I understand an inquiry is underway to determine the viability and feasibility of Scotland's move towards renewable energy.

There will naturally be sceptics, particularly among present producers of fossil fuels and nuclear. I would like to add my voice to those in support of renewables.

Scotland's energy future could be green, affordable and reliable. Its renewable energy targets are perfectly achievable, if firm long-term policies are adopted. For us to compromise on these important matters will earn no thanks from our children and grand-children

I hope your inquiry makes clear that Scotland's future is in long-termism, not short-termism.

Trevor Rigg
24 February 2012