CAS is supportive of the licence length (3 years) as detailed in the Bill alongside the re-application procedures that are set out. We also support the charging mechanism as we are aware of the additional administrative costs that will fall to local authorities to administer the scheme. We believe however that there should be a statutory requirement on local authorities to carry out an inspection at the time of an application and renewals of licences; we do not think that inspections should be optional. This would ensure that an inspection is carried out on each site at least every three years, although not stopping further inspections if required. Further inspections should be a risk-based approach with those sites considered high-risk visited more frequently. We would support inspectors taking the time to speak to residents during their inspections so as to take consideration of any issues that they may bring to light. We would broadly support local authorities to be given the powers to carry out unannounced inspections if they deemed them required.

CASE STUDY: Problems with site owner

- The Citizens Advice Consumer Service reports of a client who had been a victim of intimidation by the site manager after he had made a complaint about site maintenance. The client is now selling the caravan and has paid £150 to have the caravan advertised for sale on the park’s website. The site owner stopped communication and has not put the caravan for sale online. The client has left messages with the manager but never got any answer. Maintenance has not been done on the site as agreed and the client is desperate to move somewhere else.

We are fully supportive of the proposed enforcement powers for local authorities. However we believe that the increase on fine levels should be raised to an unlimited fine rather than a cap at £50,000 for running a site without a licence and £10,000 for a breach of licence.

We believe that the new licensing system will benefit permanent residents who live in mobile home sites. Research by Consumer Focus Scotland found that 40% of permanent mobile home residents had issues with maintenance, safety and security issues on site and 29% were dissatisfied with their living arrangements overall in the site, a substantial number. We believe the FPPT that is being introduced will help protect residents from anti-social behaviour from site owners and managers which was highlighted as a serious concern by those living in such sites.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

CAS supports the objective of the policy where it will help homeowners to get common repairs completed in areas shared with neighbours such as roofs and stairs in a tenement property. We note that local authorities will be able to fund the ‘missing shares’ of costs and then recover this cost from owners. This will form powers rather than duties and we are therefore expecting a difference in the quality of help between local authorities. We note that this is something that has been requested by local authorities who believe it will assist them in schemes they already run and as such we support anything that will help owners get shared repairs completed.

CASE STUDY: Shared Costs

- A West of Scotland CAB reports of a client who lives in a flat in a block of six with shared entry. The ground floor flat has been vacant for 12 years after the death of the previous owner. However problems have been occurring due to dampness from this property and the factor has refused to take any action to rectify it. This is due to the fact that two of the owners owe money to the property factor for work that was previously carried out. Due to the fact that the dampness issue was never resolved the owners have been served with a housing repair order from Glasgow City Council, the cost of which comes to £5000 for each owner. The client asked for advice on what course of action he should take to sort out this matter.

In some areas, especially in urban communities, this may have substantial workload and cost for local authorities. We would highlight the recent problems surrounding Edinburgh City Council’s statutory repairs up to 2012. While this scheme was under a specific power only applicable to Edinburgh there are similarities between what it set to achieve and any similar scheme. A report to Edinburgh City Council found many failings in the system, including overburdening workload that allowed for poor quality work to be carried out and in some cases fraudulent claims by contractors. CAS would suggest any system introduced by a local authority to help pay for missing shares is aware of the problems that Edinburgh City Council faced in running their system to ensure that homeowners are not left in poor conditions or significantly out of pocket.

CASE STUDY: Edinburgh Statutory Repairs

- An East of Scotland CAB reports of a client who was served with a statutory repair notice in 2005. There are 16 flats in the tenement block. The original estimate was £34,500 but rose to £63,000. Originally the work was only for repairing pointing but then the contractors advised that when they got to the top the chimney was askew. When all the work was done the gutters and down pipes were blocked so these had to be cleaned at additional cost. The client wishes to know if there is any way of finding out whether she was a victim of a scam in light of recent media coverage.

Other Issues

Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?
CAS agrees with Shelter Scotland’s suggestion that the ‘right of repair’ should be extended to people in households with children and pregnant women placed in temporary accommodation and recommends provision for this measure is included in the Bill. Consideration should also be given to whether the duty on social landlords to carry out repairs should be extended to all local authority-owned temporary accommodation.

Citizens Advice Scotland
04 March 2014
CITY OF EDINBURGH COUNCIL
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Part 1: Right to Buy

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social tenants?

The City of Edinburgh Council (the Council) supports the decision to abolish Right to Buy (RtB). Tenants who currently have preserved or modernised RtB will be brought into line with new tenants and tenants in new build housing where there is no provision for RtB.

While the Council agrees that RtB should be abolished, voluntary sales must still be permitted in line with landlords’ asset management strategies. This would allow for landlords to sell or purchase homes to reduce the challenges associated with managing mixed tenure blocks. Homes which are expensive or difficult to maintain could also be sold with receipts being used to fund better quality, more energy efficient homes.

While RtB did initially provide significant discounts to tenants and left little provision for local authorities to replace the homes that were sold, the scheme did provide the means for many households to enter home ownership. The Council welcomes the introduction of schemes such as MI New Home which should help to support a new generation of home owners following the abolition of RtB. Such schemes should be monitored to ensure that they are achieving the aim of helping people to access homeownership.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

The proposed three year timescale will allow sufficient time for a planned approach to manage the impact on the HRA budget and also avoid a major rush in sales. This will also allow tenants, who have the resources, time to consider purchase of their home.

Part 2: Social Housing

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make the best use of housing?

The City of Edinburgh Council agrees that the current reasonable preference categories are outdated and supports the proposed provisions outlined in the Bill. Detailed guidance must be developed by Scottish Government to support organisations in the development of allocation policies and to ensure that social housing applicants are given fair and equal access to housing as outlined in the regulatory framework. However, for the measures outlined in the Bill to be effective, guidance on priority need groups and any wider guidance on social housing allocations must allow enough flexibility for organisations to develop policies to address local needs.

The Council supports the proposal to allow landlords to take age into account when allocating social housing. This gives landlords flexibility to ensure balanced communities and good outcomes for tenants. This approach is not incompatible with the requirement to ensure people have fair and open access to housing.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

The Council welcomes the extension of powers to grant Scottish Short Secure Tenancies (SSSTs) in cases involving antisocial behaviour. The Council agrees that support should be provided to households with SSSTs in order to encourage positive behaviour changes with a view to sustaining the tenancy. However, it is unclear who assesses whether housing support is appropriate for the household and what would happen if support is refused or if there are no support tasks to work on. It is recommended that refusal to engage with support services should be considered a breach of tenancy conditions which may result in eviction proceedings.

Streamlining the eviction process through the ability to end a SSST in Court without the need to prove further antisocial behaviour where a tenant has been previously evicted from a property, will significantly reduce the amount of time the Council would be required to devote to a lengthy investigative and evidence gathering process.

The Council notes that guidance from the Scottish Government will be produced to clarify issues in relation to levels of seriousness of antisocial behaviour and thresholds at which implementation of the extended powers may be considered. It is essential that this guidance is detailed enough to ensure a degree of consistency in the application of powers in dealing with anti social behaviour and must also be clearly communicated in order to manage public expectations around what actions can be taken and under what circumstances.
Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

The proposal helps to protect those tenants who are affected by the antisocial behaviour of neighbours, whilst ensuring adequate protection and support for perpetrators of antisocial behaviour.

The Council notes that a tenant may challenge the Council’s decision to evict by ending their SSST where that SSST was granted on previous antisocial behaviour grounds or eviction grounds. The requirement that the Council must be clear to the tenant about their reasons for seeking evictions also ensures that tenants are treated fairly and a balanced approach is applied.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier tribunal?

The Council supports this proposal and it is anticipated that this will allow the court more time to deal with criminal cases. This will also provide greater access to the justice system by removing the costs associated with pursuing appeals through the court system.

There is a need for clarification as to whether issues relating to landlords delaying necessary common repairs will also be dealt with through this route.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The Council welcomes the opportunity to be able to make third party referrals to the Private Rented Housing Panel (PRHP), however considers that the Bill should make provision for other organisations such as local authority commissioned services or other support/advice agencies to make referrals on behalf of private tenants. This would empower tenants and improve access to the PRHP.

Poor conditions in the private rented sector not only impact on the tenant, but can also impact on neighbours. In addition to allowing third party referrals to the PRHP from other organisations, where a neighbour is affected by a property not meeting the Repairing Standard, they should also be able to make referrals to the PRHP.

Further, where a landlord is not contributing to meeting the costs of common repairs, this should be viewed as a breach of the Repairing Standard and neighbours/adjoining owners should be able to refer the landlord to the PRHP.

In addition, it is important to ensure that the PRHP referral processes and decision making is as streamlined as possible to encourage speedy resolution.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The provision of additional enforcement powers is welcome and these powers could be effective where they are used. Enforcement should be used alongside an approach that encourages compliance through working with landlords in order to maximise the supply and therefore affordability of homes in the private rented sector.

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

The Council agrees with the principal of mandatory registration for all letting agents operating in Scotland as a means of ensuring better standards of service for private tenants. However, it is not clear how a national registration scheme will have any advantage over current arrangements whereby the majority of letting agents register locally in order to establish themselves as ‘fit and proper’ for the purposes of landlord registration.

The introduction of a national scheme means that letting agents are unlikely to continue to register locally on a voluntary basis. Currently, landlords are required to provide details of any letting agent that they use on the landlord registration application. They do this by including the letting agent’s registration number. Without clarification from the Scottish Government on how a national scheme would operate and how the registration information will be shared with local authorities, it is difficult to assess how this will impact on the current landlord registration service.

It is acknowledged that some larger letting agents may operate across several local authority areas and that a mandatory local registration scheme may result in them having to register in several different local authority areas. However, it is not felt that the basic registration fee of £55 per local authority every three years will place an undue burden on a business of this size.

Clear guidance will need to be developed to define who will be required to register as a letting agent, whether this will just be professional companies employed by landlords to manage their homes or whether someone such as a friend or relative looking after a home on an informal basis would also have to be registered.

The Council supports the proposal to develop a Code of Practice for letting agents. The development of a private rented sector forum of stakeholders would provide a useful forum for future consultation and discussion.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

The proposals may present an increased workload if officers are called to give evidence in cases brought to the Homeowner Panel.

Benchmarking the new proposals against the recent dispute resolution process for Tenancy Deposit Schemes would be worthwhile.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites With Permanent Residents

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

The Council supports the proposals to introduce a new licensing scheme for mobile home sites with permanent residents. The requirement for site managers to register with the local authority and provide evidence of their fitness and propriety will bring this sector more closely in line with the private rented sector.

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both the mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

The proposals will have positive impacts on the permanent residents of mobile home sites as increasing regulations regarding who can operate such a site will offer greater protection for residents.
Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

The Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 was intended to address problems of conditions and quality on private sector housing. To date, the success of this legislation has been limited. The Scottish House Condition Survey (SHCS) shows that the percentage of private homes in Scotland with some form of disrepair has actually increased from 76% in 2003/06 to 80% in 2010/12. During this time, the percentage of private homes in urgent disrepair has also increased slightly from 37% to 38%.

Lack of maintenance can affect the value of a property and its surrounding area as well as leading to potential health and safety issues and dangerous buildings. The issues of repairs and maintenance in the private sector are particularly significant in Edinburgh where 49% of homes were built before 1945 and 67% are flats. Older, flatted properties can be more difficult and expensive to maintain and issues surrounding mixed ownership mean that it is often difficult to carry out common repairs.

It is clear that more needs to be done to maintain and improve the fabric of our buildings to ensure that our residents are all living in safe, well maintained homes. The Council welcomes the additional powers contained in the draft Housing Bill in relation to covering missing shares, work notices and maintenance plans but feels that the amendments outlined below, along with some revisions to the Home Report, would help to strengthen the message that owners are responsible for the repair and maintenance of their properties.

Proposed Amendments to Part 6 of the Housing bill

Powers for Local Authorities to Pay for a Missing Share

While amendments to support home owners to carry out shared repairs are welcome, there is some concern that local authorities will be unable to make use of these powers because of a lack of resources to cover upfront costs and difficulty in recovering costs.

Case studies from Dundee City Council and Glasgow City Council which have both made use of powers to pay for missing shares in mixed ownership buildings suggest that recovering missing shares once work has been carried out is time consuming and labour intensive. There is also a risk that the money may not be recovered.

The 30 year payment period for recovery of funds through repayment charges as outlined in the Bill is excessive and the Council has limited resources to loan funds over such a long period. The Council would not be able to borrow for this expenditure (as it would technically be revenue not capital), without express permission of Scottish Ministers. While the 30 year payment plan is better than not getting paid at all or an uncertain inhibition on the property, owners should be encouraged to pay as soon as possible and the existence of the 30 year option would discourage this.

The period of 30 years for an owner to pay back their share through repayment charges is not suitable for all individuals and circumstances. It is recommended that local authorities should be given the flexibility to determine the time period over which the share must be paid back based on individual circumstances.

It would also be more valuable and applicable if there was minimal risk of non-recovery of the funds, and therefore it is recommended that the charging order should be secured by prior ranking.

It is also recommended that the Scottish Government should establish a national fund that local authorities could access to facilitate shared repairs. Money would be paid back once recovered from the owner/s.

Requirement to Prepare a Plan for Managing Common Maintenance

In order for owners to maintain their homes, they must be aware of the condition that their property is in and any work that may need to be carried out. Proper maintenance of the roof of a building is crucial and regular roof inspections can be a core part of a preventative and planned approach to property maintenance.

It is suggested that the Bill is amended to require that homeowners have a plan in place to ensure the maintenance of common parts of their property. This plan should include:

- An annual roof inspection;
- A payment plan or other arrangements to fund maintenance and repairs; and
- Appointment of a responsible person or agent to manage the plan.

Local authorities would have to establish local enforcement policies which could include a requirement for homeowners to register details of property inspections and payment plans with the local authority or the use of powers in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 to require homeowners to establish a maintenance plan.

If a local authority has to intervene to carry out an emergency repair and it is discovered that there is no maintenance plan in place, the owners should be advised that they must establish a plan within an agreed time period. Local authorities may offer information and advice to support homeowners to develop their maintenance plan. If the owners still fail to implement a maintenance plan, they should be subject to a fine. At this point a mandatory maintenance plan should be established to reduce the likelihood of future emergency repairs.

The process of implementing maintenance plans should be streamlined. It is recommended that when issuing a maintenance plan, local authorities should only have to inform the owner (or owners) of the building. The owner (or owners) would then have a duty to inform any other interested parties.

These amendments would be particularly effective if accompanied by changes to the home report.

Requirement for information to be shared with co-owners

The Bill should be amended to place a duty on any owner who carries out a survey of a communal area of a building to share that report with any other owners. This would prevent the duplication of surveys on the same building, encourage owners to work together and ensure better awareness of property condition.

Strengthen role of solicitors in informing potential purchasers

It is evident that home owners often do not consider the potential cost of repairs or how they might pay for these when deciding to purchase a property. Some may not be aware that they have a responsibility to maintain common areas of a building. The Council suggests that a duty should be placed on solicitors to advise potential purchasers of their responsibilities towards maintenance of the property and ensure that they have a plan to cover costs should any maintenance or repair work need to be carried out.

Solicitors should make clients aware of different options available to them to cover the cost of repairs such as savings accounts, remortgaging or taking out a loan. Purchasers could also be signposted to agencies offering advice on carrying out shared repairs and information on grants available for improvements e.g. for improving energy efficiency. The buyer would have to sign a contract confirming that they understand their responsibilities and will be able to fund necessary works.

It is also suggested that solicitors are required to encourage vendors to include a ‘service history’ in their Home Report as detailed below.

Recommended Revision to Home Reports

Home Reports are a useful tool in informing potential buyers about the property they are considering. However, the Council feels that there is potential to widen the scope of the home report and strengthen the role that it plays in reinforcing home owner responsibilities and improving conditions in the private sector.
The Home Report template should be amended to include basic information on homeowner responsibilities not only for the maintenance of their own property but for any common areas in a building. This should outline what constitutes a common area and reinforce the message that all owners in a block are responsible for monitoring the condition of these areas and arranging repairs where necessary.

The Home Report should contain more detailed information on the current condition of the property in order to encourage current owners to maintain properties to a high standard and to help potential buyers to make an informed decision. This should include the latest roof inspection report (no more than 12 months old) as detailed above.

The Home Report template should also be amended to include an optional “service history” of the property. This would detail maintenance and repairs that have been carried out on the property during their ownership and the associated costs. This will help to build up a picture of the property’s condition and the potential cost of repairs and maintenance.

It should be an offence for an owner to provide false information in a home report or to withhold information.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

Q16. Do you have any comments on relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

The Council does not anticipate any policy implications arising from the miscellaneous provisions.

Other Issues

Q.17 Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

No.

Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

No.

City of Edinburgh Council
04 March 2014
Introduction

In order to respond to the Scottish Government’s Housing (Scotland) Bill Clackmannanshire Tenants and Residents Federation organised an information and discussion session on the document’s content for members of the Federation. This session was facilitated by the Tenants Information Service.

The following report details our comments and feedback from this session.

Part 1 – the Right to Buy

We consider that:

- The Right to Buy (RTB) should now be abolished in order to safeguard and protect the limited social housing resource that we currently have in Scotland.

- The timetable for abolishing the RTB should 3 years as outlined in the consultation. That said, we consider that people who currently have the RTB, have had this right for a significant number of years and have not exercised it in these years and may now be unlikely to do so, but with a definite end to right to buy they may reconsider their options.

- The RTB should be abolished for all tenants at the same time, with the aim of retaining as much social housing stock as possible and ensuring everyone is treated the same that it does need to stop for all tenants at the same time.

It should be noted that we have some concern that abolishing the RTB:

- Will lead to an increase in applications at a time when demand for housing is high and needs to be protected.

- Clackmannanshire Council will need to review its Business Plan to take account of sales income and loss of rent.

- Some tenants may feel pressured into exercising their RTB before it is abolished, but may not really be able to afford the repayments or property upkeep in the future. Interest rates are not guaranteed and although low at the moment, this is bound to change.
• Some unscrupulous companies will target tenants to encourage them to exercise their RTB prior to the abolition of the right being implemented and may prey on vulnerable tenants.

• The forthcoming referendum may impact on RTB sales.

• It is essential that tenants have full access and advice to the RTB as the situation is both complex and for some difficult to understand.

Part 2 – Social Housing

a) Allocations
In terms of the allocation of social housing we agree with the reasonable preference categories of:
• Living below the tolerable standard
• Overcrowding and large families
• Unsatisfactory housing conditions and homelessness

However we consider that landlords should be enabled to allocate housing in a “common sense approach” in order to sustain tenancies, protect the interests of existing tenants in terms of their right to live in a safe and secure environment and allocate tenancies in a sensitive manner with regard to the demographic of other people living in neighbouring properties, with particular regard to areas or property types that are more suitable for or already have older people living in them.

Landlords should be able to take an applicant’s previous Antisocial Behaviour (ASB) into account when considering whether or not to offer them a house. This should also include homeless applicants previously evicted for ASB. ASB is not acceptable regardless of whether an applicant is homeless or not.

Landlords must consult tenants and tenants’ organisations on any proposals to change allocations policies and procedures. We are appalled to think that a landlord would not consult and consider us to have an excellent working relationship with this regard in Clackmannanshire with the Council.

b) Succession
On the whole, we consider that the current rule of 6 months in terms of succession usually works well in terms of people being able succeed the tenancy of the family home and propose this remains the same as long as it has been the person’s only and principle home for 6 months or more.

We do have concerns that at times people are not honest with the information they provide to the landlord in terms of the time lived at a property. This happens with the current term of 6 months, so with close monitoring perhaps these people may be “caught out” with the introduction of a 12 month period. However are we changing terms to “catch out” the minority and penalise the majority?
c) Joint tenancies
We consider that joint tenants should be able to succeed the tenancy as at present.

d) Assignation
We consider that tenants should only be able to assign a tenancy to a person who has lived in the house as their only home for the increased 12 months as proposed and that this person should only be allocated this house, if they would be normally allocated this type of property under the landlord’s allocation policy. We consider this should prevent people from moving into a tenant’s home with the intention of being assigned the house in order to “queue jump”.

e) Sub letting
Similar to assignation, we consider that tenants should only be able to sub let their home to a person has lived in the house as their only home for the increased 12 months as proposed and that this person should only be allocated this house, if they would be normally allocated this type of property under the landlord’s allocation policy.

We also consider that the principles around assignation and sub letting require further explanation and guidelines.

f) Short Scottish Secure Tenancies
We consider that:

- Short Scottish Secure Tenancies should be increased to 12 months which will test the “resolve” of tenant who can perhaps behave well enough to sustain a tenancy for 6 months.

- It should be noted also that we are still in favour of “probationary tenancies” and would like to see every steps taken to support landlords to support their tenants to sustain effective tenancies.

- People who own their own homes should only be allocated a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy in order to allow them time to make their own home suitable for their needs or make alternative arrangements. People fleeing violence and own their own home should also be given a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy to allow them to be safe and make alternative arrangements where possible.

Under no circumstances should people be allocated a social rented house and continue to keep their own home elsewhere or sell their house and move into a social rented house retaining the capital. With exception to the latter point, we feel that if an individual needs to move to supported accommodation which includes a care service, it would be appropriate for them to sell their home. We would like to see people living independently in communities as far as possible.
g) Antisocial Behaviour

SSST's

With regard to our feedback detailed below, it should be noted that we understand that landlords have a duty to house people and that eviction can just move the problem of ASB from one place to another. It needs to be clearer that tenants who make themselves intentionally homeless through ASB should not be rehoused. However as previously stated we consider that landlords have a duty to their other tenants in terms of ensuring people live in safe and secure homes and environments.

Therefore we consider that:

- Landlords should be able to give all new tenants Short Scottish Secure Tenancies where there has been previous ASB

- Landlords should be able to convert full Scottish Secure Tenancies to Short tenancies where they are dealing with a tenants ASB to allow them to work with the tenant to try to improve the behaviour or stop the tenancy where the ASB continues

- Increasing the timescale of a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy should allow landlords additional time to monitor tenancies and provide tenancy support. This should be an increase to 12 months with potential to extend to 18 months if things improve. However it should be noted it is vital that this does not mean that other tenants suffer ASB in their communities for a longer period of time

- Landlords should be able to continue to extend Short Scottish Secure Tenancies until they are convinced that the tenancies will not cause problems to neighbours and / or the wider community

- Landlords should continue to provide tenancy support whilst tenants have a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy and there needs to be powers for landlords to make sure that the ASB can be addressed or tenancy terminated

Part 3 – Private Rented Housing

In terms of the private rented sector, we agree that there needs to be increased powers and measures to deal with this sector, and that this is required in relation to:

- Ensuring private tenants have up to date and accurate information on their rights and responsibilities

- Protecting the rights of private tenants

- Protecting the rights of the private landlords and

- Protecting the rights of other tenants and residents in communities where:
- Private tenants are the cause of ASB, damage to the property of other tenants and residents in the block, street or community
- Ensuring common repair and investment work is carried out that social landlords need to or want to do for their tenants and properties
- Private landlords lack of care or investment in properties causes problems for social housing tenants or landlords

a) The Tribunal
We agree that the introduction of the private sector housing tribunal is positive especially if it saves resources and is a quicker course of action to deal with issues. However,

- Further information and clarification is required on the operation and enforcement powers of the Tribunal and that the Tribunal needs to “have clout and teeth” or it will not be worth the bother
- The Tribunal needs to be able to “streamline” the disputes process and make it easier and quicker than the current operation via the Sheriff Court system

b) Private Rented Housing Panel
We consider that:

- Local Authorities should have increased powers to enforce the repairing standard
- The Private Rented Housing Panel should make the process simpler and more streamlined and that the Panel should have “teeth” and be a less onerous process than using the Sheriff Court system
- Local Authorities will require enforcement powers to ensure the repairs and maintenance work is carried out
- All Private Lets should meet the repairing standard and Local authorities should have increased powers to enforce this

We recognise, that although this looks good on paper, in reality we are very concerned that the Local Authority currently does not have resources to address this activity. We need reassurance as to where extra resources can be found.

Part 4 – Letting Agents
We consider that:

- Letting Agents should be subject to a robust and effective registration scheme
- Local Authorities should have additional enforcement powers in areas where there are issues with management of all stock owned by a particular landlord
• Local Authorities should have increased powers to deal with private landlords where there are issues in relation to:
  - The behaviour of the tenant living in their property
  - The lack of repairs and maintenance of the property and any common areas, especially where there are social housing tenants and/or properties

• Letting Agents should be required to meet and sign up to a Code of conduct

• Guidelines need to be developed in full consultation with tenants, both social and private

• Letting Agent Registration and Code of conduct “needs to have teeth”

• The Bill and the Scottish Government needs to look at “beefing up” existing systems and ensure Local Authorities and other involved implement the use of the full powers already available rather than adding new things

Part 5 – Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents
In terms of protecting the rights of tenants living in these sites or parks we agree that:

• Mobile and Park Home sites should be licensed and meet with the new standards to be introduced

• Managers should be fit and proper persons

• Local Authorities should have new powers to grant and revoke licences

• Local Authorities should have powers to ensure sites are maintained, repaired and improved to a high standard

Once again it should be noted that we do have concerns regarding where Local Authorities will acquire the funding to do this and want guarantees that this will not come from HRA funding

Part 6 – Private Housing Conditions
As above, we consider that Local Authorities should have powers to enforce private landlords to carry out repairs and improvement to their properties. In addition in properties where social landlords own some of the properties, social landlords should have additional powers to enforce repairs and easier mechanisms to encourage private landlords to contribute their share of improvement works required.

Consideration should be given to developing a private rented housing standard, similar to the Scottish Housing Quality Standard.
Others

a) SHR Transfer of Assets

We would like to express concern that with the introduction of the Scottish Social Housing Charter and the Annual Report on the Charter, we would hope that any evidence of potential insolvency will be made known to the SHR in ample time to ensure the RSL tenants are consulted on any proposals to transfer to or merge with or be taken over by another landlord, therefore we do not agree that the requirement to consult should be removed.

This proposal within the Bill came as a surprise to us and unless the SHR can provide specific details of cases where there has been cause for concern we are adamant that tenants should be involved in any decision making regarding the future position of their landlord.

For the reasons outlined above, we also do not consider that the duty on the SHR to always obtain a valuation of assets or direct a transfer at an open market valuation should be removed. The value of assets should always be known.

Clackmannanshire Tenants and Residents Federation
27\textsuperscript{th} February 2014.
Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities' discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents' practice?
This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards. It is essential that the reputation of the industry is improved while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

We believe there should be a new stand-alone Letting Agent Register operated by the Scottish Government.

The Register should include all businesses which let and manage private rented residential property in Scotland. However, we would not support simply replicating the processes and principles established for the Property Factors Register. Whilst it has improved that sector, this system is not robust enough in our opinion for the letting and management sector, and considerable consideration needs to be given to the detail of implementation for our sector.

A strong Code of Practice is needed. Along with the other representative organisations, we welcome the planned consultation in preparing the Code as secondary legislation.

Registration should include:

- an annual renewal (not every 3 years)
- a legally binding commitment each year to possessing:
  - adequate professional indemnity insurance
  - appropriate client money protection
  - a ring-fenced client money bank account
  - an annual audit of client accounts
  - membership of an ombudsman scheme to ensure an easily available redress mechanism for tenants and landlords.

Depending on the registration processes put in place there could be a requirement for the agent to produce annual documentation to confirm the above. It may be more appropriate to consider the registration process to be more the issuing of a licence approving the Letting Agent.

We believe that any Registration process should be Government operated free of any involvement with professional bodies such as the RICS or ARLA and others. Agents should aspire to differentiate themselves in the market place by achieving the standards required to gain membership. Within the code of practice there may be the requirement over a period of time to require owners of an staff employed in an agency to be say 50% qualified to a certain level of professional knowledge and competency.

The impact of these proposals on our industry is to be welcomed. It will however highlight even further the disparity in enforcement that currently exists on compliant letting agents and landlords and those who operate below the required standards. The passing of legislation and implementation of registration of Letting Agents will create an environment where landlords who are self-managing will perceive the enforcement of regulation on them to be far less onerous. We recommend that at the same time as these regulations are implemented that the Landlord Registration regulations are enforced more robustly.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

See the above comment about ombudsman services in response to Question 10; under these schemes redress is readily available to customers of such organisations at no cost to the claimant.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

Clouds Property Management
21.02.14
COLINTON LETTINGS
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

We are a small family run letting agency with rental property in Scotland and support all of the feedback recommended by SAL / CLA in relation to the new housing bill. However we are particularly concerned with the new regulations for letting agents.

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

If I’m honest I do not welcome new regulation of letting agents any more than I did the legislation of tenancy deposits. I think that many landlords generally bear costs which really should be paid for by tenants but it is not worth the time and effort to prepare and argue a case. Having said that our experience of how Safe Deposits Scotland is performing is generally very positive and I dare say it has reduced rogue landlords abilities to withhold deposits unreasonably.

So perhaps new regulations for Letting Agents will drive out poor practice and improve standards and the reputation of the industry while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent. But could it please be kept VERY SIMPLE such as a code of practice similar to the Council of Letting Agents, requiring minimal administrative burden on small businesses.

CLA have helpfully pointed out potential for confusion between agents who are registered through landlord registration (as established by the Antisocial Behaviour (Scotland) Act 2004) and registered letting agents as defined in the Bill. In order to reduce bureaucracy and avoid this confusion, registered letting agents should be automatically entered on the landlord register and the letting agent reference number should be used by all local authorities for the purposes of identifying letting agents on the landlord register (replacing the current system of giving agents registration numbers which differ from authority to authority).

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Apparently the proposed mechanism will be appropriate in providing a simple and swift method of resolving disputes – I do hope so. I always felt that the Private Sector Landlord Team were a very effective mediator in minor disputes between tenants and landlords, such as those arising over the deposit refund at the end of the tenancy. I have yet to test out Safe Deposits Scotland Arbitration and hope never to need it. I feel the same about any Letting Agent panel but better that than the stress of a small claims or other court.
Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

The problem of communal repairs in Edinburgh in particular has become very problematic since the withdrawal of the Statutory Repair Notice scheme. For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will I HOPE be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants. Inevitably in a shared stair with up to 10 owners including perhaps businesses on the ground floor, there may be certain owners who cannot or simply will not agree to pay their fair share. Attaching these unpaid bills to any subsequent sale of the property seemed to be an excellent way of ensuring that all bills would eventually be settled and to allow essential repair works to go ahead in a timely manner.

Colinton Lettings
01 February 2014
1. The Council of Mortgage Lenders (CML) is the representative trade association for mortgage lenders. Our 115 members comprise banks, building societies, insurance companies and other specialist mortgage lenders who, together, lend around 95% of the residential mortgages in the UK. In addition, the CML’s members have lent over £60 billion UK-wide for new-build, repair and improvement to social housing of which just under £4 billion is in Scotland.

2. CML Scotland welcomes the opportunity to respond to the call for views by the Scottish Parliament Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee on the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

General

3. We have restricted our comments to those Parts of the Bill in which our members have a direct interest and are generally supportive of other parts of the Bill which we have not commented upon.

Part 1 Right to Buy (RTB)

4. When the Scottish Government last consulted in 2009 on proposals relating to the RTB which found their way into the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 which ended the RTB for new supply social housing and for any new tenants entering the social rented sector we welcomed the fact that the RTB would remain for existing tenants. Nothing has happened in the intervening period to change our stance in this regard, particularly in light of recent research which still demonstrates a strong desire for home ownership.

5. Having said that we fully recognise RTB sales have fallen dramatically in recent years and RTB could be regarded as a policy which is effectively coming to a natural end as the majority of tenants who wished to buy and could afford to do so will have already exercised their right. We also recognise the demand which there is for all types of affordable housing and that ending the RTB will allow houses which would otherwise have been lost to the social rented sector to be retained in it.

6. While we recognise the strength of aspirations to home-ownership and the many benefits it delivers, we also acknowledge that it is not the tenure for everyone all of the time. The real challenge is to deliver a healthy balance of tenures, providing a choice of affordable housing. There is a need for diversity and for the balance of tenure to respond to economic and social change. Lenders do, of course, help fund housing across all tenures and have a considerable interest in both the private rented and social rented sectors.

7. The proposals either to end the RTB will undoubtedly impact in a negative way on some people who aspire to homeownership and in response to this the Scottish Government should consider the development of an intermediate tenure for households to be able to lower or raise their level of home-ownership according to their changing personal circumstances. This would also be one way of managing the higher risk profile of mortgage lending which has occurred over the last decade as a result of extending home-ownership lower down the socio-economic spectrum.

8. We believe that a 3 year period before the RTB ends is more than an adequate notice period for those affected by the withdrawal of the RTB.

Part 7 Miscellaneous

20 year rule

9. We are supportive of powers being given to Scottish Ministers to exempt certain Standard Securities from the provisions of Section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1970. It is our view that this is an area of the law which is now outdated and requires fundamental review.

10. Section 11 previously caused issues in terms of long term private funding for the Housing Association sector and the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 exempted Standard Securities granted over Housing Association assets from the provisions of Section 11.

11. More recently it has caused issues in relation to the Scottish Government shared equity loan schemes in that the owner of the property could repay the original equity contribution from the Scottish Government after 20 years without any uplift in the value of the property. While this is an issue for the Scottish Government it is also creates an issue for mortgage lenders in that the new Mortgage Conduct of Business Rules due to be introduced by the Financial Conduct Authority in April 2014 require a lender to take into account in assessing affordability any foreseeable event which could impact on the ability to repay the mortgage during its lifetime. This would mean that if the mortgage was for 25 years the lender would have to consider how the shared equity loan would be repaid at the end of year 20. Most lenders have indicated that they will not lend under the Scottish shared equity schemes unless the length of the shared equity loan matches the length of the mortgage.

Scottish Housing Regulator (SHR) powers

12. The Bill’s provisions amend Section 67 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 and would allow the SHR in certain circumstances in a potential insolvency situation to transfer the assets of an RSL without consulting tenants or secured creditors. It also allows the SHR in a partial transfer situation to transfer assets without a valuation.

13. While understanding the need of the SHR to move quickly in potential insolvency situations the current obligation on the SHR under Section 67(4) to consult with secured creditors is not an onerous one. There is no minimum consultation period and no specification as to the level of consultation required. There is also no obligation on the SHR to comply with the views of secured creditors. Any decision still rests at the discretion of the SHR. Secured creditors therefore currently enjoy very limited protection and safeguards and it is therefore difficult for us to understand why they are now being removed even if they are restricted to the situation where the viability of an RSL is in danger for financial reasons.
14. We know of no case in Scotland where the SHR has not consulted with the lender to an RSL facing financial difficulty and we can think of no circumstance in which it would not be appropriate to do so. In practice in rescue situations we cannot see how a transfer can be conducted without involving a lender where it holds security over the assets of the distressed RSL. In addition where the rescuing RSL is also borrowing there will also be a need to consult with their lender/s to ensure that their lender/s is happy for them to take on additional obligations and that their loan covenants are not being breached. In rescue situations it needs all parties to be working together—the SHR, the distressed landlord, the receiving landlord and lenders to both landlords. It is only by this happening that the interests of the tenants of the distressed landlord can be protected.

15. It is therefore hard to understand why the obligation to consult with secured creditors is being removed.

16. As regards the obligation to consult with tenants, we can foresee issues arising if urgent action is required, but again simply removing the obligation in its entirety seems draconian. We would have thought an obligation to consult to the extent viable in the circumstances taking into account the need for urgent action would have been a more appropriate approach.

17. So far as the removal of the obligation to obtain a valuation in the event of a partial transfer is concerned we cannot see how a partial transfer could possibly be structured in the absence of an indication of the value applying to the stock to be transferred. In the absence of any linkage to a valuation, it would be open to the SHR to direct a transfer at a nominal value (or any other figure chosen). This provision is a major concern for lenders.

18. We have a number of specific reservations relating to where a lender held a security over assets subject to the partial transfer:

- Is it assumed that any transfer would be free of security? If so, then the relevant bank debt would need to be refinanced.
- If alternatively the transfer is to be subject to security, then this would create a situation where a transferee RSL would acquire stock subject to security for debt owed by the transferor RSL. The transferor RSL would lose the benefit of the stock (and the rents arising from it) but retain the debt obligation.
- We are also not clear on the insolvency position. Transfers of assets at less than their market value can normally be challenged as gratuitous alienations or fraudulent preferences.

19. Overall it is difficult to envisage why a partial transfer should ever be at less than ‘market value’ and if a valuation (full or desk-top) is required for this purpose, this should be a condition to such a transfer. As with whole transfers, there would appear to be other adequate controls and powers presently available to the SHR to ensure appropriate interim management of the relevant stock pending a properly structured partial transfer.

20. We would call on the Scottish Government to reconsider this matter.
Repeal of defective designation

21. In our submission to a consultation on this matter we advised the Scottish Government that we do not believe the removal of the designation “defective” from Precast Reinforced Concrete (PRC) homes in Scotland would improve the availability of mortgages on these types of property. There is little doubt that the problem and stigma attached to these properties is fairly deep rooted. Lenders will still adopt a cautious attitude to them and unless approved repairs have been carried out to them they will still be regarded as not being suitable as security.

22. The present proposal has also the ability to create a confusing picture so far as our members are concerned. The majority of lenders operate on a UK wide basis and many of the PRC house types exist in both Scotland and England and Wales. It will raise questions going forward of why in Scotland these house types are not considered defective but in England and Wales they are.

23. The development of new approved repair schemes in conjunction with the Buildings Research Establishment is in our view more likely to bring long term benefits in relation to PRC homes although it cannot be guaranteed that such schemes will meet all aspects of every lenders’ individual lending policies.

COUNCIL OF MORTGAGE LENDERS

30 JANUARY 2014
CRAIGDENMUIR LIMITED
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Part 5 Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

We own & operate a Residential & Holiday Park park in Stepps, Glasgow, we are a family business who have been in this industry for over 30 years, we have owned our park in Glasgow for 10 years come June of this year, this was a very run down site that had been allowed to fall in to disrepair with a lack of investment with many breaches to the site license conditions,

We have found that the fault for a majority of the problems on this site & the reasons for it being allowed to fall in to disrepair are down to North Lanarkshire Council who have in our view failed to police the site properly, re carrying out annual inspections of the site on a regular basis, on purchasing this site we approached environmental health services pointing out to them that there appear to be numerous problems with regard to breaches to the site license, the main ones being Density & Spacing with many of the homes being to close to each other this making it more possible for the risk of fire spreading, another main area of concern was the amount of fire points that where on the site being only 5, this was a short fall of 12 as there should have been 17 in total, in our view if we had not put the appropriate amount of pressure on the environmental Health Services then this site would still be in the same condition today, in our view they did not have the experience or the will to implement the required works,

We have sought to rectify the outstanding breaches by fully redeveloping this site to a 5 star standard, this has been a long haul with lots of hard work put in from ourselves, family members & of course our staff, of which we employee 12 local people plus numerous local contractors, everything that is here has had to be replaced such as the sewerage, gas, electrics, concrete bases, roads, street lighting, fire fighting equipment the list is endless, these items are to mention but a few,

When complete our site will accommodate 187 Residential Park Homes, we still have a long way to go as we are still in phase one but work is progressing well, this development is for the over 50’s which allows the semi / retired the ability to down size this freeing up other housing stock for younger families to locate in to the local area, which has huge benefits for the whole community as a whole,

We do now receive yearly visits from environmental Health Services & have done for the past 3 years, in our view it is a paperwork exercise as we still have a couple of outstanding matters relating to Density & Spacing with regard to some of the older homes on the site, On their last two visits over the past two years I have given them copies of our latest Fire Risk Assessment regarding a particular home, we are still awaiting a response!!

We keep hearing the reasons for all the changes in legislation & the more we hear the more puzzled we are, in our opinion if the local authorities carried out their duties in a proper manner then a lot of the problems that exist would not be there, the new proposals for the local authority to be able to come in & do any required works in the owners absence to us is quite unbelievable, if they do not currently have the expertise or the will, then how are they going to be able to resolve the perceived problems that others say exist in absence of the owners,

The proposals to introduce time limits on the site licence would in our view be very damaging to our industry, as we often get asked by potential customers what happens to us if you go bankrupt & can you put us of the park if you feel like it, our answer is you are purchasing the home & taking a license over the land that the home sits on, the license is for an indefinite period, there is no time restriction as long as you maintain the home & the pitch, if we start telling potential occupiers that our license is only for 3 - 5 or 10 years this is in our opinion going to add a lot of scepticism on their decision to purchase, as the next question is what if you lose your license then what happens, we do not think that this will help the potential customer come to a decision to purchase, if the right frame work is put in place then the authorities already have the powers to do the work to a site that is in disrepair, if they decide to use them, if there is unacceptable behaviour from a site owner & they allow the site to fall in to disrepair, then at the pitch fee review process the residents now have the power to decrease the pitch fee, what respectable business owner would want this to happen, so it is in our interest to keep the site to the highest of standards,

Our Holiday side of the park has been awarded last year in 2013 a 5 star grading from Visit Scotland, they only grade the Holiday side of the park, a lot of this is down to the work that has been carried out from the entrance throughout the park as a whole, this is what the majority of park owners want to achieve,

To change the site licensing time limits that would effect the majority of good park operators, because of the very small minority of rogue park owners would in our view be counter productive, as it will have a negative impact on the industry & to the new purchasers that we are trying very hard to attract,

We own a small residential park in Andover, Hampshire which we have owned for over 23 years, this was also a very run down site when we purchased it back in 1991, it was fully redeveloped a number of years ago & is fully occupied, re the new site licensing proposals that are to come in to force in England re site licensing fees in April, I called the Environmental Health Services last week & spoke to a Mr Tim Blackmoor I asked him have they published a fee policy yet re proposed site licensing fees, he replied no, as he said we do not know what we are supposed to be charging for, he said we have written to the goverment to ask them to clarify what we are supposed to be charging for, as Mr Blackmoor replied we don’t want to be dreaming up fees for no reason, as he stated we do not have any badly run parks in our area so why would we be issuing fees?

This makes you wonder if the vast majority of residents are happy on their parks, which we believe they are & only a small minority of residents have had problems, it seems like introducing time limits for site licenses is in effect is using a sledge hammer to crack a nut!! if residents are not happy then this brings negative publicity to all park owners & this is not in our interests, we do believe that residents should have the fullest protection of the law available to them,

If site licensing should have time limits introduced then at the bare minimum it should be a least 10 years with 5 yearly reviews, but preferably not at all!!

And the requirements should be only if a park owner has been convicted in a court of law for harassment or fraud should they be considered to lose their site license,

Craigendmuir Limited

23.02.14
CRAIGTOUN MEADOWS LTD
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

I believe that the Consumer Focus research is flawed ie they spoke to less than 3% of those who live in Park Homes in Scotland, so the percentages subsequently quoted in their findings then become less reliable.

The Social research Report Licensing of Caravan Sites in Scotland - An Analysis of Consultation Responses is also a bit disconcerting when the report states that 55 of the 76 respondents came from 2 park homes. I am sure they mean 2 Parks and in the report it states that all the respondents gave exactly the same response, word for word. The BH&HPA could have done exactly the same thing for each of its' Parks, who would all have signed letters. That would have heavily weighted the findings the other way.

In effective both reports have been slanted in a negative way towards Parks. I do agree that there is a need for a change in legislation to weed out the 'rogue' element that exists in this business as it does in every other, though there is an element here of using a sledgehammer to crack a nut.

It is also worth noting that this legislation will have a knock on effect on Holiday Parks who also have Residential homes, who will now need 2 licences to operate as a result of this. Where our Company only has 3 couples living on a 32 acre Park, it seems excessive that we need a separate licence for facilities that are shared with holiday makers on a site that has been graded as 5 star by VisitScotland for many years. There will be potential for a negative effect on Tourism as a result of some of the implications of this legislation.

Statutory Minimum Application Criteria
As a Company we have no difficulty whatsoever with this, though it is strange to note that almost 50% of Local Authorities who responded perceived difficulties in applying this criteria.

Fit and proper Person Test
I'm wholly in favour of this. It would need to be standard across Scotland with no variations available to Councils and a straightforward criminal record check would suffice as the Council would already have a record of non-compliance issues anyway. There should be a specific legal definition of what constitutes non-compliance, with a legal challenge procedure in place. The system should be one which permits only court/ Tribunal findings to be taken into account.

Some of the proposed tests - any reports of antisocial behaviour, any breach of site licence, any complaints that have come to the local authority's attention - are vague, and petty issues could be used without the court/tribunal element.
Issue of a Site Licence

Based on past experience, the administrative burden on a Council to issue a new licence every 3 years would be too much. 5 or 7 years is much more reasonable and practical and any ‘action’ taken against a Park or change of ownership would justify a re-examination of that Licence anyway. While a fee of £600 is more reasonable than suggested by some councils, there should be something in place to ensure that Mixed Holiday/Residential Parks only need to pay one fee. The presumption should always be in favour of renewal, which is disapproved only in prescribed circumstances which would then require a fuller application. I would also suggest that a 'renewal' would be a smaller fee than a full application.

In 2008 Fife Council attempted to amend our Licence following a Planning Application, but an Appeal to the Scottish Office by ourselves was successful and found that the Council had not followed their own rules. It is important that proper checks are put in place.

Failure to comply with formal notices to require works to be done

This could be useful for catching rogues but can also cause problems for those that are not. I had an 18 month dispute with Fife Council over damage their workmen did at the entrance of our Park. The damage caused great inconvenience to our customers and Residents. For 18 months they argued it was my problem and insisted the Park should deal with it. Given the power they would have enforced this. Eventually with the help of a local Councillor they accepted liability and carried out the repair work.

Fines for non-compliance should also be laid down on a scale for the offence, as with driving licences.

A penalty notice for suspending pitch fee payments etc could be problematic if it relates to a Holiday Park with Residential homes - do holidays get cancelled? There would need to be restrictions on this type of notice. Fees are often paid at the beginning of a year. Removing the right to these in say, April would be meaningless in many cases.

Management Order

It is unlikely that many Councils will have appropriate Staff in reserve with the right skill set to do this. The owners’ right of contact with residents has already been all but removed. If the Council were to apply to the Court for a Management Order, where would the funding for running the business come from? How liable would the Council be if they made things worse? Based on potholes in roads, blocked drains etc that isn't as unlikely as it sounds.

Ability of the Council to Charge a Fee

This is inevitable and should not cost a Park more than it costs the Council and must be transparent. It was interesting to note that a majority of Local Councils (social report) thought they should be given the right to exempt certain sites from fees (7.5).
Recovering Licence costs from fees

It has been suggested that Parks can't recover the cost of licences from pitch fees. Are there other businesses who can't recover licence costs from their main source of income? The inference for our Park is that Holidaymakers will effectively pay for the Licence for the 3 Residents.

While very much in favour of change to clear up those that do damage to the industry, I am concerned about giving Local Authorities too much power without recourse to the Courts. The number of extra Staff that Councils would need to employ to justify the fees would probably be prohibitive, as would the cost of training to the level required.

As a simple example of the powers already in play and how they are used - in 2012 the Fife Council Environmental Health Team carried out an unannounced Health and Safety check on our 32 acre Park. It lasted 15 minutes and the 2 staff said 'see you in 5 years' at the end of it. I didn't consider that a 'Fit and Proper' test of our Park.

While there are benefits to be gained from the changes in legislation it is important that changes are not just for the sake of it and do not hurt those Park Owners and the 97% of Residents who were not consulted as part of this exercise.

Craigtoun Meadows Ltd
15 February 2014
Part One: the History of Housing Policy

I chose to research the history of state assisted housing because, when I first started work in the Housing Division, I was dealing with then current Housing Acts, but knew nothing of previous systems of State assistance. So when I made suggestions about solving a particular current problem, the head of the Housing Division, who was about to retire after long service, would tell me that it had been tried before, under a particular Act, which he specified, but had failed because of reasons which he again specified. I had never heard of the Acts which he quoted – e.g. the "Addison Act" of 1919, the "Chamberlain Act" of 1923, and even what I later found out to be the important "Wheatley Act" of 1924.

Nor was I aware of the reports of the Scottish Housing Advisory Committee in 1944, which set out the basis for post-war housing programmes, such as the return to "General Needs" subsidies in the Housing (Financial Provisions) (Scotland) Act, 1946, and the assistance for improvement of existing houses in an Act in 1949. The latter's deletion of all references to "the working classes" in previous Housing Acts gave local authorities, in effect, pre-eminence in housing provision. Accordingly, in only thirty years Scottish housing policy had changed from virtually complete reliance on private enterprise to an almost equally complete reliance on the public sector. However, as so often in major organisations, public and private, there was no corporate memory. Knowledge about previous public policies and systems of assistance was contained only in my boss's head, and would disappear when he retired.

Accordingly, my research paper on Housing Policy in Scotland, 1919 -- 1964 dealt with trends of policy on housing subsidies, council rents and assistance to private building. My conclusion was... that policies over half a century varied more in response to immediate expediency than to long-term, consistent principle. Subsidies had been attached to houses, rather than families, so that, in the absence of a link between allocation policy and financial need, the beneficiaries of subsidy were not necessarily those whose financial need was greatest.

Moreover, the failure to attract private enterprise back into building houses for letting meant that public sector housing became synonymous both with subsidised housing and with rented housing.
The result was that the rents of council houses became a political issue. There were long drawn-out arguments between central and local government (particularly Glasgow, Dunbarton County and Dundee), culminating with public inquiries, chaired by Q.C.s, being held in 1955, 1956 and 1957 respectively. In each case central government successfully argued that local authority rents were far too low. The point was that income from rents had to be enough, over the longer term, to enable councils to build more houses

Nothing in these Housing Acts required council houses to be let, so in theory a council could build for sale. Glasgow had built some houses for sale before World War Two, and at least one local authority built a small scheme of houses specifically for sale after that War. However, there was no general move by local authorities to compete with private builders in this way. It was certainly not envisaged that local authorities should sell off large numbers of their houses. I note and welcome the Bill's proposal to abolish the right to buy. This is crucial. Once bought, the new owners are free to sell the houses at current market value. The houses will no longer be "affordable", a vague term, commonly used in the media, which immediately prompts the question "affordable by whom". I am glad to note that the Housing Bill refers rather to "social housing" and "social landlords", which makes clear that the Bill is about houses built by non-profit organisations, such as local authorities and housing associations, for letting at less than current private market rents. In effect, the Bill harks back to council housing as envisaged and/or enabled in previous Housing Acts since Wheatley.

Abolition of right to buy links with building for "General Needs" at less than commercial rents to prompt questions about what are these "needs", and how did local authorities choose which of many applicants should benefit from the lower rents? Hence my decision to research also systems of allocation of Council houses in my paper on Allocation of Council Houses.

I am sending this note to you because I suspect that the inevitable turnover of staff, since my research paper was published, means that there will be no corporate memory of it in organisations that you may be contacting. Yet it is surely important that we should try to learn from the past. So I hope that the above brief summary may help your Committee to put the proposals in the current Housing Bill into their historic context, as successors to previous visions and policies for state assistance to, and/or regulation of, public sector housing.

Part Two: Allocation of Social Housing

In 1944 the Scottish Housing Advisory Committee estimated that 500,000 houses were needed to meet accumulated arrears of housing needs in Scotland. By 1962, almost that number had been built but it was still officially estimated that another 300,000 were needed over the following ten years. The supply of good houses had consistently lagged behind potential demand, and that potential demand had been made effective because of the policy that "no one in genuine need of a house should be asked to pay more rent than he can reasonably afford". (The then Secretary of State for Scotland, Mr J.S. Maclay, speaking during the Second Reading of the Housing and Town Development (Scotland) Bill on 18 February 1957).

Accordingly, with no price mechanism to regulate competing claimants, what principles should govern decisions on allocating tenancies of a limited supply of houses, and how much weight should be attached to each principle? Who gets priority, given that the shortage is so acute, and the waiting lists then so long (as indeed they are now in 2014) that allocation policy may decide not just in what order families will be housed, but which of them might get a subsidised house at all? Applicants were entitled to be satisfied that decisions were being taken fairly, and for good reasons.

Moreover, decisions on allocation not only shape the living conditions of individual families, but can also affect the economy. For example, do allocation policies limit the scope for expansion of industry? Do they allow reasonable freedom of movement to industrial workers?

Local authorities alone could supply the information required, because they were their own masters in allocating their houses. Despite the millions of pounds voted by Parliament, or charged to the rates for council housing each year, no government department could direct a local authority to allocate a house to a particular family, because no Minister could be held responsible for decisions taken by local authorities within their statutory powers.

Accordingly, I asked the various housing authorities what their policies were. Information was obtained in two stages – first by a standard questionnaire, and then by correspondence and discussions with the responsible housing officials on specific points that arose from the answers to the questionnaire, or from supplementary material, chiefly in the form of points schemes, which they supplied.

There were 231 Scottish housing authorities: cities, large burghs, small burghs, and counties. To contact all of them would have been impractical, so only a sample of the small burghs was taken, and the predominantly rural and Highland counties were omitted, because their housing problems were smaller in scale and less acute.

In 1962 Scottish local authorities completed nearly 19,000 new houses, but let more than double that number because of vacancies arising in existing houses. As more houses were built each year, the proportion of these “re-lets” would keep on rising. So applicants for council houses had to realise that when their turn came it was a better than even chance that they would be offered a re-let, not a new house. There were, of course, great differences in the standard of “second-hand” houses, but the advantage did not always lie with the newest. People were refusing offers of tenancy in some recently built schemes because they were prepared to wait years longer for a re-let in popular groups of houses, often having been built in the 1920s, but with their own front doors, gardens, and “no roughs”. These “cottage-type” houses were in great demand.

This parallels what happened when “right to buy” was introduced. Tenants of Council houses of popular types, and in popular areas, especially in the cities, seized the opportunity to buy, while tenants in flats in “system built” multi-storey blocks did not, particularly in designs of the “deck-access” type, where teenagers ran along the decks, disturbing older tenants. Without resident caretakers, vandalism was rampant, and lifts broke down. So flats in many multi-storey blocks became difficult to let. This imbalanced Housing Revenue accounts, because rent income from older houses with relatively low remaining loan charges was being lost, but there was decreasing rent income and very heavy out-goings in the high blocks. This made it increasingly difficult for local authorities to finance building more houses. Accordingly, “right to buy” contributed, at least in part over the years, to the current shortage of houses available to rent at less than current commercial market rates. (I hope this author is not regarded as making a political argument: I am simply pointing to what seems to be the economic and market facts).

As indicated above, therefore, I believe the abolition of “right to buy” is essential. Indeed I would go further, and recommend that each new tenant should sign a document accepting that there will be no right to buy, and recognising that the tenancy itself is not a right, but in effect a privilege, after competition with many other applicants, to obtain occupation of a house with a rent considerably lower than in the commercial market.

I recommend this because, when “right to buy” was introduced, many buyers believed that they were entitled to buy at a discounted price because they had been paying rent for many years.
They did not realise that the "rent" they had been paying in those days included also the council's "domestic rates". (This was the predecessor of council tax until it was ended by the Abolition of Domestic Rates (Scotland) Act, 1987. Since then Council Tax, and water and sewerage charges have been billed separately). So only part of their payments had been rent, and even that part was far less than the Council needed to cover maintenance, repairs and the repayment, with interest, of the capital cost of the house. It had gone nowhere near financing the building of replacement houses.

In short, for new houses of any kind to be built, each development must, in the private sector, be commercially viable and, in the public sector, viable in the sense that income has to be enough to finance, on a non-profit basis, the building of replacements at the end of the expected lifetime of the houses.

It might also be argued that it would be helpful to make clear that the tenancy is not necessarily for life, and is not inheritable, but is for a period of years to be determined by the local authority in the light of changes in the family situation and the needs of other applicants. For example, while it seems reasonable, as the Bill provides, that when the original tenant dies, the widow, widower, surviving civil partner or carer could be assigned the tenancy, the local authority should have flexibility to specify that the tenancy is for a period of years related to the time when any children of the family would reach an age when they could reasonably be expected to leave home and set up for themselves. These children would then have to compete with other applicants on the waiting list, and should not expect simply to inherit their parents' secure tenancy.

The local authority might also have flexibility to offer a surviving original tenant a smaller house, so that the original family sized house could be made available to an applicant family who needed the bigger house. This may sound hard, because people become accustomed to living in a particular house, but it would give the local authority the ability to measure - sympathetically of course, and with regard to the existing tenant's reasonable needs - that tenant's expectations against the needs, in a time of considerable housing shortage, of other families on the waiting list.

My survey showed that many authorities accepted applications from people whose need was not urgent, but who saw a council tenancy is the only way they would ever get a decent house at a reasonable rent. Many authorities also failed to keep their waiting lists up to date by regular revision. This made it difficult to arrive at an accurate assessment of housing needs, or even housing demand. So your Committee may wish to ask Scottish local authorities on what basis they are assessing housing needs in their area.

The basis of any allocation scheme must be an assessment of relative priorities. However, how does one judge between the needs of different families, of different sizes and compositions, some of whom might be homeless, others overcrowded, others living in insanitary slums? Many authorities in my survey adopted schemes loosely referred to as "points schemes", but many did not award points at all, while others awarded points for only some of the many categories of need. Almost none were alike. It is interesting, however, that the categories of need listed by many of the authorities surveyed resemble fairly closely the categories listed in the Housing Bill.

Of the two main types, a "straight" points scheme put all applicants on one list, with points awarded according to a scale which measured all types and degrees of need, along with other factors - such as length of residence - which the local authority deemed relevant. However, many authorities awarded so many points for length of residence, or of marriage, or of rate paying - and in some cases all three, that it was possible for the points earned for these reasons to outweigh points for valid and urgent housing needs such as overcrowding or ill-health. Indeed in one small burgh it was possible to accumulate 10 points solely for having lived, and paid rates in the town for 20 years, while a maximum of only three points was obtainable for even the severest degree of overcrowding. This was particularly common in smaller communities where local ties were strong and people from not very distant districts were regarded as strangers. The Scottish Housing Advisory Committee had for many years recommended that employment should be accepted as equivalent to residence, with the same minimum period — say a year. However, my survey showed that this had been ignored.

A "group plus points" scheme accepted that the types of need were so different in kind that it was virtually impossible to compare them on any objective, arithmetical basis. So the authority allocated, to each group or type of housing need, a proportion of the houses becoming available annually, with each applicant placed in his/her own group by a scale of points peculiar to that group. However, it was not clear how authorities arrived at decisions about the relative gravity of the various types of need, as measured by the proportion of houses allocated to them. Particularly in the absence of any detailed survey of housing conditions in the area, how could they be sure that their priorities were correct?

A substantial minority of local authorities, including some of the largest, did not award points at all. In these cases it was not clear how individual allocations were decided, except for the few councils who just allocated in turn according to the date the application was lodged. This system was easily understood by the applicants, but it is difficult to think of any other arguments in its favour as a means of dispensing social justice in areas of housing shortage. In rural areas and in some of the smaller burghs, decisions were taken on the basis of personal knowledge of the applicants and of their housing conditions, by a small sub-committee for an electoral district or even simply by the councillor for that district. In these areas canvassing of councillors was rife, and no matter how well and honestly they may have tried to do the job there were suspicions that those who shouted the loudest got the houses.

A surprisingly large number — more than half of the authorities surveyed — did not print their rules of allocation and issue them to applicants. Obviously, it would be preferable now, as it would have been then, if all authorities published their rules or point schemes in a simple pamphlet. Nothing was more calculated to infuriate or discourage applicants than suspicions that their applications were not being dealt with fairly. Justice must not only be done: it must be seen to be done.

There were provisions for some "Special Groups". One such was ex-servicemen, for whom residential qualifications presented difficulties. So a circular suggested to local authorities that where an ex-serviceman had found employment in an area, or had family connections with it, his application for a house should be dealt with on the principle that his family should be placed at no disadvantage by his absence on service. In the light of ex-service men currently returning from areas such as Afghanistan, your Committee may wish to consider recommending some similar principle.

Another "Special Group" was Key Workers. Most authorities in my survey said they gave special consideration to a key worker, but this was defined as a person who was sponsored by the Board of Trade as being essential to the establishment of a new industry or expansion of an existing one. This did not help ordinary workers who simply wanted to move to an area where they saw better employment prospects. It also did nothing to help recruitment of people such as teachers or nurses who might be badly needed in some areas.

Housing need is not necessarily synonymous with financial need, but most allocation schemes assumed that it was. Only four of the authorities surveyed said that they operated any kind of financial test on applicants.

Transfers of tenancy from one council house to another, within the same authority, usually operated quite extensively, but the attitude of local authorities to mutually agreed exchanges with people living outside the local authority's own boundary varied widely. Indeed one did not permit any exchanges whatsoever with tenants of other local authorities. There was often considerable local opposition to such exchanges. People on the waiting list resented the allocation of a house to a newcomer, even though no one on the waiting list had lost the chance of a house. All they could see was an outsider getting a house ahead of them, and this feeling, although illogical, was strong and a real barrier to large-scale operation of "external" exchanges. Feelings ran highest where there was great competition locally for the popular "cottage" types of house described above, or end-terrace houses with space for a garage.

I hope that the above description of allocation policies (or lack of them) emerging from my survey will be of help to your Committee in considering the provisions in the Housing Bill about housing need, regulation of allocation, assignation of tenancies, and secure tenancies. I would simply emphasise the importance of consulting widely, as the Bill proposes, publicising the selected allocation policies as widely as possible in plain English, and ensuring, so far as possible, that the decisions on allocations are not only fair, but seen to be fair, and are applied and regulated consistently, on a national basis, so far as is reasonable and practicable, given the different scale and urgency of housing need in each area.
Crisis, the national charity for single homeless people, welcomes the publication of the Housing (Scotland) Bill 2013. In particular we welcome the introduction of measures to regulate letting agents.

In addition to the issues Crisis has raised previously in our responses to the Private Rented Sector Strategy and Better Dispute Resolution in Housing Consultations, there are some additional areas of concern which we would like to highlight to the Committee.

Part 2 - Allocation of social housing based on age

The provisions in Part 2 of the Bill to allow social landlords the ability to take age into consideration when allocating housing has the potential to further restrict access to housing for younger people in Scotland.

The new legislation appears to be contradictory to the equal opportunities requirements in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001\(^1\) and there is a real danger that this unnecessary provision will further reduce the already limited housing options for younger people.

This is a particular issue for those in receipt of benefits as at present single claimants aged up to 35 years old are only eligible for the Shared Accommodation Rate (SAR) of Housing Benefit (HB) in the private rented sector which is based on the cost of a room in shared accommodation. In many areas of the country this type of shared accommodation simply doesn’t exist or there is not enough available. Crisis research\(^2\) has found that only 13% of properties were affordable at the SAR, but when we took into account landlord willingness to let to benefit claimants, which is a longstanding problem, only 1.5% of the total were both affordable and accessible to SAR claimants.

As a result social housing is often the only choice for single people receiving HB in this age group. However, they also face restricted access to this sector as 75% of social housing stock in Scotland is estimated to be family sized\(^3\) and as a result of the bedroom tax, claimants would not be eligible for the full rent in these properties. Even with the recent increase to local authority Discretionary Payment funds many tenants are reluctant to move into a property which they would be deemed to under occupy and social landlords are wary of housing tenants who would face a shortfall.

An argument put forward for the introduction of consideration of age when allocating social housing is that it will reduce future anti social incidents. Crisis believe this is an unfair measure as the vast majority of younger tenants do not engage in anti social behaviour, and anti social behaviour is not restricted to young tenants. A more productive approach to reducing anti social behaviour would be through the use of pre tenancy training. There are also a number of existing measures available to social landlords to tackle anti social behaviour.

---

\(^1\) The Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 - Part 7, Section 106.
\(^2\) Crisis (2012) No room available: a study of the availability of shared accommodation for dealing with anti social behaviour, including the use of Short Scottish Secure Tenancy, and these changes should be given an opportunity to bed in before any consideration is given to restricting the allocation of housing to younger tenants.

In 2012/13, 40% of homelessness applications in Scotland were from single people under 35\(^4\), and there is a danger that limiting access to social housing for younger people could result in increased incidents of homelessness and rough sleeping.

Crisis therefore strongly believes that social housing should be awarded based on need and restrictions should not be put in place based on age.

Part 3 – Transfer of sheriff’s jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal

The transfer of private rented housing cases from the sheriff court to a tribunal has the potential to address some of the issues with the current system. In particular, housing cases can be afforded low priority; sheriffs can lack expertise in housing law and the adversarial nature of the sheriff courts can be a barrier to some individuals accessing justice.

However, it is important to ensure that when setting up the First-tier tribunal the needs of vulnerable tenants are considered and they are afforded access to legal advice and support. This is particularly important when dealing with cases of eviction for rent arrears. Eviction has serious consequences for households and can result in homelessness. Any changes to the current regime must take this into consideration and ensure that landlords continue to take the necessary steps to try and resolve disputes before proceeding with repossession action.

We would encourage the new First-tier Tribunal to learn from the operation of the Private Rented Housing Panel (PRHP). The PRHP has been successful in dealing with repair and rent rise cases outside the court system, however, as a result of a lack of awareness there has been limited uptake of the service by tenants. In order for the tribunal to be a success the Scottish Government and local authorities must ensure that PRS tenants are fully aware of the changes and we would like to see promotional work carried out in addition to the updating of the tenant information pack.

Part 3, Section 23 - Electrical Safety in the Private Rented Sector

Section 23 of the Bill proposes changes to the repairing standard contained within the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006. Crisis believes there is a further opportunity to strengthen the repairing standard to ensure that those living in the PRS are not subject to unsafe electrical installations.

The current Repairing Standard requires private landlords to ensure that electrical installation and appliances provided as any part of a let are in a ‘reasonable state of repair and in proper working order at the start of and throughout the tenancy. However, given the growth of the PRS sector which has doubled in size in the previous decade and that 69% of domestic fires in Scotland are caused by electricity\(^5\), we believe there is a strong argument to introduce mandatory electrical safety inspections.

\(^5\) Analysis by the Scottish Government of Fire Datasets: DCLG and Scotland for 2012-13
Crisis support the Electrical Safety Council proposals for five yearly checks, by a registered electrician, of both fixed electrical installations in all rented property and any electrical appliances supplied with lets. We believe this strikes the right balance between protecting tenants from faulty electrics without being too onerous a financial commitment for landlords.

Part 4, Section 51 – Meaning of letting agency work

Crisis are funded by the Scottish Government to provide training, support and highlight best practice for rent deposit guarantee schemes (RDGS) in Scotland. RDGS provide a deposit, usually a bond, to help homeless and vulnerably housed people access the private rented sector. Schemes also provide tenancy support and assistance to both landlords and tenants to increase the sustainability of a let. As a result the majority of these schemes would come under the definition of a letting agent as set out in Section 51 of the Bill.

RDGS do not make a profit and all funds are used to house vulnerable clients, therefore any requirements to pay for registration could have an impact on their financial situation and the number of tenants they are able to house.

Schemes have also raised concerns with Crisis over potential limitations placed on their work as a result of being bound by a code of conduct designed for the professional profit making sector. Many schemes have to be selective of their clients and can place requirements into the granting of a tenancy, such as registering with a credit union, and there are concerns that this will not be compatible with the code of conduct.

We would encourage the Committee to look at alternative definitions or an exemption, to ensure that RDGS are not unfairly impacted by this provision. We would be very happy to discuss this area in more detail if required.

Crisis
28 February 2014
As a landlord with rental property in Scotland I would like to make the following comments in relation to the Housing (Scotland) Bill: -

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities' discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.
Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents' practice?

This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards and the reputation of the industry while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

There is the potential for confusion between agents who are registered through landlord registration (as established by the Antisocial Behaviour (Scotland) Act 2004) and registered lettings agents as defined in the Bill. In order to reduce bureaucracy and avoid this confusion, registered letting agents should be automatically entered on the landlord register and the letting agent reference number should be used by all local authorities for the purposes of identifying letting agents on the landlord register (replacing the current system of giving agents registration numbers which differ from authority to authority).

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

The proposed mechanism is appropriate in providing a simple and swift method of resolving disputes.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

Maria Diponio
31 January 2014
DUNDEE FEDERATION OF TENANTS ASSOCIATIONS
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Part 1: Right to Buy

This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

We agree with the provisions and the reasoning behind these

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

This is a reasonable length of time

Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Yes

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

Yes

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

Yes
Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

We support this move

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

We support the adjustments

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

We support this move

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

No particular issues with the proposed mechanism
Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

We support this move

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

N/A

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

We support this provisions

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

N/A

Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.

Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?
N/A

Other Issues

Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

Dundee Federation of Tenants Associations
18 February 2014
EAST AYRSHIRE TENANTS AND RESIDENTS FEDERATION
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction

In order to respond to the Scottish Government's Housing (Scotland) Bill East Ayrshire Tenants and Residents Federation organised an information and discussion session on the document's content for members of all tenants and residents associations in East Ayrshire and staff representatives from East Ayrshire Council. This session was facilitated by the Tenants Information Service.

Part 1 – the Right to Buy

We consider that:

• The Right to Buy (RTB) should now be abolished in order to safeguard and protect the limited social housing resource that we currently have in Scotland.

• The timetable for abolishing the RTB should be less than 3 years and we would propose 12 months or less. We consider that people who currently have the RTB, have had this right for a significant number of years and have not exercised it in these years and may now be unlikely to do so.

• The RTB should be abolished for all tenants at the same time, including areas with pressured area status. We do recognise that this may seem unfair to the people affected as it is not the fault of these tenants that their RTB has been suspended. However with the aim of retaining as much social housing stock as possible and ensuring everyone is treated the same that it does need to stop for all tenants at the same time.

It should be noted that we have some concern that abolishing the RTB:

• Will lead to an increase in applications at a time when demand for housing is high and needs to be protected.

• Some tenants may feel pressured into exercising their RTB before it is abolished, but may not really be able to afford the repayments or property upkeep in the future.

• Some unscrupulous companies will target tenants to encourage them to exercise their RTB prior to the abolition of the right being implemented.
Part 2 – Social Housing

a) Allocations
In terms of the allocation of social housing we agree with the reasonable preference categories of:
- Living below the tolerable standard
- Overcrowding and large families
- Unsatisfactory housing conditions and homelessness

However we consider that landlords should be enabled to allocate housing in a “common sense approach” in order to sustain tenancies, protect the interests of existing tenants in terms of their right to live in a safe and secure environment and allocate tenancies in a sensitive manner with regard to the demographic of other people living in neighbouring properties, with particular regard to areas or property types that are more suitable for or already have older people living in them.

Landlords should be able to take an applicant’s previous Antisocial Behaviour (ASB) into account when considering whether or not to offer them a house. This should also include homeless applicants previously evicted for ASB.

Landlords must consult tenants and tenants’ organisations on any proposals to change allocations policies and procedures.

b) Succession
We consider that the current rule of 6 months in terms of succession usually works well in terms of people being able succeed the tenancy of the family home and propose this remains the same as long as it has been the person’s only and principle home for 6 months or more.

c) Joint tenancies
We consider that joint tenants should be able to succeed the tenancy as at present.

d) Assignation
We consider that tenants should only be able to assign a tenancy to a person who has lived in the house as their only home for the increased 12 months as proposed and that this person should only be allocated this house, if they would be normally allocated this type of property under the landlord’s allocation policy. We consider this should prevent people from moving into a tenant’s home with the intention of being assigned the house in order to “queue jump”.

e) Sub letting
Similar to assignation, we consider that tenants should only be able to sub let their home to a person has lived in the house as their only home for the increased 12 months as proposed and that this person should only be allocated this house, if they would be normally allocated this type of property under the landlord’s allocation policy. We consider this should prevent people from moving into a tenant’s home with the intention of sub letting the house in order to “queue jump”.

We also consider that the principles around assignation and sub letting require further explanation and guidelines.
f) Short Scottish Secure Tenancies

We consider that:

- Short Scottish Secure Tenancies should be increased to 12 months.

- People who own their own homes should only be allocated a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy in order to allow them time to make their own home suitable for their needs or make alternative arrangements. People fleeing violence and own their own home should also be given a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy to allow them to be safe and make alternative arrangements where possible.

Under no circumstances should people be allocated a social rented house and continue to keep their own home elsewhere.

- Landlords should be able to allocate Short Scottish Secure Tenancies to allow them to work with people with a previous history of ASB, but whom landlords are required to house as per legislation.

g) Antisocial Behaviour

SSST's

With regard to our feedback detailed below, it should be noted that we understand that landlords have a duty to house people and that eviction can just move the problem of ASB from one place to another. However as previously stated we consider that landlords have a duty to their other tenants in terms of ensuring people live in safe and secure homes and environments.

Therefore we consider that:

- Landlords should be able to give all new tenants Short Scottish Secure Tenancies where there has been previous ASB.

- Landlords should be able to convert full Scottish Secure Tenancies to Short tenancies where they are dealing with a tenants ASB to allow them to work with the tenant to try to improve the behaviour or stop the tenancy where the ASB continues.

- Increasing the timescale of a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy should allow landlords additional time to monitor tenancies and provide tenancy support. This should be an increase to 12 months with potential to extend to 18 months if things improve. However it should be noted it is vital that this does not mean that other tenants suffer ASB in their communities for a longer period of time.

- Landlords should be able to continue to extend Short Scottish Secure Tenancies until they are convinced that the tenancies will not cause problems to neighbours and / or the wider community.

- Landlords should continue to provide tenancy support whilst tenants have a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy and there needs to be powers for landlords to make sure that the ASB can be addressed or tenancy terminated.
Part 3 – Private Rented Housing

In terms of the private rented sector, we agree that there needs to be increased powers and measures to deal with this sector, and that this is required in relation to:

- Ensuring private tenants have up to date and accurate information on their rights and responsibilities
- Protecting the rights of private tenants
- Protecting the rights of the private landlords and
- Protecting the rights of other tenants and residents in communities where:
  - Private tenants are the cause of ASB, damage to the property of other tenants and residents in the block, street or community
  - Ensuring common repair and investment work is carried out that social landlords need to or want to do for their tenants and properties
  - Private landlords lack of care or investment in properties causes problems for social housing tenants or landlords

a) The Tribunal

We agree that the introduction of the private sector housing tribunal is positive HOWEVER it should be noted that we are disappointed that this has not been included in the Bill for the social rented sector as per our response to the Dispute Resolution Consultation in 2013. In addition it should be noted that:

- Further information and clarification is required on the operation and enforcement powers of the Tribunal and that the Tribunal needs to “have clout and teeth” or it will not be worth the bother
- The Tribunal needs to be able to “streamline” the disputes process and make it easier and quicker than the current operation via the Sheriff Court system

b) Private Rented Housing Panel

We consider that:

- Local Authorities should have increased powers to enforce the repairing standard
- That evidence in relation to private landlords not meeting the standard should not just have to come from tenants and that neighbours, fire and rescue services, police, others and the local authority itself should be able to provide this evidence
- Where appeals are made by the private landlord, the funding required from the Local Authority to defend their position / action should not come from Housing Revenue Accounts (HRA’s)
- The Private Rented Housing Panel should make the process simpler and more streamlined and that the Panel should have “teeth” and be a less onerous process than using the Sheriff Court system
• Local Authorities will require enforcement powers to ensure the repairs and maintenance work is carried out

• All Private Lets should meet the repairing standard and Local authorities should have increased powers to enforce this

Part 4 – Letting Agents

We consider that:

• Letting Agents should be subject to a robust and effective registration scheme

• Local Authorities should have additional enforcement powers in areas where there are issues with management of all stock owned by a particular landlord

• Local Authorities should have increased powers to deal with private landlords where there are issues in relation to:
  o The behaviour of the tenant living in their property
  o The lack of repairs and maintenance of the property and any common areas, especially where there are social housing tenants and / or properties

• Letting Agents should be required to meet and sign up to a Code of conduct

• Guidelines need to be developed

• Letting Agent Registration and Code of conduct “needs to have teeth”

• Disputes between agent and landlord should be addressed by Trading Standards

• The Bill and the Scottish Government needs to look at “beefing up” existing systems and ensure Local Authorities and other involved implement the use of the full powers already available rather than adding new things

Part 5 – Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

In terms of protecting the rights of tenants living in these sites or parks we agree that:

• Mobile and Park Home sites should be licensed and meet with the new standards to be introduced

• Managers should be fit and proper persons

• Local Authorities should have new powers to grant and revoke licences

• Local Authorities should have powers to ensure sites are maintained, repaired and improved to a high standard

Once again it should be noted that we do have concerns regarding where Local Authorities will acquire the funding to do this and want guarantees that this will not come from HRA funding
Part 6 – Private Housing Conditions
As above, we consider that Local Authorities should have powers to enforce private landlords to carry out repairs and improvement to their properties. In addition in properties where social landlords own some of the properties, social landlords should have additional powers to enforce repairs and easier mechanisms to encourage private landlords to contribute their share of improvement works required.

Consideration should be given to developing a private rented housing standard, similar to the Scottish Housing Quality Standard.

Others
a) SHR Transfer of Assets
It is our view that if the SHR is “doing its job properly”, that evidence of potential insolvency will be known in ample time to ensure the RSL tenants are consulted on any proposals to transfer to or merge with or be taken over by another landlord, therefore we do not agree that the requirement to consult should be removed.

For the reasons outlined above, we also do not consider that the duty on the SHR to always obtain a valuation of assets or direct a transfer at an open market valuation should be removed. The value of assets should always be known.

East Ayrshire Tenants and Residents Federation
27 February 2014
Part 1: Right to Buy

This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

EFFTRA is in favour of the abolishment of the right to buy. Whilst we understand why it was introduced, giving people the chance to own their own home, we feel that in reality there was mismanagement i.e. often it was the families of tenants, not the tenants themselves who financed the house purchase.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

Three years is too long. EFFTRA feel that 18 months would be an adequate timescale. This will allow tenants to exercise the right to buy and will allow landlords to review their business plans accordingly.

EFFTRA are very worried about how the abolishment of RTB is communicated to tenants. There is a worry that there will be “panic buying” by tenants or their families and also “rogue lenders” will prey on vulnerable tenants.

Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

In principle EFFTRA agree with the provisions proposed to increase flexibility in the allocation of housing. Although we would like to state that we do not see much change to current arrangements apart from under occupancy. Homes would still have to be allocated based on need which meant that people without defined need would spend a long time waiting on an offer. As landlords operate open and transparent allocation policies, EFFTRA feel that should suffice.
EFFTRA are supportive of the proposal to allow the landlord to take into account whether an applicant owns property.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

EFFTRA welcomes any approach which supports landlords in reducing anti-social behaviour (ASB). There is a worry however; that the problem of ASB will not be removed and local communities will continue to suffer.

Some perpetrators of ASB do and will continue to behave appropriately within the timescale of any SST.

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

EFFTRA are supportive of this proposal as long as there is the fall back of civil court review.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This makes sense for tenants and landlords. It is the EFFTRA belief that the new First-tier Tribunal will deal with non-criminal cases. Is there the possibility to widen scope of current Private Rented Sector Panel to deal with disputes?

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?
EFFTRA welcome the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, however are unclear how local authorities will be in a position to exercise these discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector without there being a drain or pressure on existing resources.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

EFFTRA is concerned that local authority statutory repairs will raise community expectations. For some Councils Power the exists already through charging orders.

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

EFFTRA are in favour of a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland. The challenge will be ensuring that letting agents register and follow an agreed practice standard. EFFTRA feel that there are practice failings in the Private Landlord Register and these need to be addressed also.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

EFFTRA feel unable to comment as we would like to know more about the proposed mechanism.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

EFFTRA support the proposed new licensing scheme. We are concerned that he lack of affordable housing may force people of all ages into mobile home sites. Our worry is that some are poorly managed and there are no minimum standards.

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

EFFTRA are concerned that the tenants will bear the brunt of any associated costs. Although this is acceptable if standards and services on sites remain high.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenement properties?

This is long overdue and welcomed by EFFTRA. However we would like to stress that we have concerns about how the Local Authority will allocate resources if any to these provisions.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.

Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

No comment

Other Issues

Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

No comment
The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee is seeking views on the general principles of the Housing(Scotland) Bill. A copy of the Bill and the accompanying documents can be found at—

Part 1: Right to Buy

This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

ELTRP in full agreement that right to buy should be abolished to protect social housing for future generations and recognises that a majority of tenants groups and landlords support this proposal.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

ELTRP discussed this with some favouring 3 years as suitable timescale and others feel that one year is a suitable timescale.

Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

ELTRP agrees with the adding of under occupation as a category for reasonable preference to assist landlords to mitigate the effects of the ‘bedroom tax’. However ELTRP would like more information on how this would apply in allocations practice. For example, how would this change be applied to existing tenants who are classed as under occupying their properties. Would they be asked to transfer to a smaller property regardless of whether they were in receipt of housing benefit of paying full rent through their own means? If two tenants were on the transfer list and both were classed as under occupying and one was... in receipt of housing benefit and the other paying full rent who would be given priority? Or would other reasonable preference criteria be used as well?

ELTRP agrees with provision that landlords must involve and consult tenants about any changes to priority groups in allocations policies. This is a vital principle to effective and successful tenant participation practice and links to practice being developed through tenant scrutiny and tenant involvement in monitoring landlords performance to Scottish Social Housing Charter.

ELTRP discussed the introduction of probationary tenancies for all new tenants although the proposal has been dropped by the Scottish Government. ELTRP generally agrees that these types of tenancies should not be introduced although some members felt it would be a useful tool for landlords to manage housing. ELTRP is unsure what the impact of this would have on housing management and how it would apply if a tenant of say 10 years obtained a tenancy from another landlord.

ELTRP supports the introduction of taking age into consideration when allocating properties although care must be taken to ensure that applicants are not discriminated against on age grounds under the Equality Act 2010. This can be useful for designating certain types of general needs housing for people over 50 or for people with families and children.

ELTRP supports the introduction of property ownership being taken into account when allocating social housing.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

ELTRP is in agreement with move to 12 months qualifying period for succession, assignation and sub letting but guidance must be issued to landlords to use discretion on a case by case basis as 6 months can be a suitable timescale in individual cases involving care and death in families. ELTRP agrees with principles that this should be guided by those in housing need but landlords must use care and attention to consider individual family circumstances. ELTRP recognises that landlords will have to inform existing tenants of these new requirements and will work to assist with communication.

ELTRP agrees with general principles for landlords to have the power to make secure tenancies short tenancies only in cases where there is clear evidence of anti social behaviour. This is a positive step with landlords being frustrated by drawn out legal processes to act to address anti social behaviour. Although ELTRP recognises that cases of ASB are split about 50-50 between the private and social sector and perhaps more powers are also needed to deal with ASB in the private sector.

ELTRP supports this proposal to extend short tenancies to 12 and 18 months with appropriate protection and appeal for tenants.

ELTRP supports the proposal for new mandatory eviction when a tenant has been found guilty of using a house for illegal purposes outlined in tenancy agreement. ELTRP is more hesitant to support a mandatory eviction for 12 months imprisonment but recognises the aim but this should only be approved on a case by case basis where it is supported by other evidence.

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

ELTRP supports the proposals to protect tenants on short tenancies as often and for different circumstances these people are vulnerable in society.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

ELTRP sees this as a good idea in principle but management and organisation will fall to local authorities and in tough financial climate is this feasible? This needs a clear commitment from local authorities. ELTRP recognises the work of the Tenants Information Service to develop owners associations and this is an area that needs some development work in bringing together owners, tenants and local authorities to develop potential in this area. ELTRP also recognises the need for owners to adequately insure buildings. What will the cost to council be to manage and implement these proposals? ELTRP would suggest that certain enforcement orders need to be classified as different types of works. There are many examples of mixed tenure areas and privately rented areas that would benefit from this approach.
Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities' discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

ELTRP supports this idea in principle and sees the regulation of the private rented sector as an area for further development and a lot can be learned from the many years of work between social housing tenants and tenant participation structures across Scotland.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterized by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

ELTRP in general agreement but again who pays and it will help areas with high levels of poor housing and slums. Scottish Government financial assistance? Who pays? What is enforcement action? Links to regeneration?

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

ELTRP support. Yes in line with housing industry.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Yes. ELTRP fully supports this idea.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?
Yes. ELTRP supports this idea and brings into line with housing sector.

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

Training, information, enforcement and possible development of resident’s mobile homes residents associations for Scotland.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

ELTRP supports this principle.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.

Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

ELTRP is concerned about giving SHR powers to dispose of HRA assets without consulting with tenants as this goes against the principles of tenant participation and community engagement. However, ELTRP recognises that the SHR should always be protecting the interests of tenants. In exceptional financial circumstances when there is a clear threat to the interests of tenants from insolvency and loss of assets then ELTRP would support with a strict criteria that was agreed with tenants before this power is conferred on the SHR. In other words if this is included in the Housing Bill there must be a provision to agree the criteria and process with tenants after the bill becomes law.
ELTRP does not support the removal of the duty to obtain valuations on HRA assets as this must be done in agreement with tenants as a key stakeholder in any asset transfers.

Other Issues

Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

_East Lothian Tenants and Residents Panel_
27 February 2014
EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY STUDENTS’ ASSOCIATION
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction
Edinburgh University Students’ Association (EUSA) welcomes the opportunity to respond to the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee’s call for evidence on the Housing (Scotland) Bill. In particular we strongly support provisions in the Bill which would improve the experience of tenants in private rented housing.

The Advice Place at EUSA often provides guidance to student tenants who have problems with their rented accommodation. It is one of the most common issues with which students visit The Advice Place for guidance. Too often students have problems with their letting agent or landlord and there is considerable dissatisfaction with current procedures for dealing with housing disputes.

We believe that creating a private rented sector tribunal and a regulatory framework for letting agents as well as new powers for local authorities to tackle poor conditions could greatly benefit tenants in the private rented sector.

However, we believe that the Bill could be strengthened to provide further protection for tenants in relation to electrical and carbon monoxide safety. We also think that the Bill could address rental costs and include measures to improve the energy efficiency of private rented accommodation.

Part 3 – Private rented housing
Tribunal
EUSA strongly supports the creation of a new housing panel to replace the court as the main forum for resolving housing disputes. Many tenants are currently reluctant to take forward cases to court, fearing repercussions from their landlord. A tribunal would be less formal than the court making it less daunting for tenants to access. It should also speed up the process of dealing with disputes.

Crucially the housing panel should be free to access and simple to use. To ensure that the housing panel operates in an equitable way free legal advice should be available to parties involved and resources must be available to ensure that there is enough provision for this. There may be an increase in the amount of usage of the system as tenants feel more empowered to take action. There should be no requirement for legal representation unless this is provided free of charge.

It is important that tenants feel confident in accessing the service. It must be clear to them that there would be no risk to their tenancy and no other negative implications should their claim be upheld or not. Many students are new to renting and are therefore unfamiliar with their rights as tenants. There are over 11,000 international students at the University of Edinburgh who can find navigating the private rented sector difficult. They may have concerns, however unfounded, about potential negative effects of taking forward claims.

Repairing standard
EUSA supports the provision in the bill to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector. We hope that this would improve standards by tackling landlords who fail to maintain their property and carry out repairs.

Too often tenants find themselves struggling to make their landlord attend to repairs. This is an issue that student tenants raise often at the EUSA Advice Place. We know that some tenants are unwilling to take action to enforce the repairing standard because they are concerned that it could have a negative impact on the tenancy.

Enhanced enforcement areas
EUSA supports provisions to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor standards and landlord practice in the private rented sector.

The high demand for student rented accommodation in the city of Edinburgh together with the fact that many student tenants are unfamiliar with their rights and responsibilities can mean that student tenants are vulnerable to rogue landlords and letting agents. Rogue letting agents and landlords may have various properties across the city, not just in one area. The provision for enhanced enforcement areas should allow for the local authority to take this into consideration and be able to deal with properties across several areas associated with one letting agency/landlord.

Part 4: Letting agents
EUSA strongly welcomes provision to create a mandatory register of letting agents and a statutory code of practice. The introduction of a regulatory framework for letting agents could lead to fewer tenants having negative renting experiences but only if the legislation is enforced effectively.

Whilst many letting agents provide a fair and satisfactory service to tenants, the Advice Place at EUSA talks to many students who have problems with their letting agent in Edinburgh. These problems can range from agents refusing or being slow to attend to repairs, charging arbitrary fees, being difficult to contact or refusing to pass over contact details of landlords.

It is crucial that the consequences for breaching a statutory code of practice or failing to meet requirements for registration are clear and are acted upon. Resources must be available to ensure that the regulation is enforced.

Furthermore, tenants must be informed about the dispute resolution process and how to use it. It must be free to access and simple to use.
Further proposals

Electrical and carbon monoxide safety
EUSA would encourage an addition to the Bill which would improve electrical and carbon monoxide safety in private rented accommodation. We believe that regular electrical safety checks in all private rented properties should be mandatory as well as a carbon monoxide monitor and alarm.

Energy efficiency
We would welcome a requirement for landlords to update their properties to perform at a minimum energy efficiency level by 2015. Poor energy efficiency performance in rented housing increases costs for tenants, increases the chance of fuel poverty and is harmful to the environment.

Rent costs
Rental costs have increased considerably along with the demand for private rented accommodation. For some tenants who are on low incomes, for example students, their rent takes up a large part of their income. We believe that the Scottish Government could explore options to reduce rental costs, for example limiting the level of rent increase that a landlord can introduce to tenants who continue to stay in the property.

Edinburgh University Students' Association
27 February 2014
1. Overview

1.1. The Electrical Safety Council (ESC) welcomes the invitation to submit written evidence to the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee inquiry into the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

1.2. As the UK’s only charity committed to reducing electrical fires and electrical-related injuries at home and at work, our remit is to promote and encourage public awareness of issues surrounding electrical safety.

1.3. The Private Rented Sector (PRS) in Scotland is seeing unprecedented growth and has more than doubled over the last decade, from 115,000 dwellings (5% of all homes) in 1999, to 305,000 (12% of all homes) in 2012.\(^1\) In some parts of Scotland, the proportion of PRS stock is significantly higher. For instance, in Glasgow, the City Council estimates that private rented housing accounted for 19% of all dwellings in 2012.\(^2\)

1.4. As a consequence, the PRS will continue to play an important role in meeting Scotland’s housing need, with increasing numbers of families and vulnerable people renting privately.

1.5. Despite this, tenants often face poor conditions and serious safety hazards. According to government statistics, 69% of all accidental fires in Scottish homes (more than 3,400 annually) are caused by electricity.\(^3\) Independent research also suggests that private tenants are more likely to be at risk of electric shock or fire than owner occupiers.\(^4\)

1.6. Whilst we welcome the principles behind the Housing (Scotland) Bill and the Scottish Government’s continuing efforts to get a better deal for PRS tenants, we are concerned that the Bill as it stands will not create better property standards.

---

\(^1\) Housing Statistics for Scotland - Key Information and Summary Tables’ published 26 August 2013, Scottish Government http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Topics/Statistics/Browse/Housing-Regeneration/HSFS/KeyInfoTables

\(^2\) http://www.glasgow.gov.uk/CHttpHandler.ashx?id=14215&p=0

\(^3\) Analysis by the Scottish Government of Fire Datasets: DCLG and Scotland for 2012-13

\(^4\) Research conducted by Ipsos MORI. 25th June-2nd July 2010
1.7. Provisions set out in Part 3 of the Bill (Private Rented Housing), including the introduction of a new First-tier Tribunal to deal with matters relating to private rented housing and creating third party rights in relation to enforcing the Repairing Standard, are a positive step for improving standards in the sector. However, we believe more must be done to reduce risks to private tenants by putting precautionary measures in place to ensure their safety, and that further adjustments to private rented housing legislation are required to do this.

1.8. Our submission focuses on:

- The clear imperative for the introduction of precautionary electrical safety checks for privately rented properties, potentially through an additional amendment to the Repairing Standard.

- The case for improving electrical safety through the inclusion of provisions in the new Code of Practice for Letting Agents (Section 41).

- Our support for Part 6 of the Bill on Private Housing Conditions which includes a number of adjustments which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor conditions in private housing.

- Wider support for enhanced provisions around inspection and testing of electrical appliances and installations in the PRS, most recently highlighted in a joint letter to the Housing and Welfare Minister Margaret Burgess MSP (See Appendix 1) from 13 businesses, charities and trade associations.

2. Proposals to allow for the introduction of provisions around electrical safety in private rented housing

2.1. The ESC supports proposals in the Bill to help reform the PRS including the new Housing Tribunal which, if approved, will provide landlords and tenants with more efficient and accessible access to justice that will help resolve disputes. In particular, this will help private landlord ensure that their property meets the relatively basic physical criteria of the Repairing Standard.

2.2. However, we believe further provisions should be included in the Bill to improve the safety and condition of private rented homes, and there is a strong case to introduce measures for mandatory electrical safety checks. This could be achieved by an amendment to the Repairing Standard in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006. Several amends to the Repairing Standard have already been proposed in Section 23 of the Bill, so the change relates to existing subject matter in the Bill.

2.3. Specifically, we want Government to introduce a requirement for five yearly checks, by a registered electrician, of both fixed electrical installations in all rented property and any electrical appliances supplied with lets.

2.4. At present, private landlords have a responsibility to ensure the homes they let comply with the Repairing Standard, as set out in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006. Section 13 of the standard states that landlords must ensure the electrical installation and appliances provided as part of any let are in a 'reasonable state of repair and in proper working order at the start of and throughout the tenancy'.

2.5. The process for private landlords to demonstrate that the homes they let meet the electrical safety elements of the Repairing Standard is to carry out checks and tests of the wiring and any appliances supplied with the property. However, private landlords do not currently have to provide documentation proving they have carried out such measures (despite them being required to do so for gas appliances and installations).

2.6. In the context of gas safety requirements, there is a legal duty for private landlords to have any pipework, appliances and chimneys/flues checked by a Gas Safe registered engineer on an annual basis. A recent survey carried out by Shelter and British Gas suggests 90% of private landlords comply with this requirement.5

2.7. We believe there is a dangerous anomaly whereby testing of gas appliances and fittings is legally required but inspection and testing of electrical appliances and installations is not.

2.8. With the majority of domestic fires in Scotland caused by electricity, we once again urge the Scottish Government to introduce mandatory five yearly checks, carried out by a registered electrician, of electrical installations and any electrical appliances supplied with privately rented

5 http://england.shelter.org.uk/news/may_2013/1_in_10_renters_at_risk_from_gas_safety_hazards homes.

2.9. Our view on these checks was supported by 12 trade associations, businesses and charities in an open letter to the Housing and Welfare Minister Margaret Burgess (sent 07/10/13, see Appendix 1). Supportive signatories included key housing sector organisations such as the Scottish Association of Landlords, Shelter Scotland, RICS Scotland and the Chartered Institute of Housing Scotland.

2.10. Our reasons for recommending a five yearly timeframe are largely due to a desire to strike a balance between the likelihood of risks to tenants from deterioration in the electrical installation/appliances due to wear and tear, faults and tampering, versus costs placed on landlords.

2.11. We recommend in all our literature that full inspections by registered electricians are supplemented by visual checks from the landlord or managing agent at more regular intervals (i.e. yearly or on change of tenancy, whichever comes first). If such a check were to uncover obvious signs of damage to the installation/appliances, we would expect that, as required by the Repairing Standard, landlords would take appropriate remedial action (please see Appendix 2 for an example checklist as carried on the ESC website).

2.12. Improving standards in the PRS will not only benefit private tenants but also help landlords in the sector keep their properties safe from fires and other incidents that could damage their investment.

2.13. Our proposal also supports the Scottish Government’s recent strategy for the PRS – ‘A place to stay, a place to call home’ – which aims to deliver for Scotland’s people by providing high quality homes. Making private renting a better option is crucial to ensuring everyone has a safe, affordable home to live in.

3. Proposals to allow for the introduction of a Code of Practice for Lettings Agents are welcome, and could go further

3.1. The ESC supports proposals to allow Scottish Ministers to introduce a Letting Agent Code of Practice (Section 41). This will ensure consistency of best practice across the industry, and provide a reference point against which to measure poor practice.

3.2. If electrical safety requirements are added to the Bill, we believe that there would be a knock on benefit to the effectiveness of the Letting Agent Code of Practice, provided it restated the requirements.

3.3. In particular, given widespread evidence indicating the existence of retaliatory eviction for tenants who complain about poor conditions in their homes, information in the Code of Practice on the legal status of electrical checks would provide greater clarity to landlords and greater confidence to tenants.

3.4. If mandatory electrical checks for PRS properties are not introduced, we would encourage the Code to incorporate best practice guidance on how to manage property conditions, including electrical safety.

4. Proposals to amend local authority powers to enforce repairs and maintenance in private homes

4.1. The ESC welcomes the inclusion of provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 in order to improve private housing conditions.

4.2. Currently, all social housing is required to meet the Scottish Housing Quality Standard (SHQS) by 2015. The standard includes enhanced criteria concerning the condition of accommodation. However, there is no requirement that private sector housing meets this standard. The only requirement for owner occupied housing is that it meets the tolerable standard, which is a minimum condemnatory standard which all housing must meet.

4.3. According to the latest Scottish House Conditions Survey, 72% of private homes suffer some level of basic disrepair and presumably in some cases includes defects to electrical installations.6

4.4. We believe householders should enjoy the same safety standards, irrespective of the tenure of their property, and that extending local authority powers to require that private owners take action to repair or maintain their properties will stop properties falling into dangerous levels of disrepair.

5. About the Electrical Safety Council

5.1. The Electrical Safety Council (ESC) is a charity committed to reducing deaths, injuries and other damage from electricity. As many such

---

6 Scottish House Conditions 2012: http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2013/12/3017/290985 incidents take place within the home, safety in dwellings – particularly the PRS – is a core concern. Poorly maintained homes often have poorly maintained (and therefore dangerous) electrical installations, which can lead to fatal consequences.

5.2. According to government statistics, over half of all accidental fires in GB homes (more than 20,000 annually) are caused by electricity. Further, each year about 70 people die and 350,000 receive a serious injury – including skin burns, temporary blindness, and difficulty breathing - from an electrical accident in the home.7

5.3. Fire statistics also show that Scottish homes are at a disproportionate risk from fires of an electrical origin than the rest of GB. In 2012-13, electrically-related fires accounted for over 69% of all accidental fires in Scotland.8

Electrical Safety Council
26.02.14

---

7 ESC Core dataset. Symptoms of ‘serious injury’ obtained via the South West Public Health Observatory.
8 Analysis by the Scottish Government of Fire Datasets: DCLG and Scotland for 2012-13
Dear Ms Burgess,

ELECTRICAL SAFETY IN THE PRIVATE RENTED SECTOR

How we live is changing. The Private Rented Sector (PRS) in Scotland has more than doubled in size over the last decade, with ever more families and vulnerable people renting privately. As a consequence, the PRS will continue to play an important role in meeting housing need. But all too often, private renters face poor conditions and serious safety hazards.

According to government statistics, over two thirds of all accidental fires in Scottish homes (more than 3,000 annually) are caused by electricity. Independent research also suggests that private tenants are more likely to be at risk of electric shock or fire than owner occupiers.¹

Whilst we welcome the Scottish Government’s efforts to improve conditions in the sector and drive up standards, more must be done to reduce risks to private renters by putting precautionary measures in place to ensure their safety.

We the undersigned believe that housing standards in the PRS can be improved without placing a significant additional burden on landlords, and that improving electrical safety for tenants should be a core part of any new requirements.

Given that a new Housing Bill is due to be considered in Holyrood before the end of this year, we urge you to seriously consider any future regulation that would further improve the PRS, including:

- Mandatory five-yearly safety checks by a competent person of electrical installations and any electrical appliances supplied with lettings
- Mandatory provision of RCD protection in all properties²

Improving standards will not only benefit tenants but also help landlords keep their properties safe from the risk of fire. Making private renting a better option is crucial to ensuring everyone has a safe, affordable home to live in so we hope that you will seek to introduce these much-needed changes and will await your response with great interest.
This Landlords’ Interim Electrical Safety Checklist is designed to help you, the landlord, or your representative, to carry out a regular electrical safety check on a property you let. The checklist supplements formal periodic inspection and testing, and should be used during the interim period (at least annually), to help identify any electrical safety risks that may exist at the property. In addition, if your electrical installation is new, this checklist may be used for the Interim period up to the first formal inspection and test.

As a landlord, you are legally obliged to provide and maintain your rental property in a safe condition. For this reason, the Electrical Safety Council (ESC) recommends that the electrical installation is formally inspected and tested at least once every 5 years, by a competent person, and a report confirming its condition is issued (Electrical Installation Condition Report - EICR). Any remedial work that is required should be undertaken by a registered electrician.

Conditions of Use: this checklist should only be used where both of the following conditions have been met:

- A formal inspection and test (EICR) has been carried out on the property (within the last 5 years)
- Actions recorded on the EICR have been addressed

(Tick to confirm)

Name: (of person carrying out the electrical safety check)

Date: (date carried out)

Address of property: (Print the full address of the property being checked)

Checklist summary: (Provide details of the electrical safety risk(s) and state the required action)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Record the risk and its location</th>
<th>State the action to be taken</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(Where additional risks need to be recorded, attach an additional page to this checklist)

Comments: (Insert, as appropriate, any other comments regarding the electrical safety of the premises)
Electrical Safety Checklist:

Use the items listed below as a guide for carrying out the electrical safety check. Where a safety risk is identified record the details on the Checklist summary, overleaf. (Please note: This list is not exhaustive)

---

Fusebox (Consumer unit)

1) All covers are in place and fitted correctly (a damaged cover could lead to a shock or fire risk)
2) Residual Current Device (RCD)* trips when the test (or ‘T’) button is pressed
3) Combustible materials are not stored on or near the Fusebox (e.g. paint, newspapers, cleaning fluids)

---

Sockets and lighting

1) Sockets, lights and switches are securely fixed and in good condition (e.g. not broken or cracked)
2) Sockets, lights and switches show no signs of overheating (e.g. blackening, scorch marks)
3) Flexible cables are not in a position where they are likely to suffer damage (e.g. under carpets or rugs, passing through door/window openings)
4) Sockets are not overloaded with too many appliances (e.g. inappropriate use of adaptors and/or extension leads)

---

Electrical appliances

1) Appliances are not subject to a product recall (Visit www.esc.org.uk/recall to check the appliances in your property)
2) All covers are in place and in a satisfactory condition (a damaged casing could lead to a shock or fire risk)
3) Flexible cables are in a satisfactory condition and show no signs of deterioration (e.g. fraying/splitting)
4) Flexible cables are securely attached to the appliance and plug

---

Additional safety checks

1) Smoke alarm sounds when the test button is operated
2) Carbon monoxide alarm sounds when the test button is operated

---

An RCD is designed to protect against the risks of electrocution and fire caused by earth faults.

---

If you have identified any electrical work that needs to be carried out at the property, you can find a registered electrician by visiting www.electricalsafetyregister.com. It contains details for over 34,000 registered contractors based throughout the UK.
DOUGLAS ELLIOTT (INDIVIDUAL)

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

I have given consideration to the various aspects of the proposed changes to site licensing.

My initial concern was that legislation designed to help occupiers could potentially have the opposite effect.

The possibility of leaving a development without a site licence is frightening. The proposed systems to deal with this are either not in place or crude. This legislation is designed to sort out bad site Owners. However, there is a real chance that it will harm more people than it protects.

The residents at Springwood are in the main very content. However, this legislation could devalue their homes by bringing in doubts about the future security of occupation.

Our residents have invested very large sums of money in their homes and this should not be undermined. I would ask that your Committee imagines the position of a park resident where doubts are cast over the framework on which they rely to give them peace of mind and security of occupation. This is crude legislation seriously affects the majority in an attempt to control a very small minority. It is disproportionate.

