief system and have and have an associated minister or celebrant who wishes to solemnise their marriage, then I am fully in supprt of this.

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

I think that the bill strikes the right balance, and provides good protections for people with concerns about same-sex marriage. No religious organisation will be required to conduct same-sex marriages unless the organisation agrees to. Even where an organisation does agree, individual marriage celebrants within that organisation will be free to opt-out of same-sex marriages, as will any person who plays a part in the religious marriage ceremonies of that organisation (eg the church organist). These are strong protections. It has been proposed by some people that the bill should give civil registrars a statutory right to opt out of conducting same-sex marriages. I would strongly oppose that. Unlike religious celebrants, civil registrars are carrying out a civil function on behalf of the state, and therefore an opt-out on grounds of their personal religious belief is not appropriate. It would set a dangerous precedent that public service providers (in local government, NHS, etc) should have a legal right to pick and choose who they serve. This is no more acceptable on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity than it would be on other grounds such as race. The registrars’s organisation, the Association of Registrars of Scotland, is not calling for an opt-out. The registering of civil partnerships in Scotland by civil registrars has worked well without any such legal opt-out, and we expect the registering of same-sex marriages to work equally well in a similar way. It has also been proposed by some people that teachers should have the right to opt out of mentioning same-sex marriage if a pupil asks about it or it comes up in class, and that parents should be able to remove their children from any class where same-sex marriage might be mentioned. I would strongly oppose this. Teachers are there to teach the facts, not their personal views, and should answer questions factually. No teacher will be required to say that they personally agree with same-sex marriage, but all teachers must treat all pupils with respect, whatever their family arrangements, including pupils with same-sex married parents. It would be unworkable to allow opt-outs from lessons where same-sex marriage is mentioned. Opt-outs are not available from lessons where divorce is mentioned, which is equally controversial for some people.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

The bill will have no negative effect on freedom of speech, as section 14 of the bill confirms. People will remain free to disagree with same-sex marriage and to express that disagreement publicly. The Lord Advocate’s guidance published with the bill makes clear that it is not a crime to disagree publicly with same-sex marriage. The case of Smith v. Trafford Housing Trust demonstrates clearly that it is against the law for an employer to take action against an employee simply because they say publicly that they disagree with same-sex marriage.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

The bill is a huge step forward for equality, but it does not introduce full equal marriage. Apart from the issues mentioned under questions 7, 8 and 11 above, the main thing missing from the bill is the introduction of mixed-sex civil partnerships. That has always been a part of the wider Equal Marriage campaign in Scotland. I believe that the same choices — marriage or civil partnership — should be open to all couples regardless of their gender. I therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s public commitment on 27th June 2013 to conduct a review of civil partnership law, driven by the need to consider the position on opposite sex civil partnerships. I believe that review should start without delay, and, once it is complete, there should be prompt legislation to open up civil partnership in Scotland to couples regardless of their gender. This will also make it possible for a person in a civil partnership to get gender recognition without the need to change their civil partnership to a marriage.

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Michelle McGarva
14 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

I am totally unconvinced about the use of the democratic process in this case, I do not believe that the Scottish electorate has been given an opportunity to unequivocally express its opinion on this proposed legislation.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

Eight years ago, Civil Partnership was created, and a commitment made not to press for "marriage".

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In opposition

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

In opposition
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

On the basis that I do not condone the concept in the first place, there ought not to be any protections needed. If the legislation is passed, provision and protection for any/all who disagree, in any way, in ANY circumstance, with such marriage, MUST be written into the legislation.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

All principles of freedom of speech, freedom to express one's opinion based on one's conscience, must be protected.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Vincent McGread
Retired.
23 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

People who love one another and are in a relationship that is legal should not be stopped from marrying one another.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

People should be able to marry where ever they want to make their day special to them.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

I grew up with the Church of Scotland and I would love to get married to my partner in the church in which has been a big part of my life. God is about loving everyone, not picking and choosing.
How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

If they are to stay with their partner after the operation then there is no need for them not to remain married. Let people be who they want to be!

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

As a gay man myself, coming from rural Scotland, I have found the concerns and worries that some friends and family members had when I told them I was gay vanished once they understood. A lot of people fear same sex marriage as they do not understand gay culture. Once they have learned that it is not a disease or a choice and that we are human beings then most change the way they view things. So many people have become understanding one they know more about the subject. Teaching in what we need to do, not preach hate! We are normal people going about our normal lives. Let us live our normal lives and get married.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

I respect people's right to freedom of speech as long as it is not hate related. It just becomes offensive and well not very nice.

