Following the evidence session on 16 January 2014, as part of the inquiry into lobbying, please find below supplementary information requested by the Committee on the costs associated with various overseas registers, and examples of registration forms from overseas registers.

Information on the costs of registers overseas

Below are the costs I have collated relating to various overseas registers. The figures are either from public sources or have been provided by officials in these countries, either directly or under freedom of information law.

Canadian Registry of Lobbyists

The UK government has stated that the Canadian system is overly costly. Lord Wallace, for example, described it as a 'large and expensive system'. Both he and the Leader of the House, Andrew Lansley, have claimed that it 'costs the equivalent of £3 million a year'.'¹

The government is right to point out that Canada has a robust system that puts a lot of information on lobbying activity in the public domain. However, according to the Office of the Commissioner of Lobbying of Canada, which administers the register:

> An annual budget of $1.1 million (£600,000] is spent on the administration of the Registry, including salaries for the equivalent of six full-time employees dedicated primarily to providing registration assistance for lobbyists. The budget covers between $400,000 to $500,000 (£220-270k] invested annually in technical work to maintain and upgrade the system.²

Changes to the Canadian law in 2005 led to the establishment of an entirely new register of lobbyists because of the extensive changes to registration requirements. Further amendments in 2008 also required a system redesign. The cost of these upgrades combined came to approximately CA$2 million (£1.1m).³ This gives us an indication of the scale of investment needed to introduce a system of lobbying registration. These figures put the total costs of the Canadian system well below the UK government's estimate.

Joint European Commission / Parliament transparency register

The costs associated with the EU figure have not been published as far as we are aware. Following a request to the European Commission for information on the operating budget of the register, I was told it amounted to €130,000. No breakdown of this was available.

I have subsequently been contacted by a Commission official to clarify that this figure concerns IT maintenance only, not IT developments or human resources. I have been told that the equivalent of four full-time staff (two per institution) are employed to carry out the work associated with the Register. Their salaries or pay grades have not been released, nor the costs of IT development.

From this, however, it could be concluded that costs associated with the joint register are not vast. If you were to add the cost of 4 full time staff to the €130,000 in IT administration; and used the figures from the Canadian register as a guide to IT development expenditure, bearing in mind that the EU register is far less sophisticated than the Canadian one, the costs of the register would fall far short of the government’s estimates for the UK system.

US register of lobbyists: costs

The US Congressional Budget Office, an independent congressional support agency that specializes in budgetary and spending projections, said the following about the US’s most recently passed lobbying law: “CBO estimates that Congressional offices and committees would spend about $1 million annually to collect, maintain, and disseminate information provided by lobbyists”. It is thought by people familiar with the US system that this is likely to a high estimate and it is likely to cost less.

Examples of registration forms overseas

The Committee said it would be very helpful to have sight of a template registration form from Canada or the US. Exploring an already operating register is an effective way of understanding the value of lobbying registration, as well as getting a feel for the relatively light burden registration places on lobbyists.

Blank registration forms, however, are not readily available from the various systems. In place of this, below are some sample completed forms for the purpose of demonstrating how registers work. I have pulled the filings of Philip Morris International (PMI) from the US and Canadian registers.

I have chosen PMI partly because it operates in both regions, but partly because it has also recently stepped up its lobbying in Scotland. This follows the decision by the Scottish Government in late 2013 that it would press ahead with plans to introduce plain packaging. In the absence of a Scottish lobbying register, PMI’s lobbying activity in Holyrood is not openly declared, nor is the scale of the investment by the tobacco company known. It is only through investigation that this activity –

A sample form is embedded from page 52 of this official guide to the electronic filing system operating in the US: http://lobbyingdisclosure.house.gov/id_user_guide.pdf which includes events for MSPs, the lobbying of MSPs with industry-funded research, and a media campaign – is made public.5

By contrast, the registers in the US and Canada reveal a wealth of information on PMI’s lobbying. For example, the US filing (no.1 below) shows that PMI spent $2.7m in Q1 of 2013 lobbying on issues regarding immigration reform, a US law imposing new warnings on cigarette packaging, and ‘US trade obligation issues related to excessive regulatory proposals’.

The US register also reveals that PMI hired a further 8 lobbying firms to assist its lobbying in 2013, such as American Continental Group. Its filing (no.2 below) shows that it alone was paid $50,000 by PMI in Q3 of 2013 to lobby on issues including, Intellectual Property and ‘Tax Policy and Reform’. This filing also shows the revolving door between this individual lobbying firm and the US government. In total, PMI spent over $8m last year on lobbying in the US.

Similarly, the Canadian filing (no.3 below) shows that PMI subsidiary, Rothmans, Benson & Hedges Inc, has been lobbying 9 public bodies, including the Prime Minister’s Office and Health Canada; seeking to influence 5 specific pieces of legislation; employing 8 registered lobbyists, including the President of the company and its Senior Legal Advisor.

You can search the US register for other filings here, or the Canadian register here.