The legislation has come about as a result of a very small numbers of residents being badly treated by the site Owners. However, a lot of these concerns were addressed in recent changes to The Mobile Homes Act. There is no doubt in my mind that the vast majority of our residents are very unhappy about some of the changes in this Act and the proposed changes in the legislation.

By introducing increased bureaucracy, there is a chance that small park operators will sell their parks on the open market, thus making them available to rogue operators. I believe that there is sufficient legislation to cope with current issues and that these changes are a sledge hammer to crack a nut.

The proposed changes leave far too much to be decided by ministers away from the gaze of parliament at a later date.

At the very least the licensing period should be extended to ten years. The “fit and proper person test” has been abandoned in England as it is unworkable. It should be abandoned in Scotland also.

Douglas Elliott
25.02.14
ENERGY ACTION SCOTLAND
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Energy Action Scotland (EAS) is the Scottish charity with the remit of ending fuel poverty. EAS has been working with this remit since its inception in 1983 and has campaigned on the issue of fuel poverty and delivered many practical and research projects to tackle the problems of cold, damp homes. EAS works with both the Scottish and the UK Governments on energy efficiency programme design and implementation.

EAS will limit its comments on the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committees call for evidence on the Housing (Scotland) Bill to those questions relating to energy efficiency and fuel poverty. EAS welcomes the opportunity to respond to this consultation.

Part 1: Right to Buy

EAS is supportive of the abolition of the Right to Buy for social housing tenants. The changes to the make-up of housing tenure over the last 30 years has seen more and more homes moving from the social sector to the private sector. In the 1980’s the social housing sector accounted for around 70% of all homes in Scotland while the private and private rented sector accounted for 30%. This has changed dramatically with the position reversed with 70% of all homes now being in the private or private rented sectors. This is placing a significant amount of pressure on social housing providers who find that demand for housing is outstripping their ability to supply. While at the same time, mixed tenure estates make the provision of energy efficiency works to tackle fuel poverty very difficult when owners fall into the asset rich capital poor category.

During this time of changing housing market, levels of fuel poverty have remained almost static. While significant improvements in the energy efficiency of the social sector have taken place, there is not the same level of improvement in the other sectors. EAS believes this is due to many people who bought their homes under the Right to Buy scheme being asset rich but capital poor. That is they can afford a mortgage but not the costs of repairs or maintenance of their homes. Since 1999 successive Scottish Government fuel poverty and energy efficiency programmes have been targeted at the private and private rented sectors to support those living in energy inefficient homes.

A repeal of the Right to Buy would prevent further homes being taken into the spiral of owners being trapped in having money to pay a mortgage but no money for improvements or maintenance. This may ease the call on funding from Scottish Government fuel poverty programmes in the shorter term and make the introduction of energy efficiency standards in the private and private rented sectors easier.
Part 3: Private Rented Housing

EAS is a member of the Scottish Government's Sustainable Housing Strategy Group and of the Regulation of Energy Efficiency in the Private Sector Working Group (REEPS). EAS believes that ultimately there has to be an energy efficiency standard in force for the private and private rented sectors if we are to achieve the eradication of fuel poverty and meet climate change targets. It is a disgrace that homes with exceptionally poor levels of energy efficiency, poor heating systems, and that are poorly maintained can be offered for rental. This needs to be addressed as a matter of urgency.

EAS is also supportive of the Electrical Safety Council's proposals for the introduction of mandatory electrical safety inspections in private rented housing. It supports the call for the introduction of a requirement for five yearly checks, by a registered electrician, of both fixed electrical installations in all rented property and any electrical appliances supplied with lets.

Part 4: Letting Agents

EAS is supportive of the power to establish a registration system for letting agents. It is important that anybody involved in renting out homes in any sector have a Code of Conduct and a system of redress for those whom it serves when that service is below statutory requirement.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

EAS views are stated in reply to the questions in Part 3 of the call for evidence.

Energy Action Scotland
27 February 2014
We are letting agents and property managers and wish to make the following observations on the Housing (Scotland) Bill:

In response to questions submitted earlier we wish to respond accordingly

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.
Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards. It is essential that the reputation of the industry is improved while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

We believe there should be a new stand-alone Letting Agent Register operated by the Scottish Government.

The Register should include all businesses which let and manage private rented residential property in Scotland. However, we would not support simply replicating the processes and principles established for the Property Factors Register. Whilst it has improved that sector, this system is not robust enough in our opinion for the letting and management sector, and considerable consideration needs to be given to the detail of implementation for our sector.

A strong Code of Practice is needed. Along with the other representative organisations, we welcome the planned consultation in preparing the Code as secondary legislation.

Registration should include:
- an annual renewal (not every 3 years)
- a legally binding commitment each year to possessing:
  - adequate professional indemnity insurance
  - appropriate client money protection
  - a ring-fenced client money bank account
  - an annual audit of client accounts
  - membership of an ombudsman scheme to ensure an easily available redress mechanism for tenants and landlords.

Depending on the registration processes put in place there could be a requirement for the agent to produce annual documentation to confirm the above. It may be more appropriate to consider the registration process to be more the issuing of a licence approving the Letting Agent.

We believe that any Registration process should be Government operated free of any involvement with professional bodies such as the RICS or ARLA and others. Agents should aspire to differentiate themselves in the market place by achieving the standards required to gain membership. Within the code of practice there may be the requirement over a period of time to require owners of an staff employed in an agency to be say 50% qualified to a certain level of professional knowledge and competency.

The impact of these proposals on our industry is to be welcomed. It will however highlight even further the disparity in enforcement that currently exists on compliant letting agents and landlords and those who operate below the required standards.

The passing of legislation and implementation of registration of Letting Agents will create an environment where landlords who are self-managing will perceive the enforcement of regulation on them to be far less onerous. We recommend that at the same time as these regulations are implemented that the Landlord Registration regulations are enforced more robustly.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

See the above comment about ombudsman services in response to Question 10; under these schemes redress is readily available to customers of such organisations at no cost to the claimant.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

ESPC

24.02.14
FACTOTUM
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Factotum are letting agents and registered Property Factors and wish to make the following observations on the Housing (Scotland) Bill: -

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

We welcome a First-tier Tribunal. If adequately resourced, it could open up to the public much needed recourse to malpractices that discredit the PRS, shows the present enforcement agencies in a poor light and highlights the legal systems’ vagaries and delays.

We would propose that such FTT committees be well represented by as balanced a cross section of the PRS as possible. We would be happy to be involved further in this process.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This is also welcomed. We would add that part of those discretionary powers might include the mandatory appointment by a miscreant landlord of a registered letting agent or factor for a predetermined period of time to manage that landlord’s property and bring it up to the required standard. This might also mitigate such concerns as the threat of constructive eviction and subliminal intimidation of resident tenants.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This is also welcomed but with a provision that any capital improvements are subsequently sustained by diligent cross section of good management in terms of upkeep and tenancy management to avoid re-ghettoising or dilapidation of such areas.

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?
This is welcome and long overdue. We believe it should be embraced and policed as part of the FTT and form:

1. A simple Letting Agents registration readily accessible by the public.
2. A letting Agents Code of Practice binding on Letting Agents that have signed up to it.
3. An enforcement process that is self regulating in as much as it does not nurture overt state bureaucracy or hand over excessive enforcement to local mandarins and panjandrums.
4. A process that empowers the plaintiff and defendant to easy, non-adversarial and timely recourse.
5. A process that is (initially) biased towards financial settlement, rather than pecuniary penalty.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Complaints procedures and mediation should be embraced as part of the letting Agents Code of Practice.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

This is also welcome but we would like to see a greater partnership developed between the Council and agents particularly more cooperation in terms of information on ownership and greater use of statutory notices.

Factotum
24.02.14
FIVE SISTERS AND CAIRN ROCK HOUSING NETWORKS

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Part 1 – Right to buy
Q1. We agree to the abolition of the Right to Buy as this would ensure a retention of stock for landlords. Also we consider the RTB has become overly complicated with the inclusion of varying criteria and rights for tenants.

Q2. We think the 3 year timetable is adequate as long as this is well advertised and all tenants are advised of change and are well informed throughout.

Part 2 Social Housing
Q3. Reasonable Preference Groups [RPG] would be a fairer way to allocate properties as a percentage would always be let the these RPGs rather than a high percentage of all lets being allocated to homeless as is current practices. However RPG should always reflect local need and this should be selected through meaningful consultation with tenants and applicants as a legislative requirement to ensure this is carried out. We agree with the proposals when considering if an applicant is a home owner, and without good reason, they would not be considered for social housing.

Q4. We had mixed views around SSSTs and SSTs however we agreed landlords would have more powers to combat ASB in communities as they would have the flexibility to introduce SSSTs as this should ensure tenant behaviour is acceptable as displays of ASB would likely happen early on in tenancies. Through closer monitoring in respect of a SSST there may be support issues flagged up to staff and interventions could be offered. However SSSTs should only be used where appropriate i.e. ASB, non-payment of rent or previous/likely breaches of a tenancy agreement, and not widely spread. The use of SSTs means tenants do not have full range of rights as all other tenants will have, no succession rights, no assigning to others or joint tenants and again we would consider these should only be considered where appropriate. Several members views were initial tenancy SST/SSSTs would be a good method of monitoring every new tenant at the onset of their tenancy and again could identify any support they may require whilst allowing the landlord more power and control of their stock.

Q5. Yes
Part 3 Private Rented Sector
Q6. We consider this should make resolutions quicker and easier for tenants and landlords, this could save money as there would be less need for lawyers to be involved. The publishing of decisions would be of benefit as they can be accessed and details would allow a better understanding for tenants and landlords.

We would add if this is good enough for the private sector then why was the same provision for a Housing Panel dropped from the Bill as this would have given tenants easier access to resolutions.

Q7. New legislation would allow councils power to make owners pay for their maintenance, safety and security and this will enhance local communities and put a stop to landlords having to meet these costs from the HRA.

Q8. We would welcome this test but would add there is a need for further discussion and information around a stage 2 provision.

Part 4 Letting Agents
Q9. To regulate in this way through a register would offer good protection to tenants and would be governed by a statutory code of practice, this would be welcomed and letting agents will be more accountable.

Q10. Letting agents should be regulated with proper rules and regulations set and breaches more easily identified and resolved offering tenants a better degree of protection of their rights. If the same level of regulation as is in social sector this would be better as the variances of leases are confusing and are not as open and accountable as in the social sector.

Part 5 Mobile home sites with permanent residents
Q11. The fit and proper person test in relation to management of sites should give more enforcement powers to Local Authorities and would be welcome.

Q12. N/A

Part 6 Private housing conditions
Q13. Though N/A to us as council tenants we would have serious concerns about transfer of assets without appropriate consultation.

Part 7 Miscellaneous
Q14

Other issues
Q16. Yes we consider Housing Panel/Tribunal for Social housing sector should have been included and the introduction of the use of probationary tenancies, have been too easily dismissed from the Bill and these should have more discussion/debate.

Five Sisters and Cairn Rock Housing Networks
28 February 2014
GLASGOW CITY COUNCIL
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

General Introduction

Glasgow City Council welcomes the introduction of the Bill and the opportunity to comment on the general principles, as well of some of the practical implementation issues of the provisions in the Bill.

Glasgow City Council has previously identified amendments and additions to legislation particularly in relation to the private housing sector, and some of these provisions have been included in this Bill. Many of these provisions are discretionary and are a welcome addition to the toolkit available to local authorities to drive improvement in the private housing sector.

It is acknowledged that the Bill covers a wide range of topics, and is designed to tidy up, clarify or enhance existing legislation. However given the recent review of the operation of the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003 by the Parliament, and the findings of the Glasgow Factoring Commission, the Council believes that there is scope to improve existing legislation in regard to common property and title condition burdens. Examples of this include clarity in law on the purpose and enforcement of the factor’s float, the right to switch factors, the need to address title disparities where major repair works are being undertaken in common blocks, removal of the exemptions to the taking out of common building insurance within the Tenement (Scotland) Act and the definitions of common property in the West of Scotland context, especially where titles are shared between more than one tenement building in the same locus.

A specific additional section which the Council would wish to have considered as a matter of urgency is the introduction of enforced sales powers in terms of empty homes to bring the legislation in line with that currently operating in England and Wales.

In addition, the Council would ask for steps to be taken to provide plain English guidance which pulls together the key common property statutes arising from the all Scottish private housing sector legislation introduced since 1987. Whilst such an undertaking may not in itself be part of the Housing Bill, we would wish the matter of practical understanding and application of legislation brought to the attention of Ministers, given the complex nature of this type of legislation and the plethora of inter-related clauses contained in these various acts of parliament.

Part 1: Right to Buy

This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.
Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

The abolition of the right to buy for social housing is welcome. Although right to buy sales in the city have diminished over a period of years, sales remain in the region of 150 per annum (SHR Landlord Statistics 2012/13) This is in the context of the Housing Need and Demand Assessment for Glasgow which identified a substantial need for socially rented housing, and the continued need, in particular for a supply of settled accommodation for homeless households presenting in the city.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

It is important that tenants have sufficient time to consider whether or not they wish to exercise the right to buy, and it is also important that RSLs have a clear view of their asset base so as to inform their future business plans, particularly given the other uncertainties they face around welfare reform, pensions deficit and reduction in Housing Association Grant levels. A reasonable compromise position would be a 2 year timetable for the provisions to come into force.

Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Social landlords generally have a great deal of flexibility in the allocation of housing so whilst not fundamentally changing the allocations regime for social housing, the clarification and minor amendments in the Bill are welcomed, and a few are particularly worth highlighting. These will allow RSLs to sensitively manage their housing stock and respond more effectively to the pressures and shortages in their communities. When used in specific circumstances, the ability for landlords to take account of the age of tenants in the allocation of housing should assist in the creation of sustainable and settled communities. The extension to the time period for succession to a tenancy, and the ability for the recovery of adapted property, recognises that social housing is a scarce public resource, and as a discretionary power, will allow RSLs to make judgements based on community needs.

The continued reasonable preference given to homeless households is welcome as it is imperative that social landlords have due regard to the level of homelessness in their area when considering waiting list applications. In a stock-transfer local authority such as Glasgow, it is especially important that the responsibilities of RSLs complement the duties of the local authority in securing access to settled accommodation.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

The proposals may support RSLs to reduce anti-social behaviour by signalling to tenants that sanctions will be imposed on those breaching tenancy agreements. However, the granting of a Short Scottish Secured Tenancy will do little to address problematic behaviour without appropriate support and guidance. Therefore, it is vital that households have access to appropriate levels of support, which will often involve multi-agency responses. This will place additional pressures on resources. The Scottish Government should set out what support should be offered to tenants in order that they are able to sustain their tenancies, and clarify who is responsible for securing that support.

It is important to highlight that if a tenancy is ended due to anti-social behaviour, the local authority may have a duty to accommodate those who have lost their tenancy through homeless legislation, which is particularly likely in cases involving children.

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

The amendments set out in the bill will go some way to enhancing the rights of tenants with short SSTs and will particularly benefit tenants who are engaging with services as this will encourage the provision of longer term support to be put in place. It is extremely important that sufficient resources are available to support tenants.

However, there will be tenants who will not engage with services and will not accept support, and for these households, the proposals are likely to lengthen the process for a resolution, which may have a negative impact on neighbouring tenants and the wider community.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

Glasgow City Council has lobbied for a considerable time for a ‘housing court’ with specialist housing expertise and which would expedite cases, and therefore, welcomes the move towards a first-tier tribunal in the expectation that the proposed system will prove more efficient and appropriate in addressing disputes between tenant and landlord.

In terms of supporting the expediency of cases through the tribunal system, it is suggested that the new Bill could amend the 2004 Act regarding the right to appeal under section 92. As it currently stands, this section does not restrict the right of appeal to errors in law. If section 92 remains as it currently, then the appeals process is likely to be long and extremely resource intensive. Local authorities will also need to know if expenses can be recovered from a Tribunal.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities' discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

Glasgow City Council does not have an issue with the generality that private landlord applications over a year old are deemed to be passed as ‘fit and proper’. However, one concern is that the local authority could be waiting on information from the landlord or having difficulties contacting the landlord, and therefore, tacit approval should only be granted at the 12 month point where the local authority has been furnished with all the information it has requested and is therefore, in a position to make an informed decision. Where the applicant refuses to respond to further questions or clarifications concerning application for landlord registration e.g by ignoring written requests or failing to provide a home or business address for correspondence, then the 12 month rule should not apply.

A clause could be added to clarify Clause 85(8) (a) of the 2004 Anti Social Behaviour Act by extending the criteria to include failure to pay for common property repairs.

The Council is strongly of the opinion that the “fit and proper person test” should be enhanced to address the problem of failure by some landlords to pay their share of common repair costs where it has been proven that the debt has not been paid following the issue of a court order. If the landlord refuses to pay for his/her share of common repair costs, then this should be an additional ground for refusal of the application.
The Scottish Government will need to work with local authorities to ensure that the central IT system can furnish reports which are nearing the 12 month deadline.

The amendments to allow third party reporting to the PRHP is welcomed by the Council, and is an issue on which the Council has lobbied. The Council is only likely to report to the PRHP in a limited number of cases, with the most likely circumstance being when the tenant has moved on but there is a value to making a report to the PRHP, particularly in cases where a landlord demonstrates persistent poor management.

There may also be cases where other organisations such as RSLs or universities/colleges may wish to make reports to the PRHP.

In order to defend an appeal against a third party referral made on behalf of a tenant, Glasgow City Council firmly believes that local authorities would require powers of access at the time of the initial notification in order to demonstrate evidence of a breach of the Repairing Standard.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The Enhanced Enforcement Area which the Scottish Government intends to introduce at stage 2 is something which Glasgow City Council have been keen to see developed, so that concerted and targeted enforcement action can be focussed on specific geographical areas which are experiencing a concentration of multiple problems, particularly in relation to poor property condition, and poor management and practice in the private rented sector.

The Scottish Government had indicated that it plans to include both power of entry and mandatory disclosure checks which are powers which will assist in building an evidence base to take enforcement action. This will support vulnerable tenants and owners, and the wider community in these designated areas, and will also make Third Party Reporting more effective.

The Council looks forward to seeing the detailed additional powers and procedures to be applied to make Enhanced Enforcement Areas effective alongside the process for designating such areas.

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.
Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

Through various consultation exercises, Glasgow City Council has asked for regulation of letting agents as there are no standards or guidance for practising as a letting agent, and therefore, no sanctions available to tackle poor practice.

Currently private landlord registration units register letting agents as they are acting on behalf of private landlords. Through the Private Landlord Register, around 700 letting agents can be identified as operating in the city from very small to very large operations.

The proposal for a mandatory register of letting agents is useful as it will be linked to a code of conduct and enforcement orders. The content of the code of conduct will be of prime importance and the involvement of key stakeholders to develop a practical, easily understood and enforceable code must be the objective. It is vital that the register is not just an information list, and that enforcement action is taken against poorly performing letting agents with enforcement orders followed up if not complied with.

The key to the success of effective regulation (rather than simply registration) of letting agents is that the fit and proper person test must be sufficiently robust. Experience of the test regarding private landlords is that test criteria is weak, it is often difficult to prove a breach of the test and the penalties for a breach are not sufficient. The fit and proper person test for letting agents must be robust and sanctions sufficient to deter poor practice. This may be best dealt with through the Code of Conduct which must be robust enough to allow effective sanction to be administered.

Results of FT Tribunal rulings should be made available to the relevant local authority. Local authorities must have a mechanism to be able to liaise with Government’s Registration and Regulation staff. This may include information about letting agents which suggest a breach of the fit and proper persons test e.g. the person has a criminal conviction.

It is extremely important that there are clear links and information exchange between local authorities who register private landlords and the Scottish Government who will register letting agents. As a letting agent register was never consulted on, there has been little discussion on how this interconnection will work. However, if a letting agent refused registration or is removed from the national register then this would affect all activity in Scotland irrespective of where the poor practice took place. This could have immediate implications for private landlords in each of the local authorities where the letting agent is registered, as they must be removed from the landlord’s registration when the agent is not deemed ‘fit and proper’ according to s88(8) of the Anti Social Behaviour Act, 2004, whereas the Housing Bill appears to suggest that local authorities may remove the agent under s50(3).
In addition, local authorities must have a mechanism for referring poor practice by a letting agent, as the current drafting suggests that only tenants and landlords can refer letting agents to the tribunal.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Based upon the experience of dispute resolution between factored owners and property factors (referred to the Home Owners Housing Panel) and between private rented tenants and their landlords (referred to the Private Rented Housing Panel), there is a case to be made for extending the role of the PRHP to take referrals from tenants whose complaint is not with the landlord but with the letting agent operating on behalf of the landlord.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

The Council is broadly in support of the proposed licensing scheme, especially in terms of the consolidation of a national scheme which can be applied across all local authorities.

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

No comment to make.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

There are no major changes proposed other than conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of the costs arising from the Tenement Management Scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004. Local Authorities already have ‘missing shares’ powers under Section 50 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 therefore the Council questions the relevance or need for this.
In certain circumstances, the Council will require that owners carry out repair and maintenance to their property, particularly to common parts. The streamlining of the maintenance order process is welcomed as are the proposals to allow local authorities to record repayment charges against commercial premises and increasing the scope of work to allow security measures to be included within Work Notices.

In terms of the key principles of the Bill, these welcome amendments highlight the wider issue of home owners being unable to fund essential repair and maintenance to their homes which is a considerable problem in the city. Previous Scottish Government guidance following the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 highlighted the need for a national lending unit to support owners to carry out repairs. This unit was never established by the Scottish Government but the issue of the affordability of repair and maintenance of private housing stock remains, which has wider implications for the future of housing supply in the city.

Granting of renewable licenses for HMO should take account of the condition of the property. Renewal of licence (regardless of when it is due) should take into account the condition of common elements, with the licence only being granted once a maintenance plan is in place which applies to all proprietors of the (tenement) block.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.

Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

It would be useful to Glasgow City Council to be consulted in the case of any housing association operating in the city which is currently subject to SHR intervention powers and has a current or pipeline scheme with the Council in respect of the receipt or potential for receipt of Transfer of Management Development Funding, Private Sector Housing Grant or other grant provided by the Council.

Other Issues

Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

No further comment
Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

There are some other areas within the Bill’s overall policy objectives which could helpfully be included in this Bill.

These include:

- Amending the fit and proper test for private landlord registration to provide local authorities with the ability to conduct further tests in respect of gas safety, building insurance, fire safety, energy performance, plus the information made available to tenants on how to make a complaint to the private rented housing panel or equivalent – also non participation in common repair works, non payment of common repair bills
- Clarification on the ability of a landlord to re-apply for private landlord registration following refusal or removal from the register. Currently, an application need not be accepted within 12 months from the date it was refused or revoked by the local authority, however, it would be clearer if the effective date of any decision was the expiry of an appeal period or following the outcome of any appeal proceedings.
- This Bill requires evidence of letting agent impropriety to be validated by the FTT or Sheriff Court. It would be helpful if similar legislation e.g strengthening of part 8 of the ASB 2004 act or at least the provision of up to date Scottish Government Guidance could reflect this in relation to private landlord registration.
Housing Bill Comments for Committee

My comments are made as a Constituency MP for Edinburgh East, based on issues raised by my constituents and my observations of the area, and also drawing on my experience as Executive Member for Housing on the City of Edinburgh Council between 1999 and 2007.

I made a submission to the Scottish Government consultation, but on this occasion I want to focus on two main areas:

1) Taking Age into Account when Allocating Social Housing

2) Private Landlord contributions to maintaining buildings and their immediate environment.

Taking Age into Account when Allocating Social Housing

I was pleased to see the inclusion of Clause xx of the Bill. In my submission to the Scottish Government’s consultation I raised this issue, and argued for the 2001 Housing Act to be amended.

I noted that Shelter argues in its written evidence to the Committee that 'current allocations framework allows sufficient flexibility for landlords to allocate their homes appropriately and successfully.'

I would argue, however, that is not the case. On several occasions the Housing Regulator has instructed landlords to cease using local lettings policies which set an age limit on the ground that this contravened the Housing Act 2001. This was so even where the landlord could demonstrate that the policy was successful in attracting tenants, had 'turned around' previously problematic blocks, had reduced turnover, and was popular with tenants. Government and regulator have repeatedly stressed the importance of tenant participation but in these cases considered that the terms of the 2001 Act gave them no choice but to override the views of tenants. In Edinburgh an over 35 and no children local lettings policy was used following extensive renovation of two high rise blocks in Leith and 3 in Wester Hailes. After 15 years the investment was 'wearing well' and the lettings policy had helped to protect this expensive capital investment.

For those concerned that such policies would discriminate against homeless applicants, this matter was looked at in depth when the City of Edinburgh's homelessness services were inspected in 2006 (check date) and no evidence was found that this led to lower proportions of people presenting as homelessness receiving allocation in these blocks. However in the subsequent Inspection of Housing Services led to the instructions to desist from such policies, not because they were not working but purely on the legal point that they breached the 2001 Act. Hence the need for an amendment to the 2001 Act.

The age profile of applicants for council and housing association housing demonstrates that there are no lack of applicants in the relatively older age groups so that such policies, properly targeted, will not give rise to lack of demand. In Edinburgh the council and all RSLs operate a common Housing Register called Edindex. In March 2012 the age breakdown of applicants was as follows:

16-17 – 1%
18-24 – 15%
25-25 – 27%
36-59 – 41% (The number here was 10,554 to demonstrate we are dealing with a large number of people)
60+ - 16%

The age breakdown of lets in the year 2011-12 was:

16-17 – 3%
18-24 – 16%
24-35 – 25%
36-59 – 37%
60+ - 19%
This illustrates that the high number of applicants in the two older age bands is broadly matched by lets ie those on the application list were not simply there ‘just in case’ and not actively seeking a property.

(NB these figures appear on the Edindex website and 2011/12 was the latest year given. Previous years were similar so it seems likely that the age profile remains much as shown here)

High rise blocks are not the only example. Properties built as 'pensioner housing' in the past but which are not designated as sheltered housing are not allowed to be allocated with an age restriction. This can give rise to difficult management issues where lifestyles clash, and can lead to other residents moving away. In a local area it is widely perceived as unfair and illogical to let such properties to people whose housing 'need' is not a need for this type of property. Many landlords are keen to offer older tenants the opportunity to downsize if they wish to do so, so freeing up larger family homes which may be in short supply. Older tenants are, rightly, cautious about moving and as well as being keen to remain in an area where they have social links, also wish to feel reasonably safe and secure. Knowing neighbouring properties will be occupied by people of a broadly similar age may make the offered property more acceptable.

One landlord in my constituency is causing tenants, surrounding residents (not tenants. ) and itself ( in terms of increased housing management demands, higher repair costs and higher turnover) problems by being unable to set a minimum age for lettings. The relatively small group of homes, largely 4 flats in a stair over two levels, started life as homes for older ( but not 'old') people who do not require sheltered housing ( for which these properties are unsuitable anyway) . Changes to letting policy driven, it would appear by the 2001 Act, has led to this being a less stable community. Requests to reinstate a minimum age for allocations has been met with the argument that this is not legally possible.

Every area is different and it is very much for a local council and its housing association partners to develop lettings policies which work for them. Removing the current ban on taking age into account could help facilitate the development of such policies.

It had been suggested to me by one housing association in my constituency that the proposed wording in the draft Bill is vague and that they would not feel confident applying a minimum age on the strength of the provision as drafted. I suggested in my submission previously that any amendment to the 2001 Act should be accompanied by clear criteria. My suggestions was a requirement to demonstrate that:

1) there is no overall discrimination against younger applicants in the authority generally as a result of such a policy – ie the authority would have to demonstrate from robust lettings data that young applicants were overall housed proportionately to their numbers among applicants. And that they were not disproportionately being housed in low demand properties. (Ironically these policies have often been introduced to boost demand and apply in what otherwise might be ‘low demand’ properties.)

2) That there is a sound housing management and sustainability argument for applying such policies. This could be in terms of previous problems, high repair/housing management costs prior to application of policy and demonstrable reduction, reduced voids/turnover and increased popularity of the properties involved.

3) That a need is being fulfilled eg a need for suitable homes for older people

4) That the policy has tenant support and that there had been adequate consultation before such policies were introduced.

5) That homelessness obligations are not being affected by the existence of such policies.

Such rules, either on the face of the Bill or in regulation or guidance, would I think also answer the concerns of those who worry that such a change be discriminatory against more vulnerable groups.

Private Landlord contributions to maintaining buildings and their immediate environment.

In many parts of Scotland the Private Rented Sector has become an increasingly important part of the housing landscape. In Edinburgh the 2011 Census Figures revealed that 22% of households in the city (some 55,000) were living in the sector, more than the council and housing association sector combined. The Private Rented Sector is no longer a ‘niche’ form of housing for students and young people, but is increasingly housing people across all age ranges and incomes. It has also broken out of the more traditional areas (in Edinburgh those were city centre and Leith) into suburban housing areas.

This Housing Bill feels like a missed opportunity to make landlord registration more effective. Landlord Registration was introduced in the Anti Social Behaviour Act. The measure was supported by many MSPs who were seeing the impact of the growth of private letting in terms of poor landlord management standards and lack of action on anti social behaviour by tenants. In some cases even tracing the landlord had proved difficult, an issue substantially dealt with by registration. However registration has become largely a bureaucratic exercise, and has not dealt with many of the issues. One such issue raised by many of my constituents is the failure of many landlords to play their part in communal repairs and maintenance, and lack of care for garden areas.

Example: one constituent is now the sole owner occupier in a block of flats (12 in number) built in the 1980s. Being the owner occupier she sees the work that needs to be done but finds it extremely difficult to get agreement and/or a payment from landlords when work needs done. Major repairs have previously been dealt with under Statutory Notice but with that service currently suspended except for emergencies, the situation has become even more difficult. Frustratingly even small issues (which really should not become the subject of a statutory notice) are difficult to deal with. For instance at the time of my visit the external front door had a growing ‘hole’ clearly caused by the wood rotting due to water ingress. This can only get worse but landlords do not see this and are disinterested when approached. As my constituent said ‘it's not as if the landlords can't afford it, the one next door for instance has 17 flats in the city.’

This response is echoed widely. Residents see landlords charging relatively high rents, sometimes paid for through the public purse if the tenant receives housing benefit, yet seemingly often unwilling to share the costs of looking after their property, to the detriment of other residents. In several parts of my constituency I can identify the private lets by the overgrown state of the gardens, both communal and private. Overgrown private gardens impinge on others, especially in tenement buildings.

Residents feel that the council should be able to intervene to recover payments from landlords, that a majority of owners should be able to ask for such a payment order to be made. They also consider that failure to co-operate with reasonable requests for such payment/co-operation with communal repairs should be taken into account when landlords apply for registration. It is unlikely that such an issue would be taken into account when applying the ‘fit and proper person’ test for registration, and therefore further legislation would be required.

I would hope that the Committee might discuss and consider proposing amendments to the Housing Bill to cover these issues.

If there needs to be a legal change what safeguards would be required? Probably a requirement to demonstrate that:
6) there is no overall discrimination against younger applicants in the authority generally as a result of such a policy – ie the authority would have to demonstrate from robust lettings data that young applicants were overall housed proportionately to their numbers among applicants. And that they were not disproportionately being housed in low demand properties. (Ironically these policies have often been introduced to boost demand and apply in what otherwise might be ‘low demand’ properties. )

7) That there is a sound housing management and sustainability argument for applying such policies. This could be in terms of previous problems, high repair/housing management costs prior to application of policy and demonstrable reduction, reduced voids/turnover and increased popularity of the properties involved.

8) That a need is being fulfilled eg a need for suitable homes for older people

9) That the policy has tenant support and that there had been adequate consultation before such policies were introduced.

10) That homelessness obligations are not being affected by the existence of such policies.

Sheila Gilmore MP, Edinburgh East
19 February 2014
We are letting agents and property managers and wish to make the following observations on the Housing (Scotland) Bill: -

In response to questions submitted earlier we wish to respond accordingly

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.
Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents' practice?

This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards. It is essential that the reputation of the industry is improved while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

We believe there should be a new stand-alone Letting Agent Register operated by the Scottish Government.

The Register should include all businesses which let and manage private rented residential property in Scotland. However, we would not support simply replicating the processes and principles established for the Property Factors Register. Whilst it has improved that sector, this system is not robust enough in our opinion for the letting and management sector, and considerable consideration needs to be given to the detail of implementation for our sector.

A strong Code of Practice is needed. Along with the other representative organisations, we welcome the planned consultation in preparing the Code as secondary legislation.

Registration should include:

- an annual renewal (not every 3 years)
- a legally binding commitment each year to possessing:
  - adequate professional indemnity insurance
  - appropriate client money protection
  - a ring-fenced client money bank account
  - an annual audit of client accounts
  - membership of an ombudsman scheme to ensure an easily available redress mechanism for tenants and landlords.

Depending on the registration processes put in place there could be a requirement for the agent to produce annual documentation to confirm the above. It may be more appropriate to consider the registration process to be more the issuing of a licence approving the Letting Agent.

We believe that any Registration process should be Government operated free of any involvement with professional bodies such as the RICS or ARLA and others. Agents should aspire to differentiate themselves in the market place by achieving the standards required to gain membership. Within the code of practice there may be the requirement over a period of time to require owners of an staff employed in an agency to be say 50% qualified to a certain level of professional knowledge and competency.

The impact of these proposals on our industry is to be welcomed. It will however highlight even further the disparity in enforcement that currently exists on compliant letting agents and landlords and those who operate below the required standards. The passing of legislation and implementation of registration of Letting Agents will create an environment where landlords who are self-managing will perceive the enforcement of regulation on them to be far less onerous. We recommend that at the same time as these regulations are implemented that the Landlord Registration regulations are enforced more robustly.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

See the above comment about ombudsman services in response to Question 10; under these schemes redress is readily available to customers of such organisations at no cost to the claimant.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

Glenhalm Property
21.02.14
Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?
This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards and the reputation of the industry while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

There is the potential for confusion between agents who are registered through landlord registration (as established by the Antisocial Behaviour (Scotland) Act 2004) and registered letting agents as defined in the Bill. In order to reduce bureaucracy and avoid this confusion, registered letting agents should be automatically entered on the landlord register and the letting agent reference number should be used by all local authorities for the purposes of identifying letting agents on the landlord register (replacing the current system of giving agents registration numbers which differ from authority to authority).

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

The proposed mechanism is appropriate in providing a simple and swift method of resolving disputes.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

Gavin Gowans
31 January 2014
Comments to the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee

Right to Buy

Advantages and disadvantages:

Tenants who have exercised their RTB
a) The majority have done well i) by selling at a profit ii) renting out the property iii) improving the property, including extensions, to a greater degree than was possible for their landlord at the time
b) Some have suffered i) through changes in circumstances ii) remortgaging up to the market value or taking out home improvement loans beyond their means (including changes in circumstances)
c) Older tenants who were only able to buy through 'gifted money', usually from younger relatives i) security of tenure ii) sustainability of repair costs iii) effects on DWP benefits through deprivation of capital rules

Remaining tenants have suffered
a) At the beginning, RTB receipts went to central government (that has been rectified gradually over the years)
b) There has never been a concomitant reduction in historic debt; fewer tenants are left to service the debts through their rents and the debt on each property has increased
c) RTB led directly to a lack of investment in the housing stock, including modernisation, cyclical repairs and new build
d) However, restrictions on RTB have encouraged modernisation and improvements in existing stock, and new build, even if the extent of the latter does very little to bridge the gap between supply and demand in social housing

Landlords
a) The social sector has done very badly i) stock reduction ii) growing waiting lists iii) for Local Authorities, duties to the homeless iii) changing demographics vs the housing stock, not forgetting the under occupancy charge
b) The private sector has benefited and extended through the reduction in available social housing

RTB was initially proposed by a Labour Government under Jim Callaghan. The further development of that under the Conservative Governments of Margaret Thatcher has been an unmitigated disaster, and resulted in the current housing crisis. RTB should be abolished as soon as is reasonably possible, and the proposed three year notice period is more than adequate, especially regarding older tenants as outlined above.

Moreover, existing legislation already concerning Pressured Area Status, states that tenants prior to PAS retain RTB, and those awarded tonancies thereafter, have no RTB. That will only lead to all Social Landlords applying for their entire housing stock to be under PAS, an excellent solution to retaining housing stock, and the decision is now in the aegis of LAs.

Any property bought under RTB must give due consideration to the value, and the projected lifetime, of improvements carried out by the landlord. The overall effect of that would be an increase in the market value of the property. The value of the property on the open market should be the sole criterion in determining the initial selling price. Currently, properties are undervalued as they have a sitting tenant, and the price is attenuated by TMV (tenanted market value).

The level and type of information to tenants on RTB given by social landlords will depend on guidance from the Scottish Government. Given that, cost could be a major factor if no additional funding is granted.
Allocations

Flexibility is an important feature, but not paramount. Its main role is concerning individual cases. There is also a need to consider local situations within the remit of a landlord who has a broad spectrum of properties and locations.

Age should not be a consideration outwith local letting initiatives that are moving towards specific housing needs. Mixed communities are a stated aim of the Scottish Government.

Each LA, regardless of whether or not they remain landlords, should operate a Common Housing Register. That should become mandatory, with financial assistance if necessary. That would help to standardise letting policies within local areas, if not nationally.

Regarding qualifying periods, it is best dealt with on a case by case basis. However, assignments and sub-lettings can be seen as a way to circumvent housing lists. The situation with carers can be more complex, especially if the carer has given up their own home (rented or owned). It is important to give due consideration to circumstances.

Antisocial behaviour

There are problems in legislating within this area. Each LA has its own Antisocial Behaviour policy (compulsory). However, those can vary widely, especially when it comes to applying to raise court proceedings. As a result, there is a risk that histories of ASB could be regarded as circumstantial evidence unless there is corroboration.

There are also instances where the ASB is not by the tenant/applicant, but by a minor, allegedly under their control, or by a previous associate they have been trying to avoid.

In any event, the proposed changes are minor and will have little effect. The only good point is the greater level of protection for complainants, especially third parties.

Private Sector

Tribunals are a good idea in general; they can provide more timely solutions in a less formal atmosphere, adjudicated by a panel, including housing experts, and not by a Sheriff of indeterminate knowledge of the rented sector. However, the substantial majority of heritable cases presenting at Sheriff Courts Civil are in the public sector. Extending tribunals to cover such cases would be advantageous, not the least in reducing the pressure on civil courts.

It is high time that letting agents were regulated. Not only would that lead to a reduction in sham contracts, but also a greater uptake in landlord registration.

Increasing LA powers to pay missing shares misses the point. If the landlord cannot be found or, more importantly, identified, the tenancy should be rent-free, as covered by existing legislation.

I trust that you find my comments helpful.
Introduction

Homeless Action Scotland is the national membership body in Scotland for organisations and individuals tackling homelessness. Our members include voluntary sector providers, housing associations, local authorities, academics and other professionals involved in homelessness prevention and alleviation.

We support the general objectives of the legislation but we have a number of concerns regarding the specific proposals in the Bill, specifically that they may lead inadvertently to an erosion of tenants’ right. Our concerns are highlighted in the answers to the set questions.

Answers to set questions

Part 1: Right to Buy

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

Homeless Action Scotland supports the proposals to end the right to buy.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

We feel strongly that the abolition of right to buy should happen sooner than proposed in the Bill. The abolition of right to buy has been trailed for some time and therefore the proposed change of policy should come as little surprise to those people wishing to exercise their rights.

Part 2: Social Housing

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing allow them to make best use of social housing?

Section 3 - Reasonable Preference

We are concerned that clause 1ZB undermines the role of social housing. Firstly, the clause defines housing needs as those ‘which are not capable of being met by housing options which are available.’ The implication appears to be that a social housing let should be considered only as a last resort when all other options have been exhausted. This reduces the role of social housing to that of residual welfare housing rather than as potentially the best option to meet the housing needs of the individual, considered equally among all options. It represents a further step towards the model adopted in England which regards social housing as residual. Scotland has a strong tradition of considering social housing as having a broad role in meeting housing needs, and in very many cases providing the best option for successful outcomes for people in need, providing stability, affordability and security. Although accommodation may well be an option in other sectors, the essence of good quality housing options is to assess what provides the best long term opportunity for successful housing and inclusion in society. In our view, the term ‘not capable of being met’ should be reviewed and replaced with a term such as ‘more appropriately met’.

Our second concern is that the whole issue of reasonable preference appears to rest with the decision of each social landlord as to whether or not someone’s housing needs could have been met elsewhere. It remains vague and subjective as to how this assessment would be made, at what point in the process the assessment would be made, and what the objective factors might be against which a social landlord would be held to account if it was felt they were not giving appropriate priority to allocating properties to persons in housing need. We also seek further information on what measures would be in place to ensure that staff are sufficiently trained and equipped to make such an assessment. If Ministers wish social housing to remain accessible to all it is vital that these issues are fully explored.

In our view (and a view endorsed in research\(^1\) commissioned by the Scottish Government into this issue) the existing reasonable preference legislation does not cause any problems that has been well respected by social landlords and been beneficial to those assisted by them. The question is whether the revised version will lead to different decisions by landlords and whether those different decisions will be in the interests of the most vulnerable groups. Under the current framework most landlords make appropriate decisions and there appears to be no objective evidence to demonstrate that the existing legislation constrains them. Therefore there is no clear case for change.

We propose that there be no change to the current ‘reasonable preference’ framework.

Section 5 - Age

Homeless Action Scotland strongly opposes the provision to allow social landlords to consider age as a factor when allocating housing.

We view the proposal as introducing a power to discriminate on grounds of age. Age discrimination was outlawed for good reasons, and we would expect the Scottish Government to endorse both the spirit and letter of the equalities legislation enthusiastically. We are extremely disappointed that this proposal appears on the face of the Bill. We welcome the extension of the protections under the Equality Act to apply to 16 and 17 year olds, but cannot support the introduction of age as a factor that may be taken into account in housing allocations.

Age per se is not a housing need. Sometimes it can be a factor in exacerbating a need but this is not necessarily the case. People have different levels of capability and competence at the same age. It is therefore an arbitrary factor with no direct relationship to need.

Our only experience of age being taken into account, or of landlords seeking to take age into account, is in order to exclude young people from allocations. Young people already

---

\(^1\) Reasonable Preference in Scottish Social Housing’ Bretherton and Pleace 2011 face the biggest barriers in accessing accommodation and have been placed at a further disadvantage by some of the recent welfare reforms.

Homeless Action Scotland’s Youth Homelessness Survey 2013\(^2\) showed that around 38% of homeless young people moved into the social rented sector, only 7.5% moved into the private rented sector, and 55% had not moved on. The social rented sector therefore plays a crucial role in helping young people end their homelessness, and the introduction of the flexibility to discriminate on grounds of age is likely to lead to further barriers to young homeless people. We recognise that it may be argued that the measure could permit specific action in favour of young people. Our experience tells us that in practice it is likely to result in the reverse.

Existing guidance\(^3\) permits social landlords to undertake local lettings initiatives where there is a specific issue that needs to be addressed, and in some of these circumstances age has been used legitimately as a factor to help create balance in a particular localised area where a severe imbalance has emerged. The new legislation duplicates existing provision but extends it significantly by allowing age specifically to be taken into account in housing allocations. This erodes the protection that prospective tenants currently have against age discrimination.

We strongly recommend that the provision to allow social landlords to consider age as a factor when allocating housing is removed from the Bill.

Section 6 – Ownership

Homeless Action Scotland is broadly supportive of the proposals in Section 6, which permit ownership of property to be taken into consideration. We support the circumstances identified in 6(1)(2) where ownership of property would not be taken into account. There are, however, further circumstances that should be considered. For example, where the property has a large negative equity but the circumstances of the applicants have changed so that they can no longer afford the mortgage, it would neither be sensible for them to sell the property or to continue to live in it since it would quickly result in homelessness and substantial debt. There may also be cases where a household has to move to take up employment but is unable to sell their existing accommodation due to negative equity, and there can also be situations where the condition of the property is such that it would be unreasonable for a person to continue to occupy it. There are further, more general, issues around affordability, such as where a person becomes unemployed or experiences other unforeseen changes in their circumstances. These issues may be exacerbated over the coming years given the likelihood of a mortgage rate increase in the medium term and a slow recovery of house values.

We therefore support section 6 but propose a further circumstance be added to take account of situations where it would be unreasonable for the person to continue to occupy the property.

\(^3\) Social Housing Allocations: a Practice Guide, Scottish Government
Section 7 - ‘Freezing’ of applications

We recognise that this section is largely designed to formalise practices that have been undertaken by many social landlords for some time. However, three of the provisions in our view are too broad and may require some adjustment.

The first is 20B(5)(b)(ii). Offences punishable by imprisonment cover a broad range of circumstances. We understand that the main intention is to cover issues such as anti-social behaviour and drug dealing. However, an accumulation of unpaid fines can lead to imprisonment, and there are other relatively minor offences not related to a person’s behaviour or concerning their tenancy that might be covered. In order to protect tenants from an unfair imposition of a freeze we recommend that this provision is refined.

The second is 20B(5)(c). If not amended, this erodes the rights of prospective tenants quite unreasonably, and puts tenants in the private sector particularly at risk. For example, any Short Assured Tenancy that is ended in the private rented sector may be via an order for recovery of possession. A person wishing to enter the social rented sector who was previously renting in the private sector, and whose Short Assured Tenancy has come to an end through no fault of theirs, would therefore be open to having their application frozen at the whim of the social landlord. (Without being an expert on English or Northern Irish legislation we suspect the same may be true of those jurisdictions). In our view the balance here is tilted too far towards the social landlord at the expense of tenants’ interests and rights. Consideration should also be given to how this clause in the Bill may affect joint tenants. In circumstances where a joint tenant is unable to prevent an eviction action but is not personally at fault, what rights will they have?

The third element is section 20B(5)(d) (abandonment). People abandon tenancies for a number of reasons including domestic abuse, external violence or harassment or simply to avoid court action. (In cases where there has been antisocial behaviour the matter is covered elsewhere in this section of the Bill.)

In all of the above cases there may be a perverse incentive for a person to make a homelessness application, and there is a risk that they may remain homeless during the period of their application being frozen. It would be a disappointing unintended consequence if the widespread freezing of applications were to lead directly to an increase in the homelessness statistics.

We therefore propose that 20B(5)(b)(ii), 20B(5)(c) and 20B(5)(d) be amended to restrict the circumstances in which they can be used.

As a further matter we share the concerns of the Legal Services Agency regarding the appeal procedure in Section 7 of the Bill, which risks a further erosion of tenants’ rights.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?
Section 11 - Extension of term of SSST

We support the intention of this section. It is wise to have a provision where, in exceptional circumstances, when the landlord would otherwise repossess the tenancy, it may be beneficial to have a longer period to ascertain whether there is a genuine pattern of behavioural change. We have concerns, however, that as drafted the extension may simply be used as the norm rather than in exceptional circumstances. We would seek further conditions on its use, perhaps included in guidance issued by Ministers following the passing of the Act.

It is not clear how a tenant of a SSST that is subject to a 6 month extension could appeal against the landlord’s decision. The tenant may believe it is unreasonable to extend for a further 6 months since he or she has complied with the requirements of the SSST and wish it to be converted after 12 months to a full SST, as originally intended.

Greater clarity on what does and does not constitute a valid reason for extension of a SSST is required, as well as a right for the affected tenant to appeal.

Section 14 - Succession

We are concerned that the changes proposed in this section could lead to increased levels of preventable homelessness. The imposition of a 12 month residency rule in order to qualify may well lead to family members being made homeless from the family home. It is a perfectly predictable scenario that a family member will give up secure accommodation to care for another family member who is ill. In this situation, if the person holding the tenancy dies within 12 months of their family member moving in to provide care, not only would the family member who has moved in face the loss of their loved one but also the uncertainty of where they might live.

A further circumstance that can be envisaged is where a new tenant has been allocated a house and the tenant dies within 6 months. In this case, how would succession rights affect family members who had been living with the tenant for less than 12 months? Under the current legislation there is a 6 month qualifying period for co-habitees. In our view 6 months would be more reasonable than 12 months for automatic succession.

Whilst we can accept that there may have been some cases where people have succeeded to a tenancy after staying at a property for a short time, there appears to be no objective evidence that there is a problem with existing succession rights. We therefore find no justification in the proposal, which would erode tenants’ existing rights, and we propose that Schedule 3 of the Housing (Scotland) Act remains unchanged in this regard.

Section 15 – Eviction

We share the concerns of the Legal Services Agency regarding the removal of the test of ‘reasonableness’ and would consider this a fundamental erosion of tenants’ rights.

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

We refer to the above answer.
Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

We generally support these proposals. We are extremely concerned, however, that this would reduce the right of a tenant under threat of eviction to have their case adjudicated by a sheriff. Furthermore, under the reforms that will be effected by the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill it is unclear to what extent legal representation will be encouraged or permitted, or what financial aid to obtain legal representation will be available for cases heard by tribunal, without both of which the balance will be tipped unfairly in favour of landlords. This is an important matter of human rights and needs to be addressed before any decision to permit evictions to be heard by a tribunal. In our view the above matters risk an erosion of tenants’ rights. The loss of a home is a far more significant decision than many of the others being referred to a tribunal (e.g. disputes between tenant and landlord). The right to housing is a fundamental human right and removal of a home should therefore only be able to be decided by a senior legal figure (in Scotland’s case, a sheriff). By clearing the sheriff courts of some of the less significant issues there should be space for eviction actions to be heard more quickly, whilst protecting tenants’ rights to legal representation.

We note that tribunals can be presided over by a sheriff, but is not clear if that would be the case in every instance with regard to the proposals in the Bill. Allowing a sheriff to preside over a tribunal - for example in cases relating to evictions - would ameliorate some of our concerns.

We propose that amendments be made to this part guaranteeing access to legal representation, and either specifically excluding eviction hearings from the tribunal system or making a provision that eviction cases must be heard by a Sheriff under the tribunal system, and that consequential adjustments are made to Schedule 1.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

We are in favour of making it easier for tenants to enforce the repairing standard and we support the intention behind the provisions in the Bill. However, until greater security of tenure exists in the private rented sector it will remain unrealistic for tenants to exercise their rights without the risk of retaliatory eviction. This will remain the case regardless of whether access to the private rented housing panel is made by the tenant or by a third party, since in both cases the landlord may still end a tenancy following an initial six month term without giving any reason. We are working with Government and stakeholders through the Private Rented Sector Tenancy Review Group to address this issue, and we hope that the work of the group will lead to reform of the private rented sector so that tenants can enforce their rights without compromising the security of their tenancy.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?
Again, whilst we support the intention behind these provisions, the fundamental issues of lack of security for tenants and the risk of retaliatory evictions will only be addressed through reform of the private rented sector.

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents' practice?

There is a need to streamline the various registration and licensing procedures and we welcome the proposed establishment of a register of letting agents. However, we believe such a register would sit more logically together with the register of landlords and licences for houses in multiple occupation. Under the current proposals the former will rest with the Scottish Government and the latter with local government. This risks creating confusion for tenants about who is responsible for regulating the management of their property. The proposal for a register held by Scottish Ministers appears to be an expedient but ad hoc approach.

It is noted that section 49 permits Ministers to delegate functions relating to the register to other bodies. It is to be hoped that this anticipates the streamlining referred to above, and would in theory enable a quick transfer of this function to local authorities.

We seek clarification that it is the Government’s intention to streamline the regulatory framework for the private rented sector, and urge the Government to consider transferring the proposed register of letting agents to local government.

We have a broader concern regarding the definition of letting agency work in section 51. There are likely to be quite varied situations in the private rented sector where, for example, a family member helps out the official landlord in dealing with/managing a property. In such a circumstance would this family member require to be registered as a letting agent? Where is the line drawn? There is the opposite extreme where organised crime is involved in the ownership and management of property through ‘legitimate’ landlords or agents. It does not appear that the current proposals would in any way address these problems.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

We have no particular views on these provisions. There remains the greater issue of lack of security for tenants in the private rented sector, and we refer to reader to the concerns highlighted in our answer to Q8.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

No comment.

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?
No comment.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

No comment.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

No comment.

Other Issues

Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

No comment.

Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

No comment.

Homeless Action Scotland is happy to elaborate on any of the points raised and for the content of this response to be made publicly available.

Homeless Action Scotland

26 February 2014
HOMES FOR SCOTLAND

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Homes for Scotland is the voice of the home building industry.

With a membership of some 180 organisations together providing 95% of new homes built for sale in Scotland each year as well as a significant proportion of affordable housing, we are committed to improving the quality of living in Scotland by providing this and future generations with warm, sustainable homes in places people want to live.

Homes for Scotland makes policy submissions on National and Local Government policy issues affecting the industry, and its views are endorsed by the relevant local committees and advisory groups consisting of key representatives drawn from our members.

We are pleased to respond to the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee’s request for written submissions on the general principles of the Housing (Scotland) Bill. (Please note: in January 2014, Homes for Scotland submitted a short response to the Finance Committee’s call for views on the financial impact of the proposals. Overall we had no issue with the costs reported).

The Housing (Scotland) Bill aims to make a variety of legislative changes relating to the social and private sector housing sectors. Our response reflects the diverse membership base of HFS and whilst our focus is on the proposals that have the potential to impact on the future development of new homes, we have also provided comment from members on areas where the proposals will impact the housing system overall and may have a bearing on the housing markets across all tenures (namely housing allocations and the Right to Buy).

Part 1: Right to Buy (RTB)

This part of the Bill abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

It could be argued that a reduction in capital receipts through RTB sales would have an impact on a landlord’s funds to invest in building new homes, however we note from the consultation that the decline in sales in recent years has already done that. We are also aware that there is no obligation on a landlord to invest capital receipts into new supply. We note with interest the estimate that abolishing the RTB could mean that 15,500 houses could be... kept in the social sector over a ten year period. We hope that the absence of a RTB will give additional landlords the incentive to build more new homes, without the fear of losing good stock through sale in the future. Indeed we hope that the retained asset base will assist landlords in accessing additional private finance to support new build.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

Our members have questioned the need to wait for 3 years before the change and have suggested that the Right to Buy should be abolished with immediate effect.

Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Homes for Scotland represents a wide and diverse membership base including many of the most significant Registered Social Housing organisations in Scotland. Our consultation responses to the issues in this section reflect this context. Notwithstanding the direct interests of our RSL members, the supply, location, management and approach to allocation of Social Housing is a key influencer on the Housing System overall and impacts Housing Markets across all tenures.

With this in mind we are in favour of the principle of giving RSLs more flexibility with regard to allocations but would suggest that clear guidance is created (by Scottish Government or perhaps by the Scottish Housing Regulator) to accompany the provisions. Members for example, have expressed concerns with regard to age bars and how they relate to equality legislation; the need to consult with tenants on the new provisions; and how the new provisions relate to housing options.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

Our members largely welcome the proposals however some members have expressed concern with the Bill as drafted in relation to the potential costs of additional housing support. Again our members have suggested that robust guidance to accompany the provisions would be helpful. Areas to be covered include the determinants of behaviour change; flexibility on suspensions; and how converting an SST to a SSST works with or without court.
Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

Some members have suggested that whilst this part of the Bill has the potential to provide further protection for tenants, they have suggested that tenants in SSSTs already enjoy significant rights and protections under the current arrangements both for SSTs and SSSTs.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

In the period since 1999, the Private Rented sector in Scotland has more than doubled its share of the total housing stock, rising from 5% to 11%. Research carried out by the Building and Social Housing Foundation (BSHF) in 2010 indicated that if recent tenure trends continue, 20% of all households across the UK could be private renters by the year 2020.

If the private sector is to become a significant tenure of choice within the Scottish Housing system then HFS is supportive of standards being driven higher.

The nature of the private rented sector in Scotland make that challenging. According to the 2010 Private Landlords Survey, just 1% of landlords across the UK own more than ten properties. Recent evidence found that just over 4 in 5 (84%) of Private Rented dwellings were owned by ‘individuals, a couple or a family’, while 14% were ‘owned by a company, partnership or property trust’, and 2% owned by an institution. Many of these landlords, in particular those entering the sector in recent years, might be described as ‘reluctant’ or ‘accidental’ landlords who are renting out a property they have been unable to sell. There are also a significant number of ‘Buy-to-Let’ landlords in the sector, who invested in the sector during the housing boom years and were a significant driver in the expansion of the sector.

HFS, supported by Scottish Government and Construction Scotland, has recently undertaken a research project exploring ways in which new, professionally managed homes could be delivered at scale to support strategic growth in the private rented sector, adding to the total number of new homes being built in Scotland (please see full ‘Building the Rented Sector in Scotland’ report here). This would involve attracting large scale institutional investors into the residential sector. The reputation of the Scottish private rented sector will therefore be very important to this. Badly managed stock, of poor condition could blinker views on the tenure and has the potential to dis-incentivise political will for growing the number of units available for private rent. HFS is therefore supportive of sensible proposals to a) consider ways in which the legal system could be made more effective in private rented housing disputes, introducing a housing tribunal and b) implementing a stronger role for Local Authorities to enforce improvements on poor standards on private rented homes within their area.

However, HFS would caution the Scottish Government on regulatory changes that could reduce the competitiveness or dis-incentivise Scotland’s residential sector compared to other areas, particularly England. Institutional Investors will compare the yields that can be achieved in different sectors across different countries. They will also take account of potential risks to these yields. Traditionally the concern has been around the potential re-introduction of rent controls and increased security of tenure.

Recommendation 20 of the HFS Building the Rented Sector in Scotland report states that:

One of the most important messages from this research has been the need for stability in the policy, taxation and regulatory environments. Although there is enthusiasm and considerable activity, there is also fragility. We therefore recommend that the Scottish Government should ensure that all parties are fully aware of the very positive approaches taken in legislation with respect to the twenty-year rules and the introduction of Land and Buildings Transaction Tax in April 2015 (the successor to Stamp Duty Land Tax). There also needs to be a clear commitment to ensure that the tax and regulatory environment does not negatively differentiate Scotland from the rest of the UK. The value of continued commitment to maintaining a predictable transparent regulatory environment cannot be overstated.

Therefore in efforts to increase standards across the Private Rented Sector, we would like to see proportionate and targeted regulation. Our members preference would in actual fact be to see Local Authorities use existing powers to ensure enforcement at local level.
Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

HFS’s interests here are again in relation to the delivery of new, professionally managed homes to grow the private rented sector in Scotland.

We note and support the policy objectives of this section of the Bill as “to promote high standards of service and levels of professionalism across the country” and “to provide landlords and tenants with easy access to a mechanism that will help to resolve disputes where these arise”.

We see no reason why legitimate Lettings businesses would be against a registration scheme if the cost impact to them is low. However, coming from an industry where an effective voluntary Consumer Code is in place, we favour and remain supportive of schemes that offer consumer protection without going down the legislative route. We are also of the view that regulation on the lettings industry will face similar challenges to the introduction of regulation on private landlords. We imagine that the ‘Bad’ or ‘Rouge’ agents are the ones that would avoid registering or complying with any statutory practice, with the ones already offering a quality service facing additional bureaucracy and costs as a result. It is more important that effort and resources are focused on enforcing any current powers to pursue organisations that do not comply with any current rules or standards of practice.

Again, we offer caution against introducing regularity changes that could create unnecessary burdens and have a negative impact on the competitiveness of the Scottish lettings market.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

The home building industry operates its own Consumer Code and offers new build customers an approach to redress outside of the courts (please see here). HFS would be happy to share further details of this approach to the Committee.

The proposals for tenants or landlords to apply to a First Tier Tribunal after the letting agent has been given the chance to resolve the issue seems sensible and proportionate.
Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

HFS has no comment to make on the proposals on Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

HFS has no comment to make on the proposals relating to Private Housing Conditions. However we would urge the Scottish Government to ensure any proposals for this link appropriately to the current review of Home Reports, given that any outstanding enforcements/shared costs may have an impact on the future sale of private homes.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.

Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

Right to Redeem a Security After 20 Years (20 Year Lease Rule)

In response to the change to the 20 year rule proposed in the Bill, to allow existing and any future shared equity schemes to fit within the mortgage market review, we give our absolute support.
We applaud the initiative shown by the Scottish Government in proposing this change to allow Help to Buy (Scotland) to be launched for home buyers in Scotland, with the minimum amount of delay. We appreciate that the Scottish Government were unable to consult fully on this proposal but are supportive of the approach that they took in engaging with key stakeholders whilst the Help to Buy (Scotland) scheme was being developed. HFS was party to this engagement and offers the Scottish Government our continued support.

However, in submitting written evidence on this ‘miscellaneous provision’ we feel it appropriate to draw the Committee’s attention to our concern about the 20 year rule and its ability to act as a barrier (whether real or perceived) to any innovative housing funding models again in the future.

We understand that the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974 introduced 20 year limits around long residential leases and related standard securities as part of ending feudal tenure in Scotland. Whilst this rule may have served a purpose in the past, HFS find it hard to understand what it serves to do today. We are aware that a comparable rule does not apply in England, but note that the fact that there is a more established market of long residential leases in England and Wales means there is also a body of case law to govern relationships between landlords and tenants who enter into such arrangements. The fact that we do not have case law to refer to may to some extent justify an ongoing role for the 20 year lease rule, however if it is to be retained it must be fit for purpose and not inadvertently restrict the operation of the housing sector.

We understand that two recent legislative changes have occurred to increase flexibility within the rule: first in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 and then second in the Private Rented Housing (Scotland) Act 2011. The 2010 Act amended the 1974 Act so that social landlords, their connected bodies (i.e. subsidiaries) and rural housing bodies are exempt from the 20 year limit on residential leases. The 2011 Housing Act also amended the 1974 Act in order to assist other landlords, meaning there are now powers for Scottish Ministers to prescribe other bodies so that they are exempted from the rule as well. This requires the laying of a Statutory Instrument before the Scottish Parliament.

The combined effect of these changes is that leases between and amongst housing associations, local authorities and private landlords could now be possible. This means that long residential leases and innovative lease-back funding models have the potential to work in Scotland, in the same way they can work in England and other countries. However, research undertaken by the Cambridge Centre for Housing and Planning and the London School of Economics through the HFS ‘Building the Rented Sector in Scotland’ project found that some investors were unclear of the implications of the rule (and/or recent changes to the rule) and still considered it a continuing problem. Hence the reference to the 20 year lease rule in Recommendation 20 of the Building the Rented Sector report copied above.
What is absolutely clear is that the 20-year rule is perceived to be confusing to those inside and outside the housing sector. If there is even a remote possibility that the delivery of housing in Scotland is being affected by this restriction, the rule must be fundamentally reviewed. Given that the Bill is proposing yet further change to the rule, we would suggest that the Scottish Government review it fully proactively rather than propose new changes on a reactive basis each time a Housing Bill is passed.

Scottish Housing Regulator: Transfer of Assets following inquiries

HFS has no comment to make on this miscellaneous provision.

Other Issues

Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

HFS has no further comment to make.

Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

HFS has no other issues to raise.

Homes for Scotland
28 February 2014
DONALD HOUSTON (INDIVIDUAL)
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Q1 - The right to buy should not be abolished for those that have the right to buy at present.

a - Remove the right to buy from all new tenancies, otherwise this smacks of the Highland Clearances -

Q2 - Timetable should not be approved until after Indendepence for Scotland has been finalised.

Q3 - All landlords should have flexible tenancies available to those that move around the country and relocate for work.

Q4 - Re anti social behaviour - Problem Tenants should not be re housed within a 100 mile radius of the area where the anti social behaviour occurred, Remove to a new area, & Monitor Behaviour give offenders a chance for a new start, Rather than moving the problem to a local Housing association.

Q5 Rights for tenants need to be reviewed and updated - Hiding behind the "Phrase tolerable standards " is detrimental to well being and the health of the younger generations growing up in properties built in the 60's.

Q6 - This would be another tier of costs to be subsidised by Councils, Trusts, passed back to rent payers - Or costs passed back to DWP, Better enforcement is required rather than more administration.

Q7 - Discretionary ? See answer to Q6 - A slum is a slum, properties infested with rats & other vermin should be flattened, maybe then the Landlords would tend to the repairs that are required. Enforcement and Penalties are required.

Q8 - Enforcement should be actioned, rather than discretionary?

Q9 - A register of all Landlords should be in place to protect Tenants.

Q10 - All issues should be referred to the signed tenancy agreement,

Q11 - There should be more Caravan Sites, Licenced & fit for purpose available for long term residence, Workers and for health reasons etc.

Q 12 - Various .

Q 13 Better management of maintenance teams, & Housing management.

Q14 no

Q 15 - The Bill should be fit for purpose.
Q 16 - Better management of empty properties.

Donald Houston
28 February 2014
Dear Maureen Watt

I recently contacted Elaine Murray MSP regarding the new regulations that came into force in England on the 4 Feb. 2014 which laid down certain rules that could not be used on mobile park home sites, please find a copy of the park rules that cannot be used enclosed.

Elaine sent me a copy of “Part Five – Mobile Home Sites With Permanent Residents” which is contained in the Scottish Governments Housing Bill, she also advised me to contact you directly.

Unfortunately after reading the above Part Five section it appears that park home residents in Scotland will not have the same protection from unscrupulous park owners therefore is it possible at this stage to submit to the “Infrastructure and Investment Committee” a provision to include a similar set of regulations that have been adopted in England and will shortly be in force in Wales.

While Part Five of the Housing Bill goes a long way in protecting park home residents from rogue park owners I hope the Scottish Government will be able to formulate a set of park rules that will be able to protect all Scottish park home residents, if there are any Park Rules already formulated or suggested, any information you can give me will be greatly appreciated.

Yours Sincerely

[REDACTED]
IMPORTANT INFORMATION
FOR ALL PARK HOME RESIDENTS

Mobile Homes Site rules (regulations) The Mobile Homes (Site rules) (England) Regulations 2014 (SI 2014/5) was published today (13/1/14) and comes into force on 4 February written statement. The SI can also be downloaded from:

Please note that regulation 18 requires changes to be made to the 2011 written statement regulations.

9th January 2014

Proposed Changes to Park Home Rules in England

The Department for Communities & Local Government has recently issued a discussion paper on proposed regulations governing future park home rules following the passing of the Mobile Homes Act 2013. The paper outlined 14 specific matters which in future may NOT be included in park rules as follows:

1. A rule requiring a tenant to sell the home to the site owner
2. Rules requiring a resident to market the home for sale through the park owner
3. Rules preventing a resident marketing the home through an estate agent
4. Rules preventing a resident from using a solicitor or notary public in a sale transaction
5. Rules preventing the display of a 'For Sale' advertising board on the pitch
6. Rules preventing sales posters being displayed on the inside of a window
In addition the paper also discusses how long parks should be allowed to make replacement rules after the regulations come into force, whether residents should have a right to receive a copy of the consultation responses made to the park free of charge and whether discretionary rules that apply to certain classes of person should be banned immediately the regulations come into force.

It is anticipated that the regulations will be laid before the year end (2014), allowing parks a maximum of 12 months to draft any replacement rules, consult with residents and deposit rules with the Local Authority.

6th December 2013

Petition for the Abolition of Commission on the sale of park homes in Wales

In Wales, I believe that you only need 10 people to present a petition and our friends across the border have just presented their petition (which is set out below) to the Secretary of State for Commission on the private sale of park homes.

This is presented by Bob Mountford Chairman of Garvan Park Residents Association which is a qualified association and represents over 100 homes.

Garvan Park

Bodmin Woods

Parks

WE CALL UPON THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY FOR WALES TO URGE THE WELSH GOVERNMENT TO REMOVE FROM REGULATION THE SALE OF PARK HOMES AND TO REVOKE COMMISSION ON THE PRIVATE SALE OF PARK HOMES AS THEY ARE NO LONGER REQUIRED BY THE 2006 REGULATIONS.

I am informed that they were well received and their petition will be discussed at a meeting on the 16th December which can be viewed live online at 9:30am on the Welsh Government website - and I am sure that every member of our Justice Campaign will watch them well.

Our friends in Wales have also added us well to our 10% Commission Charge Petition which has certainly gathered momentum and has now been signed by many many thousands of park homes

Alan Huyton

18 February 2014
INCLUSION SCOTLAND
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

1. Introduction

1.1 Inclusion Scotland (IS) is a network of disabled peoples’ organisations and individual disabled people. Our main aim is to draw attention to the physical, social, economic, cultural and attitudinal barriers that affect disabled people’s everyday lives and to encourage a wider understanding of those issues throughout Scotland. Inclusion Scotland is part of the disabled people’s Independent Living Movement.

1.2 Inclusion Scotland are concerned that many disabled people are in housing that does not meet their needs, and this restricts their ability to enjoy the same freedom, choice, dignity and control as other citizens.

1.3 The Scottish Household Conditions Survey\(^1\) estimates that there are 836,000 households in Scotland where there is someone with a long term condition (LTC) or disability. Of these, 212,000 are defined as family households, 398,000 as pensioner households and 226,000 as “other”, presumably single people and couples without children.

1.4 The SHCS estimates that there are 493,000 homes that have been adapted for people with LTC or disability, which is 21% of the housing stock. 32% of social housing is adapted, and 17% of private sector housing (owner occupied or private rented).

1.5 However, the survey also highlights that there are 129,000 households with a person with a LTC or disability that are in need of being adapted. This is 5% of the total housing stock.

1.6 “Mind The Step : An estimation of housing need among wheelchair users in Scotland”\(^2\), published in 2012 by Horizon Housing Association and the Chartered Institute of Housing, estimated that there is a shortfall of 17,042 barrier free houses, affecting 14% of wheelchair users.

1.7 In addition, disabled people have been disproportionally affected by the bedroom tax. Disabled people may be “under-occupying” as they require additional space to store equipment, or because their partner cannot sleep in the same room, or because there was no other housing available that was adapted to meet the requirements of their impairment.

1.8 Inclusion Scotland’s response to the Housing (Scotland) Bill is made in this context.

2 Right to Buy

2.1 Given the shortage of suitable adapted property to meet the needs of disabled people, Inclusion Scotland welcomes steps that will help to preserve the stock of social housing, particularly as a higher proportion of social housing is adapted.

2.2 However, it is important to recognise that preventing the sale of social housing to existing tenants will not in itself increase the availability of suitable social housing, as long-standing tenants may chose to remain even without the right to buy. There may also be a surge in RTB sales during the three year period between enactment and abolition of RTB.

2.3 In order to increase the availability of barrier free housing that is suitable for disabled people, there needs to be increased investment in new social housing, including housing that is readily adaptable and fully wheelchair accessible.

3 Social Housing

3.1 We welcome the assurance in the policy memorandum to the Bill that the broader definition of priority for housing will be of particular benefit to disabled or older people who are more likely to need to move because they are in unsuitable housing. We would be interested to know how the Scottish Government intends to monitor the effectiveness of this.

3.2 We would also ask that disabled people and their representative organisations are included in the groups to be consulted by social landlords when considering their rules on priority of allocation under section 4 of the Bill.

3.3 It is important that when allocating housing that is considered suitable to meet the needs of disabled people, social landlords take account of how they define rooms, so that disabled people are not punished because they require an additional room as a result of their disability.

3.4 We support the proposals to give powers to social landlords to repossess adapted or specially constructed properties where there is no-one occupying it who has special needs, but it is required by someone who has special needs.

3.5 Disabled People are often the victims of anti-social behaviour as a result of harassment related to their disability. We therefore welcome further powers to social landlords to deal more effectively with anti-social behaviour.
4 Private Sector Housing

4.1 We welcome the proposal to transfer challenges to refusal by a landlord to allow adaptations for disabled tenants to the new Private Rented Sector Tribunal. This should make it easier for disabled people to challenge such refusals.

4.2 The policy memorandum does, however, recognise that some private tenants may be reluctant to take issues to the tribunal because of fear of reprisals by landlords; that there will need to be exemptions to any tribunal fees for those who cannot afford to pay; and that certain people with protected characteristics, including disabled people, may need support to participate effectively in proceedings.

4.3 We look forward to seeing more detailed proposals from the Scottish Government, and the Scottish Legal Aid Board, on how these issues will be addressed.

5 Private Housing Conditions

5.1 We note from the policy memorandum that “the enforcement powers are intended to improve house conditions and support other Scottish Government policies to enable older people to remain in their own homes and to enable adaptations to housing for disabled people.”

5.2 However, it is not clear from the Bill or the Explanatory Notes how the enforcement powers will enable adaptations to housing for disabled people. We hope this can be clarified by the Scottish Government during Stage 1.

Inclusion Scotland
28 February 2014
RICKY LAIRD (INDIVIDUAL)

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

As a landlord with rental property in Scotland I would like to make the following comments in relation to the Housing (Scotland) Bill:

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.

It is unfair to expect a landlord to become the keeper of their tenant (eg. Unsocial behaviour). If a private house owner’s behaviour is regarded as unsocial then either the local authority or Police become involved. Why should this be different just because the person living in the house rents it and doesn’t own it? It is inappropriate for the landlord to intervene as at that stage there is no proof of the unsocial behaviour!

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards and the reputation of the industry while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

There is the potential for confusion between agents who are registered through landlord registration (as established by the Antisocial Behaviour (Scotland) Act 2004) and registered letting agents as defined in the Bill. In order to reduce bureaucracy and avoid this confusion, registered letting agents should be automatically entered on the landlord register and the letting agent reference number should be used by all local authorities for the purposes of identifying letting agents on the landlord register (replacing the current system of giving agents registration numbers which differ from authority to authority).

In addition to registers for Letting Agents and Private Landlords I would welcome the creation of a Register for Tenants. This register, while not mandatory, would provide some level of confidence for Private Landlords that the tenant they are considering taking on has at least provided some verified history. Maybe this could be run by the same companies who operate the Tenancy Deposit Schemes? Landlords could pay a small fee to get any information that the potential tenant has on file. If a tenant did not want to be part of the scheme it would not preclude them from gaining a tenancy but merely increase their chances and provide some confidence for landlords. While I agree that it is important to reduce/eliminate bad landlords and conditions, it is equally important that landlords can expect some level of protection from poor tenants.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

The proposed mechanism is appropriate in providing a simple and swift method of resolving disputes.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

Ricky Laird
31 January 2014
As a landlord with rental property in Scotland I would like to make the following comments in relation to the proposed Housing (Scotland) Bill: -

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.
Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards and the reputation of the industry while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

There is the potential for confusion between agents who are registered through landlord registration (as established by the Antisocial Behaviour (Scotland) Act 2004) and registered letting agents as defined in the Bill. In order to reduce bureaucracy and avoid this confusion, registered letting agents should be automatically entered on the landlord register and the letting agent reference number should be used by all local authorities for the purposes of identifying letting agents on the landlord register (replacing the current system of giving agents registration numbers which differ from authority to authority).

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

The proposed mechanism is appropriate in providing a simple and swift method of resolving disputes.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

I welcome any measures that will force owners of tenements to contribute towards the repairs and maintenance of common areas. I have seen too many buildings were the actions of a small minority of owners have prevented buildings being repaired. This inevitably leads to much greater costs at a later time.

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can't be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

Neil Livingstone
31 January 2014
Call for views on the Housing (Scotland) Bill

The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee is seeking views on the general principles of the Housing (Scotland) Bill. A copy of the Bill and the accompanying documents can be found on the Scottish Parliaments website.

The Bill was introduced in the Scottish Parliament on 21 November 2013. The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee has been designated as the lead committee for Stage 1 consideration of the Bill.

Aims of the Bill

The Bill aims to make a variety of legislative changes relating to the social and private sector housing sectors.

Committee consideration at Stage 1

The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee expects to consider written submissions and to take oral evidence from mid-January to mid-March 2014, before reporting on the Bill’s general principles in early April 2014.

The Committee therefore invites all interested organisations and individuals to submit written evidence on the Bill and its likely impact. In particular, the Committee would like to receive responses to a number of key questions that are set out below under each of the Bill’s main headings.

Part 1: Right to Buy

This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

The abolition of the Right To Buy may seem draconian, but there is simply not enough social housing available. The problem with an across-the-board approach is that it does not put the emphasis on where the greatest need is, and so there may not be any real short-term solutions. In short the abolition of the Right To Buy must be supported by house building.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

This is simply too long. I go for 6 months, although a year may be more acceptable. But if the Scottish Government are confident about getting the Housing Bill through Parliament, then a date should be announced such as January 1st, 2015, which will give people almost a year's warning from now.
Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q3. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocation housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

It is felt that with the anti-discrimination laws, there is enough flexibility already. A responsible Council will seek to ensure that the housing stock available is allocated according to the composition of the demand. Perhaps much of the blame lies with Councils not being more "self-disciplined" in respect of it's allocation policies, for it is difficult to see how any further legislation will help in some cases.

Q4. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

Provisions are already in place, it is just that some landlords appear to "reluctant" to go down that road, opting for warnings and mediation instead. Evictions tend to be a last resort, mainly because the tenant(s) have to be rehoused, and to accommodate them in Bed & Breakfast establishments may cost more, and with Councils being forced to reduce it's homelessness by 2015, any evictions are likely to be "ineffective" in that they may be placed as a "priority". Listing anti-social tenants are making themselves "intentionally homeless" may not have the desired effect if there are pressures to accommodate everyone in mainstream housing as soon as possible. But it remains a problem as to just what are the most "effective" measures.

Q5. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

There may be a problem in that if SSTs have too many rights, then it may not be an "incentive" to change their behavioural patterns. There has to be some kind of stick with discretionary powers to act as necessary. Any move away from SSTs has to be done with care. However if this is an "initial tenancy", then the same rights as ordinary tenants is not out of order, with there being monitoring of the situation.
Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q6. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to new First-tier Tribunal?

The problem with some of the members of First-tier Tribunals is that they may not have a grasp of problems relating to tenants, and there may be a question about their impartiality. Concerns are also expressed about compelling witnesses to attend. Given that there are no "sanctions" for failing to do so, then this may reduce the impact of what the Tribunal is trying to achieve. Returning to the first point, I would like to see more tenant members on the Tribunal.

Q7. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

I cannot speak for outside Perth & Kinross, but there may be a view that the local authorities should not intervene if it is seen that it's own house is not in order. Thus double-standards may be the result. It may be better if an independent "regulator" is appointed with the consent of all the relevant parties.

Q8. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

I refer to my comments to Question 7, with the "regulator" having full powers to compel private landlords to improve their stock conditions, and to impose financial penalties for failing to comply with any action requested by the "regulator".
Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

There should be a mandatory register, with there being a statutory code of practice backed up by severe financial penalties for failing to comply. This code of practice should include any fees and who is responsible for paying them and at what point in the letting process, not offering a house to another until a refusal is in place, and outlawing statements such as "We have a lot of people interested" just to "force" an interested person into accepting the house, giving the prospective tenant time to inspect the house, and to allow them to see any surveyor’s report with there being a provision for verification by the prospective tenant.

Q10. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Again I refer to the answer to Question 7 relating to the independence of the Tribunal members, also who will pay for the Tribunal. This financial factor should extend to the right of any legal representation which the tenant(s) may wish. Another problem is this may be a 3-way dispute and so somewhat complex, and so should this be reduced to separate 2-way processes? It may be difficult to reach a resolution if one of the three parties does not agree. More work and playing “Devil’s Advocate” may be necessary.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

I am in favour of this, although the problem with the concept of a mobile home is that it is precisely that and so any stays may be short-term. Nevertheless, those living in such a home should expect certain standards from their site owner. There is also a need to clearly define just what is a mobile home and not just some kind of “holiday caravan”.

33
Q12. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

There could be cost implications for the site operators which could then be passed on to owners of mobile homes making the site "unattractive". However there should be certain standards, and here the appointment of site inspectors may be a possibility.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act of 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q13. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work particularly in tenemental properties?

This should be more rigorously enforced. However there is also a question as to whether or not local authorities should pay, for where does this money come from? As for the Housing Revenue Account, that is tenant's money, and the General Fund is paid by everyone regardless of their domicile status. If, as many tenements are, of mixed tenure, then the owners of private houses should pay their own costs, and any any costs met by a local authority should be subject, where possible to a recharge. This is a complex issue, especially where a tenement, or groups of them, may have quite a number of different private landlords contained within them.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 if the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator's powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.
Q14. Do you have any comments in relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

I regret that I am not knowledgeable about this subject.

Other Issues

Q15. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

There must be more clarity on just when the Right To Buy will cease, for various meetings I have been at have differing views by those attending. The problem is that this aspect is likely to be drawn down party lines, with it ranging from complete abolition quickly to a that of the proposed time-scale, and not forgetting those who are opposed to the abolition of the Right To Buy anyway.

Q16. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

Although this is not part of the Bill, it is felt that there should be some kind of "Rent Capping" Policy, for the above inflation increases cannot be allowed to continue.

Gerald P Low
(Individual)
As a landlord with rental property in Scotland I would like to make the following comments in relation to the Housing (Scotland) Bill: -

My reply below marked “red”.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

I say NO to this. I don’t think we require First-tier Tribunal. Nothing wrong with Sheriff Court. It is the legislation, or the law that requires changing. Eviction should be done within 7-15 days, not 30 or 40 days after serving the NTQ.

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

I say NO to this. This is supposed to be the work of the PRPH. Why create more and more offices and work force to do the same job, and waste more of the tax payers money.

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

I say NO to this. We don’t need the local authorities to do this job. PRPH should be responsible to do this job. This organisation was created in the first place for the benefit of tenants and for them to report a landlord who keeps a property in poor conditions.

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

I certainly say YES to this and it is about time, too. Un-professional letting agents and landlords do a lot of damage to the professional letting agents. There must be a law to require any individual who wish to run a letting agency, or landlord who wish to be in the lettings business to have a licence, not just register. It should be a compulsory that one MUST be qualified, with a certificate that he/she passed the Housing Scotland Act legal training courses set by ARLA, NAEA, etc. Without this qualification, one should NOT be allowed to run a letting agency, or let a property. OFT must check every letting agency office if the person running a letting agency is qualified, or not. OFT must have the powers to shut an office if found out violating this law. All letting agencies MUST at least register to any lettings organisations, i.e. SAL, CLA, LAS, ARLA, NALS, RICS, NLA, UKALA, etc. After all, no one will not hand their car keys to someone to fix it, if the person is not a qualified car mechanic? The same logic applies to renting. Why do people trust a landlord or agent who has no qualifications, no training whatsoever to rent a property and who knows nothing about the housing legislation? Or just ignore the housing legislation. PRS is highly legislated in this part of the world and one MUST be compliant before even contemplating to do this business. The main problem really is; the government is too soft that anyone can just go into this type of business without any problem.

This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards and the reputation of the industry while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

There is the potential for confusion between agents who are registered through landlord registration (as established by the Antisocial Behaviour (Scotland) Act 2004) and registered letting agents as defined in the Bill. In order to reduce bureaucracy and avoid this confusion, registered letting agents should be automatically entered on the landlord register and the letting agent reference number should be used by all local authorities for the purposes of identifying letting agents on the landlord register (replacing the current system of giving agents registration numbers which differ from authority to authority).

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Not required. We already have The Property Ombudsman to deal with agent/landlord/tenant disputes. We also have the TDS who deals with deposit dispute. The gov’t should make it a compulsory to all letting agents to join the TPO and have a proper complaint procedure. Without TPO membership, they should NOT be granted a licence to run a lettings business.
The proposed mechanism is appropriate in providing a simple and swift method of resolving disputes.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

I say YES to this to raise a higher standard of the condition of tenemental rental properties.

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

MARTIN & CO
18 February 2014
MARYHILL HOUSING ASSOCIATION
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction

Maryhill Housing Association welcomes the opportunity to respond to the Scottish Governments consultation regarding the Housing Scotland Bill 2013

Maryhill Housing Association manages over 2971 properties and acts as a property factor for 722 homeowners, throughout Maryhill and Ruchill, Glasgow.

Over the course of the last two months we have carried out consultation sessions with staff from the association ranging from the Chief Executive, Director of Housing Services, Housing Services Manager, Senior Housing Officers and the Customer Engagement Manager and Officer. We also consulted with 7 residents associations for their views on the bill; including items which they think should be removed, amended or items which could be included.

The Residents associations we consulted with were:

- Burgh Hall Village Residents Association,
- Cumlodden Residents Association,
- Eastpark Residents Association,
- Glenavon Residents Association,
- Mini Multis Residents Association,
- Parkhill Residents Association,
- Lochburn Residents Association

During the consultation session we discussed some of the key issues which would mainly be faced by the tenants of the housing association.

1. Abolition of right to buy

Staff and local residents agreed that the Right to Buy should be abolished. However, it was felt that 3 years was too long and considered an excessive period of time. One year was suggested as a fair period of time for tenants to buy their homes. Unscrupulous businesses may use such a lengthy timeframe, such as 3 years to take advantage of vulnerable tenants by purchasing their homes, using their discount and then letting them remain there as tenants paying extremely high rents or worse still, evicting them.

Within the three year period, there may be a surge in people applying to buy their home. This may result in a substantial loss of local authority and housing association stock if people were to exercise their Right to Buy. Pressurised status should remain, as if this was removed local authorities and RSL’s may lose housing stock in areas where there is already a high demand and low supply of affordable social housing. Some tenants were concerned that if the RTB was not abolished, existing waiting list applicants may have to wait several years to secure an offer of accommodation from RSLs or Local Authorities.

One residents association had mixed views with some members in particular who felt that those who had lived in their properties for ten years or more should still have a Right to Buy. Another suggestion put forward was that tenants should continue to have the Right to Buy, however remove the discount or lower the discount applied.

2. Allocations

Part two of the bill appears to introduce more powers for landlords in relation to allocations within social housing which was met with enthusiasm by staff.

Section 3 amends section 20 of the 1987 Act which states that “For the purposes of subsection (1ZA), persons have unmet housing needs where the social landlord considers the persons to have housing needs which are not capable of being met by housing options which are available.” The definition requires clarification as is vague is to what unmet housing needs would be.

Not every housing association or council offers a housing options interview. An individual may have several issues with their current housing situation and that’s why they are approaching a LA or RSL for housing. Although RSL and LA staff are fully aware of the lets and turnover available within their own stock, they may not be able to explore all the options available to someone, such as the availability of private lets in the area, other RSL stock turnover, affordability issues or prevention of homelessness. This may also include exploring someone’s financial situation to assess whether or not they can afford to reside where they are. This may take housing staff more time to process applications as a result in order to appraise an individual’s housing need. Funding may be required for local authorities/RSLs to recruit more housing options staff/prevention of homelessness/money advisers to determine those applicants who have unmet housing need.

There would be a requirement for the association to carry out a review of the existing allocations policy, which will require consultation sessions with tenants and residents. This will obviously require a vast amount of staff time and resources in order to revise the existing allocations policy.

Tenants felt that introducing an age restriction through allocations would be particularly useful for those areas populated by elderly people, families and those residents who live in sheltered accommodation. Staff felt it was important to ensure that MHA continued to comply with Part 2 of the Equality Act 2010. This may also improve tenancy sustainment as individuals may be offered properties appropriate to their needs. Careful consideration will be required as concerns were raised that this would be creating pockets of housing which certain individuals may be excluded from.
Staff felt that they should continue to have flexibility in accepting an application where the applicant or their family owns property. Homeowners should still be able to make housing applications and their applications should be assessed according to their individual needs.

Section 7 amends section 20 and inserts new section 20B in the 1987 Act to allow social landlords to impose a minimum period before the applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing, if certain circumstances apply. A minimum period requirement cannot be placed on homeless applicants to whom the local authority has a duty to provide settled accommodation. Staff felt that this requirement should also apply to section 5 referrals made from a local authority.

With this amendment of this section there may be an improvement in tenants’ behaviour as they may then act more responsibly within their tenancy if they are looking for a transfer of property.

Staff and residents were disappointed that the proposal to include probationary tenancies within the bill has been removed. Tenants felt that landlords would have more control in ending tenancies, where it has been identified by housing staff, that a tenant is not adhering to the terms of their contract eg is acting in anti-social manner or has accrued rent arrears.

Anti-social behaviour: Many residents in Maryhill have ongoing issues with anti-social neighbours and the association receives several complaints relating to the behaviour of some of the tenants. Staff members and tenants felt that it was important that landlords have more powers with relation to anti-social behaviour and welcomed the proposed change of extending the initial period of a SSST from 6 months to 12 months. Staff had concerns that the right of appeal may be used as a stalling tactic for tenants, proving timeous and costly for landlords. Tenants also welcomed the proposals for landlords to have greater flexibility in creating SSSTs or converting existing SSTs to SSSTs. A currently theme from tenants during the consultations sessions were frustrations of the Paragraph 4(b) of schedule 3 is amended to provide that a carer providing, or who has provided, care for the tenant or a member of the tenant’s family where the house was the carer’s only or principal home throughout the period of 12 months ending with the tenant’s death is a qualifying person. This is a change to the existing requirement that such a carer is a qualifying person where the house was the carer’s only or principal home at the time of the tenant’s death and the carer had given up a previous only or principal home.

3. Private tenants

Section 3 of the new bill looks to introduce a tribunal for tenants within the private sector. This was a welcomed proposal during consultations and was felt that this was a positive change for private tenants and a huge benefit for those tenants who cannot afford to appoint a solicitor. A tribunal panel may have the added benefit of having in depth specialist housing knowledge, which may then deliver consistent outcomes for both landlords and tenants.

It was felt that the introduction of local authorities having the option to make a complaint to the private rented housing panel on behalf of a tenant was also helpful and may give tenants more support when there is a significant issue with disrepair. Although, some concerns were raised, that local authorities may use this as a gatekeeping tool when private tenants present as homeless and require temporary accommodation. Many private tenants are living in substandard accommodation whereby the property doesn’t meet the repairing standard and it is uninhabitable. Some tenants can be left without heating or hot water for weeks at a time and need somewhere to stay. Making an application to the PRHP can be a lengthy process, taking weeks if not months; whilst this is ongoing tenants would have to remain in uninhabitable properties. Rather than taking homeless applications and providing temporary accommodation, the local authority may take the approach of making an application to the PRHP instead. Meanwhile the tenant would then be forced to reside in accommodation which is uninhabitable and doesn’t meet the repairing standard until their PRHP application is considered.

Another solution may be for local authorities to enforce the existing rights they already have under Sections 89 and 94 of the Anti-Social Behaviour Act 2004 and deregister a landlord where the property does not meet the repairing standing; the landlord would not meet the criteria of a “fit and proper person”. Local authorities can issue a rent penalty notice, ensuring that the landlord cannot collect rent. A landlord in this situation may be more inclined to carry out repairs if they are unable to collect rent and it is a local authority is enforcing this.

It is appreciated that the aim of this provision is to stop landlords from evicting tenants rather than carry out a repair. However, even if a 3rd party make an application to the PRHP, a landlord in this position can still end a tenancy in some circumstances by issuing a section 33 notice if the tenant is a short assured tenant. Another possible solution is to make a notice to quit invalid if a tenant has reported disrepair to their landlord, the local authority and the PRHP. This procedure is currently used in England when a landlord has not registered a deposit with a protection scheme.

Through consultations the group felt that carers should be eligible to succeed the tenancy without a given timescale and RSLs and LA’s should be given a degree of autonomy and decide on a case by case basis. With regards to the 12 month basis

4. SHR – Transfer of assets

The provisions amend section 67(4) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 (—the 2010 ActII) to give the SHR the power to direct a transfer of all or part of a RSL’s assets without a duty to consult where the RSL’s viability is in jeopardy for financial reasons, there is a risk of imminent insolvency, the proposed transfer of assets would remove the risk of insolvency and the need to direct the transfer is so urgent that it would not be possible to comply with the consultation duty.

Every resident group and staff member felt that this should not be introduced as tenants should always have the right to be consulted before assets are transferred to another landlord. It was felt that there would always be time to have consultation and information about the proposals for any new landlord, should be put to tenants beforehand. Tenants were deeply concerned that this might not happen if the new regulations provide for this. Residents felt uncomfortable at the thought that they could potentially have a new landlord with absolutely no say in the matter.

Maryhill Housing Association
28 February 2014
The MECOPP Gypsy/Traveller Carer’s Project is disappointed to find there is no specific mention of the accommodation needs of Gypsy/Travellers in the Bill.

1. Where Gypsy/Travellers Live

In 2013 the Scottish Parliament Equal Opportunities Committee published the findings of their ‘Where Gypsy/Travellers Live’ inquiry (http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/parliamentarybusiness/CurrentCommittees/49027.aspx)

This report clearly highlights the urgent need to address the accommodation needs of Gypsy/Travellers across Scotland. During the inquiry Committee members heard evidence about the absence of tenancy rights and the high rents being charged on sites run by local authorities and Registered Social Landlords (RSL), they also saw for themselves the appalling living conditions experienced by many families on these sites.

Unfortunately, there was little in the Scottish Government’s response to this report to inspire hope that these conditions and needs will be addressed in a robust and timely manner. The response is especially weak on actions and timescales and we remain unclear as to exactly how and when the widespread, and well-documented, inequalities faced by Gypsy/Traveller families will be tackled and addressed.

2. The need for a legal framework

Like any other community, Gypsy/Travellers have a variety of accommodation needs which require a range of responses, rather than the wholly inadequate approach that has been taken to date. Despite the popular misconception, Gypsy/Travellers are not asking for ‘special treatment’ rather accommodation which meets their cultural needs and parity with other local authority/RSL tenants.

Over the last forty years local authorities have been reluctant providers of sites and it is clear from community members themselves, agencies working directly with Gypsy/Travellers and the findings of the ‘Where Gypsy/Travellers Live’ inquiry that current provision does not meet either existing or future needs. Council/RSL site provision across Scotland is remarkably uniform in terms of both design and management, the need for serious consideration, and resourcing, of alternative ways of meeting the varying accommodation needs of Gypsy/Travellers is long overdue.

Arguably, the lack of a statutory framework for Gypsy/Traveller accommodation in Scotland has denied occupiers of public provision access to a reasonable mechanism for complaint/redress outwith internal complaints processes, where they exist. Gypsy/Travellers are effectively debarred from questioning or disputing decisions of local government in the field of accommodation services except by Judicial Review. We view the absence of a clear statutory framework as a serious omission that has severely disadvantaged families from finding a suitable place to stop or stay. This approach is open to abuse and contrary to the ethos underpinning equalities legislation and the proposed Housing Bill.

Currently, tenancy agreements on local authority/RSL sites vary from area to area. Some tenants feel the agreements are heavily weighted towards the council and others argue, when there is a potential breach, the tenancy agreement is in reality unenforceable. As noted above, where there are disagreements or disputes, many Gypsy/Travellers face great difficulties in accessing legal advice in order to challenge the disputed issues. Wherever possible, tenants on local authority and RSL sites should have the same rights as other social housing tenants. The Housing (Scotland) Bill presents an opportunity to address this inequality.

3. Conclusion

As for other sectors of society, MECOPP would like to see the development of a diverse and comprehensive accommodation strategy but, in the case of Gypsy/Travellers, this must also be linked to a wider anti-racist strategy to counter discriminatory decision-making and stereotypical attitudes.

The Housing (Scotland) Bill covers a wide range of issues with the overall objectives of, “…safeguarding the interests of consumers, supporting improved quality and delivering better outcomes for communities.” We urge members of the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee to take this opportunity to ensure that better outcomes can also be delivered for Scotland’s Gypsy/Travellers.

MECOPP
27 February 2014
JOHN METHVEN (INDIVIDUAL)

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

As a landlord with rental property in Scotland I would like to make the following comments in relation to the Housing (Scotland) Bill:

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?
I approve of this proposal as it would speed up and simplify the process. In addition it would be most useful in speeding up the eviction process where tenant’s play the system knowing that the process is long and protracted and at the landlord’s expense.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?
Provided that these discretionary powers are not abused by the local authority and skewed unfairly in favour of the tenant then in principle this is a good idea. Where a tenant is paying a low rent for basic accommodation, then this power should not be used by the tenant to get the property upgraded beyond that for which they are paying. The powers should only be used to tackle sub standard accommodation and who decides what substandard is??Upgraded property should be reflected by a rent review.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?
No comment

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?
I agree that there should be a register of letting agents. There are still poor letting agents who fail to provide a service both for the tenant and the landlord. This would help protect both parties and improve standards.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?
No comment
Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

For some time individuals and landlords have deliberately avoided paying their share of repairs leaving the other good owners to pay more than their share of repairs. Legislation is required to enforce payment of common repairs at the time an invoice is raised and assets seized where there is failure to comply.

John Methven
31 January 2014
MAXWELLTON COURT TENANTS ASSOCIATION
(Renfrewshire Council)
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction

Maxwellton Court Tenants Association is one of the Registered Tenants and Residents Associations (TARA’s) and is in the local authority area of Renfrewshire.

We are a committee of 8, elected annually, and generally represent the views of our tenant’s at Council Events, Consultations (Local & Nationally)

We welcome being involved in the extensive consultations held on many of the proposals included in the Bill and we particularly welcome the proposals to abolish the Right to Buy and the provisions on social sector allocations and tenancies

However, we are disappointed that the proposal to create a Housing Tribunal for the social rented sector and the introduction of Probationary Tenancies are not included in the Bill.

Our comments are as follows on the provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Bill are:

Part 1 – Right to Buy

- The Right to Buy (RTB) should now be abolished in order to safeguard and protect the limited social housing resource that we currently have in Scotland.

- The timetable for abolishing the RTB should be 2 years. We consider that Tenants who currently have the RTB, had this right for a significant number of years and have not exercised it, so are now unlikely to do so.

Part 2 – Social Housing

a) Allocations

We agree with this measure as it removes an unhelpful barrier to landlords wanting to allocate to particular groups in specific situations and believe the Bill makes it explicit that removing this age bar does not mean that landlords can discriminate against particular age groups or that it contravenes the Equality Act 2010.

However we consider that landlords should be enabled to allocate housing in a “common sense approach” in order to sustain tenancies, protect the interests of existing tenants in terms of their right to live in a safe and secure environment and allocate tenancies in a sensitive manner with regard to the demographic of other people living in neighbouring properties, with particular regard to areas or property types that are more suitable for or already have older people living in them.

Landlords should be able to take an applicant’s previous Antisocial Behaviour (ASB) into account when considering whether or not to offer them a house; should also include homeless applicants.

Landlords must consult tenants and tenants’ organisations on any proposals to change allocations policies and procedures. (Quite a lot of Social Landlords do not do this at this time)

b) Probationary Tenancies (Initial tenancies)

The outcome of the Governments consultation concluded that the majority of the sector, including tenant responses, were in favour of introducing Probationary tenancies (or Initial Tenancies) and we are all disappointed that it was dropped for this Housing Bill.

We strongly support the introduction of initial tenancies and support the introduction of probationary tenancies for all social housing tenants and believe that the benefits of introducing this outweigh any negativity especially when it has the real potential to help deal with tenancy problems, such as anti-social behaviour, much sooner.

c) Short Scottish Secure Tenancies (SSSTs)

We consider that:

- Short Scottish Secure Tenancies should remain as 6 months
- Under no circumstances should people be allocated a social rented house and have or keep their own home elsewhere.
• Landlords should be able to allocate Short Scottish Secure Tenancies (for a 6 month period) to allow them to work with people who have previous history of ASB.

d) Antisocial Behaviour - SSSTs

We consider that:

• Landlords should be able to give all new tenants Short Scottish Secure Tenancies where there has been previous ASB.

• Landlords must be able to convert full Scottish Secure Tenancies to Short tenancies when they are dealing with tenants ASB to allow them to work with the tenants to try to improve the behaviour or stop the tenancy where the ASB continues.

• Landlords should continue to provide tenancy support whilst tenants have a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy, powers need to be given to Landlords which makes sure that ASB can be addressed or the tenancy will be terminated.

Part 3 – Private Rented Housing

In terms of the private rented sector, we do not have any private tenants in our block of flats, and feel we have no right to make comments in relation to this section.

a) The Tribunal

We agree that the introduction of the private sector housing tribunal is positive HOWEVER it should be noted that we are disappointed that this has not been included in the Bill for the social rented sector as per our response to the Dispute Resolution Consultation in 2013. In addition it should be noted that:

• Further information and clarification is required on the operation and enforcement powers of the Tribunal and that the Tribunal needs to have clout and teeth or it will not be worth the bother

• The Tribunal needs to be able to streamline the disputes process and make it easier and quicker than the current operation via the Sheriff Court system.
b) Private Rented Housing Panel

We agree that:

- Local Authorities must have increased powers to enforce the repairing standard.

- Evidence in relation to private landlords not meeting the standard must not just come from tenants and that neighbours, police, fire and rescue services, and the local authority itself should be able to provide this evidence.

- Where appeals are made by the private landlord; the funding required from the Local Authority to defend their position / action must not come from Housing Revenue Accounts (HRA's)

- The Private Rented Housing Panel must make the process simpler and more streamlined, the Panel must have “teeth” and be a less onerous process than using the Sheriff Court system.

- Local Authorities must have enforcement powers to ensure repairs and maintenance work is carried out.

- All PrivateLets should meet the repairing standard and Local authorities must have increased powers to enforce this.

Part 4 – Letting Agents

We consider that:

- Letting Agents must be subject to a robust and effective registration scheme

- Local Authorities must have additional enforcement powers in areas where there are issues with management of all stock owned by this landlord

- Local Authorities must have increased powers to deal with private landlords where there are issues in relation to:
  - The behaviour of the tenant living in their property
  - The lack of repairs and maintenance of the property and any common areas, especially where there are social housing tenants and / or properties
Letting Agents must be required to meet and sign up to a Code of Conduct

Guidelines must be developed

Letting Agent Registration and Code of Conduct “needs to have teeth”

Disputes between agent and landlord should be addressed by Trading Standards

The Bill and the Scottish Government must look at “beeﬁng up” existing systems to ensure Local Authorities and other’s involved implement the full powers already available rather than adding new things

Part 6 – Private Housing Condition

We agree that Local Authorities must have powers to enforce private landlords to carry out repairs and improvement to their properties. In addition properties where social landlords own some of the properties, social landlords must have additional powers to enforce repairs and easier mechanisms to make private landlords pay their share of improvement works required.

Where resources are to be utilised in this area, monies should come from the General Fund not the HRA.

Consideration must be given to developing a private rented housing standard, similar to the Scottish Housing Quality Standard.

Maxwellton Court Tenants Association (Renfrewshire Council)

27 February 2014
I recently had the misfortune of being 1 day late on 01/10/13. My license expired on 30/09. Being a bank holiday that day I went back to the office on 01/10 to be informed that I would have to pay an extra fee of near £1000.

Despite letters to my councillors, MSP, leader of Glasgow City council and the Housing minster they have all come back to me with the same guff, basically saying tough you had 6 months to apply.

To levy such an excess charge is absolutely hideous, I feel as a honest person of society, paying my taxes on time and in this current economic climate asking anyone to pay this amount is totally unfair and I have been badly let down by my council and system and I feel that this should be reviewed for inclusion for debate and change made to the legislation and each case reviewed on a case to case basis depending on the circumstances.

Donald Macdonald
6 January 2014
McLEAN FORTH PROPERTIES LIMITED

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

We are letting agents and property managers and wish to make the following observations on the Housing (Scotland) Bill:

In response to questions submitted earlier we wish to respond accordingly,

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.
Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards. It is essential that the reputation of the industry is improved while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

We believe there should be a new stand-alone Letting Agent Register operated by the Scottish Government.

The Register should include all businesses which let and manage private rented residential property in Scotland. However, we would not support simply replicating the processes and principles established for the Property Factors Register. Whilst it has improved that sector, this system is not robust enough in our opinion for the letting and management sector, and considerable consideration needs to be given to the detail of implementation for our sector.