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

David McGregor
7 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?
Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Siobhan mcguire
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

Marriage is a human right regardless of gender, race or sexual orientation.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?
There should be no problem, as a same sex marriage will do no more damage than one between a man and a woman. even if religion is the problem (I see no problem myself, being Catholic) then there is still no excuse for ignorance, If people are equal then every right that applies to one law abiding person, should apply to another.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Clarisse McInally
16 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In support

I am strongly in support of the equal marriage bill, it makes complete sense to me for people to be able to marry for love, just because they may be of the same sex does not and should not discriminate them from being able to marry in the face of god.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In support

It makes complete sense. Divorce was described as a sin and yet 46% of married couples divorce. The bible is warped and judgemental dependent upon the views of the writer, the unfortunate fact that a bigot wrote the most widely read is pure idiocy.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?

In support

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Alex McIntosh
21 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?
In support

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?
In support

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
In opposition
Celebrants shouldn't have a choice, if they can't treat all people equal then they have no right being in that role.

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?
In support
I am in a civil partnership myself and cannot wait to change it to a marriage.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?
In support

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?
In support
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

The only people affected by same sex marriage are people who wish to enter into a same sex marriage. Equality is not optional, it's a basic human right.

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

Would you like to comment on any other wider issues in relation to the Bill that are not mentioned above?

Are you responding as...

a private individual

Colin Stephen Anderson McIntosh
22 August 2013
How would you characterise your views on the Bill in general?

In opposition

The Bill is allegedly about 'equality' when, in fact it creates inequality. Given that it is such an important measure I am concerned about the somewhat contentious consultation process and the speed with which the legislation is being pushed through against the opposition of a significant number, if not the majority, of the electorate. History has shown that quick laws tend to be bad laws with a range of unintended consequences. The Bill currently before the UK Parliament, which has been criticised by senior legal figures both within and outwith Parliament on its inconsistencies and flaws, highlights the problem. This Bill should be delayed until after the next election as not only did no party campaign on at the last election but also because it represents a fundamental change to an institution which has remained unaltered for thousands of years in its most fundamental aspect ie the union of members of the opposite sex.

How would you characterise your views on the introduction of same sex marriage, so that same sex couples can marry each other?

In opposition

As Civil Partnerships give same sex couples the same legal rights as opposite sex marriages I can see no need for this legislation. The terms 'marriage' and 'civil partnership' are clear and understandable. One of the main reasons put forward for this change, and my MP has voiced it, is that if two people, whatever their sex, love each other they should be allowed to marry. If this is regarded as a principle then why should the option not be open to sisters to marry sisters or brothers to marry brothers, or any same sex people who share a home. Changing the definition of marriage will open a host of potential issues which have either not been considered or have been disregarded, apparently without being fully thought through as to the effects on wider legislation or the practicalities of daily life.

How would you characterise your views on putting belief celebrants on the same footing as religious celebrants?

Neither

For assorted practical reasons marriages need to be recorded, so as long as the people performing them have some form of accreditation or appropriate licensing system I can see no objection to 'belief celebrants', however that is to be defined, performing

How would you characterise your views on the arrangements for authorising celebrants to solemnise opposite sex and same sex marriage (including the opt-in procedures)?
Neither

This assumes the legislation passes. If so the response is similar to Q6

How would you characterise your views on civil partnerships changing to marriages?

Neither

It would remove one inequality as heterosexual couples do not have access to civil partnerships but if the original legislation proposed had been about equality it would have included the creation of civil partnerships for heterosexual couples.

How would you characterise your views on allowing civil marriage ceremonies to take place anywhere, other than religious premises, agreed between the couple and registrar?

In support

I can see no objection to where a marriage takes place as long as all of the parties agree the location.

How would you characterise your views on allowing the religious and belief registration of civil partnerships?

Neither

This must be a matter for the relevant religious bodies or belief organisations to determine. It is not for the state to impose its will. No one is forced to join or adhere to any particular religion or belief so if their current religion or belief syst

How would you characterise your views on allowing transgender persons to stay married when obtaining a full Gender Recognition Certificate, which provides legal recognition in the acquired gender?

Neither

Would you like to comment on the wider issue of protections for those in society who may have concerns about same sex marriage?

Given the press reports of individuals who have been reprimanded or removed form their posts for voicing beliefs which do not chime with those supporting same sex marriage this is the most important element of the entire process. It must be made clear in any legislation that no one should be subject to either the criminal law or civil procedure for stating their views that same sex marriage is wrong. Similarly, under employment law, no one should be punished for expressing views sincerely held, however unpalatable or unfashionable they may be. There may well be a specific problem where religions or religious sects run educational establishments eg Roman Catholic or Islamic schools, where any form of promotion of same sex marriage or homosexuality is starkly against their core belief system. How are employees of such organisations to be protected. Freedom of though and speech is a cornerstone of our democracy and any attempt to limit it must be resisted.
Would you like to comment on the wider issue of freedom of speech?