A strong Code of Practice is needed. Along with the other representative organisations, we welcome the planned consultation in preparing the Code as secondary legislation.

Registration should include:

- an annual renewal (not every 3 years)
- a legally binding commitment each year to possessing:
  - adequate professional indemnity insurance
  - appropriate client money protection
  - a ring-fenced client money bank account
  - an annual audit of client accounts
  - membership of an ombudsman scheme to ensure an easily available redress mechanism for tenants and landlords.

Depending on the registration processes put in place there could be a requirement for the agent to produce annual documentation to confirm the above. It may be more appropriate to consider the registration process to be more the issuing of a licence approving the Letting Agent.

We believe that any Registration process should be Government operated free of any involvement with professional bodies such as the RICS or ARLA and others. Agents should aspire to differentiate themselves in the market place by achieving the standards required to gain membership. Within the code of practice there may be the requirement over a period of time to require owners of an staff employed in an agency to be say 50% qualified to a certain level of professional knowledge and competency.

The impact of these proposals on our industry is to be welcomed. It will however highlight even further the disparity in enforcement that currently exists on compliant letting agents and landlords and those who operate below the required standards. The passing of legislation and implementation of registration of Letting Agents will create an environment where landlords who are self-managing will perceive the enforcement of regulation on them to be far less onerous. We recommend that at the same time as these regulations are implemented that the Landlord Registration regulations are enforced more robustly.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

See the above comment about ombudsman services in response to Question 10; under these schemes redress is readily available to customers of such organisations at no cost to the claimant.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

McLean Forth Properties Limited
21.02.14
MERRYLEE RESIDENTS AND TENANTS ORGANISATION

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Our residents’ group represents tenants and residents living in the Merrylee area of Glasgow. Our landlord is Govanhill Housing Association and our tenemental owners are factored by either the Housing Association or Your Place. We wish to make the following brief comments as our response to the Housing Bill consultation.

Right to Buy

Generally we are in agreement with the proposed three year timetable for abolishing the Right to Buy. We understand the desire to avoid a sudden spike in sales. We also appreciate that it can take tenants some time to plan their finances to make it possible for them to buy their property, so three years seems fair.

Allocations

While we welcome the proposed increase in flexibility for landlords when allocating housing, we believe that properties need to be allocated to households of the appropriate size, especially if people are in receipt of benefits. We accept that housing one young person up a close of senior citizens might not be a recipe for success, but creating balanced communities with a range of ages and family types should be our aim.

Assignation / succession

Our concern with the change to 12 months notification regarding succession rights mainly relates to the situation of carers. If an individual has given up a tenancy or home to care for an elderly parent, it hardly seems fair that if the parent dies suddenly within those 12 months, the carer could become homeless. Is there any protection that could be offered to people in such a position?

Anti-social behaviour

We believe that dealing with anti-social behaviour through the introduction of SSSTs does introduce another tool for RSLs to use to try to influence peoples’ behaviour. The current cost of an ASBO is prohibitive, and it may still seem like a badge of honour for some folk. Do there still remain issues for how landlords can respond when the anti-social behaviour is exhibited by children within a household?
We would be very much in favour of the regulation of private letting agents. Our neighbourhood is seeing more and more private sector lets, in properties bought under RTB, and, especially in tenements, the transient nature of these lets can cause local problems. In our experience however, regulation is only useful if there is effective enforcement.

We would welcome increased powers for the council to improve housing conditions and enforce maintenance in the private sector in our area as this will by default help protect social rented sector tenants in tenements as well. The only issue remaining may still be affordability for some owners.

Merrylee Residents and Tenants Organisation
24.02.14
I saw the article in the Times regarding this bill. Firstly, if as you say in your article that you would like to hear from the public regarding this bill, it would help if you included a contact address or email. Regarding the bill over the past few months, I have been contacted by my local Council regarding Factoring. The Council are of the opinion that the bill affects property owners and is a way for the Council to raise funds. After reading the bill, I pointed out to the Council that the definition of a "Home Owner" was anyone that owned a property that is used for housing, i.e., this is the Council so if they were to impose a fee on property owner they would have to pay the fee themselves. Likewise, "Housing Bill Scotland" should make it perfectly clear that any legislation applies equally to property owners whether they are Council or private and cannot be used as a money-making exercise by any Council. To give you an example, in Paisley, they have introduced a policy of cyclical maintenance and are applying this to all Council owned housing. The affect of this is that where private owners are in the same building they are hit by charges for maintenance that is not necessary but because it is on the list it has to be done. Who gains while the property is maintained? The winners are the Council Direct Labour Force who are guaranteed years of work.

I hope you take my comments into consideration.

Robert Mould
13 January 2014
NORTH AYRSHIRE COUNCIL
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Part 1: Right to Buy
This part of the Bill abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

North Ayrshire Council (NAC) supports the abolition of the right to buy. This proposal is in line with our Local Housing Strategy and increasing the supply of affordable social housing. NAC is committed to this through our council house building programme with which we aim to build 500 new homes over 10 years. From 2011 to 2013 we have completed a programme which produced 83 new homes; however, we lost 112 houses through the RTB Scheme in the same timescale. Three current projects will deliver 134 new homes with further projects identified for completion before 2015. This substantial investment in our housing programme goes some way to alleviate the pressure on the authority due to the lack of affordable housing in the area.

Our authority has also invested in the Mortgage to Rent Scheme which has seen demand for this increase over the last few years and resulted in further increases in capital budget to try and accommodate this demand. In 2011/12 we purchased 16 houses through the scheme, however, we found that demand was very high and as a result, we increased the capital budget for 2012/13. We also purchased 12 ex local authority properties from the open market in 2012/13 and we currently have funding to ‘buy back’ a further five properties.

Since the Scheme started in 1980, 46% of the housing stock has been lost to the Council and as evidenced above, we are trying to add to our current stock of housing however, schemes such as Right to Buy negate this good work. Demand for social housing is high and the Council would wish to protect these homes for future generations and as such we have made significant investment in several areas.

In addition to the above we have estate management issues with mixed tenure blocks. A great deal of investment is planned to ensure we meet the targets set for minimum housing standards, however, mixed tenure properties can be very problematic for our standard delivery plan. Ending Right to Buy would help to reduce such instances.
Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

With publicity surrounding the changes preceding royal assent, a short notice period of between 6 months and one year would have been sufficient as tenants have already had a long period to exercise their right but for whatever reason, they have chosen not to do so. The modernised entitlement is less attractive due to the smaller discount offered and with the lack of mortgages available, the likelihood of there being a surge from this group, is fairly low. There is little chance of an upsurge in the economy over the next year; therefore the affordability of Right to Buy will probably not change much during this time.

A three year lead-in period is too long.

Part 2: Social Housing
This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Part 2 of the Bill does marginally increase the flexibility that landlords already have when allocating housing and has the potential to allow them to make best use of their stock.

See comment on each section below:

Section 3 – It is noted that under-occupying is now included in the legal preference groups. This flexibility already exists and the North Ayrshire Housing Allocation Policy gives points to applicants that NAC and our partner RSL’s consider to be under-occupying.

We also note that a duty to give reasonable preference to overcrowding applicants has been removed. The criterion used to calculate over-crowding and under-occupation is clearly linked and in North Ayrshire is calculated on an agreed occupancy standard.

In North Ayrshire there are almost twice as many applicants registered with overcrowding points than there are with under-occupation points.

The flexibility to include overcrowding will exist but some landlords may choose not to as there is no legal requirement that they should. Should landlords choose not to include overcrowding within their allocation polices this has the potential to have a negative impact on younger people and those with children who wish to live independently from their parents.

The benefits of this section appear limited and the likelihood of significant impact on flexibility is unclear.

Sections 5 – Taking applicants’ age into account when allocating is a welcome amendment of some significance and will allow landlords to make better use of stock in certain circumstances. Guidance would be welcome to ensure landlords do not breach Equality legislation on grounds of age discrimination.

Section 6 - Taking property ownership into account is likely to be complex to administer but we do acknowledge that the public perception is that current rules are unfair when owners access social housing.

However, it is likely to have the potential unintended consequence of excluding owners who have an accessible housing need due to illness or disability but whose current accommodation does “not endanger their health”.

In North Ayrshire the proportion of owners housed each year is negligible and where this does occur they tend to be older people who have previously exercised their right to buy. The majority of owners who have registered for housing in North Ayrshire are aged over 60. If this flexibility is used it could result in a disproportionate negative impact on older people. Flexibility cannot be used on a case by case basis but needs to be incorporated into a robust policy statement.

This flexibility is likely to create complexities in implementation that need to be carefully considered.

Section 7 – Allows landlords to impose a minimum period before an applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing. This amendment is welcome and legislates for the practice of suspending an applicant from receiving offers in specified circumstances. This will have little impact in North Ayrshire as we already operate a suspension policy.

Section 13 & 14 - Introduces a qualifying period before persons qualify for joint tenancy, assignation, sublet and other changes around succession. These changes are welcome and will minimise the potential for abuse. Flexibility exists to allow approval of applications where refusal appears harsh.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

We agree that, under the current legislation, very few cases meet the criteria for granting SSSTs for antisocial behaviour. Our normal approach (in line with the national antisocial behaviour framework ‘Promoting Positive Outcomes’) is to only use enforcement action, such as ASBOs and evictions, after other interventions – including other partners’ powers to act – have been unsuccessful. However, where we have been able to use SSSTs, our experience is that they have been an effective incentive for some (but not all) tenants to engage with the support offered and address their antisocial behaviour.

With regard to the proposal to allow social landlords to grant new tenants a SSST on antisocial behaviour grounds when they consider it reasonable, it is worth noting that the power already exists to establish any new tenancy as a SSST on support grounds. We have used this option, with the offer of intensive support, in a small number of cases where there have been reasonable concerns about the sustainability of the tenancy, based on the applicant’s history of antisocial behaviour, but where no court order has been obtained for either recovery of possession or an ASBO.

The ability to impose a SSST on an existing tenant at an earlier stage could assist with cases where the antisocial behaviour persists despite warnings, and the legal process is likely to be drawn out e.g. where the case is being defended and an application has been made for legal aid.

We broadly support the proposal to bring forward the use of SSSTs to address antisocial behaviour to an earlier stage than is currently prescribed. The legislation does, however, need to be clear on the definition of ‘antisocial manner’ and ‘in or near their home’.

There have been discussions in the Antisocial Behaviour Officers Forum (ASBOF) regarding this being the procurement of an Interim Antisocial Behaviour Order. Using the Interim ASBO in this case may have an impact on the number granted by Sheriffs, given they will consider the impact it will have on a person’s tenancy. This could potentially damage a useful and quick method of protecting tenants if the Interim ASBO becomes more difficult to obtain. Consideration also needs to be given to implications of the term ‘antisocial behaviour’ being defined as lesser than the offender having a related conviction. Unless allegations against a person have been tested in court, there may be human rights challenges in reducing a person’s tenancy without adequate evidence of their behaviour.

We have some concerns about the suggestion that housing law on antisocial behaviour might be extended beyond behaviour which occurs in and around a tenant’s property. Our concerns are primarily about reasonableness and the impact that this might have on household members – including the tenant – who are unconnected to or have no control over the behaviour in the wider community. Courts tend to have a narrow view of a locus where a crime is committed. A definition is required to clarify whether ‘in or near their home’ is the street in which they live, neighbourhood, town, or wider. How this is described will influence whether this will allow more use of the SSST.

Representatives of North Ayrshire Tenants & Residents Network generally supported the proposal to allow more SSSTs for antisocial behaviour, but they had mixed views on the suggestion that housing law might focus more widely than solely in and around the tenancy – some supported this while others felt it would be unreasonable.

We support the opportunity to extend SSSTs for a further 6 months after the initial 12 months. This will be useful in allowing additional time to monitor the situation, as in some cases reports of antisocial behaviour can recur after the 12 month period.

In terms of a more streamlined eviction process, it would be helpful in some Ground 2 cases where there has been a conviction for dealing drugs, particularly where it is the tenant who has been convicted, to allow decree for eviction without having to demonstrate that it is reasonable to do so. This would help to speed up the process and lessen the impact on neighbours who have been affected by the drug-dealing activity over a long time.

ASBOF also suggest that this could be useful where someone is convicted of breach of an ASBO that is tenancy related – this could provide a quicker resolution than converting the tenancy to a SSST and then ending the SSST after a further 6 months.

Representatives of North Ayrshire Tenants & Residents Network unanimously supported this proposal as a means of speeding up the lengthy court processes.

It is, however, important to clarify what is considered to be both 'illegal activity' and 'in or around the property', to avoid unreasonable expectations from members of the public that landlords will act on criminal activity out with that linked to the tenancy.

Expectations could be raised about the type of criminal or antisocial behaviour which would trigger an ‘automatic’ eviction. Clarity would be required on issues such as behaviour committed ‘in the locality of the house’ e.g. would this include a tenant’s son convicted of assault in the street where she lives? It would also be relevant to consider whether neighbours were aware of and affected or harmed by the criminal activity.

The courts are likely to be wary of the proposal to enable conflated decisions, where a decision in a criminal case could lead directly to a tenant losing their home. Sheriffs may view this as punishing a person twice for the same crime without being able to consider the reasonableness of the civil action to evict. For example, they would not have the opportunity to consider issues such as the tenant’s knowledge of drug-related offences committed at their house by another household member or visitor. Our experience is that Sheriffs are not inclined to grant decree in such circumstances unless they are satisfied that the tenant would have known that dealing was taking place.

Decisions on intentional homelessness may be affected if there is no opportunity to consider whether it is reasonable to evict the tenant.

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

In terms of the extension of the SSST from 6 to 12 months, this will provide more protection for the tenant. It will allow more time for any supports in place to work on offending behaviour, with a view to sustaining the tenancy. Conversely, extending the period of the SSST may impact on the victims of antisocial behaviour, by effectively elongating the period that person has to endure their neighbour acting in an antisocial manner, in cases where supports provided are not successful in addressing the offenders' behaviour. Although there is the possibility of proceeding with eviction for a tenant in a SSST, this is a lengthy legal process and may not be quicker than ending the SSST.

5
We support the introduction of compulsion for social landlords to give reasons why they are recovering possession of a SSST, and NAC currently as a matter of course, provide this information to the court. The legislation does however need to be clear on the level of proof required to end the tenancy. Clarification is required on whether further reported incidents (as a reason for terminating the SSST) need to be corroborated, and if there is a minimum number of incidents that would define further offending behaviour. Without this clarification, there is a risk that ‘the neighbour continues to report antisocial behaviour’ could be brought into question as a reason to end a tenancy, and corroborated evidence requested.

Allowing SSST tenants to request a review prior to landlords seeking recovery of possession in cases where the tenancy will not be converted to an SST does provide further protection for tenants, but clarification should be given to the review process. Would there be an expectation that this review would be carried out by someone other than who made the decision not to convert the SSST? This could affect the current decision making process. Again, it is essential that clear definitions of antisocial behaviour and locus of offences are provided in the legislation, to provide transparency in the decision making process.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

North Ayrshire Council welcomes the new private rented sector tribunal which will help resolve landlord/tenant disputes and which we see as an improvement to the current system. This new tribunal will free up sheriffs time to deal with other cases and help to bring consistency to housing enforcement matters. Not all Sheriffs are equipped with specialist housing knowledge whereas members of future tribunals will be chosen for their specific knowledge and experience in the private housing sector.

An additional benefit might be that it may free up more time in the Sheriff Court allowing local authority housing matters to be dealt with more quickly. This assumes that there will be the same resources remaining at the Sheriff Court to deal with the cases. As it is a new system it is hard to judge the effect that it will have. If a different approach is adopted to the Sheriff Court (either more lenient or stricter) this may have a corresponding effect on the local authority’s homelessness duties.
Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The changes are minor and do not go far enough in terms of allowing local authorities to combat the problems of disrepair in the private sector. The powers are also discretionary and as such their use will be directly related to resources available and priorities within individual local authorities.

We would like to see additional or amended powers in terms of Local Authorities reclaiming costs associated with paying missing shares or undertaking works (e.g. resulting from a works notice), as the current methods leave too much risk of money being unrecovered. Although there are existing powers to reclaim money, they have long repayment periods i.e. 30yrs. A system where the owners and Council can agree terms for repayment, such as over a 5 year or 10 year repayment plan, tied to the property title would give local authorities more confidence to pay missing shares and undertake work through a work notice.

Additional or increased enforcement, such as mandatory revocation of a landlord’s licence for properties below the tolerable standard (where the landlord has not brought them up to standard within a reasonable time) would also be welcome to give local authorities powers to combat disrepair in the private rented sector.

The discretionary powers to allow local authorities to make a Private Rented Housing Panel (PRHP) referral on behalf of a private tenant are welcomed and we expect this would be beneficial in cases where tenants are frightened or unwilling to make the application themselves for fear of reprisals from the landlord. If the referrals came directly from a local authority the tenant would then have no involvement in the process and this could mitigate the risk of a tenant being harassed by an aggressive landlord.

Currently if a private tenant makes an application to the PRHP and leaves the tenancy before the matter is settled this effectively withdraws the application. In future, if the application is made by a third party, e.g. Local Authority, then this would allow the case to progress to conclusion.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

NAC welcome any additional powers that would enable local authorities to tackle disrepair in areas of poor quality housing in the private rented and owner occupied sector. However, resource issues will have a bearing on whether or not local authorities are able to prioritise them.
Many local authorities do not utilise current powers available to them within the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006. The 2006 act introduced the Housing Renewal Area designation (HRA) that could be used where local authorities identify a high proportion of properties deemed to be in disrepair. The local authority can then serve work and demolition notices that would allow them to implement the work required. These powers are not widely used and we look forward to the introduction of new powers that will make this process easier for councils.

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

Creating a register of letting agents and a fit and proper test to be a letting agent should help to protect tenants. A statutory code of practice should help to maintain a consistent level of service for tenants and landlords that use the services of a letting agency. Only allowing tenants or landlords to apply to the First-tier Tribunal may limit the effectiveness of this code. Many tenants may be unwilling or feel unable to take a case to the tribunal for fear of being evicted or other repercussion from the letting agent.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Tenants may well have to be supported through the tribunal application process. Many more vulnerable tenants may not be able to negotiate the tribunal process themselves.

Should the letting agent fail to comply with a notice from a tribunal then it would need to be taken back to the tribunal. Should the tribunal agree, they may notify the Scottish Ministers of the failure (presumably questioning the fit and proper test). There is no redress for landlords or tenants for failure to comply. The Letting agent may be deemed to be unfit but this would not assist the landlord or tenant at that point.

The requirement to go back to the tribunal to establish a breach, and have them determine it is a breach before the matter becomes a criminal offence seems a long and drawn out process. Also, if a decision by the Tribunal that a failure to comply with the code of practice does not create a presumption that the letting agent has failed to comply then the same facts will have to be established twice before different courts. This seems a duplication and unnecessarily lengthy.

Perhaps a decision regarding a failure to comply should establish a presumption with the onus then falling on the letting agent to prove that it was not a failure/offence. This does not seem unreasonable given that a judicial body will have already established a failure to comply.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

Generally

1. Consideration should be given to the question, whether or not the proposed scheme for licensing caravan sites is within the legislative competence of the Scottish Parliament. It authorises Councils to remove rights which licence-holders might have held for years, and it might be argued that this offends the European Convention on Human Rights 1950.

ECHR, Protocol 1, Article 1 (Protection of property):

"Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law.

The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way impair the right of a State to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties."

The Bill proposes a major change to the existing legislation:

a) At present, Site Licences are perpetual and free of charge (they do not require to be renewed, and there is no Annual Fee such as is found in more modern licensing legislation). With one exception from 2007, all the NAC Sites which are currently licensed obtained their licences many years ago (from the District Council or the County Council), when the sole issue was whether or not the owner had Planning Permission. There was no vetting of licence-holders, and no means of a Council intervening if, for example, it was alleged that the licence-holder was treating residents badly;

b) The Bill proposes to replace these with new Licences, charging fees, and to introduce a 3-year renewable licence, with a “fit and proper person” test.
Supposing that a person has operated a Caravan Site for years but is now refused the grant or renewal of the Licence (he will apply for his first new-style Licence before the 2-year Transitional Period provided for in Cl. 71 expires). Does the Site have to close? Are the residents to be evicted? Will the Council face an appeal argument that it has breached the owner's Human Rights?

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

1. Site operators have to pay a fee every three years, and have to incur the costs associated with repeated applications (e.g. staff time, fees of solicitors and architects), whereas previously the licence was free and perpetual. If there are Hearings (below) then the legal fees for representation would increase.

2. The Bill does not propose to change the existing law: the old-style licence conditions cannot be enforced by the Council (e.g. suspending the licence), and can be enforced only by prosecution by the Procurator Fiscal (contrast other licensing legislation, e.g. Civic Government (S) Act 1982, Sch. 1, Para. 11 & 12; and Licensing (S) Act 2005, ss. 36-39). Perhaps the Crown might be asked to advise how many prosecutions have been taken under the 1960 Act.

Instead the Bill's scheme is:

(a) Penalty Notices can be served after the Council has served an Improvement Notice (new sec. 32X(1)(b)),

(b) The licence-holder's failures might be taken into account by the Council when considering whether or not

   (i) to renew the licence after 3 years, or

   (ii) to revoke the licence.

This is a cumbersome procedure which may disadvantage residents who have Site Owners who breach the expected standards since it is slow. The case would call at 2 separate meetings.

1. The Council has to decide whether or not to make an 'Improvement Notice'. If it does, the case is continued to the next meeting, to allow the Site Owner time to comply;

2. At the second hearing, the Committee must decide whether or not the 'Improvement Notice' has been complied with. If it varies the Notice, e.g. extending the time for compliance, the case is continued again. If it is not continued, the Committee has to decide whether or not to revoke.

NAC's Licensing Committee only has 6 meetings annually

In contrast, the procedures for Suspension or Review in other licensing systems require only one hearing: assuming that the Licensing Authority decides, after hearing the licence-holder, that the complaint is justified, it can proceed immediately to impose a sanction (such as suspension of the Licence). It might choose to continue the case to a later hearing to allow the licence-holder to remedy the defect, or it might impose the sanction immediately and leave it to the licence-holder to seek recall of the Suspension if he later thinks that he has done what was required (as in Civic Government (S) Act 1982, Sch. 1, Para. 11(6) and Licensing (S) Act 2005, sec. 40), but under the Bill's system it would have no option but to hold two separate hearings.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions
This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

The proposal and amendments clearly set out the intended process for progressing scenarios where owners cannot pay, refuse to pay or cannot be found and this will assist with progressing communal repair issues. However, the Bill states under Part 6, Tenement Management Scheme (4) that “before making payment under this section, the local authority must notify the owner who has failed to pay a share of any scheme costs.” Additional clarification on how to notify owners who cannot be found would be appreciated i.e. is it sufficient to serve notification on the property?

Part 7: Miscellaneous
This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.
Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

 exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years

This will allow lenders to participate in the Help to Buy (Scotland) Scheme and ensure that the Scottish Government is not exposed to the financial risks of the 20 year security rule i.e. that borrowers would be able to redeem their loan come year 20 at its original value by reference to pounds and pence, rather than by reference to property value.

Other Issues
Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

N/A

Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

N/A

North Ayrshire Council
3 March 2014
NORTH LANARKSHIRE FEDERATION OF TENANTS AND RESIDENTS ASSOCIATION
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction
In order to respond to the Scottish Government’s Housing (Scotland) Bill; North Lanarkshire Federation of Tenants and Residents Association organised an open meeting for members of local tenants and residents groups to discuss the content of the Bill and to feedback comments.

The following report details the comments and feedback from the session.

Part 1: Right to Buy
We agree that the Right to Buy should be abolished.

Those who were in agreement, felt that the Right to Buy had resulted in a lack of choice of available houses for tenants and felt that the ‘good housing’ had gone.

However, some people are a bit unsure of this proposal and feel that it seems unfair that new tenants, particularly young people; wouldn’t have the same choice as other tenants to buy their own home.

Therefore we feel it’s important to add that we feel there is a need to look at helping people to be able to buy their home and there needs to be a good choice of options in terms of social housing.

It was agreed that three years seems too long a timeframe; however it is difficult to agree on an alternative timescale. Most people felt one year was suitable others didn’t, and a compromise was perhaps a two year timeframe and that 3 years was the maximum timescale that should be applied.

Part 2: Social Housing
We agree that landlords should have more flexibility when allocating houses, in line with the proposal that landlords must consult with tenants and tenants groups when deciding on the preference categories.

We agree that in some categories there is perhaps a need to deal with cases on a ‘case by case’ basis.

We understand that homelessness comes under different legislation and that landlords must apply legislation to respond to homeless applicants however we feel that the system needs to be robust.
We strongly agree that landlords should be able to take in an applicant’s previous anti-social behavior into account when allocating a house and would add that this is particularly relevant and important if and when people who have been anti-social are moved from one area to another. We feel this should also be the case with homeless applicants as well.

We agree with the proposal that landlords must consult with tenants and tenants groups regarding any proposals to change allocation policies and procedures.

We support the introduction of taking age in account; however we also feel that there needs to be sensitivity around lets particularly to young people.

Succession, Joint Tenancies, Assignations and Sub Letting

We feel more information is required in the bill on these situations; however we have given some response to this section as noted below.

We agree with the proposal that people should live in a house (as their only home) for 12 months instead of six months. We feel it’s also important that people can’t ‘queue jump’ and therefore the system needs to be robust but sensitive.

We agree that people should only be able to take over a tenancy if they would have normally been allocated the house in terms of size and type.

Short Scottish Secure Tenancies (SSST’s)

We agree that SSST’s should be increased from 6 months to 12 months. This was a difficult one to agree on particularly in relation to ASB; but overall we agree with the proposal.

In terms of who should be given an SSST we agree that this should be the case for the examples given in the Bill, but with the exception of owners – we really feel we need more info on the situation referring to owners.

Anti-Social Behavior – SSST’s

We agree that SSST’s should be increased from 6 to 12 months where there has been previous ASB. We also agree that this will help landlords manage tenancies more effectively.

We feel that more information is required in relation to SSST’s and ASB so that tenants can have more understanding of this.

Part 3: Private Rented Sector

We agree that there should be increased powers to deal with the PRS. We think this will help to speed up the process of dealing with disputes etc. We feel this is necessary to protect the rights of tenants living in the private sector as fundamentally we feel that all tenants regardless of where they live or whether they are local authority, RSL or private tenants they should have rights and recourse.

With regards the proposal of a new first tier tribunal to deal with disputes in the PRS, we agree with this proposal.

We feel that this will perhaps make the process of dealing with disputes quicker; however we’re not sure that this has been demonstrated.

We would add that that the tribunal would need to have ‘clout & teeth’ to ensure it would have enforceable powers. We feel it’s important to stress that the tribunal can’t just be a ‘talking shop’.

We feel more information is required about the tribunal, and would suggest that perhaps a trial/pilot period would be useful to see how this would work, and to see how successful the tribunal process would be.

We also feel we need more information on how this will be funded and resourced.

We are a bit disappointed that this is only being proposed within the private sector and not within the social housing sector.

We agree that local authorities should have more power to tackle poor housing conditions in the PRS but it’s not just about power it’s about ensuring that decisions made by LA’s are enforceable.

We also agree that other agencies should also be able to have more power in these situations.

We would also add that there needs to be a register of who landlords are and information on what a landlord’s powers are.

Part 4: Letting Agents

We agree that there should be mandatory registration letting agents, as we feel it’s important to protect all tenants regardless of who their landlord is.

We feel it’s crucial that letting agents must be required to meet set standards such as a Code of Conduct, and a set of rules and regulations. We also suggest that it’s important that it’s not just about registration - there needs to be checks in place to ensure landlords meet their obligations.

We feel that there are situations where people let out their homes but don’t see themselves as landlords, and this must be addressed both for the tenant and the person letting their home.
More information on this and how it will be carried out, as well as and what the point and purpose of registration is required.

Part 5 Mobile Homes and Parks Sites

We agree with the introduction of a new license system and that all mobile homes and park sites should be licensed and operated by fit and proper persons. In our opinion it is important to ensure that tenants are protected and that landlords are responsible.

We agree that Local Authorities should have powers to grant and evoke licenses.

We agree that Local Authorities should have powers to ensure sites are managed, maintained and repaired effectively; however we need more information on how this and the enforcement of license powers will be funded, and would add this shouldn't affect tenants.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

We support the idea that Local Authorities should have powers to enforce private landlords to carry out repairs and maintenance on their properties. We would suggest that there is a set standard similar to the Scottish Quality Housing Standard.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

Transferring Registered Social Landlord Assets

We have some concerns regarding the proposal to introduce additional powers for the SHR with regards the transfer of assets. We feel we need more information and clarification of the circumstances when this would be used.

We realise that it is proposed that this would only be used in extreme circumstances and we see that it is there to protect tenants, however we feel it is really important to stress this needs to be used only in very extreme circumstances and therefore shouldn't be in place on a regular basis. We feel that if this type of situation is likely then it should be picked up by the regulator before it gets to this stage through SHR’s existing checks and systems.

North Lanarkshire Federation of Tenants and Residents Association
27 February 2014
Introduction

Given the continued increase in tenants living in the private rented sector, NUS Scotland is keen to see legislation introduced which results in empowered tenants, better landlords and increased housing quality.

The issue of disrepair in the private rented sector, and the inability of tenants to act upon it through lack of knowledge, or fear of eviction, is a significant problem. We feel that in order to drive up quality in the private rented sector, students, and indeed all tenants, should have easy access to information about their rights, and how they can act upon them without fear of sanction.

Furthermore, NUS Scotland is keen to see legislation which would improve the safety and energy efficiency standards of accommodation, as this would make private rented sector housing safer and more affordable.

We also recognise that while housing quality is important to student tenants, many students struggle with rising rental costs. We encourage the Scottish Government to act to reduce rental costs in areas where they have risen to an unreasonable level.

Areas of support

NUS Scotland particularly supports three of the bill’s main provisions, namely:

1. Introduction of a private rented sector tribunal
2. Introduction of mandatory letting agent registration
3. New powers for local authorities to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector

Areas for improvement

Although we believe each of these new provisions will empower tenants, there are a number of areas where we believe the Bill falls short of its goal to “safeguard consumer interests, support improved quality and deliver better outcomes for communities.”

We believe that amendments should be made to the Bill at Stage 2 that will deliver the following outcomes:

1. Reduced rental costs
2. Extension of powers to challenge rogue landlords
3. Improved energy efficiency electrical safety in Private Sector Housing
Private rented sector tribunal

NUS Scotland supports the provision in the Bill that would back the creation of a new tribunal that would have the power to resolve civil disputes within the private rented sector.

As highlighted in previous consultation responses, tenants rarely assert their statutory rights in court, as many are reluctant to take action for fear of repercussions from their landlords, and a lack of successful prosecutions for illegal eviction, charging premium fees and acting as an unregistered landlord.

We believe this new provision to transfer the Sheriff Court’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to a new Private Rented Sector Tribunal will empower tenants to take action; it will be less formal and more accessible to tenants, as they will not need legal representation to challenge an unfair act by their landlord.

The Bill provides scope to charge a fee for parties to bring a case before the tribunal. However, the tribunal would require an exemptions policy for those who could not afford to pay. Free legal assistance should also be provided to vulnerable tenants and those on a low-income. This would ensure that everyone is able to navigate and understand the new dispute resolution process.

Furthermore, efforts should be made to engage tenants in the work of the panel. We believe that this engagement could encourage tenants to assert their rights in the future.

Letting agent registration

NUS Scotland welcomes the introduction of regulation for letting agents, and the establishment of a dispute resolution process for landlords, tenants and agents, and the requirement for all letting agents to register and adhere to a statutory code of practice.

NUS Scotland is supportive of this approach, as it has the potential to reduce elements of poor practice among letting agents in Scotland, such as illegal ‘premium’ fees, the failure to register and failure to carry out safety checks.

It is crucial, however, that the new regulation be implemented in a meaningful way. The code of practice, which will be developed in consultation with stakeholders, must set a high standard for letting agents. We believe that the code should be clear on what constitutes a breach of good practice, and on what actions tenants who have suffered from poor conduct on the part of letting agents can take.

Furthermore, NUS Scotland encourages the Scottish Government to ensure that tenants are informed of this new dispute resolution process and that the information is easily accessible.

It is also crucial that the process is free for vulnerable tenants and those who are on a low income. This is particularly important considering cases where a tenant has suffered financial loss due to the poor conduct of a letting agent.
New powers for local authorities

NUS Scotland supports the proposal in the Bill that will allow third party reporting to the Private Rented Housing Panel (PRHP) on disputes concerning repairing standards.

However, we believe the process could be strengthened by expanding the number of third parties involved, and by taking action beyond the reporting process in order to improve security of tenure in the Private Housing Sector.

Currently, in order to enforce repair standards, a tenant must report their landlord to the PRHP themselves. Evidence suggests that some tenants are unwilling to take enforcement action, as this may put their tenant/landlord relationship, and their tenancy, at risk.

NUS Scotland supports the provision in the Bill that enables local authorities to report on behalf of tenants, which could help protect tenants from eviction, or conflict with their landlord.

However, we believe that enabling a broader spectrum of third parties to report on behalf of tenants would improve the accessibility of this new process. We believe these third parties could include local housing associations, other not-for-profit organisations working in the housing sector on behalf of tenants, and even students’ associations.

In order to further protect tenants, NUS Scotland would urge the Government to ensure that the reporting process is implemented in a manner that does not create conflict between landlords and tenants, and that tenants are fully informed of the implications of third-party reporting.

Furthermore, we would like to see the Scottish Government take action to improve security of tenure for tenants in the private rented sector, beyond the proposed provisions.

Energy efficiency and electrical safety

The Bill goes some way to enabling tenants to better enforce statutory standards in private rented accommodation. However, NUS Scotland believes that further regulations to protect tenants from poor quality private sector housing are required.

Despite previous Government efforts, many rented flats and houses in Scotland are expensive and difficult to heat. Poor energy efficiency performance not only has financial and health implications for tenants, it is also harmful for the environment.

As many tenants in private rented housing are on short-term leases, they do not have the opportunity to invest in improving the energy efficiency of their rented accommodation.

Currently, landlords have to produce an Energy Ratings Certificate for the accommodation they are letting. The next possible step we would like to see is a requirement for landlords to update their properties to perform at a minimum energy efficiency level prior to any lease being signed.

While NUS Scotland recognises that the Scottish Government is supportive of the idea of a minimum energy efficiency standard for all private rented accommodation providers, we are concerned about the timeframe proposed for implementing the standards, and would like to see the Government introduce a minimum energy rating by 2015.

Furthermore, NUS Scotland urges the Scottish Government to consider further electrical safety standards in the private rented sector. The majority of accidental domestic fires in Scotland are caused by electricity, and research from Ipsos MORI suggests that private tenants are more at risk from electrical fires than owner-occupiers.

We believe that the above mentioned risks could be mitigated by legislating for mandatory electrical safety checks in all private rented sector housing, as well as to require the provision of RCD protection in all properties1.

Reduction rental costs

NUS Scotland believes that housing is first and foremost a vital right which must be accessible and affordable for all.

In some parts of Scotland, rental costs of private sector housing have risen to an unreasonably high level. For example, Aberdeen has seen a 10% to 15% annual increase in rent in recent years.

High rents can also have severe implications for tenants in private sector housing that are living on a low income or are otherwise vulnerable. Rent levels have a significant impact on the student population in particular, as for many, rental costs take up a large part of their income.

NUS Scotland believes that unaffordable rent levels should be addressed in the Bill, and urges the Scottish Government to introduce measures in the Bill to reduce high rental costs.

Measures to address high rental costs, such as rent controls, have been successfully used in countries such as Germany, Sweden and the Netherlands. Rent controls could, for example, take the form of ‘tenancy rent control’, whereby a limit is set on the amount of rent increase that a landlord can introduce.

We believe that local authorities could be given the power to implement rent controls in order to ensure that they are tailored to local housing needs.

NUS Scotland recognises concerns that measures such as rent controls could potentially reduce the supply of private rented sector housing by discouraging developers from building new housing stock and landlords from letting out accommodation.

1 An RCD is a life-saving device which is designed to prevent you from getting a fatal electric shock if you touch something live, such as a bare wire. It provides a level of protection that ordinary fuses or circuit-breakers cannot provide.
We believe that these potential negative consequences could be mitigated, however, by introducing vacancy control on vacant housing stock and by making newly built housing stock exempt from rent controls.

Conclusion

NUS Scotland believes that the Housing (Scotland) Bill will go a long way in empowering tenants, including students, to be able to better assert their rights and access dispute resolution mechanisms. We feel that by acting to regulate electrical safety, energy efficiency and rental costs, the Scottish Government would further ensure that student in Scotland have access to safe and affordable housing.

NUS Scotland

20.02.14
Call for views on the Housing (Scotland) Bill

The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee is seeking views on the general principles of the Housing (Scotland) Bill. A copy of the Bill and the accompanying documents can be found on the Scottish Parliament's website.

The Bill was introduced in the Scottish Parliament on 21 November 2013. The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee has been designated as the lead committee for Stage 1 consideration of the Bill.

Aims of the Bill

The Bill aims to make a variety of legislative changes relating to the social and private sector housing sectors.

Committee consideration at Stage 1

The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee expects to consider written submissions and to take oral evidence from mid-January to mid-March 2014, before reporting on the Bill's general principles in early April 2014.

The Committee therefore invites all interested organisations and individuals to submit written evidence on the Bill and its likely impact. In particular, the Committee would like to receive responses to a number of key questions that are set out below under each of the Bill's main headings.

Part 1: Right to Buy

This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

My view is that Right to Buy should be abolished as soon as possible to preserve as much social housing as possible. Tenants are still buying their homes in Pior I know of it recently.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

Yes, my view is that 3 years is far too long. That means in Scotland have already had plenty of time to get informed. Reduce the time to 2 or even 1 year.

---

LYNNE PALMER (INDIVIDUAL)
WRITTEN SUBMISSION
Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q3. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocation housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

I agree with most of it - the parts I understand anyway.

My view is that every tenant should be under an initial tenancy for a period of time after signing for a house or flat.

Prospective tenants should provide a CV to LAS or RSLs or should have a variety of references.

My view is that property owners should not have any opportunity to get a house or flat in the Social Rental Sector, not even temporarily.

Q4. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

As far as I can tell, the new proposals to help deal with ASB are good. Only one I don't agree with is the proposed right to appeal. Giving clear reasons to the ASR team as to why the property is being reported so that he/she learns a hard lesson, only them will stop them being anti-social.

A tough stance is needed so no right of appeal. The ASB tenant will spin things out as much as they can, causing continual problems for neighbours & delays in use of flat or house.

Q5. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government's objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

As said above the new proposals are good, but re ASB no tenant who is doing ASB should be given too much room to move. (The change from 6 months to 12 months is OK).

Scott. Govt. wouldn't want to strengthen the rights of tenants who commit ASB whilst that tenant's neighbours & the wider community are made to suffer. This Scottish Bill must have worked!!
Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q6. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to new First-tier Tribunal?

I think this is a very good proposal, especially because it will be empowering in private sector bounds. The Tribunal should remove the fear of going to court. Also, ‘student’ accommodation will be better protected and landlords will learn not to take advantage of students as others.

Q7. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

As a student, I think it’s important for them to stand up to unscrupulous landlords; this is what is needed. More legislation is needed across the board to protect tenants in the private rented sector. Tenants who are not students need just as much support as they are often at the mercy of private landlords.

Q8. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

I believe this will be a good move by Scot. Gov. If it doesn’t happen, whole blocks or flats/terraced houses will fall into disrepair. No-one will look after buildings. Poor landlord practices need to be prevented by new legislation. Can legislation be included for people living in bed accommodation, room, flat, house.
Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

All of this will be very good and should protect the tenant from unsuitable practices done by letting agents.

The new registration system will be the start of improvement in the private sector along with registration of private landlords. But will next become statutory law.

Q10. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

I believe we need more legislation or regulation in the private rented sector so as to create order or remove the free-for-all practices which sometimes go on.

The proposed Tribunals Bill should provide such a mechanism.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

New laws will bring better practices to these sites. Mandatory registration of industry standard will both be legal—this is excellent. Codes of Practice are usually just guidelines, so this is problematic—needs to be stronger than just codes. Dispute resolution could be in its new Tribunals Bill.
Q12. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

There will be more controls on site operators – more order for residents – this is a good thing.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act of 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q13. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work particularly in tenemental properties?

Is this to do with people who have bought their home under Part 2, or refuse to pay their share of costs? Anything that can be done to improve the problem of owner-occupied refusing to pay their share of maintenance work in tenement multi-storey buildings will be much appreciated by tenants and council housing services. If all the occupiers are owners the cost should not come out of the HRA.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 if the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.
Q14. Do you have any comments in relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

Other Issues

Q15. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

I may be confused re. owner-occupier. If a tenant has owner-occupied property, the LA or RSL needs help to get an owner-occupier to pay their share of maintenance works. Their share would go into the HRA, or RSL finance. If all the properties are owner-occupied or sub-let, the LA or RSL should not be concerning themselves at all with the property, not in any sense.

Q16. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

Did you consult on the use of the HRA in LA’s or the finance of RSL’s regarding tenements, multi-storey or people who refuse to pay their share of works or maintenance?

HRAs or finance of RSL’s should not be used for private owner-occupier or sub-letting.

Submitting your views to the Committee

The committee invites views from all individuals and organisations who have an interest in the issues covered by the Bill.

You may only have a view on certain provisions contained in the Bill, so please do not feel that you have to respond to all of the questions that are set out above. In addition, if you wish to provide comments on issues relating to the Bill that are not covered by the specific questions then the Committee invites you to submit these.

Before making a submission, please read the Parliament’s policy on treatment of written evidence by subject and mandatory committees, which can be found on the Scottish Parliament’s website (http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/).

Lynne Palmer

11 February 2014
Part 1: Right to Buy

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

In 2012 our Association submitted our response to the Government consultation on the Future of Right to Buy. At that time we indicated that we support the proposal to end the RTB altogether and that view remains the same. However we are aware that some tenants with the RTB consider that although they do not want to use it, they do not want to lose it and others may have aspirations to purchase in the future.

Whilst being sympathetic to this view, it is the position of the Association that our response must focus on the strategic position relating to the supply of social rented housing and the business needs of the Association.

Our Association has lost 270 properties through the Preserved Right to Buy (PRTB) since we were established through an initial stock transfer in 1998. This stock has mainly been cottage type accommodation in sought after locations. We feel that this drain on social rented housing should come to an end to prevent the loss of any more housing through the right to buy when increasingly the demand for housing outstrips supply.

It is our view that a number of developments indicate that the RTB as a policy for diversifying tenure to create more mixed communities has now run its course and should now be scrapped. We would offer the following argument to support this case.

There is an increase in home owners making applications under the Mortgage to Rent Scheme run by the Scottish Government to have their home bought by the council or a housing association. We have acquired a significant number of properties through this route and a number of these have been former RTB properties. We have also been approached by owners who have purchased their homes through the Right to Buy and now can no longer afford to retain these or wish to move on and find it difficult to sell the property. This is leading to an increase in empty owner occupied properties in estates where there is a demand for social rent.

Some owners are being left behind in terms of investment in the fabric of the properties as social landlords bring their properties up to the Scottish Housing Quality Standard. As owners are not required to reach these same standards this is leading to some poor quality housing among owners struggling in the current economic climate.

Our Association faces many problems in flatted tenements where there is owner occupation trying to get owners to agree to participate in work to common areas especially if they do not live in the building and rent out the property. If sales continue, we feel this problem will only increase in buildings in blocks/estates where there is multiple ownership making it harder to reach targets set by the Scottish Government to improve social housing.

In addition the ending of the Right to Buy would bring more certainty in forward business planning.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

In our response to the Government consultation we indicated that instead of the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force we support giving tenants a maximum of two years notice. This would allow tenants who wish to exercise their right to buy the opportunity to do so. Extending the period beyond 2 years will only create continuing uncertainty around planning assumptions and there would be ongoing administrative burdens around areas such as the maintenance of right to buy registers, staff training in the various right to buy schemes etc.

We would also urge that the notice period should be clear in its intent – is it a period of years to complete the purchase or intimate the intention to exercise the right to buy? Uncertainty around this will cause confusion.

Part 2: Social Housing

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Replacement of Reasonable Preference Categories

The replacement of the previous reasonable preference categories with broader definitions will continue to give us flexibility when allocating housing especially the inclusion of existing tenants who are under-occupying. These tenants require reasonable preference to downsize by doing this it frees up properties suitable for larger families who require them.

Taking Property Ownership into Account

We welcome the proposal to allow us to take property ownership into account especially if the owner has suitable property available for them to use. However, it may be difficult to establish if an applicant does own other accommodation. We also have concerns that existing tenants in the social rented sector who are adequately housed are not barred from applying for alternative house therefore, homeowners could claim it is discriminatory for them to be barred.

Taking Age into account
We appreciate being given flexibility on allocations by age range as it would be helpful in trying to establish balanced communities. However there will need to be clarity how this will operate in terms of the equalities legislation.

Assignations, successions and joint tenancies
We support the proposed amendment for assignations to replace the current six-month qualifying period and extend it to 12-months before a tenant can apply for a joint tenancy or to assign the tenancy to another person. With the increased pressure on the demand for the scarce resource of social housing it is appropriate to impose a longer timescale. However, for succession and joint tenancies we feel that there should be some discretion built into the 12-month rule. We feel that this would be the case for successions where a person has given up their only principal home to become a carer and then find that on the death of the tenant they could find they fall short of the 12-month period by a matter of a few weeks.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

We would like to see greater clarity on the process to be undertaken for the statutory right of review required before court action is taken for tenants whose SSST is not going to convert to a full SST.

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

We welcome the transfer of certain private rented sector cases to the new First-tier Tribunal as it is felt this will free up valuable court time to handle other cases.
Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities' discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

We can see the merit for enhancing the local authority powers and agree with the proposals.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

We support any proposal to allow local authorities to target specific areas for enforcement action where deemed necessary.

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

We agree with the proposal to create regulation of letting agents. This legislation will prevent inappropriate people setting themselves up as a lettings agent.

The creation of a mandatory register with associated “fit and proper person test” and statutory code of practice is consistent with the model already set up for Factors in Scotland.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

We feel that by giving the First Tier Tribunal a range of enforcement orders available to use for a dispute resolution system it will allow the Tribunal to work in the same way as the Homeowner Housing Panel for Factoring.
Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

This is not an area in which our Association is involved and no comments have been made.

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

As above

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

The right to buy has changed the ownership of tenemental properties in social rented housing schemes from single to multiple-ownership. We have experience of owners where we have difficulty tracing them or they are unable, unwilling to participate in repair or maintenance work for which they are legally obliged to pay a share of the cost. We therefore welcome this power which will help to tackle the issue of poor maintenance in tenemental properties. By allowing local authorities to pay a missing share when the majority of owners in a tenement have agreed to carry out work it relieves the other owners from the burden of being liable for the costs of the another owner.

We also agree with the proposal that the local authority should be allowed to recover costs of the missing share and any associated administrative expenses from the owner on whose behalf it was paid.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.

Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?
The Bill’s provisions to amend Section 67 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 would allow the SHR in certain circumstances in a potential insolvency situation to transfer the assets of an RSL without consulting tenants or secured creditors. Whilst we appreciate that consulting with tenants can be time consuming when there is a need to move quickly in a potential insolvency situation we do not agree that it should be removed entirely. This goes against all the principles of the Scottish Social Housing Charter. It is our opinion that consultation should take place, where viable, taking into account the need for urgent action.

We cannot understand why the obligation to consult with the lender(s) as secured creditors is being removed. It is our view that in any rescue situations it needs all parties to work together – the SHR, the landlord in trouble, the new landlord and the lenders of both landlords. The receiving landlord will need to consult with its lender if it is borrowing to ensure that they are happy for that RSL to take on additional obligations and that their loan covenants are not being breached.

We cannot see how a partial transfer could be structured in the absence of an indication of the value applying to the stock to be transferred. This would mean the SHR could transfer stock at a nominal value and could be subject to allegations of fraud.

We feel that giving this power in its current form could make lenders nervous of financing registered social landlords in Scotland.

Other Issues

Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

Paragon Housing Association
28 February 2014
PARTICK UNITED RESIDENTS GROUP
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Part 1: Right to Buy

This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

The Right to Buy should be abolished due to the ever increasing pressure on social housing stock

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

Too long. 18 months would be enough

Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q3. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Yes, RSL’s require more flexibility

Q4. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

Reservations about short Scottish Secure tenancies:

- People may behave impeccably for 6 months then revert to type
- Other tenants may feel insecure due to uncertainty of tenancy
Q5. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

Right to appeal does strengthen tenants rights to a degree, but not convinced. This requires further consultation

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q6. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

Situations can be resolved quickly which will help minimize stress to tenants

Q7. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

Any legislation which helps improve and maintain the fabric of buildings and living conditions for tenants must be good

Q8. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

Enforcement action, if carried out, will have a significant impact on private rented housing issues, however, will LA’s have the resources to implement such actions?

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

Essential to have a code of conduct – this will give a reference point to both sides

Q10. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Tribunal process should help resolve disputes fairly

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

No

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

N/A

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q13. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

These enforcement powers are vital to the upkeep and continued maintenance of tenemental property
Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.

Q14. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

None

Other Issues

Q15. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

None

Q16. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

None

Partrick United Residents Group
21.02.14
As a landlord with rental property in Scotland I would like to make the following comments in relation to the Housing (Scotland) Bill:

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user-friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.
Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards and the reputation of the industry while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

There is the potential for confusion between agents who are registered through landlord registration (as established by the Antisocial Behaviour (Scotland) Act 2004) and registered letting agents as defined in the Bill. In order to reduce bureaucracy and avoid this confusion, registered letting agents should be automatically entered on the landlord register and the letting agent reference number should be used by all local authorities for the purposes of identifying letting agents on the landlord register (replacing the current system of giving agents registration numbers which differ from authority to authority).

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

The proposed mechanism is appropriate in providing a simple and swift method of resolving disputes.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

S & D Properties Group
04 February 2014
MR & MRS A SCHOFIELD (INDIVIDUAL)

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

My husband and I took great care and a long time to view many caravan sites before deciding that Cairnsmill would be our best choice. My Husband was quite poorly when we first moved from Lancashire, and this site was such a quiet, calming site but also within easy reach of our only child and her family.

Q12. The Bill as we see it seems to be designed for the lowest category of sites owners at the expense of the good ones.

Q13. The implications are numerous!!! We have a good working relationship with the owners of the site who look after it's residents perfectly well. We have a contract with the owner which we went over carefully (re-loopholes) which could cause us a problem in the future at our age & retirement.

Now with this new Bill it has thrown this into confusion and brought unnecessary uncertainty & worries. What happens If the owner loses the licence and we are then unable to live here as a Resident??????

Who pays for the financial implications involved????

This has really unsettled us and made us very uneasy about our future!!!!!!

We feel the rules should only be applied to those sites with certain bad reputations and complaints.

Far more checking and possible fines etc; to those sites are applicable. Do not penalise those sites who work hard to make them a successes and have such consideration for its residents.

Many thanks for taking the time to read and act on this letter.

Mr & Mrs A Schofield
27 February 2014
SCOTTISH BORDERS TENANTS ORGANISATION

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Part 1: Right to Buy

This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

The Scottish Borders Tenants Organisation supports the proposal to abolish the RTB for social housing tenants in Scotland.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

Agree in principle that 3 years gives sufficient time to prepare for the withdrawal of the RTB, and for Social Landlords to review their Business Plans, however, a shorter period could stop much needed social housing being reduced.

Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Agree.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

In its present format the protection to tenants will not be made by the Bill unless clear guidance and definitions of all the terms are made.
Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

Yes, feel it will give tenants more rights.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This would be a positive move forward and make quicker resolutions.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

Support any improvements to better housing stock and living conditions in the private sector, may be a need for better engagement processes with private landlords and tenants. Possible improvement grants/loans for consideration to assist with type/category of improvements.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

Support provisions being brought forward that will enhance improvements to housing stock,

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

Approve and welcome the proposal as it will bring in new levels of standards.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Support the proposals in principle.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

Support the proposals, feel there is a greater need for control and development of people managing sites and people living on sites.

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

Investment to better how they are managed and regulated, but it is hoped it would improve the use of sites for all parties.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?
In support of legislation that improves poor maintenance and safety to benefit living conditions.

Scottish Borders Tenants Organisation
27 February 2014
I welcome the opportunity to comment on the Housing (Scotland) Bill. As Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People, my role is to promote and safeguard the rights of children and young people in Scotland. In so doing I have a duty to keep under review law, policy and practice relating to the rights of children and young people.¹

I have limited my comments to the sections of the Bill which I believe are of most relevance to children and young people. When mentioning the impact of a proposal on children and young people, I am referring to both the dependents of tenants and young people who are tenants in their own right.

I would urge the Committee to carry out a Children’s Rights Impact Assessment² on the Bill in order to fully assess the potential impact of this legislation on children, young people and families.

Section 3 - Reasonable preference in allocation of social housing

I note the Bill’s intention to alter the reasonable preference provisions in section 20 (1) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987. Whilst this will offer increased flexibility for social landlords in how they allocate their housing stock, I am concerned that an unintended consequence of this may be that some families, in particular those living in poor quality and/or overcrowded homes, could find it more difficult to access better housing. As a result, children living in conditions that are impacting negatively on their health and well-being may continue to do so for much longer than would currently be the case.

Whilst the order-making power proposed in Section 4(2) has the potential to mitigate this, there is a danger that social landlords will still be free to set their priorities in a way that ensures that, whilst not completely excluded, these vulnerable groups will be given a lower priority when housing is being allocated.

Section 5 – Factors which may be considered in allocation: age

Section 5 of the draft Bill proposes to amend the 1987 Act and allow social landlords to take the age of a prospective tenant into account when considering how to allocate their housing stock.

¹ Section 4(2)(b), Commissioner for Children and Young People (Scotland) Act 2003
Whilst the intention is to increase flexibility for landlords, there are significant risks in operating such a policy. It is very likely that in prioritising one age group, then another group of tenants will be disadvantaged. If, for example, a social landlord were to designate the majority of ground-floor flats in their housing stock as primarily suitable for older people, then young disabled people and the families of disabled children would find it more difficult to access suitable housing. Where such housing is already scarce, it is important that this should continue to be allocated on the basis of need.

The requirement that social landlords must act in the spirit of the Equality Act 2010 when allocating housing to tenants under the age of 18 is well-intentioned. However, it remains unclear how an individual young person could seek to challenge any perceived unfairness on the part of the social landlord.

I would also seek reassurance that this policy would not inadvertently lead to some younger tenants, including young care leavers, being placed in less desirable areas at the expense of other age groups, a concern that has previously been expressed by young people and those advocating for them.

Sections 8, 10, 11 and 12 – Short Scottish Secure Tenancy/Anti-Social Behaviour

Proposals in Sections 8, 10, 11 and 12 of the Bill seek to relax the circumstances in which social landlords can impose a short SST or seek to convert an existing SST to a short SST.

Where previously there was a requirement for the tenant to have been subject to court action related to their anti-social behaviour, the Bill proposes that an existing tenancy could be converted to a short SST where the social landlord believes that the tenant or someone living with the tenant has behaved anti-socially in the past 3 years.

As drafted, the decision to convert an existing SST to a short SST appears to rely almost entirely on the social landlord’s perception of what constitutes anti-social behaviour. Whilst the tenant would have the right to appeal this decision to the court, I am concerned that repeated complaints from neighbours could be taken as evidence of anti-social behaviour, without these being objectively examined until a very late stage in proceedings.

---

3 Quarriers Condemned Campaign, 2009, see http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=hnE5yi8-2Bc
4 Financial Memorandum, para 67
5 Scottish Government 2013e, Shelter (Scotland) response
This proposal also has the potential to target some children and young people unfairly, e.g. families where there are children/young people with certain types of disability (whose behaviour might be perceived to be anti-social, when in fact it is related to their disability), families where there is a history of domestic abuse and young care leavers attempting to sustain their first tenancy.

I would also be concerned if families that had sustained a tenancy successfully for a number of years found themselves at increased risk of becoming homeless, as a result of a social landlord’s decision to convert them to a short SST.

The Committee may also wish to consider how the present proposals would ‘fit’ with the wider approach to tackling anti-social behaviour, which in recent years has rightly become more focused on holistically considering the needs and challenges presented by those considered to be behaving anti-socially.

Scotland’s Commissioner for Children & Young People
28 February 2014
About us

The Scottish Disability Equality Forum (SDEF) works for social inclusion in Scotland through the removal of barriers to equality and the promotion of independent living for people affected by disability.

We are a membership organisation, representing individuals affected by disability, and organisations and groups who share our values. Our aim is to ensure that the voices of people affected by disability are heard and heeded within their own communities and at a national and political level.

Our views on the Bill

SDEF is supportive of the principles and aims of the Bill. We would like to give our specific backing to three provisions:

1. Part 2: Social Housing - Allocation of social housing
   S3 Reasonable preference in allocation of social housing

   We welcome the retention of ‘reasonable preference’ in the allocation of social housing for those who are ‘living under unsatisfactory housing conditions, and have unmet housing needs’.

   The Scottish Government’s research in 2011 highlighted that those with a housing need linked to a longstanding illness or disability are widely regarded as falling within unsatisfactory housing conditions.

   One in five disabled people who require housing adaptations live in a home that is not very, or not at all, suitable for them according to the 2012 Scottish House Condition Survey. The Scottish Household Survey 2012 highlights that more than half of households in the social rented sector contain someone with a long standing limiting illness, health problem or disability.

   It is vital that this change to housing legislation is included to ensure disabled people’s needs remain a priority for social housing providers. In addition, we ask that the Committee to consider a recommendation that a more direct statement of the need to meet disabled people’s needs should be made in any related Scottish Government guidance.

2. Part 2: Social Housing - Scottish secure tenancy
   S16 Recovery of possession of properties designed for special needs

   We welcome the clarification of the law regarding the right to recover an accessible property from a tenant not requiring such a home. Research published by Horizon Housing and the Chartered Institute for Housing in 2012 highlighted a shortfall of 17,000 wheelchair accessible homes.

Building more accessible homes is the only way to resolve this significant issue. However, making it easier to re-allocate those that are available to those in real need is a logical move that could be a real help to many disabled people.

3. Part 3: Private Rented Housing - Transfer of sheriff’s jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal
   S19 Right to adapt rented houses

We welcome the proposal to allow appeals to be made to the First-tier Tribunal against a landlord’s decision to refuse permission for an adaptation to suit a disabled person. Scottish Government research\(^1\) highlights that disabled people are more likely to experience civil legal problems than non-disabled people (31% as opposed to 26% in 2010/2011). Providing a tribunal route should prove simpler and less intimidating for those affected.

Scottish Disability Equality Forum
28 February 2014

\(^1\) Scottish Crime and Justice Survey 2010-11
SCOTTISH GAS

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Summary

Scottish Gas supports the Scottish Government in bringing forward legislation to improve standards in the private rented sector in Scotland through the introduction of its Housing Bill. We entirely support the aim of the Bill “to support improved quality across all rented housing sectors, but with a particular emphasis on the private rented sector.”

In particular we welcome the provision in the Bill to create a new specialist Private Rented Sector tribunal. We believe that this will provide better, quicker and more expert dispute resolution across all housing and landlord/tenant issues. We also welcome the proposed new and enhanced Local Authority powers to intervene to improve standards in the private rented sector. It is the view of Scottish Gas that these provisions, if passed, will make a considerable contribution to improving standards in this sector, and to begin to address the problems which exist within it.

However, as set out below, Scottish Gas also considers that the Scottish Government might have gone further to improve safety and energy efficiency.

Introduction

1. Scottish Gas is one of the leading energy and home service suppliers in the country with over 1.5 million residential customer accounts across Scotland. As part of British Gas our engineers visit 50,000 homes each day across the UK. We supply gas and electricity to more than one million homes in Scotland, and we employ around 900 engineers to carry out service and repair work.

2. In October 2012, Scottish Gas and Shelter Scotland joined forces to help tackle the problem of poor quality private rented homes. As part of a broader partnership with Shelter and as part of British Gas we aim to improve the conditions of one million privately rented homes across the UK over the five years of the partnership. Key themes of this partnership are to improve the safety and warmth of tenants in the private sector as well as providing help and advice to landlords and tenants.

3. We believe the problem of poor standards in the private rented sector is made more acute by the fact that the PRS is an important source of housing for many vulnerable groups and also households with children make up an ever increasing proportion of its residents.

4. We support action to reduce the number of homes which fail to meet the repairing standard as set out in the Housing (Scotland) Act of 2006.

5. On safety, carbon monoxide (CO) gas is known as the 'silent killer' because it is invisible and has no smell. CO can be emitted by any faulty appliance which burns a carbon based fuel such as gas, petrol, oil, coal and wood, and as little as 2% in the air can kill within one to three minutes. Children, elderly people, pregnant women and people with respiratory problems are particularly at risk from carbon monoxide poisoning.

6. 69% of all accidental fires in Scottish homes are caused by electrical problems – amounting to 3,400 incidents annually. Scottish Gas supports the Electrical Safety Council’s call for mandatory 5 yearly checks of electrical installations and appliances; and the introduction of RCD protection in all properties.

Improving safety, warmth and well-being

Scottish Gas believes that safety and well-being in the PRS could be improved through simple steps and would recommend:

- Requiring the presence of an audible carbon monoxide alarm mandatory in all private rented properties that have gas appliances.

- Introducing into regulation that a landlords’ accreditation scheme should require landlords to not only have an Energy Performance Certificate, a gas safety certificate and electrical safety checks - but that certified copies should be provided to the tenant at the beginning of the tenancy and every 12 months during the life of the tenancy.
• A five yearly electrical safety check which would provide significant additional protection for tenants and is a relatively low-cost way for the Scottish Government and the rented sector in Scotland to demonstrate leadership and best practice.

• Ensuring that Local Authorities have the resources to carry out regular, proactive checking of PRS properties, in accordance with their proposed enhanced powers. Scottish Gas believes this will be particularly important with regards to enforcement under the definition of the repairing standard as introduced by the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006, and the investigation of tenant complaints. It will also be invaluable in ensuring enforcement action can be pursued where necessary.

• Reducing the number of tenants in cold and damp accommodation by promoting measures to increase energy efficiency and reduce fuel poverty such as:
  o encouraging landlords to commission improvements and take advantage of funding that is currently available through the Energy Company Obligation to do so o ensuring that greater numbers of landlords adhere to their statutory duty to provide an Energy Performance Certificate to their tenants by requiring that copies are made available to tenants and accrediting bodies responsible for compliance.

• Requiring the inclusion of an obligation for landlords on repairs within the rental contract and the proposed Codes of Practice would be enhanced by adding a Service Level Agreement. This would require a landlord to make provision for repairs within an agreed specified timetable.

• Providing education programmes for tenants and landlords to ensure both understand their rights and responsibilities in this area.

• Consider the early implementation of Section 55(6) of the Energy Act (2011) which states that “Scottish domestic energy efficiency regulations may come into force no earlier than 1 April 2015.”
Scottish Gas believes that this would deliver significant and lasting positive impacts for the health, financial and social wellbeing of tenants across Scotland. It will also have a number of secondary effects, including contributing to the aims of the Scottish Government to eradicate fuel poverty by 2016.

Scottish Gas
27 February 2014
The Scottish Independent Advocacy Alliance is the national membership body for Scottish advocacy organisations. The SIAA promotes, supports and defends independent advocacy in Scotland.

The right to independent advocacy for those with mental disorders or who are potentially at risk is enshrined in Scottish legislation. However, independent advocacy can also have a key role in supporting anyone who is vulnerable due to their situation or circumstances. The SIAA aims to ensure that independent advocacy is available to any vulnerable person in Scotland.

Q7: Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain PRS cases from the Sheriff Courts to the new First-Tier Tribunal?

The SIAA welcomes the movement of (private rented sector) housing cases from the Sheriff Court to the new First-Tier Tribunal. Tribunals are on the whole more accessible for users, particularly those who may be vulnerable, than court proceedings. The less formal nature of Tribunal proceedings are less likely to be intimidating to individuals who may already be fearful and anxious about their situation and about facing a hearing.

However we believe that in only transferring private rented sector business to a specialist housing tribunal, there is a risk of a disparity of approach in how tenants are dealt with. This is likely to put Social Rented Sector tenants at a disadvantage and misses the opportunity to improve access to justice for many vulnerable tenants in Scotland.

Even allowing for the fact that Tribunals are generally held to be more user-friendly, accessible and understandable for some it is likely that they will experience difficulty understanding and following process and procedure, which is made worse by a lack of representation. Access to independent advocacy, particularly for vulnerable tenants can help individuals to understand their rights and responsibilities, consider options and possible outcomes from situations and ensure that their views and opinions are heard and taken into account. This will go a long way towards supporting meaningful dialogue in any dispute.
The importance of independent advocacy support in other tribunal settings, in particular in a Mental Health Tribunal, has been recognised. The inclusion of access to advocacy in this situation would be important to support any vulnerable tenants in understanding and participating in a housing tribunal. Access to independent advocacy should be a right for tenants in a dispute situation. There should be a duty on statutory agencies to ensure that staff are aware of the role of independent advocacy and, when becoming involved in a dispute, inform individuals about advocacy and local advocacy provision.

The Scottish Independent Advocacy Alliance (SIAA) is Scotland’s national membership body for advocacy organisations. The SIAA promotes, supports and defends independent advocacy in Scotland. It aims to ensure that independent advocacy is available to any person who needs it in Scotland.

Scottish Independent Advocacy Alliance
28 February 2014
SCOTTISH PROPERTY FEDERATION

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction to SPF

1. The Scottish Property Federation (SPF) is a voice for the property industry in Scotland. We include among our members; property investors including major institutional investors, developers, landlords of commercial and residential property, and professional property consultants and advisers.

General Comments

2. Greater scales of investment and landlords can act as drivers for improvements in both condition of the private rented sector (PRS), choice for tenants and improvement of the image of the sector as a whole in Scotland. This mixture of positive benefits for the sector will encourage greater confidence for householders deciding to rent rather than own for the time being, or while they build sufficient finance backing for a deposit.

3. Attracting larger scale investment should also be about new build development for rental purposes. This would introduce a scale of quality and choice that would support wider objectives such as additional supply and more energy efficiency housing. Larger scale landlords will also have costs to consider but generally may be in a better position to effect energy efficiency improvements and invest in property condition, than those who operate on a smaller scale.

Part 1: Right to Buy

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

Abolition of the right to buy is likely to provide greater cohesion in the provision of Council housing stock. There have been recent examples of Local Authorities buying individual properties in the housing market (including previous Right to Buy Units) at market value to increase inadequate housing stock levels. Such funding should be directed at modern, new build housing. Local Authorities will have greater certainty in the evaluation of existing social stock levels and also potentially in the implementation of refurbishment programmes (including energy, sustainability & fabric improvement programmes) as there will be less "fragmentation" of housing tenure in priority areas.
Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

3 to 5 years would be a reasonable period.

Part 2: Social Housing

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Our members support these provisions which should allow delivery to be focused on the neediest and prevent those who can afford open market rental or ownership taking much needed low cost housing. However, there is a risk of inconsistency in approach and therefore national guidance will be required particularly in relation to the highest categories of homelessness and legal standards. There is also a risk of landlords receiving inaccurate or fraudulent information from potential tenants, which will require provisions for legal recourse.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

Our members welcome the provisions in the Bill to convert to Short SSTs to tackle antisocial behaviour and the streamlining of the eviction process in order to deal with antisocial behaviour. The current process is lengthy and costly for landlords as well as stressful for other tenants. It should also shift greater priority to the most eligible applicants.

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

Our members welcome the extension of the qualifying period for succession to 12 months. We have also argued in the past for a system of consent/registration for succession purposes to be introduced, so the introduction of the provision at section 14 is also welcome. Tenants should notify the landlord of new occupiers, but they regularly fail to do so, causing issues around proving occupancy for succession purposes. We agree that succession should not be permitted unless the new occupier has been notified to the landlord and the current tenant consents to them being registered as being in qualifying occupation for the purposes of succeeding to the tenancy. This provides protection for both tenant and the landlord.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

While our members acknowledge that this proposal could result in consistency in decision making, they are concerned that the new process could be time consuming and expensive and therefore there is a risk that it would not be an improvement on the current sheriff court process. They wish to ensure that any new procedure would streamline the current sheriff court process and support a reliable and speedy decision making process offering a fair outcome for all groups. Access to redress is not merely an issue for the consumer; it is also one for landlords for whom a monthly deposit may be little compensation for loss of rent of two or more months or significant damage to a property. Our members have also questioned the implications for legal aid as a result of the transfer to the Tribunal process.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

Our members are concerned that such a fragmented sector, with many single property owning landlords who will have mortgages to cover, amongst other costs, then even a month or two’s possible shortfall in rent while upgrades take place will be a cost too far. Larger scale landlords will also have costs to consider but generally may be in a better position to effect energy efficiency improvements and invest in property condition, than those who operate on a smaller scale. Our members are of the view that local authorities’ powers should be restricted to safety and security as the definition of poor conditions could vary widely among tenants, landlords and their agents. There have also been problems in relation to internal controls in the past e.g. Edinburgh Council. It is our members clear view that the Condition Report which forms part of the Home Report should not be used as an indicator of condition due to the speculative nature and lack of consistency in the preparation of these reports.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

Clearly there is an enormous challenge to improve property condition and energy efficiency across the PRS in general. The nature of the sector will not make it easy to address this problem. It is the strong view of our members that the sector should be market driven. A recent discussion with a landlord seeking to make energy efficiency improvements in a rural setting suggested that there could be considerable upwards pressure on rents. This is not likely to be an unusual scenario. It is important therefore that the government makes a balanced impact assessment before proceeding with any form of compulsory measure. It is worth considering too that the expensive use of energy in homes may well be related to the ability of occupants to make choices about paying for energy consumption.

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?
The SPF supports the licensing of letting and managing agents in an appropriate form in order to level the playing field between agents who adopt good practice and those who do not. Larger scale, professionally managed, schemes would enhance the quality of PRS accommodation and empower tenants by providing choice. Landlords will lose out if high standards are not maintained and flexibility not offered. We feel it is important therefore that Letting Agents and Managing Agents who provide such key services to both tenants and landlords are performing equally to good practice standards. It remains the view of SPF that much well intentioned regulation has suffered through patchy enforcement, Landlord Registration being the clear example. Enforcement of existing provisions by local authorities and the government should be effective in routing out rogue landlords and tenants who behave badly. If a proper register of licensed letting agents is not put in place and the register of landlords is not properly enforced, there is a risk that rogue landlords will decide to operate on their own distancing themselves further from due process. Similar consideration could also be given to the inclusion of estate agents.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

It is in the interest of the Landlord and their Agent to have a good relationship with a satisfied tenant. The ability to remove anti-social tenants must be enhanced for the benefit of landlords and their tenants if high standards are to be maintained as well as a speedy route to resolving disputes and rent arrear issues is necessary and the enforcement of existing provisions.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

No comment?

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

No comment?

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

Members are of the view that this could be useful, along with a power to take over the voting rights, make payment and recover from non-paying parties, so long as decisions have been reached in accordance with the title deeds and tenement management schemes. However, this should be limited to repairs and maintenance it should not extend to require that owners improve their properties. Members suggest that local authorities could act as arbitrator to enforce decisions taken by owners under the title deeds, tenement management scheme or by unanimity.
Improvement of properties in the private sector should be market led to allow informed choice for investors.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

The Bill allows Scottish Ministers to designate schemes, such as Shared Equity or Equity Release schemes, which may be exempted from current provisions, and which allow borrowers to redeem loans at original value after 20 years. It is unclear if such exemption could be offered to providers of SE and Equity Release schemes in the Private Sector. Allowing the same rights of exemption to the private sector should extend the range of choice to home buyers and occupiers. There also appears to be implications in the potential for attracting Sharia compliant housing investment in Scotland on a "level playing field" to that available in England.

Other Issues

Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

The single greatest problem in today’s housing market is lack of supply. The Private Rented Sector (PRS) can make a significant difference to the number of new homes provided in Scotland. It is vital that reforms to the tenancy regime do not undermine potential investment in the sector. The multiplier effect of new investment would bring enormous economic benefits and should, be actively encouraged and incentivised. As the growing PRS sector matures and investors are attracted to a stable and sustainable sector there may be benefit in considering PRS as a distinct planning use as part of planning policy. In the short-term however, in order to attract investment and confidence in the sector, some flexibility will be necessary.

Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

No Comment?

4. The SPF would be pleased to explain its comments in further detail at the Committee’s request.

Scottish Property Federation
28 February 2014
SCOTTISH REFUGEE COUNCIL

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

About Scottish Refugee Council

1. Scottish Refugee Council is Scotland’s leading refugee charity with a vision to ensure that all refugees seeking protection in Scotland are welcomed, treated with dignity and respect and are able to achieve their full potential. We provide advice and information to people seeking asylum and refugees in Scotland. We also campaign for the fair treatment of refugees and asylum seekers and to raise awareness of refugee issues, including in areas such as housing, welfare, health, education, employment, justice, gender and equalities.

2. We also support organisations in the community working with or led by refugees; coordinate a variety of arts and cultural events; and work to raise the profile of refugees and asylum seekers in the media.

3. Our women’s project works in partnership with Refugee Women’s Strategy Group (RWSG), a group of refugee and asylum seeking women whose aim is to represent the views of refugee women to policy makers and service providers on the issues that affect their lives in Scotland. We include reference below to evidence produced by RWSG in relation to welfare as it impacts specifically on women and families.

4. Our community engagement team works in partnership with a number of Refugee Community Organisations including the Scottish Refugee Policy Forum (a group of refugee and asylum seekers whose aim is to represent the views of refugees women to policy makers and service providers) in order to develop their activities and ensure their activities have maximum impact. We include reference below to evidence produced by SRPF.

Introduction

5. Scottish Refugee Council welcomes the opportunity to respond to this call for views. We have not endeavoured to answer all of the questions set out in the consultation document. Instead we focus on the key areas of the Bill which may affect refugees in Scotland. We preface our response with an overview of the particular issues refugees face in relation to housing access in Scotland.
Background

6. An asylum seeker is a person who has made an application to the UK Government for protection and who is waiting for a decision on their application. Asylum seekers are persons subject to immigration control with temporary admission but not leave to enter or remain in the UK. While they await a decision on their claim, if they appear to the Home Secretary to be destitute or as likely to become destitute, they may receive accommodation and financial support from the Home Office which may extend to limited support, in limited circumstances, if that claim for asylum is refused.¹

7. In Scotland, Glasgow is the only area where asylum seekers are accommodated (under contractual arrangement) by the UK Government, however, there are a small number of asylum seekers across Scotland staying with family and friends, who may receive financial – subsistence only – support, or who may not be receiving any government support. In 2011, an estimated 2101 people in Scotland sought asylum² (roughly 0.04% of the Scottish population).

8. An asylum seeker’s application for asylum is assessed by the Home Office and if he or she meets the criteria set out in the 1951 UN Convention relating to the status of refugees, the asylum seeker will be recognised as a refugee and granted refugee status. In some circumstances, the asylum seeker may be granted a form of ‘subsidiary protection’ and status; either Humanitarian Protection or Discretionary Leave. The asylum seeker may also be granted an immigration status outside of the immigration rules. In the year 2012-2013, 869 refugees were granted leave to remain in Scotland.

9. Both asylum seekers and refugees have a right to access private and social housing (or at least to be admitted on to the waiting list).³ Refugees and people granted Discretionary Leave, Humanitarian Protection or

¹ Sections 95(1), 96(1) and 4(1)-(2) Immigration and Asylum Act 1999.
² This is not the actual number of asylum applications but an estimate based on the number of asylum seekers in Scotland receiving support from the Home Office.
³ This was confirmed by the Scottish Government Guidance on access to housing: http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Topics/Built-Environment/Housing/16342/management/socialhousingaccess/allocations/Guide/Access/admiss ionlist
Indefinite Leave to Remain are all entitled public funds and have access to full housing options, including homelessness and social housing.

10. In its strategy, “New Scots: Integrating Refugees in Scotland’s Communities”, the Scottish Government has recognised the need for action to intervene early to address the housing needs of newly granted refugees, increase housing options for refugees and improve refugees’ access to suitable housing. We will pick up on many of these themes throughout this response.

Aims of this call for evidence

11. The Housing (Scotland) Bill was introduced to the Scottish Parliament on 21 November 2013. The Bill proposes a number of changes to housing law including:

a. Abolishing the right to buy in Scotland;
b. Changing the allocation and transfer of tenancies in the social sector;
c. Changing the procedure for dealing with repair problems in the private sector;
d. Increasing regulation of letting agents; and
e. Creating a new licencing regime for mobile home sites.

12. The Bill is now being scrutinised by the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee within the Scottish Parliament. Through this consultation, the Committee is seeking views on the general principles of the Bill.

Abolition of the Right to Buy

13. Scottish Refugee Council is broadly supportive of the abolition of the Right to Buy insomuch as this is likely to increase the availability of socially rented accommodation to meet the immediate needs of the refugee population. Although many refugees do aspire to own their own home, homelessness and the search for settled rented accommodation remain the dominant challenges faced by refugees⁴. Scottish Refugee Council, therefore, welcomes any steps to increase the availability of socially rented properties.

⁴ For further information see “New Scots: Integrating Refugees in Scotland’s Communities”
14. We do, however, have some concern that the three-year timetable for the abolition of the Right to Buy may be too long and may lead to increased buying activity within the next three years. We would argue that the timescale could be shortened to minimise the impact that the change has on the supply of social housing and to ensure that the changes come into effect swiftly.

Changes to reasonable preference categories in Social Housing

15. Scottish Refugee Council does not consider that there is a need to remove the categories of “intolerable standard of housing”, “overcrowding” and “large families” from the statutory requirements for reasonable preference. We consider that these categories are legitimate bases for preference for social housing and it is right that they should be specifically legislated for. We also consider that these parameters already give social landlords considerable flexibility so it is not clear why they should be abolished.

16. In particular, overcrowding is a serious issue for many refugees who have gone through the Family Reunion process (i.e. exercising their right to apply for family members to be reunited with them in the UK subsequent to their being granted refugee status). Such families commonly ask for rehousing in the social housing sector. This is a recognised problem in “New Scots: Integrating Refugees in Scotland's Communities”. We consider that many providers of social housing will continue to give priority in these circumstances as they will recognise that such situations are likely to give rise to “unsatisfactory housing conditions”. However, there is a danger that others will not, creating a divergence in the way that providers deal with applicants and a potential for unfairness in the system. As noted in “New Scots: Integrating Refugees in Scotland's Communities”, Scottish Refugee Council's research has indicated that 96% of refugees experience homelessness at some point after receiving status and there is evidence that many slip through the net and spend time 'sofa-surfing' and rough sleeping.

17. According to the most recent statistics from our Holistic Refugee Integration Service, in the last quarter of 2013 92.3% of Scottish Refugee Council clients were made homeless and presented to Glasgow City Council for assistance because of their asylum support ending. 3.8% of clients were made homeless through voluntary relocation and a further 3.8% were asked to leave their accommodation by friends.
18. Scottish Refugee Council therefore welcomes the proposal that homelessness continues to attract reasonable preference. However, we are concerned by the proposal to consider whether an applicant’s needs are capable of being met by other housing options. It is our view that the concept of “other housing options” is ill-defined and potentially problematic. It is not clear in any of the Bill documents what sort of housing options a housing authority would be entitled to consider and in what circumstances. Would, for example, a registered social landlord be entitled to consider a Section 5 referral from the Local Authority as an alternative housing option? Would a landlord be able to direct an applicant to the privately rented sector if they felt that this was a suitable alternative housing option? If so, there is the potential of the Bill having the effect of reducing the housing options of applicants at a time when the Scottish Government hopes to embed the Housing Options approach, not least within “New Scots: Integrating Refugees in Scotland’s Communities” and the Scottish Government’s Homeless Prevention Strategy.

19. We note that the policy documents state that if a particular group is consistently overlooked by social landlords, ministers would have a power under the Bill to require all landlords to include these groups in their allocation policies. We do not consider this is sufficient as (a) it relies on applicants to raise complaints and (b) it does not cover the likely eventuality that only certain landlords will exclude certain groups, meaning that it is unlikely that any one group will be consistently overlooked by social landlords.

20. It is our view that the current system of considering the housing situation of the applicant at the date of application is sufficient to allow housing authorities to decide whether the applicant is in housing need. We do not believe that it is necessary or desirable to allow housing authorities to consider alternative housing options when allocating preference.

21. It is also unclear why it is necessary or desirable to allow housing authorities to take age into account during allocations beyond the existing permissions provided at section 2B(a)-(b) Housing (Scotland) Act 1987. We consider that any attempt to allocate a property on the basis of age, as the proposed clause 5 implies, is likely to give rise to a complaint of unlawful age discrimination. Furthermore, it is not at all clear that allowing age to be taken into account in either determining priority for or in making decisions on the allocation of social housing will be capable of objective justification in terms of section 13(2) Equality Act 2010. The proportionality test for such discrimination is high entailing (a) that the aim of the policy must be legitimate, (b) it must achieve that aim (c) its discriminatory effects must be significantly outweighed by the importance and benefits of the policy and (d) the aim could not have been fulfilled in another or less discriminatory way.

22. Furthermore, the potential for unjustifiable age-based discrimination arising from the new section 2B to the 1987 Act as carried in clause 5 of the Bill, has not been identified in the equality impact assessment accompanying the Bill and we recommend this is revisited to ensure the Bill does not, unintentionally, undermine the Scottish Government’s and local authorities’ ability to proactively eliminating unlawful conduct, pursuant to the Public Sector Equality Duty at s.149(1)(a) Equality Act 2010.

23. It is also the case that over 70% of new refugees are under the age of 35. We, therefore fear that refugees, especially younger refugees, may become adversely affected if Social Landlords apply age as a criterion in allocation decision. This may have the effect of (i) indirectly discriminating against younger refugees or, more crudely, (ii) allowing landlords to use age as a proxy for direct race discrimination.

24. Our concern on the clause is, therefore, both at the general level that it enables the arbitrary use of age as a criterion in housing allocation (and hence increase the risk of unlawful discrimination) and, specifically, that such use may adversely affect new, young refugees in trying to satisfy their real need of accessing settled and appropriate accommodation.

25. Scottish Refugee Council does welcome the extension of the principles set out in the Equality Act 2010 to cover 16 and 17 year-old applicants for housing as this enforces the rights of a vulnerable group but considers that this objective could be achieved without allowing housing authorities to take age into account in the allocation of housing.

26. Scottish Refugee Council appreciates why the Scottish Government seeks to take into account the ownership of property when allocating social housing. However, we have some concerns about the change as it is proposed. Firstly, the list of “exemptions” from consideration of the property appears somewhat restrictive. There are a number of reasons why a property owner may seek social housing (for example overcrowding or affordability problems) which are not captured by the legislation currently proposed and could lead to unfair decisions being made. Secondly, the question of domestic abuse is problematic and requires further explanation. What definition of abuse should housing authorities use when deciding this question? What evidence of abuse would applicants be required to produce?

27. We consider that further guidance would be required to settle these matters and that, in the absence of such guidance (or statement that guidance will be produced), no change should be made.

Conversion to / Granting of Short Secure Tenancies

28. Scottish Refugee Council is mindful of the seriousness of anti-social behaviour and harassment and the need to effectively deal with it. The most prevalent way in which refugees and asylum seekers experience such behaviour is through hate crime\(^5\) (reflected in the “Communities and Social Connections” section of “New Scots: Integrating Refugees in Scotland’s Communities”). Thus we welcome initiatives to tackle harassment. However, this experience must be balanced against the need for secure homes, free from the threat of arbitrary eviction.

29. The Bill as we understand it will mean that a Secure Tenancy can be converted into a Short Secure tenancy by way of notice alleging anti-social behaviour or harassment, not involving a court order. Similarly, a Housing Authority will be able to create a Short Secure Tenancy if a notice has been served in the last three years. After the service of a Notice, the landlord would be able to terminate the tenancy, without proving the anti-social behaviour before a court.

30. Furthermore, we consider section 8(2) of the Bill to be unclear and somewhat poorly drafted. There is no reference, for example, to what constitutes anti-social behaviour, who decides when an incident of anti-social behaviour has occurred and how such a decision should be made. The Bill and associated documents do not specify the level of proof needed to trigger a notice under this section, nor do they specify how the use of short secure tenancies will be monitored or controlled. Although we think that there are a number of readings of the section which could be open to legal challenge, it is possible that the Bill gives an open-ended provision for landlords to choose when and how to serve conversion notices. We are, therefore, concerned about the potential over-use of short secure tenancies.

---

31. We consider that it is for the court, not the landlord, to decide whether someone has been guilty of anti-social behaviour or harassment. While we realise that tenants have the right to apply to the court to dispute the conversion of the tenancy, we are sceptical about how many tenants will be aware of this right and effectively exercise it. There is, therefore, a danger that tenants will face eviction without recourse to the legal system. This is likely to have an impact on individuals’ right to a fair trial and may lead to unfair results.

32. On balance, therefore, while we would welcome any further action to reduce anti-social behaviour and hate crime (such as measures to increase reporting and measures to make house transfers easier), we do not agree that these proposals are a proportionate response to this issue.

12-month qualifying periods for joint tenancies, succession etc.

33. We appreciate the reasoning behind setting additional stipulations for these matters. However, many refugees apply for accommodation as a single person but are quickly joined by their families as part of Family Reunion. Family Reunion research\(^6\) and our operational experience confirms that refugees rebuilding new lives in Scotland experience difficulties obtaining suitable family accommodation, or adapting to living in a different type of accommodation. We consider that partners, spouses and children who go through this process should not be disadvantaged as, but for their forcible separation, they would have applied for accommodation as a family. We would, therefore, suggest that the Bill allows for exceptions to the 12 month rule in such circumstances.

Private rented housing tribunals

34. We have no particular view on the location of housing eviction cases within the court system. We would, however, add that any future system

---

\(^6\) “One Day we will be reunited” Experiences of Refugee Family Reunion in the UK April 2010 should be accessible to all communities and that legal aid should continue to be available for eviction cases.

Letting Agents and Private Housing Conditions

35. “New Scots: Integrating Refugees in Scotland’s Communities” recognises that the private rented sector is unattractive for refugees. Of the 523 cases that Scottish refugee Council dealt with in 2012/2013, only 6 individuals were housed in a privately rented property. There is some evidence from our casework services that one of the reasons for this is that refugees consider that they would be vulnerable to ruthless landlords and letting agents. We, therefore, welcome the proposals to further regulate the private rental sector and to increase third parties' rights to apply to the Private Rented Housing Panel. However, learning from the experience of landlord registration, it is important that future regulation of the private sector is designed to ensure standards are robustly enforced and regulating bodies are given real “teeth” to combat problems in the private housing sector. In the absence of this, the private sector will remain an unattractive housing option for refugees.

Other issues

36. We were disappointed to see that the Scottish Government has not taken forward proposals to improve security of tenure in the privately rented sector. We consider that (along with punitive Housing Benefit rules for under 35-year-olds7) the lack of security of the Short Scottish Assured Tenancy is one of the main factors deterring refugees from exploring the privately rented sector as a real housing option8. People need homes particularly following a period of major upheaval and unsettlement such as that entailed by the experience of fleeing for safety from persecution and seeking asylum in another country. Short tenancies do not provide the security needed to live a settled life. We would, therefore, urge the Scottish Government to consider further the need for private sector tenancy reform.

Scottish Refugee Council
28 February 2014

7 Statistics from our Holistic Refugee Integration Service show that approximately 73% of our refugees gaining status in Scotland are under the age of 35.
SCOTTISH TRIBUNALS & ADMINISTRATIVE JUSTICE ADVISORY COMMITTEE

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

This is the written evidence of the Scottish Tribunals & Administrative Justice Advisory Committee (STAJAC) in relation to the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee’s call for views on the Housing (Scotland) Bill as part of their Stage 1 scrutiny.

Scottish Tribunals & Administrative Justice Advisory Committee was created by Scottish Ministers as an interim advisory committee in November 2013 (following the abolishing of the Administrative Justice and Tribunals Council (ATJC) and its Scottish Committee), to provide external, expert scrutiny of the devolved administrative justice and tribunals system in Scotland.

The Housing (Scotland) Bill covers an extensive range of topics within the overarching subject of housing including abolishing the right to buy, social housing tenancies and the allocation of social housing, establishing a registration system for letting agents, and amending site licencing requirements for mobile home sites with permanent residents.

Of particular interest to this Committee are the provisions in Part 3 of the Bill relating to the transfer of existing Sheriff Court jurisdiction to the new first-tier Tribunal in private rented sector cases. This aspect of the Bill (relating to question 7 of the Call for Views) will be the focus of STAJAC’s comments.

Q7: Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain PRS cases from the Sheriff Courts to the new First-Tier Tribunal?

The Benefit of Tribunals

The Scottish Tribunals & Administrative Justice Advisory Committee welcomes the movement of (private rented sector) housing cases from the Sheriff Court to the new First-Tier Tribunal. Tribunal-administered justice offers many advantages to users over court-administered proceedings in housing disputes: not least the characteristic hallmarks of specialism and accessibility.

The development of a specialist jurisdiction dealing with housing cases has achieved clearly stated support in recent years from organisations forwarding the user (tenant) perspective. The Civil Justice Advisory Group, established by Consumer Focus Scotland and chaired by Lord Coulsfield, recommended that there should be a specialist jurisdiction to deal with housing cases and suggested in their final report that a more interventionist, specialist and less formal forum would be a better way of identifying and resolving the issues faced by users. This was also reflected by the Scottish Committee of the Administrative Justice and Tribunals Council.

In sum, these elements create an accessibility which court does not offer users. In cases involving landlords and tenants, there is likely to be an imbalance of power between the parties. It is important that any dispute resolution process is specialist in nature and can redress that imbalance of power through taking an inquisitorial approach.

Specialism allows a forum to develop where the decision makers are experts and are aware of the complex issues a user may be navigating – including but not limited to the immediate legal issue before them (for example, those in housing debt are likely to have other debt problems, problems with benefits or other housing problems). An interventionist approach allows parties to present their own case without the need for lawyers with the expert (inquisitorial) decision makers adept at asking the right questions in order to elicit the information necessary to make an informed, reasoned and fair decision.

The less formal nature of the tribunal forum underpins this specialist and interventionist approach: holding the hearings outwith daunting court buildings and with greater flexibility in their rules and procedures. A tribunal is likely to be less intimidating for users than a court. The public associate courts strongly with criminal cases, and research has found that their perception of courts as institutions which deal with crime contributed to their reluctance to become involved in civil court proceedings. Going to court can cause real fear and anxiety for defenders in housing cases, as found by Consumer Focus Scotland/Scottish Legal Aid Board research ‘The Views and Experiences of Civil Sheriff Court Users’ from 2009. One defender in a rent arrears case said, for example:

‘I was actually shaking to be quite honest with you....What was going to happen to me, was I going to go to jail?.... I was sitting outside the court room and I was biting my nails...and I was actually crying.... Nobody had said what would happen to me’.

---

In the housing context, the characteristic hallmarks of tribunals (user centred, affordable and expeditious) are important for landlords as well as tenants. Most private landlords in Scotland operate on a small scale- around 70% own only one property, while 95% own five properties or fewer. There has been long-standing support for a specialist housing forum from the Chartered Institute of Housing, who first argued for the change to a tribunal in 2004 for both the private rented and social rented sectors.

The Social Rented Sector

The Private Rented Sector (PRS) Tribunal should, for cases within the private rented sector, provide a forum of specialism, interventionism and accessibility. It is disappointing that the same benefit is not being extended to cases within the Social Rented Sector (SRS) at this stage.

Paragraph 123 of the Policy Memorandum which accompanies the Bill highlights the reasons the current dispute resolution mechanism (the sheriff court) is not working. These include:
- the length of time taken for a case to reach court
- frequent delays
- low priority of housing cases within the court system
- difficulty understanding/following process and procedure made worse by lack of representation
- inconsistent and unpredictable decisions

These issues are not exclusive to the PRS. They are shared equally with tenants in the SRS.

The Policy Objective, outlined at paragraph 104 of the Policy Memorandum, makes the benefit of a PRS tribunal clear: “to provide more efficient, accessible and specialist access to justice for both landlords and tenants in that sector.” While the proposals in the Bill will provide access for PRS tenants to a more specialist and less formal dispute resolution mechanism, it will be the minority of tenants in Scotland who are afforded access to this improved dispute resolution system and the vast majority of tenants in Scotland will still need to go to court.

In their consideration of a housing tribunal, the Civil Justice Advisory Group were clear in their belief that all housing cases should be dealt with by this new forum - including cases relating to social tenancies and mortgage repossessions. We endorse this view. And although the Civil Courts Review did not propose that housing cases be moved away from the courts, it did believe that all housing cases should be heard in the same forum. This is important in terms of consistency of approach, and also in the interests of users, for the reasons stated above.

---

The intention is that the new summary sheriffs proposed in the current Courts Reform (Scotland) Bill will take an interventionist approach, and will specialise in certain types of civil cases, including housing cases. Presumably this will apply only to cases relating to housing outwith the private rented sector. In reality, however, this will be a very small part of their caseload- the Scottish Government has estimated that 70-80% of their time will be spent on summary criminal cases. It therefore seems unlikely that summary sheriffs will have the opportunity to develop the level of specialism in this area that would exist within a specialist tribunal. It may also be difficult for judges who spend the majority of their time dealing with criminal cases in an adversarial environment to switch to a more inquisitorial approach when dealing with housing cases.

We therefore believe that in only transferring private rented sector business to a specialist housing tribunal, there is a risk of a disparity of approach in how tenants are dealt with in the civil justice system, depending on the type of tenancy they have, and in particular of putting SRS tenants at a disadvantage. There is accordingly a missed opportunity to improve access to justice for many vulnerable tenants in Scotland in limiting the tribunal to the PRS. It is not clear when, or if, SRS tenants will experience the benefits of similar accessibility to a specialist jurisdiction in the future.

Preparedness of the PRS Tribunal

In 2012, the Private Rented Housing Panel (PRHP) dealt with around 270 cases in total. It received 232 new repairing standard applications, and dealt with 37 rent cases. We understand, however, that the number of cases dealt with in 2013 was in excess of 300. In absolute terms, the number of cases which the Policy Memorandum suggests the increased caseload could reach is not substantial. The most significant addition to the jurisdiction is the transfer of actions for possession. This by itself would, on current figures, add 500 cases to the current PHRP case-load of 300 plus. This produces a total of

---

7 Civil Justice Advisory Group Report Ensuring Effective Access to Appropriate and Affordable Dispute Resolution (2011)

8 Scottish Government (2010) Response to the Report and Recommendations of the Scottish Civil Courts Review, Edinburgh: Scottish Government. Note: this refers to ‘district judges’ rather than summary sheriffs- the terminology used by the Scottish civil courts review, but the role they will perform is the same.

9 Private Rented Housing Panel and Homeowner Housing Panel Annual Report 2012:
only 800+ cases for the PRS Tribunal which is not especially high (although it should be noted that these are estimated numbers). None of the other transferred functions or the new functions are likely to be on the scale of the transfer of possession cases so the projected annual case-load would be unlikely to exceed 1,000 cases in the short term.

While this does not represent a large figure overall, it is more than triple the caseload of the current PRHP. The caseload also represents a sizable expansion of the current jurisdiction, introducing the need to consider new areas of law including (but by no means limited to) recovery of possession, right to adapt, houses in multiple occupation and registration of landlords. The majority of these will be party-to-party cases, as is currently the case with PRHP.

There will be a need to recruit and train further specialist housing tribunal members to carry out this work. At present, the same members sit on both the private rented housing panel and the homeowner housing panel (HOHP), which deals with disputes between homeowners and property factors. HOHP began business in October 2012, and we understand it dealt with around 350 cases in 2013. Both panels are overseen by the same tribunal president, and are also supported by the same secretariat. It would make sense to build on these arrangements when introducing the new tribunal. Given the likely numbers of potential tribunal judges and members in Scotland who possess the relevant housing knowledge, this could also impact on the recruitment of summary sheriffs with specialist housing knowledge and vice versa.

It is also of note that there are a number of unknown and unpredictable elements in regard to the PRS. The economic climate has had a substantial impact on the PRS. Today, 12% of all households in Scotland are privately rented\(^\text{11}\) which is double the number ten years ago. This increase would have been hard to predict ten years ago, and it is equally hard to predict how the PRS will develop over the next 10 years. In turn, the future number of cases before the tribunal is uncertain.

It is essential that the Scottish Government and the Scottish Tribunal Service have a clear plan for managing this increase in the caseloads and the expansion of jurisdiction, covering for example recruitment and training of members, provision of venues for hearings, case administration etc. With many unknown factors, it will also be crucial to the success of the tribunal that there are effective oversight and review processes in place to monitor the development of the forum.

Availability of Legal Aid and pre-hearing advice

A key factor highlighted in the Policy Memorandum as a barrier to court was difficulty understanding and following process and procedure, which is made worse by a lack of representation. While tribunal procedure is generally held to be more user-friendly, accessible and understandable\textsuperscript{12}, there remain clearly evidenced benefits in access to advice, and in some cases advocacy or representation\textsuperscript{13}.

\(^{11}\)Housing Statistics for Scotland, published 26th August 2013 available through http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2013/08/2641

Much of the past research has suggested that representation (not necessarily legal representation) tends to increase the prospects of success of appellants/parties. However, a more recent study\textsuperscript{14} did not find the same ‘representation premium’ as earlier studies but did find that pre-hearing advice was crucial to unrepresented applicants; those who neither received advice nor were represented had lower success rates than those who had either advice or representation. That research concluded that the main reason the ‘representation premium’ was so much lower than in the past was that tribunals have increasingly adopted an ‘active, interventionist and enabling’ approach. This allows them to elicit the necessary information from parties without the need for representation. In order to benefit fully from this approach, however, unrepresented parties need access to pre-hearing advice.

One effect of the Bill is likely to be to take away an existing opportunity for legal aid funded representation in a serious matter – eviction from one’s home – from a large number of persons. The Scottish Government must therefore be satisfied in relation to the jurisdictions to be exercised by the PRS Tribunal, but especially in eviction cases, that: 1) the tribunal will take an ‘active, interventionist and enabling approach’ and 2) the tenant has a fair chance to defend or assert their interests, whether this be through legal aid funded representation or through the availability of readily accessible pre-hearing advice. While, provided the tribunal takes the right approach, it is likely that pre-hearing advice will be sufficient in many cases, this may not be the case for some tenants. We therefore welcome the flexibility over the availability of legal aid funding that the Policy Memorandum suggests, but consider that paragraph 160 of the Policy Memorandum takes too narrow a view of when publicly funded assistance might be desirable to ensure a fair process and outcome.

We consider that there should be a clear strategy for the funded provision of advice, advocacy and, where necessary, representation going beyond legal aid availability. ‘Advice’ should be considered widely to include accessible information and toolkits as well as traditional telephone or face-to-face

\textsuperscript{12} As highlighted in the Policy Memorandum at paragraph 147
\textsuperscript{13} See for example:
H. Genn and Y. Genn, \textit{The Effectiveness of Representation at Tribunals} (London: Lord Chancellor’s Department, 1989).
\textsuperscript{14} M. Adler, ‘Tribunals Ain’t What they Used to Be’, available at: http://ajtc.justice.gov.uk/adjust/articles/AdlerTribunalsUsedToBe.pdf services, and the availability of pre-hearing advice for the PRS tribunal perhaps along the lines of that currently provided by in-court advisers.

Fees

We note from the Policy Memorandum\(^1\) that there will be scope to charge fees for parties to bring a case before the PRS Tribunal (under the FTT provisions in the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill).

While there may be an argument for charging landlords a fee to bring a case, as they are currently required to do in the courts, it must be ensured that fees can never be charged to tenants who are defending an eviction case, or those who bring a repairs case. Charging a fee in such circumstances could inhibit the exercising of a right that enables a tenant to stay in their home. While introducing an exemptions policy, as suggested in the Policy Memorandum, would help, this introduces an extra layer of complication for tenants, which may deter some, and those whose income is just above the threshold may also be deterred from defending their case.

Dispute Prevention and Resolution Mechanisms

It is disappointing that the Bill does not include more specific reference to alternative dispute resolution (ADR). At no point is ADR mentioned in the Bill itself or in the Explanatory Notes and, while mentioned, no committed plan is forwarded in the Policy Memorandum.

The consultation previous to this Bill, the Scottish Government’s Better Dispute Resolution in Housing, consulted specifically on the potential for the increased use of mediation. This was welcomed by the majority of respondents to the consultation,\(^2\) which is a positive recognition of the benefits mediation can offer to all in resolving cases earlier or more proportionately – tenant, landlord and the tribunal itself.

STAJAC supports the use of dispute prevention and alternative dispute resolution (ADR) mechanisms as a complement to formally administered justice. While the Committee notes the Scottish Government’s intention to increase the use of mediation in housing disputes,\(^3\) it is not clear what the implication of this will be for users of the new PRS tribunal. At present the PRHP offers mediation in some cases. There is an in-house mediation service for repairs cases to which appropriate cases are referred, if both parties agree. If no agreement is reached or either party is unwilling to try mediation, the case is referred to a committee for determination. The HOHP has also recently launched a pilot mediation service. It is not clear how an increased caseload which represents an increased variety of case type will impact on this resource, for example in terms of the availability of trained mediators.

\(^1\) Policy Memorandum at paragraph 151
\(^2\) As noted in the Policy Memorandum at paragraph 156
\(^3\) Paragraph 153 of the Policy Memorandum
Accessibility of mediation is a key factor in embedding this form of ADR in the civil justice and tribunals systems. With such clear support for increased use of mediation already expressed, we believe that practical measures to facilitate that demand should be openly considered as part of, or in parallel to, this Bill.

Scottish Tribunals and Administrative Justice Advisory Committee
21.02.14
A submission by SELECT, the Trade Association for the Scottish electrical installation industry.

Statistics indicate that more than two thirds of all accidental domestic fires are caused by electricity and that the private rented housing sector is most at risk.

SELECT believes that the Housing (Scotland) Bill offers the opportunity to improve conditions in the private rented housing sector and raise standards of electrical safety.

Currently, gas appliances and fittings are legally required to be inspected and tested but there is no similar requirement for electrical appliances and, more importantly, installations.

Given that the Housing (Scotland) Bill is already proposing changes to the Repairing Standard, SELECT believe electrical safety could be improved by introducing a requirement for mandatory five-yearly safety checks by a registered electrician of electrical installations and appliances in private rented housing.

Making such an improvement would help protect properties from fire, improve safety standards for tenants and not place any significant burdens on landlords.

SELECT is aware that the Electrical Safety Council has submitted a similar but more detailed submission proposing mandatory electrical safety inspections. Their input has the full support of the electrical industry in Scotland.

SELECT
18 February 2014
www.select.org.uk
Simply Let is a residential letting agency based in Inverness. We are a small company of two directors and two further employees. We are regulated by RICS, Licensed by ARLA, members of the Council of Letting Agents, accredited by Landlord Accreditation Scotland and carry the SafeAgent badge.

We seek to make renting a completely dependable option for both our landlord clients and for their tenants and we are keen to see management standards raised throughout the PRS. Indeed we believe that standards must be raised if the sector is to properly fulfil its key role in meeting Scotland's housing need. We therefore welcome this Bill and the opportunity to submit our views on its proposals, particularly in relation to Parts 3 and 4.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

We welcome this proposal and believe that it potential to simplify and accelerate the processing of cases and will be less stressful for tenants.

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

We do not believe that mandatory registration of agents will by itself be effective in raising standards of management. Registration of landlords has, in our experience, failed to improve management standards to any significant extent. Effective and visible policing of the system would be necessary as well as the imposition of penalties for non-registration, but even with that in place we do not consider that registration alone will be effective.

The proposals couple this requirement to a requirement for agents to abide by a Code of Practice. Much will depend therefore on the content of that Code. In our view it must be a demanding one if it is to be effective in raising management standards amongst agents.

In our view anyone who plays any part in managing a tenant's home, or who is entrusted with the management of a landlord's valuable asset (and possibly pension fund) must be competent and qualified in their field and appropriately insured. They must also, in your view, have protective measures in place for the handling of money which does not belong to them and offer a path to redress for clients who have a valid complaint.

It follows from this that a Code of Practice for letting agents must contain, as a minimum:-
• a requirement to undertake training and CPD for all staff

• a requirement to hold third-party monies in a discrete and ring-fenced client account

• a requirement to have client money protection in place

• a requirement to hold Professional indemnity insurance

• a requirement to offer recourse to an Ombudsman scheme

Without all of those components management of a standard necessary to secure a high quality PRS is unlikely to be achieved and tenants' and landlords' interests will remain at risk.

Our much preferred option, instead of registration, would be a requirement for all agents to belong to a recognised professional body such as the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors or the Association of Letting Agents. These bodies already have all of the above requirements in place.

We are concerned at Article 220 of the Housing (Scotland) Bill Policy Memorandum which, in relation to this option (requirement to belong to a professional body) states “This approach would also be likely to place the most significant financial burden on the industry. All letting agent businesses would be required to undertake mandatory accreditation and training, before being considered for membership of a professional or trade body.”

In our view the interests of letting agents should not take precedence over the wider public interest objective of a high quality PRS. As stated at the beginning of this submission, Simply Let is a small firm. Notwithstanding that our budget for professional memberships and training is significant as, without those things, we could not operate on a professional basis and assure landlord clients and tenants a fully informed service.

Lastly, if registration is the requirement enacted we believe there is scope for confusion. "Registered Letting Agent" suggests reliability and fitness for purpose but may not in fact be any guarantee of that at all. The public are likely to be confused between "Registered" and "Regulated" and, unless registration is backed by a fully effective code containing all of the elements above and is rigorously and visibly policed, we fear that low standards of management will masquerade under the mantle of registration leaving landlords and tenants poorly served.

Simply Let
28 February 2014
SOUTH AYRSHIRE COUNCIL

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction

A group of South Ayrshire Council tenants, who regularly attend tenant participation events locally and nationally, met on Thursday 20th February 2014 to discuss the proposals within the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

Each Part of the Bill was discussed and the group reached a consensus on their collective response to each question posed by the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee.

Part 1: Right to Buy

Q1
- The group agreed the Right to Buy should be ended to protect the affordable housing stock.
- Removing the RTB will bring to and end the income generated from the Council house sales. This money is used to part fund new development and to improve the current stock. The Scottish Government should, therefore, fully fund new build social housing to allow for this disparity.

Q2
- Prohibiting commencement of the main section on repeals for at least 3 years is a concern for tenants. It could result in a peak in RTB sales, further diminishing the stock of affordable housing, and possibly allows for houses currently protected by pressured area status to be bought. It is suggested that the Scottish Government amend this to 1 year.

Part 2: Social Housing

Q4
- Yes the proposals will increase the flexibility landlords have when allocating housing but the term “unmet housing needs” and the definition “needs that are not capable of being met by other housing options which are available” were considered to be vague and don’t make sense. It is suggested that the Scottish Government must provide clear guidance to be followed by allocations staff.
- Should gypsy travellers (who wish to settle in permanent accommodation), and applicants living in caravans be considered as a reasonable preference groups?
Q5
- Initial (or probationary) tenancies must be reconsidered by the Scottish Government as they offer a real potential for tackling tenancy problems such as anti social behaviour.
- Tenants agree with the principals of SSST's. The legislative tools, when enacted, must be used by social landlords as historically landlords have been reluctant to do this.
- Support must be available to tenants who are victims of anti social behaviour in addition to the support provided to perpetrators living in SSSTs. Often it seems that perpetrators are supported more than victims and this results in a lack of faith in local authorities powers.
- Landlords should have powers to evict a tenant from a SSST for a breach of tenancy without the need to have a repossession order granted by a court.

Q6
- Yes this part of the Bill will meet the Scottish Government's objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with SSSTs.
- However tenants do not necessarily agree with this proposal. An SSST is being issued due to the behaviour/actions of the person(s) to which it applies. Rather than strengthening their rights it should be for that person(s) to prove that they can merit being awarded an SST.
- There should be strengthened rights for people who have anti social behaviour inflicted on them, rather than for perpetrators of anti-social behaviour.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7
- This proposal should also include public sector cases.

Q8
- The group agree with this proposal but emphasised the need for local authorities to use the powers available when enacted.

Q9
- The group agree with this proposal but emphasised the need for local authorities to use the powers available when enacted. It is suggested that local authorities should be held accountable if they do not exercise the power available to them to tackle poor conditions within the area.
Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10
- The group agree with the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland and statutory provisions regarding practice. The importance of implementing this register and administering it effectively was emphasised.

Q11
- This proposal will depend on the powers available to the First-tier Tribunal.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

Q12
- The group are in support of the proposal to introduce a new licensing scheme for mobile home sites with permanent residents.

Q13
- This new scheme could result in homelessness for permanent residents where a license is not allowed or removed.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14
- The group were in agreement with the proposed adjustments. However, legislative tools must be used by social landlords as historically landlords have been reluctant to do this.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

Q16
- SHR Transfer of Assets
  Tenants feel strongly that the Scottish Housing Regulator should identify potential insolvency before it reaches this stage and that this proposed amendment should be removed from the Bill.

  This was not included within the original draft and should be removed.

Other issues

Q17
- Local authorities and RSLs must make use of the powers available to them and implement them effectively. These organisations should be held accountable if they do not use the powers.
Q18
- Initial (probationary) tenancies

South Ayrshire Council
24.02.14
SOUTH LANARKSHIRE COUNCIL
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction
South Lanarkshire Council welcomes the opportunity to respond to the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee questionnaire seeking evidence on the Housing (Scotland) Bill at Stage 1. We have responded to the pre-Bill consultation process and have also played an active role in stakeholder discussions of the Housing Policy Advisory Group. We have also recently submitted a response to the Finance Committee questionnaire on the Housing (Scotland) Bill’s Financial Memorandum.

We are broadly supportive of the Bill’s provisions and aims and believe the legislation will have a positive impact on both safeguarding social housing and helping to improve housing conditions of the Private Rented Sector (PRS). We have a broader concern, however, that the Welfare Reform Act 2012 could have a detrimental effect on the positive aspects that the Bill provides; aside from making it more difficult for councils to meet their duties under existing housing and homelessness legislation.

The provision may also help authorities in allocating properties which would sustain or create a balanced and sustainable community. For example, age compositions of residents within blocks could be taken into account to ensure that properties that are available to relet are allocated to tenants who would not have a detrimental impact on the lives of the current residents — therefore reducing likelihood of tenancies ending prematurely or anti-social behaviour (ASB) occurring.

This response answers the questions contained in the Committee template on the Bill, that are relevant to South Lanarkshire Council. Before addressing the specific questions, the response outlines additional views on areas that we feel it would be appropriate to include in the Bill, or in future legislation.

General comments: provisions not included in the Bill
Common Housing Register (CHR)
As noted in previous consultation responses, we remain strongly of the view that there should be a statutory requirement for all social landlords to participate in a CHR. As it stands, whilst we appreciate that the Bill’s scope does not extend to include a provision to make this mandatory, since South Lanarkshire and our RSL partners established the CHR in June 2009, there has been real improvements in terms of service awareness and access. Establishing a clear statutory requirement on social landlords to actively participate in local CHRs would undoubtedly help further improve access to social rented housing across Scotland.

Introductory Tenancies
South Lanarkshire Council are of the view that establishing a system whereby introductory tenancies were more widely available to social landlords would:-
• help establish positive patterns of behaviour and promote personal responsibility by new tenants
• at the same time, the use of such tenancies would also give neighbours and the wider community reassurance that effective action could be taken against new tenants who fail to act responsibly at the outset of their tenancy
• emphasise that along with the rights associated with a council or RSL tenancy, come quite clear obligations on tenants

As noted in our response to Affordable Rented Housing: Creating flexibility for landlords & better outcomes for communities, we would propose that all tenancies which are commenced for people who are not currently a tenant of the same landlord should be established as introductory tenancies, and where an individual has lost their tenancy due to their inability or unwillingness to address their behaviour, councils should not be required to provide them with accommodation under the terms of the homelessness legislation.

In general terms we feel that it would give landlords and communities reassurance that action could more readily be taken to remove a household from their tenancy where they have failed to adhere to their tenancy conditions (especially in relation to those who engage in ASB).

Tribunal for the Social Rented Sector (SRS) and the Civil Court Review

Through previous consultations, we have argued the need for the establishment of a Housing Tribunal for the SRS. A key argument, amongst others, which we have consistently made in favour of tribunals in the SRS, is that they would afford sufficient time and expertise to be devoted to housing issues and in particular, eviction actions.

Although the Housing (Scotland) Bill does not (currently) introduce a Housing Tribunal for the SRS, we welcome the publication of the Courts Reform (Scotland) Bill earlier this month (7th February 2014). It introduces a provision to include a creation of a new judicial post – the summary sheriff - to resolve lower value civil cases, such as debt cases, more swiftly and efficiently in areas such as family and housing law.

It would be helpful if the Scottish Government would give a commitment to monitor and review the new arrangements and incorporate any findings into assessment of whether it has addressed the fundamental issues we and others (for example, the CIH) have routinely pointed to.

Taking into Account Income in Allocations

As noted in earlier consultations, taking into account income in allocations would allow landlords the opportunity to allocate houses to certain ‘income groups’ which might help achieve more balanced and sustainable communities and help landlords with their ability to meet identified housing need. However, we are clear that policies should avoid “means testing” access to the sector as this would undoubtedly further exacerbate the residulisation of the SRS. We are of the view that providing scope to consider income (albeit within specified limits) could assist social landlords to facilitate appropriate community mix.

General comments on specific Bill areas

Financial capability of local authorities to implement the Bill’s provisions

There is always a challenge for local authorities in meeting new legislative provisions with existing resources or being able to source new funds from additional borrowing. For some time now, however, we have been able to plan and take into account the financial impact of, for example, the abolition of Right to Buy (RTB). In this respect, there are a number of the Bill’s provisions that we have no major concerns with and where the financial costs associated with them can be met.

However, there are a few areas of the Bill where we do perceive a potential for significant additional resource requirements by local authorities. Whilst we support the intention of the Bill’s approach, the discretionary powers for local authorities to apply as a third party to the Private Rented Housing Panel (PRHP), where the private landlord has failed to comply with the Repairing Standard, could have considerable resource implications (aside from giving authorities ambitious new duties to enforce). For this reason, we believe it is necessary to exercise some caution in terms of the assumption inherent in the Financial Memorandum of the Bill, that local authorities can reasonably carry out this new role without identified new resources.

For the provision clarifying local authority powers to pay missing maintenance shares on behalf of owners, we have some concerns that by using this provision a local authority could find it both costly to meet the missing shares to enable the work to be carried out and onerous to recoup monies which arise from those owners who do not pay up.

The other area where we have some financial concerns relates to the cost to local authorities of resourcing housing support for tenants who have been provided with a (Short Scottish Secure Tenancy) SSST as part of the Bill’s provisions relating to ASB. Since June 2013, homeless households have been assessed for their housing support requirements as part of a new housing support duty and this combined with the requirement to offer housing support to all tenants (as long as they have a SSST), will further increase the pressure on the housing support budget.

Consultation Questions

Part 1: Right to Buy

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the Right to Buy (RTB) for social housing tenants?

South Lanarkshire Council believes abolishing the RTB will remove continuing uncertainty in terms of future levels of supply of social rented housing. The

---

1 For more information, please refer to South Lanarkshire Council’s response to the Finance Committee Questionnaire on the Housing (Scotland) Bill 2013 change will also support local authorities to meet the continuing duty to provide permanent accommodation to homeless households and to help develop the supply of affordable rented housing in line with wider strategic objectives.

In our response to the Finance Committee questionnaire on the Housing (Scotland) Bill’s Financial Memorandum, we outlined that RTB sales for South Lanarkshire Council have reduced very significantly over the last decade (where RTB receipts in 2012 accounted for 2% of funding for the Business Plan compared with 23% in 2004/5). However, recent figures suggest that the proposed policy change is already having an impact and that a ‘spike’ in RTB sales preceding the abolition of the policy is likely (where it is assumed that there will be a doubling of the 60 sales to 120 sales in 2014/15 to 2016/17).

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?
South Lanarkshire Council believes that the three year ‘grace’ period before the RTB is abolished is too long and could exacerbate a spike in sales on top of what we have already seen locally, since the intentions of the Bill were announced. As outlined in our response to The Future of Right to Buy in Scotland, a shorter notice period as possible (12 months) would protect valuable council housing stock.

Part 2: Social Housing
Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Broader Definition of Groups
In terms of how the Bill would amend the reasonable preference provisions in relation to allocation policies for social landlords, we feel the changes are more in line with modernising the language and context and will make little difference in how we allocate housing. Our housing allocation policy already ensures that those in the most acute housing need are prioritised. As a result, the Bill’s amendment to clarify that homeless people and those living in unsatisfactory housing conditions have to be in housing need merely reinforces what we and other social landlords already carry out in practice (and which has been a clear focus of the regulatory framework).

Taking Age into Account in Allocations
We believe the provision that will allow social landlords to take age into account in allocations provides welcome clarity and will be useful in terms of giving landlords enhanced flexibility in housing, for example, older people as part of a ‘sensitive’ letting approach. Social landlords will need to consider what would be considered appropriate in terms of how to apply the policy locally, but certainly, the policy could be effectively implemented to enable certain age groups to access appropriate housing and maximise their chance of maintaining their tenancy.
South Lanarkshire Council believes that consulting with tenants and a range of other stakeholders regarding changes to the allocation policy (and other housing policy areas) is a matter of good practice. Although more detail is expected, the Bill’s provisions to ensure local authorities consult and report in this manner and that their allocation policies have regard to the Local Housing Strategy are, therefore, welcomed.

Taking Home Ownership into Account in Allocations

We welcome the provision to allow social landlords to take into account home ownership in allocations. Although we would not want to prevent home owners from applying for social housing, consideration needs to be given to their financial circumstances. We believe this provision will enhance the ability of social landlords to appropriately target available housing to those in most need.

Awarding of a SSST as a Temporary Solution to Home Owners

The Council agrees with the Bill’s provision to allow landlords to award a SSST to a home owner as a temporary solution. We do not expect this change to have a significant effect, but we are aware of situations where it could be useful, for example, where an applicant is making arrangements to bring their own property back into use (e.g. temporary repair or fire/flood) but require a temporary home in the meantime.

Qualifying Periods for Succession, Subletting, Joint Tenancy Requests and Assignation

We broadly agree that the introduction of a twelve month qualifying period before tenants can exercise these rights, along with a requirement that the prospective tenant must have informed the landlord that it is their main home, should address concerns around succession, subletting, joint tenancy requests and assignation.

However, we feel it is important that within the finer policy detail surrounding these changes, that the provision allows local authorities sufficient flexibility to take into account special circumstances, as not all decisions will be simple ‘clear cut’ cases. There is a danger that if this flexibility does not exist, there could be circumstances where some people may be disadvantaged (for example, in palliative care cases where a family member has moved in with a parent/grandparent etc).

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

Tenants being ineligible for an offer of housing for a minimum period of time due to ASB or outstanding rent arrears.

South Lanarkshire Council welcomes the provisions in the Bill which clarify the circumstances in which an applicant may be made ineligible for an offer of housing for a minimum period of time and agree it may help in deterring tenants from acting anti-socially or failing to meet their obligations to pay their rent. In order to assist Councils implement the policy change, we feel it is important that supporting guidance\(^2\) for this provision is developed soon after the legislation is finalised.

Allow landlords to grant a SSST to a new applicant where there is a history of ASB

South Lanarkshire Council agrees with the provision in the Bill that social landlords have the power to grant SSSTs to new applicants where they have a history of ASB. However, as with all of the provisions relating to the granting of SSSTs in cases of ASB, there is the duty to provide housing support to the client while they are in the tenancy. While we agree this is vital, we have some concerns that the expected extra provision (of the actual support and the prior stages of the referral process) will be particularly onerous on the Council when the budget for housing support is already stretched and that no new resources have yet to be identified or allocated to local, from central, government.

Like the previous provision, we believe it is important that guidance stipulates how challenges and appeals relating to ASB from prospective tenants can be effectively and consistently dealt with.

For existing tenants who have a history of ASB – landlords are able to convert their SST to a SSST

We agree with the provision which will allow social landlords to have the ability to convert a tenants Scottish Secure Tenancy to a SSST in cases where they have a history of antisocial behaviour. In its implementation, this provision could be used as another ‘tool’ to tackle ASB in tenancies – rather than using the lengthy processes involved in evicting the tenant. In essence, it is a way in which the tenant is offered another and a final opportunity to modify their behaviour before eviction is considered.

We don’t believe that simply converting one tenancy to another is the answer to preventing anti social behaviour occurring, or that it will necessarily encourage the antisocial tenant or member of their household to change their behaviour. We do, however, feel that the provision would provide an additional tool to be used in appropriate circumstances.

Again, in common with the other ASB related provisions, there are the same resource implications for social landlords having to provide the housing support plans to tenants having converted their tenancy to a SSST.

SSST tenancy can be converted to a SST after 12 months and the extension of the SSST for a further one-off period of six months

South Lanarkshire Council agrees with the provision that will allow social landlords to convert a SSST tenancy to a SST after 12 months if the tenant refrains from acting anti-socially, and where the individual is ready to manage their tenancy without intensive support. Likewise, it appears reasonable that where the individual does not refrain from acting anti-socially that the landlord can decide to extend the SSST for a further one-off period of six months (18 months in total).

\(^2\) For example, on what type of ASB evidence would be considered appropriate or in what circumstances an applicant could challenge and appeal their ASB status.

As with the other provisions relating to ASB and use of SSSTs, we are aware that the availability of extended SSSTs may put further pressure on the housing support budget if this becomes a common route for some tenants.

Grounds for landlord eviction after criminal conviction of a tenant – where the landlord can evict without further court action

South Lanarkshire Council believes that the best means of tackling ASB is through a multi-agency approach and one which can’t be dealt with effectively as a individual agency. Whilst we agree with the inclusion of the provision in the Bill, we do not feel the specific proposal will significantly simplify the eviction process. When appearing at court seeking eviction, we would already point to relevant convictions as a fundamental aspect of our application. The key consideration for the court and the part which can be most problematic, is the courts consideration of reasonableness of the action.

We believe some clarity is required on the type of conviction that should be specified – as it may be inappropriate for all convictions to be considered ‘workable’ under this provision.

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

The policy documents which accompany the Bill for this section refer to the well acknowledged South Lanarkshire Council v McKenna case. It confirmed that reasons did not need to be given prior to or at the time of serving, the notice to quit. If the tenant disputes the reasons, they are effectively being provided with defence akin to “not reasonable to evict”. This and the compulsory 12 month term in ASB cases, may undermine the effectiveness of the use of SSSTs to deal with ASB for tenants while in this type of tenancy.

There is also a specific legal issue with the Service of Notice of Proceedings in SSST cases when using Section 16. The service of a NOP without reference to the ‘ish’ of the tenancy differs fundamentally from the usual practice in relation to service of notices and could cause confusion and error. This is because the date at which the tenancy ends (and can start again) could be associated with both the Short SST and the SST (as the Bill does not specify this). The Bill also removes the need to establish reasonableness in (ground 2) evictions. This may help councils to deal with serious ASB but could be open to challenge on human rights grounds, which could lead to lengthy and costly litigation.

---

3 http://www.tcyoung.co.uk/blog/2012/social-housing/housing-law-scotland-significant-legal-judgement
Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal (FTT)?
We are supportive of the policy objectives for this provision which aims to provide a more efficient, accessible and specialist access to justice for both landlords and tenants. It is important the FTT is funded appropriately and to ensure its effectiveness, we would support the use of full time tribunal judges – especially if the numbers of cases are expected to rise, as tenants and landlords become more aware of its functions.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities' discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?
South Lanarkshire Council welcome’s the Bill’s provisions to allow third party reporting to the PRHP and to enable local authorities to make a direct application to the panel where there is evidence that a landlord is not meeting the repairing standard. We believe it could helpful in circumstances where tenants have a difficult relationship with their private landlord – and now have an option to distance themselves from the situation.

Although we agree it is a positive measure, there needs to be a consideration that additional and specialised staff (within, for example, Environmental Services) may be required to provide this service. We are also unsure what the process would be if an officer requires access to properties to determine defects etc – as a result, guidance on matter such as this would be beneficial.

As pointed out within General Comments (above) we have some concerns relating to the continuing and costly responsibility for councils to ensure the support required to meet the provision is made available to the tenant

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?
South Lanarkshire Council welcomes provisions to be brought forward at Stage 2 but believes the new provision will lead to only a marginal change and is not significant. However, the option to seek Enhanced Enforcement Area status, may in certain circumstances improve the enforcement capability.

Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?
South Lanarkshire Council agrees with the policy intentions behind the creation of a mandatory register of letting agents and understands it may help promote better letting practice in the PRS – where both landlords and tenants will benefit. However, we are unsure how the national mandatory scheme of letting agents will be monitored and enforced at a local level. When considering an approach for registration, we would hope that the Scottish Government seeks that the appropriate balance is achieved between encouraging letting agents to provide a service and ensuring agents operate to a consistently high standard.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)? Before commenting on this provision at length we would like to see more detail on it.

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents
Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?
The suggested amendment to the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960, in respect of permanent residential sites, is welcomed (as per earlier local authority consultation). We believe the other provisions and the proposal for published guidance on setting fees, addresses the key issues.

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

We have no further comments to make on this Part.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions
Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

South Lanarkshire Council agrees with the inclusion of the provisions which clarify the existing local authority power to pay missing maintenance shares on behalf of owners who are unwilling or unable to pay their share (to ensure that local authorities are able to use that power to support majority decisions by owners for maintenance works). However, we have some concerns that by using this provision, a local authority could find it initially costly to meet the missing shares to enable the work to be carried out and thereafter, onerous to recoup monies which arise from those owners who do not pay up.

Part 7: Miscellaneous
Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

South Lanarkshire Council have no specific comments to make on this part of the Bill.

South Lanarkshire Council
28 February 2014
The following response is submitted on behalf of tenants from across South Lanarkshire based on feedback from a session held to discuss the Housing Bill.

Q1 What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

Tenants were still broadly concerned about the proposal to remove the right to buy and felt that it was too late to make a difference as most social landlords had already lost most of their more desirable stock. The consensus was that right to buy should be left as is, and with the changes already made by the Scottish Government less and less stock would be lost. Indeed a majority of the tenants felt that by abolishing the right to buy social landlords would lose more stock over the next 3 years as tenants felt forced to make a decision to exercise their right. This is particularly the case as rent increases continue to be greater than inflation and wage increases. Could the proposal end up losing more social stock than if it had been left as is?

Q2 Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

Assuming the proposal to abolish Right to Buy is made, tenants felt that a 3 year window was not sufficient to give tenants an appropriate time to decide whether to exercise their right to buy. They felt a 5 year window would be more appropriate. They would also like clarity on what happens with applications that have been made before the ‘deadline’ which have not yet been completed.

They feel that if the proposal is accepted and Right to Buy is indeed abolished then the Government needs to take steps to inform every tenant individually who will lose their right. Whether this is organised by landlords or not, the tenants felt the Government should fund the publicity.

Q3 In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Tenants support the proposal to give landlords more flexibility in allocations, particularly the change to include those who are under occupying. Tenants also support the changes made with regard to home ownership and ability to be allocated a social property. Tenants on the whole however, do worry that the lack of stock will always be an issue in addressing housing need, despite the very welcome investment by the Scottish Government in social and in particular Council Housing.
Q4 Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

Tenants feel it will make a little difference and so should be welcomed. However, tenants still felt that landlords and agencies needed to be doing more to prevent anti social behaviour impacting on communities. Tenants are very supportive of the proposal to enable landlords to use convictions in another court to support eviction proceedings.

Further comments

Tenants are concerned about the extra powers being granted to the Regulator, especially as there has been no consultation in this area.

South Lanarkshire Tenants Development Support Project
24.02.14
SOUTH WEST SCOTLAND REGIONAL NETWORK
(Dumfries & Galloway, East Ayrshire and South Ayrshire)

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction

South West Scotland Regional Network is one of the 9 Regional Networks of Registered Tenants Organisations (RTOs) formed in 2008 and covers the local authority areas of Dumfries & Galloway, East Ayrshire and South Ayrshire.

We are a committee of 12, elected annually, and generally represent the views of our tenant and resident members of the 49 RTOs across our area.

We welcome being involved in the extensive consultations held on many of the proposals included in the Bill and we particularly welcome the proposals to abolish the Right to Buy and the provisions on social sector allocations and tenancies.

However, we are disappointed that the proposal to create a Housing Tribunal for the social rented sector and the introduction of Probationary Tenancies are not included in the Bill.

Our comments are as follows on the provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Bill are:

Part 1 – the Right to Buy

- The Right to Buy (RTB) should now be abolished in order to safeguard and protect the limited social housing resource that we currently have in Scotland.

- The timetable for abolishing the RTB should be less than 3 years and we would propose one year. We consider that people who currently have the RTB, have had this right for a significant number of years and have not exercised it in these years and may now be unlikely to do so, and we do not wish any more houses to be lost through RTB.

Part 2 – Social Housing

a) Allocations

We agree with this measure as it removes an unhelpful barrier to landlords wanting to allocate to particular groups in specific situations and believe the Bill makes it explicit that removing this age bar does not mean that landlords can discriminate against particular age groups or that it contravenes the Equality Act 2010.

However we consider that landlords should be enabled to allocate housing in a “common sense approach” in order to sustain tenancies, protect the interests of existing tenants in terms of their right to live in a safe and secure environment and allocate tenancies in a sensitive manner with regard to the demographic of other people living in neighbouring properties, with particular regard to areas or property types that are more suitable for or already have older people living in them.

Landlords should be able to take an applicant’s previous Antisocial Behaviour (ASB) into account when considering whether or not to offer them a house. This should also include homeless applicants previously evicted for ASB.

Landlords must consult tenants and tenants’ organisations on any proposals to change allocations policies and procedures.

b) Probationary Tenancies (Initial tenancies)

The outcome of the Governments consultation concluded that the majority of the sector, including tenant responses, were in favour of introducing Probationary tenancies (or Initial Tenancies) and we are disappointed that it was dropped for this Housing Bill.

We strongly support the introduction of initial tenancies and support the introduction of probationary tenancies for all social housing tenants and believe that the benefits of introducing this outweigh any negativity especially when it has the real potential to help deal with tenancy problems, such as anti-social behaviour, much sooner.

c) Short Scottish Secure Tenancies (SSSTs)

We consider that:

- Short Scottish Secure Tenancies should be increased to 12months
- Under no circumstances should people be allocated a social rented house and continue to keep their own home elsewhere.
- Landlords should be able to allocate Short Scottish Secure Tenancies to allow them to work with people with a previous history of ASB.

d) Antisocial Behaviour - SSSTs

We consider that:

- Landlords should be able to give all new tenants Short Scottish Secure Tenancies where there has been previous ASB
• Landlords should be able to convert full Scottish Secure Tenancies to Short tenancies where they are dealing with a tenants ASB to allow them to work with the tenant to try to improve the behaviour or stop the tenancy where the ASB continues

• Increasing the timescale of a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy should allow landlords additional time to monitor tenancies and provide tenancy support. This should be an increase to 12 months with potential to extend to 18 months if things improving. However it should be noted it is vital that this does not mean that other tenants suffer ASB in their communities for a longer period of time

• Landlords should be able to continue to extend Short Scottish Secure Tenancies until they are convinced that the tenancies will not cause problems to neighbours and / or the wider community

• Landlords should continue to provide tenancy support whilst tenants have a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy and there needs to be powers for landlords to make sure that the ASB can be addressed or tenancy terminated

Part 3 – Private Rented Housing

In terms of the private rented sector, we agree that there needs to be increased powers and measures to deal with this sector, and that this is required in relation to:

• Ensuring private tenants have up to date and accurate information on their rights and responsibilities

• Protecting the rights of private tenants

• Protecting the rights of the private landlords and

• Protecting the rights of other tenants and residents in communities where:
  o Private tenants are the cause of ASB, damage to the property of other tenants and residents in the block, street or community
  o Ensuring common repair and investment work is carried out that social landlords need to or want to do for their tenants and properties o Private landlords lack of care or investment in properties causes problems for social housing tenants or landlords

a) The Tribunal

We agree that the introduction of the private sector housing tribunal is positive HOWEVER it should be noted that we are disappointed that this has not been included in the Bill for the social rented sector as per our response to the Dispute Resolution Consultation in 2013. In addition it should be noted that:
Further information and clarification is required on the operation and enforcement powers of the Tribunal and that the Tribunal needs to “have clout and teeth” or it will not be worth the bother.

The Tribunal needs to be able to “streamline” the disputes process and make it easier and quicker than the current operation via the Sheriff Court system.

b) Private Rented Housing Panel

We agree that:

- Local Authorities should have increased powers to enforce the repairing standard.
- That evidence in relation to private landlords not meeting the standard should not just have to come from tenants and that neighbours, fire and rescue services, police, others and the local authority itself should be able to provide this evidence.
- Where appeals are made by the private landlord, the funding required from the Local Authority to defend their position / action should not come from Housing Revenue Accounts (HRA’s).
- The Private Rented Housing Panel should make the process simpler and more streamlined and that the Panel should have “teeth” and be a less onerous process than using the Sheriff Court system.
- Local Authorities will require enforcement powers to ensure the repairs and maintenance work is carried out.
- All Private Lets should meet the repairing standard and Local authorities should have increased powers to enforce this.

Part 4 – Letting Agents

We consider that:

- Letting Agents should be subject to a robust and effective registration scheme.
- Local Authorities should have additional enforcement powers in areas where there are issues with management of all stock owned by this landlord.
- Local Authorities should have increased powers to deal with private landlords where there are issues in relation to:
  - The behaviour of the tenant living in their property.
The lack of repairs and maintenance of the property and any common areas, especially where this social housing tenants and / or properties

- Letting Agents should be required to meet and sign up to a Code of conduct
- Guidelines need to be developed
- Letting Agent Registration and Code of conduct “needs to have teeth”
- Disputes between agent and landlord should be addressed by Trading Standards
- The Bill and the Scottish Government needs to look at “beefing up” existing systems and ensure Local Authorities and other involved implement the use of the full powers already available rather than adding new things

Part 6 – Private Housing Condition

We agree that Local Authorities should have powers to enforce private landlords to carry out repairs and improvement to their properties. In addition in properties where social landlords own some of the properties, social landlords should have additional powers to enforce repairs and easier mechanisms to encourage private landlords to contribute their share of improvement works required.

Consideration should be given to developing a private rented housing standard, similar to the Scottish Housing Quality Standard.

Others

a) SHR Transfer of Assets

These changes were not the subject of previous consultation.

We strongly disagree with this provision and would like to see this removed from the Bill and that the consultation with tenants’ clause is retained.

It is our view that if the SHR is “doing its job properly”, that evidence of potential insolvency will be known in ample time to ensure the RSL tenants are consulted on any proposals to transfer to or merge with or be taken over by another landlord, therefore we do not agree that the requirement to consult should be removed.

For the reasons outlined above, we also do not consider that the duty on the SHR to always obtain a valuation of assets or direct a transfer at an open market valuation should be removed. The value of assets should always be known.

South West Scotland Regional Network
21 February 2014
I would like to present our views on the proposed new licensing scheme (Question 12) and the implications this new scheme might have for permanent residents of sites (Question 13)

We feel that no consideration has been given to residents who have a signed agreement with the site owner. In our case my husband and I thought long and hard before embarking on living in a Residential Park Home Site as we were not envisaging making another move in our lifetime. Our discussions with the Site Owner satisfied us that we would have long term security and safety within a well maintained and managed site

If the new licensing scheme goes ahead we feel that we would be in a very worrying situation as we would be put in a position of “wait and see” if the Site is going to be granted a license every 3 years. Where are we to live if the site is not granted a licence? It seems a detrimental move for residents rather than an enhancing of the rules and potentially could leave us with the financial burden of not being able to sell our home or having to move elsewhere, surely there has to be a reasonable way of the Scottish Government to deal with this matter.

It seems to us that because of a few bad site owners the many good site owners are being penalised with the cost of licensing which will subsequently be passed on to the site residents.

We understand that there has to be rules and regulations in place to safeguard residents but feel obliged to point out that in passing the proposed recommendations this would cause severe stress and worry about the long term future of residency on our Site. The present system in place and the agreement we have with the owner of our Site works very well and removes our future worries.

Janis and Thomas Stoddart (Individual)
20 February 2014
TENANCY AND ESTATE MANAGEMENT SERVICE

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Q1 - What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

Increase in housing stock to meet demand.
Improved access to social housing when people's personal circumstances need it the most.
Safeguard housing stock for future generations, helping to build more cohesive and sustainable communities.
Assist Scottish Government's investment in housing and deliver on their target of 30,000 new affordable homes over the lifetime of this Parliament.
Safeguard an estimated 15,000 homes over the next decade for future generations to access social housing.

Q2 - Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

Deemed to be fair under Human Rights consideration for tenants to be given reasonable time to exercise their right to buy the property.
Provide tenants time to way up financial options.
Some authorities have asked for Ministers to concede to reduce the timescale for provisions to come into force from 3 to 2 years.
A 3 year lead in time may lead to a spike in applications over this period. The impacts of this on business plans will need to be modelled.

Q4 - In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Changes to rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing are welcomed, as they will enable social landlords to be more flexible and make best use of available stock to allocate tenancies which are more sustainable, particularly where issues around lifestyle clashes can be foreseen (elderly / young / vulnerable tenants. The ability to seek recovery of adapted properties also contributes to an overall improvement in use of stock.

It would also be helpful if we could take into account location of previous ASB / or where people involved in previous ASB now reside (i.e. if their friends, who were previously involved in ASB at their property are now living near where a new tenancy is available for them). This would help us prevent more ASB occurring in future.

The introduction of a minimum period before an applicant may be eligible for housing will be helpful in certain circumstances, e.g. previous tenant who has abandoned a tenancy; previous tenants with rent arrears still to pay; those with history of ASB. This would have to be considered on a case-by-case basis though.
The need for an occupant to inform the landlord when they move into a property and to qualify for the longer 12 month qualifying period for succession will mean that the succession process is less open to abuse.

Q5 - Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

There are a number of points under this section, so comments have been split as follows:

- Minimum period before applicant eligible for housing:
  Good when there are ongoing issues at tenancy. Minimum period can be placed on someone wanting to move / MX if they have been behaving anti-socially. This may help reduce ASB levels and act as an incentive to adhere to tenancy conditions.

- Able to put tenant on SSST if there is evidence of ASB during the last three years in locality of property:
  Makes conversion process easier, and would mean we could possibly do this prior to an ASBO being gained.

- For allocation of SSST on basis of previous ASB:
  Helps us in situations where ASBO has not been granted or has not been suitable at a previous tenancy. Often persons will abandon or terminate a tenancy before an ASBO can be obtained, and this will give us additional tools to tackling anti-social behaviour if a person reapplies for housing.

- Can extend SSST’s for ASB or previous eviction for further 6 months but tenant needs to be in receipt of HST:
  Gives Housing longer to establish / ensure that a person is able to sustain a tenancy. Extra 6 months with support will help us tackle ASB but also help sustain tenancies at the same time. The tenancy can be ended during this period if the tenant fails to engage in support.

- Same procedure for recovery of possession in SST.
  This makes sense and reduces the period of time to give a tenant notice to 4 weeks instead of having to wait 8 weeks to terminate the SSST. Quicker process to take action.

- Removes requirement that court considers whether it is reasonable to make an order for eviction, in cases where another court has already convicted a tenant of using the house for immoral or illegal purposes or of an offence punishable by imprisonment, committed in, or in the locality of, the house. The tenant retains a right to challenge the court action:
  Is only likely to be used in cases where a tenant has received a prison sentence for a crime committed. Will be on a case-by-case basis, however, this means less onus on Housing to prove that an eviction order is reasonable. Onus more so on the tenant to prove eviction order is not reasonable. Also gives housing 12 months from date of sentencing to act. This is a good period of time, especially if we do not become aware of a conviction at the time of sentencing.

Q6 - Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government's objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SST's, by strengthening their rights?

The introduction a minimum SSST period of 12 months will be of benefit to tenants, as it gives them longer to demonstrate their behaviour and ability to manage a tenancy. Also more security for tenants, and more time to settle in an area.

The changes to the repossession process should also be of benefit to the tenant, the shorter period for notices to be served being less stressful since they do not have to wait two months for a final decision. If the tenant decides to appeal the decision, they will be better informed as to why the SSST is being ended as the landlord will have to notify of the reasons the tenancy is being ended, and there will be a national standard to be met by the landlord.

Q7 - Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

We welcome the introduction of the First-Tier tribunals to deal specifically with private rented sector cases. It is felt that the new process will give sufficient weight to existing issues, not solely related to property condition, which will allow private rented tenants accessible and efficient recourse against landlords who are potentially avoiding dealing with problems.

Although the Tribunals Bill is current before Parliament, therefore not finalised at present, will the Scottish Government be providing publicity information for a new Tribunal which will be available to private sector tenants.

Given the proposed changes in this Bill with regards to third party referrals to the Private Rented Housing Panel, clarification would be appreciated in relation to who can approach a tribunal. As with third party referrals to the PRHP, the same issues can apply to making a case to a tribunal against a landlord. Many tenants may feel unable to do this themselves, for a range of reasons, and will require assistance to put forward an effect case. If this were to involve local authorities, the question of resources to deal with the influx of this type of work.

Q8 - Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities' discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?
Clackmannanshire Council fully supports the amendment to legislation introducing third party referrals to the Private Rented Housing Panel. From experience we know that some private tenants are unwilling or unable, for a range of reason, to approach the PRHP with concerns about the condition of their home. As much as possible we currently provide assistance to tenants in these situations but it is still very much in the hands of tenants, potentially vulnerable at times, and they do not always follow through with the guidance provided. Therefore leaving them still in a position of having a home which may not reach the repairing standard.

By enabling local authorities to make applications on behalf of private tenants, effectively in an advocacy role, will hopefully help to put some 'weight' behind an application and make a landlord take the claims seriously. It will also ensure consistency in approach, making the sure the tenant responds accordingly to each part of the process.

Q9 - Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector

We welcome the intention of the new Stage 2 provisions to implement enhanced enforcement areas. Although we do not have any significant issues within Clackmannanshire at present where these provisions could apply there are certainly benefits to having them available.

Q10 - Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

The creation of a mandatory register for letting agents, along with the introduction of statutory provisions (code of practice) is welcomed. At present there is a wide variation in the level of service provided by letting agents to both private tenants and landlords.

It will be beneficial to all involved to have a standard which Agents are expected to attain. However information will require to be available as to how this will be monitoring. Will there a similar 'light touch' approach as per Landlord Registration?

At present it seems unclear as to who will administer the register of Letting Agents. Will this be done by the Scottish Government or will be a role for local authorities? If this is the case then the resource implications of this role will need to be clearly examined. Particularly in relation to enforcement issues when a letting agent does not comply with the code of practice.

Lessons should be learned from the Landlord Registration scheme in terms of operation of the IT system and how useful this will be. It will be beneficial to be able to carry out full reporting options, such as producing reports to identify the number of properties managed by agents in a particular area, number of agents operating in an area, etc. Currently the registration system makes it difficult to identify numbers of properties owned where there are joint owners, properties can be double counted.

Q11 - Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenant)?

We welcome the ability for both landlords and tenants to be able to apply to the FFT if they feel there has been a breach in practices by an agent. However, we are cautious as to the impact this will have. How will agents be monitored if they have an enforcement order placed on them? Will this be the local authority assuming this role?

Also if an agent is subsequently removed from the register due to non compliance with the Code of Practice what will the implications be for their landlords and tenants? For example, will they be entitled to compensation if the issue relates to a financial matter handled incorrectly by the agent?

Q12 - Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

And

Q13 - What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

Clackmannanshire has a limited presence of licensed sites.

We have licensed sites at; Woods Caravan Park, Diverswell, Coalsnaughton and another private site at Riverside Dollar. In addition we have a Council owned site at Westhaugh.

Beyond these sites we have had small privately owned sites for individual families at Marchglen and Gartlove, though both of these sites appear to subsequently been vacated.

Finally, we have an issue with agricultural sites with individual vans for farm workers. These are currently exempt under Schedule 1 of the 1960 Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 where a licence is not required. We think there may be a couple of caravans at the Poultry units at Blackgrange and Gartmorn for staff working there, but will check this out. There was also a planning application/enquiry for siting a caravan at Harviestoun Home Farm, which is exempt from Licensing.

“For the use as a caravan site of agricultural land for accommodation during a particular season of a person or persons employed in farming operations on land in the same occupation”.

Most of our licensing and enforcement under current legislation is dealt with by our Environmental health Service. Current activity is simply related to ensuring a licence is in place as well as ensuring basic Health and Safety and Environmental concerns are addressed—such as eclectics and adequate sanitation or supply of fresh water. For Clackmannanshire only one site is known to have permanent residents—other than the Council site at Westhaugh. The additional requirements therefore should not present a significant challenge and may be an inherently positive step to ensure a consistent standard of behaviour is evident. The controls and standards now increasingly common in private rented accommodation should be enjoyed by those permanent on private sites. Powers to take action and enforce improvement are particularly welcome as is the power to revoke licence.

The only remaining exemption may relate as said above to agricultural workers on smaller farm sites, or on small privately owned Gypsy/Traveller sites. Again Clackmannanshire has only evidence of a couple of such sites.

The implication for residents would add to existing powers and have to be positive guarantee of basic constant minimum standards for the management of their site. For the owners it will mean having to pass a fit and proper test and ensure their permanent residents enjoy at least those standards applicable to wider private residents. We respect the views expressed in the consultation that the system should seek to avoid onerous bureaucracy and that for the more malicious site owners there is often a difficulty in identifying from complex business and family structures, who should sit the fit and proper test.

Q14 - Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenement properties.

Statistics show that there are around 1.8 million private homes in Scotland 80% of which have some form of disrepair. Improving the condition of Scotland’s private housing stock would contribute to goals for housing quality, climate change and economic growth. Increased annual spending by owners on maintenance may reduce the long term repair costs and possibly improve the value of the property.

Disrepair should be addressed to ensure that people are able to live in good quality homes and encouraging home owners to invest in maintenance may benefit the Construction Industry.

Granting discretionary powers to local authorities will ensure that they have a range of powers to tackle poor condition in the private sector. This also incorporates a new section in the Tenements(Scotland) Act 2006 allowing Local Authorities to pay a missing share when the majority of the owners in a tenement block have agreed to carry out work repair or maintain their property and one or more of the owners has not paid their share of the work. This ensures that the other owners are not liable for the costs of another owner which are met by a share paid by the Local Authority.

There is also additional grounds where a work notice can be issued where work is needed to improve the safety and security of any house, regardless of whether or not that it is situated in a housing renewal area. Local Authorities also have discretionary third party reporting rights to enable them to make a direct application to the Private Rented Housing Panel where there is evidence that a landlord is not meeting the repairing standard.

There has been broad support for these additional measures, but this brings with it significant concerns about how this may work in practice. This could lead to substantial additional enforcement costs for Local Authorities. The Private Rented Housing Panel itself would have to incur set-up costs for the first year, this would have to include the cost of judicial recruitment and training of panel members, president fees, general office expenses and staff salaries for these involved in the set-up. Also, research into the private sector tenement properties suggests that maintenance is a relatively low priority and the first priority is to protect the function and appearance of the home.

The power to pay missing shares in relation to the tenement management scheme of a block is useful with regards to helping proactive owners proceed with works in particular situations, however, there are concerns over the resource implications of this.

The proposed changes to work notices and maintenance orders are welcomed and hopefully they will make things smoother in the aim of encouraging owners to take responsibility towards property maintenance.

We welcome the amendment to repayment charges being applicable to non-residential part of a building including housing. Hopefully this will make reclaiming costs from commercial properties easier, however, it does still have a potential repayment period of up to 30 years. This again will have a possible impact on the resources available from local authorities to fund works in the first instance.

Q16 - Do you have any comments in relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in the part of the Bill?

No

Q17 - Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill's policy objectives or specific provisions?

No

Q18 - Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the bill?

No

Tenancy and Estate Management Service
27 February 2014
1. Overview and background to the Regional Networks

The 9 Regional Networks of Registered Tenants Organisations (RTOs) were formed in 2008 with the support from the Scottish Government and cover the length and breadth of Scotland. The networks comprise of 98 committee members elected annually from the 600 RT0s across Scotland to represent the views of their tenant and resident members.

We work with Scottish Government officials in developing and influencing national housing policy on issues important to tenants and the wider community and we feed in tenants and residents views to Scottish Government Housing Strategy and Housing Policy.

The Networks have been involved in the development of “Firm Foundations”, the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010, the Scottish Social Housing Charter (which was drawn up in conjunction with tenants), new guidance on the use of Housing Revenue Accounts and the Housing Bill 2013.

We have also contributed to Policy Sounding Boards and Advisory Boards such as the Housing Policy Working Group, Affordable Rented Housing Advisory Group and the Housing Benefit Reform Stakeholder Advisory Group.

The Networks also have liaison meetings with senior Housing Policy staff from time to time, and regularly relay views on Policy either directly or through the Scottish Government Tenant Priorities Team.

Currently we have regular discussions at senior level, primarily, with the Minister for Housing and Welfare, as well as with Housing Supply Section, the Scottish Housing Regulator and have regular training and/or information sessions with other Stakeholders involved in the Housing field, including CIH, TPAS, TIS and others.

2. General comments on the Bill

Overall there is much to welcome in this wide-ranging Bill. The networks have been represented on a number of key Scottish Government working groups involved in the development of the Bill. The networks were also pleased to be involved in the extensive consultations which were held on many of the proposals included in the Bill. We particularly welcome the proposals to abolish the Right to Buy and the provisions on social sector allocations and tenancies.
3. Issues not included in the Bill

We are, on the whole, disappointed that the proposal to create a Housing Tribunal for the social rented sector and the introduction of Probationary Tenancies are not included in the Bill.

4. The Bill

4.1 Right to Buy (RTB), Part 1

The Networks welcome the proposal in the Bill to abolish the RTB and thank the Scottish Government for listening to tenants views on this issue.

The Regional Networks view, however, is that the proposed transitional period of 3 years is too long and feel that this should be reduced to a period of one year. This shortened period of notice would still likely be within the rules of European Human Rights legislation.

Based on diminishing house sales over the years, we believe that there is not going to be a rush from existing tenants to exercise their right to buy at the last minute and conclude that one year notice should be stipulated from the date of Royal Assent.

4.2 Social Housing (Part 2)

Allocations

The Bill presents a proposal to increase flexibility for Landlords in allocation of tenancies, including “reasonable preferences” to those who wish to be considered for Social Housing. This also takes account of age, and whilst Landlords must take account of the 2010 Equalities Act, Networks feel that this will assist to protect sustainability.

Sustainability of communities and a sensitive lettings framework will ensure that there are balances when introducing younger tenants. Often younger people have tenancies which are short-lived and sustainability has to be of importance if Landlords are to have viable mixed communities.

Networks believe that giving this flexibility to landlords will allow them to allocate tenancies sensitively as appropriate and make best use of their housing stock.

Probationary Tenancies (Initial tenancies)

When tenants and other stakeholders were consulted on this proposal in 2012, the majority of all respondents to the consultation favoured the introduction of initial (or probationary) tenancies.

Initial tenancies would have been applied solely to all NEW tenants and would have introduced a statutory 12 month period of a Short Scottish Secure Tenancies
Short Scottish Secure Tenancies (SSST)

It is to be recognised that the Bill also proposes extended powers to convert tenancies to a SSST from an SST where there are violations of the tenancy agreement and extensions of this power can be applied to a tenant but is subject to the right of appeal.

Such a policy, in some cases, is not always applied by landlords, particularly in cases of Anti-Social Behaviour (ASB) which can take up so much time and resources with which to authenticate such instances.

The networks generally welcome the introduction of this SSST extended power.

4.3 SHR Amendments.

The Bill proposes to remove the requirement for the SHR to consult with tenants prior to the removal of Assets of a Registered Social Landlord (RSL) where there is immediate threat of Insolvency.

The Networks strongly disagree with this provision and would like to see this removed from the Bill and that the consultation with tenants’ clause is retained.

We feel that tenants should always be consulted on issues as important as this and that consultation could be carried out quickly without jeopardising any actions that the SHR takes or requires the RSL to take to protect the interests of tenants and their homes.

4.4 Private Rented Sector, Parts 3 & 6

We are pleased to see the focus on the Private Rented sector and making it fairer and safer for the growing number of tenants relying on the sector. The difficult financial situation and the growing waiting list have made renting in the Private Sector the only housing option for many families and individuals, yet despite this growth there continue to be a lack of protection for tenants in this sector.

The Regional Networks feel that the regulation of the private sector still does not give adequate protection for tenants in this sector.

Letting Agents

We are disappointed that the proposed regulatory framework for letting agents falls far short of proper and full regulation similar to the way the social rented sector is regulated. We would like to see a mandatory set of professional standards for letting agents introduced and monitored. This will ensure proper checks and balances where there are disputes between Agents and Landlords/Tenants.

Tackling poor housing standards in the Private Rented Sector

We also are aware that the Bill gives Local Authorities new discretionary powers in relation to tackling poor standard housing by private landlords. The regional networks feel the Bill does not go far enough and want effective and transparent mechanisms in place to ensure that Private Landlords adhere to the new legislation and that they will be monitored for compliance with the legislation.

4.5 Housing Tribunal

Regional Networks welcome the First Tier Tribunal system (Housing Tribunal) for the private sector which should give added protection to both tenants and landlords. Similarly, we welcome the Private Rented Housing Panel which will allow Local Authorities to bring cases on behalf of tenants.

Regional Networks feel that this Panel system should also cover disputes in the Social rented Sector. The impact on Social Housing Tenants waiting on resolution of disputes with their landlord, and the fact that most are through the judicial system, with long waiting periods before their dispute is heard, does not inspire good faith on behalf of the courts. A team of Housing experts would be preferential for tenants in the Social rented sector, rather than a prolonged court system decided by one Sherriff.

Central Regional Network on behalf of the Registered Tenant Organisation Regional Networks in Scotland.
18 February 2014.
1. TPO Overview

History and Purpose

1.1 The Property Ombudsman (TPO) has been providing alternative dispute resolution to the property industry for 24 years.

1.2 Originally established in 1990 as the Ombudsman for Corporate Estate Agents, in 1997 the scheme was renamed as the Ombudsman for Estate Agents, later changing to TPO to reflect its broader jurisdiction covering disputes relating to sales, lettings, personal search organisations, residential leasehold management, international sales (through UK based agents), chattels auctions and commercial property.

1.3 In June 2008 TPO was the first redress scheme to gain the status of an Office of Fair Trading (OFT) Approved Estate Agents Redress Scheme under the provisions of the Consumers, Estate Agents and Redress Act 2007. TPO is currently in the process of applying for approval as an approved letting and managing agent redress scheme under the provisions of the Enterprise and Regulatory Reform Act 2013 (ERR), prior to mandatory redress requirements being introduced for all letting and management agents in England.

1.4 TPO provides consumers with a free, impartial and independent alternative dispute resolution service for complaints against TPO scheme members (property agents operating throughout the UK). The Ombudsman’s resolutions are designed to achieve a full and final settlement of the dispute and all claims made by either party. The Ombudsman can, where appropriate, make compensatory awards in individual cases up to a maximum of £25,000 for actual and quantifiable loss and/or for aggravation, distress and/or inconvenience caused by the actions of a registered firm.
1.5 The Property Ombudsman Limited is a ‘not for profit’ company limited by guarantee. There is no cost to the consumer or the taxpayer for TPO’s services.

1.6 Scottish Letting Agents and TPO Membership

1.7 The Scottish Government estimate that there are around 719 letting agent businesses (branches) in operation which account for about 50% (150,000) of annual lettings.

- Overall, the number of Scottish property agents registered with TPO is 457
- The number of Scottish agents providing a lettings service and registered with TPO is 216
- The number of letting branches in Scotland registered with TPO is 309

UK Membership, Standards and TPO’s Codes of Practice

1.8 TPO’s Code of Practice for Residential Estate Agents has received full approval from Trading Standards Consumer Codes Approval Scheme (CCAS) and is followed by 12,181 estate agent branches who are members of TPO. We believe this equates to approximately 95% of the estate agents trading in the UK.

1.9 Despite no current legal requirement for letting agents to be registered with a redress scheme, the TPO Code of Practice for Residential Letting Agents is voluntarily followed by 10,989 letting agent branches who are members of TPO. Based on the same figures used by the Scottish Government in point 184 of the Housing (Scotland) Bill – Financial Memorandum (contained in the Explanatory Notes), we consider this equates to approximately 90% of letting agents trading in the UK.

1.10 TPO’s new Code of Practice for Residential Lettings Agents is in the process of being finalised prior to achieving CCAS approval. Significant changes to the current Code include updated requirements of the Equalities Act 2010; more explicit requirements in relation to the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008; the upcoming changes to the consumer cancellation rights contained in the Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013; clarification in relation to the charging of premiums to Scottish tenants; the requirement to provide tenant information packs to potential tenants in Scotland and updated deposit registration requirements for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

1.11 TPO’s Codes of Practice are widely respected and used throughout the property sector by other industry bodies. For example the National Association of Estate Agents (NAEA) and the Association of Residential Letting Agents (ARLA) use TPO’s Codes as the basis for their own judgements regarding their members conduct. In addition, TPO’s Codes have been replicated by other trade bodies to use as their own membership codes, for example the UK Association of Letting Agents (UKALA).

1.12 Customer satisfaction and compliance surveys carried out as part of CCAS monitoring requirements have shown a consistent increase in consumer (buyer and seller) satisfaction with member firms and the firms’ compliance with the TPO Code of Practice for Residential Estate Agents. Similar positive results have been received for CCAS monitoring carried out on TPO letting agents who voluntarily follow the Code of Practice for Residential Letting Agents.

1.13 The cost of TPO membership is £170 (plus VAT) per office which covers the agent for letting, sales, buying, commercial, international and auction related services.

Governance, Independence and Principles

1.14 The Ombudsman provides redress, where appropriate, to consumers whose complaints are supported after consideration on a case by case basis. Redress is intended to put the consumer back into the position they were before the complaint arose. The Ombudsman is not a regulator and does not have the authority to take regulatory or legal action against a registered firm. The Ombudsman does not have the power to impose fines or dictate the way in which firms conduct their business.
1.15 The scheme charges its members an annual subscription collected by the Board of TPO Ltd. However, it is the TPO Council, chaired by Lord Richard Bes, who appoints the Ombudsman and sets his Terms of Reference, (i.e. how the complaint process operates). The Ombudsman is accountable to the Council and reports directly to them. The Council’s majority is made up of non-industry members in accordance with the company’s Articles of Association.

1.16 Agents who do not comply with the Ombudsman’s decisions or who have been referred to TPO for other compliance related matters can be referred to the Disciplinary and Standards Committee (DSC) who can impose sanctions on the agent or, if necessary, expel the agent from membership. The DSC is accountable to the Council and is made up of non-industry members with representation from the Board. Serious non-compliance matters which are potentially illegal are referred to the relevant authority (e.g. Trading Standards).

1.17 Unresolved complaints concerning TPO’s service can be referred to the Council who, if appropriate, will ask the Independent Reviewer to conduct an internal investigation.

1.18 TPO’s Annual Report includes reports from both the DSC and the Independent Reviewer. The DSC also issue press releases, where appropriate, to inform consumers about agents expelled from the scheme.

1.19 TPO is a full ‘ombudsman member’ of the Ombudsman Association (previously named the British and Irish Ombudsman Association - BIOA) and the Ombudsman sits on its Executive Committee. TPO operates in accordance with the organisation’s principles of good governance:

- Independence
- Openness and transparency
- Accountability
- Integrity
- Clarity of purpose
• Effectiveness

2. TPO’s work in 2012

2.1 At the time of writing TPO’s Annual Report for 2013 is being compiled. Whilst statistics have yet to be finalised, it is apparent that complaints related to lettings activities have once again increased by around 20%, with the most prevalent issues being communication, complaint handling and repair and maintenance.

2.2 Unlike the single source data collected by consumer organisations, the Ombudsman’s investigations consider submissions from both side of the dispute to enable him to determine what is fair and reasonable in the specific circumstances of the of the case, taking into account the requirements of the TPO Code of Practice and relevant legislation.

2.3 During 2012, TPO received complaint enquiries from 15,782 consumers. Relevant to lettings, 8,334 tenants and landlords raised complaint enquiries which covered 14,017 different issues.

2.4 Relevant to Scotland, TPO received 333 complaint enquiries from landlords and tenants covering 561 issues. Most enquiries related to more than one issue, a common occurrence in letting disputes. From these enquiries, 35 cases required a formal review. The remainder were either resolved informally by TPO staff or the consumer was signposted to the appropriate organisation.

2.5 The average award made against a letting agent in 2012 was £325 and 70% of all disputes were either supported in whole or in part by the Ombudsman.

2.6 The majority of complaint enquiries referred to TPO were resolved by providing consumers with further information, signposting to appropriate bodies and/or directing the letting agent to deal with the complaint in accordance with the in-house complaint procedure set out in the TPO Code of Practice.
2.7 Overall, the combined UK 2012 figures represented a 12% increase in letting complaint enquiries and a 22% increase in cases requiring formal reviews compared with 2011. Whilst currently unconfirmed, figures for 2013 indicate an estimated lettings workload increase of 20% on 2012 figures.

2.8 Using the grouping system recently employed by the Office of Fair Trading, TPO data relating to complaint enquiries and formal reviews for the UK in 2012 are displayed in Tables 1 and 2:

Table 1 – UK Complaint Enquiries – Issues

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>OFT Groups</th>
<th>Issues</th>
<th>Percentage</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Group 1 – Fees and charges</td>
<td>1,713</td>
<td>12.22%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group 2 – Agents providing poor service</td>
<td>7,553</td>
<td>53.88%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group 3 – Security deposits</td>
<td>878</td>
<td>6.26%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group 4 – Delayed and substandard repairs</td>
<td>791</td>
<td>5.64%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group 5 – Unfair business practices</td>
<td>2,676</td>
<td>19.09%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Other</td>
<td>406</td>
<td>2.90%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Totals</td>
<td>14,017</td>
<td>100%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Table 2 – UK Formal Reviews – Issues

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>OFT Groups</th>
<th>Issues</th>
<th>Percentage</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Group 1 – Fees and charges</td>
<td>401</td>
<td>19.77%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group 2 – Agents providing poor service</td>
<td>1,022</td>
<td>50.39%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group 3 – Security deposits</td>
<td>183</td>
<td>9.02%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group 4 – Delayed and substandard repairs</td>
<td>180</td>
<td>8.88%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group 5 – Unfair business practices</td>
<td>70</td>
<td>3.45%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Other</td>
<td>172</td>
<td>8.48%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>---------</td>
<td>-----</td>
<td>-------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Totals</td>
<td>2,028</td>
<td>100%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

2.9 Overall UK figures fairly reflect the balance between complaint issue groups in relation to disputes concerning Scottish letting agents referred to TPO.

3. TPO response to the Scottish Government’s call for views on the Housing (Scotland) Bill

   Part 1: Right to Buy

3.1 Q1 and Q2 - TPO has no comments on this aspect of the Bill.

   Part 2: Social Housing

3.2 Q3, Q4 and Q5 (recorded as Q4, Q5 and Q6 on the ‘Call for views’ document) - TPO has no comments on this aspect of the Bill.

   Part 3: Private Rented Housing

3.3 Q6, Q7 and Q8 (recorded as Q7, Q8 and Q9 in the ‘call for views’ document)

   Whilst a regulatory regime may be inconsistent with the future minimal requirement for mandatory redress in England, it is likely to be similar to some or all of the initiatives that will be introduced in Wales. Some of the larger letting agents and professional landlords operate across national borders and they and their clients may experience an inconsistency in treatment. Consumer, landlord and agent education will therefore be essential to ensure clarity and compliance for agents and landlords.

   Part 4: Letting Agents

3.4 Q9 (recorded as Q10 on ‘call for views’ document) Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?
TPO is supportive of the Scottish Government’s objective of introducing a regulatory framework for letting agents to help improve overall levels of service and professionalism within the industry. The framework intends to incorporate a mandatory register of letting agents, with an associated ‘fit and proper person test’ and the creation of a statutory code of practice to which all letting agents must adhere. The Bill also enables the First-tier Tribunal (FTT) (which is to be established under the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill) to make a range of enforcement orders to provide redress for tenants and landlords in cases where a letting agent fails to comply with that code of practice.

TPO’s comments in relation to these aspects of the Bill are discussed below:

Mandatory Register

Section 26 of the Bill describes the national register which the Scottish Government intend to be made available to the public. TPO would suggest that for the reasons later explained in this response, information regarding whether the agent is registered with TPO is also collected and displayed.

Code of Practice

Providing a benchmark for service to be measured against is the key to maintaining and improving standards. It also provides agents with a clear reference point to ensure their business operations are enacted to recognised standards and compliant with relevant legislation. TPO’s Code of Practice for Residential Letting Agents currently provides this benchmark and is already applicable to over 300 Scottish letting agent branches. Given that approximately 90% of letting agents in the UK follow the TPO Code, consumers and agents alike are familiar with TPO’s Code which provides clear standards on every aspect of a letting agent’s service.

TPO understands the Scottish Government’s reasoning for developing a mandatory code of practice and as such TPO is keen to offer our experience to the development and implementation process.
3.5 Q10 (recorded as Q11 in ‘call for views’ document) Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Lettings Complaints

At this stage in the Bill’s progress, the Scottish Government may wish to consider the volume and nature of the complaints which could be potentially referred to the FTT. Point 197 of Financial Memorandum (Explanatory Notes) sets out three scenarios regarding the potential number of cases referred to the FTT, which takes into account the additional 481 anticipated complaints relating to letting agents.

In 2012, TPO received 333 complaints from landlords and tenants covering 561 issues. Most enquiries related to more than one issue, a common occurrence in letting disputes. From these enquiries, the majority of issues reported concerned the service provided by letting agents and specifically communication and complaint handling failures. Generally speaking, these disputes arose from a lack of communication or simple human error. In other words, in only a minority of cases was an agent found to have deliberately breached the TPO Code of Practice. The average compensatory award of £325 underlines the fact that the consequences of these agent shortcomings were relatively minor.

Potential Cost Savings

TPO understands that aside from the structured and formal regulatory approach contained in the Housing (Scotland) Bill, it is the intention of the Scottish Government to allow existing voluntary redress arrangements (such as TPO) to continue and to work alongside mandatory requirements. Given this proposed scenario, it appears there is an opportunity for the Scottish Government to generate significant costs savings if it was of a mind to formalise an arrangement with TPO, allowing consumers wishing to complain about a TPO registered agent to be directed to TPO in the first instance.
At this point we would stress that whilst the Ombudsman’s decisions are binding on the letting agent, the consumer is free to either accept or reject his decision and pursue the matter elsewhere. Accordingly, when complaining about a Scottish letting agent, such an arrangement would allow the consumer to retain the right to reject the Ombudsman’s decision and refer the matter to the FTT.

TPO would recommend such an arrangement to the Scottish Government on the basis that it would be beneficial to all stakeholders.

Proposed Arrangements

To put such an arrangement into practice, TPO would recommend that the Scottish Government consider discussing the following areas with TPO which could have the potential effect of reducing the FTT’s estimated workload and its costs, and shortening the timescale for complaints to be resolved.

a) Consumer Awareness

Ensuring the consumer is aware of the letting agent’s membership of TPO will be vital to directing complaints away from the FTT in the first instance, where the matter can be dealt with by TPO. This could be achieved by:

- Displaying the agent’s TPO registration within the mandatory register results.
- Requiring letting agents to inform complainants about their voluntary redress arrangements as well as the statutory route to redress either as part of their internal complaint process or at the outset of the transaction.

Both actions would alert and direct landlords and tenants towards the initial option of less formal dispute resolution. It should also be noted that this option will also be relevant where a consumer feels they have been treated unfairly yet the agent appears to not have breached the mandatory code of practice.
b) Ombudsman’s Process

Upon referral to TPO, the Ombudsman would carry out his review process, consider the submissions from both parties and propose a resolution. The consumer would be free to either accept or reject that decision. TPO will inform the consumer of their right to refer the matter on to the FTT, should they choose to reject the Ombudsman’s decision. TPO will also include the relevant information to allow the consumer to elevate their complaint to the FTT in all of the Ombudsman’s decisions.

c) Data-sharing and Monitoring

TPO are used to working within a regulatory framework and regularly provide various statistical reports to the OFT (and soon the CMA) concerning workload and performance on a quarterly basis. TPO can provide similar reports in respect of letting agents to the Scottish Government and other regulatory bodies as required. TPO can adapt, amend or increase the number of reports depending on the requirements of the Scottish Government.

As a guideline, the current reports provided to the OFT are:

A – Analysis of initial complaint enquiries received. These are ‘immature’ complaints in that they have not completed the agent’s in-house complaint procedure or are simply general enquiries.
B – Analysis of new cases received
C – Analysis of non-supported cases by complaint type
D – Analysis of supported cases by complaint type
E – Analysis of closed cases by outcome
F – Analysis of closed cases by time taken
G – Analysis of requested documentation in different format / language
H – Analysis of the Ombudsman’s awards
I – Report on cases more appropriately dealt with by the Courts/other independent complaints/conciliation or arbitration service/exceed £25,000 claim
J – Number of complaints not progressed as outside the Ombudsman’s Terms of Reference
K – Membership figures

Accordingly, TPO would be happy to discuss with the Scottish Government their requirements for:

- The development of a formal reporting structure whereby breaches of the mandatory code identified by TPO could be reported to the Scottish Government/FTT.
- The referral process for disputes referred to TPO which would be better dealt with by the FTT.
- The referral process for cases not accepted for consideration by the FTT but could be considered by TPO.
- The provision of case information to the FTT where a complaint has passed through the TPO process and has been elevated to the FTT.
- The provision of TPO membership data for the national register.
- Regular contact to discuss and plan for current and evolving areas of concern and complaint trends.

d) Summary

Overall, TPO is of the view that requiring letting agents to make consumers aware of an alternative route to redress would reduce the level of applications to the FTT and therefore reduce the costs to the Scottish Government. It would also provide consumers with relatively speedy resolutions while allowing the FTT space in which to refine its procedures at the outset. Additionally, where cases have already passed through TPO, information will be made available to the FTT to assist their determination of the case, which may also prove a cost saving for the FTT and for the complainant and the agent.
Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

3.6 Q11 and Q12 (recorded as Q12 and Q13 in ‘call for views’ document)

TPO has no comments on this aspect of the Bill.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

3.7 Q13 (recorded as Q14 in ‘call for views’ document)

TPO has no comments on this aspect of the Bill.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

3.8 Q14 (recorded as Q16 in ‘call for views’ document)

TPO has no comments on this aspect of the Bill.

Other Issues

3.9 Q15 (recorded as Q17 in ‘call for views’ document) – Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives of specific provisions?

Other than the comments already made in points 3.3, 3.4 and 3.5, TPO has no other comments on the Bill’s objectives and specific provisions.

3.10 Q16 (recorded as Q18 in the ‘call for views’ document) – Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

Please refer to the comments made in points 3.3, 3.4 and 3.5 above.

4. Closing Comments

4.1 TPO is supportive by the Scottish Government’s stated aim of improving and growing the private rented sector by enabling a more effective regulatory system, targeting tougher enforcement action and attracting new investment.
4.2 Given TPO’s extensive experience of lettings issues and its prominent position in providing alternative dispute resolution to the lettings sector, we would be pleased to engage further with the Scottish Government throughout its consultation process with the aim of providing Scottish consumers with a robust and efficient redress mechanism.

The Property Ombudsman
28 February 2014
As a landlord with rental property in Scotland I would like to make the following comments in relation to the Housing (Scotland) Bill: -

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

This proposal will simplify and speed up private rented sector cases and make the court process more user friendly and less intimidating for landlords and tenants. This will be particularly beneficial in speeding up the eviction process for landlords who are unfortunate enough to find themselves with a tenant who fails to pay rent or commits other serious breaches of their tenancy agreement. The potential for higher quality and more consistent rulings from more specialised tribunal decision makers is also welcomed.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities' discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The ability for local authorities to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination on the repairing standard will provide a means of addressing poor standards in individual properties without having to rely on the tenants to take action against their landlord. This will assist in cases where tenants feel too intimidated by the landlord or the application process to take action themselves, or where they feel that direct action on their part may cause the relationship with their landlord to deteriorate and consequently put them at risk of losing their tenancy. It will also help in situations where the tenant has already vacated the property (or been evicted) but the local authority still wishes to take the case to the PRHP.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action in an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

This proposal will not only benefit those tenants who reside in areas characterised by poor conditions in the PRS, but will also improve the overall image of the PRS, which for some time has suffered at the hands of poor landlords and letting agents. It will also assist local authorities who are undertaking regeneration work in particular areas in forcing private landlords to improve their properties in line with other properties in the local area.
Part 4: Letting Agents

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

This is a welcome proposal as it will drive out poor practice and improve standards and the reputation of the industry while at the same time providing landlords and tenants with better recourse in the event that they are dissatisfied with their agent.

There is the potential for confusion between agents who are registered through landlord registration (as established by the Antisocial Behaviour (Scotland) Act 2004) and registered letting agents as defined in the Bill. In order to reduce bureaucracy and avoid this confusion, registered letting agents should be automatically entered on the landlord register and the letting agent reference number should be used by all local authorities for the purposes of identifying letting agents on the landlord register (replacing the current system of giving agents registration numbers which differ from authority to authority).

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

The proposed mechanism is appropriate in providing a simple and swift method of resolving disputes.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

For landlords of properties in multi-ownership buildings this proposal will be of great benefit in ensuring that essential repairs can be carried out even when some property owners can’t be identified or are unable or unwilling to contribute. It will put an end to the current situation that some landlords can face in having to cover other people’s share of communal repairs in order to comply with the repairing standard for their property and provide a compliant property for their tenants.

Tughan & Cochrane Property Managers
28 February 2014
UNISON
WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction
UNISON is Scotland’s largest public sector trade union representing over 160,000 members delivering services across Scotland. UNISON members deliver a wide range of services in the public, community and private sector - including in the provision of social housing through councils and other social landlords. We welcome the opportunity to participate in this call for evidence on the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

Response

Part 1: Right to Buy
This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

UNISON Scotland believes that investment in social housing is the key to solving Scotland's housing crisis. In our housing policy document Making Homes for a Fairer Scotland in June 2013 we argue that there is an acute shortage of homes - with official figures showing 335,000 households on social housing waiting lists across Scotland and 71,000 overcrowded households - 65 per cent of which included families with children.

Shelter Scotland estimated a need to build a minimum of 10,000 affordable homes a year, almost twice the current level of social house building.

The shortage of housing was exacerbated over the period of the Right to Buy as quality social housing was transferred to the private sector. UNISON has a long standing policy to end the Right to Buy, in order to protect vital social housing stock.

The level of demand to buy remaining stock is now low and ending the Right to Buy will not in itself provide any new homes - but would stop further transfers of stock out of social housing. We therefore strongly support this part of the Bill.

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

We note that the majority of respondents (74%) who commented on the consultation recommended a period of two years or less on the basis that this would minimise potential stock loss and allow social landlords to get on with strategic planning. We would support this view.

Our members also report a significant increase in adverts from lending firms leading to more inquiries regarding the current Right to Buy scheme. Elsewhere in the UK there has been an increase in private landlords buying up properties on a two stage move via Right to Buy. This further removes social housing from the rented sector.

Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Our housing policy document Making Homes for a Fairer Scotland in June 2013 is clear that as well as a massive increase in building of social housing that "we do need to make better use of current housing stock."

Under the current criteria social landlords must give "reasonable preference" to person who are:
- occupying houses which do not meet the tolerable standard or
- occupying overcrowded houses or
- have large families or
- are living under unsatisfactory housing conditions and
- to homeless persons and persons threatened with homelessness.

The proposed new criteria would be:
- those who are homeless or threatened with homelessness
- those who are living under unsatisfactory housing conditions and in each of these cases the person must have unmet housing needs and
- tenants of houses held by the social landlord which the social landlord considers to be under-occupied.

We believe the criteria on 'tolerable standard' and 'overcrowding' should remain in order to safeguard quality of housing and tackle overcrowding which is a problem in both private and social housing.

We would also support the inclusion of a 'local connection' criterion which is not in the proposed Bill as it stands.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?
We believe the changes will assist in tackling anti-social behavior.

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government's objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

We believe these proposals get the balance between rights and landlord flexibility about right.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament).

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

There has been a significant increase in private landlord accommodation in Scotland. This sector has a number of challenges that need to be addressed. Anything that makes it easier and cheaper for tenants to get legal redress is to be welcomed. However, this is only meaningful if tenants have real rights to enforce. See Q18 below.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

UNISON supports strong and enforceable regulation for local authorities to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector. Regulations must cover: property standards, safety, occupancy rates, tenancy agreements and repairs.

Standards must also include investment in the upkeep of communal areas in flats. Standards and registrations need to be monitored and enforced. This should be the responsibility of local authorities.

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code.
Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents' practice?

UNISON supports the mandatory registration of letting agencies. Landlords themselves will also benefit from regulation of letting agencies.

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

No

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents
This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

and

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

We support the strengthening of the current arrangements

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions
This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

see response to Q9 above. We support the ‘missing share’ proposals so long as they are properly funded. We also believe that local authorities should have the power to go further than the bill in ordering improvements to property.

Part 7: Miscellaneous
This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator's powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.
Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?
No.

Other Issues
Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?
see response to Q18 below

Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

Funding and building the homes Scotland needs
The main issue for housing in Scotland remains the shortage of homes. In our document Funding and building the homes Scotland needs (March 2013) UNISON Scotland has outlined a proposal developed with assistance from the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations to finance social housing in Scotland with investment from local authority pension funds.

Rent control
In order to ensure that private sector tenants can have secure and affordable homes, a proper system of rent control - along with improved regulation of landlords and decent housing standards - is required.

Devolution of Housing Benefit
UNISON Scotland supports the devolution of Housing Benefit, along with Council Tax Benefit, which should be administered through local authority housing departments. It is difficult to fully influence housing policy without control over housing benefit.

Conclusion
Improving our housing requires more than just the regulatory reform as proposed by the current bill. The housing crisis requires a massive programme of social housing investment from the public sector. UNISON Scotland has made a series of recommendations in our recent housing policy publications Making Homes for a Fairer Scotland June 2013 and Funding and building the homes Scotland needs March 2013 which we urge the committee to consider.

UNISON
28 February 2014
WEST LOTHIAN COUNCIL

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Q</th>
<th>A</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Part 1: Right to Buy</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?</td>
<td>This is a welcome change to abolish RTB entirely given the constraints already put on a dwindling resource.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?</td>
<td>The view seems to be that three year timetable is a fairly lengthy lead in to abolishing the RTB, there is a potential to see an increase in RTB applications.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Part 2: Social Housing</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?</td>
<td>We are supportive of this approach giving more flexibility on who should be allocated housing and in particular welcome the removal of the prohibition of taking age into account when allocating housing. This will help particularly in relation to reshaping the balance of care agenda and allocation of housing in particular locations. There are some concerns over the establishment of a right of appeal on being suspended from housing waiting lists and the administrative difficulties for the landlord in administering this.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies</td>
<td>It is important to get the right balance between giving a measure of security for tenants and allowing a local authority the powers to manage situations effectively. Ideally the grounds for establishing a short SST should not be over prescriptive. With a measure of flexibility it is more likely that the desired</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?</td>
<td>outcome of establishing a stable and responsible tenancy in the future can be achieved. While the proposal for probationary tenancies not taken forward this is a welcomed alternative however, it would be helpful to have a measure of guidance and criteria in place to ensure transparency and accountability. While the provisions to enable the conversion of a SST to a short SST are welcomed, there is no statutory form or guidance to be provided to tenants for conversion to short Scottish Secure Tenancy. (SSST) Under Section 35 of the Act, provision of such form/guidance would help provide clarity and consistency. It is not clear what might happen in the event of a short SST coming to an end and nothing being put in place, i.e. a person would not have a tenancy. The statutory form of notice for recovery of possession under Section 36 would also require to be updated to take account of the proposed changes. While the proposals on the concept of short Scottish Secure Tenancies is welcomed there is a concern over the staff and support resources that will be required to effectively manage these tenancies in the community. There will undoubtedly be high expectations from local communities that these arrangements are satisfactory. The equality considerations in relation to placing people on short Scottish Secure Tenancies (SSST) on the basis of new anti-social behavior grounds should be clear and on the basis of consultation with equality groups. There are a disproportionate number of complaints raised in connection with people with mental health disabilities, often through a lack of knowledge/ understanding of their condition. The stages providing checks and balances before instigating a SSST must be made very clear, and the route to appeal set out.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>---</td>
<td>---</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants,</td>
<td>Given the period for SSST has been extended it will give tenants strengthened rights however, it may be problematic to manage those cases which are anti-social from initial stages of the SSST. In these cases no action could be taken to recover possession</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants,

Given the period for SSST has been extended it will give tenants strengthened rights however, it may be problematic to manage those cases which are anti-social from initial stages of the SSST. In these cases no action could be taken to recover possession. particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

under Section 36 of the Act for 12 months. During the initial 12 month period, the Landlord would require to take any action under Section 14 of the Act which is available for Scottish Secure Tenancies anyway.

The changes regarding the tightening of restrictions and qualifying periods on assignations, sub-tenancies and joint tenancies are beneficial to social landlords in allowing for much greater clarity of the rules, and a stronger position to prevent abuse of the system, particularly around assignations.

However, in practical terms, the clause which states that the 12 month qualification period can only apply where the individual has notified the landlord that they are living in the property as their only or principal home before the 12 month period begins may prove problematic in terms of deployment. This would need to be widely communicated and is likely to lead to a spike in appeals/complaints whilst the new rules take initial effect. It also may present practical difficulties in that tenants are unlikely to know 12 months in advance that they wish to sublet, assign or change to a joint tenancy. Indeed, circumstances such as a relationship breakdown, change in employment/redundancy may mean that a tenant wishes to make changes which were not anticipated in advance. Accordingly, clarity is required around this requirement and how this would work in practice.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposal?

The proposal is to be welcomed and should increase the access to justice for PRS tenants and landlords.
| proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal? | alike and enable cases to be dealt with more quickly. The removal from the court system will remove some of the ‘fear factor’ and will potentially reduce costs, depending on the degree of paid legal representation that parties engage. The option of a low cost, ‘easy’ approach to dealing with disputes may encourage some landlords to use it rather than adopt potentially illegal ‘resolution’ methods to disputes. |
| Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector? | We think there is a strong argument for returning to arrangements to regulate the levels of rent which can be charged by private landlords. We think that there should be a relationship established between social rents and private sector rents so that the latter do not get unrealistically and unreasonably high. Historically there was a well established rent officer process which managed this in local areas. With the recent growth in the numbers of private sector landlords and growth in the numbers of private rented properties, there are dangers in allowing unregulated rent levels to continue. Allowing Councils to undertake referrals to the Private Rented Housing Panel where landlords are failing to meet the Repairing Standard will be of benefit to private sector tenants. However, there may be a resourcing implication depending on the expectation of tenants that wish the Council to make referrals on their behalf. Local authorities will therefore have to adopt policy which makes it clear that the primary responsibility to take failures to meet the Repairing Standard to the PRHP lies with the sitting tenant. Examples where it may be useful or appropriate for a Local Authority ‘third party referral’ are:
  - The is existing evidence of past or ongoing misconduct on the part of a landlord or his /her representatives towards the tenant;
  - The is a foreseeable likelihood of misconduct on the part of a landlord or his /her representatives towards the tenant;
  - The tenant is identified as being vulnerable;
  - The tenant is not capable of making an application;
  - The house is declared likely to ‘Below Tolerable Standard’(BTS); |
The matter has been reported by a vacating tenant and the property condition is such that the Local Authority does not view it as suitable for habitation. This could properties not yet declared as BTS or for matters which do not constitute a failure of the tolerable standard (such as a non-operational heating system).

From an equalities perspective, this is a welcome enhancement to powers for local authorities in tackling poor quality housing conditions – these properties have a higher proportion of vulnerable people from the protected characteristics groups protected within the Equalities Act. As these groups of people also tend to have a higher proportion of low paid workers and very often are in danger of poverty, social deprivation and isolation, the effect of poor quality housing on health, employment opportunities and social mobility is disproportionately damaging.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The proposals have not yet been made explicit. It is therefore not possible to comment on them in any detail. However, the potential for area specific, time limited further enforcement powers could potentially be useful in arresting or ‘nipping in the bud’ the decline of an area. However, the absence of specific resources to accompany additional powers may limit their use, particularly as any declaration would create expectations which it may not be possible to meet. Once the provisions have been further outlined at Stage 2 West Lothian Council may wish to comment further.

Whilst any enforcement powers to tackle areas of multiple deprivation, and in particular, areas featured on the Scottish Index of Multiple Deprivation is a bonus, the Scottish Government needs to provide more detail around the criteria and scope of these powers to ensure that LA’s have the tools to accurately identify these areas. A framework for identification and scale of action required would be beneficial.
Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Experience in West Lothian mirrors the variability in standards highlighted in the Policy Memorandum to the Bill. Provided that it is effectively enforced, lettings agents that are regulated by Scottish Government to ensure that best practice is achieved is desirable. However, it is the content Statutory Code of Practice which will determine whether the intent of the Bill is satisfied. Once this becomes clear, West Lothian Council may wish to comment further.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>It is noted that only a tenant or landlord can request the First Tier Tribunal to enforce the Code of Practice. This may mean that vulnerable tenants or former tenants are denied justice. No third party referral exists.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| The proposed changes go a significant way to addressing the existing regulatory deficiencies. However, the Bill does not:
- Provide any additional protection to residents living on non-‘protected’ sites. These residents may include the vulnerable and may have been mis-sold their mobile home as a permanent residence. The absence of improved controls on non-protected sites may encourage a shift in attention to these sites by unscrupulous operators;
- Provide any additional enforcement powers for local authorities on non-‘protected’ sites. Given existing instances of operator instigated full time residence on non-protected sites, it is important that local authorities are equipped to deal with such abuses. Sections 64-69 inclusive should apply to all sites.

- Clarify the status of ‘Model Standards’. The current wording of the Caravan Site and Control of Development Act is sufficiently ambiguous to result in considerable legal doubt and debate;
- Require, in the minimum information requirements, evidence of consent to occupy land from the site owner. As the owner and occupier can be different, this is important to prevent unwitting or undesired development of residential sites. (It is possible to apply for planning consent for land which is not in your ownership);

With regard to the ‘Fit and Proper Person’ test, the Bill is insufficiently precise as to how this will operate where the applicant is not a natural person. In particular:

- The Bill and Paragraph 244 of the Policy Memorandum appear to be contradictory in terms of who the F&PP Test will be applied to;
- The way in which individuals applying on behalf of a company, partnership or some other ‘non-natural’ person will be treated needs to be made explicit. This is particularly important where the applicant is not the ‘most senior manager’ listed in amended Section 32D (1) (b) (ii) of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

With regard to the licensing and re-licensing elements:

- The Bill must require that the relationship between site owner and the site occupier is made explicit, where different;
- The Bill leaves it open as to whether an individual can hold a license on behalf of a ‘non-natural’ body. This may be intentional, but leaves room for a person who can pass the F&PP Test holding a license on behalf of a body which might not due the person holding ‘the most senior position within the management structure’;

- The criteria for issuing a license (amended Section 32D(1)(b) of the Caravan Site and Control of Development Act 1960) should include a requirement that the local authority is satisfied with the quality or voracity of information provided by the applicant and that there is no information (or absence of information) which would make issue of a license inappropriate). The current legislation does not allow the local authority to consider the quality, voracity, completeness or appropriateness of information provided and the Bill would appear to allow this to continue. Similar elements should also be added to (amended Sections 32D(2) and 32E(2) of the Caravan Site and Control of Development Act 1960);

- The proposed Section 32G of the Caravan Site and Control of Development Act 1960 (Local Authority Power to Transfer License where no Application) should include at 32G (5) and explicitly require the information from the current occupier specified in amended section 32B (2), 32B (2) (d) and 32B (3), the minimum information requirements.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| The new scheme should assist local authorities to effectively regulate residential mobile homes sites, provided they are licensed for year round occupation. Where occupied illegally year round, local authority powers are unimproved as are resident protections.

There will be an additional administrative burden for occupiers to apply for a new license and for re-application every 3 years. |

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Part 6: Private Housing Conditions</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| Q14. Do you have any missing shares under the... | Tenements Act is useful to empower the majority of owners in a building to pursue repairs or maintenance where a minority can’t pay or won’t pay. This would get work done sooner and with little or no local authority staff time commitment. No works in default procedures would be necessary, reducing the burden on local authorities. However, a Local Authority must be prepared to pay for the work up front but without any degree of certainty in regard to the timing of the money being repaid.

The proposed changes to work notices and maintenance plans are welcomed, although may create expectation which resources do not exist to satisfy.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.

| Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill? | No Comment |
| Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions | No Comment |
| Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill? | There may be advantage to the Scottish Government considering whether an Empty Dwellings Management Order could be employed in Scotland. This could help Local Authorities address issues with severe intractable difficulties in relation to individual empty homes. The Maintenance Orders provisions cannot apply to common infrastructure such as septic tanks. This is because they are usually separate from the ‘house’ concerned. Extending the circumstances in which |
Maintenance Orders can be used would usefully permit the use of 'Missing Shares' legislation. This would again assist with proactive maintenance and reduce demand for Work In Default activity by local authorities.

We also suggest that you should give consideration to historic property title conditions which can inhibit proposals to develop a site. In some circumstances the existence of a condition can place unreasonably onerous restrictions on the council’s ability to develop and fulfill its statutory obligations. An example of this in West Lothian was in relation to the Broxburn School annex where there was a contractual reversionary right.

West Lothian Council
04 March 2014
WEST STRATHCLYDE REGIONAL NETWORK
(East Renfrewshire, Inverclyde, North Ayrshire and Renfrewshire)

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

Introduction

West Strathclyde Regional Network is one of the 9 Regional Networks of Registered Tenants Organisations (RTO’s) formed in 2008 and covers the local authority areas of East Renfrewshire, Inverclyde, North Ayrshire and Renfrewshire.

We are a committee of 10, elected annually, and generally represent the views of our tenant and resident members of the 68 RTO’s across our area.

We welcome being involved in the extensive consultations held on many of the proposals included in the Bill and we particularly welcome the proposals to abolish the Right to Buy and the provisions on social sector allocations and tenancies.

However, we are disappointed that the proposal to create a Housing Tribunal for the social rented sector and the introduction of Probationary Tenancies are not included in the Bill.

Our comments are as follows on the provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Bill are:

Part 1 – Right to Buy

- The Right to Buy (RTB) should now be abolished in order to safeguard and protect the limited social housing resource that we currently have in Scotland.

- The timetable for abolishing the RTB should be less than 3 years and we would propose two years. We consider that people who currently have the RTB, have had this right for a significant number of years and have not exercised it in these years and may now be unlikely to do so.

Part 2 – Social Housing

a) Allocations

We agree with this measure as it removes an unhelpful barrier to landlords wanting to allocate to particular groups in specific situations and believe the Bill makes it explicit that removing this age bar does not mean that landlords can discriminate against particular age groups or that it contravenes the Equality Act 2010.

However we consider that landlords should be enabled to allocate housing in a “common sense approach” in order to sustain tenancies, protect the interests of existing tenants in terms of their right to live in a safe and secure environment and allocate tenancies in a sensitive manner with regard to the demographic of other people living in neighbouring properties, with particular regard to areas or property types that are more suitable for or already have older people living in them.

Landlords should be able to take an applicant’s previous Antisocial Behaviour (ASB) into account when considering whether or not to offer them a house. This should also include homeless applicants previously evicted for ASB.

Landlords must consult tenants and tenants’ organisations on any proposals to change allocations policies and procedures.

b) Probationary Tenancies (Initial tenancies)

The outcome of the Government's consultation concluded that the majority of the sector, including tenant responses, were in favour of introducing Probationary tenancies (or Initial Tenancies) and we are disappointed that it was dropped for this Housing Bill.

We strongly support the introduction of initial tenancies and support the introduction of probationary tenancies for all social housing tenants and believe that the benefits of introducing this outweigh any negativity especially when it has the real potential to help deal with tenancy problems, such as anti-social behaviour, much sooner.

c) Short Scottish Secure Tenancies (SSSTs)

We consider that:

- Short Scottish Secure Tenancies should remain as 6 months

- Under no circumstances should people be allocated a social rented house and continue to keep their own home elsewhere.

- Landlords should be able to allocate Short Scottish Secure Tenancies (for a 6 month period) to allow them to work with people with a previous history of ASB.

d) Antisocial Behaviour - SSSTs

We consider that:

- Landlords should be able to give all new tenants Short Scottish Secure Tenancies where there has been previous ASB

- Landlords should be able to convert full Scottish Secure Tenancies to Short tenancies where they are dealing with a tenants ASB to allow them to work with the tenant to try to improve the behaviour or stop the tenancy where the ASB continues

- Landlords should continue to provide tenancy support whilst tenants have a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy and there needs to be powers for landlords to make sure that the ASB can be addressed or tenancy terminated.

Part 3 – Private Rented Housing

In terms of the private rented sector, we agree that there needs to be increased powers and measures to deal with this sector, and that this is required in relation to:

- Ensuring private tenants have up to date and accurate information on their rights and responsibilities
- Protecting the rights of private tenants
- Protecting the rights of the private landlords and
- Protecting the rights of other tenants and residents in communities where:
  - Private tenants are the cause of ASB, damage to the property of other tenants and residents in the block, street or community
  - Ensuring common repair and investment work is carried out that social landlords need to or want to do for their tenants and properties
  - Private landlords lack of care or investment in properties causes problems for social housing tenants or landlords

a) The Tribunal

We agree that the introduction of the private sector housing tribunal is positive HOWEVER it should be noted that we are disappointed that this has not been included in the Bill for the social rented sector as per our response to the Dispute Resolution Consultation in 2013. In addition it should be noted that:

- Further information and clarification is required on the operation and enforcement powers of the Tribunal and that the Tribunal needs to “have clout and teeth” or it will not be worth the bother
- The Tribunal needs to be able to “streamline” the disputes process and make it easier and quicker than the current operation via the Sheriff Court system.
b) Private Rented Housing Panel

We agree that:

- Local Authorities should have increased powers to enforce the repairing standard

- That evidence in relation to private landlords not meeting the standard should not just have to come from tenants and that neighbours, fire and rescue services, police, others and the local authority itself should be able to provide this evidence

- Where appeals are made by the private landlord, the funding required from the Local Authority to defend their position / action should not come from Housing Revenue Accounts (HRA’s)

- The Private Rented Housing Panel should make the process simpler and more streamlined and that the Panel should have “teeth” and be a less onerous process than using the Sheriff Court system

- Local Authorities will require enforcement powers to ensure the repairs and maintenance work is carried out

- All Private Lets should meet the repairing standard and Local authorities should have increased powers to enforce this

Part 4 – Letting Agents

We consider that:

- Letting Agents should be subject to a robust and effective registration scheme

- Local Authorities should have additional enforcement powers in areas where there are issues with management of all stock owned by this landlord

- Local Authorities should have increased powers to deal with private landlords where there are issues in relation to:
  - The behaviour of the tenant living in their property
  - The lack of repairs and maintenance of the property and any common areas, especially where this social housing tenants and / or properties

- Letting Agents should be required to meet and sign up to a Code of conduct

- Guidelines need to be developed

- Letting Agent Registration and Code of conduct “needs to have teeth”
• Disputes between agent and landlord should be addressed by Trading Standards

• The Bill and the Scottish Government needs to look at “beefing up” existing systems and ensure Local Authorities and other involved implement the use of the full powers already available rather than adding new things

Part 6 – Private Housing Condition

We agree that Local Authorities should have powers to enforce private landlords to carry out repairs and improvement to their properties. In addition in properties where social landlords own some of the properties, social landlords should have additional powers to enforce repairs and easier mechanisms to make private landlords pay their share of improvement works required. Where resources are to be utilised in this area, monies should come from the General Fund.

Consideration should be given to developing a private rented housing standard, similar to the Scottish Housing Quality Standard.

Others

a) SHR Transfer of Assets

These changes were not the subject of previous consultation.

We strongly disagree with this provision and would like to see this removed from the Bill and that the consultation with tenants’ clause is retained.

It is our view that if the SHR is “doing its job properly”, that evidence of potential insolvency will be known in ample time to ensure the RSL tenants are consulted on any proposals to transfer to or merge with or be taken over by another landlord, therefore we do not agree that the requirement to consult should be removed.

For the reasons outlined above, we also do not consider that the duty on the SHR to always obtain a valuation of assets or direct a transfer at an open market valuation should be removed. The value of assets should always be known.

West Strathclyde Regional Network
26 February 2014
Part 1: Right to Buy

This part of the Bill places abolishes the right to buy by making certain repeals. The commencement of the main section on repeals is prohibited for at least 3 years. The Bill will also make some amendments which it is intended will apply before the repeals are commenced.

Q1. What are your views on the provisions which abolish the right to buy for social housing tenants?

Q2. Do you have any views on the proposed 3 year timetable before these provisions come into force?

Response Q1 & Q2: The Wheatley Group is notionally in favour of the provisions. However, the lead-in period of three years appears overly long. Two years is sufficiently long to allow interested tenants to exercise the Right to Buy while allowing Registered Social Landlords to plan with more certainty.

Part 2: Social Housing

This part makes provisions which relate to social housing. The rules and procedures around the allocation of social housing will be adjusted as will the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies.

Q4. In your view, will the provisions which are proposed to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating housing, allow them to make best use of social housing?

Response Q4: The Wheatley Group is in favour of the principle of giving Registered Social Landlords more flexibility in regard to allocations. However, the Scottish Government and/or the Scottish Housing regulator must provide robust guidance to accompany the provisions.

This guidance should encompass, to offer some examples, (i) There should be more information regarding how the age bar removal would work in practice (and how this relates to equalities legislation), (ii) More detail should be offered around consultation i.e. are there requirements for social landlords to consult in a specific way with tenant and prospective tenants regarding the new provisions? (iii) More detail is also required on how the new provisions relates to housing options.

Q5. Will the proposals which will adjust the operation of short Scottish secure tenancies and Scottish secure tenancies provide landlords with tools that will assist them in tackling antisocial behaviour in an appropriate and proportionate manner?

Response Q5: The ability to refer to previous conduct is welcomed. However, although more flexibility is important the Group has some concerns with the Bill as drafted in relation to the potential costs of additional housing support.

While there are some improvements from previous legislation, the new proposals require to be accompanied with robust guidance. More information and guidance might relate to; the determinants of behaviour change (and who determines them), clarity around flexibility on suspensions and how converting an SST to an SSST works with or without court.

Q6. Will this part of the Bill meet the Scottish Government’s objective of providing further protection for tenants, particularly tenants with short SSTs, by strengthening their rights?

Potentially, although it should be noted that tenants in SSSTs already enjoy significant rights and protections under the current arrangements both for SSTs and SSSTs.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

Response Q7: In principle, the proposals for transferring certain private sector cases to a new tribunal should be a good thing. However, in practice the First-tier tribunal would have to prove easier and faster than the current arrangements. If this is not the case, then the new proposals are essentially meaningless.

It would be beneficial for there to be detail regarding monitoring arrangements to ensure the efficacy of the proposal once it has been put in practice.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?
Response Q8: Adjustments to the legislation may help tackle poor private rented sector conditions. Specifically, the strict control of landlord registration and the active pursuit of landlords to ensure both registration and compliance with existing standards would be helpful.

As important as any legislative changes, however is the enforcement of either new or existing laws. Effective and well-resourced enforcement is required to ensure that legislation is meaningful and acts both as a benchmark for effective landlord to work by and as a deterrent to landlords who may contribute to poor condition through their actions or inactions.

Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

Response Q10 & 11: The Wheatley Group is supportive of the registration and regulation of letting agents. This will allow responsible landlords in the sector, such as Lowther Homes, to adhere to the proposed national registration scheme and statutory code of practice and drive improved standards.

Registration and regulation, however, should remain proportionate and should not place an excessive administrative burden upon landlords.

As with the response to Q8, enforcement regarding the registration and regulation of landlords is fundamentally important. Registration needs to be backed up with resource and activity to ensure that it is practitioners who are not doing things ethically and efficiently who are inconvenienced, rather than those who are.
Part 5: Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

This part creates a new licensing regime for mobile home sites with permanent residents. It inserts a new Part 1A into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.

Q12. Do you have any views on the proposed new licensing scheme?

Response Q12: No.

Q13. What implications might this new scheme have for both mobile home site operators and permanent residents of sites?

Response Q13: See Q12.

Part 6: Private Housing Conditions

This part includes a number of adjustments to the law as it relates to private housing including conferring on local authorities a power to pay a share of costs arising from the tenement management scheme under the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 and modifying provisions relating to work notices, maintenance notices and maintenance orders under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Q14. Do you have any comments on the various provisions which relate to local authority enforcement powers for tackling poor maintenance, safety and security work, particularly in tenemental properties?

Response Q14: Not at this stage, other than to reiterate the previous point regarding the importance of enforcement being properly resourced.

Part 7: Miscellaneous

This part contains some miscellaneous housing provisions, including a power to exempt certain securities from the right to redeem after 20 years contained in section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974, the conferral of a power to delegate on the president of the private rented housing panel and homeowner housing panel, a modification of the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers and a repeal of certain enactments relating to defective designation.

Q16. Do you have any comments relation to the range of miscellaneous housing provisions set out in this part of the Bill?

Response Q16: No.

Other Issues

Q17. Are there any other comments you would like to make on the Bill’s policy objectives or specific provisions?

Response Q17: No.
Q18. Are there any other issues that the Scottish Government consulted on that you think should be in the Bill?

Response Q18: No.

Wheatley Group
3 March 2014
I would like to contribute my thinking on the Housing Bill going through our own Parliament. Here in Scotland. I aired some of these views at the presentation given by T.I.S. in Aberdeen.

My responses are in no particular order.

1. On the Abolition of the right to buy. Might I suggest a sliding scale of discount given to all Landlords whose properties come under the right to buy? Example. Full entitled discount till the end of 2015. Two thirds till end 2016. One third till end 2016. This would stop a rush at the end.

2. Social Housing. Clarification on the Under-occupying property. What does this mean as a Homeless person is not under-occupying and property

3. Short Scottish Secure Tenancies. The probationary tenancy of 12 months is I think enough. BUT it should be made clear to antisocial tenant that any infringement by them or parties known to them causes any antisocial behaviour in the 12 months the consequences are dire with no redress. Now this tenancy should be extended to 18 months 1 misdemeanour should be allowed but the tenant be made aware that 1 more than it is one more and out. 18 months to 24 months 2 misdemeanour are enough 24 months to 36 months 3 misdemeanours only. Then a full tenancy could be considered with the antisocial tenant be visited on a sliding scale as they improve as a social tenant.

Scottish secure tenancies. It is important that tenant’s know about the assignation Tenancies. A tenant should be told that anyone staying with them would have to be considered on merit just like any other applicant. Although they should be given preference if behaviour is not antisocial.

4. Found guilty by tribunal. Participation. This tribunal should cover, the share issue if a council has not been paid. Councils should have the power if they have had no repayment on work undertaken they should through the power of the tribunal get full restitution. Either by renting property or selling it until full payment has been made.

Arrears in rent should be paid in full. Tenant should be given a choice on how they are going to pay if found guilty by tribunal. Within a time limit. Landlord if found against should be given a time limit to resolve problem.

Frank Williams
15 February 2014
The Scottish Parliament
Edinburgh.

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Howmy (Scotland) Bill.

Thank you for the opportunity of telling you of my experiences, in respect of Tenants, Landlords, and Leasing Agents.

Firmly I am not wealthy, having worked all my life, I am one of the much derided 'Affluent Population', so as not to be a burden on Society.

I am trying to source another income, I discovered a ruin in the centre of a Scottish Village much to the delight of the windows, a ruined new house fully furnished, better even than to live in.

1) [REDACTED]

The Service was to source, verify rental and draw contracts.
The tenants broke their lease, no payment for rent, heating fuel and stolen stuff.

When I attempted to pursue action against the tenants, the Solicitors could not provide application forms, previous address, only employment references, on which no checks had been made and were full of lies.

T. Duncan Solicitors denied wrong doing and would not involve the Law Society to compensate me.
3) Most recently, I have used Ayling Leasing’s Mistere - Ful to secure tenants and factor the property.

Problems have been numerous, lies and allegations from the leasing agent and tenants. There has been an absence of E-mail, bullying, taunts and none payment of Rent.

I commenced with the leasing agent services on Jan 7th 2014, in writing, noting unprofessionalism, direction of my business affairs with maintenance contracted, and either, directly or indirectly with the tenants. Further use of non regulated trades, to the point of jeopardising the lives of my tenants, and properly despite my explicit instructions, allowed by the leasing agent.

Their requesting details, copies of the tenant file, and return of key old house allegedly been lost by either the leasing agent or Royal Mail.

Now I am being indirectly threatened by the Ayling Leasing Agent.

Because of the lack of records, from either myself or the tenants, when requests have been made to the leasing agent, allegations have been made but not substantiated. I have been the target of hostile tenants, who similarly have not entered requests for maintenance.

I have kept diary records, and letter, reports from outside contractors. But all of little consequence when attempting to resolve a situation.

The fourth is would like to raise with you.

1) Personally I believe the ayling process is too long to evict tenants, most landlords are reasonable to the point of being willing to negotiate a rent to admit the right tenant.
2) Tenants have too many rights, to the point of causing hostility and taking away communication, leading Agents are not the best mechanism to resolving disputes, indeed as in my case were the cause of the problem.

3) The private landlord scheme, offers nothing to support the landlord, so should it powert of purpose.

4) Safest Deposit Scheme Scotland, who is voluntarily the scheme responsible to both landlord and tenant, where is the information held.

5) The interest from the deposit scheme, should be used to fund a rogue tenant, Rogue letting agent, Rogue landlord database.

6) I see ‗Policing‘ of these proposals – letting Agents
- Housing Bill, difficult, and seems what been offered ‗lip service‘ and ‗knee jerk‘ reaction.

7) The intention of the Scottish Parliament under the Housing Act, for Councils with the Charity status, to impose 300% Council Tax on properties vacant in 2015, is false evidence of how best to treat property owners and landlord.
—
it is not the way forward, but coulds defensive, and not contumible to a working relationship. In other part of the UK, Councils work with landlords and property owners do not supply penalties.

Cont.
As yet we, do I need the drain on my health, dealing with tenants who do not pay rent, dealing with agents who cannot do a job well, added to this the council’s scheme, rent scheme and the council tax abuse. The legal system that does not help plus other organisations imposing restrictions.

I have decided this very personal for my properties to be tenancy acts, something I never wanted to do, because I care about the community, and the effect empty houses place on them.

Thank you once for your time.

Jacki Williamson

25 February 2014
21 January 2014

Dear Ms Watt

Housing (Scotland) Bill – Officials Evidence Session

I undertook to write to you to provide further information and clarification in relation to a number of points discussed at the Committee session on 15 January 2014. These are as follows:

Part 2 - Social Housing

How many replies were received through social media (i.e. Facebook) during the public consultation?

20 responses were received through social media (Facebook) during the public consultation.

In addition:

- completed questionnaires were received from 219 individuals or organisations;
- written responses were obtained from 18 organisations; and
- responses to the consultation questions were obtained from seven regional workshops. During the regional workshops responses to questions were received from 154 individuals attending the events.

Further information on the consultation and stakeholder engagement is provide in the policy memorandum (paragraphs 83 to 92).

(n.b. it is possible that some individuals responded through more than one route.)
Can you give a bit more detail on why the categories of occupying overcrowded houses and large families have been dropped? Is there a shift away from giving priority to those who live in overcrowded conditions?

General effect

The general effect of the changes is to replace the existing specified priority groups with a broader definition more focussed on housing need. The Scottish Government’s view is that the needs of communities differ and the changes will give social landlords more flexibility to meet the needs of local communities and make the best use of available social housing.

The case for modernising the reasonable preference framework rests on the view that the existing legislation no longer properly reflects contemporary housing needs. Research has indicated that the existing priority groups for allocating social housing were outdated and needed to be revised. For example respondents to research on Reasonable Preference in Scottish Social Housing (2011) suggested that the large family category was outdated, that there was a lack of clarity about what constituted a large family and that being a large family was not of itself indicative of any housing need.

The majority of respondents to the 2012 consultation were in agreement with the proposal to provide increased flexibility to social landlords in the housing allocation process.

Summary of Changes

The amendments to current legislation in the Bill mean that in future there would be three categories of people who must receive reasonable preference in the allocation of social housing:

- Homeless people and people threatened by homelessness and who have unmet housing needs (except where the person is only homeless or threatened with homelessness as a result of regard being had to a “restricted person”);
- People who are living under unsatisfactory housing conditions and who have unmet housing needs;
- Tenants of houses held by the social landlord which the social landlord considers to be under-occupied.

People who are homeless or are threatened by homelessness remain a specified group which must be given reasonable preference in the allocation of social housing, as are people living under unsatisfactory housing conditions. In these cases there is the added requirement of having unmet housing needs. People have unmet housing needs where the social landlord considers them to have housing needs which are not capable of being met by other housing options which are available.

Unsatisfactory housing conditions will continue to cover a broad range of situations and, for example, would include housing needs arising from a health condition or other personal circumstances, in addition to factors stemming from the physical condition of the property.

Tenants whom the landlord considers to be under-occupying are a new specified group.

Groups no longer specified

The following priority groups are no longer specifically referred to in the list of groups who must be given reasonable preference in the allocation of social housing:
Persons:
- occupying houses which do not meet the tolerable standard;
- occupying overcrowded houses;
- with large families.

People in these groups would fall within the category of living under unsatisfactory housing conditions in circumstances where they have unmet housing needs, so they are no longer specifically referred to.

What would be the right of appeal for a tenant who had their tenancy converted to a short SST?

The Bill includes provisions at section 8 which allow a social landlord to either grant a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy (Short SST) or convert a Scottish Secure Tenancy to a Short SST on certain antisocial behaviour grounds. These extend existing provision in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006. A person who is unhappy with the landlord’s decision currently has the right of appeal to the courts and that will apply to the provision made by the Bill.

Part 4 – Letting Agents

Details of criminal offence if failing to register?

It will be an offence to operate as a letting agent without registration (at section 39). A person who commits the offence is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, or to both. It is also an offence (at section 40) for a person who is not registered to use a number purporting to be a letting agent registration number in any document or communication, without reasonable excuse. A person who commits that offence is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 in the standard scale.

Part 5 – Mobile Home Sites with Permanent Residents

What views did mobile home site owners and residents express in the consultation on the proposed revised licensing regime?

In response to the question regarding the views expressed by mobile home site owners in the consultation on the proposed revised licensing regime we would like to clarify that as a consequence of the concerns expressed in the consultation regarding the effect on the industry as whole, Ministers took the view following consultation that the new licensing regime should only cover mobile home sites with permanent residents and not apply across the board to all sites. In listening to the views expressed in the consultation it was considered that it would not be appropriate for mobile homes on holiday parks which are only occupied for part of the year to be covered by the new regime.

What impacts are there on Travelling People’s sites?

The changes to the mobile home site licensing in Part 5 of the Bill will affect the licensing regime that applies to mobile home sites with permanent residents. The changes would apply to private Gypsy/Traveller sites with permanent residents, but would not apply to private Gypsy/Traveller sites without permanent residents (e.g. those that are only open for part of the year). The changes would not apply to Local Authority Gypsy/Traveller sites.

Part 6 – Private Housing Conditions

How maintenance orders would work in practice?

Local authorities have powers to require private home owners to carry out work to repair and maintain their homes under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006. These powers came into force in April 2009. The Housing Bill contains some provisions to amend the existing powers.

Owners are responsible for maintaining their properties. But where they are unable or unwilling to do so, the 2006 Act gave local authorities powers to make owners maintain them. Local authorities can issue a maintenance order in two circumstances –

1. Where owners have not maintained, or are unlikely to maintain, their house to a reasonable standard, or

2. If the benefit of a work notice or repairing standard enforcement order has been reduced or lost because of a lack of maintenance.

Maintenance orders require an owner to draw up a maintenance plan, or contribute to a joint plan with other owners in a tenement building, stating how the affected property will be maintained in a reasonable standard over a period of up to five years. Owners are responsible for implementing the maintenance plan, but the authority can step in to enforce it if the owner fails to do so.

When the home owner submits a maintenance plan, the local authority can approve or reject it. If the local authority rejects the maintenance plan, it can then devise a maintenance plan of its own for the house or it can issue another maintenance order to require the owner to submit a new maintenance plan. The local authority can also devise a maintenance plan if the owner of the house does not submit one in time. Local authorities also have powers to vary or revoke maintenance plans in different circumstances. They have to give home owners notice of the decisions that they make in connection with maintenance plans and, at the moment, these notices must be registered in the land register.

The following diagram from the Scottish Government guidance on maintenance of private homes (http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2009/03/25154634/0), summarises the process –
The Housing Bill makes three changes to this process –

(1) Section 74 adds an additional circumstance in which a local authority can issue a maintenance plan, namely, where it has had to issue a work notice to require the owner to carry out repairs, and no certificate has been issued to confirm that the work required to be carried out by the work notice has been completed.

(2) Section 75 provides that documents required in relation to maintenance plans should be recorded in the building register rather than the land register. This is intended to reduce costs. The maintenance order itself will still be in the land register.

(3) Section 75 also allows a local authority to revoke a maintenance plan if the owners appoint a property factor.

These amendments are intended to make the process of issuing maintenance orders more straightforward and to reduce costs – these costs are incurred by local authorities but can be recovered from home owners.

During the evidence session, I mistakenly stated that section 74 will amend the 2006 Act to allow a maintenance order to be issued where a previous maintenance order has been issued. In my letter to the Committee dated 20 December 2013, I advised that the Policy Memorandum for the Bill contains an error at paragraph 275. The situation I referred to was considered during policy development but was not included in the Bill. I apologise for my mistake.

What safeguards are in place for homeowners so the provisions in the Bill do not replicate the problems experienced by the Statutory Notice scheme in Edinburgh?

Separate from the powers in the 2006 Act there are local powers that only apply in Edinburgh. These are in Part 6 of the City of Edinburgh District Council Order Confirmation Act 1991 (the “statutory notice scheme”). We understand that following a recent investigation into the misuse of these powers, the Council has suspended the use of statutory notices except, if there is a defect in a building which may be a risk to safety or health, to require “make safe” work to reduce or remove the danger and protect the safety and health of passers-by. These powers are not affected by the current Housing Bill.

Although City of Edinburgh Council has continued to use the 1991 Act powers, since April 2009 all Scottish local authorities have had general powers under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 to require home owners to carry out work on substandard property and for the local authority to carry out work themselves if owners are unable or unwilling to do so and to recover their costs (“work notices”).

The work notice powers in the 2006 Act have several safeguards for owners –

- The local authority must allow the home owner a reasonable period (which must be at least 21 days) to complete the work before carrying it out themselves.

- The work notice must specify what work needs to be done and if, in the course of carrying it out, the local authority find that additional work is needed, they must usually give the home owner another 21 days’ notice before carrying out any additional work.

- Home owners can appeal to the sheriff by summary application against the local authority’s decision –
  - to serve a work notice
  - to carry out additional work when enforcing a notice
  - to recover expenses following enforcement of notices, or
  - to refuse to grant a certificate to confirm that work has been completed.

If a home owner appeals the decision to serve a work notice, the notice will not take effect until the home owner or the local authority abandons or concedes the appeal, or until it is finally determined.

- A local authority must provide assistance to home owners in respect of the work required under a work notice. Assistance can include financial help by way of grants and loans, practical help and advice. But it is up to each local authority to decide what kinds of assistance should be provided in different circumstances.

The amendments in the Housing Bill do not affect these safeguards for home owners.

What recovery options are available to Councils to manage outstanding repair bills where owners cannot afford to pay?

Local authorities are entitled to recover the cost of work undertaken to enforce work notices and maintenance orders. They can pursue these costs as a civil debt against home owners. In addition, local authorities have powers under the 2006 Act to create repayment charges. Section 72(2)(a) of the Bill ensures that the repayment charges will be available for recovery of costs incurred in respect of the new power to paying missing shares under the amendment in that section to the Tenement (Scotland) Act 2004. A repayment charge is repayable in thirty annual instalments.

The repayment charge is registered as a burden against title to the property in a land register and any person purchasing the property becomes liable for the debt outstanding at the time of the purchase, unless the repayment charge is redeemed before title is transferred to them.
The effect is that any sale of the property will usually result in the charge being repaid, if it has not already been repaid through the annual instalments that have fallen due.

Section 76 of the Housing Bill amends the 2006 Act to allow a repayment charge to be imposed on the non-residential parts of a building which includes housing, for example, the shops on the ground floor of a tenement building.

I hope this information is of assistance to the Committee.

Yours sincerely

Linda Leslie
Housing Bill Team Leader
Right to Buy – impact on social housing lets.
This issue is best covered in the SG’s 2006 report: http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2006/09/26114727/7

At section 4.2, the report highlights that the Right to Buy does not have an impact on the number of available social lettings at the time it is exercised, and that the impact is felt when the property is no longer occupied by the original buyers. At this point, it can be assumed that if the property had stayed in the social rented sector it would have become available for re-let.

This reinforces the point we made at the session that the impact of abolition is a long term one in terms of properties being available for let – obviously it is the case that in the short term, abolition has little impact on lets because abolition is not expected, by itself, to increase the normal rate of turnover in the stock. It isn’t possible to be specific about the number of vacancies which abolition would create in the long term, but based on the SG’s estimate (in its 2012 consultation) that abolition could protect up to 10,000 houses over a five year period, with average turnover in social housing being around 9% per annum, it might be estimated that abolition could create an additional 900 vacancies over a five year period. It might be reasonable to reduce this figure in recognition of the fact that the tenants whose RTB is being ended are probably more likely to be longer term tenants, so our estimate of the vacancies figure would be somewhere between 500-900 over a five year period.

Age restriction on social sector allocations
This was introduced in September 2002 by the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001, which amended the 1987 Act as follows:

A local authority and a registered social landlord may take into account the age of applicants in the allocation of—
(a) houses which have been designed or substantially adapted for occupation by persons of a particular age group;
(b) houses to persons who are or are to be in receipt of housing support services (within the meaning of section 91 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10)) for persons of a particular age group.”

As you can see, the 2001 Act allows age to be taken into account only where the housing is specially designed or where the person is to receive specialist housing support for people of a particular age group.

David Bookbinder
Chartered Institute of Housing
30 January 2014
SCOTTISH FEDERATION OF HOUSING ASSOCIATIONS

ADDITIONAL WRITTEN EVIDENCE

(Received further to evidence offered at Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee meeting on Wednesday 22 January 2014)

Please find attached [link inserted: http://extra.shu.ac.uk/ppp-online/wp-content/uploads/2013/06/consequences_local_housing_allowance.pdf] the report I referred to during the session, (Sprigings, N. and Smith, Duncan H (2012), Unintended Consequences: Local Housing Allowance meets the Right to Buy), which tracks what happened to properties purchased under Right to Buy, and suggests that up to £2billion per year is paid out in excess Housing Benefit on ex RTB properties now rented out, at higher rents, in the private sector.

As for the reasonableness versus proportionality remark, this might be best addressed by a lawyer, but my understanding of how the Bill would work in practice is that the reasonableness test for evictions currently embedded in statute will not need to be met under the streamlined evictions process for ASB within 12 months of a criminal conviction contained in the Bill.

However, there will still be a proportionality test applied by sheriffs, in relation to Human Rights legislation (Article 8; European Court of Human Rights). Perhaps Scottish Government lawyers would be able to pick the bones of that one?

I hope this clarifies the two points I made, and we will include reference to both in the SFHA written submission, which will be made before the closing date. Please do not hesitate to contact me should the Committee require any further clarification.

Andy Young
SFHA
27 January 2014
I indicated during the evidence session on 22 January that I would write about some aspects of access to justice in the context of the Bill. The Society’s civil justice team have provided me with these comments.

The civil legal assistance implications of the new tribunal would likely affect a small number of cases, though in very significant ways. The shift of cases to the First-tier tribunal would remove them from the scope of civil legal aid and bring them into the scope of civil ABWOR (Advice by Way of Representation). The implications for access to justice will be quite wide ranging. A number of people who would previously have received legal aid will not receive ABWOR. For example, in 2012-13, there were 3,490 grants of advice and assistance for housing matters and 758 grants of legal aid for housing/recovery of heritable property.

The number of cases that would be heard by a Private Rented Housing Panel would be significantly smaller. The Scottish Government’s Final Business and Regulatory Impact Assessment for a Private Rented Sector Housing tribunal suggests around 100 grants of advice and assistance and 23 grants of civil legal aid annually. However, a large number of housing cases are undefended at the Sheriff Court and a consequence of a new tribunal may be an increase in the number of applications for civil legal assistance. Also, the number of housing cases overall has recently increased: between 2011-12 and 2012-13, the number of advice and assistance grants by 11.9%, the number of civil legal aid applications by 30.5% and the number of civil legal aid grants by 34.2%.

As the Final Business and Regulatory Impact Assessment notes, representation at tribunals is usually met by civil ABWOR rather than civil legal aid. For the small number of private rented sector (PRS) cases, if ABWOR were available, the change could be significant. First, the overall income eligibility for civil legal aid is significantly higher, at £26,239 (after deductions), than for civil ABWOR, at £12,740 (after deductions). The contributions required from a claimant can be higher for civil legal aid, with a contribution of between 33% and 100% for eligible income, than for civil ABWOR, which requires a single contribution of between £7 and £135. In 2012-13, for instance, 640 grants of civil legal aid for housing/recovery of heritable property cases were assessed without contribution and only 129 with a contribution: the average contribution was £2,243 and the median, £1,814.

The most significant factor, however, may be the overall availability. With tribunals intended to be informal and accessible venues for the resolution of disputes. Accordingly, for work before the First-tier (and other) tribunals a test of effective participation is applied. The test is three-fold: first, the case is arguable; second, it is reasonable in the circumstances of the case to grant ABWOR; and third, the matter is too complex for the applicant to present it in person. In 2012-13, for instance, of the total 4,721 grants of civil ABWOR, 2,768 were for mental health, 1,924 for immigration and asylum, 7 for bankruptcy/petition by debtor, 2 for employment, 1 for sequestration and 19 others.
We expect that there will be extremely few cases that receive public funding at the new tribunal. It may be that the informal and inquisitorial nature of tribunal proceedings may suit self-representation. However, it is clear that this will not be suitable for a number of the people likely to use the tribunal. As cuts to publicly funded legal assistance are made across jurisdictions, there is an emerging body of work around the effect and outcome of self-representation. In the United States, for instance, the Greacen Report, Resources to Assist Self-Represented Litigants: A Fifty-State Review of the “State of the Art” outlines the challenge:

“Self-represented litigants and their cases present an endless variety of situations, ranging from highly educated and capable persons seeking to obtain the simplest forms of court relief... to persons with limited education, limited English capability, and other handicaps (ranging from hearing and sight impairment to mental illness) seeking to obtain relief in the most complex sorts of legal proceedings... Some litigants can obtain all the assistance they need to vindicate their legal rights from court-provided forms and information. Others need limited legal advice to enable them to represent themselves. Others need full legal representation because of the complexity of the factual or legal issues involved in their cases or because of their lack of the basic skills needed to present them to a court.”

In short, the move from court to tribunal, from civil legal aid to civil ABWOR, presents a challenge for people who, despite the less formal and less adversarial process, cannot otherwise receive effective access to justice.

The Law Society of Edinburgh

10 February 2014
SUPPLEMENTARY WRITTEN EVIDENCE

BRITISH HOLIDAY AND HOME PARK ASSOCIATION

(Members asked BH&HPA for more information on site financing during its evidence session on 19 February 2014. The following information is an extract from an email from RoyScot Larch Ltd to BH&HPA)

Time-Limited Caravan Site Licenses

You asked me to confirm our thinking on the potential impact of time-limited caravan site licenses on our appetite to lend in the caravan sector.

Our lending, to both residential caravan owners on licensed residential sites and to leisure users on licensed holiday caravan parks, is by way of a Conditional Sale agreement. Under the terms of this type of finance instrument the asset is purchased from the vendor by us and sold to the customer by instalments, with ownership & title passing to the customer once all the repayments have been made.

Security for our lending is thus the ownership of the asset financed for the duration of the life of the finance agreement and until the customer’s obligations under that finance agreement have been fully discharged.

The corollary of this is that should we need to realise our security, as a result of customer non-payment or some other set of circumstances that causes the agreement to be brought to an end, it is through the ownership of the asset and their disposal that we will seek to recover monies outstanding to us and mitigate our losses, and any resultant liability that our customer may face.

In the case of both residential park homes and caravan holiday homes the asset financed is financed at the sited price, which is significantly higher than the ‘ex-works’ factory gate cost of the caravan. As an extension to our security in the ownership of the caravan under the terms of the finance agreement we seek, in the case of both residential parks and holiday parks, the site owners written agreement that, in the event that we have to enforce our finance agreement and take possession of the caravan, we are afforded the right to sell that caravan ‘on-site’ together with the rights and obligations under the occupation agreement.

This ability to sell ‘on-site’ ensures that we can sell at open market (i.e. sited) value mirroring the fact that we have financed and acquired the asset at open market or sited value. As a business model it would be completely unsustainable to finance a caravan at say 80% of its sited price but seek to recover outstanding amounts owed in the event of repossession or similar by selling the caravan ‘off-site’. Potential losses incurred in this way would be unsustainable and it could also give rise to customers caught in these circumstances facing significant, and in our eyes unacceptable, post asset sale liabilities.

As such the ability to sell a caravan ‘on-site’ is core to our continued lending in this sector.
Given the foregoing I cannot conceive how we, as a lender, could enter into a financing arrangement for an asset that is sited on licensed property for a period that exceeds the term of that licensed. Indeed it is likely that we would limit our lending term to a period somewhat shorter than the licensed period to ensure that, should the circumstances arise where we need to sell a caravan ‘on-site’, there is a sufficient amount of the license period remaining to enable a sale at a realistic market price. We already apply this principle in the case of caravan holiday homes whereby we limit our lending term to a period of 5 years less than the occupation agreement, subject to an overall maximum lending period. Whilst the occupation agreement referred to here and the site license are different things the principle is the same.

The introduction of time-limited residential park site licenses in Wales later this year, has led us to review our Credit Policy for lending on residential park homes in Wales for the reasons outlined above.

The proposal to limit Site Licences to 3 years for residential parks in Scotland would clearly impact on providing finance on residential park homes in Scotland, as it has in Wales.

RoyScot Larch Ltd
20 February 2014
BRITISH HOLIDAY AND HOME PARKS ASSOCIATION
SUPPLEMENTARY WRITTEN EVIDENCE

Following the evidence session attended by BH&HPA on 19th February 2014, the Convenor of the Infrastructure & Capital Investment Committee indicated that it would be in order to contact the Committee in writing if the Association had anything further to add that would be of assistance to members whilst considering the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

Firstly, we take this opportunity to reiterate our concerns regarding the proposed time limited licensing for the reasons outlined during the evidence session on 19th February and detailed in our written submission to the Committee.

It is noteworthy that, in addition to the points we have already put forward, we are in agreement with the three National Residents Associations representatives that, rather than protect those living on residential parks, a move to time limited licensing will cause great concern amongst those living on residential parks.

After reflecting on the content of the report of the Meeting on 19th February 2014, the following additional information may prove helpful.

Improvement Notices

It is our understanding that, under the proposed legislation, a park owner who provides electricity and gas through sub meters and private water and sewerage supply on his park, which is then charged out to residents, can be deprived of payment for these services because of Local Authority action regarding non-compliance with an Improvement Notice. Under such a system, the Local Authority will contact residents to inform them that due to the park owner not complying with an Improvement Notice they do not require to pay for these services.

We think that the above proposal may come from other Housing Legislation covering single property situations rather than a business like a mobile home park with a number of homes on it, which are usually occupied by quite elderly people.

We wish to highlight in more detail some of the potential downsides of the proposal that the Park Owner can be deprived of his income if he does not, or cannot, comply with an improvement notice.

Whilst we consider it unlikely that such a situation would arise, the fact that the ability for a park owner to be deprived of his income is being proposed in the legislation implies that the Scottish Government consider it to be a possibility. Consideration therefore needs to be given to the possible unintended consequences on mobile home park residents of the park owner not receiving payment for electricity, gas, water, sewerage, pitch fees etc.

Electricity: Most residents on parks have their electricity supplied through sub meters and make payment for it to the park owner. Some have their electricity supplied direct by an electricity company. Those supplied by the park owner would not be paying for the electricity in the scenario outlined above whilst those supplied directly by the electricity company would be required to continue to make their usual payments.

As the park owner could not possibly afford to supply all the mobile home owners on his park with sub meters with ‘free’ electricity, he would have no choice but to discontinue supplying those residents with electricity.

Gas: On the majority of parks gas is supplied to residents in 47kg tanks of LPG (Liquid Petroleum Gas) supplied and changed over by the park owner. Some residents on parks are supplied with their gas from a bulk tank which is piped round the park and payment is then made by the residents to the park owner. Others are supplied direct to the mobile homes by a gas company.

In situations where the park owner is not being paid for the gas, he would be unlikely to replace the 47kg tanks for residents. Those supplied with gas from a bulk tank, belonging to the park owner, would have their gas supply discontinued, leaving them with no central heating and potentially no cooking facilities, etc. Those supplied direct by a gas company would be required to continue to make their usual payments.

Water and Sewerage: Most parks have a mains water supply but some have a private supply. We estimate that approximately 50% of the parks have mains sewerage with the others having private sewerage, by means of septic tanks or sewerage treatment plants.

Residents on parks which have either private sewerage or private water would pay the park owner for these services. It is hoped that no park owner would find it necessary to discontinue water and sewerage services for their residents.

Where parks have mains water and sewerage, residents pay for it via their Council Tax and their ability to have these services would be unaffected by the withdrawal of the park owner’s income.

Rents (Pitch Fees): If payment of pitch fees ceases, how is a park owner going to pay for maintenance of the park, any mortgage he may have on the park and any other expenses for running the park? A drop in the level of park maintenance will impinge on the value of homes on the park and the amenity of the park itself, which will be to the detriment of the residents on the park.

Many residents on a park have their pitch fees and Council Tax (less the water and sewerage which they have to pay themselves) paid by the Local Authority/Housing Benefit. We assume that this means that as soon as the Local Authority advises residents they need not pay pitch fees, either the Local authority, or the residents receiving housing benefit, would have to inform the relevant authorities that they were no longer paying rent. If this is the case, residents in this position would not be entitled to receive housing benefit for the period during which no rent is being paid. Having to re-apply for housing benefit and repay all rent due at some future date depending on the decision of the courts could be stressful and time-consuming for residents, many of whom are elderly.

It is our understanding that, under the proposed legislation, a park owner who provides electricity and gas through sub meters and private water and sewerage supply on his park, which is then charged out to residents, can be deprived of payment for these services because of Local Authority action regarding non-compliance with an Improvement Notice. Under such a system, the Local Authority will contact residents to inform them that due to the park owner not complying with an Improvement Notice they do not require to pay for these services.

Taking all the above into consideration, if the income of the park owner is removed, residents could find themselves with no supplies of electricity, gas, possibly water and reduced or no maintenance on the park, in a very short period of time. Should they wish to sell up, difficulties could arise in getting a reasonable price for their mobile home under such a scenario.

Fit and Proper Person

Scottish Government Officials often refer to Landlord Registration during discussions about the proposed Fit and Proper Person Legislation for parks.

We have checked how landlord registration operates and find that the procedures are as we suggested should apply for mobile home parks, with all Local Authorities working on the same criteria. Interestingly, landlords can make one application centrally for all their properties and make one payment for all areas in Scotland. The information is then circulated to all relevant Local Authorities.

A central record is kept so that anyone can access the internet and find out whether their landlord is registered. All in all it appears to be a very simple and very efficient process as far as the applicant is concerned.

We are aware that some Local Authorities have quite a backlog of Landlord Registration applications to process and this is a cause for concern. The reason for our concern is that when an employee on a park leaves his job, it is imperative that a new employee is put in place at the very earliest date. This is particularly important as there is often only one employee on a park.

Whilst a park owner would normally expect to advertise for and employ a new employee in a couple of weeks, it is conceivable that a Local Authority could take 6 to 8 weeks, or possibly longer, to process an application for Fit and Proper Person status. Many applicants would not be prepared to wait for that period of time to find out if their job application is successful or not.

This could mean that residents on a mobile home park would have no-one looking after the park, possibly for a period of months. We are concerned as to how parks will be able to deal with such a situation which will leave residents, mostly elderly, with no one looking after and maintaining the park, supplying and fitting gas bottles, collecting rent and other payments and generally dealing with any issues the residents may have.
An employee with Fit and Proper status for working on a mobile home park should be able to work on any mobile home park in Scotland the same way as anyone with a personal licence to be in charge in a public house can work in any pub in Scotland.

British Holiday and Home Parks Association
11 March 2014
LET SCOTLAND

WRITTEN SUBMISSION

We thank the Parliament for this opportunity to comment on aspects of the Housing (Scotland) Bill relevant to the private rented sector (PRS) housing and letting agents in particular. We set out some observations on the questions provided with some additional comment in conclusion.

LetScotland’s ambition is as described on our website:

LetScotland – the Association of Professional Letting Agents in Scotland, believes that the private rented sector plays a crucial role in Scotland’s housing provision. As is the case with home ownership and public rental, private rental can be an affordable, enduring and attractive housing option in Scotland as it is in many other countries. Our shared aim as letting agents is to support and enable the long term growth of the private rented sector.

LetScotland would wish to comment on the following sections of the Housing (Scotland) Bill:

- Part 3 – Private Rented Housing; and
- Part 4 – Letting Agents.

Part 3: Private Rented Housing

This part provides for the transfer of the sheriff’s existing jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to private rented housing to the First-tier Tribunal (which is to be created under the Tribunals Bill, currently before the Parliament). In particular, it transfers all non-criminal actions relating to regulated tenancies and some actions relating to the repairing standard, the right to adapt houses and landlord registration. Ministers are to be given a power to transfer certain actions relating to houses in multiple occupation. Part 3 also contains some further adjustments to private rented housing legislation, making changes to the landlord registration system and creating some third party rights in relation to enforcing the repairing standard.

Q7. Do you have any comments on the proposals for transferring certain private rented sector cases from the sheriff courts to the new First-tier Tribunal?

LetScotland generally welcomes these proposals, subject to it remaining focussed on and achieving what is intended - the need is for the system to be more responsive and for decisions to be delivered more quickly. We believe the Tribunal will need to be well-resourced with a panel made up of suitable people experienced in the PRS. We are of the view that if tenants were empowered with better knowledge about their rights and responsibilities there would be a diminished number of cases resulting in hearings at the tribunal.

Q8. Do you have any views on the adjustments to private rented housing legislation, which are intended to enhance local authorities’ discretionary powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector?

The intention here is a welcome one. Most landlords will wish to invest in improving their property – LetScotland believes that an approach focussed on encouragement rather than enforcement will probably always being more effective. Again, empowering tenants with knowledge about how their circumstances may ease the release of grant money to carry out improvements would add value to this process and assist with what is frequently a cumbersome process for landlords and tenants.
Q9. Do you have any comments on the Scottish Government’s intention to bring forward provisions at Stage 2 to provide additional discretionary powers for local authorities to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in the private rented sector?

As part of our core mission, LetScotland wants to advance the case for a successful PRS, and a key part of that objective has to be improving conditions in the PRS housing stock. So, we concur with the Scottish Government’s ambition to improve housing stock generally. However, to achieve that goal, any new powers introduced must be enforceable across all tenures. Further, they must provide for effective prioritisation, focusing on areas or sectors most in need rather than those properties which may be more easily identified but ultimately less urgent.

Part 4: Letting Agents

This part of the Housing Bill establishes a registration system for letting agents. As well as setting up a register, it sets out various offences, provides for the publication of a code of conduct and gives the First-tier Tribunal the power to issue letting agent enforcement orders in relation to breaches of that code. It also confers on Ministers a power to transfer the existing jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants.

Q10. Do you have any comments on the proposal to create a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, and the introduction of statutory provisions regarding letting agents’ practice?

LetScotland supports the creation of a register of letting agents.

The Register should include all businesses which let and manage private rented residential property in Scotland. However, we would not support simply replicating the processes and principles established for the Property Factors Register. Whilst it has improved that sector, this system is not robust enough in our opinion for the letting and management sector, and considerable consideration needs to be given to the detail of implementation for our sector.

A strong Code of Practice is needed. Along with the other representative organisations, we welcome the planned consultation in preparing the Code.

Registration should include:

- an annual renewal (not every 3 years)
- a legally binding commitment each year to possessing:
  - adequate professional indemnity insurance
  - appropriate client money protection
  - a ring-fenced client money bank account
  - an annual audit of client accounts
  - membership of an ombudsman scheme to ensure an easily available redress mechanism for tenants and landlords.

Depending on the registration processes put in place there could be a requirement for the agent to produce annual documentation to confirm the above. It may be more appropriate to consider the registration process to be more the issuing of a licence approving the Letting Agent.
Q11. Do you have any views on the proposed mechanism for resolving disputes between letting agents and their customers (landlords and tenants)?

See the above comment about ombudsman services in response to Question 10; under these schemes redress is readily available to customers of such organisations at no cost to the claimant.

Additional comment

The more one looks at the regulation of landlords, letting agents and the processes they employ to provide good quality housing stock, the more apparent it becomes to LetScotland that tenants are not, generally, as well-resourced as all the other stakeholders.

The whole process of providing housing is one in which housing providers and their support suppliers need to be qualified: landlords are registered, letting and managing agents will be, and housing associations are well regulated. The support services all these businesses use (such as electricians, gas fitters, fire safety testers, EPC providers) are all qualified and certificate their work.

As any new tenant enters the market place, the initial experience may involve searching for a property in their desired location, then initiating a process about which they may have little knowledge or experience. The principle way in which tenants learn about the process of renting a property usually comes from their first contact with a letting agent or landlord. There are various websites to support tenants once they are in residence, but there is little support for would-be tenants prior to that first interaction with a letting agent or landlord or a friend.

All tenants will eventually “register” in the process of occupying property and paying council tax, up till then they have no real identity to the letting industry in the private rented sector in particular.

It has been suggested that in many areas of the PRS, it is difficult to identify a complete listing of all the letting agents and landlords operating in Scotland.

Tenants seeking accommodation from the Council and Housing Associations in the Edinburgh area can access Edindex. This is operated by the City of Edinburgh Council and participating registered social landlords (RSLs - housing associations/partnerships and cooperatives) as a means of enabling tenants to identify and access properties. Edindex can be accessed via the council’s web site or http://keytochoice.scotsman.com/.

Whilst we do not necessarily support Edindex’s weighty 15-page application process, it is interesting to note that the first two pages focus on the applicant’s name, UK residency status, and immigration status. Applicants are given a “reference number” to enable them to proceed with applications for property.

The establishment of a Scottish Tenants Association or similar subscription scheme could offer tenants reassurance and empowerment by providing access to information and services such as access to certificates of identity and accredited registered landlords and letting agents.

This would act both as a cross-check against the owner of the property, the property itself and any manager involved. It could also be developed to ensure that all tenants were equipped with suitable ID, such as a UK National Insurance numbers and that they have passed any required tests such as the immigration exam used in the Edindex process.

It is generally acknowledged as inappropriate for landlords and letting agents to perform the duties of the UK Border Agency.
The Renting Scotland website is another good example of what this scheme’s website or organisation might look like - https://rentingscotland.org/. This is an extremely well-designed, online resource.

If the scheme was to be managed by the Scottish Government and included a membership/reference process for tenants to provide a tenant ID, then the whole system of landlord, letting agent, property, local authority would be cross-referenced. We would suggest it be funded by the Scottish Government and operated by a management board made up of current and new stakeholders, with no one particular member having more control or influence than another.

Tenure reform

Whilst we appreciate this is not part of the current legislative process, the prospect of tenure reform has been alluded to previously and is constantly being referred to in other discussion groups and arenas. LetScotland believes that the necessity for tenure reform will potentially diminish with the implementation of the detail of the Housing Bill.

If there is continuing uncertainty on future tenure reform, many institutional investors will wait until that hesitation is removed before making final investment decisions. This could have a significant and detrimental effect on housing supply.

Our membership is predominantly urban letting agents and managers all of whom use the short assured tenancy (SAT) as the norm.

Most agents and landlords will offer a lease length between 6 and 12 months to a new applicant – however, it is usually the tenant that will opt for the shorter term. The tenant wants to get to know the letting support they will receive once they move in and want to be sure that they are happy in their new community. Thereafter, the letting will normally continue on an appropriate legal basis to suit both sides.

Most landlords and letting agents will relate many examples of tenancies which have lasted for years - until such time normally when the tenant says they want to move on. The experience in the industry is that students, migrant workers, and many others do not seek or require long leases.

Member firms variously inform us of that landlord terminations of leases equate with around one to ten percent of all lease terminations. The reasons for doing-so are split broadly evenly between properties being put on the market for sale; tenancy problems; or where a landlord intended reoccupation.

The empowerment of tenants in their rights and responsibilities will strengthen their resource to deal with their landlords over matters which may currently lead them to accept poor service or standards. This should be changed as required within the Housing Bill. If tenure reform is to be considered we would advocate a new form of lease to reflect the benefits of the Scottish Secure Tenancy (SST) as used by RSLs and adapt it for use in the private sector. We would strongly recommend that any new lease option should be created in such a way that the PRS wants to use it, although is not compelled to do so.

LetScotland would recommend retention of the existing SAT.

Conclusion

The reason for raising this latter point is that the new register of letting agents must take into account the constantly changing nature of the industry; the diversity of the property, the investor and the tenant.
Long-term investment by private landlords is very similar to pension fund investment in housing, requiring professional management to provide a return to the investor and the financing commitments involved. The housing market cannot afford the further delays that might ensue if the Housing Bill is distracted by potential reform of tenure.

Through the Landlord Registration Scheme and the requirement for extensive paperwork and certification in running an investment property both the private investor and the institutional investor are going to look to the professional manager to carry out these duties for them. We see this happening already; any and all measures taken now need to have the foresight to cater for a substantially larger professionally managed PRS in the future.

For the future, a strong and successful PRS requires:

- flexibility in tenure over a wide range of types of tenants;
- security for both landlord and tenant;
- provision of quality housing with efficient services from the property managers; and
- a financial environment in which investors will wish to supply the housing stock needed.

We believe the Housing (Scotland) Bill is a significant opportunity to build on recent success for the private renting sector in Scotland.

LET SCOTLAND

31 JANUARY 2014
March 2014

Dear Maureen

HOUSING (SCOTLAND) BILL – EVIDENCE SESSION, 12 MARCH

I undertook to write to the Committee with further information on the provisions in the Housing Bill that relate to passing on costs to residents under the new mobile home licensing system.

Site licence costs

Under section 54 of the Bill, a local authority would be able to charge a fee for a site licence. A local authority would not be able to charge a fee that is more than the amount it considers represents the reasonable costs it incurs in deciding on a site licence application. A local authority could also charge different fees for different types of application; for example, it could choose to set a lower licence fee for small sites. The Bill would not prevent a site owner from passing on the cost of a site licence to residents, through the pitch fees they pay.

Our research suggests that a licence fee would cost around £600. Under the Bill as currently drafted a licence would run for 3 years, so for a site with 20 units the cost of the licence fee (if passed on) would add around £10 a year to a resident’s pitch fee. The majority of sites have 11 to 50 residents, and for a site with 40 residents the cost of the licence fee would add around £5 a year to a resident’s pitch fee. I believe this is a reasonable amount for a resident to pay for the greater protection they will receive under the new licence system.

Section 54 of the Bill would also give Ministers two powers to safeguard residents if, for example, licence fees were found to be excessive. The first of these is a power to set out the matters a local authority can take into account when setting the licence fee. The second is a power to set a maximum licence fee level, which a local authority would not be able to charge more than.
Enforcement costs

Under section 68 of the Bill, if a local authority took enforcement action against a site owner it could recover the costs of that action from the site owner. As currently drafted, the Bill would not prevent the site owner from passing on those costs to residents through pitch fees. I am very sympathetic to the argument that the costs of, for example, issuing an improvement notice to a site owner should not be able to be passed on to residents. I am looking at the possibility of whether it would be possible to amend the Bill to prevent that happening.

I hope this information is of assistance to the Committee.

Kind regards

Margaret Burgess

MARGARET BURGESS
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

18th Report, 2014 (Session 4)

Housing (Scotland) Bill

Published by the Scottish Parliament on 26 February 2014
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

Remit and membership

Remit:

1. The remit of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee is to consider and report on—
   (a) any—
   (i) subordinate legislation laid before the Parliament or requiring the consent of the Parliament under section 9 of the Public Bodies Act 2011;
   (ii) [deleted]
   (iii) pension or grants motion as described in Rule 8.11A.1; and, in particular, to determine whether the attention of the Parliament should be drawn to any of the matters mentioned in Rule 10.3.1;
   (b) proposed powers to make subordinate legislation in particular Bills or other proposed legislation;
   (c) general questions relating to powers to make subordinate legislation;
   (d) whether any proposed delegated powers in particular Bills or other legislation should be expressed as a power to make subordinate legislation;
   (e) any failure to lay an instrument in accordance with section 28(2), 30(2) or 31 of the 2010 Act; and
   (f) proposed changes to the procedure to which subordinate legislation laid before the Parliament is subject.
   (g) any Scottish Law Commission Bill as defined in Rule 9.17A.1; and
   (h) any draft proposal for a Scottish Law Commission Bill as defined in that Rule.

Membership:

Richard Baker
Nigel Don (Convener)
Mike MacKenzie
Margaret McCulloch
Stuart McMillan (Deputy Convener)
John Scott
Stewart Stevenson
Committee Clerking Team:

Clerk to the Committee
Euan Donald

Assistant Clerk
Elizabeth White

Support Manager
Daren Pratt
The Committee reports to the Parliament as follows—

1. At its meetings on 21 January and 18 and 25 February the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee considered the delegated powers provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Bill at stage 1 (“the Bill”). The Committee submits this report to the lead committee for the Bill under Rule 9.6.2 of Standing Orders.

2. The Scottish Government provided the Parliament with a memorandum on the delegated powers provisions in the Bill (“the DPM”).

OVERVIEW OF BILL

3. This Bill was introduced by the Scottish Government on 21 November 2013. The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee is the lead Committee.

4. Very broadly, the Bill makes provision about abolition of the right to buy, the allocation of social housing, the law affecting private housing, the regulation of letting agents and the licensing of sites for mobile homes. It also provides for the transfer of jurisdiction from the sheriff courts to the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland (to be established in the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill) in cases involving private rented sector housing disputes.

DELEGATED POWERS PROVISIONS

5. The Committee considered each of the delegated powers in the Bill. At its first consideration of the Bill, the Committee determined that it did not need to draw the attention of the Parliament to the following delegated powers:

---

1 Housing (Scotland) Bill [as introduced] available here: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Housing%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b41s4-introd.pdf%20Bill/b41s4-introd.pdf)

2 Housing (Scotland) Bill Delegated Powers Memorandum available here: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Housing_DPM_final.pdf
- Section 4(2) – Power to prescribe persons of a description or type who social landlords must include in their allocation policy. (Inserts new subsection (3B) in section 21 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987)

- Section 7(2) – Power to prescribe maximum period preceding an application for housing during which a social landlord may take account of certain circumstances, and to prescribe the maximum period for which a landlord may make an applicant ineligible for the allocation of housing as a result of those circumstances. (Inserts new section 20B(4) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987)

- Section 7(2) – Power to modify the circumstances under which social landlords may make an applicant ineligible for the allocation of housing. (Inserts new section 20B(7) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987)

- Section 12(c) – Power to make provision about the procedure to be followed by social landlords in connection with a review of a decision to seek recovery of possession of a property. (Inserts new section 36(4C) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001)

- Section 21 – Power to transfer civil cases relating to houses in multiple occupation from the sheriff to the First-tier Tribunal

- Section 23(1)(a) – Power to specify persons who may make an application to the Private Rented Housing Panel in respect of the repairing standard. (Inserts new section 22(1B) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006)

- Section 24(7) – Power to make further provision about the procedure for the making or determination of applications under section 22(1A) of the 2006 Act (third party applications). (Amends paragraph 8(1) of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act)

- Section 26(2)(b) – Power to prescribe the information which is to be contained in the public register of letting agents in relation to each person on the register

- Section 27(2)(f) – Power to prescribe further information that must be supplied in an application for registration in the register of letting agents

- Section 30(4) – Power to modify the material that must be taken into account when deciding if a person is a fit and proper person to be entered on the register of letting agents

- Section 32(2)(c) – Power to specify any additional type of document or communication in which a registered letting agent must include their letting agent registration number
• Section 47(1) – Power to provide that the functions and jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to actions between letting agents and landlords or tenants are transferred to the First-tier Tribunal

• Section 51(3) – Power to modify the meaning of “letting agency work” in relation to Part 4 of the Bill

• Section 54 – Power to make regulations concerning the charging of fees for site applications. (Inserts section 32C into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (“the 1960 Act”))

• Section 56 – Power to change the time period for which a site licence is valid. (Inserts section 32J into the 1960 Act)

• Section 61 – Power to make an order varying the material a local authority must have regard to in applying the fit and proper person test. (Inserts section 32O into the 1960 Act)

• Section 66 – Power to make regulations about the appointment of an interim manager. (Inserts section 32Y into the 1960 Act)

• Section 77 – Power by order to disapply the right conferred under section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974 (“the 1974 Act”) to redeem a heritable security after 20 years. (Inserts subsections (3D) to (3F) in section 11 of the 1974 Act)

• Section 83 – Ancillary provision

• Section 85(3) – Commencement

• Schedule 1, paragraph 26 – Rules as to procedure (Court of Session) (Amends section 104 of the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984)

6. The Committee agreed to write to Scottish Government officials to raise questions on the remaining delegated powers in the Bill. This correspondence is reproduced at the Annex.

7. The Committee’s comments and, where appropriate, recommendations on those delegated powers in the Bill are detailed below.

Powers to issue guidance

(i) Section 4(2) – Power to issue guidance regarding the making or altering of social landlords’ rules on allocation of housing (inserts new subsection (3A) in section 21 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987).

(ii) Section 7(2) – Power to issue guidance on the maximum period preceding an application for housing during which a social landlord may take account of certain circumstances, and on the maximum period for which a landlord may make an applicant ineligible for the allocation of housing as a result of those circumstances (inserts new section 20B(3) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987).

(iii) Section 8(1) – Power to issue guidance regarding the creation of, or conversion of a tenancy to, a short Scottish secure tenancy on the grounds of antisocial behaviour (inserts new section 34(9) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001).

Powers conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Powers exercisable by: guidance
Parliamentary procedure: none

Provisions
(i) Section 4(2)

8. Section 21 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 (“the 1987 Act”) concerns rules made by social landlords regarding the priority of allocation of houses. New subsection (3B), inserted by section 4(2) of the Bill, confers power on the Scottish Ministers to make regulations prescribing persons of a description or type who social landlords must include in their rules governing the priority of allocation of housing. In addition, section 4(2) also inserts new subsection (3A), which requires a social landlord, in making or altering its rules governing the priority of allocation of houses, to have regard to (a) any local housing strategy for its area, and (b) any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.

(ii) Section 7(2)

9. Section 7(2) of the Bill inserts new section 20B in the 1987 Act. Section 20B(1) provides that a social landlord may impose a minimum period before an applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing, if certain circumstances apply. The circumstances are set out in subsection (5) and include antisocial behaviour, rent arrears, tenancy abandonment and making a false statement in applications for housing.

10. Section 20B(4) provides that Ministers may by regulations prescribe the maximum period preceding the application for which a social landlord may take account of any of the circumstances in subsection (5), and the maximum period that a landlord may make an applicant ineligible for the allocation of housing as a result of the circumstances in subsection (5). The regulations may set different maximum periods for different circumstances.

11. In addition, new section 20B(3) requires a social landlord, in considering whether to impose a requirement as to the minimum period before an applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing, to have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers. Guidance may be issued on the same matters as may be prescribed in regulations under subsection (4), i.e. the maximum period preceding an application for housing during which a social landlord may take account of certain circumstances, and the maximum period for which a landlord may make an applicant ineligible for the allocation of housing as a result of the circumstances in subsection (5).
(iii) Section 8(1)

12. Section 8 of the Bill makes various amendments to the provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (“the 2001 Act”) on the grant of short Scottish secure tenancies, to extend the circumstances for granting such a tenancy to include where a tenant or applicant has acted in an antisocial manner or has harassed another person. Section 8(1) inserts new section 34(9) in the 2001 Act, which provides that a landlord must have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers regarding the creation of a short Scottish secure tenancy on the new antisocial behaviour grounds.

Comment

13. In light of the potential significant effects of the exercise of each power on individuals, the Committee queried whether the Scottish Ministers intended to publish the guidance.

14. Further, in relation to the first 2 powers, the Committee sought an explanation from the Scottish Government of the intended interaction between the powers to make guidance and the powers to make regulations conferred by each section. The Government clarified the policy intention to give social landlords discretion and flexibility with regard to their rules on allocation of housing, and on eligibility periods. It therefore intends to rely primarily on the power to issue guidance to social landlords in these matters. The response explains that Ministers plan only to exercise the powers to make regulations if some groups of prospective tenants are being consistently overlooked in allocation policies, or if landlords are not having appropriate regard to the guidance on eligibility periods.

15. The Scottish Government’s response also acknowledges the potentially significant effects on individuals of the matters which the guidance may relate to. It indicates in each case that the Scottish Government will consult widely on draft guidance, and that the finalised guidance will be published on the Scottish Government website, where it will be available to tenants, prospective tenants and landlords.

16. The Committee notes, however, that there are no requirements in the Bill for consultation on, or publication of, the guidance. Whilst the Committee notes the current Government’s clear commitment to consultation and publication, the Committee requires to consider how the powers might be exercised from time to time by future administrations. In this case, the proposed guidance will supplement the law on allocation of and eligibility for social housing, and on the nature of the tenancies which may be offered to prospective tenants.

17. The Committee reports that it is content with the powers in principle, and is satisfied that they are exercisable by guidance. The Committee is also content, in light of the Scottish Government’s explanation, that it is appropriate in the circumstances for sections 4(2) and 7(2) to confer powers to make regulations as well as guidance.

18. The Committee also welcomes the Scottish Government’s commitment to consult on and publish any guidance issued under the powers conferred by sections 4(2), 7(2) and 8(1) of the Bill. However, the Committee asks the Scottish Government to consider bringing forward amendments at Stage 2 to require consultation on, and publication of, any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers under the powers conferred by those sections.

Section 41(1) – Power to set out a code of practice which makes provision about the standard of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Power conferred on:</th>
<th>the Scottish Ministers</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Power exercisable by:</td>
<td>regulations</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parliamentary procedure:</td>
<td>negative procedure</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Provision

19. Section 41 provides for the Scottish Ministers, by regulations, to set out a code of practice which makes provision about the standards of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work. Before finalising the code, the Scottish Ministers must consult on a draft of it under section 41(3).

20. The code of practice will have two principal legal effects. Firstly, consideration of whether a person has complied with the code of practice forms part of the fit and proper person considerations applied to applications for registration (section 30 of the Bill). Where the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that a person is no longer a fit and proper person, their registration may be revoked (section 35).

21. Secondly, where the First-tier Tribunal, on an application by a tenant or landlord, determines that a letting agent has failed to comply with a code of practice, it must issue an enforcement order under section 43. Failure to comply with such an enforcement order without reasonable excuse constitutes a criminal offence.

Comment

22. The Committee noted that the consequences of failure to comply with the code are similar to the consequences of failure to comply with the code of conduct under the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011, to which the affirmative procedure applies. It asked the Scottish Government to explain why it is considered appropriate for the regulations setting out the letting agent code of practice to be subject to the negative procedure.

23. The Scottish Government’s response distinguishes the Property Factors (Scotland) Act on the basis that it was the result of a Private Member’s Bill, and accordingly the Scottish Government was not directly involved in choosing the Parliamentary procedure to which that code of conduct was subject. It repeats the Government’s view that the requirement in the Bill for consultation on the code of conduct prior to it being finalised means that the negative procedure affords sufficient Parliamentary scrutiny.

24. The Committee does not consider that the requirement for consultation of itself renders the negative procedure appropriate. Further, the Committee is of the view that, irrespective of the origin of the Bill for the Property Factors (Scotland) Act, Parliament took the view that the affirmative procedure was the appropriate level of scrutiny for the code of conduct under that Act. In this case, where the legal consequences as regards revocation of registration and enforcement are similar to those for property factors, the Committee sees no reason to depart from that level of scrutiny.

25. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government to consider further in advance of Stage 2 of the Bill whether the significance of the legal consequences of failure to comply with a Letting Agent Code of Conduct are such that the affirmative procedure is a more suitable level of Parliamentary scrutiny of the exercise of the power in section 41(1) than the negative procedure.

26. The Committee asks the Scottish Government to comment on this matter further in its response to this report.

Section 60 — Power to make provision concerning the procedure to be followed in relation to the application and transfer of site licences, and appeals relating to site licences (Inserts section 32N in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960).

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: regulations
Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure

Provision
27. Part 5 of the Bill creates a new licensing regime for permanent residential mobile homes sites. The relevant provisions are inserted in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (“the 1960 Act”). New section 32N of the 1960 Act gives the Scottish Ministers the power, by regulations, to make provision in relation to the procedures to be followed for an application for a site licence, an application for consent to transfer a site licence, and the transfer of a site licence on death. It also allows Ministers to make provision in relation to appeals against a decision by a local authority to refuse a licence application, to transfer a licence, to refuse consent to transfer a licence, or to revoke a licence.

28. Section 32N(2) gives an indicative list of matters which the regulations may make provision for or in connection with. These are largely procedural matters, although not exclusively so. They include the circumstances in which the reasons for a local authority’s decision on a licence or transfer application must be given (subsection (2)(f)), and the determination and consequences of an appeal (subsection (2)(i)).

Comment (Appeals)
29. The reason given in the DPM for taking the power is that it is a power to set out procedures and time limits in relation to the site licensing system, and that this level of procedural detail is best dealt with through regulations. The Committee notes however that the power, as drafted, is not restricted to enabling provision to be made about procedural matters. In particular, subsection (1)(d) enables provision to be made in relation to appeals generally, and not merely in relation to the procedure for appeals.
30. The Scottish Government has indicated to the Committee that, in addition to making provision about procedures and timescales for appeals, it may in its view also be necessary to make provision about the effects and consequences of an appeal. For example, where a local authority has decided not to renew a licence, and the licence holder appeals, the Government considers that provision will need to be made on the status of the licence while such an appeal is underway, and on what would happen if such an appeal was successful.

31. The Scottish Government accordingly informed the Committee that Ministers will consider further whether the drafting in section 60 of the Bill needs to be refined, as the intention would be to use the power to make provision as to effects and consequences of appeals, not just in relation to appeal procedures.

32. The Committee welcomes the Scottish Government’s commitment to consider the drafting of section 60 further, and asks the Scottish Government to confirm its conclusions on the matter (including whether or not an amendment is proposed) in its response to this report.

33. The Committee adds that, in its view, section 60 should be redrawn to reflect more clearly the proposed purpose of new section 32N(1)(d) of the 1960 Act, which is to make provision about the procedure for, and the determination, consequences and effect of, an appeal, rather than to make provision about appeals generally.

Comment (Reasoned decisions)

34. Section 32N(2)(f) expressly enables provision to be made in regulations about the circumstances in which the reasons for a local authority’s decision on a licence or transfer application, or its decision to transfer a licence in the absence of an application, must be given.

35. The Bill inserts various provisions in the 1960 Act regarding the giving of reasons. Under section 32D (licence applications) a local authority is required, before refusing to issue or renew a licence, to provide an applicant with the reasons why it is considering refusing the application, and to give the applicant at least 28 days to make written representations in response. Similar requirements apply where a local authority is considering transferring a licence of its own accord under section 32G. However, there is no such requirement for the giving of reasons or seeking representations before a local authority refuses an application under section 32E to transfer a licence.

36. In each of the three cases, there is no requirement on the face of the Bill to give reasons after the decision is made. A local authority will only be required to give reasons after its decision in the circumstances provided for in regulations made under section 32N(1), if any. By contrast, new section 32L of the 1960 Act (which concerns revocation of a licence) requires a local authority to give reasons for its decision to revoke a licence after the decision is made, in addition to the requirement to give reasons and seek representations during the consideration period.

37. The Committee considers that the giving of reasons is a significant aspect of procedure. In this case, the reasons for a local authority’s decision could be expected to inform the decision of anyone with a right to appeal under new section 32M of the 1960 Act regarding whether to exercise that right. The Committee accordingly asked the Scottish Government why it is considered appropriate that the giving of reasons is subject to provision made in delegated legislation, rather than set out on the face of the Bill, and why the negative procedure is considered appropriate.

38. The Scottish Government’s response indicates that the policy is not to place a duty on a local authority to provide reasons for all of its decisions. For example where a licence application is granted, the giving of reasons may not be necessary. In the Government’s view, this is an area of administrative procedure and therefore something best covered in regulations, rather than set out on the face of the Bill.

39. The Committee accepts that provision about the giving of reasons can, in some circumstances, properly be made in subordinate legislation and that the negative procedure could be considered appropriate for the making of procedural rules, which may include provision about the giving of reasons for a local authority’s decision. However, in this particular case, the Committee notes the apparent discrepancy between the provisions in the Bill for the giving of reasons under new sections 32D (licence applications) and 32G (licence transfer without application), and the provisions under new section 32E (transfer applications).

40. The discrepancy appears to be that there are no requirements on the face of the Bill for the giving of reasons under section 32E, or for written representations to be sought. Furthermore, the giving of reasons in such cases is subject only to provision which may or may not be made in subordinate legislation under section 32N(1). This is in contrast to the position under new sections 32D and 32G. The Committee is accordingly concerned in relation to these provisions that the appropriate balance may not have been struck between the provision made on the face of the Bill, which is a matter for the Parliament, and the provision which may be made by the Scottish Ministers in the exercise of delegated powers.

41. The Committee asks the Scottish Government to explain, in its response to this report, why the absence of requirements under new section 32E (application to transfer a site licence) of the 1960 Act (i) to provide an applicant with the reasons why the local authority is considering refusing an application, and (ii) to permit an applicant to make written representations in response, is considered appropriate. In this regard, the Committee is mindful that the giving of reasoned decisions contributes to ensuring that the determination process meets the requirements of Article 6(1) ECHR. The Committee also notes the contrast between the position under section 32E and the requirements under new sections 32B (licence applications) and 32G (licence transfer without application) of the 1960 Act.

42. Similarly, the Committee asks the Scottish Government to explain why it is considered appropriate that the giving of reasons under section 32E is subject only to provision which may or may not be made in subordinate legislation under section 32N(1) (inserted by section 60).
43. These questions reflect the Committee’s concern that an appropriate balance may not have been struck between the provision made on the face of the Bill and the provision which may be made in the exercise of delegated powers under the Bill.

Section 63 - Power to vary maximum fine. (Inserts section 32T in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960).

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Power conferred on:</th>
<th>the Scottish Ministers</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Power exercisable by:</td>
<td>order</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parliamentary procedure:</td>
<td>affirmative procedure</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Provision

44. Sections 63 and 64 of the Bill insert new sections 32R, 32S and 32V into the 1960 Act. These provisions set the maximum fine on conviction of operating a caravan site without a licence (£50,000), the maximum fine on conviction of breaching licence conditions (£10,000), and the maximum fine on conviction of failure to comply with an improvement notice (£10,000). New section 32T of the 1960 Act gives the Scottish Ministers the power to amend these maximum fine levels, through an order subject to the affirmative procedure.

Comment

45. The reason given in the DPM for taking the power in new section 32T is to enable adjustment of the maximum fines imposed in line with inflation and other relevant factors. However, the power is not expressed as being restricted in that way.

46. A comparative power in section 226 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (“the 1995 Act”) enables Ministers to amend enactments passed after 1 April 1996 to substitute a new sum for a maximum fine specified in such an enactment. That power enables the substitution of a new sum only where Ministers consider that that sum is justified by inflationary changes, or to reflect the fact that the standard scale which applies to other (lesser) offences is being increased.

47. The Committee asked the Scottish Government whether, in the absence of express restrictions similar to those in the 1995 Act, the power taken in section 32T accurately reflects the policy intention. In its response, the Scottish Government explained that there may be reasons why Ministers might wish to adjust the level of maximum fines in the future other than to reflect changes in inflation or other fine levels. It gives the example of a potential sharp increase in prices in the mobile home sector, which would also require fine levels to be raised to continue to provide suitable sanction. The Scottish Government accordingly considers that restriction of the power in new section 32T would be inappropriate.

48. However the Committee remains concerned that the power is drafted more widely than is necessary to achieve the stated policy intention. It considers that the factors which may cause the Scottish Ministers to wish to vary the maximum fine for these offences should be capable of specification on the face of the Bill. This would allow the Parliament, in scrutinising the Bill, to consider whether variation of the maximum fine on these grounds could be justified in policy terms.

49. The Committee does not consider that section 32T(1) of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 63 of the Bill) should confer an unlimited discretion to vary the maximum fine for conviction in respect of the offences listed. It considers that the circumstances under which the maximum fine may be varied are matters for Parliament. The Committee accordingly considers that the power in section 32T should be restricted to permit variation of the maximum fine only where it appears to the Scottish Ministers that particular circumstances apply. These circumstances should reflect the specific policy intention in taking the power.

50. To that end, the Committee recommends that the Bill provide for the power in section 32T(1) to be exercised only where the Scottish Ministers consider it appropriate in light of inflationary changes, or where they consider that other relevant factors apply. The Bill should set out what these other relevant factors are. The Committee offers no view on what the relevant factors might be, this being a policy matter for consideration by the lead committee.

51. The Committee accordingly asks the Scottish Ministers to consider bringing forward a suitable amendment at Stage 2. The Committee asks the Scottish Government to comment on this matter further in its response to this report.
Correspondence with the Scottish Government

On 21 January 2014, the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee wrote to the Scottish Government as follows:

Section 4(2) – Power to issue guidance regarding the making or altering of social landlords’ rules on allocation of housing.
Inserts new subsection (3A) in section 21 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: guidance
Parliamentary procedure: none

1. Section 21 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 (“the 1987 Act”) concerns rules made by social landlords regarding the priority of allocation of houses. In addition to the power conferred on the Scottish Ministers to make regulations, section 4(2) of the Bill also inserts new subsection (3A), which requires a social landlord, in making or altering its rules governing the priority of allocation of houses, to have regard to (a) any local housing strategy for its area, and (b) any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.

2. The power to issue guidance to which a social landlord must have regard is not discussed in the delegated powers memorandum as it is not a power to make subordinate legislation.

3. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government:

- For an explanation of the purpose of the power in section 21(3A)(b) of the 1987 Act, as that provision is inserted by section 4(2) of the Bill?
- In particular, whether it is expected that Ministers will use the power to make guidance regarding the same matters as could be prescribed in regulations under new section 21(3B) – and if so, what considerations will inform the choice of guidance or regulations?
- Whether it intends to publish the guidance, in light of the potentially significant effect on individuals of a social landlord’s rules on housing allocation?

Section 7(2) – Power to issue guidance on the maximum period preceding an application for housing during which a social landlord may take account of certain circumstances, and on the maximum period for which a landlord may make an applicant ineligible for the allocation of housing as a result of those circumstances.
Inserts new section 20B(3) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987
Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: guidance
Parliamentary procedure: none

4. The Bill inserts new section 20A(3) into the 1987 Act which requires a social landlord, in considering whether to impose a requirement as to the minimum period before an applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing, to have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers. The power conferred on Ministers is to issue guidance on the same matters as may be prescribed in regulations under section 20A(4) of the 1987 Act.

5. The provision in Section 20B(3) of the 1987 Act, as inserted by section 7(2) of the Bill, confers power on the Scottish Ministers to issue guidance to which a social landlord must have regard in considering whether to impose a requirement as to the minimum period before an applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing (where the circumstances in section 20B(5) apply).

6. The provision confers power on the Scottish Ministers to issue guidance on the same matters as may be prescribed in regulations under section 20A(4) of the 1987 Act (as inserted by section 7(2) of the Bill).

7. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government:

   • In what circumstances is it envisaged that guidance will be issued, as opposed to regulations being made?

   • Whether it intends to publish the guidance, in light of the potentially significant effect on individuals of a social landlord’s rules on eligibility periods?

Section 8(1) – Power to issue guidance regarding the creation of, or conversion of a tenancy to, a short Scottish secure tenancy on the grounds of antisocial behaviour.
Inserts new section 34(9) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: guidance
Parliamentary procedure: none

8. Section 8(1) of the Bill amends section 34 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 on the creation of short Scottish secure tenancies. It inserts new subsection (9), which provides that a landlord must have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers regarding the creation of a short Scottish secure tenancy on the new antisocial behaviour grounds. As before, the power to issue guidance is not discussed in the delegated powers memorandum, nor is it explained in any of the supporting documents accompanying the Bill.
9. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government the following:

- What is the purpose of the power to issue guidance in section 34(9) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (inserted by section 8(1) of the Bill)?

- Why is it considered appropriate for the power to be exercised by way of guidance rather than in subordinate legislation?

- Whether it intends to publish guidance issued under this power?

Section 41(1) – Power to set out a code of practice which makes provision about the standard of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Power conferred on:</th>
<th>the Scottish Ministers</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Power exercisable by:</td>
<td>regulations</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parliamentary procedure:</td>
<td>negative procedure</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

10. Section 41 of the Bill provides for the Scottish Ministers, by regulations, to set out a code of practice which makes provision about the standards of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work. Before finalising the code, the Scottish Ministers must consult on a draft of it under section 41(3). The Delegated Powers Memorandum explains that it is considered appropriate for the code to be set out in regulations rather than on the face of the Bill, as it may require a detailed set of requirements to be developed.

11. The Bill proposes that compliance with the code of practice will have important legal consequences. Failure to comply could lead to revocation of a letting agent’s registration under section 35, or imposition of a letting agent enforcement order under section 43. Failure to comply with a letting agent enforcement order, without reasonable excuse, is an offence in terms of section 46.

12. Failure to comply with the code of conduct issued under section 14 of the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011 has similar legal consequences in relation to property factor registration and enforcement, but the order bringing that code into force is subject to the affirmative procedure.

13. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government to explain why it is considered appropriate for the regulations setting out the letting agency code of practice under section 41(1) to be subject to the negative procedure?
Section 60 – Power to make provision concerning the procedure to be followed in relation to the application and transfer of site licences, and appeals relating to site licences.
Inserts section 32N into the 1960 Act

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: regulations
Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure

14. New section 32N of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 ("the 1960 Act") gives the Scottish Ministers the power, by regulations, to make provision in relation to the procedures to be followed for an application for a site licence, an application for consent to a transfer, and the transfer of a site licence on death. It also allows Ministers to make provision in relation to appeals against a decision by a local authority to refuse a licence application, to transfer a licence, to refuse consent to a licence transfer, and to revoke a licence. Subsection (2) gives an indicative list of matters which the regulations may make provision for or in connection with.

15. The power allows Ministers to set out procedures and time limits in relation to the site licensing system and that this level of procedural detail is best dealt with through regulations. The power is to be subject to negative procedure. It would appear, however, that the power, as drafted, is not restricted to enabling provision to be made about procedural matters. In particular, subsection (1)(d) enables provision to be made in relation to appeals generally, and not merely in relation to the procedure or time limits for appeals. While the list in subsection (2) indicates some matters relating to appeals about which provision may be made, the power is not restricted to that extent.

16. There is also no requirement on the face of the Bill for a local authority to give reasons for its decisions to determine a relevant permanent site application or an application for consent to transfer a licence under section 32E, or its decision to transfer a licence under section 32G.

17. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government the following questions:

- Regarding appeals, if the power in section 32N is intended to enable provision to be made about the procedure and time limits for appeals, why is it drawn more widely than that?

- What sort of provision regarding appeals is it anticipated the power will be used to make?

18. Section 32I of the Bill requires a local authority to notify its decisions under the licensing regime (to determine applications or to transfer licences). However, an authority is only required to give reasons for its decisions in the circumstances provided for in regulations made under section 32N(1), if any. The giving of reasons is a significant aspect of procedure, and could be expected to inform the decision of anyone with a right to appeal under section 32M regarding whether to exercise that right.
19. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government the following questions:

- Why is it considered appropriate that these circumstances are subject to provision made in delegated legislation, rather than set out on the face of the Bill?
- Why is the negative procedure considered to provide an appropriate level of scrutiny for the exercise of such a power?

Section 63 – Power to vary maximum fine.
Inserts section 32T in the 1960 Act

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: order
Parliamentary procedure: affirmative procedure

20. Sections 63 and 64 of the Bill insert new sections 32R, 32S and 32V into the Act 1960 Act. These provisions set the maximum fine on conviction of operating a caravan site without a licence, the maximum fine on conviction of breaching licence conditions, and the maximum fine on conviction of failure to comply with an improvement notice. New section 32T of the 1960 Act gives the Scottish Ministers the power to amend these maximum fine levels, through an order subject to the affirmative procedure.

21. The reason given in the Delegated Powers Memorandum for taking the power in new section 32T is to enable adjustment of the maximum fines imposed in line with inflation and other relevant factors. However, although subject to affirmative procedure, the power is not expressed as being restricted in that way.

22. A comparative power in section 226 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 enables Ministers to amend enactments passed after 1 April 1996 to substitute a new sum for a maximum fine specified in such an enactment. That power enables the substitution of a new sum only where the Ministers consider that that sum is justified by inflationary changes, or to reflect the fact that the standard scale which applies to other (lesser) offences is being increased.

23. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government:

- Whether it considers that it might be appropriate for similar restrictions to apply to the exercise of the power in section 32T?
- And, in the absence of such restrictions, whether it considers that the power taken in section 32T reflects the policy intention in taking such a power?
On 28 January 2014, the Scottish Government responded as follows:

Section 4(2) – Power to issue guidance regarding the making or altering of social landlords’ rules on allocation of housing. Inserts new subsection (3A) in section 21 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987.

The purpose of section 21(3A)(b) of the 1987 Act, as inserted by section 4(2) of the Bill, is to enable Scottish Ministers to issue guidance to social landlords on how the landlords make and alter the rules they apply when allocating houses to tenants. Because of the significant effect that social landlords’ rules on allocation can have on individuals, the Scottish Government intends to issue such guidance before commencing the provisions of section 4. Before doing so, it will consult social landlords, tenants and other stakeholders on draft guidance. Subject to the outcome of the consultation, the Government expects the guidance to cover issues such as:

- Definition of unsatisfactory housing conditions
- Factors to consider in assessing whether persons have housing needs which are not capable of being met by housing options which are available
- Identification of groups to which a social landlord will give priority
- Definition of property and related issues such as evidence of ownership, issues relating to properties that have been rented out and ability to access a property.

The Scottish Government hopes that this guidance will help social landlords to make rules on allocations that provide a basis for them to respond to the housing needs of local people and to ensure that affordable housing goes to those who need it most. It would only make regulations in respect of the same matters as the guidance covered if it appeared that the guidance was not achieving its desired effect and if, for example, some groups of prospective tenants were being consistently overlooked in social landlords’ rules. This approach reflects the Scottish Government’s wish to give social landlords discretion and flexibility in these matters and to use the regulation making power only where it appears that guidance is not being successful. The guidance will be published on the Scottish Government website, so that it will be available to tenants, prospective tenants as well as landlords.

Section 7(2) – Power to issue guidance on the maximum period preceding an application for housing during which a social landlord may take account of certain circumstances, and on the maximum period for which a landlord may make an applicant ineligible for the allocation of housing as a result of those circumstances. Inserts new section 20B(3) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987.

Because of the significant effect that a social landlord’s rules on eligibility periods can have on individuals, the Scottish Government intends to issue guidance to social landlords on this matter before commencing the provisions of section 7. Before doing so, it will consult social landlords, tenants and other stakeholders on draft guidance. It would only make regulations in respect of this if it appeared that landlords were not having appropriate regard to the guidance when imposing a requirement as to the minimum period before an applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing. This approach reflects the Scottish Government’s wish to give social landlords discretion and flexibility in this matter to use the regulation making power only where it appears that the guidance is not being successful.
The guidance will be published on the Scottish Government website, so that it will be available to tenants, prospective tenants as well as landlords.

Section 8(1) – Power to issue guidance regarding the creation of, or conversion of a tenancy to, a short Scottish secure tenancy on the grounds of antisocial behaviour.

Inserts new section 34(9) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001.

The purpose of section 34(9) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001, as inserted by section 8(1) of the Bill, is to allow the Scottish Government to issue guidance to social landlords to assist them in determining the type of circumstances where a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy on the new antisocial behaviour ground, inserted as paragraph 2A of schedule 6 to that Act by section 8(4) of the Bill, may or may not be appropriate.

The Scottish Government does not wish to be prescriptive about how social landlords use this new Short Scottish Secure Tenancy for antisocial behaviour.
Therefore, it considers it more appropriate for the power to be exercised by way of guidance rather than subordinate legislation. The Scottish Government does however wish to encourage best practice and may wish to highlight particular factors that landlords should take into account when considering the use of the new tenancy. Guidance will give social landlords more flexibility to address antisocial behaviour in their communities than would regulations. There is already a power to issue guidance as to what might be appropriate housing support services for the purposes of section 34 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 at section 34(8).

The Scottish Government intends to issue such guidance before commencing the provisions for the new Short Scottish Secure Tenancy for antisocial behaviour, inserted as paragraph 2A of schedule 6 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001.
Before doing so, it will consult social landlords, tenants and other stakeholders on draft guidance. The guidance will be published on the Scottish Government website, so that it will be available to tenants, prospective tenants, as well as landlords.

Subject to the outcome of the consultation, the Government expects the guidance to cover issues such as:

- applying the policy consistently
- actions taken by the tenant to address their behaviour or the behaviour of their household/visitors
- evidence (level and quality of evidence of antisocial behaviour); and
- the provision of housing support services by landlords.
Section 41(1) – Power to set out a code of practice which makes provision about the standard of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work.

The Committee asked the Scottish Government to explain why it is considered appropriate for the regulations setting out the letting agency code of practice under section 41(1) to be subject to the negative procedure.

As the Committee mentions, the consequences of failure to comply with the code are similar to provisions in the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011, to which affirmative procedure applies. The Property Factors (S) Act 2011 was a private member’s Bill and the Scottish Government therefore had no direct influence over the procedure it adopts for its Code of Practice. Under section 41(3) of the Housing Bill, the Scottish Ministers must consult on a draft Code of Practice for Letting Agents before finalising that Code. Given these consultation requirements the Scottish Government is of the view that negative procedure is sufficient.

Section 60 – Power to make provision concerning the procedure to be followed in relation to the application and transfer of site licences, and appeals relating to site licences. Inserts section 32N into the 1960 Act.

This power allows Ministers to make regulations relating to appeals under the reformed site licensing system the Bill would introduce. These regulations would cover the procedure and timescales relating to such appeals, but the Scottish Government believes it is also likely to be necessary to make provisions about the effect and consequence of such appeals. For example where a local authority has decided not to renew a licence, and the licence holder appeals, provision will need to be made on the status of the licence while such an appeal is underway, and what would happen if such an appeal was successful. However, in light of the Committee’s comments, Ministers will consider further whether the drafting in section 60 needs full refinement, as the intention would be to use the power to make provision as to effects and consequences of appeals, not just in relation to appeal procedures.

The Committee has also asked about the provisions in the Bill that will require local authorities to give reasons for their decisions under the new site licensing regime (under sections 32I and 32N, which would be inserted into the 1960 Act by sections 55 and 60 of the Bill). For background, in relation to providing reasons section 55 of the Bill would insert new section 32D(4) into the 1960 Act. This would require a local authority, before refusing to issue or renew a licence, to provide an applicant with the reasons that it is considering for refusing an application, and giving the applicant at least 28 days to make written representations in response.

However the Scottish Government does not want to place a duty on a local authority to provide reasons for all of its decisions. For example, in cases where a local authority has granted a licence, or consented to the transfer of a licence, it would be unnecessary and disproportionate to require it to provide reasons, at least unless they are requested. It is the Scottish Government’s view that this is an area of administrative procedure, and therefore something best covered in regulations, rather than set out on the face of the Bill. Negative procedure seems to the Scottish Ministers to provide an appropriate level of scrutiny for such matters, given the limited intention for use of the power.
Section 63 – Power to vary maximum fine. Inserts section 32T in the 1960 Act.

Section 32T of the 1960 Act, which would be inserted by section 63 of the Bill, gives Scottish Ministers the power to amend fine levels in relation to specific offences related to mobile home site licensing. The Scottish Government has considered the Committee’s suggestion that it restrict the provision in a manner similar to that under section 226 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. However, the Scottish Government believes that there could be reasons Ministers might wish to adjust the level of maximum fines other than to reflect changes in inflation or other fine levels.

For example, it may be that the prices of mobile homes sharply increase, meaning that fine levels might also need to be raised to continue to provide a suitable sanction. Given the greater level of scrutiny that the affirmative procedure would provide, the Scottish Government believes that restriction of this provision is inappropriate.
Housing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered its approach to the delegated powers provisions in this Bill at Stage 1 and agreed to seek further information from the Scottish Government.
Housing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 1

11:03

The Convener: Item 3 is consideration of the delegated powers in the Housing (Scotland) Bill at stage 1.

The committee is invited to agree the questions that it wishes to raise with the Scottish Government on the delegated powers in the bill. It is suggested that these questions be raised in written correspondence, and the responses received will help to inform a draft report on the bill. The committee will have the opportunity to consider the responses at a future meeting before the draft report is considered.

Section 21 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 relates to rules made by social landlords regarding the priority of allocation of houses. In addition to the power conferred on the Scottish ministers to make regulations, section 4(2) of the bill also inserts new subsection (3A) into section 21 of the 1987 act to require a social landlord,

“In making or altering its rules governing the priority of allocation of houses”, to

“have regard to ... any local housing strategy ... for its area, and ... any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.”

The power to issue guidance to which a social landlord must have regard is not discussed in the delegated powers memorandum as it is not a power to make subordinate legislation.

Does the committee agree to ask the Scottish Government for an explanation of the purpose of the power in section 21(3A)(b) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987, as that provision is inserted by section 4(2) of the bill; in particular, whether it is expected that ministers will use the power to make guidance regarding the same matters as could be prescribed in regulations under new section 21(3B) of the 1987 act and, if so, what considerations will inform the choice of guidance or regulations; and whether the Scottish Government intends to publish the guidance, in light of the potentially significant effect on individuals of a social landlord’s rules on housing allocation?

Stewart Stevenson (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP): It might be useful to make the observation that, as a committee, we seem to be saying to the Government fairly regularly that, if it is to produce guidance, that guidance should be published. If other members are of the same mind as I am, this might be a useful opportunity simply to say that that will be our position generally, so that the Government can take some account of that from here on in.
Of course, I agree with the proposition that the convener has put.

The Convener: Thank you for that observation.

Are members content that we ask those questions?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: The bill also inserts in the 1987 act new section 20A(3), which requires a social landlord, in considering whether to impose a requirement as to the minimum period before an applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing, to have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish ministers. The power that is conferred on ministers is the power to issue guidance on the same matters as may be prescribed in regulations under section 20A(4) of the 1987 act.

The provision in section 20B(3) of the 1987 act, as inserted by section 7(2) of the bill, confers on the Scottish ministers the power to issue guidance on the same matters as may be prescribed in regulations under section 20A(4) of the 1987 act, as inserted by section 7(2) of the bill.

Does the committee agree to ask the Scottish Government in what circumstances it is envisaged that guidance will be issued, as opposed to regulations being made; and whether the Scottish Government intends to publish the guidance, in light of the potentially significant effect on individuals of a social landlord’s rules on eligibility periods? Stewart Stevenson’s point about guidance was well made, but I will not invite him to make it again. Are we content to ask those questions?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: Section 8(1) of the bill amends section 34 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 on the creation of short Scottish secure tenancies. It inserts new subsection (9), which provides that a landlord must have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish ministers regarding the creation of a short Scottish secure tenancy on the new antisocial behaviour grounds. As before, the power to issue guidance is not discussed in the delegated powers memorandum, nor is it explained in any of the supporting documents that accompany the bill.

In the absence of such explanation, does the committee agree to ask the Scottish Government what the purpose is of the power to issue guidance in section 34(9) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001, as inserted by section 8(1) of the bill; why it is considered appropriate for the power to be exercised by way of guidance rather than in subordinate legislation; and whether the Government intends to publish guidance that is issued under that power?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: Section 41 of the bill provides for the Scottish ministers, by regulations, to set out a code of practice that makes provision about the standards of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work. Before finalising the code, the Scottish ministers must consult on a draft of it under section 41(3). The delegated powers memorandum explains that it is considered appropriate for the code to be set out in regulations rather than on the face of the bill, as it may require a detailed set of requirements to be developed. Although that could be considered reasonable, consideration of the choice of parliamentary procedure may be appropriate.

The bill proposes that compliance with the code of practice will have important legal consequences. Failure to comply could lead to revocation of a letting agent’s registration under section 35, or the imposition of a letting agent enforcement order under section 43. Failure to comply with a letting agent enforcement order without reasonable excuse is an offence under section 46.

Failure to comply with the code of conduct issued under section 14 of the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011 has similar legal consequences in relation to property factor registration and enforcement, but the order that brings that code into force is subject to the affirmative procedure. Does the committee therefore agree to ask the Scottish Government to explain why it is considered appropriate for the regulations that set out the letting agency code of practice under section 41(1) of the bill to be subject to the negative procedure?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: New section 32N of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 gives the Scottish ministers the power, by regulations, to make provision in relation to the procedures to be followed for an application for a site licence, an application for consent to a transfer and the transfer of a site licence on death. It also allows ministers to make provision in relation to appeals against a decision by a local authority to refuse a licence application, to transfer a licence, to refuse consent to a licence transfer or to revoke a licence. Subsection (2) of new section 32N of the 1960 act gives an indicative list of matters that the regulations may make provision for or in connection with.

The power allows ministers to set out procedures and time limits in relation to the site licensing system and provides that that level of procedural detail is best dealt with through regulations. The Scottish Government considers the negative procedure to be appropriate.
However, it would appear that, as drafted, the power is not restricted to enabling provision to be made about procedural matters. In particular, paragraph (d) of subsection (1) of new section 32N enables provision to be made in relation to appeals generally and not merely in relation to the procedure or time limits for appeals. Although the list in subsection (2) indicates some matters that relate to appeals about which provision may be made, the power is not restricted to that extent.

In addition, there is no requirement on the face of the bill for a local authority to give reasons for its decision to determine a relevant permanent site application or an application for consent to transfer a licence under new section 32E of the 1960 act, or for its decision to transfer a licence under new section 32G.

Does the committee therefore agree to ask the Scottish Government, regarding appeals, why, if the power in new section 32N of the 1960 act is intended to enable provision to be made about the procedure and time limits for appeals, it is drawn more widely than that; and what sort of provision regarding appeals it is anticipated that the power will be used to make?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: New section 32I of the 1960 act, as inserted by the bill, requires a local authority to notify its decisions under the licensing regime to determine applications or to transfer licences. However, an authority is required to give reasons for its decisions only in the circumstances that are provided for in regulations that are made under new section 32N(1) of the 1960 act, if any. The giving of reasons is a significant aspect of procedure and could be expected to inform the decision of anyone with a right to appeal under section 32M about whether to exercise that right.

Does the committee therefore agree to ask the Scottish Government why it is considered appropriate for those circumstances to be subject to provision that is made in delegated legislation rather than set out on the face of the bill; and why the negative procedure is considered to provide an appropriate level of scrutiny for the exercise of such a power?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: Sections 63 and 64 of the bill insert new sections 32R, 32S and 32V into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960. Those provisions set a maximum fine of £50,000 on conviction for operating a caravan site without a licence; a maximum fine of £10,000 on conviction for breaching licence conditions; and a maximum fine of £10,000 on conviction for failure to comply with an improvement notice.

New section 32T of the 1960 act gives the Scottish ministers the power to amend those maximum fine levels, through an order that would be subject to the affirmative procedure. The reason that is given for taking that power is to enable the maximum fines that are imposed to be adjusted in line with inflation and other relevant factors. However, although it would be subject to the affirmative procedure, the power is not expressed as being restricted in that way.

A comparative power in section 226 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 enables ministers to amend enactments passed after 1 April 1996 by substituting a new sum for a maximum fine that is specified in such an enactment. That power enables the substitution of a new sum only when ministers consider that that sum is justified by inflationary changes, or to reflect the fact that the standard scale that applies to other, lesser offences is being increased.

Does the committee therefore agree to ask the Scottish Government whether it considers that it might be appropriate for similar restrictions to apply to the exercise of the power in new section 32T of the 1960 act? In the absence of such restrictions, does the Government consider that the power that is taken in section 32T reflects the policy intention in taking such a power?

Members indicated agreement.
Dear Maureen,

Housing (Scotland) Bill: Financial Memorandum

The Finance Committee issued a call for evidence on the Housing (Scotland) Bill’s Financial Memorandum (FM) on 11 December 2013 giving a deadline of 31 January 2014 for responses. A total of thirteen responses were received and these are attached.

Short Scottish Secure Tenancies: provision of housing support

The FM estimates that the cost of providing housing support to individuals who have their tenancies converted to short Scottish Secure Tenancy on the basis of antisocial behaviour will be £764,000 per year across Scotland.

Some local authorities have questioned whether these assumptions provide an accurate reflection of costs at a local level. North Lanarkshire Council’s view is that the assumptions “should be viewed with some caution since it is based on national costs and statistics from earlier years as well as assumptions on the type and provider of support”. South Lanarkshire Council makes a similar point stating that, with regard to the assumptions made in the FM, “we believe there are some limitations with them, and in particular, with the data used to support them”.

The City of Edinburgh Council’s response sets out its own estimate of the potential annual cost of providing housing support, estimating that cost at £270,000. This estimate is based on two assumptions. The first is that all tenants with Scottish Secure Tenancies who receive a final warning over their antisocial behaviour will convert to a SSST with support. The second is that where a homelessness assessment has been carried out and there has been a history of significant antisocial behaviour within the previous three years, a SSST with support would be appropriate. The response does, however, also note that its estimate “is dependent on any Scottish Government guidance”.

Costs relating to the establishment of the Private Rented Sector tribunal
The FM states that “It is expected that there will be no additional costs for local authorities from proposals for a Private Rented Sector (PRS) tribunal.” However, some local authorities consider that costs may arise in relation to this provision. For example, Renfrewshire Council notes that “as the provider of housing services, the local authority will need to train relevant staff and update existing information to reflect the new changes.”

The City of Edinburgh Council also comments on the FM’s assumption, stating that “it is anticipated that the creation of such a tribunal will generate a significant increase in enquiries to the Council and appeals against landlord registration decisions, Rent Penalty Notices and various HMO decisions resulting in increased pressure on existing staff resources.”

Third party applications to the Private Rented Housing Panel
Some responses addressed the discretionary power to enable local authorities to make an application to the Private Rented Housing Panel (PRHP) in respect of the repairing standard.

The Association of Local Authority Chief Housing Officers (ALACHO) comments that “it is particularly difficult to estimate the costs of any increased duties arising from the measures in the Bill especially those pertaining to new duties towards the private rented sector.” In relation to third party applications, ALCAHO notes “that several ALCAHO members have drawn attention to the fact that the need to gather evidence on property condition, the processing of applications and defending a case (on appeal of a decision in court) could give rise to significant and potentially onerous new duties to local authorities.” Similar comment was made by the City of Edinburgh Council.

South Lanarkshire Council states that “while we support the intention of the Bill’s approach that local authorities can act as a third party to the PRHP, and consider that the approach could increase flexibility to address poor standards in the PRS, we have some reservations…regarding the resourcing of it.” The Council considers it important that “further work is carried out to establish resource requirements” to support councils in relation to this power.

Landlord registration
Table 2 of the FM sets out (at page 43 of the Explanatory Notes) that the costs to other bodies, individuals or businesses arising from Part 4 of the Bill will be in the form a registration fee set at £250 per letting agent on a three year basis. Paragraph 192 of the Bill identifies that this level of fee would result in income to the Scottish Government of £180,000 in the first year of operation of the register with a similar fee for re-registering meaning a similar level of income in the fourth year of the register. This is based on an analysis of UK wide data that suggests there are around 719 letting agents operating in Scotland.
However, in its response, the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors (RICS) comments that the number of letting agents businesses is likely to be “much higher” than may be suggested in the FM. The response from the City of Edinburgh Council would appear to support this comment given that it states there are “currently 774 letting agents registered” through its own Landlord Registration Scheme.

The RICS response notes that to realise the desired outcome of introducing a registration system “it is absolutely vital that there is a consistent approach to enforcement of the proposed registration arrangements and associated code of practice.”

The FM states that the estimate of costs to other bodies, individuals and businesses does “not include any potential training costs or costs to alter business practices that a letting agent may have to undertake to comply with a code of practice” and that the estimate may therefore be subject to change. RICS sets out its view that the provisions of the Bill “have been designed to eliminate poor or mal practice and raise standards in the sector” and that “the raising of standards can only be achieved through ongoing training”. On that basis, RICS suggests that the estimate will be subject to change “unless the Scottish Government is willing to remunerate the costs of training all letting agent business staff, which would likely eclipse the monies accumulated from the three-yearly £250 per business registration fee”.

Mobile home licensing
Angus Council has commented on the provisions in relation to the licensing of mobile home sites with permanent residents, noting that the Bill “does not address the issue of ‘holiday’ sites” and that it “is also currently unclear where migrant worker sites sit”. The Council notes that to police licensing and planning permission issues can be very difficult and resource intensive and that it is “not convinced that the Bill has sufficient cost efficient tools and penalties to deter and tackle misbehaviour” until legislation is introduced to address holiday and migrant worker sites.

Conclusion
Your committee may wish to consider the above information along with the attached submissions in its evidence session with the Minister.

Yours sincerely,

Kenneth Gibson MSP
Convener
Introduction
1. Angus Council welcomes the opportunity to comment as part of the consultation with the Financial Committee’s scrutiny of the Financial Memorandum.

Consultation
2. Angus Council did take part in the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill, and we did make comments on the financial assumptions made.
3. We believe that our comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the Financial Memorandum.
4. We had sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise.

Costs
5. The Bill will have financial implications for us, but we believe that the assumptions being made are reasonable.
6. The estimated costs and savings set out within the Financial Memorandum and projected over 15 years for each service sound reasonable. However, we are concerned with the potential cost implications of Part 5 – mobile home sites with permanent residents. The Bill only deals with permanent sites and does not address the issue of “holiday” sites. The boundaries between the two in practical terms are very often blurred, as many sites have a mix of permanent and so called holiday lets. It can be very difficult (and therefore resource intensive) to police licensing and planning permission issues on the ground. It is also currently unclear where migrant worker sites sit within these classifications – our belief is that they should be included as permanent sites, but again, this has cost implications in terms of administration for local authorities.
7. In Angus, breaches of planning permission and breaches of site licence are quite common, so we are not convinced that the Bill has sufficient cost efficient tools and penalties to deter and tackle misbehaviour until further legislation is introduced which also addresses holiday and migrant worker sites.
8. We are confident that we will be in a position to meet the financial costs that will be associated with the Bill with the exception of Part 5, mobile home sites with permanent residents where there could be a risk financially as we have explained in question 5.
9. The Financial Memorandum accurately reflects the uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise, again with the exception of Part 5, mobile home sites with permanent residents.

Wider Issues

10. We believe that with the exception of part 5, the Financial Memorandum does for the most part capture associated costs with the Bill. However, there it is likely that there would be additional costs to the council to take action where there are breaches of site licence until further new legislation is introduced.

11. We believe that for the most part there will be no direct costs associated with this part of the Bill, with the exception of Part 5 – mobile home sites with permanent residents. However; at the moment it would be difficult to quantify any future costs that might arise until the Bill comes into force.

Conclusion

12. Angus Council welcomes the opportunity to work with The Scottish Government to help improve housing in Scotland. We have high quality housing stock which will meet the SHQS by 2015, have the fourth lowest rents, and have a low level of borrowing. We therefore have a track record of managing our business for the benefit of our customers in a way that delivers real housing outcomes for both tenants and the wider community. We believe that the new Housing Bill will strengthen our position without imposing too many additional costs. However we are concerned that there could be resource issues for local authorities, particularly with Part 5, mobile home sites with permanent residents. If further legislation was introduced which addressed the wider issues around holiday and migrant worker sites, this would help to clarify the sector within Angus and elsewhere, and Angus Council would be in a better position to assess cost implications in the round.
Introduction and General Comments
1. As the representative body for Local Authority Chief Housing Officers in Scotland, ALACHO welcomes the opportunity to respond to the Finance Committee questionnaire on the Financial Memorandum to the Housing (Scotland) Bill. ALACHO has been actively involved in all aspects of the pre-Bill consultation process, in particular the deliberations of ARHAG (the Scottish Government led Affordable Rented Housing Advisory Group) which considered the affordable housing allocations and tenancy provisions of the Bill, the consultation on Housing Tribunals, the Private Rented Sector Strategy Group, and the future of the Right to Buy consultation document, all of which made significant recommendations subsequently reflected in the provisions of the Bill.

Consultation
Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
2. Yes, on both counts.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
3. We are content that our comments have been reflected in the FM to the Bill.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
4. Yes. Having been involved in the consultation process from inception we are content with the time allowed. Indeed we would commend Scottish Government both for the time allowed and the inclusive way in which consultation was undertaken.

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?
5. As a representative body the Bill has no direct financial implications for ALACHO. The financial implications will be experienced by the 32 Scottish local authorities which make up our membership. As noted above, we are content that the costs of implementing the provisions of the Bill have been given reasonable consideration and that where individual councils have concerns over their particular circumstances, that they will bring these to the attention of the Finance Committee through their response to this questionnaire. We also understand that local authority directors of Finance are also responding through COSLA.
Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?

6. Having been involved in earlier consultations on each aspect of the Bill, and having had the opportunity to comment on potential costs as appropriate, ALACHO is broadly content that the estimates of costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable, albeit within the constraints of course of 15 year estimates, over which time frame much can and will change.

7. It should be acknowledged however that for local authorities it is particularly difficult to estimate the costs of any increased duties arising from measures in the Bill especially those pertaining to new duties towards the private rented sector, so this will need to be kept under careful review e.g. in relation to the proposal to allow third party (i.e. local authority) application to an expanded PRHP on the repairing standard, or any requirement to police the activities of letting agents. With regard to the former several ALACHO members have drawn attention to the fact that the need to gather evidence on property condition, the processing of applications and defending a case (on appeal of a decision in court) could give rise to significant and potentially onerous new duties to local authorities.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?

8. As noted above there are no significant resource implications for ALACHO arising from the provisions of the Bill. We would however draw attention to our observations in response to question 5 above. Undoubtedly further work will be required for local authorities to collate the costs involved in complying with any new duties relating to the private rented sector, some of which may only be established in practice.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?

9. ALACHO understands that many of the provisions are based on estimates of cost and timescales, often in a context where empirical data has not hitherto been collected. We also understand the variable nature of some types of service provision and associated outcomes. In this context, we are broadly content that a reasonable attempt has been made to identify costs and timeframes over which they will arise. However, given the acknowledged uncertainty around some of the estimates, the key issue for ALACHO is that costs are kept under review and resource support made available to councils adversely affected. This is particularly important in the current environment where council HRA revenues are being reduced considerably as a consequence of welfare reform provisions such as the bedroom tax.

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

10. Whilst we believe the FM reasonably captures the costs associated with introducing the Bill, as noted in response to Question 7 above, it is being introduced at a time where Scottish Local Authorities are experiencing serious pressure on their housing budgets. The FM can be no more than a best guess at this stage, albeit an informed guess. As noted above it is vital that costs are monitored on a regular basis. We are certain that councils will do this and bring any significant unintended or unforeseen costs of implementation to the attention of government.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

11. As noted elsewhere in our response, ALACHO believes there could well be unforeseen costs associated with the Bill, depending on future circumstances and the take up of provisions within the Bill (e.g. the extent to which councils decide to pursue third party appeals on behalf of private sector tenants). It is difficult to quantify these costs at present, for the reasons described at various points above. Such costs however are likely to impact not only councils but other agents also e.g. private sector landlords and letting agents will undoubtedly face costs in complying with a new regulatory regime, or in engaging with the new tribunal system.
Consultation
Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. East Dunbartonshire Council has responded to a number of consultations in relation to the Housing Bill. However the Council has not so far responded to financial assumptions within the Bill.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. Please see above – not so far.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. The Council contributed extensively on the Housing Bill proposals, and we feel that we had sufficient time to comment on the consultations. Tenants remain dissatisfied with the removal of introductory tenancies from the Bill though.

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?
4. At a time of great financial pressure and efficiency savings any legislative implications and most of the changes outlined will have workload and therefore financial implications. Where policies such as allocations policies have to be reviewed, changed and consulted upon this will have financial implications which cannot be regarded as negligible. It is welcomed that estimated costs and long term projections of implications are outlined in the consultation.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?
5. Unable to comment as do not have the resources to analyse future workloads that far ahead. The information outlined appears reasonable but comments regarding negligible costs do not appear to be accurate.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. Unsure if future financial costs can be met and unable to estimate what the costs may be.
Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?

7. Unable to estimate the impact of the legislation proposed.

Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

8. Housing staff and legal staff involved with Right to Buy applications are likely to encounter a surge of applications (many may not proceed but loss of right will increase enquiries and applications). The legislation will also incur workload pressures and financial costs that will be more difficult to absorb and cannot be regarded as negligible when legislation is enacted.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. Yes but unable to quantify.
Consultation
Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. No.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. N/A

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. N/A

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?
4. There are no direct financial implications for Homes for Scotland. The ‘Private Rented Housing’, ‘Private Housing Conditions’ and ‘Letting Agents’ parts of the Bill may impact some of our members who act as private landlords but we do not wish to raise any concern with the level of costs.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?
5. Yes

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. N/A for Homes for Scotland.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?
7. No comment.

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?
8. No additional comments
Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. No additional comments.
Consultation
Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. Yes. North Ayrshire took part in most of the consultation exercises and commented on the financial assumptions, where appropriate.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. Yes.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Yes.

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?
4. Yes, the only significant financial implications of the Bill for North Ayrshire Council relate to the abolition of Right To Buy and we believe that these have been accurately reflected.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?
5. Yes.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. The main financial impact of the Bill for North Ayrshire is the abolition of Right To Buy. We believe that the impact can be managed within our long term financial plans for the Housing Revenue Account.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?
7. Yes.

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?
8. Yes.
Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. At this stage we do not foresee any additional future costs associated with this Bill.
Consultation

Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?

1. Yes, we were fully involved in the consultation exercise and where financial implications could be quantified full comment was made.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?

2. The Financial Memorandum is generalising all comment gained through the consultation exercise therefore it is difficult to assess, however in general it looks as if all comments have been taken into account when reviewing the potential financial impact.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?

3. Sufficient time is usually given in relation to any consultation. However difficulties can arise in relation to the availability of resources to undertake the detailed analysis required.

Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?

4. In relation to Part 1, Right to Buy, the assumptions made are in agreement to those reflected in our response. In relation to other areas within the Bill no monetary value was given but there was a belief that there would be a potential increase in costs associated with the introduction of the legislation.

5. The Financial Memorandum has tried to identify these costs and have recognised that there will be some cost increases associated with the legislation.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?

6. The estimates costs and savings contained within the Financial Memorandum have been based upon averages over the whole sector. It is not possible to accurately assess the actual impact of the changes in costs (if any) until the legislation is introduced and changes pertaining to the legislation as a whole incorporated into current workloads are assessed. It is therefore too soon to assess the accuracy of the projected cost outlined in the Financial Memorandum.

7. The most significant cost on local authorities is set out in paras 70-73 in relation to the provisions for short SSTs and the associated need to provide housing support services. The cost is estimated to be £764k per annum across all local authorities. However this should be viewed with some caution since it is based on national costs and statistics from earlier years as well as assumptions on the type and provider of support that may not be an accurate reflection of costs at a local level.

8. In general the FM appears to provide estimates only of set-up and annual costs without any reference to a projection over 15 years.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?

9. Until changes are implemented it is difficult to accurately assess the costs associated with this. If actual costs of implementation look to be adverse then some assistance should be given by the Scottish Government to ease the burden during the implementation phase and also for any recurring costs.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?

10. The Financial Memorandum reflects that the costs stated are estimates and recognises that a number of assumptions surrounding the changes in relation to both actual costs and volumes can change and inevitably have an effect on the estimates costs currently identified.

Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

11. The Financial Memorandum looks as if most costs have been identified but again it will not be known until the implementation stage if there are indeed any hidden costs associated with its introduction and implementation.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

12. It would not be possible to quantify these future costs until the subordinate legislation was known and in place.
Consultation

Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?

1. Yes, Perth and Kinross Council made comments on the consultation exercises which support the development of the Bill.

2. Although a response to the consultation on “Affordable Rented Housing: Creating flexibility and better outcomes for communities” was submitted it was not possible to comment on costs until further information was available.

3. However, we did respond positively to the consultation in 2012 on the Scottish Governments proposals for the Future of the Right to Buy (RTB), providing confirmation that Perth and Kinross Council had no financial impact following the reduction in RTB house sales.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?

4. Yes

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?

5. Yes

Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?

6. The main financial impact of the Bill will be the provision of additional housing support costs which will be required for households who have acted in an “anti-social” manner to enable them to successfully convert from a SSST to a full Scottish Secure Tenancy. Based on existing information Perth and Kinross Councils share of the Scottish estimate is £11,000 (1.5% of the Scottish total cost - £764,000).

7. However, the estimate in the financial memorandum of £764,000 is based on the assumption of housing providing 25% of the support with the other 75% being met by social work and the NHS as they are also providing services to these households. In addition, the assumption used for the average cost of housing support per person per year is based on 2004 average cost of support to homeless people then uprated for inflation. We consider the new expanded group of people who will have a history of anti-social offending, are likely to need higher housing support. (This is based on existing housing support costs for people with this background who have a cost of £3,500 per year, an additional 20% above the average used in the financial memorandum.)
8. The combination of these comments will not result in significant material changes in the level of costs for Perth and Kinross. However, when developing estimates for Scotland these factors require to be reconsidered and used to refine assumptions where appropriate.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?

9. The financial memorandum estimates that abolishing Right to Buy will be cost neutral. This is consistent with the modelling undertaken by Perth and Kinross Council. The Council's HRA Business Plan and budgets were adjusted in 2012 to exclude capital receipts from RTB with additional net income offsetting the impact on rents.

10. However, the financial model developed in the financial memorandum may need to be reconsidered as the assumption of rents rising by inflation plus 1.5% each year for the next 30-50 years would result in unaffordable rents for other local authorities.

11. As highlighted in question 5 the assumptions for the estimated cost of housing support for SSST households should be reconsidered for the following two factors:

12. Average cost of housing support per person per year. £2,970 average may need to be increased to reflect the support needs for people with antisocial behaviour. Perth and Kinross have identified existing costs of £3,500 per person per year for a comparable group of people.

13. The proportion of the support provided by housing landlords being 25%. Social Work support is also a Council service and these costs should be included in the estimate.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?

14. It would be appropriate for the Government to approve additional funding to local authorities to deliver the policy objectives.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?

15. The Financial Memorandum highlights the high level of uncertainty and assumptions used in the development of estimates. The two best examples which are relevant are:

- 16. Right To Buy – a range of 9 scenarios have been modelled due to the uncertainty of costs and rents in the future.
- 17. Housing Support Costs – The estimate provides a range between a best (£764,000) and very high (£3.055million). The information in the financial memorandum for this main cost details the range of assumptions and the sources used.
Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

16. Yes, the main cost elements of the Bill have been identified, although the rate of change in the economy and public sector may result in unforeseeable costs at the moment becoming a reality in the future. Changes in public services, the economy, welfare reform, interest rates and demographics all will have a bearing on the future cost implications of the Bill.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

17. It is not possible to anticipate future subordinate legislation and or other associated implications of the Bill, and therefore no costs can be estimated.
Consultation

Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?

1. Renfrewshire Council submitted responses on the following consultations:
   - Consultation on a Strategy for the Private Rented Sector 2012
   - Affordable Rented Housing: Creating More Flexibility for Landlords and Better Outcomes for Communities 2013
   - The Future of Right to Buy in Scotland 2012
   - Better Dispute Resolution in Housing: Consultation on the Introduction of a New Housing Panel for Scotland 2013

2. Comments were made on financial assumptions for the Right to Buy consultation.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?

3. Yes.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?

4. Yes.

Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?

5. In the main the costs for the local authority have been accurately reflected.

6. There will though be some costs in terms of staff training and updating public information including leaflets and website information. For example the FM identifies no costs to local authorities in the creation of a PRS tribunal. However as the provider of housing advice services, the local authority will need to train relevant staff and update existing information to reflect the new changes.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?

7. Yes.
If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
8. Yes.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?
9. Yes—the Council recognises there is a degree of uncertainty and that the FM reflects this.

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?
10. Yes

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?
11. Yes, there may be future costs associated with the bill through subordinate legislation. For example the proposed Code of Conduct for Letting Agents may require some letting agents to do things that they do not already do (for example, provide tenants or landlords with particular information). Until more detail is known, such costs cannot be quantified.
RICS Scotland

1. A global organisation, the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors (RICS) is the principal body representing professionals employed in the land, property and construction sectors. In Scotland, the Institution represents over 11,000 members comprising chartered surveyors (MRICS or FRICS), Associate surveyors (AssocRICS), trainees and students.

2. Our members practise in sixteen land, property and construction markets and are employed in private practice, central and local government, public agencies, academic institutions, business organisations and non-governmental organisations.

3. As part of its Royal Charter, RICS has a commitment to provide advice to the government[s] of the day and, in doing so, has an obligation to bear in mind the public interest as well as the interests of its members. RICS Scotland is therefore in a unique position to provide a balanced, apolitical perspective on issues of importance to the land, property and construction sectors.

4. RICS Scotland comprises many working professional group boards and forums relating to the aforementioned sectors, and recently initiated the member-based RICS Scotland PRS Forum.

5. This Call for Evidence was circulated to members of the forum for their assessment of the Bill’s provisions, and their views have been collated within this response.

6. RICS Scotland tenders this submission having recently provided oral evidence to the Scottish Parliament’s Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee on the Housing (Scotland) Bill’s provisions for letting agent registration.

RICS Regulation

7. This Call for Evidence was discussed, at length, with RICS Regulation.

8. RICS Regulation monitors, inspects and advises Members and Regulated Firms to uphold our professional, ethical and business standards, as well as against specific schemes.

9. RICS Regulation takes a risk-based approach to monitoring and regulation of its schemes. In line with better regulation principles, our regulatory activities are transparent, proportionate, accountable, consistent and targeted.
10. RICS Regulation reports to a Regulatory Board which is at arms’ length from RICS. The Board has a mix of independent and RICS members, with an independent Chair, all appointed by an independent selection process.

11. The Regulatory Board is accountable to RICS Governing Council.

12. RICS Scotland and RICS Regulation welcomes the opportunity to comment on these Housing Bill proposals, and the comments below should be taken in the above context.

Overview of the Bill

13. RICS Scotland acknowledges that the provisions set forth in part 4 of the Housing (Scotland) Bill are a result of stakeholder consultation on the PRS Strategy: A Place to Stay, A Place to Call Home. In regard to letting agents, the strategy outlined three options:

- Option 1 - expand the existing landlord registration system to include all letting agents,
- Option 2 – mandatory registration of all agents, a code of practice and mechanism for resolving disputes
- Option 3 - introduce a legal obligation that all agents must be a member of a recognised professional or trade body.

14. Following consultation with relevant sector participants, including RICS, before publishing this bill, Scottish Government Ministers instructed officials to pursue ‘Option 2’.

15. RICS Scotland supported, and continues to pursue, the foundation of ‘Option 3’.

16. Whilst ‘Option 2’ falls short of the more consistent and targeted regulation of ‘Option 3’ that RICS Scotland supports, we recognise this development as a step in the right direction.

17. For option 2 to realise desired policy outcomes, in terms of raising professional standards and reducing consumer detriment, it is absolutely vital that there is a consistent and effective approach to enforcement of the proposed registration arrangements and associated code of practice.

18. This submission considers part 4 – Letting Agent Registration - of the Housing (Scotland) Bill only.

Cost Implications of Letting Agent Registration

19. RICS Scotland is of the impression that a fee for a letting agent registration, on an individual or business basis, may not be appropriate.
20. Registration for a property factor, as a result of the Property Factors (Scotland) Act - which this particular element of the Housing (Scotland) Bill is founded - is free; thus ensuring no one is inhibited from being a property factor.

21. If registration for letting agents is to progress, it should be as equal, open and accessible as the property factors’ registration.

22. “Paragraph 192 of the Financial Memorandum (FM) provides an illustration of a three-yearly fee level of £250 per letting agent business, with no fees initially prescribed in relation to requests to amend existing details on the register. The FM states that “the total estimated income to the Scottish Government would be approximately £180,000 in the first year”. This figure can therefore also be read as the cost to the letting agent sector in Scotland.”

23. The illustrative text above indicates that a letting agent business would pay £250 for ‘inclusion’ in the register, generating approximately £180,000 for the Scottish Government. However, this figure would have to be split over the three-year period, thus the income generation would stand at approximately £60,000 per annum (though this figure does not take into account the monies obtained through new letting agent businesses).

24. RICS Scotland believes the exact figure of letting agent businesses is extremely hard to count, particularly as there are many individuals managing their own properties, or a few for friends, family, colleagues or associates that have been referred to who do it as a “favour”, side-line or a very small home run business. It is likely, from anecdotal experience provided by our members, that the number is much higher than this.

25. In order to obtain the exact number of letting agent businesses, a visible policing force – ensuring registration is undertaken by all practicing letting agents - and compressive guidance for tenants outlining, at least, the requirement of letting agent registration would be required.

26. Consideration of further comprehensive guidance for landlords should also be required in considering the possible high number of friends or family members who run accommodation as “favour”. This could add to the financial implications of the Bill’s provision.

Training Costs (relevant to question 8)

27. “The FM does, however, go on to note that the estimate “does not include any potential training costs or costs to alter business practices that a letting agent may have to undertake in order to comply with a code of practice”. It goes on to say, in relation to the estimate, that “Therefore, this may be subject to change”. (paragraph 219)"
RICS Scotland is of the belief that the Housing (Scotland) Bill provisions have been ‘designed’ to eliminate poor or mal practice and raise standards in the sector.

RICS Scotland believes that the raising of standards can only been achieved through ongoing training, or Continuous Professional Development (CPD), of market participants in order to ensure letting agent business staff are knowledgeable and compliant with any legislative changes.

If training of letting agent businesses staff is not undertaken, then standards will not necessarily be raised.

If training is necessary, as part of the code of practice, then as far as the costing estimates for letting agents business are concerned, the text “Therefore, this may be subject to change” is incorrect – the costing estimates will be subject to change, unless the Scottish Government is willing to remunerate the costs of training all letting agent business staff, which would likely eclipse the monies accumulated from the three-yearly £250 per business registration fee.

RICS members in Scotland have to undertake 20 hours of CPD to ensure they are aware of new best practice methods and procedures and recent legislative changes. This is one reason why RICS Scotland, and other sector bodies, endorsed ‘Option 3’.

Costs of Professional Body Membership

RICS considers the current approach to regulation in residential property market in Scotland, England, Wales, and Northern Ireland is inconsistent, fragmented, confusing for consumers and burdensome on business.

RICS proposes that all Governments, at Westminster, Holyrood and in the devolved administrations, should take a joined up approach to regulation covering all aspects of the residential property market – new build; second hand sales, and lettings/block management, with principles based regulation targeted where the risks are greatest and having the following three distinct elements:

- legislation/standards;
- enforcement; and,
- redress.

Such an approach is merited in this market as it is about a basic human requirement – the provision of shelter.

RICS consumer surveys indicate that consumers want more consistent and targeted regulation of residential agents.

Others support this approach including NFOPP, Ombudsman Services, The Property Ombudsman, Which?, the Law Society, and Shelter.
38. Recent RICS impact assessment research shows there is a robust business case for such an approach. Published in February 2013, this Economic and Equality Impact Assessment outlines the costs and benefits of bringing all lettings agents in Scotland, England, Wales, and Northern Ireland within scope of the Estate Agents Act 1979 and enacting Section 22 of that Act (statutory minimum professional standards, which RICS considers should be NVQ level 3 or above for all agents).

39. The summary figures from this research in the table below indicate that the benefits (around £21m per annum) will outweigh the costs (initial costs of £46m, and ongoing costs of £0.64m per annum) in less than 2.5 years.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Items</th>
<th>Costs</th>
<th>Benefits</th>
<th>Net</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Total one off</td>
<td>£45,814,000</td>
<td>(£45,814,000)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total annual</td>
<td>£639,000</td>
<td>£21,073,000</td>
<td>£20,434,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Payback period</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>2.2 years</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

40. These summary costs and benefits figures are based on a methodology, compliant with relevant Government guidance for impact assessment work, and included consultation with business practitioners and consumer organisations to test and further inform the initial desk research. A copy of the full report is available to download from: www.rics.org/uk/knowledge/research/research-reports/regulation-of-sales-and-letting-agents-report/

41. It should be noted that the summary costs and payback period outlined in this table above are for UK-wide regulation. Taking Scotland’s share of the population (approximately 8.3%)³, the cost figure would be considerably lower with a shorter payback period.

42. RICS stands ready to provide further detailed commentary on this research report if that would be helpful.

43. RICS' proposed approach to regulatory reform mirrors the now well established approach in the financial services market. The benefits of introducing clear, consistent, and targeted regulation covering all aspects of the UK residential property market will include:

- consolidated and reduced legislation/regulations;
- a simplified regulatory framework – easier for consumers and businesses to understand;
- reduced costs associated with business compliance; and

³ http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-scotland-24866266
- enhanced consumer protection.

44. RICS Regulation has considerable knowledge and experience of developing and enforcing standards for property professionals, including those operating in residential agency. RICS has developed a brief options paper outlining possible alternative ways in which RICS could undertake such a role and would be willing discuss these options further with the Committee and the Scottish Government.

45. RICS Scotland believes that should the Scottish Government progress letting agent registration, consideration of letting agents that are regulated by professional bodies, such as RICS, should be exempt from the payment of registration, as this will be another costing scheme of which they would have to sign up to.

Redress Mechanism

46. RICS Scotland agrees that a redress mechanism is required – but it will all come down to the details.

47. RICS Scotland would not have an issue with a nominal charge, £25 as an example, for dispute body applications. This could deter vexatious cases and “serial complainers”

48. The dispute body members would not only have experience in the sector, but also have to undertake regular training to ensure they fully understand new legislative provisions that affect the sector, and the possible impact of their decisions.
FINANCE COMMITTEE CALL FOR EVIDENCE
HOUSING (SCOTLAND) BILL: FINANCIAL MEMORANDUM
SUBMISSION FROM SOUTH AYRSHIRE COUNCIL

Consultation
1. No
2. N/a
3. N/a

Costs
4. The costs are accurately reflected.
5. Para 72 on housing support only assumes 25% of the costs will be incurred as there is an assumption that the majority of housing support services are already being provided. This cannot be certain and the actual costs incurred may be higher.
6. Any new duties prescribed by legislation should be 100% funded by the Scottish Government.
7. Yes.

Wider Issues
8. We are not aware of other costs.
9. There could be potential future costs but they would not be able to be quantified until the subordinate legislation was detailed.
Introduction and General Comments

1. South Lanarkshire Council welcomes the opportunity to respond to the Finance Committee questionnaire on the Housing (Scotland) Bill’s Financial Memorandum. We have responded to the pre-Bill consultation process and have also played an active role in stakeholder discussions of the Housing Policy Advisory Group.

2. We are broadly supportive of the Bill’s provisions and aims and believe the legislation will have a positive impact on both safeguarding social housing and to help improve housing conditions of the Private Rented Sector (PRS). However, the current financial climate poses a considerable challenge to resource allocation within specific (diminished) budgets.

3. In view of the future abolition of RTB, we, in this financial year, may already be seeing an impact of the policy change where the expected RTB sales budget for 2013/14 is £2m, and current actual is £2.4m – with an outturn of £3.5m expected by the end of this financial year. Taking these figures into account, we are expecting a ‘spike’ in RTB sales every year prior to the policy being fully implemented in approximately three years’ time.

4. There is one area of the Bill where we do perceive a potential significant additional resource investment to be made by local authorities. The discretionary powers for local authorities to apply as a third party to the Private Rented Housing Panel (PRHP), where the private landlord has failed to comply with the Repairing Standard, could have considerable resource implications (aside from giving authorities ambitious new duties to enforce). For this reason, we believe it is necessary to exercise some caution in terms of the assumption inherent in the FM that local authorities can reasonably carry out this new role without identified new resources.

Consultation

Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?

5. South Lanarkshire Council has extensively commented on the financial assumptions made in the following consultations (which proceeded the introduction of the Bill in November 2013) –

- Homes Fit for the 21st Century;
- The Future of Right to Buy (RTB) in Scotland;

1 For more detail please see our answers to Question 5 and 6 in this response
• Affordable Rented Housing: Creating flexibility for landlords & better; outcomes for communities;
• Consultation on a PRS Strategy for Scotland; and
• Through dialogue with stakeholders at the Housing Policy Advisory Group where specific policy areas to be included in the Bill were discussed.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
6. Largely, yes – but see specific comments detailed below.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
7. Yes, South Lanarkshire Council felt we had an appropriate amount of time to contribute to the consultation exercise.

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?
8. For this question we have focussed our attention on the policy areas that the Financial Memorandum (FM) outlines that are likely to have cost implications for South Lanarkshire Council.

9. Taking each of relevant provisions in turn –

RTB
10. South Lanarkshire Council believes abolishing the RTB will remove continuing uncertainty in terms of future levels of supply of social rented housing. The change will also support local authorities to meet the continuing duty to provide permanent accommodation to homeless households and to help develop the supply of affordable rented housing in line with wider strategic objectives. In our response to the The Future of RTB in Scotland we outlined that the loss of RTB income will require changes to our Business Plan which could include generation of additional income from other sources – including increased borrowing or a reduction in our Housing Investment Programme, etc. More specifically, we are aware that –

• While 2012 figures for South Lanarkshire Council RTB sales reveal they have reduced very significantly over the last decade (RTB receipts then accounted for 2% of funding for the Business Plan compared with 23% in 2004/5); and
• Recent evidence suggests that the policy change is already having an impact and that a ‘spike’ in RTB sales preceding the abolition of the policy is likely (and that it is assumed that there will be a doubling of the 60 sales to 20 sales in 2014/15 to 2016/17).

11. From the date that the abolition of RTB is introduced, we expect that –

• The loss of the capital receipt from RTB sales will be partly offset by the continuing rental income stream from the houses remaining in stock; and
• That the modelling from the Scottish Government indicating ending RTB would be, at worst, cost neutral (taking into account the rental stream retained, against income from sales receipts lost) looks accurate.
Allocation of Social Housing

12. South Lanarkshire Council regularly reviews and updates the Housing Allocation Policy to ensure it is responsive to local needs and demands and makes best use of available council stock. For this reason, we generally agree with assumptions in the FM that new additional costs associated with the new provisions are unlikely for local authorities.

Creation of a SSST (to grant and to convert from SST);
Grant SSSTs for homeowners;
Extension of SSST term;
Further one off extension of SSST for 6 months; and
SSST reasons to tenants for repossession.

SSST – qualifying period for assignation, sublet, succession and joint tenancy

13. South Lanarkshire Council, in earlier consultation responses, have highlighted the issue where local authorities are given new duties without allocation of new resources to help fund their operation; in some instances leaving a financial burden on the council. The FM identifies a number of cost assumptions based on the above provisions that require local authorities to increase the extent of housing support for tenants –

- That housing support is already provided to tenants in SSSTs.
- Since June 2013, homeless households have been assessed for their housing support requirements as part of a new housing support duty.

14. While the financial implications of these assumptions appear to be largely reflected within the FM, we believe there are some limitations with them, and in particular, with the data used to support them –

- That the housing support costs outlined in the FM are based on 10 year old Supporting People figures uprated for ‘inflation’.
- That the savings assumptions are based on limited five year old research which indicates that “around 50% of perpetrators will desist from antisocial behaviour to keep their tenancy secure” – also with the assumption outlined in the FM that ASB will stop when their tenancy is converted from a SST to a SSST (or when new tenants are provided with a SSST).

15. We would also emphasise that in light of the continuing pressures, it is extremely difficult to identify new resources to meet the extended housing support requirements.

Transfer of PRS dispute cases from civil courts to a tribunal
Tacit approval of landlord registration applications (after 12 months)
Third party application of the Repairing Standard
Enhanced Enforcement Areas

16. The majority of the Bill’s provisions relating to the PRS will not have a negative financial impact on local authorities. However, we agree with the FM that there are some costs associated with –
• Tacit approval after 12 months if council’s require to ask for an extension (to a sheriff) of the 12 month registration period.
• Gathering evidence for a third party application of the repairing Standard on, for example, property condition, and the processing of an application and defending an appeal by a landlord (for more detailed information relating to costs for this provision please see our answer to Question 5 below).

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?
17. In relation to the costs and savings that we anticipate will impact on our organisation, these have been dealt with in our response to Question 4 above.

18. With regard to the 15 year projections in relation to the third party application to the repairing standard in view of an expanded PRHP it should be noted that while we support the intention of the Bill’s approach that local authorities can act as a third party to the PRHP, and consider the approach could increase flexibility to address poor standards in the PRS, we have some reservations (outlined below) regarding the resourcing of it.

19. The FM states that there should not be a significant cost burden to local authorities for implementing this provision but it appreciates that gathering evidence on property condition, processing of applications and defending a case (on appeal of a decision in court) will give significant, ambitious and new duties to local authorities in which they will have to enforce. In light of no new resources for local authorities, we propose that the Scottish Government clarifies whether councils could be left with a continuing (and potentially increasingly costly) responsibility to oversee the support and defence of applicants who would come under this new jurisdiction.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
20. There is always a challenge of meeting new legislative provisions with existing resources or being able to source new funds from additional borrowing. For some time now, however, South Lanarkshire Council have been planning to take into account the financial impact that, for example, the abolition of RTB would bring. In this respect, there are a number of the Bill’s provisions that we have no major concerns with and where the financial costs associated with them can be met.

21. However, in respect to the discretionary powers for local authorities to apply as a third party to the PRHP, there could be a continuing and costly responsibility for councils to ensure the support required to meet the provision is made available to the tenant. We believe it is necessary to exercise some caution in terms of the assumption inherent in the FM that local authorities can reasonably carry out this new role without identified new resources. Indeed, the feedback from local authorities mentioned in the FM notes general concern in this regard. It is important, therefore, that further work is carried out to establish resource requirements and that consideration is given to what actions could be put in place to help the PRHP to support councils who have duties to carry out third party reporting.
Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?

22. South Lanarkshire Council understands that introduction of a number of the provisions – particularly those relating to increased housing support provision surrounding SSST changes – are based on estimates and understand the variable nature of this type of service provision. As outlined earlier in this response (Question 4), we do question how accurate the use of (approximately) 10 year old housing support cost data is in calculating these costs. Likewise, for the cost ‘savings’ element of these provisions, it is assumed that ASB stops in approximately 50% of cases when a tenancy is converted from a SST to a SSST (where that assumption is based on limited research).

Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

23. Whilst we believe the FM reasonably captures the costs associated with introducing the Bill, it arrives at a time where Scottish Local Authorities have constrained budgets and very limited additional resources to implement new provisions; or to revise existing services and make changes to policies, practices and procedures.

24. However, we believe caution should be exercised in view of future local authority resourcing of the third party reporting provision to the PRHP (see comments to Question 5 and 6) where there looks to be a expectation that councils can reasonably be excepted to fund it without additional resources.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

25. None at present.
Consultation

Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?

1. The City of Edinburgh Council (the Council) submitted consultation responses in relation the Future of Right to Buy and Better Dispute Resolution in Housing.

The Future of Right to Buy

2. The Council’s response to this consultation indicated that the abolition of Right to Buy would result in an estimated loss of capital income of approximately £2.8 million per year. However, it was also estimated that rental income from retained properties would generate approximately £0.27 million per year which could be used to help offset additional borrowing required as a result of the loss of capital receipts.

Better Dispute Resolution in Housing

3. The Council’s response to this consultation raised concerns with how additional mediation services would be funded, especially if these services were to remain free to all users.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?

4. The financial implications of the abolition of Right to Buy for local authorities have been accurately reflected in the financial memorandum (FM) which suggests that the short term cost of additional borrowing to cover the loss of capital receipts will be offset by a gain in rental income over the long term.

5. The issues regarding the expansion of mediation services are not relevant to the Housing (Scotland) Bill (the Bill) as the expansion of services is to be pursued out with legislation.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?

6. Both consultation responses had to be submitted in draft subject to approval by Council Committee. Council committee cycles mean that, depending on the publication date of the consultation, the standard 12 week period for Scottish Government consultations does not always allow sufficient time for a comprehensive response to be developed and approved by elected members before the consultation closes.
Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?

7. The Council agrees with many of the assessments contained within the Financial Memorandum. Below are the areas where the Council believes there may be additional financial implications that have not been accurately reflected in the Financial Memorandum.

Part 2 – Social Housing

Short Scottish Secure Tenancies (SSST) - Duty to Provide Housing Support

8. The FM estimates that the provision of additional support to households that have been given a SSST on the grounds of antisocial behaviour will cost £764,000 per year across all local authorities. Analysis of antisocial behaviour cases in Edinburgh that are likely to result in the provision of an SSST and require support suggest that this is an under estimate of the cost.

9. In attempting to assess the financial impact of this, City of Edinburgh Council has assumed that all Council tenants with Scottish Secure Tenancies (SSTs) who receive a final warning over their antisocial behaviour will have their tenancy converted to a SSST with support. On this basis, the number of additional SSSTs with support would be approximately 116 per year. Clearly this is dependent on any Scottish Government guidance however, if we were to adopt the above approach, based on average support costs, the financial impact could be up to £230,000 per year.

10. In addition, it is estimated that, each year in Edinburgh, there are approximately 20 cases where a homelessness assessment has been carried out, there has been significant antisocial behaviour within the previous three years, and where under the new provisions of the Bill, a SSST with support would be appropriate. The cost of delivering support packages to these households would be approximately £40,000 per year.

11. Based on these assumptions, the annual cost of providing housing support to meet the provisions of the Bill is estimated to be £270,000 per year for the Council. Based on this analysis, the costs across Scotland could be significantly higher than identified in the FM.

Part 3 – Private Rented Housing

Transfer of Responsibility to Hear Civil Cases Relating to PRS to Scottish Tribunals

12. The FM does not identify any costs for local authorities associated with the establishment of a Private Rented Sector first tier tribunal. However, it is anticipated that the creation of such a tribunal will generate a significant increase in enquiries to the Council and appeals against landlord registration decisions, Rent Penalty Notices and various HMO decisions resulting in increased pressure on existing staff resources.
Tacit Approval of Landlord Registration Applications

13. The FM estimates that where a decision cannot be made on an application for landlord registration within 12 months, tacit approval of the application will be granted and the landlord will be able to operate legally. If a local authority is unable to make a decision within 12 months, they may apply for an extension. The FM estimates that each appeal for an extension will cost between £500 and £1,000. The Council estimates that there will be approximately 10-20 such cases in Edinburgh each year. Based on FM figures, this will result in an annual cost to the Council of between £5,000 and £20,000. This is based on an assumption that tacit approval will not apply to cases where the landlord has failed to fully provide the information necessary for a decision to be made within the 12 month period.

14. The Bill states that tacit approval will be granted for 12 months rather than the usual three year licence period. If Landlords with tacit approval are required to re-apply after the initial 12 month period, this will generate a small increase in licensing fee income for the Council.

Third Party Referral to the Private Rented Housing Panel

15. The FM identifies no costs for local authorities arising from third party referrals to the Private Rented Housing Panel (PRHP). Although the powers are welcome and will allow the Council to support tenants to challenge their landlord and increase standards in the sector, it is anticipated that this could generate a significant increase in enquiries to the Council. Where local authorities decide to make use of the powers, a significant amount of officer time will be required to investigate and build cases on behalf of the tenants that are being represented.

Part 4 – Letting Agents

16. Although letting agents are not currently required to register, most operating in Edinburgh do apply through the Landlord Registration Scheme as all landlords have a responsibility to use a fit and proper agent and this is determined by the local authority. There are currently 774 letting agents registered in Edinburgh. If the determination of fitness and propriety transfers to the national registration scheme, there will be no reason for letting agents to register locally resulting in a loss of income of up to £30,000 per year.

17. In addition, landlords are obliged to name any agent working on their behalf on their registration application. They do this by entering their agent’s landlord registration number. If letting agents were no longer registered locally, the Council’s IT would have to be updated to deal with the new system.

Part 6 – Private Housing Conditions

18. The FM identifies no costs for local authorities relating to additional powers relating to private house conditions, however the Council has concerns that costs associated with making use of these powers and difficulties with recovering costs from owners are deterring local authorities from making full use of these powers.
Powers for Local Authorities to Pay for a Share of Scheme Costs
19. While the powers included in the Bill build on those already available through the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 and there is no duty for local authorities to use these powers, there is some concern that local authorities will be unable to make use of these powers because of a lack of resources to cover upfront costs.

20. Case studies from Dundee City Council and Glasgow City Council which have both made use of powers to pay for missing shares in mixed ownership buildings suggest that recovering missing shares once work has been carried out is time consuming and labour intensive. There is also a risk that the money may not be recovered.

Work Notices & Maintenance Plans
21. Increasing local authority powers to issue work notices and maintenance plans provides a useful tool to help improve conditions in the private sector. However, making use of these powers will be resource intensive and increase pressure on existing resources.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?
22. The answer to question 4 outlines areas where the Council feels the FM under estimates or does not identify anticipated costs for local authorities.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
23. The majority of costs associated with the Bill will be met through existing resources, through internal efficiencies and prioritisation of existing budgets and services.

24. With relation to the power for local authorities to cover the cost of certain shares for communal repairs and maintenance, it is unclear whether local authorities will be able to cover the upfront costs to allow repair work to progress. It would be helpful for the Scottish Government to establish a national fund that local authorities could access to facilitate shared repairs. Money could be paid back once recovered from the owner/s.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?
25. Yes.

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?
26. The costs to the Council have been reflected in the FM and expanded in question 4 above.
Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

27. No future costs associated with subordinate legislation have been identified.
Consultation
Did you take part in either of the Scottish Government consultation exercises which preceded the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. Yes. Our comments focussed on the proposed changes to Right to Buy entitlement and we thought that overall this would be beneficial. However we did recognise that house sales income does benefit our capital investment plans and that this would have to be revisited in the event that RTB is abolished.

Do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. Yes this is the case.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Yes.

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that these have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details?
4. Generally yes, although we did express a concern about the possibility of a surge in sales, particularly from tenants with a preserved right to buy during any notice period.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM and projected over 15 years for each service are reasonable and accurate?
5. Yes.

If relevant, are you content that your organisation can meet the financial costs associated with the Bill which your organisation will incur? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. Generally yes, particularly where the proposals will help local authorities in delivering important services.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the estimates and the timescales over which such costs would be expected to arise?
7. Yes.

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures costs associated with the Bill?
If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?
8. Yes.
Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. There may be future costs associated with some of the private sector aspects of the legislation and growing public expectations about the role that local authorities should play in these matters; such as managing private sector landlord registration and private sector house conditions.
Background
1. The Committee reported on the delegated powers in the Housing (Scotland) Bill\(^1\) on 26 February in its 18th report of 2014.

2. Very broadly, the Bill makes provision about abolition of the right to buy, the allocation of social housing, the law affecting private housing, the regulation of letting agents and the licensing of sites for mobile homes. It also provides for the transfer of jurisdiction from the sheriff courts to the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland (to be established in the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill) in cases involving private rented sector housing disputes.

3. The response from the Scottish Government to the Committee’s report is reproduced at the Annex.

Response from Scottish Government

Section 4(2) – Power to issue guidance regarding the making or altering of social landlords’ rules on allocation of housing (inserts new subsection (3A) in section 21 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987).

Section 7(2) – Power to issue guidance on the maximum period preceding an application for housing during which a social landlord may take account of certain circumstances, and on the maximum period for which a landlord may make an applicant ineligible for the allocation of housing as a result of those circumstances (inserts new section 20B(3) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987).

Section 8(1) – Power to issue guidance regarding the creation of, or conversion of a tenancy to, a short Scottish secure tenancy on the grounds of antisocial behaviour (inserts new section 34(9) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001).

\(^1\) Housing (Scotland) Bill [as introduced] available here: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Housing%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b41s4-introd.pdf
4. Sections 4(2), 7(2) and 8(1) all confer powers on the Scottish Ministers to issue guidance to which social landlords must have regard.

5. The Committee considered that the guidance issued under the above sections could have significant effects on the individuals it relates to and therefore welcomed the Scottish Government’s commitment to both consult on, and publish the guidance.

6. However, in welcoming this commitment, the Committee expressed its view that the consultation and publication of guidance made under these sections should be set out as a requirement on the face of the Bill. This would ensure that future administrations continue to consult upon and publish the guidance made under these provisions.

7. In its response to the Committee’s stage 1 report, the Scottish Government agrees to bring forward amendments at stage 2 which would make the consultation and publication of guidance issued by Scottish Ministers under sections 4(2), 7(2) and 8(1) a requirement.

Section 41(1) – Power to set out a code of practice which makes provision about the standard of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work.

8. Section 41 provides for Scottish Ministers, by regulations, to set out a code of practice which makes provision about the standards of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work. Before finalising the code, the Scottish Ministers must consult on a draft of it under section 41(3).

9. The code of practice will have two principal legal effects. Firstly, consideration of whether a person has complied with the code of practice forms part of the fit and proper considerations applied to applications for registration. Where the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that a person is no longer a fit and proper person, their registration may be revoked.

10. Secondly, where the First-tier Tribunal, on an application by a tenant or landlord, determines that a letting agent has failed to comply with a code of practice, it must issue an enforcement order under section 43 of the Bill. Failure to comply with such an enforcement order without reasonable excuse constitutes a criminal offence.

11. The Committee noted that the consequences of failure to comply with the code of practice are similar to the consequences of failure to comply with the code of conduct under the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011, to which the affirmative procedure applies.

12. The Committee also considered that the failure to comply with the code of practice could have significant legal consequences for individuals and was therefore of the view that the affirmative procedure would provide a more suitable level of Parliamentary scrutiny than the negative procedure which is currently proposed.

13. The Scottish Government’s response acknowledges the Committee’s concern and outlines the Government’s proposed solution. In doing so, the Government cites the example of the Wildlife and Natural Environment (Scotland) Act 2011 which provides for Codes of Practice relating to non-native species and deer management.
In this case the first Code of Practice to be established is to be laid before Parliament and subject to the affirmative procedure. Following consultation, any subsequent changes to the Code would then be subject to the negative procedure. Furthermore, if a completely new code were to be produced, this would be subject to the affirmative procedure, again, following consultation.

14. The Government informs the Committee of its intention to bring forward amendments at stage 2 which would apply this form of Parliamentary procedure to the code of practice for letting agents to be made under section 41 of the Bill.

Section 60 – Power to make provision concerning the procedure to be followed in relation to the application and transfer of site licences, and appeals relating to site licences (Inserts section 32N in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960).

15. The Committee’s consideration of Section 60 can be broken down into two main areas – appeals and reasoned decisions.

Appeals

16. New section 32N of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 ("the 1960 Act") gives the Scottish Ministers the power, by regulations, to make provision in relation to the procedures to be followed for an application for a caravan site licence, an application for consent to transfer a site licence, and the transfer of a site licence on death. It also allows Ministers to make provision in relation to appeals against a decision by a local authority to refuse a licence application, to transfer a licence, to refuse consent to transfer a licence, or to revoke a licence.

17. Section 32N(2) gives an indicative list of matters which the regulations may make provision for or in connection with.

18. The reason for taking the power, as set out in the Delegated Powers Memorandum, is to set out procedures and time limits in relation to the site licensing system. The Committee noted, however, that the power is drafted more widely than this. In particular, subsection (1)(d) enables provision to be made in relation to appeals generally, and not merely in relation to the procedure for appeals.

19. In response to a query prior to the publication of the Committee’s report, the Scottish Government indicated that, in addition to making provision about procedures and timescales for appeals, it may in its view also be necessary to make provision about the effects and consequences of an appeal.

20. The Government therefore agreed to consider whether the drafting of the power should be altered in order to better reflect its intended use.

21. In its report, the Committee welcomed this commitment and stated its view that section 60 should be redrawn to reflect more clearly the proposed purpose of new section 32N(1)(d) of the 1960 Act.

22. In response to the Committee’s report, the Scottish Government informs the Committee of its intention to bring forward amendments at stage 2 which will clarify that the new section 32N(1)(d) "relates to the procedure (including timescales) to be followed in relation to the issuing, renewal and transfer of licences, and the procedure (including timescales) for, and the determination, consequence and effect of, an appeal.'

Reasoned decisions

23. Section 32N(2)(f) expressly enables provision to be made in regulations about the circumstances in which the reasons for a local authority's decision on a licence or transfer application, or its decision to transfer a licence in the absence of an application, must be given.

24. The Bill inserts various provisions in the 1960 Act regarding the giving of reasons. Under section 32D (licence applications) a local authority is required, before refusing to issue or renew a licence, to provide an applicant with the reasons why it is considering refusing the application, and to give the applicant at least 28 days to make written representations in response. Similar requirements apply where a local authority is considering transferring a licence of its own accord under section 32G. However, the Committee noted that, in contrast, there is no such requirement for the giving of reasons or seeking representations before a local authority refuses an application under section 32E to transfer a licence.

25. Furthermore, the giving of reasons in such cases is subject only to provision which may or may not be made in subordinate legislation under section 32N(1). Again, this contrasted with what is provided for in sections 32D and 32G.

26. In considering this matter, the Committee was mindful that the giving of reasoned decisions contributes to ensuring that the determination process meets the requirements of Article 6(1) of ECHR.

27. In its report, the Committee therefore expressed concern that the correct balance may not have been struck between the provisions made on the face of the Bill and those which will be made in the exercise of delegated powers under the Bill. The Committee therefore asked the Scottish Government for further explanation of these matters.

28. In responding to the Committee's report, the Government informs the Committee of its intention to bring forward amendments at stage 2 which would insert a requirement, where a local authority is considering refusing consent for an application under section 32E, for the local authority to give reasons and to provide a period in which the applicant could make written representations.

29. Furthermore, the Government agrees to bring forward amendments which would impose more consistent requirements on local authorities to give reasons for decisions made under the new licensing regime, including decisions made under section 32E.

30. However, the Government remains of the view that while the principle that reasons should be provided for decisions is an important one and appropriate to be on the face of the Bill, the details of how and when reasons are given are administrative in nature and should therefore be set out in subordinate legislation.
Section 63 - Power to vary maximum fine. (Inserts section 32T in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960)

31. Sections 63 and 64 of the Bill insert new sections 32R, 32S and 32V into the 1960 Act. These provisions set the maximum fine on conviction of operating a caravan site without a licence (£50,000), the maximum fine on conviction of breaching licence conditions (£10,000), and the maximum fine on conviction of failure to comply with an improvement notice (£10,000). New section 32T of the 1960 Act gives the Scottish Ministers the power to amend these maximum fine levels, through an order subject to the affirmative procedure.

32. The Committee was concerned that section 32T gave Ministers unlimited discretion to vary the maximum fine for conviction in respect of the offences listed. The Committee considered that the circumstances under which a maximum penalty for an offence might be varied are matters for Parliament. Accordingly it took the view that this power should only be exercised where Ministers consider it appropriate in light of inflationary charges or where other relevant factors, to be set out on the face of the Bill, apply.

33. The Committee therefore recommended that the Government could provide for this by bringing forward a suitable amendment at stage 2.

34. In its response to the report, the Government expresses its view that in order to avoid fine levels becoming outdated, the Scottish Ministers should be given the power to raise the maximum fine levels. A proposal to raise fine levels could be prompted by a wide range of factors, including inflation, a significant increase in the price of mobile homes, or other changes that increase the income and profits generated through running a mobile home site.

35. The Government considers that as any variation of the maximum fine would be subject to the affirmative procedure, and therefore require the approval of the Parliament, this provides a suitable level of safeguard and scrutiny for any change in fine levels.
ANNEX

Correspondence from the Scottish Government, dated 24 March 2014

18. The Committee also welcomes the Scottish Government’s commitment to consult on and publish any guidance issued under the powers conferred by sections 4(2), 7(2) and 8(1) of the Bill. However, the Committee asks the Scottish Government to consider bringing forward amendments at Stage 2 to require consultation on, and publication of, any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers under the powers conferred by those sections.

Scottish Government response:

The Scottish Government is content with this proposal and intends to bring forward amendments at Stage 2, to address the recommendations in paragraph 18 of the Committee’s report.

25. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government to consider further in advance of Stage 2 of the Bill whether the significance of the legal consequences of failure to comply with a Letting Agent Code of Conduct are such that the affirmative procedure is a more suitable level of Parliamentary scrutiny of the exercise of the power in section 41(1) than the negative procedure.

26. The Committee asks the Scottish Government to comment on this matter further in its response to this report.

Scottish Government response:

We note that the Committee remains of the view that the affirmative procedure is a more suitable level of Parliamentary scrutiny for the exercise of the power in section 41(1). The Scottish Government recognises the significant consequences for letting agents of failure to comply with the Code and, having considered the matter further in light of the Committee’s remarks, proposes a way forward which both reflects the severity of these consequences and ensures a proportionate level of Parliamentary scrutiny.

There are few precedents for codes of practice with Parliamentary procedure. The Committee has quoted the example set by the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011. The Wildlife and Natural Environment (Scotland) Act 2011 (“the 2011 Act”) provides a further example. This, unlike the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011, was a Scottish Government Bill. Sections 15 and 27 of the 2011 Act set out provisions for Codes of Practice relating to non-native species and deer management. The associated procedure for both Codes is that after consultation, the first Code of Practice is to be subject to affirmative procedure with any future changes to the Code being made by negative procedure, following consultation. However, a completely new Code would also be subject to affirmative procedure, following consultation. The relevant sections are attached here for ease of reference: http://www.legislation.gov.uk/asp/2011/6/section/15 (non-native species) and http://www.legislation.gov.uk/asp/2011/6/section/27 (deer management).
The Scottish Government considers that the procedural arrangements in the 2011 Act for Codes of Practice represent a reasonable and proportionate way of proceeding for the Letting Agents Code of Practice and intends to bring forward amendments at Stage 2 to provide for this type of procedure to apply to the Letting Agents Code of Practice.

32. The Committee welcomes the Scottish Government’s commitment to consider the drafting of section 60 further, and asks the Scottish Government to confirm its conclusions on the matter (including whether or not an amendment is proposed) in its response to this report.

33. The Committee adds that, in its view, section 60 should be redrawn to reflect more clearly the proposed purpose of new section 32N(1)(d) of the 1960 Act, which is to make provision about the procedure for, and the determination, consequences and effect of, an appeal, rather than to make provision about appeals generally.

Scottish Government response:

The Scottish Government will seek to amend the drafting of section 60 of the Bill, so that it is clear that the power relates to procedure (including timescales) to be followed in relation to the issuing, renewal and transfer of licences, and the procedure (including timescales) for, and the determination, consequences and effect of, an appeal.

41. The Committee asks the Scottish Government to explain, in its response to this report, why the absence of requirements under new section 32E (application to transfer a site licence) of the 1960 Act (i) to provide an applicant with the reasons why the local authority is considering refusing an application, and (ii) to permit an applicant to make written representations in response, is considered appropriate. In this regard, the Committee is mindful that the giving of reasoned decisions contributes to ensuring that the determination process meets the requirements of Article 6(1) ECHR. The Committee also notes the contrast between the position under section 32E and the requirements under new sections 32B (licence applications) and 32G (licence transfer without application) of the 1960 Act.

Scottish Government response:

We thank the Committee for raising this point. We note that new section 32E does not contain a requirement, where the local authority is considering refusing consent, to give reasons and a period for the applicant to make representations. This is in contrast to sections 32D(4) and 32G(3), which include such provisions. On reflection having regard to the balance between the Bill and the delegated powers, instead of leaving such procedure in relation to applications to transfer to regulations under section 32N(1), we will seek to amend the Bill to insert such a provision into section 32E.
42. Similarly, the Committee asks the Scottish Government to explain why it is considered appropriate that the giving of reasons under section 32E is subject only to provision which may or may not be made in subordinate legislation under section 32N(1) (inserted by section 60).

43. These questions reflect the Committee’s concern that an appropriate balance may not have been struck between the provision made on the face of the Bill and the provision which may be made in the exercise of delegated powers under the Bill.

Scottish Government response:

We again thank the Committee for highlighting some areas of inconsistency in the Bill relating to the provisions of reasons for appeals. We will seek to amend the Bill so that the requirement to provide reasons for its decisions is applied more consistently in situations where a local authority decides:

- not to grant a licence;
- not to renew a licence;
- not to consent to the transfer of a licence;
- to transfer a licence where there has been no application;
- to revoke a licence.

We remain of the view that, while the principle that reasons should be provided for decisions in the situations above is an important one and appropriate to be on the face of the Bill, the details of how and when that is done is an area of administrative procedure, and therefore best covered in regulations.

Section 63 - Power to vary maximum fine. (Inserts section 32T in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960).

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: order
Parliamentary procedure: affirmative procedure

49. The Committee does not consider that section 32T(1) of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 63 of the Bill) should confer an unlimited discretion to vary the maximum fine for conviction in respect of the offences listed. It considers that the circumstances under which the maximum fine may be varied are matters for Parliament. The Committee accordingly considers that the power in section 32T should be restricted to permit variation of the maximum fine only where it appears to the Scottish Ministers that particular circumstances apply. These circumstances should reflect the specific policy intention in taking the power.

50. To that end, the Committee recommends that the Bill provide for the power in section 32T(1) to be exercised only where the Scottish Ministers consider it appropriate in light of inflationary changes, or where they consider that other relevant factors apply. The Bill should set out what these other relevant factors are. The Committee offers no view on what the relevant factors might be, this being a policy matter for consideration by the lead committee.

51. The Committee accordingly asks the Scottish Ministers to consider bringing forward a suitable amendment at Stage 2. The Committee asks the Scottish Government to comment on this matter further in its response to this report.

Scottish Government response:

The existing fine levels in the 1960 Act have become very outdated, and would not be an effective sanction for site owners who are convicted of breaching licence conditions or of running a site without a licence. The Bill therefore sets increased fine levels that reflect the seriousness of these offences. However to avoid these fine levels becoming outdated, the Bill would allow Ministers, with the express approval of Parliament, to raise these maximum fine levels. This is to ensure the fine levels remain at a level that is an appropriate sanction for these offences.

Such raising of the fine levels could be promoted by a wide range of factors, including inflation, a significant increase in the prices of mobile homes (and therefore the profit to be made in selling them), or other changes that increase the income and profits generated through running a mobile home site. We believe that the fact that any increase would be through an Order subject to the affirmative procedure, and would therefore require the active approval of Parliament, provides a suitable level of safeguard and scrutiny for any increase in fine levels.
Present:
Richard Baker
Mike MacKenzie
Stuart McMillan (Deputy Convener)

Nigel Don (Convener)
Margaret McCulloch
Stewart Stevenson

Apologies were received from John Scott.

Housing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Scottish Government's response to its Stage 1 report and agreed to write to the Minister for Housing and Welfare regarding certain delegated powers within the Bill.
Scottish Parliament

Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

Tuesday 1 April 2014

[The Convener opened the meeting at 11:32]

Housing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 1

11:33

The Convener: Agenda item 3 is consideration of the Scottish Government’s response to the committee’s stage 1 report on the bill. Members have seen the briefing paper and the response from the Scottish Government. Do members have any questions or comments?

There being none, do members agree to write to the minister to reiterate the committee’s view that it is unusual for a bill to confer by subordinate legislation an unrestricted power on the Scottish ministers to vary the maximum fine that may be imposed on conviction for an offence?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: Do members agree to reiterate the committee’s view that the circumstances in which a maximum fine may be varied are matters for the Parliament to set out in primary legislation? If so, do members also agree to ask the minister to reconsider amending section 32T of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960, as inserted by section 63 of the bill, to provide that the power may be exercised only in circumstances to be provided for in the bill?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: Are we content to note the response and, if necessary, to reconsider everything else after stage 2?

Members indicated agreement.

Stewart Stevenson (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP): I think that this is one of those cases in which, at the very least—this is not what we are asking for—we should have on the parliamentary record the thinking that is behind the Government’s current position, if it maintains that position.

The Convener: Thank you. We now move on to item 4, which we will deal with in private.

11:34

Meeting continued in private until 11:55.
Housing (Scotland) Bill: The Minister for Housing and Welfare (Margaret Burgess) moved S4M-09749—that the Parliament agrees to the general principles of the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

After debate, the motion was agreed to ((DT) by division: For 97, Against 0, Abstentions 13).

Housing (Scotland) Bill: Financial Resolution: The Cabinet Secretary for Finance, Employment and Sustainable Growth (John Swinney) moved S4M-09578—that the Parliament, for the purposes of any Act of the Scottish Parliament resulting from the Housing (Scotland) Bill, agrees to—

(a) any expenditure of a kind referred to in Rule 9.12.3(b) of the Parliament’s Standing Orders arising in consequence of the Act, and

(b) any charge or payment in relation to which Rule 9.12.4 of the Standing Orders applies arising in consequence of the Act.

The motion was agreed to (DT).
14:30

On resuming—

Housing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 1

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): Good afternoon, everyone. The first item of business this afternoon is a debate on motion S4M-09749, in the name of Margaret Burgess, on the Housing (Scotland) Bill. We are tight for time, so if members could stick to their times, that would be great.

The Minister for Housing and Welfare (Margaret Burgess): I am delighted to open this stage 1 debate on the principles of the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

I thank the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee for its scrutiny of the bill and its stage 1 report on it. I also thank the Finance Committee and the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee for their consideration of the bill and their contribution to the lead committee’s scrutiny of it. I am particularly grateful to all our stakeholders for the considered views that they offered to the lead committee and their responses to the numerous Scottish Government consultations that helped to shape the policy objectives of the bill. The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee recognised that those consultations were comprehensive and inclusive.

I welcome the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee’s conclusion that the bill provides “a package of measures which will contribute to the improvement of housing in the social, private rented and owner-occupied sectors.”

That captures well what the Government wants to achieve through the bill.

The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee made a number of detailed recommendations and comments in its report and called on the Government to consider and respond to them during the later stages of the bill’s parliamentary scrutiny. The Government is still reflecting on some of those issues, but we will set out our position on all of them in our response to the report.

In this debate, I want to focus on the principles of the bill and what we want to achieve through it, but I will also address some of the more significant points that the committee raised.

I will start with the provisions to end the right to buy. The Scottish Government is committed to increasing the supply of social housing, which is why we want to end the right to buy. By doing that, we will keep homes in the social rented sector, increase choice for tenants and people in need of housing, and help social landlords to manage their stock more effectively.

I am pleased that the measure has been widely supported. In fact, the majority of stakeholders have told us that the right to buy should end sooner than three years after royal assent, as the bill currently provides for. That has been endorsed by the committee. In light of that, we have looked again at the length of the period and considered whether it strikes the right balance between moving quickly to safeguard homes for rent and giving tenants a fair opportunity to exercise their right to buy should they wish to do so. We have concluded that a period of two years from royal assent strikes a better balance, and we will therefore lodge an amendment at stage 2 to that effect.

James Kelly (Rutherglen) (Lab): I am not opposed to the right-to-buy proposals in the bill, but how does the minister see the abolition of the right to buy tackling the number of people on housing waiting lists, currently 155,000, bearing in mind that the Government's own figures suggest that it will make only a dent in reducing those lists—1,500 houses a year?

Margaret Burgess: As I said, the principle that we propose in the bill is to safeguard the social houses that we currently have. The bill is a way of doing that. It goes in conjunction with the Government's target to increase our supply of affordable housing and to ensure that we build a further 30,000 affordable houses by the end of this session. I remind the member that we are building more houses for social rent now than were built under any previous Administration of this Parliament. We will continue to do that and will safeguard the houses that we already have by ending the right to buy.

The bill includes a range of measures to help social landlords to meet housing need and to support local communities by giving them more flexibility in how they manage and allocate their housing stock. There is general support from the committee for those measures. I agree with the committee's recommendation that the Government should publish guidance to help landlords to use their increased flexibility and we are more than happy to undertake that we will do so, for example, to provide further clarity on how the antisocial behaviour measures are intended to work in practice.

I am also aware of the very different views that stakeholders have on section 5 of the bill, which will allow landlords to take age into account when they allocate social housing. The provision was included in the bill because landlords told us during the consultation that the measure would enable them to allocate individual properties in such a way that new tenants were helped to sustain their tenancies to the benefit of themselves and their communities. However, others have expressed concern that the provision introduces the possibility of allocations being discriminatory. I place on record that that is not the Government's intention; indeed, the section includes explicit safeguards against that possibility. However, I respect the different positions that stakeholders have taken on the issue.

At a recent meeting of my housing policy advisory group, the opposing arguments were explored and debated. From that discussion, it was clear to me that everyone is united in wanting to achieve the best outcomes for communities and for those in housing need. I am now considering carefully everything that has been said on the matter and hope to set out the Government's position in my response to the committee's stage 1 report on the bill.

There has been widespread support for the transfer of private rented sector cases from the sheriff to a tribunal. The move will enable greater specialism and access to justice in such cases, given that we have heard that both landlords and tenants can be reluctant to use the courts. There is significant interest in the operational detail of the tribunal, for example in relation to access and representation. Such detail will largely be set by secondary legislation.

Some representatives of the social rented sector expressed disappointment that cases relating to that sector are not being transferred to the tribunal. The Government believes that improved specialism and procedures enabled by the Courts Reform (Scotland) Bill will improve how cases that arise in the social sector are dealt with, but we will of course continue to keep the impact of those reforms under review through continuing engagement with stakeholders. That will include my attending regular housing policy advisory group meetings where I can hear about the issues first hand. The group includes representatives of social rented tenants, the Chartered Institute of Housing, the Association of Local Authority Chief Housing Officers, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations and Shelter Scotland.

The bill introduces rights for third parties to report to the Private Rented Housing Panel. Those rights will strengthen local authority powers to tackle poor conditions in the private rented sector for the benefit of individuals and communities across Scotland. Again, there is widespread support for that policy. We intend to strengthen the provision further by lodging stage 2 amendments that will give local authorities a new power of entry in respect of enforcement of the repairing standard. That will give all local authorities in Scotland powers to tackle substandard housing, wherever it arises in their areas. We believe that that approach will be a more effective way of tackling such problems than the proposals for enhanced enforcement areas. I know that local authorities have expressed concerns about the potential cost to them of those new powers, but a key feature of the provision is that they are discretionary. In effect, they offer local authorities an additional tool for tackling substandard housing in a targeted way when they are satisfied that the cost of intervening is justified by the benefits to tenants and communities.

Improving safety standards in private sector housing has received almost unanimous support from stakeholders. As part of our sustainable housing strategy, we intend to look later this year at safety standards across all tenures of housing. At stage 2, I intend to lodge an amendment that will provide for a regulation-making power in respect of making changes to the repairing standard for private landlords. I also expect non-Government amendments to be lodged at stage 2 that would require electrical safety checks and the installation of carbon monoxide detectors in private rented housing. I want to see the detail of such amendments before I commit to supporting them, but I am sympathetic to such proposals and hope that we can amend the bill in that regard.

The committee made the case for smoke detectors to be hardwired. I agree that that should be the standard for private rented homes, but I do not think that we need to legislate for it. Under section 20 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 there is a requirement for any alarm that has been installed or replaced since September 2007 to be hardwired. Given that alarms need to be replaced at the end of the manufacturer’s recommended lifespan, which is usually between five and 10 years, the desired result will be achieved without the need for further legislation.

If there are concerns on that point, they can be picked up through the work that we intend to do on cross-tenure standards, which I have mentioned. If necessary, we can address them through the new regulation-making power that we propose to introduce at stage 2.

The Scottish Government is committed to improving standards in the letting agent industry, an industry that serves a rapidly expanding private rented housing sector. The provisions in the bill are intended to give tenants and landlords confidence in a consistent standard of service and easy access to a dispute-resolution service.

The bill will achieve those twin aims by setting up a statutory register of letting agents, developing a statutory code of practice and creating a new means of redress for tenants and landlords to the new first-tier tribunal. I was pleased to note the broad support for our proposals at the committee’s evidence-taking sessions.

James Kelly: I ask the minister to provide some clarification on the regulation of letting agents. Under the bill, if a letting agent performs unsatisfactorily, can they be removed from the register?

Margaret Burgess: Yes. I will cover that later. A letting agent who does not perform and does not follow the statutory code of practice can be reported to the first-tier tribunal and can be removed from the register if they do not comply with the code. Also, if they do not pass the fit-and-proper person test, the Scottish Government can remove them from the register.

Let me be clear that the provisions that we are introducing on letting agents will have teeth and we intend to use those teeth to ensure that the reputation of the sector is improved.

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): The minister says that the regulation of letting agents will have teeth. It is clear that the detail of how it will work will be in the code of practice. The committee has recommended that the bill should be used to outline the issues that the code will cover. Does the minister agree with that recommendation? If not, it is hard to see why we should allow the negative procedure to be used to approve the code of practice rather than the affirmative procedure, which would at least give the Parliament some power of scrutiny.

Margaret Burgess: As I said, we are still considering the committee’s report and will respond to it. The code of practice will be worked up with stakeholders. We have listened to concerns and will introduce amendments at stage 2 to require training for letting agents as a condition of registration. We are considering a number of measures to strengthen the provisions even before the code of practice is worked up.

We expect the code to cover issues such as professional standards, ethics, professional indemnity and complaints-handling procedures. We are also considering how the enforcement measures in the bill—which may cover what Patrick Harvie mentioned—can be made more robust. We will address that through amendments at stage 2.

Our approach to reforming the mobile homes site licensing system has also been welcomed by the committee. We have listened to what the committee and industry have said on that and will lodge stage 2 amendments on it.

When I gave evidence on the bill to the committee, I said that the Government was sympathetic to calls for tenants of a registered social landlord to be balloted before their landlord became part of a group structure with another RSL.

We asked stakeholders for their views on that, and I am grateful that more than 40 took the trouble to respond at short notice. I am now considering their views and hope to set out the Government’s definitive position on the matter in our response to the stage 1 report.

As the committee recognised, the bill is about improving housing across all tenures. It will help us to deliver better outcomes for communities, safeguard the interests of consumers and support improved quality across all sectors of housing.

I look forward to working with members across the chamber to secure those objectives as we continue to take the bill through Parliament.

I move,

That the Parliament agrees to the general principles of the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

14:44

Maureen Watt (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP): The Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee has carried out comprehensive scrutiny of the Housing (Scotland) Bill, which, as is ever the case with housing bills, contains a wide variety of proposals. I will cover briefly how we viewed some of the key provisions in the bill. I am sure that my colleagues on the committee will pick up on some of them in more detail as the debate progresses.

First, I extend the committee's thanks to all the housing stakeholder groups and individuals who provided oral and written evidence on the bill. It is always hugely encouraging for us to witness the passion and commitment of organisations that genuinely want to see tangible improvements made to social and private rented housing in this country.

I offer particular thanks to the social housing tenants groups, the housing association representatives and the officials and councillors from West Dunbartonshire Council for meeting the committee informally in Dumbarton in February as part of Parliament day. It was particularly helpful for us to hear at first hand the practical experiences of both tenants and those who manage and operate social housing. We also held a formal meeting in the evening in Dumbarton, which I believe is a first for a committee of the Scottish Parliament. We were very pleased to see an excellent turnout from members of the public, who also participated in a question-and-answer session with members and witnesses on housing issues.

It is clear that the most prominent element of the bill is the proposal to abolish the right to buy social rented houses in Scotland. We heard strong evidence from local authorities, housing associations, tenants groups and others that the policy has had its day and that ending the right to buy will help to stop affordable rented housing being lost from the social housing sector. We heard that it will help RSLs to maintain the supply of affordable rented housing stock and make it easier for them to carry out more effective strategic and financial planning.

Based on that evidence, the majority of the committee agreed with the proposal to abolish the right to buy. I know that Alex Johnstone will have no problem with my indicating that he was the only committee member who disagreed with the proposal.

Having taken the decision that abolishing the right to buy is the correct way to proceed, the majority of the committee also reached the view that the proposed three-year notice period before its implementation is too long. That reflected the strong views heard in evidence that the sooner the abolition comes into effect, the better. We are of the view that a notice period of one year is adequate to allow people who have a right to buy to decide whether that is the right option for them. I was pleased to hear that the minister has moved to two years and look forward to hearing at stage 2 her views on why she has gone for two years rather than one.

As well as proposing the abolition of the right to buy, the bill proposes a range of provisions that will impact on the management of social housing in Scotland. It will help to increase the flexibility that landlords have when allocating houses and give them more tools to tackle antisocial behaviour.

The committee is content with those provisions, which reflect the broadly positive views that we heard in evidence. However, we have highlighted the need for clear guidance on the detail of how certain provisions should work in practice and the factors that will be taken into account in their implementation.

Section 5 of the bill was the subject of concern among some of the stakeholders who gave evidence. That section repeals provisions that prevent social landlords from taking account of an applicant's age unless properties are specifically designed or adapted for a particular age group.

Concerns were expressed that the measure has the potential to be discriminatory towards certain age groups, particularly young people. We were reassured that councils would carry out equality impact assessments when developing their allocations policies and would have to justify their decisions objectively. Nonetheless, the committee calls on the Scottish Government to consider how effective and consistent monitoring might be carried out so that there is no consequential discrimination against any age group. I would welcome the minister's comments in that regard.

During stage 1 scrutiny, local authorities and some tenants groups expressed disappointment that provisions to allow for initial or probationary tenancies were not included in the bill. Others saw that such a proposal was riddled with difficulties. The committee’s view is that there is no clear indication that it would be appropriate to introduce those measures at present.

Part 3 of the bill deals with the private rented sector. The committee agrees with the evidence that supported the bill’s transfer of private rented sector cases to the first-tier tribunal. Many considered that it would help to reduce costs and make the process easier for both tenants and landlords.

The committee heard that many also wanted that type of tribunal to be available for social sector rented cases, but it supports the idea that the private rented sector should be prioritised. The committee also supports the Scottish Government’s commitment to monitor the progress of the private rented sector tribunal in order to decide whether further changes could be made for social rented sector cases at a later date.

Throughout its evidence taking, the committee sought views on proposals that were made by the Electrical Safety Council to improve the physical standard of private rented housing. Those proposals were supported by many other organisations that provided evidence. They state that for all private rented accommodation there should be mandatory five-yearly checks of electrical installations and any supplied electrical appliances; mandatory provision of suitable mains-powered smoke alarms; and mandatory installation of carbon monoxide alarms. I note the minister’s comments in her opening remarks, which we will address at stage 2.

Part 4 of the bill provides for the registration of letting agents, which was widely supported by those who gave evidence. The committee recognises that much of the detail of the register of letting agents and the code of practice is subject to further regulations. However, given the evidence that it heard, the committee recommends that the Scottish Government considers how it might include in the text of the bill more detail—as Patrick Harvie said—of what those regulations might cover. That could include professional conduct, qualifications and training and financial obligations.

The committee also recommends that the Scottish Government should consider an initial registration period of one year before an agent progresses to three-year registration as proposed in the bill. The committee heard that it is not clear how many letting agents operate in Scotland and is of the view that the Scottish Government should take an active role in considering how unregistered letting agents might be identified.

Part 5 of the bill deals with mobile homes. The committee welcomes the proposed range of measures, which are designed to help to address some of the problems that are experienced by permanent residents of mobile and park homes. A key proposal is to introduce a fixed site-licence renewal period and a fee for the administration of the licensing scheme.

Evidence suggests that there is a great deal of concern about the potential impact on residents should a site lose its licence. Some site owners feel that the fixed three-year renewal period for licences should be replaced with a more flexible arrangement. The committee recommended an awareness campaign to ensure that residents and site owners are provided with accurate information about the intentions and potential impacts of the new licensing regime.

The committee also recommended an awareness-raising exercise among local authorities to enhance understanding of mobile and park home site regulations and to embed the need for a consistent approach to inspections and enforcement. The committee welcomed the introduction of a fit-and-proper-person test for site owners to help to ensure the security of residents. It called on the Scottish Government to consider the feasibility of a shared fit-and-proper-person register to ensure that non-compliant owners cannot move between authority areas while continuing to employ non-compliant behaviours on their sites. The committee believes that that would add greatly to the protection of site residents throughout the country.

The committee was concerned that fines to site owners for non-compliance with licensing requirements might, as the bill is currently drafted, be passed on to residents. However, it is reassured that the Scottish Government intends to lodge an amendment on that at stage 2.

Part 6 of the bill seeks to ensure that local authorities have a range of powers to tackle poor conditions in the private sector, and we welcome the principle behind the missing share provision in the bill, which will allow local authorities to step in where an owner is unwilling or unable to pay or cannot be found or identified.

As the minister said, part 7 of the bill deals with proposals in relation to the Scottish Housing Regulator. I was pleased by the minister’s response on that issue in her opening remarks and I note her comments on it.
In conclusion, the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee welcomes the Housing (Scotland) Bill because it provides a package of measures that will contribute to the improvement of housing in the social, private rented and owner-occupied sectors. The committee therefore recommends that the Parliament agree to the general principles of the bill.

14:55

Mary Fee (West Scotland) (Lab): Scottish Labour believes that the Housing (Scotland) Bill as introduced is a missed opportunity to tackle the housing challenges that Scotland faces. Under the control of the Scottish Government, housing is facing the biggest crisis seen in Scotland since the end of world war two. The bill contains no new or radical proposals to tackle the problems forced on the SNP and it exposes the vision and leadership lacking in the stewardship of the housing minister and her colleagues in the Scottish Cabinet. Further, the bill demonstrates that there is a clear need for a long-term action plan.

The measures in the bill do not go far enough to merit the praise that we will no doubt hear from members on the Government benches. Instead of a bold vision to build the new houses that Scotland urgently needs, we have proposals that tinker around the edges of the serious issues that have resulted in over 155,000 people across Scotland being on social housing waiting lists. I will go into some specific aspects of the bill shortly, but I ask that when the minister makes her closing remarks she gives us a bit more detail on how the Government intends properly to enforce the registration of lettings agents; explains, over and above the announcement last week, how the bill will tackle energy efficiency; and, importantly, explains what steps will be taken to ensure that young people will not be discriminated against if age becomes a factor in housing allocation.

I was pleased to hear the minister say in her opening remarks that a two-year period is now being considered before introducing the abolition of the right to buy. However, as Maureen Watt said, the committee recommended that the period be reduced to one year, so I would be grateful if the minister could explain why she is moving to the view that the timescale should be two years.

Part 2 of the bill attempts to address some of the social problems associated with the social housing supply, but it is again a missed opportunity to tackle them head on. Shelter Scotland and Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People warned in committee that there could be disadvantaged groups if age is taken into consideration. As the minister knows, Shelter has set up an online petition on the issue and I am sure that her inbox will be filling up as a result of young people signing it. It would have been more beneficial for the minister if the age proposal had been in the original consultation; it was not, hence the anger from SCCYP, Shelter and other organisations working with young people. I know that some councils currently use age as a criterion in allocating housing. For example, only half a mile from where I live, flats have been prioritised for elderly tenants, which is having a positive effect in the area.

Although we recognise that the provision could have benefits, we want to ensure that section 5 does not have serious implications in relation to equality legislation or for young people, who could be denied a quality home. The Government must provide solid and watertight guidance for local authorities and registered social landlords in the event that they use such powers. If the proposals remain as they are, we would like a code of practice to be implemented, as well as effective monitoring, to ensure that discrimination does not take place.

The antisocial behaviour elements of the bill must be backed by checks and balances to ensure that the provisions are not misused. During the evidence sessions, we heard that there is a need for the Government to clarify what evidence can be used, the extent to which it can be trusted and how issues can be remedied. We want to ensure that any measures are used in an effective manner that ends the misery that many communities endure and that, at the same time, work is done with those who are responsible to change their behaviour.

Garry Burns and Paul Brown expressed frustration with the types of evidence that can be used in relation to short Scottish secure tenancies and the historical period over which incidents that tenants were involved in can be taken into account. I know from my time as a councillor—as will other members—that resolving issues in the first place is far more beneficial and more cost effective, if that works for both parties. There is a hard-working ASSIST—advice, support, safety and information services together—team in Renfrewshire and mitigation should always be the first option.

The reasonable preference provisions must be used to house people who are in dire need. The current preference groups are outdated and must be brought in line with current practice, but further clarification of "unmet housing need" is required. Given that we have an ageing population, there will be a number of elderly people who are living in homes that have not been suitably adapted and it is only right that preference is given to our elderly to improve their health, wellbeing and mobility.

In relation to succession for carers, we do not want unpaid carers to be left homeless in the event that they do not meet the new qualifying period. That could have great emotional cost for them and it could cost the social landlord that would have to rehouse them.

The Scottish Government must be careful about legislating on social housing and then passing on the responsibility for implementing those provisions to local authorities. The committee was warned that that could lead to legal challenges. Margaret Burgess and the Government must take responsibility for that.

I turn to part 3 of the bill. Scottish Labour supports the transfer to first-tier tribunals. We know what is happening in sheriff courts across Scotland. To improve criminal justice and housing-related action, we need to reduce the burden on local sheriff courts, but representation in tribunals is an issue that needs further clarification. I know from the time that I have spent sitting on tribunal panels that they are more plain spoken and much less imposing than courts, but when a tenant needs advocacy, that must be guaranteed.

We support the committee’s recommendations on electrical safety, smoke alarms and carbon monoxide alarms, and we look to the Government to make the necessary amendments at stage 2.

The registration of letting agents is to be supported, but we want to ensure that there are processes in place for identifying unregistered agents. Registration is one of a number of steps that the Government has put in place over recent years. We want to ensure that no tenants, or possible tenants, are ripped off. As those letting agents that have been lacking in ethics may continue to operate under the radar, it is a must that such agents are regulated. We also need to know what sanctions will be available for anyone who is found to be working outside the registration process.

If the Government is to place the responsibility for regulation on local authorities, they must not be burdened with the costs associated with that.

Part 5 of the bill deals with the licensing of mobile home sites with permanent residents. It is clear that some issues need to be addressed at stage 2. The committee has called on the Government to clarify some of those issues, such as the fixed term for a licence, the adverse effect on funding, the use of renewal instead of review and the passing on of fines for non-compliance to residents.

We know that housing conditions in the private rented sector are far short of what we would call acceptable. The measures in part 6 of the bill do not go far enough in tackling poor conditions. Proposals for energy efficiency in private rented homes appear to have been overlooked, and we want that issue to be dealt with at stage 2.

On part 7, there are questions to be asked of the Government on how it intends to consult with sector stakeholders on the proposals for the Scottish Housing Regulator to transfer RSL assets in the event of insolvency.

We have some real concerns that the passage of the bill will not solve any of the problems that have resulted in the current housing crisis. With fewer houses being built in Scotland than at any time since the end of world war two, we need a bold and ambitious statement of intent from the Scottish Government and the bill falls far from that standard.

15:05

Alex Johnstone (North East Scotland) (Con): I rise to speak on the Housing (Scotland) Bill on what I believe will go down in history as a dark, dark day for liberty and democracy in Scotland. However, before I get on to my main subject, I will run through the bill in fairly short order. A great deal in the bill is desirable and will find my support, although I may move to amend some of the characteristics in it.

The proposal to use age criteria in social housing allocation policy is an important change that I support. In fact, I have already discussed with the minister how such a change might be used to develop other strategies, particularly in relation to veterans, and she has given me assurances that that will be considered, although not within the framework of the bill. I am disappointed, however, that Shelter and one or two other organisations have sought to interpret the proposal to use age criteria in allocation policy in a way that does not conform with my reading of the bill. The Scottish Federation of Housing Associations today published a strong defence of the policy that we should take seriously.

I am also concerned that there is no proposal for probationary tenancies. The fact that probationary tenancies were consulted on and found a great deal of support among landlords is one that we should have taken more seriously. As a consequence I may seek to amend the bill at stage 2.

The proposal to move from the sheriff court to first-tier tribunals to deal with private rented housing disputes received a great deal of support. In fact, the suggestion that the social rented sector should be treated the same way was enthusiastically received. It is my understanding that, once the proposal is in place, the Government will consider whether it can be extended at a later date.

The approach taken by the Government to landlord and letting agent registration is to be commended. The work that is being done between organisations and the Government has meant that there is genuine support in the industry for the proposed regulatory framework. Ultimately, that is what will make it a success. If those who are being governed choose to be governed and regulated in that way, we will have positive outcomes.

I also welcome the provisions in part 6, which will allow us to tackle poor conditions.

From that, I must go to the subject of right to buy. Right to buy was a transformational policy. It had the effect of creating stable, mixed-tenure communities that contributed to strong, stable societies in many parts of Scotland. The opportunity that many took to become homeowners changed lives and will continue to change lives. The suggestion has been made on many occasions that we should not sell those houses because they are required in the social rented sector, yet if we look at the facts we see that there are some very big holes in that argument.

To qualify for the right to buy, someone has to be a long-term tenant, and those who are denied the right to buy will most likely remain tenants. The fact is that the houses that will not be available to buy in the future are unlikely to come back on to the market in year one. The provision will not increase the number of houses available.

The minister has referred to the timescale for taking away the right to buy, saying that she has decided on a two-year timescale rather than the three years in the bill. I want to ensure that everyone who wishes to buy their home gets that opportunity but, at this stage, I am not going to suggest that two years provides any less of an opportunity than three.

I am concerned that those in protected areas will not have the opportunity to buy their homes and, given the rights that are being protected for those who do not live in such areas, I want to ensure that there is some kind of quid pro quo for those in protected areas, and I will be consulting and taking legal advice on whether the issue is properly covered in the bill.

The fact is that the bill creates a problem that did not exist before it was introduced. According to the latest yearly figures, only 1,500 houses were bought by their tenants, which suggests that right to buy has been withering on the vine. By moving to end it, the Government has opened a window of opportunity for the hundreds of thousands of Scots who still have that right. The likely outcome of the legislation is that demand for right to buy will peak over the next two years, which means that many houses that might have remained in the social rented sector will be removed from it. I see the abolition of the right to buy as a vindictive and politically motivated move that, at the end of the day, will simply be counterproductive.

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): We move to the open debate. I ask for speeches of six minutes, and I remind members that we are very tight for time.

15:11

Gordon MacDonald (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP): Edinburgh has the largest private rented sector in Scotland. The 51,000 registered homes in the sector represent just less than a quarter of the housing stock, and the figure is expected to rise to over 30 per cent by 2018, compared with only 12 per cent across Scotland. Given the large size of Edinburgh’s private rented sector, many of my constituents find that the only way they can put a roof over their heads is by taking up a tenancy through either a private landlord or a letting agency.

What will the bill offer the many families with a private sector tenancy? I believe that three parts of it will be of interest to my constituents: part 3, which creates a tribunal to deal with disputes; part 4, which regulates letting agents; and part 6, which tackles private housing conditions. The creation of a new housing tribunal for the private rented sector has been welcomed by the Chartered Institute of Housing, which stated that it was "a new, specialist and more modern approach to dispute resolution" and that

"Neither tenants nor landlords in the"

private rented sector

"see the current sheriff court system as user friendly or efficient".

The Law Society of Scotland has also approved of "the transfer of the sheriff's jurisdiction to the first tier tribunal", a change that will result in 700 cases per year being removed from the sheriff court system.

Although the aim of part 3 is to provide better access to justice for tenants and landlords where disputes arise, Inclusion Scotland has highlighted that "some private tenants may be reluctant to take issues to the tribunal because of fear of reprisals by landlords; that there will need to be exemptions to any tribunal fees for those who cannot afford to pay; and that certain people with protected characteristics, including disabled people, may need support to participate effectively in proceedings."

Part 3 will also allow local authorities to report a landlord to the Private Rented Housing Panel for failing to comply with the repairing standard that landlords are required to meet in order to rent out their property. Previously only tenants could refer a landlord to the panel, but many were reluctant to do so for fear of losing their tenancy.

Part 4 might go some way towards alleviating some of Inclusion Scotland's concerns with regard to landlords by establishing a mandatory register of letting agents, with those applying to be on the register required to meet a fit-and-proper-person test. The aim of such a test, which already exists in the landlord registration scheme, is to weed out anyone who has committed any offence involving fraud, dishonesty, violence, drugs, discrimination, firearms or sexual offences or who has failed to comply with housing legislation.

This section will also create a statutory code of practice and a dispute resolution procedure for letting agents and tenants. The committee recommends that the Scottish Government considers how it might include details in the bill relating to professional conduct, qualifications needed to be a letting agent, training for staff and how their financial obligations should be handled.

Part 6 ensures that local authorities have a range of powers to tackle poor conditions in the private sector. The last Scottish house condition survey that looked at this issue in detail estimated that there were £223 million-worth of essential improvements outstanding in the private rented sector across Scotland.

The bill provides a discretionary power to local authorities in order to support owners of communal blocks to carry out repairs by allowing the council to pay the missing share and recovering the outstanding sum later from the owner who is either unable or unwilling to pay. How effective that will be will depend on the individual local authority's view on its available funding, the difficulty in recovering outstanding money and the timescale for that recovery.

In Edinburgh, the council is owed £22 million by up to 3,500 property owners for work that was carried out to their homes under the statutory notice system that previously existed. People need time to repay repair costs. However, the suggested 30-year repayment period is excessive and will mean that local authorities might consider not making use of the discretionary power. That will not help the many families and individuals who live in poor housing conditions and I therefore hope that the minister will consider the committee's recommendation that "local authorities should be given the flexibility to determine the time period over which the share must be paid back based on individual circumstances."

If accepted, that change will, I hope, encourage local authorities to make use of the power in order to assist private rented sector tenants to have their homes improved.

Finally, the ending of the right to buy was supported by 83 per cent of all respondents, including 81 per cent of councils, 92 per cent of registered social landlords, 73 per cent of individuals and 75 per cent of tenants groups. A newspaper today carries the headline, "Scots Tories warn of 'rush' if right to buy ends". If that could be the outcome, we should ensure that the lead-in period is reduced further, from the two-year period that was announced by the minister to one year, in order to protect what is left of our social housing.

15:17

Mark Griffin (Central Scotland) (Lab): There is not a lot to disagree with in the bill before us. It is extensive and it contains a number of areas about which there is broad agreement. The proposals represent a step forward, but there are areas that could be strengthened in order to give more protection to tenants and communities and there are areas where we feel that the bill represents a missed opportunity.

John Mason (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP): The member repeats what his front-bench colleague said about there being a missed opportunity, but she did not tell us what any missed opportunities were, other than more money. Does he have any examples?

Mark Griffin: I will set out three areas in my speech: the bill’s good points; where I think that it can be improved; and where it represents a missed opportunity.

By giving local authorities the power to enforce repairs and maintenance in the private sector, the Government has taken away the opportunity for a landlord to issue a notice to quit or to harass a tenant who simply exercises their right to live in an adequately maintained home. That is not to say that every, or even many, landlords would behave in that way, but there is certainly a fear among some tenants and communities of rocking the boat and suffering at the hands of an angry landlord.

Giving social landlords more flexibility to allocate houses in a more sensible way, using local knowledge, can create more sustainable communities, but that should be accompanied by clear guidance so that young people in particular are not discriminated against when it comes to allocating individual properties.

The transfer of jurisdiction for civil cases relating to the private sector from the sheriff court to the first-tier tribunal should reduce the costs and the timescale for disputes to be resolved, and will also allow highly skilled members of the tribunal to build substantial experience in dealing with housing matters. It will be interesting to see how that progresses and whether—as was suggested during evidence sessions—it will be rolled out to the social sector.

Those are examples of where the bill is strong on improving tenants’ rights and creating stronger communities, but there are also weaknesses that I hope the Government will address at stage 2. The Government has taken steps to mitigate the impact of the right to buy with the introduction of social landlords and their ability to budget, access capital from financial institutions and plan any improvement programmes or new house-building programmes. That goes some way towards explaining why so few local authority houses have been built over the past few years. However, I do not understand the inclusion of a three-year window to allow even more social housing stock to be lost to the private sector. The period has now been changed to two years, but the bill team argued that a three-year timescale was felt to be fair and reasonable due to potential issues with the European convention on human rights.

Bruce Crawford: Will the member take an intervention on that specific point?

Mark Griffin: I will take a brief intervention.

Bruce Crawford: Will Mr Griffin please tell me where, in the 2011 Labour manifesto, it is suggested that the right to buy should be removed?

Mark Griffin: I have long been a supporter of the removal of the right to buy and think that the Government has taken the right step. I have said that it should have been done a long time ago. I had hoped that Mr Crawford would welcome the consensus in most of the chamber on the removal of the right to buy, and I will say why the timescale for that should be reduced.

Most of us agree that the right to buy should go because of the impact that it has had on social housing stock and the ability of landlords to improve or increase the housing stock. The Government should be working towards what it feels is the minimum time period in which the right to buy can be abolished. We should take an evidence-based approach to find the shortest time possible in which to abolish it and just get on with it.

Another area in which the Government could strengthen the bill at stage 2 is its provisions on antisocial behaviour. I might be wrong, but I think that this is the first time that a Government minister has mentioned antisocial behaviour in this session, although it is a massive issue that has not gone away. The Government must set out how it feels that short Scottish secure tenancies will add to local authorities’ ability to deal with antisocial behaviour instead of simply moving the problem around different communities.

I will conclude with the areas that I think have not been adequately covered.

The Presiding Officer: You are in your last 30 seconds, Mr Griffin.

Mark Griffin: When the Housing (Scotland) Bill is debated in Parliament, our communities will expect a recognition of the fact that house building is at its lowest level for decades and a plan for how to increase house building to make up the shortfall of 160,000 homes. The other issue, which was highlighted by my colleague Mary Fee, is the massive disparity between the rents that are charged to private tenants for homes that were previously local authority stock and the rents that are charged to the tenants of current local authority stock.
The social rented sector has rigorous oversight, which is much less true of the private rented sector, despite the fact that they have similar tenants. The Scottish Federation of Housing Associations takes up that point on paragraph 2.3 of page 2 of one of its briefing notes to the committee:

“However, we note that there is nothing in this Bill that will bring the private rented sector anywhere near the levels of the social rented sector in terms of the regulation of management or of physical property standards.”

However, I accept that we are moving in the right direction.

We need to see improvements in electrical safety in the private rented sector. I was taken aback when I first heard that a majority of accidental fires are caused by electricity. I had assumed, as perhaps others did, that the major cause of such incidents was gas. Therefore, I am very happy to endorse the committee’s recommendation at paragraph 168, about which the minister spoke positively.

It has been suggested that increased private tenancy security could lead to a tenant investing more in their property for the longer term and playing more of a part in the community than has often been the case. That is another area worth exploring.

On the private rented sector, I throw in my continuing concern about the Belgrove hotel in my constituency, which does not fall neatly into any of the categories that we are discussing. As a result, 140 vulnerable tenants do not get the protection of being a part of the social rented sector or the protection that we hope to give to private tenants in the future. I am not expecting an answer on that issue today, but the minister knows of my concerns and I believe that the matter concerns her, too.

To return to specific issues in the social rented sector, I have mentioned group structures. At times, it seems that smaller associations are being gobbled up through merger or acquisition. Should tenants always get to vote on such a merger or acquisition if they are joining a group? Local understanding and accountability are in danger of being lost, so I am glad that the Government has a positive view on the matter and that it is consulting on the issue.

I am not sure how much can be changed by legislation, but I am concerned by some of the things that I have heard about the relationship between the Scottish Housing Regulator and associations. It is important to get the balance between operating at the right distance and maintaining a relationship. Sometimes that relationship was too close, but I wonder whether it is now too distant. We could do with an improved attitude and a better working relationship.

The SFHA referred to that issue in its briefing for the debate. For example, it asked for a requirement

"for the SHR to publish, following consultation, a consolidated Code of Regulatory Practice that addresses all of its methods for intervening in the affairs of social landlords, including those that are not publicly reported and those that do not involve the use of statutory intervention powers."

I wonder whether the regulator is too keen on larger groups of associations, with the consequential loss of local involvement that inevitably follows.

On allocation policies, I wonder how far we can go in taking local connections into account. We are dealing with some complex family structures these days, and I frequently get cases where school, work, childcare and access are all being juggled with difficulty, and the request is for rehousing in the immediate local area. In some cases, that might never be possible, because larger homes are not available, but swinging the policies in that direction, where community involvement is available, would be valuable.

15:30

Malcolm Chisholm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab): Like previous speakers, I find most of what is in the bill acceptable. The real issue is what is missing from it. The headlines will be captured by sections 1 and 2, on the abolition of the right to buy, and I do not object to that, but there is a danger of overstating the effect of that measure. There is a danger that, if that measure is not implemented quickly, it may have unintended consequences. It is a mistake to believe that the policy will be a panacea for the chronic shortage of affordable social rented housing. That is the danger to which I refer.

There have been many outstanding affordable housing developments in recent times, and I am pleased, if I may get a plug in, to be officially opening one in Leith tomorrow that has been named by the Chartered Institute of Housing as one of the best affordable housing developments in the United Kingdom.

However, it is increasingly difficult for housing associations to build social rented houses in the numbers that are required, because of the reductions in the level of housing association grant. Any housing association will tell us that the reinstatement of the HAG was welcome to some extent but it has not gone nearly far enough. There will be a declining number of social rented houses. That is the problem that confronts the Minister for Housing and Welfare. She always makes comparisons with previous Administrations regarding affordable housing in general.

There are a number of further points relating to the bill's social rented housing provisions. First, on allocations, I note that the Chartered Institute of Housing said that the new criteria would not make much difference at all. The underoccupancy criterion is welcome, although I worry about people in overoccupied social rented housing, who seem to have very little opportunity to move, certainly in Edinburgh.

Antisocial behaviour is a massive problem, as we all know from our constituency surgeries, emails and so on, and many witnesses have said that the proposals in the bill would not have a significant effect on that, although we have to hope that the increasing opportunities for using the short SST will be helpful in that regard. Nobody wants to have to evict anybody but, in certain circumstances, eviction has to be an option. Presumably it will be easier with a short SST than with the standard SST.

The age issue has been the most controversial. Like Mary Fee and other members, I think that the important thing is to have a code of practice and effective monitoring. There are worries from Shelter and the children's commissioner that we must take seriously. In particular, we should track the percentage of young people who are getting tenancies. That has increased considerably since the 2012 homelessness legislation kicked in.

Mary Fee said that the measures could be positive. She mentioned the flats that have been prioritised for elderly people in her area. We had a block of flats in Leith that was successful with older people. The percentage of tenancies going to homeless people was the same as it had been previously, but the regulator said that that had to be stopped. There probably needs to be a change in the law if we want that to be an option.

The biggest missed opportunities are in the private rented sector. I welcome the provisions on the tribunal and on letting agents, although the points about enforcement and identification that James Kelly and Mary Fee made are important. When it comes to landlord registration, there is just a minor change, in section 22. The problem is that landlord registration has become a largely bureaucratic exercise, but action on the antisocial behaviour of private tenants and on the failure of landlords to take responsibility for common repairs could be dealt with to some extent through a beefed-up landlord registration system.

I will move on to some other issues concerning the private sector, and they are all to do with amendments to the 2006 act. I note that the repairing standard and the Private Rented Housing Panel were created by that act. It is good that there will be an amendment about electrical safety checks and a beefing up of the repairing standard.

I note that the City of Edinburgh Council has suggested that it is not just local authorities that should be able to make a report on the repairing standard; neighbours who are affected by issues concerning privately rented property and—crucially—neighbouring home owners when a landlord is not contributing to common repairs should also be able to do so. Landlords not contributing to common repairs are a massive problem in my constituency, or parts of it, anyway, and that is an interesting suggestion from the council.

The City of Edinburgh Council has other interesting and important suggestions when it comes to common repairs more generally. Sections 73 and 74 contain minor changes to work notices and maintenance orders, but the council proposes that all owners who have common parts to their property be required to develop a plan to ensure maintenance of the common parts and that an annual roof inspection be included in that, along with a payment plan and the appointment of a responsible person or agent to manage the plans. That suggestion should be considered for future amendments.

Finally, there is the issue of widening the scope for where a missing share can be paid. That is already possible in certain circumstances under section 50 of the 2006 act, but the City of Edinburgh Council suggests that there be more flexibility so that there is not a 30-year repayment period, that charging orders are secured by priority ranking—

The Presiding Officer: I ask you to bring your remarks to a close.

Malcolm Chisholm: —and finally that there is a fund that local authorities can access to facilitate shared repairs. There are major issues in Edinburgh about that, and I hope that the Government will seriously consider the council’s proposals.

15:36

Jim Eadie (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP): The provision of good-quality, affordable housing is something that we all want to see for ourselves, our families and our communities, and although legislation alone cannot deliver that, I believe that the Housing (Scotland) Bill together with the unprecedented levels of investment will take us closer to achieving that ambition for all our citizens.

The centre-piece of the bill is of course the abolition of the right to buy, which will retain thousands of homes in the social rented sector over the coming decade. The right to buy legislation, which was introduced by a Conservative Government in the early 1980s, was controversial. I remember it being opposed by a dynamic and forward-thinking director of Shelter Scotland by the name of Margo MacDonald. It is fitting that we recall that in the week in which tributes have been paid in the chamber to Margo’s massive contribution to Scottish public life.

There has been near unanimity in the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee on the issue, although we should recognise the lone dissenting voice of Alex Johnstone, who sought to keep the spirit of Margaret Thatcher and the concept of a property-owning democracy alive throughout our deliberations. However, the weight of the body of evidence that we received from across civil society was overwhelming in its opposition to the right to buy.

The situation was summed up best in the evidence session in Dumbarton by Jennifer MacLeod of the Highland and Argyll and Bute tenants network, who rightly contrasted the right to buy with the right to rent. Reflecting on her experience in her community, she stated:

“...I could see the reduction in the number of houses that were available for rent. We have a right to rent as well as a right to buy. Over the years, the right to buy has done great damage to the amount of housing stock that is available, and I am glad that it is finishing.”

I have another reason to be grateful to Jennifer MacLeod. Asked by me later in the evidence session whether she would like to contribute her views on the issue of secure tenancies, she replied in a wonderful Highland accent:

“No. I just happened to be looking at you ... Gazing in wonder.”—[Official Report, Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee, 24 February 2014; c 2671, 2688.]

I replied that I did not know whether to be flattered or concerned by that statement.

A further insight into the right to buy comes from Charles Moore in his authorised biography of Margaret Thatcher, in which he states:

“The policy had its disadvantages. The most notable were the gradual build-up of a housing shortage, which in 1979 had not existed, and the stoking, for the future, of a housing bubble.”

Although the impact of a housing bubble was not felt in Scotland to the degree that it was felt south of the border, his comment is nonetheless a sobering antidote to the rose-tinted memories of Alex Johnstone and others on the Conservative benches.

Many people took advantage of the opportunity to buy their council house, often at a significant discount, but that was at the expense of diminishing the council housing stock, reducing the number of good-quality homes for families who could not afford to buy and who found themselves stuck in the less-desirable properties. The bill addresses that inequity.

...

There are a number of ways in which the bill can be further strengthened. One is to give households containing pregnant women and children the right to challenge being placed in homeless temporary accommodation of a very poor standard. I intend to lodge an amendment at stage 2, with the support of Shelter Scotland, to address that issue so that households containing children or expectant mothers have a legislative right to challenge local authorities that place them in poor-quality accommodation.

Another issue that has been referred to is introducing carbon monoxide safety requirements for properties that are in the private rented sector. I am grateful to Shelter Scotland for its support on that issue, on which I will lodge an amendment at stage 2. Shelter Scotland has rightly said that it wants to see “carbon monoxide alarms become mandatory in all privately rented property in Scotland.”

I want further progress on that and I will work with members across the chamber to achieve that change to the bill.

Shelter has highlighted the possibility, which has been referred to, of age discrimination against future tenants who come within the bill’s ambit. I welcome the minister’s clear commitment this afternoon to reflect further on the range of views that have been expressed during the bill’s passage through Parliament. I draw attention to the fact that the committee received a range of evidence on the issue. There was a clear division between local authorities and registered social landlords on the one hand and Shelter Scotland, Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People and organisations that act on behalf of homeless people on the other. It is clear that much more exploration and discussion of the issues is needed before any final conclusions can be reached.

Like Malcolm Chisholm, I have received representations from the City of Edinburgh Council. I encourage Scottish Government ministers and officials to engage in constructive dialogue with the council to address issues such as extending the power to make third-party referrals to the Private Rented Housing Panel; the enforcement of landlord contributions to common repairs; increasing the flexibility for local authorities to determine the length of a repayment period when covering a missing share, which Malcolm Chisholm referred to; and the requirement, which Malcolm Chisholm also referred to, for owners to produce a maintenance plan that covers common repairs. They are all reasonable observations and suggestions for further progress and work that is to be done.

The bill has much to commend it, but further steps can be taken to strengthen it. With colleagues across the chamber, I look forward to playing my part at stage 2 to bring about those improvements.

15:42
Jim Hume (South Scotland) (LD): I welcome the opportunity to contribute to this important debate. I broadly welcome many of the aims that are in the Scottish Government’s bill. It is hard to argue that some of them are not long overdue. For example, the scrapping of the right to buy and the long-awaited regulation of letting agents will undoubtedly arrest the decline in social housing stock and provide long-awaited protection for tenants, by driving up professionalism among letting agents.

I welcome the introduction of a tribunal service to better serve tenants and letting agents who are in dispute and take away some of the pressures that our sheriff courts feel. However, I am concerned about the need for a tenant to pay a fee to progress their complaint to a tribunal. Many tenants who find themselves in dispute with letting agents are vulnerable and have little money. I fear that they will be priced out of seeking justice, so I would like the minister to provide assurances in summing up that no one will be priced out of accessing the tribunal system. There must be access for all.

We are in the midst of a housing crisis in this country, with 180,000 people on local authority waiting lists. A third of them have been on those lists for more than three years. Given that, we can understand the minister’s desire to increase flexibility in the management and allocation of social housing. The Government’s news release described that as “allowing landlords to make better use of their stock, tackle anti-social behaviour and provide further protection for tenants.”

That is all good, but the Government was noticeably quieter on the details, which include the provision in section 5 to remove the prohibition on taking age into account in social housing allocations. I know that the Chartered Institute of Housing in Scotland called for that measure, which has the SFHA’s support. I realise that the minister is to look at the provision again, but the measure did not originally feature in the consultation.

The arguments in favour speak of removing barriers and helping social landlords to make sensible allocations to sustain tenancies and communities. To my mind, the reality will wind up being quite different. I share the concerns of Citizens Advice Scotland, which has stated that the removal of the protection could result in particular age groups—in all likelihood the young—being allocated to undesirable areas. I associate myself with Shelter on the matter and I congratulate it on taking the lead in opposing the removal of the prohibition.

The minister will know that Shelter is not alone. Last month, she received a letter from Graeme Brown and 11 other representatives of organisations such as Children in Scotland, Barnardo’s, Homeless Action Scotland and the Poverty Alliance that detailed their opposition. I agree with their assessment that current legislation and practice already allow for social landlords to respond to particular requirements that relate to, for example, accessibility or the need for an adapted property. The letter also addressed those who say that the proposal will enable social landlords to tackle imbalances in communities by correctly highlighting that they are already able to do so through a local lettings initiative and, of course, sensitive lets.

The allocation of social housing must always be done on the basis of need and nothing else. The proposal has a real danger of leading to age discrimination, primarily against young people, who are so often a section of society in the most pressing need of housing. Regardless of the protections that are afforded in the Equality Act 2010, I hope that the minister will seek to remove the proposal from the bill soon.

I have issues with some things in the bill, but there are a few small missed opportunities. One thing that I would like to be improved—I intend to lodge an amendment to the bill at stage 2 to this effect—is the use of section 5 referrals. When a local authority seeks a registered social landlord’s assistance in housing a homeless person, if that is done through a section 5 referral, the homeless person will enjoy certain safeguards, such as a response from the RSL within a reasonable period, and a request will not be declined without a good reason. However, not all councils currently use section 5 referrals when they engage with social landlords to house a homeless person, which denies such people the safeguards that are afforded through the robust and consistent framework that section 5 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 provides. I would like to see all referrals done through section 5, and I urge the minister to commit today to amend the bill to make that happen. If she does not, as I said, I am prepared to lodge amendments at stage 2.

The bill is important, but it has by no means a perfect set of proposals. Some proposals in particular do not simply need to be amended or refined; they need to be dropped altogether. I support the bill at stage 1 in recognition of the undoubted benefits that it will deliver in certain areas, but, as I said, I will look for significant work on the bill at stage 2.

15:47

Bob Doris (Glasgow) (SNP): I want to look at electrical safety in relation to the private rented sector, which we have heard about from other members. First, however, I pay tribute to our housing minister and the constructive approach that she has taken with the Electrical Safety Council—which I should now call Electrical Safety First, as it has rebranded itself and changed its name—and with me in her willingness to consider legislating in that area in the bill.

In its submission on the bill, the Electrical Safety Council provided strong evidence that “69% of all accidental fires in Scottish homes (more than 3,400 annually) are caused by electricity. Independent research also suggests that private tenants are more likely to be at risk of electric shock or fire than owner occupiers.”

Therefore, there is an evidence base on the extent of the problem. That is why I have supported for some time calls for five-yearly checks of both fixed wiring and portable electrical equipment. I am therefore pleased that the minister has indicated that she is supportive of an amendment on that at stage 2. I fully appreciate that the Government must see the detail of the amendment before it confirms that it can accept it, but I confirm that I hope to lodge an amendment at stage 2 that will require a five-yearly cycle for periodic inspection reports on fixed wiring and five-yearly portable appliance testing.

It is not only the Electrical Safety Council that has called for that. It has been excellent in building a coalition of various partners. Among the 12 trade associations that have backed that call are the Scottish Association of Landlords, Shelter Scotland, the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors and the Chartered Institute of Housing Scotland. There is a broad coalition and alliance around that, so I hope that we have success at stage 2 in bringing forward a proposal.

I will say a little bit more about the Scottish Association of Landlords, because I do a lot of work with that organisation. Too often, we talk about the cowboy landlords in the private rented sector, whereas the Scottish Association of Landlords represents the top performers—the registered landlords who seek to do all that they can. [ Interruption. ] I suspect that Alex Johnstone may also be a registered landlord—who knows? We can check his declaration of interests.

The Scottish Association of Landlords drew to my attention—or refamiliarised me with—the repairing standards. The Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 states that “Regard is to be had”

to any guidance set out by ministers in relation to section 13(1)(f). Members will all know what section 13(1)(f) is, but I remind them of what it says. It states that the repairing standard is met if “the house has satisfactory provision for detecting fires and for giving warning in the event of fire or suspected fire.”

I understand that the guidance in relation to that is in the technical handbook and that the 2013 guidance requires—if members are still following me—that there must be hard-wired smoke detectors in all public rooms. Which tenures does that cover? It covers new-build properties, redeveloped properties and private rented properties but not social rented properties, so the fire safety standards in social rented properties are lower than they are in private rented properties. That is a reasonable thing to put on the record.

It is important that we are cognisant of the various standards that apply to different tenures. We should consider the expression in the 2006 act that private landlords should give “regard” to. There is a vagueness in that. Does it mean that landlords should do it, that they should not do it, or that they should think about it and maybe do it? We must look at and perhaps address that vagueness.

The safety of their tenants is paramount for the private landlords to whom I have spoken, including the Scottish Association of Landlords. However, we must ensure that they are given due time to hard wire smoke alarms and to meet their other commitments in a robust, safe and affordable manner. The landlords whom I work with are up for doing that, but more clarity around the requirements would be welcome.

In the minute and a half that I have left, I will make some general comments on ideas around the flexibility of landlords’ allocation policies. I will talk not about age-related criteria, but about something that is one of my biggest constituency issues. I have constituents who are living in appalling housing conditions. Their housing needs could have been met by social landlords, but when a house was offered they did not take it, because they knew that if they did so they would be stuck in the house for a generation or two. That is because in social housing, a person’s housing aspirations tend to be forgotten once their housing needs have been met.

A Maryhill housing officer said to me years ago that housing officers used to say to social tenants, “I know you don’t really want that property, but do a couple of years up the close and we’ll get you a much better property in a couple of years’ time.” However, for a number of years it has been the case that as long as the person’s housing needs have been met, they will stay up the close for five, 10, 15 or 20 years.

In the context of the need for flexibility in allocation policy, I ask the Parliament and the minister to consider how we can take cognisance of the housing journey and aspirations of tenants in the social rented sector.

In a spirit of flexibility, Presiding Officer, I can give you an extra 10 seconds, because that is me finished.

The Presiding Officer: I am grateful.

15:53

John Lamont (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con): I welcome the opportunity to speak in the stage 1 debate on this important bill, because housing is probably the single biggest issue about which constituents in my Borders constituency contact me. I am sure that the same is true for many members.

What most concerns my constituents is that local people often cannot secure social housing in their communities, which is frustrating. People are forced to apply for and often take housing in the larger towns across the Borders, which might be several miles from the rest of their family and community and some distance from their place of work. Such an approach does not support local housing associations’ aims to encourage a cohesive community.

A few miles might not sound like a lot, but it is important to recognise that in rural communities such as we have in the Borders the difference between living in Eyemouth and living in Duns, Jedburgh or Earlston can be profound and significant for many people. Members should try asking a family from Hawick to live in Galashiels, or vice versa.

I believe that it is important, therefore, that the bill is amended to give social landlords the ability to include extra priority for applicants with a local connection. I am not saying that that should be an ace card that takes priority over every other factor. Clearly, those applicants who are homeless or who have a particular medical need must still be given the relevant priority. However, where all other things are equal, I believe that a local connection should be taken into account in the allocations process.

It is therefore my intention to lodge amendments at stage 2 to cover the issue. I fully accept that the concept of local will be different in each part of Scotland. What is local in the Borders will be completely different from how local might be defined in Glasgow. I hope that my amendment will ensure that the definition of local is sufficiently flexible to accommodate the different requirements of Scotland.

In my remaining time, I wish to mention the other concern that constituents have raised with me—the bill’s provisions to reform the site licensing system for mobile home sites with permanent residents. I represent several such sites, including Springwood village, near Kelso. I have been in correspondence with the minister about that issue and she is well aware of the concerns of both the site owner and the residents, so I will not repeat them now. However, the key point is that, although the intention may well be to target unscrupulous site owners who have sought to exploit weaknesses in the current licensing regime, the bill could have the opposite effect.

I can cite a couple of important examples, one of which is the proposal to have a three-year licence term for site licences. I know that the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee highlighted concerns that financial lenders may withdraw support for sites on the basis of the introduction of fixed-term licences. Many of my constituents have invested large sums of money in their homes, and that should not be undermined by the imposition of that fixed-term licence period. Like the committee, I would encourage the Scottish Government to work with the lending groups to clarify their views on the introduction of a fixed-term three-year licence. Given the concerns that have been raised with me, I will lodge an amendment at stage 2 to increase the fixed term to at least five years.

There are other aspects of the bill intended for site licensing that raise concerns, not least in relation to the fit-and-proper person test. I would be grateful if the minister could clarify in her closing remarks whether the Government looked at experiences in England in drafting those provisions.

There is much in the bill that we can support. There are areas that need significant improvement but, as my colleague Alex Johnstone explained, the fundamental flaw is the abolition of the right to buy. Many of my constituents will be deeply disappointed by the removal of that right, but I fully recognise that that is a minority view in this chamber.

15:57

Marco Biagi (Edinburgh Central) (SNP): I rise as the elected representative of 31,000 people whose roof over their head is paid for by a monthly bill to a private landlord. At 39 per cent, Edinburgh Central’s rental share has doubled in a decade and is the highest in Scotland.

The private rented sector has long been the choice of students, new migrants and those who work in transient occupations, but today it is also the only option for the families locked out of social housing by the plummeting council house numbers that were the effect of right to buy, and for the younger generations priced out of buying their own home by two decades of soaring house prices during which any concerns were drowned out by back-slapping from mid-market self-congratulations by those who were lucky enough to buy in less turbocharged times.

The new report that was published this month by Shelter confirms that just one in six people in the private rented sector actually wants to be there. How ironic it is that Thatcher’s dream of home ownership was followed by a housing crisis hangover and home ownership falling for the first time in living memory.

With little security of tenure, city centre communities have become more transient, and services long cherished by long-term residents have had to be changed—in the face of understandably deep sentiment—to reflect the replacement of families with children with houses in multiple occupation. I say that not as a criticism but as a recognition. Cities change and living patterns change; they always have and they always will. The question is how we adapt and manage.

We now have landlord registration, independent tenancy deposit protection and tenancy information packs, and the illegal premiums that were formerly charged by 59 out of 60 Edinburgh letting agents surveyed—charges to get on a waiting list or to even be considered for a flat—have been ended.

In a market failure, when supply is quite literally fixed and unmoving and demand is ever increasing, it is not just right but vital that we intervene to deal with the inevitable unfairness that the imbalance creates.

The private rented sector tribunal will speed up adjudication as well as, crucially, providing a specialist space and avoiding the need for tenants and landlords to go to the sheriff court for enforcement.

The landlord-tenant relationship is an intrinsically precarious one, which the landlord can end at any point with little warning. No wonder it is so easy for tenants to feel that they are living in someone else’s asset rather than their own home. No wonder, either, that private rented homes are often of the lowest quality and have the poorest maintenance, which has implications not least for neighbours.

Tenants have told me time and time again of their fears about trying to press their rights and struggling to find a lawyer willing to take on their case and of their apprehension at possibly being blacklisted as a troublemaker by other letting agents. For new arrivals to Scotland, it is especially hard. Giving local authorities the power to inspect and report on the repairing standard will help to address that. Giving the power to neighbours could help even more. I would be interested to hear the minister’s response to that suggestion from Edinburgh.

Regulation of letting agents means that good practice may become standard practice. If that is implemented well, the new tribunal will be out of a job and we can look forward to empty rooms and bored lawyers because the disputes will not emerge. Maybe that is too much to hope for, but we should all welcome the fact that letting agents, too, support that move because they also realise the importance of the industry being of high repute.

The bill’s provisions will help this country govern a private rented sector that is groaning under the weight of a massive expansion, but I believe that we must also look at the horizon and consider what we want the mix of housing ownership and tenure to look like in another decade’s time.

Yesterday, the Economy, Energy and Tourism Committee heard accounts of inequality in Scotland and the UK and was given a crucial reminder to consider both inequality of income and inequality of wealth. The implication in private renting is fairly straightforward: a private tenant has fewer assets than their landlord and the gap between them grows with every monthly rental payment.

In the short term, we must ensure that rights and responsibilities on both sides are enforced and continue the commendable progress in increasing the supply of social housing. However, let us all take a moment to imagine a society where the proportion of people renting the roof over their head has doubled again. Is that a future where equality is lower or higher and where communities are more cohesive or more atomised? Above all, is that the Scotland that, in another 10 years, we all want to live in?

The Presiding Officer: Thank you, Mr Biagi. We have a few seconds in hand, so if members want to take an intervention, we can give them a wee bit back.

16:03

Alex Rowley (Cowdenbeath) (Lab): As a councillor, the biggest case load that I ran always related to housing issues. As an MSP since January, I have found that the biggest case load that I have now, in dealing with constituents’ issues, also relates to housing. The fact is that we have a major housing crisis out there, which needs to be tackled. I will come back to that.

I welcome what is proposed in the bill. I congratulate Maureen Watt and the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee on the work that they have done, because the recommendations that they have made look to bring about improvement.

I was pleased to hear Jim Eadie talk about the Shelter Scotland proposals on removing from the bill the possibility of social landlords discriminating against future tenants based on age. In Fife, there are local letting policies and local area committees are able to determine them locally, which seems most appropriate. I would certainly support Jim Eadie in bringing forward that proposal.

On temporary accommodation and strengthening the existing protection for families with children, two Decembers ago, I heard from a family—a young mum and three kids—who were stuck in temporary accommodation above a pub for two months coming up to Christmas, which was totally unacceptable. I am told that that would not happen again in Fife, but we should ensure that it does not happen and that young families have the opportunity to question such things.

Picking up on Bob Doris’s point, we need ambition for housing. Rather than simply telling people that they are adequately housed when they are stuck in a flat, we need some flexibility. I hope that the minister will take on board Bob Doris’s valid points. I was born and brought up in a council house. For years, it was my mum’s ambition that we would move further down the street into a cottage in Kelly, and eventually we did. That was the reality then. There should be choice for council tenants, and not simply a position of last resort.

I welcome the proposals in the bill and the debate that has taken place today. With regard to the private sector, it is not enough for local authorities to have discretionary powers to intervene. I have dealt with many cases over the years involving private landlords. Although I have no doubt that there are good private landlords out there, many landlords leave their houses in an unacceptable state. I meet families who have to live in such conditions. Local authorities need the powers to act, and to recover any moneys from private landlords if they are forced to get the necessary work done on those houses. I appeal to the minister on that point.

Having said all that, the bottom line is that, when people come into my surgeries with housing issues, as they will tomorrow, I know that there is not enough housing to go around. That is why I support Shelter’s campaign for an additional 10,000 social rented houses to be built each year. It is important that we build houses—in Fife, the authority was able to work with tenants and raise the funds, and it now has a plan in place for 2,700 houses to be built in Fife over the next five years.
We need partnership with local authorities to build more houses. At the end of March 2013, there were 151,000 people on the waiting list in Scotland. Almost 32,000 households were accepted by the local authorities as homeless, and there were more than 18,000 children in households accepted as homeless. That is the crisis that we face in Scotland.

I know that the Scottish Government has set a target in its manifesto for 6,000 affordable homes, but it was originally talking about 6,000 social rented homes. That is a fundamental issue. We welcome the bill and some of its provisions, but we should imagine what could happen if we could build party unity and real ambition across Scotland to tackle the housing problems that exist. If we build new houses, it will create a chain and free up housing so that people can have their specific housing needs met.

We need to have an ambitious national housing programme for Scotland, sign up to Shelter’s campaign for 10,000 social rented houses per year and put in the resources to do that. We need to start moving forward and tackle housing needs in Scotland.

16:08 Sandra White (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP): I thank the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee for its scrutiny of the bill. Although I am not a member of that committee, I know that social and private rented housing make up the largest part of my and other MSPs’ constituency work, as members have said.

I will touch on a couple of areas. The debate so far has been very good, and there has not been a great deal of controversy. Unfortunately, however, Mary Fee set off on the wrong foot in her opening remarks, so I hope that I can correct her in my speech.

First, there is the ending of the right to buy. It is vital that we increase the supply of social housing, not only to safeguard the stock for future generations but to allow communities to stay together and flourish, which is what we all want. In my constituency, social housing is at a real premium. When pressured area status was introduced by Parliament, part of my Glasgow Kelvin constituency benefited greatly from that legislation.

I congratulate the Scottish Government on building—I hope that Mary Fee is listening to this—4,432 new council houses in the past six years. That can be compared with the six council houses—yes; six—that were built under the previous Labour-Liberal coalition. We have to be clear about that. In addition, 26,242 housing association houses have been built in the past six years under this Scottish Government. I think that there is a case for giving credit where credit is due, in that regard.

Mary Fee: Does Sandra White acknowledge that the 29 per cent cut in real terms in the housing budget in four years by this Government has had a massive detrimental impact on housing in this country?

Sandra White: I remind Mary Fee that I said that we should be honest and give credit where credit is due. [Interruption.] I think that Mary Fee should be honest about the fact that only six council houses were built in four years under the previous Labour-Liberal coalition.

Mary Fee: What about the 29 per cent cut in the housing budget over four years?

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): Can we have a little bit of courtesy, ladies?

Sandra White: I echo John Mason’s comments on local connections and housing policy. I assure John Lamont that areas in my Glasgow constituency, although they do not have countryside all around them, are not that different from the area that John Lamont represents. People from Partick and elsewhere in the constituency ask me about local connections because the communities want to stay together. As I have said before, continuity helps communities to flourish.

One of the biggest issues in my area is the private rented sector. Like the constituencies of Gordon MacDonald and Marco Biagi, my constituency, which is Glasgow Kelvin, contains many private sector landlords. I particularly welcome the proposal in the bill to transfer private housing cases from the sheriff court to first-tier tribunals. That proposal is also welcomed by the Scottish Association of Landlords, which has highlighted the problems in using courts for housing disputes.

I welcome the minister’s comments on local authorities being given more powers in respect of poor housing conditions in the private rented sector. There are many tenemental properties in my constituency, some of which are over 100 years old, and many have absentee landlords and are operating as HMOs, so it is really important that poor conditions are tackled. I welcome the minister’s comments about lodging amendments about electrical checks and carbon monoxide detectors.

With regard to areas in my constituency, I would echo what Marco Biagi said about city centre areas and other areas having to change through time. However, a certain amount of private sector housing belongs to people who speculated in property and bought during the property boom, but now cannot sell. They are operating as private landlords; many are absentee landlords. It is very difficult for people to get hold of them when a repair is needed, or for a meeting. It is good that we are looking at legislating on that, as well.

An area that the committee report did not mention, although I hope that we will look at it as the bill progresses, is the link between planning and HMOs. I know that that is a council issue, but it is brought up daily to me by many of my constituents. Further, an issue that might be thought of as quite small, but which is not regarded as that by people who live in tenements with HMO flats, is how the rooms in such properties are used—for example, a bedroom can become a living room or a kitchen. People whose bedrooms are below what was previously a bedroom in an HMO flat but which is now being used as a living room by four or five people can have horrendous experiences. That is not always the case, but it happens a lot.

I know that the two final issues that I have raised are not mentioned in the report, but I hope that they can be addressed as the bill goes through its stages. As I said, I am not a member of the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee, but I will certainly be keeping an eye on the bill and I hope that I can speak in the stage 2 and stage 3 debates.

16:14

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): As other members have said, there is not in the bill a great deal to which people object, but there are two broad exceptions to that, the first of which is the criteria around social housing provision, age and other factors. I hope to see those matters debated at stage 2, and to see some willingness from the Government to at least consider with an open mind any proposed amendments.

The second exception is, of course, about the right to buy. Notwithstanding the anguished cry of the thwarted libertarian on the Tory front bench, who seemed at times to be doing a passable parody of Alex Johnstone, I think that most of us are pretty happy to wave bye-bye to the right to buy. We know that its abolition is long overdue. The idea to register landlords was a good one, but it did not deliver everything that was promised of it. That has been partly because of lack of resourcing and enforcement, but in many cases it has been because tenants did not know what benefits landlord registration could give them—they did not necessarily know their rights. We must not repeat those mistakes with regulation of letting agents, so at stage 2 let us have amendments that provide clarity about what the code of practice can deliver.

I would also like the bill to address the discrimination against benefits recipients that we know is widespread, and I would like it to deal with the on-going problem whereby even reputable professional letting agents find ways of getting around the deposit protection scheme provisions. We know that practices such as pretending that a deposit is not being charged by calling it “increased advance rent” are widespread. The code of practice needs to close the loopholes that many letting agents are exploiting.

Even if we get the best possible code of practice, everything that I have said begs one final question: why on earth should tenants who rent from a landlord instead of a letting agent have to accept lower standards of service? If we are to achieve a high standard of service for tenants of letting agents, why should we not seek to achieve the same high standard of service for tenants of landlords? That way, we would ensure that private sector provision is what it needs to be for all the people in Scotland who depend on it.

16:20

Adam Ingram (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP): As deputy convener of the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee, I am pleased to contribute to today’s debate, albeit as a tail-end Charlie whose points have already been covered to a considerable extent by others.

The main headline measure in the bill is the abolition of the right to buy for social housing tenants, which has been warmly welcomed—so much so that we are asking the Government to reduce the lead-in period to abolition—by everyone except the Tories. I am pleased that the minister responded positively on that issue and I hope that we can encourage her to move even faster.

As the Law Society of Scotland points out in its briefing for the debate, over the years since 1980 the exercise of the right to buy has reduced the availability of good-quality affordable housing in the public sector. Some 455,000 properties have been taken out of the sector in that period and 500,000 tenants still have a right to buy. More than 185,000 people are on local authority waiting lists, and continuing depletion of the social housing stock is unsustainable in the face of that level of need.

Of course, abolition of the right to buy is not just about retaining what is left of social housing. It will also remove one of the main constraints on social landlords who seek to expand supply.

Thanks to this Scottish Government, nearly 31,000 social houses have been completed in the six years to 2013, despite the cuts and austerity imposed by Westminster. I appreciate what Alex Rowley said about the need to go even further, but we need to have the resources available for that purpose. I point out to others that the Scottish Government’s performance is significantly better than that of its Labour-led predecessor in the previous six years, when the Scottish budget grew in real terms year on year. The contrast is particularly remarkable when it comes to council house building: 4,400 new council houses were built by the Scottish National Party whereas, as Sandra White mentioned, just six were built under the last four years of the Labour-Lib Dem Administration.

James Kelly: I know that Adam Ingram wants to support his Government’s record, but we can do without such disingenuous claptrap. He ignores the fact that the Labour-Lib Dem Administration built thousands of housing association houses. If he compares the figures over the six-year periods, he will see that 144,000 houses were completed in Scotland between 2001 and 2006, compared with 112,000 in the past six years. Let us get the facts right.

Adam Ingram: As the First Minister is fond of saying, facts are chieals that winna ding. I suggest that Mr Kelly looks at completions of housing association houses. He will find that there have been more under an SNP Government than under Labour Administrations in previous years. Under independence and freedom from UK Treasury rules, we will be able to do much more.

The bill covers other important issues. Given the time that I have, I want to concentrate on just one, which is a change in the factors that may be considered when allocating social housing: specifically, the removal of the prohibition on taking age into account.

The measure was requested by the Chartered Institute of Housing Scotland to allow landlords to deal with specific circumstances by being able to discriminate appropriately. Examples included excluding young people from multistorey tower blocks that have a large proportion of older tenants with associated support groups and social activities specifically suited to older residents, or limiting allocations to younger age groups in particular areas where there is already a preponderance of young or vulnerable people in order to create a more balanced community. The measure is supported by the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations, which has emphasised that age and lifestyle are critical in developing sustainable communities.

On the other hand, there is significant opposition to such a change.

Jim Hume: Will the member give way?

Adam Ingram: Not at the moment.

Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People believes that a number of vulnerable groups, including young disabled people, care leavers and young single parents, are likely to be disproportionately affected. According to research, housing allocated to young people on leaving care has often been unsuitable and in deprived areas, where the young people have been surrounded by adverse social conditions caused by, among other things, drugs, alcohol and violence. Moreover, although overt discrimination based on age is unlawful under the Equality Act 2010, that more subtle form of discrimination can and does operate against housing allocation that is entirely fair and based purely on need.

The committee has identified this as a key issue and has called on the Scottish Government to monitor the application of this provision in practice. Personally, I want stronger safeguards to be built into the bill and I encourage the minister to work with the commissioner and bodies such as Shelter to achieve that objective through appropriate amendments to the bill at future stages.

16:27

Sarah Boyack (Lothian) (Lab): I very much welcome the debate on this bill and in particular look forward to the raft of amendments that have been suggested by members from across the chamber. I particularly welcome the practical suggestions that committee members who have scrutinised the bill in detail have made. Such amendments will go a long way towards strengthening the bill.

The challenge, however, is that the bill might not be enough. Having reflected on members’ comments about housing allocation policies and sufficient housing for young people, people with disabilities and—crucially—the older people who are going to comprise more and more of our population and who have every right to live in safe, sustainable communities, I think that the key problem is the lack of housing choice, the lack of appropriate and affordable properties and the lack of community access. A lot of the comments that have been made this afternoon about local access, age and antisocial behaviour come down to a lack of decent housing for people.

As a result, I believe that various parts of the bill need to be strengthened. We need not just to build more houses but to ensure that we support the management of the housing sector. At the heart of this issue is the affordability of housing and a lack of choice of housing type, and that is why, as members across the chamber have pointed out, lack of supply and affordability are such crucial issues. The bill has to be seen in the context of the need for more housing.

Although there is a crucial need for affordable housing, we also need private housing that is for sale; indeed, Marco Biagi mentioned the lack of choice in that respect. A lot of people in Edinburgh live in the private rented sector simply because there is no affordable housing to buy or rent, and the city itself needs properly designated social housing provision.

On James Kelly’s intervention on Adam Ingram, which I believe he was quite right to make, I point out that in the first eight years of the Scottish Parliament a huge amount of time was put into improving the quality of social and council housing as well as building social housing; indeed, the best part of £1 billion was invested in bringing Glasgow’s council housing stock up to quality. Such moves were crucial and were deliberate priorities in the Parliament’s first eight years.

I want to focus on a couple of the sections of the bill that contain some helpful suggestions that need to be strengthened.

Like all MSPs from Edinburgh and the Lothians, I want to focus on improving the private rented sector. I have campaigned for that for years, and I am delighted that there are now provisions in the bill to deal with the issue. However, I just want to ensure that they go far enough.

I particularly want to focus on the comments that others have made about flexibility for councils with regard to paybacks in situations in which the council has taken up the missing share when residents have got together and come up with a proper plan for investment in their tenement or communally owned building, using the law of the tenement, but some people have opted out. We need to ensure that we are able to chase absent owners effectively. A little bit more work needs to be done to ensure that that part of the bill is effective.

The flexibility issue is crucial. For people who live in commonly owned property, the point is not to invest every 30 years; people in such properties probably need to invest every five, 10, 15 and 20 years. It is about regular repairs and maintenance. Edinburgh has had huge problems due to a lack of maintenance, and who happens to own a property when repairs are required is a lottery. We need to give all owners the capacity to improve their properties and we need to make the situation fair. Councils are crucial in that regard. The point that Malcolm Chisholm made about providing local authorities with a pot of money to get things going was good. That would certainly get things moving and would tackle the backlog that exists in key parts of Scotland.

Quality is an issue in the private rented sector, and several members talked about that. Energy efficiency is another real issue. In yesterday’s Labour Party debate on fuel poverty, the private rented sector was identified as a key issue. We passed the Climate Change (Scotland) Act 2009 unanimously five years ago. New housing is of good quality in terms of environmental efficiency. The social rented sector is leading the way in terms of energy efficiency in its new and its existing stock. However, the private sector is missing out, and that is not right. That means that people who are saving up to buy a house or are waiting for social housing to become available are penalised. Given the rises in energy costs, those people are not getting a good deal. We need to focus on that key issue, which needs to be tackled. It is not currently in the bill, and I would be keen to hear from the minister about whether she is prepared to work with us on amendments to improve the situation in that regard.

We need to ensure that we get the right amount of housing stock and we need to get stable, mixed communities.

On the point about council house sales, I note that housing associations are now looking at staircasing and enabling people to take part ownership. Opportunities around co-operative housing are not being fully explored at the moment, and I would be keen to see more of that. However, the delivery of access to ownership of houses was not brought about by giving people the right to buy their council houses. We can see that in those communities where, although the first generation benefited from buying their properties, many houses have been sold off and are now run by private landlords. That gets us back to the point about improving the quality of housing, with a particular focus on the private rented sector. That is something that we could do in this Parliament. If we can work together to get the detail right in that regard at stage 2, that would greatly strengthen the bill and mean that it is the bill that it needs to be, rather than the bill that it currently is.

16:33

Alex Johnstone: This has been a constructive debate. It will be remembered for a number of good reasons, not the least of which is the fact that it included a mention of Margaret Thatcher, which is increasingly rare in this chamber. That mention was not even made by me; it is always nice to have a little support.

When I spoke earlier, I, as did the others who opened for their parties, talked largely about the bill itself. However, as the debate has progressed, we have moved slightly to talk about the backdrop against which the bill appears. That is not always the right thing to do in a debate, but I think that the debate has been constructive and has taken us forward in a positive way. I will comment on a number of the speeches that have been made as I develop my ideas against the criteria that have been set out.

Marco Biagi, whose speech was a sound argument for private ownership if ever there was one, talked about the shape of the private rented market. Too often, we have concentrated exclusively on the social rented sector and the contribution of the public and private sectors to that. There is more to the rental sector in Scotland. In cities like Edinburgh and Aberdeen—closer to home, for me—there is a high-end rental market of extremely high-quality properties that are rented at extremely high prices. There is an interesting shape to the rental market that we should take into account when we think about what is going on in some of our cities.

The notion of social rented housing that we take so seriously today was created, in effect, by the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001. Prior to that, we thought about public housing provision slightly differently. The problem that we have in the marketplace is that there is no middle to the rental market; there is the high end and the social rented sector, but virtually nothing in between. There is a significant lack of mid-market rental opportunity in Scotland today.

Alex Rowley spoke at length about how he would like to see 10,000 social rented houses being built every year in Scotland. I would like to see that kind of housing availability in Scotland, but I would not argue that we need to build 10,000 social rented houses every year. I suspect that, if there was a middle to the rental market, many people who currently occupy houses in the social rented sector would choose to move up into that rental opportunity and pay slightly higher rents for a different type of property. In doing so, they would free up capacity in the social rented sector. It is therefore vital that the Government consider, against the background of the bill, how it might stimulate investment and development in that sector. There is private or institutional money ready to be invested, if local authorities have the confidence to make progress on that.

Patrick Harvie: If the issue of security of tenure in the private rented sector had been addressed, there might just be something in what Alex Johnstone says. However, at present, what on earth would possess people to choose to move from the social rented sector, if that is available to them, to a sector in which they could without reason be given a month's notice to quit?

Alex Johnstone: The problem, which is deep-seated, is that there is mistrust of the private rented sector. Scotland is full of positive private landlords who are willing to work closely with their tenants to achieve their objectives. I was hypothesising about how we might get private or institutional investment in public housing in the mid-market sector, and the only way in which such investment can ever be secure is by having good houses with good tenants in them. A good house with a good tenant in it is worth more to an investor than one without a tenant. As a consequence, there is a vested interest in supporting long-term tenancies.

I will move on. We had the usual argument about who in the past 10 years built the most houses. I have acted as referee in that argument before and I am going to do so again, because I do not like to see people taking advantage of each other. The truth is that, even if Labour built only six council houses, Labour and its Liberal Democrat allies were in government in Scotland at a time when there was a flourishing of housing associations. A huge number of houses were built, but they were built by housing associations; it is foolish of us to discount the effort that went into that. So, no—there were not only six social houses built in Scotland in that time; there were many, many more built.

The SNP claims consistently that, in government, it has built thousands of council houses. However, it is more correct to say that the councils built the houses and the Government has, if anything, by cutting the housing budget undermined the councils that would want to build.

Marco Biagi: How many council houses would those councils have built without the reforms to the right to buy?

Alex Johnstone: How long is a piece of string?

I thank Marco Biagi for bringing me back to the right to buy. During the debate, we have heard time and again the accusation that the right to buy is depleting the number of houses that are available for social rent. I argue against that, and I will cite the figures on which I base that.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: You have 45 seconds in which to do so.

Alex Johnstone: The truth is that, of the 1,500 houses that were sold in the last full year for which information is available, only 347 were sold under the modernised right-to-buy process. However, 1,173 houses were sold under the pre-2001 preserved right-to-buy process. Those were people who had been tenants of their existing properties for more than 12 years—many for significantly longer. I maintain that those who exercised the right to buy were long-term tenants who would, had they not decided to buy, have remained long-term tenants. Therefore, houses will not be freed up by ending the right to buy. As a result of the proposed change, we will see instead a rush to buy from people who see a right being taken away from them and, by this Government's criteria, that would be counterproductive.

16:41

James Kelly (Rutherglen) (Lab): I welcome the opportunity to close the debate on behalf of the Labour Party. I thank the committee, the witnesses and the clerks for the work that they put into the production of the stage 1 report that we are debating.

There is no doubt that Alex Rowley and Patrick Harvie are absolutely correct: the biggest housing issue is the lack of supply. A housing crisis exists. Members have cited statistics about the lowest number of completions since 1947 and the rising housing waiting lists, but the issue is not just a question of the statistics. All members must have seen a big increase in cases related to housing and a lack of supply coming through in their surgeries. If members do not acknowledge that, they are not facing up to the truth about housing.

The reality is that the SNP Government has cut housing budgets by 30 per cent and cut the HAG levels. I know that those have been restored slightly, but housing associations say that the HAG funding levels are inadequate, and that undermines their ability to build houses in their areas.

Bob Doris: I will not trade figures with the member, but he makes the point that additional resources can achieve additional housing so, rather than espousing rhetoric, will he identify the additional resources that Labour would commit to deliver more housing, so that we have something to consider?

James Kelly: The member's point is absolutely valid. I have said before that the SNP, rather than spending millions of pounds on supporting the referendum process, should spend the money on purposeful house building in our communities.

My other point is a serious one. The onus is on us all to look at alternative funding mechanisms for councils and housing associations. The funding will not all come from the Scottish Government budget. For example, pension funds in certain sectors have been looked at as an opportunity to provide house-building programmes. The minister should examine that proposal. However, the minister must acknowledge that supply is an issue.
We have said that we will work with the SNP but we must first address that substantive issue.

There is not a lot in the bill with which necessarily to disagree, although I agree with members that it could be strengthened in areas. However, that will not address the housing crisis. Jim Eadie said that abolishing the right to buy was the centrepiece of the bill, and I do not oppose that provision. However, if that will only stop 1,500 houses a year from leaving the social housing sector, it will have a minimal impact on addressing the social housing waiting list, which has 151,000 people on it. There are big issues to be addressed in that regard.

Marco Biagi charted the rise of the private rented sector. In recent times, because of the difficulty in accessing mortgages and the lack of proper social housing, many people have had to turn to the private rented sector, whose share of the market has increased from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. As Marco Biagi pointed out, many people in the private rented sector do not want to be there; they have been driven to that position and would rather have the opportunity to own their own home.

There are consequential issues. There is a much bigger role for letting agents. As Bob Doris pointed out, there are responsible letting agents, but many of us come across letting agents who are not quite as scrupulous and responsible. In providing for the regulation of letting agents, the bill could be important, but it must be robust and it must have teeth. There must be a process whereby we can see that letting agents are accredited when they go on to the register. Alex Johnstone acknowledged that it is a good scheme, as it has the support of the industry. I think that the test is whether it has the support of tenants in our communities. The scheme will have the proper support of tenants only if they see it as transparent and if it is possible to take action against rogue letting agents and have them removed from the register.

The other issue around the private rented sector is rent levels. Mary Fee mentioned the fact that, in certain areas, rents in the private sector are double what they are in the social sector, and members mentioned the problem around tenure. The issue for people in the private rented sector is that, if they get into accommodation and feel reasonably secure in the area, but the landlord suddenly puts the rent up, they have very little recourse, and they might not have the option to move elsewhere. There is an issue around rent levels, which we should examine at stage 2.

Mark Griffin mentioned antisocial behaviour, which is a big issue in a lot of communities. There are provisions in the bill to address it, but it remains to be seen whether they are strong enough for some and fair enough for others. We will need to monitor the issue as the bill progresses through stage 2.

John Mason made some very reasonable points about the Scottish Housing Regulator. Like John Mason, I detect unease from housing associations about the role of the regulator. Not all aspects of that can be dealt with under the bill, but there is unease about the transparency with which the Housing Regulator is operating and some of the interventions that the regulator is making. If there is any ability under the bill to ensure more transparency and to build more confidence in the role of the regulator, we should pursue that.

The proposals around age have proved to be among the most controversial aspects of the bill. Allocation policies are always difficult in sensitive areas. If there are to be blocks of housing, with pensioners together, for instance, where they feel stronger and more secure in their communities—to refer to Malcolm Chisholm’s example—there is a case for using an allocation policy. However, there is a fear that the way in which the proposal is used could unfairly discriminate against young people. We should be wary of that.

Last Monday, a family came into my surgery who stay in a one-bedroom flat. There are four adults staying there, so it is clearly an overcrowding situation, and they are struggling to find alternative accommodation. That is not an unusual case for me to deal with in my constituency. Many people struggle to access adequate social housing and cannot afford to purchase a private house. That is the substantial issue in housing that we need to address.

We will support the general principles of the bill at stage 1 and try to strengthen it at stage 2, but we need substantive action to address the housing crisis in Scotland if we are to move the issue forward.

16:50

Margaret Burgess: I agree with others that this has been a good debate with many constructive contributions from across the chamber. I listened to all of them and, as I said, I am still looking at how I will take the bill forward at stage 2. It is also encouraging that the lead committee’s endorsement of the bill has been reflected in the debate. I will not be able to respond to all the comments and points that were made, but I hope to address them all in great detail at stage 2.

I want to start by looking at the context. When Mary Fee spoke, she suggested that the Scottish Government has no vision for housing. The bill is part of and fits in with our housing vision, which is that all people in Scotland live in a high-quality home that they can afford and which is suitable to their needs. That is set out in our “Homes Fit for the 21st Century: The Scottish Government’s Strategy and Action Plan for Housing in the Next Decade: 2011-2020”. It is important that I put the matter in that context.

There has also been criticism that we are not building enough homes and that fewer homes are being built now than previously. I really have to nail that one. Since 2007, the Scottish Government has built more council houses than the previous Administration did. It has also built more housing association housing than the previous Administration did, and we continue to do that.

I take the points that James Kelly and Alex Johnstone made—of course we have to look at ways of getting more money into the housing sector, and we are doing that. We are looking at pension funds, and we have already had a local authority announce that it is using them for housing. That work is going on already, and it is important that I say that.

Sarah Boyack: The point that I made is that it is not just about building houses. In the first eight years of the Parliament, it was about the quality of houses, particularly in Glasgow. That took up the best part of £1 billion, and it was a clear priority on our part.

Margaret Burgess: Yes. Well, I think that standards of housing are higher now.

I will move on to address some points that were made during the debate, but I felt that I had to put that in context, given what was said.

A number of members talked about the mandatory register of letting agents. I have made it clear that my intention is that the system will have teeth and we will enforce it. There is a three-year period for registration, but any problems that arise, even in the first year, can be considered a breach and people can be removed from the list. It is not the case that letting agents will be there for three years and, at the end of that time, a decision will be taken on whether they are acting appropriately or not. I want to be clear on that.

I want to say a bit about mobile home site licensing, as I did not get that into my opening remarks because I was running out of time. John Lamont mentioned the issue and so did Maureen Watt. We will lodge an amendment at stage 2 to change the terms of the licence from three years to five. We have listened to the industry and the arguments that have been made on that and we intend to lodge an amendment at stage 2. We also intend to lodge an amendment to make it clear that permanent residents can stay on a site if the site owner loses or does not renew their licence.

A number of members highlighted the importance of preventing enforcement costs from being passed on to residents, and that was raised by the committee at the meeting that I attended. It is certainly not the Government’s intention for costs to be passed on in that way, so we intend to explore how we can amend the bill at stage 2 to ensure that it cannot happen.

A number of members talked about antisocial behaviour, which we all recognise is a problem. All MSPs have had issues of antisocial behaviour raised at their surgeries. It can be a sensitive issue because we have to get the right balance between allocating houses to tenants who might need support and ensuring that people can live peacefully in their own homes. As I have said, the bill will not resolve antisocial behaviour problems, but it will give landlords a tool for using the tenancy regime to manage effectively or deal better with those problems. That is what we hope to achieve. We are listening to what is being said; our stakeholders tell us that the provision will be useful to them, which we welcome.

John Mason and James Kelly talked about the regulator. I understand the issues that were raised and I know the feeling in some associations about the regulator. However, we decided in 2010 that the regulator should act independently of ministers. People may wish to raise such issues, but I repeat that they must be taken to the regulator first. It would not be appropriate to address those matters in the bill, because that would require wide consultation and an open discussion. I understand the points that have been made, but the bill is not the place to deal with them.

Malcolm Chisholm and Patrick Harvie said that the landlord registration scheme is not as effective as it should be. I believe that the scheme provides sufficient powers for local authorities to undertake enforcement and tackle landlords who are not operating effectively. That is happening in some areas.

Patrick Harvie: Notwithstanding the problems that some local authorities have with the resources that are available to enforce the landlord registration scheme, will the minister give a clear and principled reason why tenants of landlords should accept a lower standard of provision or service than tenants of letting agents get? What is the reason for the disparity?

Margaret Burgess: As I said in my opening speech, I have listened to what has been said across the chamber on all the issues, which will be considered before we talk about matters in detail at stage 2. Today’s debate is about the principles, but I understand the point that Patrick Harvie makes. I expect the private sector regime to be targeted and used more effectively.
Patrick Harvie talked about people saying, “No DSS,” and so on. I make it clear that we expect the code of practice to cover all those ethical issues, financial issues and how a letting agent operates. We hope that it will be publicised, so that people know about it, expect letting agents to operate under it and let us know when they do not. The good agents are keen to let us know of agents that are not operating in the way that we expect.

A number of members who represent Edinburgh—Marco Biagi, Jim Eadie, Sarah Boyack and Malcolm Chisholm—have talked about the City of Edinburgh Council’s requests in relation to the repairing standard. Some of the proposals that are being made have not been consulted on. We believe that there are existing powers to tackle some of the issues that have been raised. I am more than happy to discuss that when we get into the detail of the bill.

Today and yesterday, Mary Fee has talked about energy efficiency. We have energy efficiency measures for the social rented sector and it is right for it to lead the way. We do not need to put in the bill anything specific on energy efficiency measures in the private sector, because we can deal with that under the Climate Change (Scotland) Act 2009. Mary Fee is well aware that we have set up a working group to look at the subject, on which we intend to consult in 2015.

Mary Fee: Will the minister take an intervention?

Margaret Burgess: I will take a brief intervention.

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): No—you will not; you are in your last 30 seconds.

Margaret Burgess: I am sorry; I will follow up on the issue later.

If I am in my last few seconds, I will finish by saying that I am heartened by the support that we have had across the chamber for the bill. I look forward to further discussions in more detail as parliamentary scrutiny of the bill continues.

Decision Time

17:00

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): There are two questions to be put as a result of today’s business. The first question is, that motion S4M-09749, in the name of Margaret Burgess, on the Housing (Scotland) Bill, be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Adamson, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christain (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Baille, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baker, Richard (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (Scotland South) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Bigi, Marco (Edinburgh South) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brown, Keith (Glasgow and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Campbell, Roderick (North East Fife) (SNP)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Dundee and Arbroath) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Eddie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Cathcart, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Graham, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
Fedden, Michael (Kirkcaldy and Cowdenbeath) (SNP)
Geddes, Elspeth (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Cathcart, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Graham, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)

MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosch, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Malik, Hanzala (Glasgow) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDonald, Mark (Aberdeen Donside) (SNP)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgo) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Pearson, Graeme (South Scotland) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Simpson, Dr Richard (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Surgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

Abstentions
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Fraser, Murdo (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Goldie, Annabel (Wester Ross) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)

The Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 97, Against 0, Abstentions 13.

Motion agreed to,

That the Parliament agrees to the general principles of the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

The next question is, that motion S4M-09578, in the name of John Swinney, on the Housing (Scotland) Bill financial resolution, be agreed to.

Motion agreed to,

That the Parliament, for the purposes of any Act of the Scottish Parliament resulting from the Housing (Scotland) Bill, agrees to—

(a) any expenditure of a kind referred to in Rule 9.12.3(b) of the Parliament's Standing Orders arising in consequence of the Act, and

(b) any charge or payment in relation to which Rule 9.12.4 of the Standing Orders applies arising in consequence of the Act.
May 2014

Dear Maureen,

HOUSING (SCOTLAND) BILL 2013: STAGE 1 REPORT

I am grateful to the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee for its thorough Stage 1 Report on the Housing (Scotland) Bill and for its conclusion that the Bill provides a package of measures which will contribute to the improvement of housing in the social, private rented and owner-occupied sectors.

I am pleased to respond to the recommendations and comments in Committee’s report. I have set out the Scottish Government’s position on each of the recommendations in the Annex attached to this letter.

When I gave evidence to the Committee on 12 March I indicated that I was sympathetic to proposals by the Glasgow and West of Scotland Forum of Housing Associations in relation to Registered Social Landlord (RSL) group structures and tenant ballots. I announced a four week consultation on the proposals which ended on 9 April. I was grateful for the 43 responses to that, 27 of which support the Forum’s proposal. This essentially argues that a RSL becoming a subsidiary of a group structure is of equivalent significance as a change of landlord and should require a tenant ballot. I therefore intend to bring forward a stage 2 amendment to the Housing Bill to give effect to this proposal. The consultation analysis, along with the responses of those organisations that have given their agreement, will be published on the Scottish Government website in early May.

I am grateful to you and your Committee, and to the other Committees which took evidence on the Bill, for the very thorough and constructive Stage 1 reports which they have provided. I hope you will agree, in turn, that the Scottish Government’s response is a positive one which addresses the points that you have raised. I believe that the process of dialogue and debate which has taken place during the evidence sessions from January to March and during the Stage 1 debate on 24 April, along with the detailed consideration of our proposals at Stage 2 will result in a better Act. Most importantly it will safeguard the interests of consumers, support improved quality and deliver better outcomes for communities across all housing tenures in Scotland.

I am copying this letter to the Convenors of the other Committees which considered the Bill.

Kind regards

Margaret Burgess

MARGARET BURGESS
The majority of the Committee shares the views of those who provided evidence that the abolition of RTB will bring significant benefits to the social housing sector. The retention of social housing stock moving forward will assist social landlords in their strategic and financial planning and contribute to the maintenance of sustainable social housing supply levels. The majority of the Committee therefore welcomes and supports the provisions in the Bill which will end the right to buy in Scotland.

The Scottish Government welcomes the widespread support of those who gave evidence and of the Committee for the provisions which will end the right to buy in Scotland. It shares the view that ending right to buy will be of significant benefit to the social housing sector.

The majority of the Committee therefore recommends that this should be reduced to a period of one year from the date on which the Bill receives Royal Assent and calls on the Scottish Government to bring forward an amendment at Stage 2 to achieve this.

The Scottish Government recognises that the majority of stakeholders who gave evidence to the Committee thought that a three year notice period from the date of Royal Assent was too long and notes the Committee’s recommendation. The Scottish Government has accepted that the notice period should be reduced so that social housing stock can be protected from sale sooner. The Scottish Government will therefore bring forward an amendment at Stage 2 to change the notice period to two years from the date of Royal Assent. It considers that this two year period is fair and reasonable for the purposes of the European Convention on Human Rights and to give tenants time to consider their options and obtain appropriate financial advice if they want to exercise their right to buy. A one year period would limit the opportunity for tenants to consider what is appropriate for their circumstances and to take proper advice on that.
40. The Committee agrees that this is essential to avoid any confusion arising amongst tenants in relation to this significant legislative change and calls on the Scottish Government to produce appropriate guidance material, facilitate its distribution via social landlords and make it available online.

The Scottish Government agrees that it is essential to avoid confusion amongst tenants. Officials have been engaging with tenant groups on the implications of the policy since the proposal to end right to buy was announced in July 2013, and this engagement will continue. The Scottish Government intends to publish guidance material once the Bill has been passed at stage 3. It will ensure that this is made available online, and work with social landlords to determine the best way of distributing this guidance and of notifying tenants of the change in their tenancy conditions.

Part 2 – Social Housing

Reasonable preference

53. The Committee accepts that it will be a matter for landlords to assess housing needs in the manner suggested by the Minister. However, it agrees with the suggestion made by some stakeholders that further clarification on the types of “unmet housing needs” the Scottish Government envisages being covered by section 3 would be beneficial. The Committee therefore calls on the Scottish Government to provide further information on its policy intentions in this area and to indicate how it will reflect these in associated guidance.

The Scottish Government recognises that some stakeholders have asked for further clarification of unmet housing needs. The Bill defines unmet housing needs as being where the social landlord considers the person to have housing needs which are not capable of being met by housing options which are available. A landlord will consider the alternative housing options that are accessible to the applicant. This could include consideration of, for example, whether the applicant already owns property or whether their needs could be met in their current property with suitable adaptations. The Scottish Government will issue guidance on the priority of allocation of social housing following consultation with stakeholders.

54. The Committee is content with what are regarded by stakeholders as modest but beneficial changes to the “reasonable preference” criteria which will provide social landlords with greater flexibility when allocating houses.

55. However, the Committee calls on the Scottish Government to provide information on the range of circumstances it expects to be addressed by this provision and to indicate whether it intends to provide guidance to support its implementation.

The Scottish Government welcomes the Committee’s response to the changes to reasonable preference. As set out above the Scottish Government will issue guidance on the priority of allocation of social housing following consultation with stakeholders.

Allocation of Social Housing

57. The Committee requests that the Scottish Government provides details in its formal response to this report on how it intends to address these specific issues.

The Scottish Government notes the points that have been made by Inclusion Scotland about monitoring the impact of the changes to reasonable preference and consultation on allocation policies.

Under the provisions of the Bill, landlords must have regard to Scottish Government guidance on priority of allocation of social housing in drawing up their own allocation policies. The guidance will include advice on how landlords should consult all groups that will be affected by their allocation policies, including disabled people and their representatives. The Scottish Government will consult stakeholders, including organisations representing disabled people, as part of the process of developing the guidance.

On monitoring, the Scottish Government will deliver the commitments it made as part of its Equality Impact Assessment of the Bill and will:

- gather and review relevant statistical information annually or when new data becomes available;
- review the reports that the Scottish Housing Regulator will publish on how social landlords are performing against the Scottish Social Housing Charter; and
- undertake further engagement with stakeholders including social housing tenants, applicants, landlords and equality groups to gather their views within three years of provisions coming into effect.

Age as a factor in housing allocation

70. The Committee notes the concerns of many stakeholders that this measure has potential to be discriminatory towards certain age groups, particularly young people. In this regard, it is reassured that councils must be seen to be accountable and justify objectively the decisions they take in relation to allocations. They will also be required to carry out equality impact assessments when developing their allocations policies.
71. However, the Committee considers it to be essential that the application of the provision is fully monitored to ensure that the provisions are applied appropriately and that there is no consequential discrimination against any age group. It therefore calls on the Scottish Government to consider how such monitoring might be carried out in an effective and consistent manner across the social housing sector and to provide details in its response to this report.

The Scottish Government acknowledges the Committee’s concern that this provision should be fully monitored and that there should be no consequential discrimination against any age group. It has considered this request very carefully. The Scottish Government is concerned that such full monitoring could place an undue burden on landlords. In addition the strong protections provided by the Equality Act 2010 would limit the use that landlords could make of the additional flexibility that section 5 aimed to provide.

Having considered these issues, the stage 1 evidence from stakeholders and additional evidence provided to Scottish Ministers, the Scottish Government has decided to bring forward an amendment at stage 2 to remove section 5 of the Bill. The Scottish Government recognises that landlords need to have flexibility in managing their stock. It will work with landlords and other stakeholders to develop guidance on the allocation of social housing with the aim of providing advice on the flexibility that exists in the legal framework for allocations.

Ownership of property as a factor in allocation

78. The Committee notes and agrees with the broad support for this additional tool to assist social landlords in increasing flexibility in allocations.

79. However, it notes the suggestion by Homeless Action Scotland that a further circumstance should be added at section 6(2) to cover issues around negative equity. The Committee also notes the examples provided by North Ayrshire Council on the potential for there to be unintended consequences of the application of this provision, either in terms of excluding those who may have an accessible housing need or in having a disproportionately negative impact on older people. It calls on the Scottish Government to comment on these issues in its response to this report.

This provision allows social landlords to consider current and past property ownership of an applicant or member of their household, subject to some exceptions, when deciding on their priority for social housing. However landlords will have the option not to use this flexibility if they do not wish to take home ownership into account. In the situations described by Homeless Action Scotland and North Ayrshire, landlords would have the ability to consider individual cases and may decide to allocate social housing in circumstances where the applicant owns property. The Scottish Government intends to issue guidance on the priority of allocations of social housing which is expected to include further advice on taking property ownership into account in the allocation of social housing. Stakeholders will consulted as part of that process.

Determination of minimum period for application to remain in force

85. The Committee is content with the provisions at section 7. However, it agrees with the comments made by some stakeholders that clear guidance is necessary on the detail of how these should be implemented and the range of factors that social landlords will require to take into account when considering suspensions. It therefore calls on the Scottish Government to provide details of its intended approach in producing guidance on these matters.

86. The Committee also calls on the Scottish Government to explain in its response to this report how it intends to ensure that those whose applications are suspended will be provided with access to information on the appeal process, including details of where they can obtain appropriate advice and support in making an appeal should this be required.

The Scottish Government notes the Committee’s views that clear guidance is needed to provide more detail on how the provisions in section 7 should be implemented. The Scottish Government intends to issue guidance on suspensions. This will include advice to landlords on ensuring that they provide information to applicants or tenants, who have been suspended from receiving an offer of housing, about the appeal process and where they can access advice and support.

Short Scottish Secure Tenancy

97. The Committee notes the support for the proposals at this Part of the Bill and it agrees that they will provide a further useful tool to allow social landlords to address antisocial behaviour issues.

98. However, the Committee also acknowledges the calls from some witnesses for further clarity around the definition of antisocial behaviour as it applies to this Part of the Bill. It agrees that the production of appropriate good practice guidance which would provide examples of different types of behaviour which could be taken into account would be extremely useful to social landlords. It calls on the Scottish Government to commit to the production of such guidance.
The Scottish Government intends to issue guidance for social landlords in order to provide further clarity around the definition of antisocial behaviour as it applies to this part of the Bill. This guidance will include examples of the different types of behaviour which may be considered antisocial and details of the range of other factors which the landlord will need to consider when determining whether a Short Scottish Secure Tenancy for antisocial behaviour is appropriate. These factors are likely to include things like, the level and quality of evidence of antisocial behaviour and the other options available to social landlords to help address the behaviour.

105. The Committee notes that there is general support for these provisions. However, it would welcome information from the Scottish Government on whether it intends to produce guidance on how it expects them to be applied in practice. More specifically, the Committee calls on the Scottish Government to provide it with a response to the concerns raised in evidence that the provision at section 14(b) might potentially disadvantage unpaid carers.

The Scottish Government intends to issue guidance which will describe the law that landlords must follow around assignations, subletting, joint tenancies and successions and how we intend this will work in practice. The Government does not consider that the provision at section 14(b) might potentially disadvantage unpaid carers. Whilst the Bill introduces a 12 month qualifying period before partners (spouses, civil partners and cohabitees), family members and carers could succeed to a property, a landlord has the ability (subject to how it frames its allocation rules) to determine that a person merits the allocation of a tenancy where they do not qualify to succeed to it. However where there is a qualifying person, the landlord cannot take the right to succeed away from them.

113. The Committee agrees that these provisions will provide a helpful tool to help social landlords to deal more effectively with those tenants who have been convicted of serious criminal acts or antisocial behaviour. However, the Committee considers it essential that, in producing guidance covering the implementation of these measures, an emphasis is placed on the importance of balancing the rights of both tenants and landlords.

The Scottish Government intends to issue guidance for social landlords around the implementation of the measures in the Bill which allow social landlords to consider using the new simplified the eviction process for tenants who have been convicted of serious criminal acts or antisocial behaviour. The planned guidance will emphasise the importance of balancing the rights of both tenants and landlords and is intended to assist landlords in determining the type of cases where it may or may not be reasonable to use the new simplified eviction process.
114. It also recommends that to assist social landlords and other stakeholders such guidance should provide further clarity on the types of convictions that might lead to an eviction. The Scottish Government is asked to provide details of its intentions in relation to the production of guidance on these provisions in its response to this report.

The Scottish Government intends to provide further clarity around the types of conviction that might lead to an eviction in guidance. The Government will consult landlords, tenant groups and other appropriate organisations in the development of the guidance and will publish this guidance before bringing these provisions into force.

Initial tenancies

124. The Committee notes the support for initial tenancies amongst some stakeholders, particularly local authorities. However, it is of the view that there is no clear indication that it would be appropriate to introduce them at this time. The Committee notes that the Minister has not ruled out considering the initial tenancies proposal further at some future stage and considers that this may be appropriate once the other measures in the Bill designed to assist in dealing with antisocial behaviour have been implemented and their impact fully assessed.

The Scottish Government welcomes the Committee's views on its approach to initial tenancies.

Part 3 – Private Rented Housing

Transfer to First-tier Tribunal

133. The Committee, having heard considerable evidence to endorse the transfer to the First-tier Tribunal of private sector cases, supports these provisions in the Bill. However, the Committee requests further information on the operation of the tribunal when it becomes available.

The Scottish Government welcomes the widespread support expressed for the transfer of civil private rented sector cases from the sheriff to a tribunal. This will enable greater specialism and access to justice for those cases where we have heard that both landlords and tenants can be reluctant to use the courts. The Scottish Government understands the level of interest shown in the operational detail of the tribunal and will provide the Committee with more information on this issue when it is available.
146. The Committee supports the approach being taken by the Scottish Government in respect of representation at PRS tribunals. However, now that the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill has completed its parliamentary procedure, the Committee requests that the Scottish Government undertakes to inform the Committee of any policy developments it takes forward in the area of access to, and representation at, private rented sector tribunals.

The Scottish Government welcomes the Committee's support for this approach and will provide further information regarding access to, and representation at, private rented sector tribunals when it is available.

154. The Committee accepts the decision and supports the Scottish Government's commitment to monitoring progress of the private rented sector tribunal and the impact of court reform in order to decide whether further changes should be made for social rented sector cases.

155. The Committee acknowledges work being undertaken in court reform that will affect social rented sector cases that remain within the court system. But it requests further information on how the impact of the reform on these cases will be monitored in order to inform future decision-making on the possible transfer of these cases to the First-tier Tribunal.

The implementation of Courts Reform will be overseen by a project board as part of the wider 'Making Justice Work' programme. This will include representation from the Scottish Government, Scottish Courts Service, Judicial Office, Scottish Legal Aid Board, Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Office.

An important part of monitoring of the impact of Courts Reform for social rented sector cases will be through ongoing engagement with stakeholders from that sector. This includes regular Housing Policy Advisory Group meetings which includes representation from social rented sector tenants, the Chartered Institute of Housing, the Association of Local Authority Chief Housing Officers, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations and Shelter Scotland.

Enforcement of repairing standard

161. The Committee supports the provisions on the enforcement of the repairing standard at sections 23 to 25 of the Bill. However, the Committee seeks reassurance from the Scottish Government that it will monitor use of the power and its impact.
The Scottish Government welcomes the support of the Committee for the provisions which will provide local authorities with additional powers to tackle poor housing condition. The Scottish Government recognises the importance of monitoring the use and impact of the powers. This will be achieved through continuing engagement with tenants, landlords and local authorities who are affected by the policy. The Scottish Government will also monitor the policy through the annual report of the Private Rented Housing Panel that must be laid before the Scottish Parliament.

165. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government whether it is content that the resource requirements for local authorities of this provision have been considered.

The Scottish Government consulted with local authorities on the provisions, but it was difficult for them to provide any robust information about the impact of the provisions on resources.

Whilst some authorities anticipated additional costs, others considered that this discretionary power could lead to more effective working between local authority departments and other agencies and bodies who are already engaged in efforts to improve conditions in the private rented sector.

The Scottish Government recognises the pressures that local authorities face when allocating resources. That is why it is important that the power for third party reporting is discretionary; it provides an additional tool that can be used flexibly in the light of local authority priorities and local housing strategies. It is for individual local authorities to determine what those priorities are.

Electrical safety and the repairing standard

- mandatory five-yearly checks, carried out by a registered electrician, of electrical installations and any electrical appliances supplied with privately rented homes;

- to make the provision of suitable mains smoke alarms mandatory in private rented properties, as battery operated smoke alarms are unreliable; and

- to make the installation of carbon monoxide alarms mandatory for all private rented accommodation.

169. The Committee supports all of these initiatives and recommends that the Scottish Government brings forward amendments to this effect at Stage 2.

The Scottish Government welcomes the widespread support from the Committee and stakeholders for changes to improve safety standards in private rented housing.
It intends to consider safety standards across all tenures of housing later this year as part of its Sustainable Housing Strategy. In the meantime, the Government will bring forward an amendment at stage 2 for a regulation making power to make changes to the repairing standard for private landlords.

The Scottish Government notes the Committee’s support for proposals in relation to hard-wired smoke detectors. It agrees that this should be the standard for private rented homes, but it does not consider that the Bill needs to be amended to achieve this. The current requirement, under Section 20 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006, is for any alarm installed or replaced since September 2007 to be hard-wired. As alarms need to be replaced by the end of a manufacturer’s recommended lifespan, usually between 5 and 10 years, the desired result will be achieved without further legislation.

If there are concerns about the effectiveness of the existing legislation in achieving the desired outcome, then these can be addressed through the Scottish Government’s proposed work on cross-tenure standards. The new regulation making power would allow those concerns to be addressed.

Part 4 – Letting Agents

180. The Committee recognises that much of the detail of the register of letting agents and the Code of Practice is subject to further regulations. However, the Committee recommends that the Scottish Government considers how it might include on the face of the Bill details of what those regulations might cover, such as professional conduct, qualifications/training and financial obligations.

The Code of Practice will be a statutory code setting out the standard of service that landlords and tenants can expect of letting agents. Existing Codes in the letting agent industry include issues such as ethical code; professional standards; professional indemnity; client money protection; complaints-handling; educational qualifications. The Scottish Government considers it likely that these issues will feature in the Code of Practice, and will work with stakeholders to build on existing Codes to ensure a high standard across the industry. The consultation with stakeholders will take place once the Bill has received Royal Assent. The Government considers that setting out details of the Code on the face of the Bill ahead of this consultation could have the unintended consequence of limiting its ability to take forward measures identified through that process.

182. The Committee recommends that the Scottish Government considers an initial period of registration of one year before an agent progresses to three year registration.
184. Given letting agents’ role in property management and in providing advice to landlords, the Committee recommends that the Scottish Government considers how the Code of Practice could seek to encourage letting agents to support Scotland’s climate change targets in this capacity.

Regulating the letting agent industry is unlikely to have any significant environmental effects. This is because its primary impact will be on standards of service and levels of professionalism. The Scottish Government stated in its Sustainable Housing Strategy that it would consult on draft regulations by 2015 that would set minimum standards for energy efficiency in private sector houses, and that there would be a lead in time to any regulation. The Scottish Government is working with a group of key stakeholders to develop proposals, and plans to consult on these in Spring 2015.

186. The Committee considers that the Scottish Government should take an active role in identifying unregistered letting agents and seeks the Minister’s views on how this might be taken forward.

The Scottish Government agrees that there should be effective sanctions against any letting agents who operate without being registered. The Scottish Government is considering how the Bill might be amended to provide for “spot-checks” on letting agents who are registered; and on those that are suspected of not being registered.

188. The Committee seeks clarification from the Scottish Government on how this might be tackled through registration or the Code of Practice.

Letting Agents will be legally required to register. Scottish Ministers will operate the register and will enforce the requirements of the register. The Bill provides that it is an offence not to register, with sanctions of a fine or imprisonment. The Code of Practice will only apply to registered letting agents and therefore is not a means of ensuring compliance with the requirement to register.
Part 5 – Mobile Home Sites with permanent residents

Impact upon site financing

198. The Committee is concerned by the suggestion that financial lenders may withdraw support for sites on the basis of the introduction of fixed term licences. The Committee supports the Scottish Government’s commitment to learning from experiences following the introduction of similar legislation by the Welsh Assembly and to establish whether there has been an impact on lending for mobile home sites in Wales.

199. The Committee recommends that the Scottish Government also work with lenders groups to clarify their views on the introduction of a fixed term licence, and what it might mean in Scotland.

The Scottish Government welcomes the Committee’s support for our on-going engagement with the Welsh Assembly Government, to learn from their experiences in implementing a new site licensing system. It will explore how best to clarify the views of lenders groups on the introduction of fixed term licences in Scotland.

Given the views expressed during stage 1 on the licence term, we will also seek to amend the Bill so that fixed term licences run for 5 years, rather than 3. The Scottish Government considers that will provide greater stability to residents and site owners and that it will reduce the administrative burden for local authorities.

Alternative approaches

203. It has been clear from evidence that there is some confusion about the implications of the use of the word ‘renewal’ in the Bill versus ‘review’. The Committee recommends that the Scottish Government sets out as clearly as possible what it intends by using the word ‘renewal’ as opposed to ‘review’, and what the implications are for site residents as part of an education campaign for residents and site owners.

The Scottish Government supports this recommendation, and it will consider the best way of making clear and accurate information about the new licensing regime available to residents, local authorities, and site owners.

Local authorities

211. The Committee recognises concerns about the potential impact on resources of the new licencing scheme but, as outlined by the Minister, the scheme should in effect be cost neutral.

212. The Committee recommends that the Scottish Government works with local authorities to enhance councils’ understanding of mobile and park home site regulations, and to enhance awareness, and embed the need for a consistent and thorough approach to inspections.

The Scottish Government welcomes the Committee’s endorsement for our view the system will be cost neutral for local authorities. It will consider the best way to provide advice, information, and guidance to local authorities, including on the timing of inspections.

Cost of site licensing

219. The Committee recognises that there is flexibility in the Bill to ensure that the cost of a site licence is proportionate to the size of the site, and should reflect only the costs of administering the licence scheme.

220. The Committee views the expected cost increase for residents to be fair given the increased protections residents will enjoy under the provisions of the Bill. The Committee recommends that the Scottish Government considers the ways by which it can be ensured that the additional cost to residents (if passed on) is in line with the plan set out in its letter to the Committee of 21 March 2014.

The Scottish Government welcomes the Committee’s agreement that the expected cost of the site licence is a reasonable cost to be passed on to residents, given the benefits they will gain from the new licensing system. As outlined to the Committee by the Minister for Housing and Welfare in her letter of 21 March, the Bill would give Ministers two powers to safeguard residents if, for example, licence fees were found to be excessive. The first of these is a power to set out the matters a local authority can take into account when setting the licence fee. The second is a power to set a maximum licence fee level, which a local authority would not be able to charge more than. The Government will consider when, and how, to best use these safeguards if necessary.

Impact of perceptions around licensing

225. The Committee has heard in evidence that there is confusion about the potential impacts which the new licensing scheme may have upon residents of mobile and park home sites, both for site owners, and prospective and current residents. It is concerned that deliberate or accidental misinformation could create undue stress and concern, and negatively impact upon people’s ability to buy or sell their mobile homes. The Committee welcomes the Scottish Government’s assurances that the loss of a site licence to the owner would not result in the eviction of site residents, and that statements to the contrary by site owners is misinformation, deliberate or otherwise.
226. The Committee recommends an awareness campaign to ensure that residents and site owners are provided with accurate and clear information about the intentions and impacts of the Bill. This should specify where further information can be accessed, and bodies they can contact for support. The Committee believes that this would both support legitimate site owners, and empower residents, as well as providing reassurance and answering core questions.

The Scottish Government agrees with the Committee that deliberate or accidental misinformation could create undue stress and difficulties for mobile home residents. Residents who own the mobile home they live in have certain rights, set out in the terms of their agreements under the Mobile Homes Act 1983. This includes the right of a resident to station their mobile home on a site. The Bill already includes a provisions on this but the Scottish Government will seek to amend the Bill at stage 2 so permanent residents are clear that they can stay on a site even if a site owner loses their licence or does not renew it.

The Scottish Government supports the Committee’s recommendation for an awareness campaign and will consider the best way of making clear and accurate information available to residents, local authorities, and site owners, and what organisations would be able to provide further support.

Fit and proper person test

234. The Committee believes that the FPPT represents a positive step in ensuring the safety and security of park home residents in Scotland, and in driving up standards in the industry. It is vital that the test be consistent, fair and robust to ensure that rogue operators are exposed.

235. The Committee recommends that the Scottish Government consider the feasibility and potential benefits of a FPPT register in Scotland which could be shared across local authorities in Scotland, and which captures data about site owners who have passed FPPT, and applicants who do not. The Committee is of the view that this will help to ensure that compliant site owners are enabled to expend their businesses as they wish, and that non-compliant owners are prevented from simply moving to another authority and continuing to employ non-compliant behaviours.

The Scottish Government welcomes the Committee’s support for the introduction of a fit and proper person test for site licence holders and those who manage mobile home sites with permanent residents. It notes the Committee’s comments that the test needs to be consistent, fair and robust. To that end, the Government will seek to amend the Bill so that local authorities can explicitly share information relating to the fit and proper person test. The Scottish Government considers that will help to ensure a robust, fair and consistent approach across the country. It also considers that is a more proportionate and appropriate way forward than establishing a centrally held and run register of site owners in Scotland.

236. The Committee also recommends that the Scottish Government considers whether there is scope in the FPPT to take into account issues regarding operators who have been shown to have profiteered from energy resale to mobile home owners.

The Scottish Government notes this recommendation, and will explore further how this might be achieved.

Local authority enforcement powers at relevant permanent sites

244. The Committee is concerned at the prospect of fines for non-compliance by site owners being passed on to residents. The Committee is of the view that it is insupportable that residents should pay for a good service, not receive it, and end up paying the fine for the non-compliance of the site owner and the bad service they themselves received. However, the Committee is reassured that the Scottish Government is considering the possibility of addressing this issue at Stage 2.

The Scottish Government shares the Committee’s concerns. It will consider if it is possible to amend the Bill so that enforcement costs (e.g. for serving an improvement notice) cannot be passed on to residents.

Part 6 – Private Housing Conditions

Tenement management scheme “Missing Share”

257. The Committee welcomes the intention of the amendments to the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 to allow local authorities to support owners in tenements to progress repairs and maintenance in cases where the majority of owners support the work, but a minority of shares are ‘missing’.

258. The Committee also acknowledges the mixed response of local authorities to these amendments, with the principles of the amendments being generally welcomed but the practicalities of initially resourcing the ‘missing shares’, and laterally the cost and administrative burden of recouping ‘missing shares’, raising concerns.
259. The Committee takes the view that as the ‘missing share’ amendments are powers rather than duties, it can be expected that there will be variation between authorities as to whether they choose to employ these powers or not. Therefore, the Committee welcomes the principles of these amendments, but believes that the impact may be limited by local authorities’ reticence, or inability, to commit funding where they believe it may have difficulty recovering it, and the timescales for recovering those funds is prolonged.

260. The Committee is of the view that a 30-year repayment period is excessive, and that there is sense in the suggestion that local authorities should be given the flexibility to determine the time period over which the share must be paid back based on individual circumstances. The Committee recommends that the Scottish Government considers the feasibility of this suggestion, and considers other ways of enabling and encouraging local authorities to use these powers where appropriate.

The Scottish Government notes the Committee’s views on the Tenement Management Scheme, Missing Share provisions in the Bill. Officials engaged widely with stakeholders to develop these proposals. These were consulted on and received strong support (consultation responses on missing share powers were 73% in favour - including 76% of local authority responses).

The Scottish Government is aware that the resources available to local authorities are constrained and considers that these new discretionary powers will help them to carry out their statutory functions without imposing an additional burden on their resources. It would not be appropriate for the Scottish Government to direct local authorities in the use of their discretionary powers.

The use of repayment charges is optional and local authorities can choose to pursue debts through the courts. Repayment charges allow local authorities to secure debt against property without going through the courts and the debt has to be repaid in full before the property can be sold. This is a powerful tool that is not available to other kinds of creditor. In most cases repayment will be made in full before the end of the 30 year period. The Scottish Government considers that it would be difficult in practice for local authorities to determine variable repayment periods.

Work notices, maintenance orders and repayment charges

266. The Committee welcomes these powers but, as with the ‘missing share’ provision, encourages the Scottish Government to consider other ways of enabling and encouraging local authorities to use these powers where appropriate.

The Scottish Government welcomes the Committee’s support for these powers which have been developed through extensive consultation with local authorities.
Sustainability in private housing

269. The Committee recognises the importance of improving domestic energy efficiency in order to meet Scotland’s ambitious climate change targets. The Committee notes that this Bill does not directly address energy efficiency of private housing and recalls its previous recommendation that the Scottish Government considers the introduction of minimum standards across the private sector earlier than 2018.

270. The Committee sees the value in suggestions regarding the creation of maintenance and inspection systems in properties of multiple ownership, and considers that this would promote community empowerment, and prevent minor repairs and associated costs spiralling as a result of continued disrepair. However, the Committee also recognises the potential difficulties which individual properties may experience in setting up and administering such schemes, especially in properties of mixed tenure.

The Scottish Government notes the views of the Committee. It has no firm date for introduction of minimum standards. It is working with a group of key stakeholders to develop proposals on the regulation of energy efficiency in private sector homes for public consultation in Spring 2015. The consultation will include proposals on when standards should apply from. The Scottish Government will consider the responses to the consultation before reaching a view on its final approach to the introduction of minimum standards.

Other issues

274. The Committee welcomes any provision which enables people to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible. While it is possible to envisage how improvement to energy efficiency and physical improvements to properties may support older people in continuing to live independently, the Committee shares Inclusion Scotland’s lack of clarity about how these provisions will support adaptation for people with disabilities. The Committee would welcome more information from the Scottish Government on this point.

These amendments do not directly impact adaptations of housing to meet the needs of disabled people. These issues are being considered separately by the Scottish Government’s Working Group on Adaptations. However, in some cases repair work is needed before work can be carried out to provide adaptations or to improve accessibility, and these amendments should assist here. It is for this reason that the Scottish Government considers that the provisions will support adaptation for people with disabilities.
Part 7 - Miscellaneous

Scottish Housing Regulator – transfer of assets following inquiries

281. The Committee understands and accepts the rationale behind the Scottish Government’s decision to include this provision in the Bill. However, it considers it to be very unfortunate that the opportunity was not taken to consult key stakeholders in advance of the Bill’s introduction to explain the reasons behind its approach. It is of the view that it is possible that such dialogue may have served to reassure those stakeholders who are now opposed to its inclusion in the Bill that it is designed to provide added protection for tenants, as opposed to what they consider to be a diminution of tenants’ rights.

282. The Committee calls on the Scottish Government to provide details of how it intends to engage with stakeholders, tenants’ representative groups and RSLs in particular, to provide clarity on the specific circumstances in which this power would be used. It also recommends that clear and unambiguous guidance should be produced by the Scottish Government setting out these circumstances and the process to be followed by the SHR should they arise.

283. The Committee further recommends that this guidance should set out how, in the event that this power is to be used by the SHR, information on the specific reasons for its use should be quickly and effectively communicated to all affected tenants and representative groups.

The Scottish Government welcomes the Committee’s endorsement of the reasons for including section 79 in the Bill. For the record, it observes that on 16 October 2013, just over a month before the Bill was introduced, it wrote to stakeholders outlining its plans to include the provision in the Bill and seeking their views on that. Following introduction, it had discussions about the provision with a number of stakeholders at which it sought to explain further the purpose of the provision. It accepts, however, that it would have been better to have consulted stakeholders sooner.

The Scottish Government notes the Committee’s call for it to explain how it will engage with stakeholders, and then issue guidance, on how the SHR will exercise its new powers under section 79. It agrees in principle with the call. It observes, however, that for it to comply directly with it would cut across the provision at section 7 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 under which the Scottish Ministers are prohibited from directing or seeking to control how the SHR performs its functions under that Act. In view of that, it proposes instead to introduce amendments during the Committee’s stage 2 consideration of the Bill that will place on the SHR the duties to consult and issue guidance that the Committee has identified.
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee Consideration

Powers to issue guidance

[290. The DPLR Committee welcomes the Scottish Government’s commitment to consult on and publish any guidance issued under the powers conferred by sections 4(2), 7(2) and 8(1) of the Bill. However, the DPLR Committee asks the Scottish Government to consider bringing forward amendments at Stage 2 to require consultation on, and publication of, any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers under the powers conferred by those sections.]

291. The ICI Committee supports the view of the DPLR Committee and requests that the Scottish Government brings forward amendments to require consultation on and publication of the guidance at Stage 2.

The Scottish Government notes the support of the Committee for the recommendations of the DPLR Committee for consultation on and publication of guidance issued under the powers conferred by sections 4(2), 7(2) and 8(1) of the Bill. The Scottish Government is considering how best to address the recommendations made by the DPLR Committee and will bring forward amendments at Stage 2.

Letting Agent Code of Practice

293. Given the importance of the Code of Practice, the ICI Committee supports the DPLR Committee recommendation and seeks the Scottish Government’s views on this power.

With regard to the Code of Practice for letting agents, the Scottish Government notes the DPLR Committee’s view that the affirmative procedure is a more suitable level of Parliamentary scrutiny of the exercise of the power in section 41(1) than the negative procedure. The Scottish Government recognises the significant consequences for letting agents of failure to comply with the Code. Therefore, the Scottish Government now proposes that after consultation, the Code of Practice is to be subject to affirmative resolution. However, any future changes to the Code would be by negative resolution, following consultation. But a completely new Code would proceed by affirmative resolution, following consultation. This approach both reflects the severity of the consequences and ensures a proportionate level of parliamentary scrutiny.
Power to make provision in relation to procedure

296. The ICI Committee will monitor the Scottish Government's response in respect of this provision in advance of Stage 2 consideration.

The Scottish Government has accepted this recommendation from the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee, and will seek to amend the Bill to reflect the Committee's concerns.

Power to vary maximum fine

298. The ICI Committee supports the DPLR Committee's request that the Scottish Ministers consider bringing forward a suitable amendment at Stage 2.

The Scottish Government has accepted this recommendation from the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee. It has written to the Convenor of the Committee advising that it will bring forward an amendment at Stage 2 to remove the power, at section 63, to vary maximum fine levels.

May 2014
Housing (Scotland) Bill

1st Marshalled List of Amendments for Stage 2

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

- Sections 1 to 20  Schedule 1
- Sections 21 to 84  Schedule 2
- Sections 85 and 86  Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 1

Alex Johnstone

12 Leave out section 1

Section 2

Alex Johnstone

13 Leave out section 2

Section 3

Margaret Burgess

14 In section 3, page 2, line 12, leave out <held by the social landlord which the social landlord> and insert <which—

(i) are held by a social landlord, and
(ii) the social landlord selecting its tenants>

John Lamont

1 In section 3, page 2, line 13, at end insert <and

(d) persons who appear to the social landlord to have a particular connection with a locality or community within its area.

(1ZAA) It is for the social landlord to determine what constitutes a “locality” or “community” for the purposes of subsection (1ZA)(d).

(1ZAB) Reference in subsection (1ZA)(d) to a person having a particular connection with a locality or community is a reference to the person having a connection with that locality or community—

(a) because the person is, or in the past was, normally resident in it of the person’s own choice,
(b) because the person is employed in it,
(c) because of family associations, or
(d) because of any other special circumstances.>
Jackie Baillie

46 In section 3, page 2, line 15, leave out from first <the> to end of line 16 and insert <circumstances prescribed in guidance published by the Scottish Ministers apply.>.

John Lamont

2 In section 3, page 2, line 16, at end insert—

<( ) In section 20 of the 1987 Act, sub-paragraph (i) of subsection (2)(a) and the word “or” immediately following it are repealed.>

Section 4

Margaret Burgess

15 In section 4, page 2, line 40, leave out <issued by the Scottish Ministers> and insert <published by the Scottish Ministers.>

(3AA) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (3A), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

After section 4

Mary Fee

49 After section 4, insert—

<Factors which must be considered in allocation: sustainable communities

In section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing), after subsection (2B) insert—

“(2C) In the allocation of housing falling within subsection (1), a social landlord may take into consideration the likely effects of that allocation on the sustainability of particular localities or communities.”.

Section 5

Margaret Burgess

16 Leave out section 5

Section 7

Margaret Burgess

17 In section 7, page 4, line 26, leave out from <issued> to end of line 32 and insert <about this section (including the matters mentioned in subsection (4)) published by the Scottish Ministers.>

(3A) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (3), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

Margaret Burgess

18 In section 7, page 6, line 11, at end insert—

<( ) After the social landlord imposes a requirement under subsection (1) (whether or not previously varied under this subsection), it may—

(a) withdraw the requirement, or
(b) vary the requirement in order to shorten the period imposed for the application to have remained in force.>

After section 7

Jim Hume

3  After section 7, insert—

<Homelessness and allocation of housing

Duty of registered social landlord to provide accommodation

In section 5 of the 2001 Act (duty of registered social landlord to provide accommodation), after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) Where a local authority has a duty under section 31(2) of the 1987 Act in relation to a homeless person—

(a) no request may be made by the authority to a registered social landlord to provide accommodation to the person otherwise than in accordance with this section, and

(b) any request made by a local authority to a registered social landlord which holds houses for housing purposes in its area to provide accommodation for such a person is deemed to be a request under this section.”.>

Section 8

Margaret Burgess

19 In section 8, page 6, line 18, leave out from <, after> to end of line 22 and insert <—

(a) in subsection (7), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”, and

(b) after subsection (8), insert—

“(9) A landlord must have regard to any guidance published by the Scottish Ministers—

(a) before creating a tenancy which is a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of section 35 or paragraph 1, 2 or 2A of schedule 6, and

(b) when taking any steps in relation to such a tenancy with a view to—

(i) extending the term of the tenancy under section 35A, or

(ii) raising proceedings for the recovery of possession of the house
under section 36.

(10) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (9), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.”.>

Mary Fee

50 In section 8, page 6, line 41, at end insert—

<( ) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Where subsection (2) applies, the landlord must include in the notice—
(a) details of the actions of the tenant or person that have caused the landlord to issue the notice, and

(b) the support the landlord proposes to provide to the tenant or person in order to assist the tenant to sustain a Scottish secure tenancy.”.

Margaret Burgess

20 In section 8, page 6, line 41, at end insert—

<( ) in subsection (3)(b), after “order” insert “or, as the case may be, has behaved as described in subsection (2)(b)”.

Section 10

Margaret Burgess

21 In section 10, page 8, line 14, after <tenancies) insert <—

( ) after subsection (5), insert—

“(5A) Subsection (5) does not apply to a tenancy mentioned in subsection (6A)”.

Margaret Burgess

22 In section 10, page 8, line 23, at end insert <, and

( ) for subsection (4), substitute—

“(4) Where a tenancy becomes a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of this section—

(a) subsection (5) of section 34 does not apply to the tenancy, but

(b) otherwise subsection (6) of that section does apply to the tenancy.”.

Margaret Burgess

23 In section 10, page 8, line 27, leave out <or> and insert <and>

Section 12

Margaret Burgess

24 In section 12, page 10, line 8, at end insert—

<( ) in subsection (5)(a), after “34(5)” insert “or, in a case where subsection (2)(aa) applies, the end of the term applicable to the tenancy in accordance with section 34(6A), 35(3A) or 35A(1)”.

Section 13

Margaret Burgess

25 In section 13, page 10, line 28, leave out from <that> to end of line 29 and insert <, at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(a) the person, or

(b) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given, that the house in question was the person’s only or principal home.”.

Margaret Burgess

26 In section 13, page 11, leave out lines 1 to 4 and insert—

“(1A) For the purposes of an assignation mentioned in subsection (1)(b), a period may be considered in relation to a person only if—

(a) the person was the tenant of the house throughout that period, or

(b) at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(i) the person, or

(ii) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given,

that the house in question was the person’s only or principal home.

(1B) For the purposes of a sublet mentioned in subsection (1)(c), a period may be considered in relation to a tenant only if—

(a) the tenant was the tenant of the house throughout that period, or

(b) at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(a) the tenant, or

(b) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given, that the house in question was the tenant’s only or principal home.”,

and>

Section 14

Margaret Burgess

27 In section 14, page 11, line 26, leave out from <that> to end of line 27 and insert <, at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(a) the person, or

(b) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given,

that the house in question was the person’s only or principal home.”.>

Jackie Baillie

47 Leave out section 14

Section 15

Margaret Burgess

28 In section 15, page 11, line 28, at end insert—

<( ) In section 14 of the 2001 Act (proceedings for possession), after subsection (2A) insert—

“(2B) Where such proceedings are to include a ground for recovery of possession set out in paragraph 2 of schedule 2, the landlord must have regard to any guidance published by the Scottish Ministers before raising such proceedings in relation to recovering possession of the house.
(2C) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (2B), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.”.

After section 16

Jim Eadie
Supported by: Alex Rowley

8 After section 16, insert—

< Duties of local authorities with respect to homelessness and threatened homelessness

Unsuitable accommodation orders: applicant with family commitments

In section 29 of the 1987 Act (interim duty to accommodate), after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) Without prejudice to the generality of subsection (4), an order under subsection (3) must—

(a) include provision that accommodation of a type specified in subsection (4B) is unsuitable accommodation where an applicant is an applicant with family commitments,

(b) define “applicant with family commitments” for the purposes of paragraph (a).

(4B) The type of accommodation is accommodation which is not wind and watertight and in all other respects reasonably fit for human habitation.”.

Alex Johnstone

51 After section 16, insert—

<Scottish starter tenancy

Scottish starter tenancy

(1) The Scottish Ministers must by regulations make provision for a category of tenancy, to be known as a “Scottish starter tenancy”, which may be offered to a prospective tenant by a social landlord where the prospective tenant has not previously held a Scottish secure tenancy or a short Scottish secure tenancy with that landlord.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) must provide that a Scottish starter tenancy—

(a) will have a term of 12 months,

(b) may be terminated by the landlord at two months’ notice in the circumstances set out in subsection (3),

(c) may, if it has not been terminated before the end of the 12 month period, be converted into a Scottish secure tenancy,

(d) may be extended, for a period to be prescribed by the Scottish Ministers, in the circumstances set out in subsection (4).

(3) The circumstances referred to in subsection (2)(b) are—

(a) that the tenant has been in rent arrears for such period as may be specified by the landlord in the tenancy agreement,
(b) that the landlord considers that the tenant has acted in an antisocial manner in relation to another person residing in the same locality, or to a person visiting or otherwise engaged in lawful activity in the locality of a house occupied by that person,

(c) that the landlord considers that the tenant has failed to take due care of the property, or

(d) such other circumstances as may be prescribed by the Scottish Ministers.

(4) The circumstances referred to in subsection (2)(d) are that the landlord considers that the conduct of the tenant has been unsatisfactory but not to the extent that the landlord has considered it necessary to terminate the tenancy before the end of the 12 month period.

(5) Regulations under subsection (1) must also provide that a landlord offering a Scottish starter tenancy must provide—

(a) such housing support services as the landlord considers appropriate with a view to enabling the conversion of the tenancy to a Scottish secure tenancy, and

(b) an appeals mechanism in relation to decisions—

(i) to terminate or extend a Scottish starter tenancy, or

(ii) not to convert a Scottish starter tenancy to a Scottish secure tenancy.

(6) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify, or disapply any provision of, any enactment (including this Act).

(7) For the purposes of this section, the terms “Scottish secure tenancy” and “short Scottish secure tenancy” have the meanings given in the 2001 Act.

Section 17

Jim Hume

52 In section 17, page 12, line 20, at end insert—

<( ) Tribunal Rules made under the Tribunals (Scotland) Act 2014 (asp 10) must make provision for the legal representation of tenants and occupiers in relation to actions arising from the tenancies and occupancy agreements listed in subsection (1).>

Schedule 1

Margaret Burgess

29 In schedule 1, page 62, leave out line 18, and insert—

<( ) the words “shall be made to the sheriff principal and” are repealed,>

After section 22

Jim Eadie

31 After section 22, insert—

<Repairing standard

Carbon monoxide alarms

In section 13 of the 2006 Act—

(a) the word “and” after paragraph (e) of subsection (1) is repealed,
(b) after paragraph (f) of subsection (1) insert “, and
(g) the house has satisfactory provision for giving warning if carbon monoxide is present in a concentration that is hazardous to health.”,

(c) after subsection (5) insert—
“(6) In determining whether a house meets the standard of repair mentioned in subsection (1)(g), regard is to be had to any building regulations and any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers on provision for giving warning if carbon monoxide is present in a concentration that is hazardous to health.”.

Mark Griffin

53 After section 22, insert—

<Repairing standard: smoke alarms

Smoke alarms
In section 13 of the 2006 Act, in paragraph (f) of subsection (1), after “provision” insert “connected to the main electrical supply”.

Bob Doris

54 After section 22, insert—

<Electrical safety inspections

(1) In section 13 of the 2006 Act (the repairing standard), after subsection (4) insert—
“(4A) In determining whether a house meets the standard of repair mentioned in subsection (1)(c) and (d) in relation to installations for the supply of electricity and electrical fixtures, fittings and appliances, regard is to be had to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers on electrical safety standards.”.

(2) After section 19 of the 2006 Act insert—

“19A Duty to ensure regular electrical safety inspections

(1) The landlord must ensure that regular inspections are carried out for the purpose of identifying any work which—
(a) relates to installations for the supply of electricity and electrical fixtures, fittings and appliances, and
(b) is necessary to ensure that the house meets the repairing standard.

(2) The duty in subsection (1) is complied with if—
(a) an inspection has been carried out before the tenancy starts (but not earlier than 5 years before the start of the tenancy), and
(b) inspections are carried out during the tenancy at such intervals to ensure that there is a period of no more than 5 years between each inspection.

(3) The landlord must—
(a) before the start of the tenancy, provide the tenant with a copy of the record of the most recent inspection carried out, and
(b) provide the tenant with a copy of the record of any inspection carried out during the tenancy.
(4) For the purposes of sections 16(4), 17, 22 and 24 and schedule 2, references to a duty under section 14(1) include the duties under this section.

(5) In relation to a tenancy which started before the day of commencement of section (Electrical safety inspections)(2) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014 (asp 00)—

(a) subsections (2)(a) and (3)(a) do not apply, but

(b) the landlord must ensure that an inspection is carried out no later than the end of the period of 12 months beginning on that day (unless the tenancy ends before the end of that period).

19B Electrical safety inspections

(1) An inspection carried out in pursuance of section 19A must be carried out by a competent person.

(2) The person carrying out the inspection must prepare a record of the inspection including the following information—

(a) the date on which the inspection was carried out,

(b) the address of the house inspected,

(c) the name and address of the landlord or the landlord’s agent,

(d) the name, address and relevant qualifications of the person who carried out the inspection,

(e) a description, and the location, of each installation, fixture, fitting and appliance inspected,

(f) any defect identified,

(g) any action taken to remedy a defect.

(3) A copy of the record must be—

(a) given to the landlord, and

(b) retained by the landlord for a period of 6 years.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must publish guidance on the carrying out of inspections.

(5) In determining who is competent to carry out an inspection, the landlord must have regard to the guidance.”.

Claudia Beamish

48 After section 22, insert—

<Repairing standard: energy efficiency

Duty to make provision on energy efficiency standards

(1) After section 13 of the 2006 Act insert—

“13A Duty to make provision on energy efficiency standards

(1) The Scottish Ministers must by regulations extend or vary the repairing standard to include provision—

(a) setting minimum standards for energy efficiency,
(b) the application of those standards where a house forms part only of any premises,
(c) establishing a system of inspection to determine whether premises comply with those standards, and
(d) for penalties to be imposed on a landlord for failure to comply with those standards.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) must come into force by 1 January 2015.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as appear to them to be appropriate.

(2) In section 191(5) of the 2006 Act, after “section” insert “13A,”.

Jim Eadie

5* After section 22, insert—

<The repairing standard: common areas

In section 15 of the 2006 Act (application of duty in relation to flats etc.), after subsection (2), insert—

“(3) A landlord is to be treated as having failed to comply with the duty imposed by section 14(1) where the landlord has failed to contribute the landlord’s share of the costs of keeping in a reasonable state of repair and in proper working order any part of the premises which the landlord is responsible for maintaining in common with others.”.

Margaret Burgess

30 After section 22, insert—

<Power to modify repairing standard etc.

(1) After section 20 of the 2006 Act insert—

“20A Power to modify repairing standard etc.

  (1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations vary or extend the repairing standard and a landlord’s duty to ensure a house meets that standard.

  (2) Regulations under subsection (1) may, in particular, make provision about—

    (a) the tenancies to which this Chapter applies,

    (b) determining whether a house meets the repairing standard,

    (c) carrying out inspections in relation to the repairing standard.

  (3) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify sections 12 to 14 and any other provision of this Chapter.”.

(2) In section 191(5) of the 2006 Act, after “section” insert “20A,”.
Section 23

Jim Eadie
6 In section 23, page 15, line 28, at end insert—

   <( ) an owner of a house adjacent to or adjoining a house owned by a landlord,
   ( ) an organisation providing advice services relating to housing.>

Malcolm Chisholm
10 In section 23, page 15, line 28, at end insert—

   <( ) an owner (“A”) of a house neighbouring a house owned by a landlord, where the landlord has not contributed to the cost of the maintenance and repair of any thing owned in common by A and the landlord.>

Malcolm Chisholm
11 In section 23, page 15, line 28, at end insert—

   <( ) a person responsible for managing a service commissioned by a local authority.>

Margaret Burgess
32 In section 23, page 16, line 18, leave out subsection (6) and insert—

   <( ) In section 181 of the 2006 Act (rights of entry: general)—
   (a) after subsection (1) insert—

      “(1A) Any person authorised by a third party applicant is entitled to enter any house in respect of which an application under section 22 may be made for the purposes of enabling or assisting the third party applicant to decide whether to make an application under section 22(1A).”, and

   (b) in subsection (2), for “a tenant’s application under section 22(1)” substitute “an application under section 22(1) or (1A)”.

   ( ) In section 182 of the 2006 Act (warrants authorising entry)—
   (a) in subsection (1), after “subsection (1)” insert “, (1A)”, and

   (b) after subsection (3) insert—

      “(3A) In relation to an application for a warrant under section 181(1A), the reference to the occupier in subsection (3) is to be read as including the tenant, the landlord and any known agent of the landlord.”.

   ( ) In section 184 of the 2006 Act (rights of entry: supplemental), after subsection (4) insert—

      “(4A) In relation to the exercise of the right conferred by section 181(1A), the reference to occupants in subsection (4) is to be read as including the tenant, the landlord and any known agent of the landlord.”.

   ( ) In section 187 of the 2006 Act (formal communications), in subsection (3)(b), for “the recorded delivery service” substitute “a service which provides for the delivery of the communication to be recorded.”>
After section 25

James Kelly
33 After section 25, insert—

<Rent reviews and rent increases

Rent reviews and rent increases

(1) The Scottish Ministers must by regulations make provision that, in relation to a tenancy of a dwelling-house other than a tenancy granted by a social landlord—

(a) prohibits a landlord from reviewing the rent payable under such a tenancy before the expiry of the period of one year since the previous such review,

(b) specifies the maximum amount by which the total of the rent payable under such a tenancy may be increased at each review, and

(c) makes such further provision in connection with the matters described in paragraphs (a) and (b) as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of those matters.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) must come into force by 1 January 2015.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as appear to them to be appropriate.

(4) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify, or disapply any provision of, any enactment (including this Act).>

Patrick Harvie
33A As an amendment to amendment 33, line 13, leave out <come into force> and insert <be laid before the Scottish Parliament>

James Kelly
34 After section 25, insert—

<Security of tenure

Security of tenure

(1) The Scottish Ministers must by regulations make provision that, in relation to a tenancy of a dwelling-house other than a tenancy granted by a social landlord—

(a) establishes that such a tenancy may have an initial term of 6 months,

(b) establishes that, subject to satisfactory completion of the initial term, the period of such a tenancy will be at least 3 years,

(c) after the completion of the initial term, permits the tenant to terminate the tenancy on giving the landlord notice of one month,

(d) after the completion of the initial term, permits the landlord to terminate the tenancy on giving the tenant notice of two months if—

(i) the tenant has such arrears of rent as may be prescribed,

(ii) the tenant has acted in such antisocial manner as may be prescribed,

(iii) the tenant otherwise breaches the terms of the tenancy agreement,
(iv) the landlord wishes to sell the dwelling-house,
(v) the dwelling-house is required as the principal residence of the landlord or a member of the landlord’s family, or
(vi) the landlord intends to refurbish or change the use of the dwelling-house, and

(e) makes such further provision in connection with the matters described in paragraphs (a) to (d) as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of those matters.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) must come into force by 1 January 2015.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as appear to them to be appropriate.

(4) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify, or disapply any provision of, any enactment (including this Act).

Patrick Harvie
34A As an amendment to amendment 34, leave out line 6

Patrick Harvie
34B As an amendment to amendment 34, line 7, leave out <, subject to satisfactory completion of the initial term,>

Patrick Harvie
34C As an amendment to amendment 34, line 9, leave out <after the completion of the initial term,>

Patrick Harvie
34D As an amendment to amendment 34, line 11, leave out <after the completion of the initial term,>

Patrick Harvie
34E As an amendment to amendment 34, line 18, leave out <or> and insert—<( ) permits—
      (i) the landlord to terminate the tenancy on giving the tenant notice of six months where>

Patrick Harvie
34F As an amendment to amendment 34, line 20, at end insert—<(ii) the tenant to reacquire the tenancy at the same rent if the dwelling-house is re-let,>

Patrick Harvie
34G As an amendment to amendment 34, line 20, at end insert—
  <( ) where a tenancy has been terminated under paragraph (d)(iv) or (v), the dwelling-house may not be re-let for a period of six months from the date of termination, and>
Houses let for holiday purposes

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations provide that a local authority may serve a closure notice prohibiting access to premises by any person other than—
   (a) a person who habitually resides in the premises, or
   (b) the owner of the premises
in the circumstances set out in subsection (2).

(2) The circumstances are that the premises—
   (a) is situated in the local authority’s area,
   (b) has been privately let for holiday purposes—
      (i) on at least two occasions during which a person occupying or visiting the premises has engaged in antisocial behaviour, and
      (ii) the authority anticipates further use of those premises that will result in antisocial behaviour.

(3) Regulations under subsection (1) must include provision for—
   (a) the form of a closure notice and the means by which it is to be served,
   (b) the period for which a closure notice can apply,
   (c) the means by which a closure notice is to be enforced,
   (d) an appeals mechanism, and
   (e) such other matters as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient.

(4) For the purposes of this section, “antisocial behaviour” has the meaning given by section 81(4) of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8).

Section 72

In section 72, page 50, line 36, after <2004”,> insert—

“(3) The repayable amount is recoverable in—
   (a) 30 equal annual instalments payable on the same date (specified in the charge) in each calendar year, or
   (b) monthly instalments over such shorter period of time as the local authority determines to be reasonable in the circumstances.

(3A) Where a local authority determines a repayment period under subsection (3)(b), it must provide the owner of, or any other person interested in, any living accommodation subject to the repayment charge with assistance under section 71(1).”,
Malcolm Chisholm

35 In section 72, page 50, line 36, after <2004”,> insert—

<(  ) in subsection (4), after the word “register” where it second appears, insert “, and on its being so registered has priority over all existing and future burdens on the same living accommodation”,>.

After section 73

Jim Eadie

9 After section 73, insert—

<Home maintenance framework

(1) Before section 42 of the 2006 Act, insert—

“Home maintenance framework

41A Home maintenance framework

(1) Where any premises consist of two or more houses, the owners of those houses must prepare jointly a framework (a “home maintenance framework”) in relation to any part of the premises which is owned in common by those owners.

(2) A home maintenance framework must set out how the maintenance and repair of such parts of the premises will be managed and must in particular include—

(a) arrangements for an annual inspection of any roof areas owned in common by the owners,

(b) a payment plan or other arrangements to fund maintenance and repairs to any part of the premises which is owned in common, and

(c) arrangements for the appointment of a responsible person or agent to manage the implementation of the framework.”

(2) In section 42 of the 2006 Act, after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Where any premises consist of two or more houses, the local authority may consider for the purposes of subsection (2)(b) that those houses are unlikely to be maintained to a reasonable standard if it appears to the authority that a satisfactory home maintenance framework has not been prepared under section 41A in relation to the houses.”.

Section 75

James Kelly

56 In section 75, page 51, line 25, at end insert—

<(  ) In section 44(1) of the 2006 Act (maintenance plans for two or more houses), after “premises,” insert “and any garden area associated with the premises,”.

Section 82

Alex Johnstone

57 In section 82, page 54, line 19, at end insert—
<
under section \textit{Scottish starter tenancy}(1),>

James Kelly
37  In section 82, page 54, line 20, at end insert—
<
under section \textit{Rent reviews and rent increases}(1),>

James Kelly
38  In section 82, page 54, line 20, at end insert—
<
under section \textit{Security of tenure}(1),>

Drew Smith
58  In section 82, page 54, line 20, at end insert—
<
under section \textit{Houses let for holiday purposes}(1),>

Schedule 2

Margaret Burgess
39  In schedule 2, page 64, line 2, at end insert—
<
In section 24(5)(d), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.>

Margaret Burgess
40  In schedule 2, page 64, line 31, at end insert—
<
In section 5(4)(a), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.>

Margaret Burgess
41  In schedule 2, page 65, line 22, at end insert—
\textit{Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1)}
<
In section 22 of the 2006 Act—

Section 85

Alex Johnstone
42  In section 85, page 55, line 7, leave out subsection (4)

Margaret Burgess
43  In section 85, page 55, line 8, leave out <3> and insert <2>

Mary Fee
44  In section 85, page 55, line 8, leave out <3> and insert <1>
Long Title

Alex Johnstone

45  In the long title, page 1, line 1, leave out <the abolition of the right to buy,>
Housing (Scotland) Bill

1st Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the first day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Abolition of right to buy
12, 13, 42, 43, 44, 45

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 42 pre-empts amendments 43 and 44
Amendments 43 and 44 are direct alternatives

Reasonable preference in allocation of social housing
14, 1, 46, 2

Guidance published by Scottish Ministers on social housing matters
15, 17, 19, 28

Factors to be considered in allocation of social housing
49, 16

Minimum period for application to remain in force
18

Duties with respect to homelessness
3, 8

Short Scottish secure tenancy created on antisocial behaviour grounds
50, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 39, 40

Scottish secure tenancy: assignation, sublet, joint tenancy and succession
25, 26, 27, 47

Scottish starter tenancy
51, 57
Transfer of sheriff’s jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal
52, 29

Repairing standard
31, 53, 54, 48, 5, 30

Enforcement of repairing standard
6, 10, 11, 32, 41

Rent reviews and rent increases – private rented housing
33, 33A, 37

Security of tenure – private rented housing
34, 34A, 34B, 34C, 34D, 34E, 34F, 34G, 38

Houses let for holiday purposes
55, 58

Tenement management schemes
7, 35

Home maintenance framework duty
9

Maintenance plans: areas
56
INFRASTRUCTURE AND CAPITAL INVESTMENT COMMITTEE

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES

14th Meeting, 2014 (Session 4)

Wednesday 14 May 2014

Present:
Jim Eadie     Mary Fee
Mark Griffin     Adam Ingram (Deputy Convener)
Alex Johnstone    Gordon MacDonald
Maureen Watt (Convener)

Also present: Jackie Baillie, Claudia Beamish, Margaret Burgess, Bob Doris, Patrick Harvie, Jim Hume, James Kelly, John Lamont and Drew Smith.

Housing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 1).

The following amendments were agreed to without division: 14, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 54 and 32.

The following amendments were agreed to (by division)—
16 (For 4, Against 1, Abstentions 2)
17 (For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0)
30 (For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division)—
12 (For 1, Against 6, Abstentions 0)
1 (For 1, Against 6, Abstentions 0)
2 (For 1, Against 6, Abstentions 0)
49 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
3 (For 0, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
51 (For 1, Against 6, Abstentions 0)
52 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
53 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
48 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
10 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
11 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
33A (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
33 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
34A (For 0, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
34E (For 0, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
34F (For 0, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
34G (For 0, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
34 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
55 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0).
The following amendments were moved and, no member having objected, withdrawn: 50 and 6.

The following amendments were not moved: 13, 46, 47, 8, 5, 34B, 34C and 34D.

The following provisions were agreed to without amendment: sections 1, 2, 6, 9, 11, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25.

The following provisions were agreed to as amended: sections 3, 4, 7, 8, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, schedule 1 and section 23.

The Committee ended consideration of the Bill for the day amendment 55 having been disposed of.
Scottish Parliament

Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee

Wednesday 14 May 2014

[The Convener opened the meeting at 10:00]

10:02

The Convener: Agenda item 2 is the Housing (Scotland) Bill. Today we are starting stage 2 of the bill and will go no further than the end of part 3. I remind members that the minister’s officials are here in a strictly supportive capacity and cannot speak during proceedings or be questioned by members.

Everyone should have a copy of the bill as introduced, the first marshalled list of amendments and the first groupings of amendments. There will be one debate on each group of amendments. I will call the member who lodged the first amendment in the group to speak to and move the amendment, and to speak to all other amendments in the group. I will then call the other members who have amendments in the group. Finally, the member who lodged the first amendment in the group will be asked to wind up the debate and to indicate whether they wish to press or withdraw their amendment. Members who have not lodged amendments in the group but who wish to speak should catch my attention in the usual way.

If a member wishes to withdraw their amendment after it has been moved, I must ask whether any member objects to its being withdrawn. If a member objects, the committee immediately moves to a vote on the amendment. If a member does not want to move their amendment when it is called, they should say, “Not moved.” Any other MSP can move it, but I will not specifically invite other members to do so. If no one moves it, I will call the next amendment.

The committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed each section and schedule of the bill, so I will put a question on each section at the appropriate point.

Section 1—Abolition of the right to buy

The Convener: The first group of amendments is on the abolition of the right to buy. Amendment 12, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is grouped with amendments 13 and 42 to 45. I draw members’ attention to the pre-emption and direct alternatives information on the list of groupings.

Alex Johnstone (North East Scotland) (Con): The right to buy has been one of the most significant drivers for positive social change in Scotland in the past 50 years. Over much of Scotland, it has created mixed-tenure sustainable communities of which we can all be proud.

The policy’s positive aspects are widespread. As I suggested in a recent debate, they include the opportunity for some of the less well-off people in society to acquire wealth. We should all encourage property ownership, and the right to buy has had a role in that.

The right to buy has had its opponents; many housing organisations continue to this day to oppose it. The presence of section 1 indicates the success of that campaign.

If we look at the right to buy in recent years, it becomes fairly obvious that the policy has been withering on the vine because of neglect by successive Scottish Governments. In the last full year for which we have figures, only just over 1,500 houses were sold to their tenants. The vast majority of them—nearly 1,200—were sold to long-standing tenants who have the residual right to buy and not the modernised right to buy that we have had for the past 10 years or more.

Abolition of the right to buy will simply cause a feeding frenzy in the market; it will give all those who have the right today but are about to lose it an opportunity to decide whether to buy their homes. It suits my political perspective to encourage people to buy their properties, but the decision to include abolition of the right in the bill can only be counterproductive for the Government’s policy intention. For that reason, it would serve my purpose and that of the Government if it did not move to abolish the right to buy at this time.

The main issue that amendments 42 to 44 concern is the suggestion that the three-year time limit in the bill should be shortened. It is important to provide a period for those who have the right to buy to decide whether to exercise that right. In all honesty, I believe that the minister’s proposed reduction from three to two years will have no significant effect. However, it is part of a trend, and that proposal appears alongside an amendment that proposes to reduce the period from three years to one year, which would give me significantly greater cause for concern. Based on that principle, I oppose amendments 43 and 44.

Amendment 42, in my name, would remove the time limit altogether. The amendment stands along with my amendments 12 and 13. If amendments 12 and 13 are not agreed to, I will not move amendment 42.

I move amendment 12.

The Minister for Housing and Welfare (Margaret Burgess): The Scottish Government’s policy is to end the right to buy. The majority of the committee supports that policy, and I am grateful for that support.

Ending the right to buy will preserve valuable social housing, increase choice for tenants and people who are on waiting lists, and it will help to make social housing a vital part of vibrant mixed-tenure communities in which people want to live. Again and again, stakeholders have told us that they support our policy and tenants have told us of the damaging impact that the right to buy has had on the social housing sector. Social landlords have told us that ending the right to buy will help them with planning and stock management.

However, in the face of all that evidence, Mr Johnstone continues to call for this outdated and unpopular policy to continue. I understand his party’s historical attachment to the right to buy, but even he must surely accept that there is no longer a place for it in Scotland.

The Scottish Government has a number of other schemes to support and encourage home ownership and low-cost home ownership, and to help those who are on low incomes to get on to the housing ladder, so there is no place for the right to buy. I ask Mr Johnstone to seek to withdraw amendment 12 and not to move amendments 42 and 45.

Amendment 13 seeks to remove a provision that has nothing to do with the right to buy. Section 2 simply tidies up and clarifies two provisions that were amended by the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 and which might have been open to misrepresentation. The bill seeks to clarify those until the right to buy ends. One of the provisions makes it clear that the right to buy of tenants who are moving to new-supply homes in circumstances that are outwith their control will be protected. That is something with which I would expect Mr Johnstone to agree. The other simply makes it clear that the new tenancy exemption in the 2010 act applies to anyone who might have been living in social housing before the cut-off, but was not a tenant. We want to end the right to buy. However, while it is still in place, it is important that we clarify the legislation in those two areas. Alex Johnstone’s amendment 13 would prevent that, so I invite him not to move it.

On amendment 43, in my name, I share the wish of the committee and stakeholders to end as soon as possible the sale of social rented homes. However, I believe that tenants who have a right to buy that they are allowed to exercise should have a fair and reasonable opportunity to do so. European convention on human rights considerations are important, but I am also thinking about the impact of the notice period on tenants. It is important that tenants have time to read the guidance that the Scottish Government will produce, to consider their options and to obtain reputable financial advice. That is less likely to happen if tenants feel that they are being rushed into buying. Taking those factors into account, I believe that a minimum notice period of two years is fair and reasonable. Accordingly, I ask the committee to support amendment 43.
For reasons that I have already mentioned, I oppose Mary Fee’s amendment 44, which would reduce the notice period to one year. I know that the amendment reflects what was in the committee’s report and the views of many stakeholders who gave evidence to the committee. However, I want to start protecting social rented housing stock as soon as is reasonable. That is why I have lodged amendment 43, which will reduce the notice period from three years to two.

However, there are other things to consider. As I have already said, tenants have to be given a fair and reasonable opportunity to exercise their right to buy before it ends. ECHR considerations are important, but are not the only factor. I simply do not consider that one year is fair to tenants. I do not want tenants to rush into doing something that they cannot afford and which is not right for them. I think that there would be a real risk of that, if the period were reduced to one year. I do not believe that a shorter notice period will necessarily stop more houses being sold; it is more likely that there would be a marked spike in sales in one year than there would be in two.

For the reasons that I have outlined, I cannot support amendment 44.

Mary Fee (West Scotland) (Lab): Amendment 44, in my name, would amend section 85 and would abolish the right to buy in one year. Much of what I was going to say about abolition of the right to buy has been said. The right to buy’s time has come; we need to remove it. By seeking to reduce the timeframe for that removal to a year, my amendment reflects the evidence that we heard in committee, and it reflects the majority recommendation of the committee in its report.

Unfortunately, I do not support Alex Johnstone’s amendments 12, 13, 42 and 45. They would delete part 1 and thereby retain the right to buy.

As the minister has just explained, amendment 43 would reduce the time period for abolition of the right to buy from three years to two. Although I have sympathy with what she said, people who have the right to buy have known for a considerable time that they have it. I do not believe that shortening the period to one year will necessarily mean that people will be under pressure, or will be victimised or taken advantage of in any way. I think that one year is an adequate timeframe for people to read the guidance, get advice and come to a conclusion about whether buying is right for them. I cannot support the minister’s amendment 43. I am disappointed that the minister did not agree with the recommendation of the committee, which—after we had heard a considerable amount of evidence—was for a period of two years. I will be moving amendment 44.

Alex Johnstone: The purpose of my amendments in this group is to remove completely from the bill reference to the right to buy and, in particular, to remove completely part 1 of the bill. Amendment 12 is the key amendment, on which the issue will hinge. As a consequence, I press the amendment.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 12 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Against

Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 6, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 12 disagreed to.

Section 1 agreed to.

Section 2—Amendment of right to buy provisions

Amendment 13 not moved.

Section 2 agreed to.

Section 3—Reasonable preference in allocation of social housing

The Convener: The next group is on reasonable preference in the allocation of social housing. Amendment 14, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 1, 46 and 2.

Margaret Burgess: I want social landlords to be able to manage their stock effectively and to house tenants in the most appropriate size of property. I want tenants in social housing to be able to move to properties that suit their needs, and which they can afford. Amendment 14 will extend the existing provision in the bill so that social landlords must, when they are allocating houses, give reasonable preference to the tenants of any social landlord—not just their own—that they consider to be underoccupying, when they are allocating housing. I believe that amendment 14 will improve the provision in section 3 and will give landlords more flexibility to manage their valuable housing resources to meet tenants’ needs better.
Amendment 1 was lodged by John Lamont. I recognise that social housing is a valuable resource and that many communities and social landlords want to take local connection into account in the allocation of social housing. However, social landlords can already take local connection into account, and some landlords are already doing so. Landlords can take account of the fact that a person lives in a particular area and can give priority to local people. Amendment 1 would make it a requirement for social landlords to give reasonable preference to applicants with a local connection. I would prefer that landlords had the flexibility—as is the case at the moment—to take local connection into account if they consider it to be right for their area.

I am concerned that amendment 1 does not take housing need into account, so that landlords could be required to give reasonable preference to applicants who had a local connection but who did not have housing need. That does not fit in with our approach, which is that need should be the key factor in allocating social housing.

Amendment 46, in the name of Jackie Baillie, would remove the definition of “unmet housing needs” that section 3 currently provides, and would instead require that the circumstances for unmet housing needs be prescribed in guidance. The definition makes it clear that a person has unmet need if a social landlord concludes that they cannot meet their housing needs through the options that are available to them—in effect, that the person requires the assistance of the landlord to meet their needs adequately. Having the definition set out in the bill clearly establishes that allocations should focus on addressing cases of unmet need, and that a landlord’s “reasonable preference” categories should give priority to that. Without the definition, we would be relying solely on regulations to achieve the same effect. In my view, that would be a weaker and less robust approach.

I am aware that some stakeholders have asked for further explanation of what is meant by “unmet housing needs”. We will issue guidance on priority for allocations, and interpretation of “unmet housing needs” will be covered in that guidance. The guidance will be developed in consultation with stakeholders.

I do not want to pre-empt the guidance, but I will say that as a general principle I expect landlords, in considering whether there are unmet housing needs, to consider alternative housing options in their areas, and whether such options are accessible to the applicant. That might include consideration of whether the applicant’s needs could be met in their current property if suitable adaptations were made. I therefore think that the definition of “unmet housing needs” should remain in the bill, with further explanation in guidance.

Amendment 2 would allow landlords to take account of the length of time for which an applicant has been resident in an area, when allocating social housing. I have concerns about the approach. It could disadvantage applicants who have not lived in an area for long but who have a housing need. In addition, we have not consulted on such a proposal. I understand the motivation behind the amendment, which is that it should be possible for landlords to consider local connection and the housing needs of local people, but such consideration should be balanced with consideration of the needs of all applicants.

As I said, landlords can take account of local connection and give priority to local people, and they can consider how long an applicant has been on the housing list. Overall, therefore, the current arrangements have sufficient flexibility to enable landlords to take local connection into account, so the approach in amendment 1 is not the right way forward. I invite Mr Lamont and Ms Baillie not to move amendments 1, 2 and 46; if they do so, I invite the committee to reject all three amendments. I ask the committee to support amendment 14.

I move amendment 14.

John Lamont (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con): I will speak to amendments 1 and 2, in my name. One of the biggest issues that concern my constituents is frustration that local people cannot always secure social housing in their own communities. People are often forced to apply for and take housing in some of the larger settlements in the Borders, which might be several miles from the rest of their family and community, as well as being some distance from their place of work. Such an approach is not consistent with local housing associations’ aim to encourage a cohesive community. A few miles might not sound like a lot, but it is important to recognise that it can be a significant distance in a rural community such as the Borders.

The purpose of amendment 1, therefore, is to enable social landlords to give extra priority to applicants who have a local connection. I am not saying that having a local connection should be a trump card that overrules all other considerations. Of course applicants who are homeless or have medical needs should have priority. However, where all else is equal, a local connection should be taken into account.

Amendment 1 might have the greatest impact in rural communities such as those in my constituency, but I can see that it would also have a considerable impact in more urban areas and cities. In many ethnic minority communities want to live close to family and other members of their community, and amendment 1 would enable social landlords to accommodate such considerations.

I accept that the concept of “local” is different in each part of Scotland. What is local in the Borders will be completely different from what is local in Glasgow and other cities. Amendment 1 would therefore give social landlords discretion about how they define “particular connection”, to meet their needs. In rural areas such as the Borders, the local area might be a particular town or village, whereas in a city it might be a particular street—it might be even more specific.

Amendment 2 would simply clarify and confirm the intentions behind amendment 1.

All political parties have paid lip service to the notion of supporting a local housing allocations policy. Indeed, the Labour Party said in its 2011 manifesto that it wanted to reform the allocations system to ensure that “sufficient weight is given to meeting the needs of local people.”

I hope that the committee will support amendments 1 and 2.

Jackie Baillie (Dumbarton) (Lab): I welcome the opportunity to speak at this meeting. Amendment 46 is supported by Homeless Action Scotland, Shelter Scotland, the Legal Services Agency, Scottish Churches Housing Action and Crisis.

Members know that I am always keen to get principles into the bill itself, but in this context there might be an issue with doing that, which I will explain. Amendment 46 would place a requirement on the Scottish ministers to include a definition of “unmet housing needs” in guidance and would remove the definition from the bill. I accept much of what the minister has said, and I will come on to that, but let me first set out why we lodged amendment 46.

There is a fear that, despite the minister’s best intentions, section 3 will undermine the role of social housing—I know that that is not at all her intention. I recognise and welcome housing options and the approach that is being taken, but we need to reflect, to ensure that we have got it absolutely right.

Proposed new subsection (1ZB) of section 20 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 defines “unmet housing needs” as those

“which are not capable of being met by housing options which are available.”

That almost seems to suggest that social housing should be considered as a last resort once all other options are exhausted and that the role of social housing is somehow residual and as welfare housing. That approach, as the minister will know, is increasingly being taken in England. We would not want that approach in Scotland, which has a strong tradition of considering social housing as having a broad role in meeting housing needs. I am sure that the minister will agree with me on that.

Another concern is that the whole issue of reasonable preference appears to rest with the decision of each social landlord on whether someone’s housing needs could have been met elsewhere. It is slightly vague and it is definitely subjective with regard to how the assessment would be made, at what point it would be made, and how social landlords would be held to account if it was felt that they were not giving appropriate priority to allocating properties to persons in housing need.

There is some genuine concern about that approach, although we recognise that the intentions behind it are probably good. Having unmet housing needs defined in guidance would remove from social landlords the burden of making subjective decisions and would ensure consistency—or a degree of it—across the country, which I am sure the minister agrees would be desirable. Amendment 46 protects the role of social housing as one viable option and goes on to link allocation policies far more to strategic housing priorities.

Having said all that, I very much welcome the minister’s comments. Like her, we are keen to keep a balance and to get it absolutely right. I would be content not to move amendment 46, subject to a commitment to continuing dialogue with the minister before stage 3 to ensure that the guidance truly does reflect those concerns. Failing that, I can, of course, bring back an amendment at stage 3.

Alex Johnstone: I am speaking in favour of amendments 1 and 2. John Lamont has described his experience in the Borders and other areas of Scotland are affected by similar pressures, which sometimes manifest themselves in slightly different forms. My experience in the north-east is that my postbag often contains communications from people who have been allocated housing in a neighbouring town, which may be 10 miles away and may be in the catchment area for a different secondary school. With poor public transport, such a move often threatens the opportunity for individuals to maintain employment, which is a particular difficulty.

Another very specific difficulty, which has been brought to my attention on many occasions, is the housing pressures that exist in villages in the national park area, for example. There have been a number of examples of people from Ballater—people who have been born and brought up in that community—who find the housing pressure so great that it is impossible for them to be allocated social housing in that area or anywhere near it. As a result, cohesive communities can begin to break down as young people are driven out of an area because of the inability to provide housing locally.

The subject that John Lamont has raised is one that needs to be addressed in greater detail. Amendments 1 and 2 would be a significant step towards allowing us to take that consideration into account.

Margaret Burgess: I am not dismissing amendments 1 and 2, in the name of John Lamont, out of hand—I am sympathetic—but I believe that social landlords can already take local connection into account when allocating housing. We are also concerned that amendment 1 does not require the applicant to have unmet housing needs. That cuts across the clear intention that housing need should be the priority in the allocation of social housing. The existing Scottish Government guidance sets out how a landlord can take into account residency and local connection when making housing allocations and we will revise that guidance to clarify that point further.

On amendment 46, in my view, having the definition of “unmet housing needs” on the face of the bill establishes clearly that landlords should focus on cases of unmet need. I understand what Jackie Baillie said about ensuring that that is not abused and that we do not look on social housing as welfare housing. We are certainly not looking to what is happening with social housing in other parts of the United Kingdom.

10:30

Having the definition in the bill should give landlords some flexibility, which I think they require to have, on who should have priority for housing. They should continue to focus on housing need to target those in the reasonable preference categories and those who are unable to access alternative housing solutions and to enable tenants to downsize. However, I am willing to work with Jackie Baillie before stage 3 to ensure that she is satisfied that what we put in the guidance will cover what amendment 46 seeks.

Amendment 14 agreed to.

Amendment 1 moved—[John Lamont].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 1 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 6, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 1 disagreed to.

Amendment 46 not moved.

Amendment 2 moved—[John Lamont].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 2 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 6, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 2 disagreed to.

Section 3, as amended, agreed to.

Section 4—Rules on priority of allocation of housing: consultation

The Convener: The next group is on guidance published by the Scottish ministers on social housing matters. Amendment 15, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 17, 19 and 28.

Margaret Burgess: I will begin by speaking to an aspect of all four amendments. I am happy to accept the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee’s recommendation, which was endorsed by this committee, that the guidance that is issued under the powers conferred by sections 4, 7 and 8 should be consulted on and published. That recommendation is included in amendments 15, 17 and 19. Amendment 28 also includes a requirement to consult on and publish the guidance that is issued under section 15, to ensure consistency in the way in which guidance is issued.

I have noted the committee’s and stakeholders’ recommendation that clear guidance should be published on section 7 of the bill, which relates to suspension an applicant from receiving an offer of housing. I am happy to accept that recommendation, and amendment 17 extends the power to issue guidance on suspensions so that a wider range of issues can be covered.

Along with the requirement to consult on and publish guidance, amendment 19 does two additional things. First, it requires that the housing support services that the landlord considers appropriate are provided for tenants with the new short Scottish secure tenancy for antisocial behaviour. That is consistent with the requirements at present for other short Scottish secure tenancies on antisocial behaviour grounds.
The requirement to provide support services is intended to enable the short tenancy to be converted to a Scottish secure tenancy at the end of 12 months.

Secondly, amendment 19 ensures that the statutory guidance on the new short Scottish secure tenancy covers all the actions that a landlord can take around this type of tenancy; for example, there will be guidance on landlords’ powers to extend the term of this type of tenancy for a further six months. That will help to ensure that the necessary checks and balances are in place and that there is clarity about how the process should operate.

Amendment 28 introduces a power for the Scottish ministers to consult on and publish statutory guidance on recovering possession of a tenancy under the new simplified eviction process.
The committee recommended in its stage 1 report that the guidance on the implementation of this measure include an emphasis on the importance of balancing the rights of both tenants and landlords and that it provide clarity on the types of conviction that might lead to an eviction. Social landlords should use the new simplified eviction process only where a tenant or a member of their household has been convicted of serious antisocial or criminal behaviour in the locality of a tenancy. The new simplified eviction process is not intended to be used where a tenant or a member of their household has been convicted of a minor offence that has not caused any harm to the community. The amendment will allow the Government to address the committee’s recommendation on what should be included in guidance and will help to ensure that tenants have additional protection against inappropriate evictions.

I move amendment 15 and ask the committee to support all four amendments in the group.

Amendment 15 agreed to.

Section 4, as amended, agreed to.

After section 4

The Convener: The next group is on factors to be considered in the allocation of social housing.
Amendment 49, in the name of Mary Fee, is grouped with amendment 16.

Mary Fee: Amendment 49 seeks to give social landlords more flexibility in their allocations policy in order to benefit the sustainability of communities and localities. As we heard in evidence, social landlords want that flexibility. For example, Jim Hayton of the Association of Local Authority Chief Housing Officers told us:

“Councils ... absolutely accept that the principle should be based on need, but that should not involve following a set of rules blindly without regard to the make-up of a community and what is likely to lead to sustainability ... it is about allowing landlords to make sensible decisions in the interests of a sustainable community life”—[Official Report, Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee, 5 March 2014; c 2714.]

while not ignoring the principle of housing need. I know of examples of local letting initiatives in my area, and I believe that it is important to give local authorities and RSLs a degree of flexibility as it helps to strengthen, build and maintain communities. We should not forget that RSLs and local authorities know best what is good for their communities. Ultimately, we all want sustainable communities that have good solid working relationships, and giving RSLs and councils more flexibility in their own areas, which, as I have said, they know better than anyone else, would help to develop, support and build those kinds of communities.

I believe that amendment 16, in the name of the minister, would remove that flexibility. The proposal in question was included in the bill at the last minute, was not consulted on and is being removed with equal haste. I have to say that I am not sure why the minister is removing it with such haste. There is merit in allowing flexibility in allocations policy; I accept that there has to be some guidance on the matter to ensure that there is no discrimination, but I believe that amendment 49 in my name would give councils the flexibility that they told us in evidence they want and would help to build sustainable communities. For that reason, I ask the committee to support amendment 49 and reject amendment 16, in the name of the minister.

I move amendment 49.

Margaret Burgess: I recognise that landlords have a difficult job in managing allocations—indeed, all MSPs will be only too aware of that—and, as we know, problems between neighbours can cause distress for the individuals concerned and give rise to challenges and costs for landlords.
However, I am not convinced that amendment 49, which Mary Fee has just spoken to, is the way forward to address these issues.

As Mary Fee has suggested, landlords already have flexibility within legislation to make sensitive lets, and I am not clear what amendment 49 would add in that respect. When making allocations, landlords can already take account of the overall circumstances, including an individual’s housing needs and the housing options that are available, and the revised guidance on allocations that will be produced will include advice on making sensitive lettings. In addition, the bill contains additional measures to help landlords tackle antisocial behaviour.

I well understand the importance of making appropriate and sustainable allocations; after all, it is in the interest not only of the tenant who is being housed but of the neighbours and the wider community. However, I think the measures that we already have, along with the bill’s antisocial behaviour provisions, will achieve the same effect. I therefore ask Mary Fee not to press amendment 49 and, if she does, I ask the committee to reject it.

Amendment 16 is a Government amendment that removes section 5 from the bill. Section 5 would have enabled landlords to take age into account in allocating social houses. I point out that the process was not rushed in any way. I know that section 5 was not in the bill initially and was not consulted on and that it has provoked a strong reaction. Landlords are understandably keen to have flexibility to manage their stock effectively; others, such as Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People, are concerned about the potential for discrimination against young people.

In the past few months, I have met stakeholders and have listened closely to all the points that have been made. As I indicated to the committee in my letter of 2 May, I have weighed up all the arguments and have decided to lodge amendment 16 to remove section 5 from the bill.

That was not an easy decision. I recognise that landlords have a challenging task and that there are difficult decisions to be made in allocating social housing. However, I think that the decision is the right one for the following reasons. First, age is not, of itself, an indicator of need and our housing allocations policy is based on making allocations to those in most need. I make it clear that I do not think that landlords would seek to discriminate against young people or any other group, but I am concerned about the potential for certain vulnerable groups to end up being disadvantaged in the allocation of housing.

Secondly, landlords have given me examples of where they would like to take age into account, in many cases to prevent difficulties between neighbours—for example, they would like to restrict allocations to a certain age group where there is a block of predominantly older people.

I am aware of the difficulties, which Mary Fee mentioned, that can exist when neighbours are antisocial or when neighbours with different lifestyles live next door to each other. It does not follow that it is only young people who lead chaotic lives and only older people who do not. The reverse can also be true.

Where there is the potential for clashes of lifestyle, there is already scope in the legal framework to make sensitive lets. Some landlords already make effective use of sensitive lets, and I think that more use could be made of that flexibility. I want to work closely with landlords to develop guidance to provide more advice on how sensitive lets can be used effectively in allocations without discriminating against any age group.

Finally, on the point about tenants behaving in an antisocial way and causing nuisance or distress to neighbours, I am introducing additional measures through the bill to help landlords deal with antisocial behaviour.

For those reasons, I think that it is right that age should not be taken into account in the allocation of social housing. I am grateful to the committee for its recommendations and to landlords and other stakeholders for their input and considered advice on this section. I have listened to all sides of the debate and have thought long and hard about the correct course of action. As a result, I have decided to lodge amendment 16 to remove section 5 from the bill and I ask the committee to support it.

Alex Johnstone: When the bill was published, I liked some bits better than others. I have to say that section 5 was one of the bits that I liked better. My experience from casework in the north-east—particularly in Arbroath, where a number of such cases have arisen—is that it is surprising how often the inappropriate combination of tenants in a block or next door to each other can result in what you and I might consider quite reasonable behaviour being a cause for complaint and, ultimately, the cause of accusations of antisocial behaviour. I therefore think that it is important that such sensitivities can be properly taken into account and I believe that section 5 would have that effect.

The minister has spoken at some length about the powers that currently exist and the concept of sensitive lets. I believe that they go some way towards achieving their objective, but I am extremely disappointed that the minister, having published section 5 in the bill as introduced, feels at this stage that it is necessary to take it out.
10:45

The Convener: The minister will be aware that there has been heavy lobbying from the likes of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities in relation to this proposal, and something that has stuck in my memory is a more elderly woman telling us at our evidence-taking session with tenants groups during our away day in Dumbarton that she did not want to be housed next to loads of elderly folk and that she would rather live in a mixed community. The evidence suggests that we cannot please all of the people all of the time, but I wonder whether the minister will assure us that the reissued guidance on this matter will take the issue of sensitive lets into account. I know that in the north-east people are allowed to turn down a house three times; although they must take the next house that they are offered, they still have some choice about where they live.

Margaret Burgess: I have already indicated that I am keen to and will work very closely with stakeholders including local authorities, COSLA and RSLs to ensure that the guidance covers the issue of sensitive lets in a way that is not discriminatory. We absolutely recognise and want to address the difficulties that Alex Johnstone and Mary Fee highlighted and of which we are all aware, but we think that we can use the flexibility that already exists and work with stakeholders to ensure that the guidance addresses sensitive lets in a meaningful way. That is certainly our aim.

Mary Fee: I have listened very carefully to the minister. She has acknowledged that there are issues around the allocation of housing, and I am sure that she wants to build strong and sustainable communities as much as I do. However, I believe that amendment 49 would have given local authorities the flexibility to do that by allowing them to take a number of different issues into account without discriminating against anyone. Such an approach would have given local authorities the ability to build strong communities and, indeed, to work with communities on developing and providing sustainability in the areas they live in. I accept the minister’s comment about guidance and look forward to seeing whatever guidance she produces in the long term. However, I will press amendment 49. Although I have sympathy with what the minister has proposed, I cannot support amendment 16, and I will abstain on it when it comes to the vote.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 49 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)

Against

Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 49 disagreed to.

Section 5—Factors which may be considered in allocation: age

Amendment 16 moved—[Margaret Burgess].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 16 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

Against

Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)

Abstentions

Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 1, Abstentions 2.

Amendment 16 agreed to.

Section 6 agreed to.

Section 7—Determination of minimum period for application to remain in force

Amendment 17 moved—[Margaret Burgess].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 17 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

Against

Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 17 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on the minimum period for application to remain in force. Amendment 18, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Margaret Burgess: I want landlords to have the flexibility to manage allocations effectively, which may in certain circumstances include suspending an applicant or tenant from receiving an offer of housing for a period. A landlord should also have the flexibility to review its decision and to withdraw or shorten a suspension, if circumstances change. If the reasons for an applicant’s having been suspended change, he or she could apply to the landlord to have the suspension reviewed, and it could be lifted.

Amendment 18 makes it clear that a landlord has the right to shorten or withdraw a suspension if it chooses to. It will not enable a landlord to increase the period of a suspension; it can only shorten or withdraw the suspension.

I move amendment 18.

Amendment 18 agreed to.

Section 7, as amended, agreed to.

After section 7

The Convener: The next group is on duties with respect to homelessness. Amendment 3, in the name of Jim Hume, is grouped with amendment 8.

Jim Hume (South Scotland) (LD): I welcome the opportunity to speak in support of my amendment 3, which aims to ensure that all statutory homelessness referrals from local authorities to registered social landlords are dealt with as referrals under section 5 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001.

I am aware that some social landlords are not in favour of my amendment and prefer to use informal nominations for homelessness. However, a section 5 referral not only ensures a consistent and transparent approach to housing homeless households, but affords certain safeguards to the people in those households, who are among our most vulnerable members of society. For example, if a person’s application is the subject of a section 5 referral, they have the right to a response from the registered social landlord within a reasonable period, and their request will not be declined without good reason, which could be lack of stock.

The use of a less formal approach is harder to monitor. Given the importance of the issue, we must ensure that the system is robust. That is possible only through effective monitoring, which would be made easier through mandatory use of section 5 referrals.

I want to move from only 65 per cent of homeless households being referred under section 5 and afforded all the relevant safeguards to 100 per cent of homeless households being in that situation. I refer the committee to the Scottish Housing Regulator’s 2009 report on homelessness, which said that councils should work more effectively with RSLs. The regulator said that there are “some specific areas where current practices could be improved ... This may mean setting aside their current reluctance to use section 5 powers.”

We have an opportunity to iron out inconsistent practice among local authorities in referring homeless households to registered social landlords. We must ensure that those families enjoy the safeguards that they deserve, and that the system is more transparent and consistent.

It is not just I who would appreciate committee members’ support for my amendment; the many homeless people who are not given the safeguards of a section 5 referral would also appreciate it. The amendment would help them and all of us to go a long way towards fighting homelessness wherever possible.

I move amendment 3.

Jim Eadie (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP): I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to amendment 8, which is a probing amendment. I am also pleased to have the support of my colleague Alex Rowley, which underlines the cross-party support on the issue.

Amendment 8 would ensure that homeless children and homeless pregnant women are not placed in temporary housing that is of a very poor physical standard or is in serious disrepair. The amendment would give homeless households that include pregnant women and children the right to challenge their placement in temporary accommodation that is of a very poor standard. The majority of temporary accommodation is of a good standard and is an important positive step away from what would otherwise be a crisis of homelessness for the people and families who are affected.

It is worth noting that amendment 8 would affect only a fairly small percentage of vulnerable households and would not have a big impact on local authorities. I record my appreciation for the work of Shelter Scotland, Debbie King and Fiona King in highlighting the issue.

The proposed measure would be a key safeguard for families who are placed in very poor-quality temporary accommodation that it is unhealthy and dangerous for children to live in.
Amendment 8 would not have an impact on the majority of families who are in good-quality temporary accommodation, but for those who find themselves in damp, derelict and substandard housing, it would provide a lifeline.

Families who are in temporary accommodation are already vulnerable, and living in temporary accommodation that is in poor physical repair is an additional burden that has a serious impact on their health, wellbeing and ability to cope.

Shelter Scotland has also asked the Government to commit to amending the Homeless Persons (Unsuitable Accommodation) (Scotland) Order 2004 as soon as the bill receives royal assent, because that would allow households to challenge local authorities about temporary accommodation that is in poor physical repair. Shelter Scotland has argued strongly in favour of my amendment 8, which it believes is necessary because it has acted on behalf of families who have been in temporary accommodation that is in a terrible state of repair. Shelter strongly contends that it has been unable to challenge local authorities using the current legislation. This specific issue is not covered by existing legislation, and although the code of guidance defines good practice around temporary accommodation, that is not legislation, so vulnerable families currently have no recourse to challenge the conditions that they face.

Amendment 8 will protect the most vulnerable households in temporary accommodation—those that include pregnant women and children—and it will affect only a very small, but important, number of households. We have seen how successful the existing legislation has been in preventing families from being put in bed and breakfast accommodation, with a reduction in the use of such accommodation of 92 per cent over the past 10 years. I believe that this small change will prevent families not only from being put in unsuitable types of temporary accommodation, but from being put in accommodation that is in poor physical repair—for example, accommodation that has extreme damp.

For all those reasons, I hope that the Scottish Government will welcome my amendment and support its inclusion in the bill. I strongly urge the Government to instruct its officials to engage with Shelter Scotland in a serious, meaningful and constructive dialogue in order to address the concerns that it has raised, and to explore what further progress may be possible in advance of stage 3. I also request that the minister meet me, Shelter Scotland and Alex Rowley to further discuss and explore the issues.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 3, in the name of Jim Hume, would place a duty on the local authority to use section 5 of the 2001 act every time it asked a registered social landlord to rehouse a homeless household. I do not believe that that is necessary or appropriate. Local authorities already have the power to use section 5 to request that registered social landlords rehouse a homeless household. They can choose to use the power if they decide that it is necessary.

Local authorities and RSLs have indicated that they see no need to have section 5 referrals made a mandatory route for rehousing homeless households. I am therefore concerned that, if amendment 3 were passed, it could damage the positive working relationships that local authorities and RSLs have developed, which could in turn impact on outcomes for homeless people.

I do not consider that there is evidence to justify the change that is proposed in amendment 3. It is not supported by local authorities or RSLs, so I invite Jim Hume to seek to withdraw amendment 3, and I ask the committee not to support it.

I turn to amendment 8, in the name of Jim Eadie. I do not consider that it is necessary to amend the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 for unsuitable accommodation orders. Before I talk about the detail of amendment 8, I want to make the committee aware that the Scottish Government is working with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other stakeholders, including Shelter, to develop a standard for temporary accommodation. The work is well under way and the aim is to develop clear standards by this summer.

Amendment 8 seeks to require a definition for “applicant with family commitments”. That is already set out in the Homeless Persons (Unsuitable Accommodation) (Scotland) Order 2004. It covers applicants who are pregnant, applicants with whom a pregnant woman resides or might reasonably be expected to reside, and applicants with whom dependent children reside or might reasonably be expected to reside. I assume that amendment 8 seeks to cover that group of vulnerable people.

The second part of amendment 8 seeks to introduce the tests of “reasonably fit for human habitation” and “wind and watertight” to the unsuitable accommodation order. Under that order, accommodation must be suitable for children, so it must already be fit for human habitation and be wind and watertight. The unsuitable accommodation order sets out the criteria that accommodation must meet. It must have adequate toilet and personal washing facilities for the exclusive use of the household. It must be able to be used by the household 24 hours a day and, importantly, it must be suitable for occupation by children.

The “Code of Guidance on Homelessness” provides further statutory guidance to local authorities. In order to comply with the code, local authorities must apply their own houses in multiple occupation standards when considering whether accommodation is appropriate.

The “Code of Guidance on Homelessness” provides further statutory guidance to local authorities. In order to comply with the code, local authorities must apply their own houses in multiple occupation standards when considering whether accommodation is appropriate.

Although the Homeless Persons (Unsuitable Accommodation) (Scotland) Order 2004 allows exceptions to be made, a local authority must always ensure that accommodation meets the safety standard for children. A household that has been placed in accommodation that its members consider to be unsuitable has the right under the homelessness legislation to ask the local authority to review its decision. That covers the temporary accommodation that they have been placed in, so there is an existing legal right to challenge the local authority’s decision to place them there. I believe that the existing legislation provides significant safeguards. In addition, the work that is being taken forward by the temporary accommodation standards group will set agreed minimum standards. I ask members to reject amendment 8.

On Jim Eadie’s point, I have not yet been persuaded by the arguments that have been put forward, but I am more than willing to meet Jim Eadie, Alex Rowley and Shelter Scotland to discuss the issue in more detail before stage 3.

The Convener: I ask Jim Hume to wind up and to say whether he wishes to press or to seek to withdraw amendment 3.

Jim Hume: Thank you, convener. I am obviously disappointed that the minister is not at this stage minded to support amendment 3, and that she talks about local authorities having the choice of whether to use the section 5 referral. However, the facts and figures show that not all local authorities are doing that. Amendment 3 is obviously about the rights of people who are homeless: God forbid that any of us find ourselves in such a situation.

I obviously do not agree that what amendment 3 proposes would create a bad relationship between social landlords and tenants, because all the amendment proposes is that there be a response within a reasonable period, and that a homeless person should not be declined without good reason. I do not see that as being too onerous.

I appreciate that the minister has offered to meet Jim Eadie, Alex Rowley and Shelter Scotland. Of course, Shelter Scotland also supports my amendment 3 and worked hard on it with me. I request that the minister meet me, too, regarding my amendment. I press amendment 3.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 3 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 0, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 3 disagreed to.

Section 8—Creation of short Scottish secure tenancy: antisocial behaviour

Amendment 19 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on the short Scottish secure tenancy created on antisocial behaviour grounds. Amendment 50, in the name of Mary Fee, is grouped with amendments 20 to 24, 39 and 40. I ask Mary Fee to move amendment 50 and to speak to all the amendments in the group. I hope that you do not have to say “short Scottish secure tenancy”.

Mary Fee: No. I will say “SSST”, which is much easier.

Amendment 50 would amend section 8 by requiring landlords to notify the tenant of the details of the behaviour that had led to the service of a notice that the tenant is being moved to an SSST. More important is that the section would also detail the guidance and support that the landlord would be expected to provide to support the tenant to move back to a more sustained tenancy, thereby benefiting both the tenant and the community.

Our aim is to have tenants living in secure and settled housing; supporting individuals is a crucial part of that. I am grateful to Shelter Scotland for its support. It is important that a person who is being placed on an SSST has a full understanding of the behaviour that has brought them to that circumstance. A number of factors could have led to that, and there could be mitigation because of family circumstances, for example. However, it is very important that the person is in absolutely no doubt as to why they are in the position that they are in.

I ask members to reject amendment 8.
Just as important is that the landlord must work with the person, and must detail what support will be offered and given, as well as how they will work through the situation with the person in order to move them back on to a more secure footing. We all want people to be living in sustained housing, to be happy, to be taking part in their community and to be part of community life. It is incumbent on us to work with individuals to ensure that that is the case.

I support amendment 20, which is in the minister’s name. It will give greater clarity and it will tidy up the wording of section 8.

Amendments 21 and 22, which are also in the minister’s name, are linked. I would be grateful if the minister could explain in a bit more detail the meaning behind amendment 21 in particular. She talks about removing provision for an SSST, but she says that it can continue by express agreement or “tacit relocation”. Perhaps the minister could clarify exactly what she means by “tacit relocation”.

Amendment 23, which is also in the minister’s name, is a tidying-up amendment, which clarifies some wording. I am happy to accept it.

Amendment 24 is linked to amendments 21 and 22. Perhaps the minister could give me a bit more clarity around the thinking behind those three amendments. I would appreciate that.

Amendments 39 and 40, which are also in the minister’s name, will provide additional clarity. They will tighten up the wording of schedule 2. I support both the amendments.

I move amendment 50.

Margaret Burgess: First, I will deal with Mary Fee’s amendment 50, which would require specific information to be included in the notice by the landlord who is, because of antisocial behaviour, converting a tenancy to a short Scottish secure tenancy.

Amendment 50 is in two parts, as Mary Fee explained. First, I will speak to paragraph (a) of new subsection (2A), which the amendment proposes to introduce to section 8. The proposed paragraph (a) seeks to place a requirement on landlords to provide “details of the actions of the tenant or person that have caused the landlord to issue the notice”.

I agree with Mary Fee that a tenant should be provided with that information, which will allow the tenant to challenge the decision to convert the tenancy—either with their landlord or in court—if they think that it is wrong. However, I instead propose what is in amendment 20, which will place such a requirement on landlords in the notice to the tenant. On paragraph (a) in the provisions proposed in Mary Fee’s amendment 50, I am willing to work to ensure that we are clear on the matter. I am absolutely clear that the tenant should get that information. They should be advised of what the offence is, and of which member of the household committed the offence. I will work with Mary Fee to ensure that amendment 20 covers that.

Paragraph (b) in amendment 50’s proposed new section 8(2A) seeks to place an additional requirement on landlords to include details of “the support the landlord proposes to provide to the tenant or person in order to assist the tenant to sustain a ... tenancy.”

We all agree that we want tenants to sustain their tenancies.

Landlords have flexibility in legislation to provide, or ensure the provision of,

“such housing support services as they consider appropriate” to enable the tenancy to convert to a short Scottish secure tenancy. There are good reasons for that flexibility. For example, it is often the case that tenants will not engage with their landlords to allow them to assess what their support needs are. In some cases, it is not the landlords themselves who will be providing or arranging the support. Support that the landlord considers to be appropriate may already be in place, having been provided by another organisation such as an addiction centre or a money advice centre.

A tenant may choose to refuse support, or support may not be what is needed to change the behaviour of someone who, for example, used to have wild parties at the weekend, but who then recognised that that was not appropriate and agreed to take action on that. I do not want to place undue burdens on landlords to provide support when that is not what is needed, or if it is already being provided by another organisation. I absolutely understand the purpose behind Mary Fee’s amendment 50, but I believe that landlords need to continue to have flexibility around providing housing support services in antisocial behaviour cases.

For those reasons, I invite Mary Fee to seek to withdraw amendment 50.

My amendments in the group are technical amendments that will ensure better operation of the bill’s proposals. As I mentioned, amendment 20 deals with the notice that is issued to a tenant to convert a tenancy to a short SST on antisocial behaviour grounds. As I indicated, I want to ensure that we cover some of the areas that Mary Fee mentioned. The change will ensure that the tenant has enough information to challenge the decision, if they wish to do so.
Amendments 21, 22, 23, 24, 39 and 40 are technical amendments that deal with operational matters. The amendments will provide further clarity in the bill on the rules that apply specifically to short SSTs that are created on antisocial behaviour grounds.

Amendments 21, 22 and 23 will ensure that the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 is clear about the term of the short SST for antisocial behaviour. The intention is that those tenancies will convert back to secure tenancies at the end of the 12-month period, provided that the landlord has not taken action either to extend the SSST for a further six months or to recover possession of the tenancy in court. Mary Fee asked about tacit relocation; that is when a lease continues because neither the landlord nor the tenant has done anything to stop it. Amendments 21 to 23 are purely technical amendments; they bring about no changes.

Amendment 24 clarifies the circumstances under the 2001 act in which a court must make an order for recovery of possession of a tenancy in cases where the new short SST for antisocial behaviour applies. This technical amendment will ensure, as intended, that the court must make an order for recovery of possession at the end of the 12-month term—or, if the tenancy has been extended, the 18-month term—if the landlord has properly followed the process to end the short SST.

Amendments 39 and 40 will add the new short SST for antisocial behaviour to the types of accommodation that are considered to be permanent accommodation for the purposes of discharging a social landlord’s homelessness duty. That will ensure consistency of approach with what happens currently where short SSTs have been granted because of an antisocial behaviour order, or in situations in which there has been an order for recovery of possession of a tenancy for antisocial behaviour in the past three years. The amendments are just about consistency.

In conclusion, I invite Mary Fee to seek to withdraw amendment 50 and I ask the committee to support the technical amendments 21, 22, 23, 24, 39 and 40.

Mary Fee: I am grateful to the minister for her explanation of the issues that I queried. That has helped to clarify the thinking and intention behind the amendments.

On amendment 50, I am grateful to the minister for agreeing to work with me on the issue in the first part of my amendment. I look forward to working with her to ensure that we find a suitable way of working through that.

I am less happy about the fact that the minister does not seem to agree with me that landlords have a duty to explain or detail the support that will be available to people who are on a short SST. That support could range from simple signposting to more detailed intervention. However, given the minister’s assurance that she will work with me on the first part of the amendment, I am content to seek to withdraw amendment 50 at this time. However, I will reintroduce the issue that is in the second part of my amendment at a later stage if I cannot make progress with the minister.

Amendment 50, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendment 20 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 8, as amended, agreed to.

Section 9 agreed to.

Section 10—Short Scottish secure tenancy: term

Amendments 21 to 23 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 10, as amended, agreed to.

Section 11 agreed to.

Section 12—Short Scottish secure tenancy: recovery of possession

Amendment 24 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 12, as amended, agreed to.

Section 13—Assignation, sublet and joint tenancy of Scottish secure tenancy

11:15

The Convener: The next group is on the Scottish secure tenancy: assignation, sublet, joint tenancy and succession. Amendment 25, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 26, 27 and 47.

Margaret Burgess: Sections 13 and 14 introduce a 12-month qualifying period for persons other than spouses and civil partners in relation to joint tenancy and assigning, subletting and succeeding to a tenancy. There will be a requirement to notify the landlord of residency.

The purpose of the provisions is to help to ensure the best use of social housing, by limiting the potential for abuse of joint tenancy, assignation, subletting and succession. However, the provisions on notification of residency might be too restrictive. Sections 13 and 14 do not allow for a situation in which the current or previous tenant has notified the landlord that another person is living in their home. In practice, it is often the tenant who notifies the landlord that someone has moved into their home. Indeed, the tenancy agreement might require such notification to come from the tenant.

Amendments 25, 26 and 27 are minor technical amendments, which will help to ensure that the new 12-month residency requirement for joint tenancy, assignation, subletting and succession operates fairly and effectively in practice, by allowing for a situation in which the current or previous tenant has notified the landlord that someone is living in their home.

Amendment 47, in the name of Jackie Baillie, would remove section 14, which changes the residency rules in relation to succession. Currently, the only residency requirement in law that relates to succession to a tenancy on a tenant’s death is the six-month qualifying period for a cohabitee. That means that there is no residency requirement that a family member or carer must meet before they take over a tenancy on the death of a tenant. Landlords have told us that in some cases people have moved into properties for only a few weeks or days so that they could succeed to the tenancy. That is clearly not the best use of social housing stock, which is an issue that the bill aims to address.

In its evidence to the committee, Carers Scotland expressed concern that section 14 will potentially disadvantage unpaid carers. I do not think that that will happen. In exceptional circumstances, landlords have the flexibility—depending on how they frame their allocations policies—to decide that a person merits the allocation of a tenancy even when they do not qualify to succeed to it. Landlords can consider each case on an individual basis and can decide to use that flexibility, for example if a carer has had to give up their home and move to another part of the country to care for a terminally ill relative, even if the carer has not lived in the house for the 12-month qualifying period before the tenant dies.

Amendment 27 will allow the notification of residency at a property as a person’s only or principal home, for succession purposes, to come from the tenant or the person themselves. The approach will help the provisions on succession to work fairly and effectively in practice.

I ask the committee to reject amendment 47 and thereby retain section 14 and to support amendments 25, 26 and 27.

I move amendment 25.

Jackie Baillie: I thank the convener for giving me the opportunity to speak to amendment 47, which has already excited a bit of comment on Twitter.

I took the time to consider the stage 1 report. The minister is right to say that a number of housing organisations, particularly providers, welcomed the Government’s intentions, but a number of them remain concerned. It is right that we test those concerns, including those of Carers Scotland. Amendment 47 is supported by Homeless Action Scotland, Shelter Scotland, the Legal Services Agency, Scottish Churches Housing Action and Crisis, so it does not come from nowhere.

What I struggled with most was finding the evidence to suggest that we should change the period to 12 months. As I far as I could see, the policy memorandum appeared to be silent on the matter. I know that my colleague Mary Fee asked about the background to the proposed change and that the information was not forthcoming. Despite the explanation that the minister has provided, I still struggle to understand why a period of 12 months is thought to be preferable to one of six months. I can understand the desire to have consistency, but I do not understand why the period has to be 12 months.

The concern centres on carers. If a carer has given up their principal home to care for someone and that person dies after four months or eight months rather than after 12 months, they will face a genuine practical difficulty. Carers are motivated mostly by their desire to care rather than by a timescale, so they will not necessarily remember to notify the landlord in the required way and, if the tenant is ill, the tenant might not remember to notify the landlord of what has taken place. I acknowledge what you say about flexibility. Nevertheless, I am concerned that, unintentionally, we might increase the risk of homelessness.

There are one or two people who will test the system, but I think that the overwhelming majority try to do the right thing by the person who is being cared for and the right thing in terms of housing, and I ask the Government to reflect on the issue further to ensure that we get the provisions right.

What is proposed is also an erosion of the rights of unmarried partners, because the qualifying period is being doubled. Despite the minister’s explanation, I have no appreciation of why that is being done. Some partners might have been in the property for less than 12 months but in a stable relationship for considerably longer than that. At the point at which someone is bereaved, we will just add to their grief in a completely unhelpful way.

I recognise that a balance needs to be struck. I know that, in its report, the committee sought clarification. We want to find out about the policy basis on which the Government made its decision. It is appropriate to make changes—some people have certainly argued that that is the case—but I think that the way in which it has been done opens the way to unintended consequences.
I am prepared not to move amendment 47 if the minister indicates that she will take the opportunity to reflect on the matter further with those who have concerns to ensure that we get the balance absolutely right.

Margaret Burgess: I note the points that Jackie Baillie has made. I absolutely agree that carers do not operate on a timescale and that they are there to care. I well understand the concerns that they have highlighted.

I think that landlords have flexibility on the matter and can consider cases on an individual basis, but I am happy to take on board Jackie Baillie’s suggestion and to hold further discussions before stage 3.

Amendment 25 agreed to.

Amendment 26 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 13, as amended, agreed to.

Section 14—Succession to Scottish secure tenancy

Amendment 27 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Does Jackie Baillie wish to move amendment 47?

Jackie Baillie: I am happy not to move amendment 47 in the light of the minister’s comments.

Amendment 47 not moved.

Section 14, as amended, agreed to.

Section 15—Grounds for eviction: antisocial behaviour

Amendment 28 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 15, as amended, agreed to.

Section 16 agreed to.

After section 16

The Convener: The next group is on a Scottish starter tenancy. After that, I intend that we will have a short comfort break of five minutes. [Interruption.]

Sorry—I forgot to call amendment 8, in the name of Jim Eadie. Jim, do you want to move or not move amendment 8?

Jim Eadie: I will not move it, but do I have an opportunity to—

The Convener: Do you want to say something?

Jim Eadie: Please.

The Convener: Okay. On you go.

Jim Eadie: I will not move my amendment 8 today in view of the minister’s commitment to meet me, Shelter Scotland and Alex Rowley to explore the issues that I highlighted on behalf of Shelter Scotland this morning.

I note that the minister is not minded to accept amendment 8, but I would like to reiterate and place on record the point that there appears to be an inconsistency that requires further clarification. The Government is clear that the current legislation allows families that are placed in temporary accommodation to challenge that, while Shelter Scotland, based on its experience on the ground, contends strongly that that is not currently possible.

Further clarification on that point is necessary primarily because, although we are talking about a small number of people who are placed in temporary accommodation, we are talking about the most vulnerable people, who are pregnant women and children. If they are not able to mount a legal challenge, that strikes me as something that is not acceptable in a civilised society. I do not believe that the Government wants that to be the case and I feel that further clarification is necessary.

However, I very much welcome the minister’s commitment to meet me, Shelter Scotland and Alex Rowley. I know that the minister is always willing to engage constructively and to listen to reasoned arguments that are put forward throughout the passage of the bill.

The Convener: Okay, so Jim Eadie is not moving amendment 8. [Laughter.]

Amendment 8 not moved.

The Convener: Just before we have a short break, we will deal with the next group, which is on a Scottish starter tenancy. Amendment 51, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is grouped with amendment 57.

Alex Johnstone: Convener, I am delighted that you have offered everybody a short break after this group. I was intending to take hours over my amendment.

I hate it when people bring along amendments that take up whole sheets of paper, but here I am doing it myself. However, I reassure members that much of my amendment is simply a means to an end. The key element that I wish to talk about is subsection (5).

I believe that the Government consulted on the idea of an initial tenancy at an early stage of the bill, but it did not appear in the bill that was eventually introduced.
One of the problems in Scotland today is that a significant minority of people who enter social housing seem to step into a revolving door. They find themselves continually going round the system and in many cases become homeless again and require to be rehoused. Much of that is caused by the fact that we fail to give adequate or appropriate levels of support. My proposal would require the creation of a starter tenancy, which would require appropriate levels of support to be given and an appropriate appeals mechanism and dispute resolution system to be put in place. That would allow new, first-time tenants to go into a system in which support is provided and there is a clear route, through the supported period, to their becoming secure tenants at the end of it.

That objective would, I believe, help to ensure that we create more stable tenancies at the outset and would deliver, at the end of the process, a block of tenants across Scotland who are less likely to fall into the mechanisms that we have discussed a lot today.

11:30

Many housing providers already provide such support, but the problem is that such provision is not universal. By creating a Scottish starter tenancy, I believe that the vast majority of tenants could be supported through to a full tenancy, which will give stability. I am aware that a similar type of tenancy exists in England and that increasing levels of success are being reported in supporting people into stable tenancies. It was an oversight not to include such a provision in the bill initially. If the measure is properly applied, we can achieve good results with this direction of travel.

As we are at stage 2, I am keen for the minister to respond not to the exact wording that I have drafted but to the principles that I am raising.

I move amendment 51.

Mark Griffin (Central Scotland) (Lab): I have a degree of sympathy with Alex Johnstone’s amendment 51. I accept that he wants to have a discussion on the principles, but I feel that I need to go into the wording. If we are to consider starter tenancies and how they assist tenants, we need to consider the reasons why those tenancies should be terminated. Those reasons should be to do with the sustainability of local communities and how behaviour, or antisocial behaviour, affects communities. I do not support section (3)(a) in the amendment, under which rent arrears could be taken into account. Rent arrears can be managed within a tenancy and landlords should not have the power to terminate a tenancy on that ground. The focus should be more on how a tenant’s behaviour affects the wider community than on rent arrears.

On that basis, I cannot support the amendment as drafted, but I welcome the discussion of the general principle of starter or initial tenancies.

Margaret Burgess: As we have heard, amendment 51 would require the Scottish ministers to make regulations to introduce a Scottish starter tenancy. I have explained my views on initial or starter tenancies before. I understand that such tenancies have the support of some tenants groups and landlords, and I have listened carefully to their views. However I remain convinced that this is not the right time to introduce them. I am concerned that the benefits of introducing an initial tenancy would be outweighed by the potential additional insecurity for new tenants at a time of so much uncertainty, which is caused by the United Kingdom Government’s welfare reforms and the changes to housing in other parts of the UK.

As I have said before, I feel strongly that people who might have had to wait a long time to get a house in the social sector, and have been building up to it, should not be put on trial for a year once the house is allocated. That concerns me.

I know that landlords and tenants are concerned about antisocial behaviour, which is part of the reason for suggesting initial or starter tenancies. However, the bill contains other measures to help landlords on that front, including the use of short Scottish secure tenancies, simplified eviction procedures and the ability to suspend tenants from receiving an offer of housing in certain circumstances, including antisocial behaviour. Those measures will give landlords extra tools to address antisocial behaviour without the need for initial tenancies.

In the committee’s stage 1 report, it gave its view that there is no clear indication that it would be appropriate to introduce initial tenancies at this time. I am of the same opinion, and I invite the committee to reject amendments 51 and 57.

Alex Johnstone: I will press amendment 51, because it is my nature to push these things through to the end of the process. I was interested to hear what the minister said. I am aware that, during the bill process, the minister has considered the inclusion of measures to support tenancies. I wonder whether, during the process, we might have the opportunity to strengthen the measures that are already in the bill. Nevertheless, the bill is an important opportunity to create a class of tenancy that has already demonstrated its success in other areas, and it will be a missed opportunity not to introduce it in Scotland. I therefore press amendment 51.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 51 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.
The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 6, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 51 disagreed to.

The Convener: We will now have a five-minute comfort break.

11:35
Meeting suspended.

11:42
On resuming—

Section 17—Regulated and assured tenancies etc

The Convener: The next group of amendments is on the transfer of the sheriff’s jurisdiction to the first-tier tribunal. Amendment 52, in the name of Jim Hume, is grouped with amendment 29.

Jim Hume: Thank you, convener, for giving me the opportunity to speak to this amendment.

I was compelled to lodge amendment 52 because I did not believe that the bill was clear about what access there would be to legal representation at tribunals. With the transfer of jurisdiction for civil private rented sector cases to the tribunal system, the new first-tier tribunal will have to deal with sensitive and important issues. Indeed, one of the most serious issues over which it will now preside is the loss of a person’s home through eviction.

I welcome the introduction of the tribunal system, and the tribunal will undoubtedly provide a more relaxed environment that might be more conducive to a satisfactory resolution being reached between a landlord and a tenant. However, I believe that the issue of eviction is so serious that there must be a guarantee that the tenant can obtain legal representation in order to make the best possible case.

In the absence of such a guarantee in the bill, I felt it necessary to lodge amendment 52 to enshrine in law the ability for tenants or occupants to access legal representation, should they find themselves involved in such serious cases. I believe that it would be a mistake, and indeed a failing on our part, if we introduced such an important new system without there being a clear understanding of how tenants can access justice under the new framework. It would therefore be helpful, and I would be grateful, if the minister could confirm clearly that those at risk of losing their homes would be entitled to legal representation, and that those affected would be able to afford such representation either through legal aid or some equivalent—assuming, of course, that the necessary eligibility criteria were met and that the legal aid available for solicitors’ fees was no less for representing someone in an eviction case at the tribunal than for appearing at the sheriff court.

11:45

I would be grateful for clarity from the minister on some of those points and I believe that the points that I have made would be best addressed by members supporting my amendment. The amendment is supported by Homeless Action Scotland, Shelter Scotland, the Legal Services Agency, Scottish Churches Housing Action and Crisis.

I move amendment 52.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 52 would require that provision is made for legal representation. That could undermine the system that we are aiming for, in which legal representation is not the norm and in which most people can engage directly with the tribunal.

Having said that, we recognise that there are still likely to be people who will need—or wish for—assistance to present their case. We will consider the most appropriate method of support as part of the detail of the operation of the private rented sector tribunal. That support could be provided through some form of lay representation such as advocacy, or through funding for legal representation. I am grateful for the committee’s support for that approach in its stage 1 report. I have undertaken to keep Parliament informed regarding operational detail, including policy regarding access and representation.

I hope that that explanation is sufficient to allow Jim Hume to withdraw amendment 52.

Amendment 29, in my name, is a technical amendment that ensures that appeals for private rented sector cases from the first-tier tribunal to the upper tribunal are handled consistently. The amendment removes wording from the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act 2004 that sets out the current route of appeal for cases about landlord registration decisions by local authorities.

Appeals to the upper tribunal will still be allowed for those cases but, as with other appeals relating to private rented sector cases, such appeals will be under provisions in the Tribunals (Scotland) Act 2014. That is relevant as the Courts Reform (Scotland) Bill contains provisions that set conditions that must be met for a decision of the upper tribunal to be judicially reviewed. If appeals are provided for other than by the Tribunals (Scotland) Act 2014, those conditions will not apply.

I ask for support for amendment 29 and for amendment 52 to be rejected.

Jim Hume: The committee report asked the Scottish Government to provide further information regarding access to and representation at private rented sector tribunals. I appreciate that tribunals should be a more relaxed environment but when the case concerns eviction, that is very serious—someone is facing homelessness.

Until we have further clarity, I am minded to press amendment 52. I appreciate that the amendment may not be agreed to today, but I would be inclined to bring it back at stage 3 if it is not supported at this stage or if we do not get further clarity from the minister in the meantime.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 52 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 52 disagreed to.

Sections 17 agreed to.

Schedule 1, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 21 and 22 agreed to.

After section 22

The Convener: The next group is on the repairing standard. Amendment 31, in the name of Jim Eadie, is grouped with amendments 53, 54, 48, 5 and 30.

Jim Eadie: I am pleased to speak to amendments 31 and 5.

The purpose of amendment 31 is to ensure that all private rented sector properties will have carbon monoxide alarms. Carbon monoxide, or CO gas, is known as the silent killer because it is invisible and has no smell. CO can be emitted by any faulty appliance that burns a carbon-based fuel such as gas, petrol, oil, coal or wood, and a level of just 2 per cent in the air can kill within one to three minutes. Children, older people, pregnant women and people with respiratory problems are particularly at risk from carbon monoxide poisoning.

A YouGov survey from March this year highlighted that one in 20 tenants in the private rented sector in Scotland have experienced some problems with carbon monoxide—typically drowsiness, nausea and headaches—in the past five years. Furthermore, according to Department of Health figures for England and Wales, 50 people a year die from CO poisoning and around 4,000 people are taken to accident and emergency.

The Scottish Government recently reported at least one death a year in Scotland from CO poisoning—that is one death too many. A recent survey of tenants in the private rented sector in Scotland found that 3 per cent said that they had experienced carbon monoxide poisoning in the past year. Amendment 31 seeks to reverse those figures by introducing an inexpensive and effective way to safeguard tenants’ safety.

At present, all private landlords in Scotland must provide a valid gas safety record and annual checks for the appliances in the property that they rent out, but there is no legal requirement for them to provide a carbon monoxide detector and alarm. I am keen for CO alarms to become part of an evolution in private renting in which stability and security become the norm and, as a result, tenants feel comfortable in asking for the services and improvements that turn a private let into a home.

I place on record my thanks to Shelter Scotland for its work in highlighting the issue and in supporting me in lodging the amendment.

I welcome the opportunity to speak to amendment 5, which is intended as a probing amendment. Its purpose is to prevent landlords from failing to contribute to the cost of common repairs that are required to be carried out in order for their property to meet the repairing standard.

The issue has been highlighted by the City of Edinburgh Council. Around 67 per cent of all homes in Edinburgh are flats, and more than 45,000 households rent their home from a private landlord. It is essential that those buildings are maintained, but issues with mixed ownership often complicate the process.

Although common parts of a building are already covered by the repairing standard, it may be difficult for owners to recover the cost of common repairs if a landlord does not contribute. The amendment will help to avoid situations in which responsible home owners pay to maintain common areas, which contributes to enabling a privately rented property to meet the repairing standard, while the landlord fails to contribute to the costs.

For example, a secure door entry system in a block of flats may need to be repaired, and the majority of owners may agree to carry out the work. A private landlord may not have engaged with the owners regarding the work, but the owners may decide to go ahead with the repair anyway, as the building’s security is compromised. The landlord would therefore not have paid for their share of the work that ensures that their flat now complies with the repairing standard.

Under the current provisions in the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004, the onus is on the other owners to recover costs from the landlord. That can be complex and time-consuming, and it can act as a disincentive to responsible owners who want to actively maintain their property.

Amendment 5 would mean that the landlord could be referred to the private rented housing panel. If it is proven that the landlord has not been contributing to common repairs, they could be found guilty of an offence and face removal from the landlord register or a fine.

I strongly urge the Scottish Government to engage in constructive dialogue through its officials with the City of Edinburgh Council to address what is a serious and widespread issue throughout the city, and to explore what further progress may be possible in advance of stage 3.

I move amendment 31.

Mark Griffin: Amendment 53 is a simple amendment that would ensure that all smoke alarms in houses are connected to the mains electrical supply. We know about the issues with the safety and reliability of battery-operated smoke alarms, and I know that the Government supports the move to hard-wired detectors.

The Government’s position is that, since 2007, smoke alarms that have needed to be replaced have been replaced by hard-wired alarms. However, we should simplify the position, so that rather than make tenants wait five to 10 years for their alarms to be upgraded to the safer, hard-wired alarm, and rather than have tenants worry about when a warranty will expire and when they should ask their landlord to replace an alarm, we make the position clear and increase the safety of all houses in the private rented sector by ensuring that all smoke alarms are connected to the mains supply.

Bob Doris (Glasgow) (SNP): I welcome the constructive dialogue that I have had with the Government and with Electrical Safety First—the campaigning name of the Electrical Safety Council—which proposed the approach in amendment 54.

Amendment 54 would introduce a requirement for five-yearly checks by a registered electrician of fixed electrical installations and any electrical appliances that are supplied with a let, in all properties in the private rented sector.

Such checks are supported by 12 trade associations, businesses and charities, including key housing stakeholder organisations such as the Scottish Association of Landlords, Shelter Scotland, the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors Scotland and the Chartered Institute of Housing Scotland. The approach therefore has broad support.

The approach would be achieved by amending the repairing standard in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006. Amendment 54 would require private landlords to arrange for a suitably competent person to carry out an electrical safety check every five years; landlords would also be required to provide a copy of the inspection record to the tenant or subsequent tenants in the five-year period. A power to issue guidance on electrical standards would be introduced, and the approach would be enforced through a complaint to the private rented housing panel.

The majority of accidental domestic fires in Scotland—indeed, 69 per cent of such fires—are caused by electricity. Research indicates that private tenants are at much greater risk of electrical fires and electric shocks. Amendment 54 is therefore needed. The private rented sector itself supports such regulation, which is key.

Claudia Beamish (South Scotland) (Lab): Amendment 48 would confer on the Scottish ministers a duty to make provision on energy efficiency standards in the private rented sector. Ministers would set regulations that required landlords to adhere to a minimum energy efficiency standard, which would come into force by 1 January 2015, following a consultation. There would also need to be regulation for a system of inspection.

Amendment 48 would also give the Scottish ministers the power to set penalties for landlords who failed to ensure that their properties met the minimum standard, including when a house formed only part of the premises. I appreciate that that is a difficult aspect of the proposed approach, but it requires serious consideration, because people are often left isolated in poor conditions.

I was surprised that the bill as introduced does not include provisions on such an important issue. My Labour colleagues and I thought that it was necessary to lodge an amendment on energy efficiency. Increased energy efficiency would bring many benefits, in the context of not just tenants' general comfort but reduced fuel poverty and carbon emissions.

The Parliament passed the Climate Change (Scotland) Act 2009, which requires us to achieve annual carbon emissions reduction targets. We have missed the first two targets, for complicated reasons. Legal standards on energy efficiency in the private rented sector could go some way towards addressing greenhouse gas emissions in Scotland.

We also have a target on fuel poverty, which must be addressed. That is as important in rural areas as it is in urban areas. The Scottish Government set an ambitious target of eradicating fuel poverty by November 2016. The target is achievable, but only if we address the issue, in part through the bill.

If the target is to be realised, it is essential that we improve energy efficiency standards. The existing homes alliance certainly supports that way forward. I am not a member of this committee, but I understand that the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, the City of Edinburgh Council and Friends of the Earth Scotland are also supportive of moves being made in the bill.

I am aware that the Scottish Government has put together a ministerial working group to look at energy efficiency standards in the whole of the private sector. As I understand it—and if I am wrong, I apologise—the minister will no doubt confirm as much—the group is likely to report in the autumn. Although I welcome that news, I have lodged amendment 48 to help focus minds now on how in this section of the bill we might have the best means of addressing this issue with regard to the private rented sector.

I would argue that, as the bill contains a number of other repairing standards provisions, my proposal would be a sensible way of addressing energy efficiency and ensure that the standards are in place, at least in the rented sector, by 2015, instead of the later date that would be required if we had to wait for separate measures.

12:00

Margaret Burgess: I will take the amendments in the order in which they were spoken to.

On amendment 31, I thank Jim Eadie for raising the issue of carbon monoxide poisoning in private rented homes. The installation of carbon monoxide detectors provides additional protection to tenants in the private rented sector; indeed, Mr Eadie has already indicated how many deaths occur in the UK as a result of carbon monoxide poisoning. His amendment seeks to add the requirement for the installation of carbon monoxide detectors to the repairing standard for private rented homes. As such a proposal would strengthen housing standards and improve the safety of tenants in the private rented sector, I welcome it and urge the committee to support amendment 31.

Amendment 53 in the name of Mark Griffin seeks to require the installation of hard-wired smoke alarms in properties in the private rented sector. As I said at stage 1, private landlords have since September 2007 been required to install such alarms to achieve the repairing standard if they have not already put in place provision for smoke detection. Moreover, any battery-operated alarms that landlords installed prior to September 2007 must be replaced with hard-wired detectors at the end of their five to 10-year lifespan. That means that all battery-operated detectors should be replaced with hard-wired systems by 2017. I believe that such a phased approach is sensible and proportionate and will achieve the amendment's desired purpose in an incremental way and ensure the steady improvement of fire safety standards. Accordingly, I ask that Mr Griffin not move amendment 53 and, if he should, that the committee reject it.

I am grateful to Bob Doris for lodging amendment 54 and raising the important issue of electrical safety in private rented homes. Regular electrical safety testing will give additional protection to tenants in the private rented sector and reduce the risk of exposure to unsafe electrical installations. As Mr Doris has pointed out, his proposal has been strongly supported by the Electrical Safety Council—or Electrical Safety First, as I believe it is now called—whose research suggests that 70 per cent of accidental fires in Scotland are caused by electricity. Amendment 54 will require landlords to ensure that such a test is completed at least once every five years, and tenants will also be provided with a copy of the most recent record of an inspection. As I believe that the proposal will strengthen housing standards and improve the safety of tenants in the private rented sector, I welcome it and urge the committee to support amendment 54.

I have some concerns with Claudia Beamish’s amendment 48, which seeks to introduce a provision on energy efficiency standards in private rented sector properties. Under the Climate Change (Scotland) Act 2009 and the Energy Act 2011, the Scottish ministers already have powers to introduce minimum standards for energy efficiency in private sector housing, and we are committed to improving energy efficiency to address fuel poverty and reduce carbon emissions from housing. We are already working with stakeholders, including environmental, fuel poverty, local authority, private rented sector and consumer interests, to identify proposals for minimum energy efficiency standards for consultation in spring 2015. As well as being unnecessary, amendment 48 would not give us sufficient time to understand the issues that the working group has identified; after all, we need to take proper account of the evidence that we have commissioned on the level of regulation that is technically feasible and appropriate.

Consultation on the Scottish Government’s sustainable housing strategy also indicated strong support for sufficient lead-in time for the sector to prepare for minimum standards. It is unsatisfactory that amendment 48 seeks to undermine that process: it would severely limit the opportunities to develop proposals that will be appropriate to the sector as a whole, and it could constrain its ability to deliver on it.

I have proposed amendment 30 to enable the repairing standard to be amended by regulations, so, if the steering group on minimum energy efficiency standards in the private sector identifies that it would be appropriate to use the repairing standard to support improvement in energy efficiency work, that could be looked at in future, after appropriate consultation.

For those reasons I do not consider that amendment 48 is necessary or that it would achieve the desired purpose, and I invite Ms Beamish to not to move amendment 48 and members not to support it.

I have concerns about Jim Eadie’s amendment 5, which seeks to force private sector landlords to comply with majority decisions to complete repairs to common parts of a property. Owners already have a right under the tenement management scheme to pursue any non-complying owner for work agreed under a majority decision. In addition, owners already have a common duty to maintain any part of the building that provides support or shelter to any other part, and an owner can recover costs from any other owner.

This bill takes important steps forward, as section 72 contains an amendment to the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004, which will allow a local authority discretionary power to pay a missing share on behalf of a non-co-operating owner and to recover the debt.

For those reasons, amendment 5 is unnecessary to achieve the desired purpose and I ask members not to support it. I add that officials and I are continually in discussion and are happy discuss amendment 5 with Jim Eadie, but I do not think that we need to support it.

Amendment 30, in my name, will create a new regulation-making power for the Scottish ministers to vary the detail of the repairing standard for private rented property without the need for further primary legislation. Any such variation to the standard will remain subject to parliamentary scrutiny. The amendment will make it easier to introduce improvements to accommodation standards in the private rented sector, including any further improvements to safety in the home for private tenants, should they be required.

The Scottish Government’s proposed work on cross-tenure housing quality standards later this year will provide stakeholders with the opportunity to raise further issues regarding housing quality. The outcome of the consultation will be important in determining any further changes to housing standards. Amendment 30 will provide assurance that further changes to the repairing standard can be made following the outcome of the consultation. I therefore ask members to support amendment 30.

Jim Eadie: I am grateful to the minister for her positive response to amendment 31 and the constructive engagement that there has been between me, the minister and the Scottish Government on this issue. I am delighted that the amendment will strengthen the rights of people who live in the private rented sector.

In relation to amendment 5, I note the minister’s clarification that the existing proposal in section 72 would allow a local authority to recover a contribution from a private landlord for a common repair. I welcome the minister’s commitment to an on-going dialogue with the City of Edinburgh Council on the issues that amendment 5 highlighted.

Amendment 31 agreed to.

Amendment 53 moved—[Mark Griffin].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 53 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Section 23—Third party application in respect of the repairing standard

The Convener: The next group is on enforcement of the repairing standard. Amendment 6, in the name of Jim Eadie, is grouped with amendments 10, 11, 32 and 41.

Jim Eadie: I am pleased to introduce amendment 6, the purpose of which is to enable neighbouring owners who are adversely affected by a property that does not meet the repairing standard to refer the owner of the said property to the Private Rented Housing Panel. The amendment would also allow advice services to make referrals to the Private Rented Housing Panel, where those services are providing support to tenants whose property does not meet the repairing standard.

It is worth noting that common repairs can be complex, especially in a city such as Edinburgh, where 67 per cent of all homes are flats, 49 per cent of homes were built before 1945 and more than 45,000 households rent privately. Data from the Scottish house condition survey shows that 76 per cent of private sector homes are in some form of disrepair. Although the majority of landlords who operate in Edinburgh take responsibility for their obligations on common repairs, more can be done to ensure that tenants and neighbouring home owners have the power to hold bad landlords to account.

Allowing neighbouring owners to make a referral to the Private Rented Housing Panel would help to reinforce the message that people need to take responsibility for the maintenance of their home as well as the common areas of the building. Neighbouring owners might be more likely to take a proactive approach to reporting the need for a repair than tenants, who might fear the reaction of the landlord. Landlords might be less likely to take an interest in the upkeep of the building and common areas if they do not actually live in the building, or they might be less aware of the general state of repair of the building, especially if they do not visit the property regularly.

Some tenants might prefer to access support through an advice agency rather than their local authority. It might be more convenient for a tenant to use an advice agency if it is located in the community or if they have a relationship with an agency or have had positive experiences of support from one in the past. Taking all that into account, I hope that the Scottish Government will consider amendment 6 and the potential views of neighbouring owners, landlords and tenants.

I move amendment 6.

The Convener: The next amendment in the group is amendment 10, which is in the name of Malcolm Chisholm, but I think that Mary Fee is going to speak to it and to the other amendments in the group.

Mary Fee: Yes, convener. I am going to move amendments 10 and 11, which are in Malcolm Chisholm’s name. They are fairly straightforward and simple amendments. Amendment 10 would enable the owner of a house neighbouring a house that is owned by a landlord, where the landlord has not contributed to the cost of maintenance and repair, to recoup the cost and enforce the standard. As elected representatives, all members will have had people come to see them about an adjoining or neighbouring property that is not maintained to a particular standard and the difficulties that that subsequently brings for them. Amendment 10 would cover that by allowing neighbours to enforce the repairing standard.

Similarly, amendment 11 would extend the ability to enforce the repairing standard to contractors. Quite often, when contractors come out to do work, they could highlight that the repairing standard has not been met. The amendment would enable them to ensure that the standard is met.

I support amendments 32 and 41, in the name of the minister.

12:15

Margaret Burgess: As we heard, amendment 6, in the name of Jim Eadie, seeks to specify two additional types of person who may apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination in respect of the repairing standard.

The bill, as it stands, will enable local authorities to make such applications. I would expect neighbours and advice bodies to provide evidence of poor property condition to the relevant local authority for it to consider whether the application is needed. The bill provides ministers with the power to extend the range of bodies that can make applications in the future if that is considered useful. In addition, new powers for inspection that I am proposing as part of the provisions for third-party reporting support the strategic role that local authorities play in ensuring that properties right across Scotland meet minimum standards.

The power of entry for local authorities to inspect a property in relation to the repairing standard will be an important new tool. Taken together with existing powers of inspection, it will enable local authorities to enter private rented sector properties for a variety of housing-related issues.

I believe that the bill strikes the right balance in allowing local authorities to make the applications but granting a power to ministers to broaden access to the Private Rented Housing Panel through secondary legislation if that is considered necessary and appropriate in the future. In the meantime, it is important to let local authorities exercise the new powers that are in the bill to tackle poor standards in the private rented sector.

I therefore invite Mr Eadie to withdraw amendment 6.

What I have just said is also relevant to amendments 10 and 11, in the name of Malcolm Chisholm. As I have said, third parties such as service managers can report evidence of poor property condition to the local authority. There is a power to allow service managers to make direct applications if experience shows that that would be advantageous. I think that it is preferable to let local authorities operate the provisions for applications to the panel and consider how effective that proves to be before extending the range of bodies that can do so. I ask members not to support amendments 10 and 11.

Amendment 41 is a technical amendment that removes redundant references to Scottish Homes from section 22 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006. I ask members to support amendment 41.

Amendment 32 is a more significant change. I want local authorities to be able to take effective action when there is evidence that property condition falls below the legal minimum standards. The provisions for third-party reporting provide an additional and important tool that will enable local authorities to take action and enforce the repairing standard.

In some cases, it may be difficult for a local authority to gather evidence on property condition without a power of entry to inspect a property that is suspected of failing to meet the repairing standard. The new power of entry that is introduced by amendment 32 is significant and can be used much more easily than the powers that were previously considered in the policy memorandum for designating a specific geographic area as an enhanced enforcement area.

After further consideration, I believe that allowing all local authorities to inspect properties that give them concern, regardless of their geographical location, provides a more appropriate and effective solution. Amendment 32 will enhance the provisions for third-party reporting and will significantly strengthen the hand of local authorities in tackling substandard housing. I therefore urge members to support amendment 32.

Jim Eadie: I am grateful to the minister for her explanation and clarification, particularly in relation to the broadening of access to the Private Rented Housing Panel through secondary legislation. I also note her comments on the need to allow the new proposals in the bill to bed down before taking any further powers. However, I encourage the Scottish Government to engage in a continuing dialogue with the City of Edinburgh Council on the issues that are highlighted in amendment 6.

I seek agreement to withdraw amendment 6.

Amendment 6, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendment 10 moved

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 10 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against

Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 10 disagreed to.

Amendment 11 moved

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 11 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against

Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 11 disagreed to.

Amendment 32 moved

Margaret Burgess—and agreed to.

Section 23, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 24 and 25 agreed to.

After section 25

The Convener: The next group is on rent reviews and rent increases—private rented housing. Amendment 33, in the name of James Kelly, is grouped with amendments 33A and 37.

James Kelly (Rutherglen) (Lab): I welcome the opportunity to move the amendments in my name. Aside from the crisis in housing supply, the biggest issues that face housing in Scotland today are the growth of the private rented sector and the issues that derive from that. The private rented sector has almost doubled in size to more than 300,000 and, as a result, there have been substantial rent rises, particularly in certain parts of Scotland. For example, in Aberdeen, the average rent rise is 8.6 per cent.

The growth in the private rented sector has put some tenants in a position where they are vulnerable in having to deal with landlords. There are many responsible landlords in the country, but there are some who are not so responsible, and they take advantage of the position that tenants find themselves in of not being able to find alternative accommodation and put rents up. We see many examples of that in our constituency casework. Added to that, 120,000 households in the private rented sector are below the poverty line, and we know that that results in 40 per cent of those households cutting back on heating and a third cutting back on food.

It is therefore incumbent on us as a Parliament to try to address some of the issues around rising rent levels, which lead to poverty issues for some households. Amendment 33 seeks to address that by ensuring that rent reviews take place no more than once a year and that rents are capped at a particular level to prevent a situation where there are irregular rent reviews and unreasonable rent rises are imposed on tenants.

Amendment 33A, in the name of Patrick Harvie, seeks to ensure that the regulations for such a scheme must “be laid before the Scottish Parliament”—as opposed to “come into force”—by 1 January 2015. On reflection, I think that that is sensible. In amendment 33, I do not propose a particular scheme. I think that it makes sense for ministers to bring forward a scheme and lay it before the Parliament by 1 January 2015, and I therefore accept the amendment to amendment 33.

In summary, I note that the effect of amendment 33 is clearly to introduce rent caps in the private rented sector in order to alleviate the issues that many tenants face with unreasonable rent rises. We have real problems in the private rented sector, as we know from the issues that we face in our constituencies, and the bill gives us an opportunity here and now to act to make a difference to the lives of many tenants throughout the country.
I move amendment 33.

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): I was pleased that James Kelly lodged amendment 33. In the stage 1 debate and in housing debates before the bill was introduced, I consistently argued that we should address rent levels in the private rented sector, particularly in this extended period of low interest rates, which have been a benefit to owner-occupiers as well as owners of property that is rented in the private rented sector who have a mortgage on such property. Owners have gained that benefit in the period of low interest rates, but it has not been passed on to those who live in the private rented sector in their housing costs.

I am not sure whether I would have taken precisely the same approach as James Kelly has taken. The Labour Party at UK level has decided on its policy, which there is a good case for. My approach would have been to look at the variations in the private rented sector in different parts of the country.

Scotland is not the same as south-east England. Prices in Aberdeen are not the same as those in rural parts of Scotland. Even different parts of Glasgow or Edinburgh are not the same as each other. My instinct would have been to provide a power to introduce controls on rent levels in areas where the evidence demonstrates a particular problem. That approach would be less likely to have a wider disruptive effect on the private rented sector.

However, as the committee is to debate and decide on amendment 33 as it is framed, I think that it should refer to an achievable date. The proposed timescale of the beginning of 2015 seems to provide enough time for ministers to consider their options, consult on the issue, draft regulations and introduce them in Parliament. Given the requirement for Parliament to take evidence on, scrutinise and make a decision on the regulations, for the regulations to come into force and for any systems to implement them to be in effect, the beginning of 2015 is a wee bit ambitious as a timescale.

As the committee is to decide on amendment 33, I think that it would be reasonable to move the timescale back a wee bit. I am grateful to James Kelly for acknowledging that. If the committee decides that the proposed approach is not the right one, I hope that there will be willingness to look at variations on the theme of rent levels when we reach stage 3.

The Convener: Will you move amendment 33A?

Patrick Harvie: Not yet.

The Convener: You have to move it now.

Patrick Harvie: Oh—it is an amendment to an amendment. I beg your pardon.

I move amendment 33A.

Margaret Burgess: I have reservations about amendment 33, because it would require the Scottish ministers to introduce rent controls by 1 January 2015, as Patrick Harvie highlighted. Amendment 33A would provide a slightly longer timescale; it would allow regulations to be laid by that date and it takes into account the possibility that Parliament might not support the regulations.

I cannot support James Kelly’s proposal or the amendment to it from Patrick Harvie. Amendment 33A would improve the drafting, but it does not address the reasons why amendment 33 is flawed.

The amendment proposes a significant new duty in respect of matters that formed no part of the bill on introduction. If I had lodged such an amendment at this late stage, I would rightly have been criticised for failing to consult stakeholders, for not producing any assessment of the impact that the duty would have on landlords or tenants and for denying the committee the opportunity to consider and take evidence on the provision at stage 1.

A measure of such significance would require full public consultation on the basis of clear proposals, followed by close parliamentary scrutiny of detailed provisions that appeared in the bill on introduction. As none of those conditions has been met, I urge members to reject the amendments in the group.

12:30

James Kelly: I take on board Patrick Harvie’s comments on the scheme that is set out in the amendment and on variations throughout the country. I have deliberately not been specific about a particular scheme. If the amendment is unsuccessful, I will not look to bring it back at stage 3. If the idea is considered at stage 3 or beyond, I am certainly sympathetic to a proposal that would involve variations across the country. I recognise that a blanket Scottish approach would not be the best approach in these circumstances so I take on board those comments.

I think that the minister’s response is inadequate. Tenants face big issues in all our constituencies and in communities throughout Scotland. Patrick Harvie is right to highlight the fact that there has been a shift in power in favour of landlords—not in favour of tenants—because of the growth of the sector and low interest rates.

The minister does not seem to acknowledge that the growth in rent levels in the private rented sector is an issue. I think that it is an issue and that it should have been addressed in the bill. If she had listened to stakeholders, the minister would have heard a number of stakeholders saying loud and clear that it is an issue. It almost seems as though she is turning a blind eye to a big issue in housing.

You are the housing minister and you are therefore responsible for making a positive impact on housing policy. The bill gives you the opportunity to do that and if the proposal that is before us is not one that you like, you could try to make an alternative proposal at stage 3. However, you seem set on taking no action on this issue. That approach will be greeted with disappointment by many tenants and by people on the ground throughout Scotland.

Patrick Harvie: Given that James Kelly has indicated that he does not object to my amendment to his amendment, I have nothing further to add. I press amendment 33A.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 33A be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 33A disagreed to.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 33 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 33 disagreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on security of tenure—private rented housing. Amendment 34, in the name of James Kelly, is grouped with amendments 34A to 34G and amendment 38.

James Kelly: Amendment 34 seeks to address the fact that there has been real growth in the size of the private rented sector and a major issue facing many people in that sector is short tenancies. A number of years ago, the Scottish Parliament information centre provided the information that 74 per cent of tenancies were short tenancies. That is a somewhat outdated figure, but I am sure that it is not totally out of the ball park.

Short tenancies mean lack of stability for tenants, who do not know whether they will be able to stay in the accommodation for any length of time; the landlord can come along and say that their tenancy is ended and move them on. That causes a lot of consequential problems and, as I said in the previous debate, it places too much power in the hands of landlords, as opposed to tenants, which can be illustrated by a lack of repairs being done to properties. A property might not be in a fit state, but if a tenant has only a short tenancy, they can do very little about it.

Amendment 34 seeks to introduce more secure tenancies and proposes a three-year standard tenancy. After the first six months, the tenant would have the ability to terminate the contract on one month’s notice, and the landlord would have the ability to terminate it on two months’ notice, if the tenant was acting in an antisocial manner or had rent arrears, or if the landlord planned to refurbish or change the use of the property.

Although Patrick Harvie’s amendments bring a number of reasonable points into consideration, I do not support them at this stage. If amendment 34 is agreed to, I will consider lodging such amendments at stage 3. If amendment 34 is not agreed to, I will lodge similar amendments at stage 3 and will consider some of the points that Patrick Harvie has made in his amendments.

In summary, the purpose of amendment 34 is to address the insecurity that many tenants face, and their lack of power in dealing with landlords. I believe that longer and more stable and secure tenancies are required in order to give more power to tenants so that we can address some of the problems that exist in the private rented sector.

I move amendment 34.

Patrick Harvie: I am pleased that an amendment on security of tenure is being considered because, as members will recall, I have emphasised the issue in previous discussions. Security of tenure underpins many of the other improvements that I think all members would like to be made in the private rented sector.
Without it, very many of the other rights that both we and the Government want to give tenants in that sector to improve their situation will be difficult to exercise in practice.

We should recognise that the Government has previously indicated that it does not intend to address security of tenure in the bill, but has begun work to examine the issue, although I think that this is a useful forum for rehearsing the arguments. I hope that the discussion that takes place on the amendments in the group will help to inform the Government’s consideration of security of tenure, even if the committee does not agree to them.

I have sought to make a few changes to the scheme that James Kelly has proposed so that we can discuss particular aspects of that scheme. Amendments 34A, 34B, 34C and 34D would remove the idea of a six-month initial term. If the reasons that are set out in subsections (1)(d)(i) to (1)(d)(vi) of the new section that amendment 34 seeks to insert in the bill are the reasonable grounds on which a landlord could terminate a tenancy, get rid of the tenant and tell them that they had lost their home—which is a very serious step—I do not think that there is a case for having additional grounds on which a landlord could do so during the first six months. If the tenant does not breach the terms of the tenancy, act in an antisocial way or get into rent arrears—the reasons that are set out in subsections (1)(d)(i) to (1)(d)(iii)—no additional conditions should apply in the first six months. I am not clear about the reason for that interim term.

Amendment 34E suggests that, when refurbishment or change of use is the reason for ending a tenancy, six months’ notice might be given. If a landlord intends to change the use of a property or refurbish it, it seems reasonable to expect them to plan ahead for such action and to give sufficient notice to ensure that the tenant does not have their life unduly disrupted and has time to make alternative arrangements.

Amendment 34F suggests that, when a property is to be refurbished, a tenant should at least have the option to move back in when that has been done. The intention behind amendments 34F and 34G is to close down the possibility that the reasons in subsections (1)(d)(iv), (1)(d)(v) and (1)(d)(vi) might be misused.

We have probably all heard of constituents who are told that a property is going to be sold, which is why they have to move out, but then find that within weeks the property is back on the market for a higher rent. That is a very common practice. If refurbishment was a ground for removing a tenant from their home, it is entirely conceivable that only minor refurbishments could be done, which would not be extensive enough to genuinely require someone to be removed from their home, and the property could then go back on the market.

Amendment 34G is similar in intent as it tries to cut down the possibility that one of the reasons that are given in amendment 34 could be used as an excuse, rather than a genuine ground. It suggests that if a property is going to be sold, or if the landlord is going to move back into it, that would have to happen in practice—as opposed to the property just being put back on to the market. I have suggested that in such cases, the property could not be put back on the market for private rent for six months.

I recognise that the Government is probably unlikely to budge on this, but some discussion of these questions in relation to the scheme of secure tenure that we might move to in time will, I hope, help inform the Government’s consideration in further work that it does on the issue.

I move amendment 34A.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 34 would place a duty on ministers to introduce regulations to establish a new type of tenancy in the private rented sector. Amendment 38 would require that Parliament’s affirmative procedure be adopted for the proposed new regulations that are detailed in amendment 34. As amendment 33 in James Kelly’s name would have done, amendment 34 would introduce a significant new duty on ministers in respect of matters that formed no part of the bill on its introduction.

As I said earlier, it is not about ignoring things or not taking things into account; I am always willing to consider the views of stakeholders and have done so throughout the development of the bill. However, before embarking on major legislative changes, we need to establish the nature and scale of any problem, understand clearly how we would go about addressing it and be sure that we would help those who need help.

Patrick Harvie has previously raised the issues of rent control and security of tenure in the private sector, but that is the only mention of that that has come to me from anyone in Parliament. We have discussed security of tenure with stakeholders. I object to the amendments in the group on the ground that there has not been appropriate consultation on the issue.

However, we recognise that the tenancy regime is central to efficient functioning of the private rented sector. That is why in our private rented sector strategy we undertook to carry out a review of the tenancy regime. To drive that work forward, I asked Professor Douglas Robertson to chair a stakeholder-led review group to examine the suitability and effectiveness of the current private sector tenancy regime, and to consider legislative changes, where such might be required. The review group was established in September 2013 and it presented its final report to me last Friday. I want to consider that report and to decide, in the light of it, whether we should introduce a bill to give effect to any of its recommendations.

Patrick Harvie: It would be helpful for the discussion if the minister could say when that report is going to be published.

Margaret Burgess: I saw the report for the first time on Friday.

Patrick Harvie: That is understood.

Margaret Burgess: We will publish it as soon as possible; I have said clearly that if we need to introduce regulation on the tenancy regime, we will do so in separate legislation. It was made very clear—the review group was aware that it was not part of the Housing (Scotland) Bill. The work has been going on for some time within the Government. I will certainly make sure that the research is published as soon as possible.

Patrick Harvie: Thank you.

Margaret Burgess: I want to consider the report. That way, any legislation to change the private rented sector regime would reflect the findings of the group and—importantly—it would be the subject of full consultation and parliamentary scrutiny.

I ask Mr Kelly to seek to withdraw amendment 34 and not to move amendment 38.

Amendments 34A to 34G would amend Mr Kelly’s amendment 34. As I have said about amendment 34, we need to take time to consider the findings from the private rented sector tenancy review group before we make any changes to the tenancy regime. We must also ensure that any changes are fully discussed and explored with stakeholders. The amendments represent major changes; they are not just tinkering around at the edges of the bill. Stakeholders require to be consulted and any changes need to have undergone a full and robust public consultation and parliamentary scrutiny.

I ask Mr Harvie not to press amendments 34A to 34G and I urge the committee to reject all the amendments in the group.

12:45

James Kelly: There were two central themes to Patrick Harvie’s comments. The first was the initial tenancy and the second was on provisions relating to a landlord’s ability to terminate a tenancy, for example in the case of refurbishments.

Essentially, my amendment 34 would move us where from where we are now with short tenancies to a three-year tenancy, and proposes an initial period of tenancy before a longer three-year secure tenancy. My mind is not closed to Patrick Harvie’s points; I will consider them if I bring back an amendment at stage 3, as I expect I will have to do.

Similarly, on refurbishment, we do not want anything in legislation to be misused in any way by landlords. Proposed changes to legislation must be tight enough to ensure that that does not happen.

I am disappointed that the minister is not prepared to attempt to address, in the bill, the significant issues in the private rented sector. I do not accept the minister’s assertion that the issues have not been raised before; they have been raised in the sector and in Parliament. For example, when Patrick Harvie spoke in the Labour housing debate in November, he raised the issue of rent control, and when I summed up, I specifically said that Labour is considering raising rent control and would use the Housing (Scotland) Bill to test that out. They are significant issues and work is being done on them at the moment. It might help if the minister were to be clearer about the timescale and whether legislation will be introduced in the future.

In the meantime, however, although we remain unclear about that, we cannot ignore the issues in the sector that are brought to our surgeries and constituency offices. Therefore, when a bill such as this is going through Parliament, we must take the opportunity to amend it in order to make a difference to the lives of our constituents. That is what I am seeking to do, which is why I will press amendment 34.

The Convener: I would like to point out to Mr Kelly that the issues were not raised in evidence at stage 1 and that Labour members on the committee did not raise them with any of the stakeholders who came to the committee to give evidence.

Patrick Harvie: I do not have a great deal to add. I would simply echo James Kelly’s comments about timescale. I am slightly sorry that some members do not seem to welcome the idea of having even a discussion about these important issues, either in committee or in the chamber. It would be most useful to Parliament as a whole if the minister were at some point able to give a clear indication of the timescale for consideration of these issues in the expert group, and a commitment to legislate during this parliamentary session.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 34A be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.
The Convener: There will be a division.

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 0, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 34A disagreed to.
Amendments 34B to 34D not moved.
Amendment 34E moved—[Patrick Harvie].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 34E be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 0, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 34E disagreed to.
Amendment 34F moved—[Patrick Harvie].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 34F be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 0, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 34E disagreed to.
Amendment 34G moved—[James Kelly].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 34G be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 34G disagreed to.

The Convener: The final group today is on houses let for holiday purposes. Amendment 55, in the name of Drew Smith, is grouped with amendment 58.

Drew Smith (Glasgow) (Lab): Patience is my virtue this afternoon, convener. I am grateful to the committee for giving me the opportunity to move amendment 55, which seeks to strengthen the regulation of housing let for holiday purposes.

My concern about the issue has been prompted primarily by complaints made to me by my constituents. The issue of very short-term lets for holiday purposes—such properties are often known as party flats—is not a new one, but it is one for which I believe that a comprehensive solution does not yet exist. The private letting of property to provide an income for the owner and housing for a tenant is clearly an important part of the housing mix. However, I am sure that no one would disagree that party flats do not fill a housing need. They are commercial enterprises that impact on people in neighbouring properties that are used for housing and, in my view, they require to be better regulated.

The intention of amendment 55 is not to ban party flats or even, necessarily, to reduce their... number, as I recognise that in the tourism sector, as in the housing sector, a mix of accommodation options can be a good thing.

The effect of amendment 55 would be to build on the minimal regulation that currently exists by extending closure powers over party flats in circumstances in which no other resolution has been arrived at and it is recognised that noise nuisance, antisocial behaviour or other inappropriate activity is taking place regularly and is, quite simply, making the lives of the neighbours around the property a living hell.

The power of closure currently resides with the police. I propose not to remove the power from the police but to extend it to local authorities—my experience in Glasgow is that the local authority is aware of the problems—and to adopt a multi-agency approach to seeking to provide respite and a correction to inappropriate use that gives those who live around party flats their lives back and returns to them the basic right to live in and enjoy their home.

I believe that the current arrangements put too much of the burden on the police. The practical reality is that the police are less likely to be willing to intervene, except in cases of serious criminality. The police, by nature, tend to deal with situations as they occur and are less focused on the longer-term impact of problems than they are on ensuring that particular instances of antisocial behaviour are resolved. When they attend an incident at a party flat, it is likely that they will seek to quieten down the disturbance and, in the absence of more serious criminality, advise neighbours that the nuisance will, in all likelihood, resolve itself in a couple of days’ time. However, neighbours know that the flat is likely to be let again and that the same issues will possibly arise the following weekend.

Amendment 55 makes it clear that it is for ministers to consider whether to grant the power to local authorities through regulations. The amendment also provides for proper scrutiny of such regulations by the Parliament. I reiterate that amendment 55 is about extending a power that already exists to a more appropriate enforcement body rather than creating a new power.

If instances of regular nuisance such as my constituents have experienced were taking place as a result of any other housing use, action would rightly be demanded and, indeed, mechanisms would exist for them to be dealt with. However, when it comes to party flats, those problems are being allowed to persist and get worse.

The problem exists across Scotland, but it is particularly acute in city centres. My constituents who choose to make their home in Sauchiehall Street or the Merchant City are well aware that compromises have to be made as a result of that choice, but it is not reasonable that enjoyment of their own home is violated by the letting of a neighbouring flat—or, as in one case, several flats in the same building—for a party, based on a notice displayed in a pub inviting revellers to head upstairs into a residential building to carry on drinking and, for want of a better word, partying.

I hope that members will consider those issues when they decide whether to support amendment 55. If the minister is not willing to support it, I hope that she will lay out a suggested way forward that represents a suitably strong and speedy alternative to amending the bill. I know that the constituents who have contacted me would certainly very much welcome the opportunity to make parliamentarians further aware of the issues that they face.

I move amendment 55.

Margaret Burgess: I certainly understand the problems that can be caused by antisocial behaviour in properties that are let on a short-term basis, but I do not believe that the provisions proposed by amendment 55 are necessary.

Legislation is already in place to enable local authorities to tackle the issue of antisocial behaviour in properties let for holiday purposes. For example, under part 7 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act 2004, local authorities have powers to serve antisocial behaviour notices on a private landlord when an occupant or visitor engages in antisocial behaviour at or in the locality of the house. In addition, in March 2011, the Scottish Government introduced an order that deals specifically with the problem of antisocial behaviour in properties let for holiday use or so-called party flats.

In a landmark case last year, the City of Edinburgh Council successfully used the existing legislation to apply for a management control order for two party flats in Grove Street. Since then, the council has assumed all landlord responsibilities, thereby helping to improve the quality of life for residents who were previously affected by antisocial behaviour.

I do not believe that amendment 55 would provide any additional benefits in tackling antisocial behaviour in holiday lets. I invite Mr Smith to withdraw amendment 55 and not to move his consequential amendment 58.

Drew Smith: I will not take up more of the committee’s time, other than to say that I am disappointed that the minister did not take the opportunity that I offered to consider the issues further. I am sure that my constituents will be disappointed, too, because the fact is that the current provisions are not providing the resolution that she talked about. Although resolution has been possible in cases in which the landlord is willing to engage with the system of regulation as it exists, when the landlord is not willing to engage in that process, resolution has not been possible, certainly for a number of people in my city. I would have hoped that the minister could at the very least have offered to consider an alternative route for resolving the issue.

I intend to press amendment 55.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 55 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 55 disagreed to.

The Convener: That concludes day 1 of the committee’s consideration of the bill at stage 2. I thank everyone for their co-operation and patience.

The committee’s consideration will continue next week. I propose that we go no further than the end of part 5 on day 2. The deadline for lodging any amendments to the bill from where we have ended up today to the end of part 5 is 12 noon on Friday 16 May.
Housing (Scotland) Bill

2nd Marshalled List of Amendments for Stage 2

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

- Sections 1 to 20
- Sections 21 to 84
- Sections 85 and 86
- Schedule 1
- Schedule 2
- Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 26

Alex Johnstone

59 In section 26, page 18, line 27, after <available> insert <free of charge>

After section 26

Mary Fee

134 After section 26, insert—

<Solicitor letting agents: exemption>

(1) The provisions of this Part do not apply to a solicitor letting agent.

(2) For the purposes of this section, “solicitor letting agent” means a solicitor who holds a valid practising certificate who, or an incorporated practice which—

(a) intends to carry out letting agency work, and

(b) has notified the Council of the Law Society of Scotland (“the Council”) of that fact.

(3) A solicitor letting agent must comply with any guidance issued by the Council setting out how solicitor letting agents are to conduct letting agency work in accordance with the standards of practice set out in any code of practice issued under section 41.

(4) A solicitor letting agent who fails to comply with such guidance will be deemed to be guilty of professional misconduct.>

Section 29

Margaret Burgess

60 In section 29, page 19, line 30 at end insert <, and

(c) the applicant meets such training requirements as the Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe.

( ) Regulations under subsection (2)(c) may, in particular, prescribe—

(a) the matters on which training must have been undertaken,

(b) the persons who must have undertaken training,
(c) qualifications which must be held by the applicant or other persons,
(d) the period within which training must have taken place.

Alex Johnstone

61 In section 29, page 20, line 10, after <entry,> insert <their reasons for the refusal and>

After section 29

Margaret Burgess

62 After section 29, insert—

<Time limit for determining application>

(1) This section applies where a person (referred to in this section as the “applicant”) makes an application in accordance with section 27.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must determine the application under section 29 within 12 months of receiving the application.

(3) The period mentioned in subsection (2) may be extended by the First-tier Tribunal, on application by the Scottish Ministers, by such period as the Tribunal thinks fit.

(4) The Tribunal may not extend a period unless the Scottish Ministers apply for the extension before the period expires.

(5) The applicant is entitled to be a party to any proceedings on an application under subsection (3).

(6) The decision of the Tribunal on such an application is final.

(7) If the Scottish Ministers do not determine the application within the period required by this section—

(a) on the day by which they were required to determine the application, they are to be treated as having entered the applicant in the register or, as the case may be, having renewed the applicant’s existing entry in the register, and

(b) the applicant is to be treated as being removed from the register on the expiry of the period of 12 months beginning with that day unless—

(i) before the expiry of the period, the applicant made a subsequent application in accordance with section 27 to renew the applicant’s entry in the register, or

(ii) the applicant is otherwise removed from the register in accordance with this Part.

(8) Where subsection (7) applies the Scottish Ministers must—

(a) notify the applicant—

(i) that subsection (7) applies, and

(ii) of the day on which, in accordance with subsection (7)(a), they are treated as having entered the applicant in the register or, as the case may be, having renewed the applicant’s existing entry in the register, and

(b) enter the name of the applicant in the register or, as the case may be, renew the applicant’s existing entry in the register.
Subject to the modifications in subsection (10), the applicant is for all purposes to be treated as a registered letting agent entered in the register or, as the case may be, whose entry has been renewed by virtue of section 29(2).

The modifications are—
(a) section 34 does not apply,
(b) paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 35(1) are to be read as if for the words “no longer” there were substituted “not”, and
(c) subsections (1)(b) and (4)(b) of section 38 are to be read as if after the word “under” there were inserted “section (Time limit for determining application)(7)(b) or”.

Section 30

Margaret Burgess

63 In section 30, page 21, line 4, at end insert—

< ( ) failed to provide information in accordance with section (Power to obtain information) or (Power to carry out inspections)(2)(d)(i),
( ) obstructed a person acting in the proper exercise of the persons’ functions under sections (Power to carry out inspections) to (Inspections: supplemental),
( ) failed to comply with a requirement made by a person who is so acting.>

Section 31

Alex Johnstone

64 In section 31, page 21, line 8, leave out <may> and insert <must>

Alex Johnstone

65 In section 31, page 21, line 12, leave out subsection (2)

Margaret Burgess

66 Leave out section 31 and insert—

<Fit and proper person: criminal record information

(1) This section applies where the Scottish Ministers have reasonable grounds to suspect that the information provided under this Part in relation to material falling within section 30(2) is, or has become, inaccurate.

(2) In deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, the Scottish Ministers may have regard to—

(a) the information referred to in section 113A(3)(a) of the Police Act 1997 (c.50) (prescribed details of every relevant matter relating to the person which is recorded in central records), and

(b) whether the person is subject to notification requirements under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42).>
Alex Johnstone

66A As an amendment to amendment 66, line 7, leave out <may> and insert <must>

Section 32

Alex Johnstone

67 In section 32, page 21, line 24, leave out <take all reasonable steps to>

Section 34

Mary Fee

135 In section 34, page 22, line 16, leave out <3 years> and insert <1 year>

Mary Fee

136 In section 34, page 22, line 17, leave out <3 years> and insert <1 year>

Section 35

Margaret Burgess

68 In section 35, page 22, line 22, leave out first <person> and insert <agent>

Margaret Burgess

69 In section 35, page 22, line 24, at end insert <or,>

( ) the agent does not meet the training requirements prescribed under section 29(2)(c).>

Margaret Burgess

70 In section 35, page 22, line 29, leave out <applicant> and insert <agent>

Alex Johnstone

71 In section 35, page 22, line 36, after <decision> insert <and their reasons for that decision>

After section 35

Alex Johnstone

72 After section 35, insert—

<Cancellation of registration on request>

(1) Where subsection (2) applies, the Scottish Ministers must, on receipt of an application by a registered letting agent, remove the registered letting agent from the register.

(2) This subsection applies where the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that—

(a) the registered letting agent has made adequate arrangements with respect to the agent’s letting agency work, and

(b) it is otherwise appropriate to remove the registered letting agent from the register.>
Section 38

Alex Johnstone

73 In section 38, page 24, line 2, at end insert—

   \(<(\ ))\text{ all contracts for letting agency work concluded between the person and a landlord after the relevant date are void.}\>

Margaret Burgess

74 In section 38, page 24, line 2, at end insert—

   \(<(\ ))\text{ Subsection (2)(a) does not apply in relation to costs incurred before the relevant date in a case where the person is removed from the register under section 34.}\>

Section 39

Margaret Burgess

75 In section 39, page 24, line 30, leave out <level 5 on the standard scale> and insert <£50,000>

Section 41

Alex Johnstone

76 In section 41, page 25, line 7, leave out <may> and insert <must>

Margaret Burgess

77 In section 41, page 25, line 8, at end insert—

   \(<(\ ))\text{ the handling of tenants’ and landlords’ money by those persons, and}\>

   \<(\ ))\text{ the professional indemnity arrangements to be kept in place by those persons.}\>

Patrick Harvie

137 In section 41, page 25, line 9, at end insert—

   \<(\ )\text{ Regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision about the level of advance rent that a letting agent may charge a tenant.}\>

Patrick Harvie

138 In section 41, page 25, line 9, at end insert—

   \<(\ )\text{ Regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision about the level of deposit that a letting agent may charge a tenant.}\>

Patrick Harvie

139 In section 41, page 25, line 9, at end insert—

   \<(\ )\text{ Regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision requiring a letting agent to provide a tenant with standard tenancy documents as defined by section 30B of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (c.43).}\>
Patrick Harvie

140 In section 41, page 25, line 9, at end insert—

<( ) Regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision prohibiting a letting agent from discriminating against a prospective tenant on socio-economic grounds.>

Patrick Harvie

141 In section 41, page 25, line 9, at end insert—

<( ) Regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision prohibiting a letting agent from discriminating against a prospective tenant on the grounds that the prospective tenant (or an individual whom the prospective tenant intends will reside or lodge with the prospective tenant) is in receipt of payments under the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 (c.4), the Jobseekers Act 1995 (c.18) or the Welfare Reform Act 2012 (c.5).>

Patrick Harvie

142 In section 41, page 25, line 9, at end insert—

<( ) Regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision prohibiting a letting agent from discriminating against a prospective tenant on the grounds of the immigration status of the prospective tenant (or an individual whom the prospective tenant intends will reside or lodge with the prospective tenant).>

Patrick Harvie

143 In section 41, page 25, line 9, at end insert—

<( ) Regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision setting time limits for repairs to a house required to meet the repairing standard set out in Chapter 4 of the 2006 Act.>

Mary Fee

144 In section 41, page 25, line 9, at end insert—

<( ) A person who carries out letting agency work must comply with the Letting Agent Code of Practice.

( ) Regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision—

(a) requiring that all deposits received by a letting agent must be paid to a tenancy deposit scheme approved under the Tenancy Deposit Schemes (Scotland) Regulations 2011 (SSI 2011/176),

(b) prohibiting a letting agent from charging a prospective tenant, tenant or former tenant any fee, charge or premium before, during or after the end of a tenancy, apart from rent and a tenancy deposit within the meaning of section 120 of the 2006 Act,

(c) setting out any measures that the Scottish Minister consider necessary to ensure that letting agents comply with duties under the Equality Act 2010 (c.15),

(d) prohibiting a letting agent from discriminating against a prospective tenant on the basis that the prospective tenant (or a person whom the prospective tenant intends will reside or lodge with the prospective tenant) —
(i) is in receipt of a payment under the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 (c.4), the Jobseekers Act 1995 (c.18) or the Welfare Reform Act 2012 (c.5), or

(ii) is responsible for the care of a child.

Patrick Harvie

130 In section 41, page 25, line 11, at end insert—

<( ) Regulations for the first code of practice under subsection (1) must be laid before the Parliament no later than the end of the period of one year beginning with the day of Royal Assent.>

Section 43

Patrick Harvie

131 In section 43, page 25, line 25, after <tenant> insert <, third party authorised by a tenant>

Margaret Burgess

78 In section 43, page 25, line 25, leave out <or landlord> and insert <, a landlord or the Scottish Ministers>

Patrick Harvie

132 In section 43, page 25, line 28, after <tenant> insert <or third party authorised by a tenant>

Margaret Burgess

79 In section 43, page 25, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) in relation to an application by the Scottish Ministers, any letting agent.>

Patrick Harvie

133 In section 43, page 26, line 7, at end insert—

<( ) must provide that rent may not be charged to or recovered from a tenant from a date specified in the enforcement order until such time as the order has been complied with.>

Section 46

Mary Fee

145 In section 46, page 26, line 39, at end insert—

<(4) The Scottish Ministers must remove from the register a letting agent who commits an offence under subsection (1).>

(5) Where the Scottish Ministers remove a person from the register under subsection (4) they must note that fact in the register.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make such further provision as they consider appropriate in connection with the consequences of the removal of a letting agent under subsection (4) for tenants of properties managed by that agent.>
After section 46

Margaret Burgess

80  After section 46, insert—

<Monitoring of compliance

Power to obtain information

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, for the purpose of monitoring compliance with the provisions of this Part, serve a notice on a person who appears to be a letting agent requiring the person to provide them with information specified in the notice.

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision about the requiring of information under subsection (1) and, in particular, may make provision about—

(a) the form of the notice and manner of service,

(b) the time within which information must be provided.

(3) Nothing in this section authorises the Scottish Ministers to require the disclosure of any information if such disclosure would make the person holding it susceptible under any enactment or rule of law to any sanction or other remedy.>

Margaret Burgess

81  After section 46, insert—

Power to carry out inspections

(1) For the purpose of monitoring compliance with the provisions of this Part, an authorised person may carry out an inspection of premises which appear to be being used for the purpose of carrying out letting agency work.

(2) For the purposes of carrying out the inspection, the authorised person may—

(a) enter and inspect the premises,

(b) require the production of any book, document, data or record (in whatever form it is held) and inspect it, and take copies of or extracts from it,

(c) take possession of any book, document, data or record (in whatever form it is held) which is on the premises and retain it for as long as the authorised person considers necessary,

(d) require any person to—

(i) give the authorised person such information as the authorised person considers necessary,

(ii) afford the authorised person such facilities and assistance as the authorised person considers necessary.

(3) Nothing in this section authorises the authorised person to require the disclosure of any information if such disclosure would make the person holding it susceptible under any enactment or rule of law to any sanction or other remedy.

(4) In this section—

“authorised person” means a person authorised by the Scottish Ministers,

“premises” includes any place and any vehicle, vessel, or moveable structure.>
Margaret Burgess

82 After section 46, insert—

<Warrants for entry

(1) A sheriff, justice of the peace or stipendiary magistrate may by warrant authorise a person to enter premises (if necessary using reasonable force) for the purpose of carrying out an inspection under section (Power to carry out inspections).

(2) A warrant may be granted under subsection (1) only if the sheriff, justice or magistrate is satisfied by evidence on oath—

(a) that there are reasonable grounds for entering the premises in question, and

(b) that—

(i) entry to the premises has been or is likely to be refused and that notice of the intention to apply for a warrant under this section has been given to the occupier,

(ii) a request for entry, or the giving of such notice, would defeat the object of the proposed entry,

(iii) the premises are unoccupied, or

(iv) the occupier is temporarily absent and it might defeat the object of the entry to await the occupier’s return.>

Margaret Burgess

83 After section 46, insert—

<Inspections: supplemental

(1) A person entering any premises under section (Power to carry out inspections)(2)(a) or in accordance with a warrant granted under section (Warrants for entry) may take on to the premises such other persons and such equipment as the person considers necessary.

(2) A right to enter any premises conferred by section (Power to carry out inspections)(2)(a) may be exercised only at a reasonable time.

(3) The occupier of the premises concerned must be given at least 24 hours’ notice before a person carries out an inspection under section (Power to carry out inspections) unless the person carrying out the inspection considers that giving such notice would defeat the object of the proposed inspection.

(4) A person carrying out an inspection under section (Power to carry out inspections) must, if required to do so, produce written evidence of the person’s authorisation to carry out the inspection.

(5) On leaving any premises which a person is authorised to enter by a warrant granted under section (Warrants for entry), the person must, if the premises are unoccupied or the occupier is temporarily absent, leave the premises as effectively secured against trespassers as the person found them.

(6) A person who takes possession of any item under section (Power to carry out inspections)(2)(c) must leave a statement on the premises from which the item was removed—

(a) giving particulars of what has been taken, and

(b) stating that the person has taken possession of it.>
Margaret Burgess

84 After section 46, insert—

<Information and inspection: offence

(1) It is an offence for a person who has been required to provide information in accordance with section (Power to obtain information) or section (Power to carry out inspections)(2)(d)(i)—

(a) without reasonable excuse, to fail or refuse to provide the information,
(b) to knowingly or recklessly make any statement in respect of that information which is false or misleading in a material particular.

(2) It is an offence for a person—

(a) to intentionally obstruct a person acting in the proper exercise of the persons’ functions under sections (Power to carry out inspections) to (Inspections: supplemental),
(b) without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with any requirement made under section (Power to carry out inspections)(2)(b) or (d)(ii) by a person who is so acting.

(3) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) or (2) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.>

Section 51

Alex Johnstone

85 In section 51, page 29, line 10, leave out from <or> to end of line 13

Margaret Burgess

86 In section 51, page 29, line 18, leave out <“house”, “landlord”>,

Margaret Burgess

87 In section 51, page 29, line 21, leave out <modify> to end of line 22 and insert <-

(a) provide that “letting agency work” does not include things done—

(i) on behalf of a specified body, or
(ii) for the purpose of a scheme of a specified description, or
(b) otherwise modify the meaning of “letting agency work” for the time being in this section.

(4) A scheme falling within a description specified by the Scottish Ministers under subsection (3)(a)(ii) must be—

(a) operated by a body which does not carry on the scheme for profit, and
(b) for the purpose of assisting persons to enter into leases or occupancy agreements.>
In section 52, page 29, line 24, at end insert—

“house” is to be construed in accordance with section 101 of the 2004 Act,
“landlord” is to be construed in accordance with section 101 of the 2004 Act.

In section 52, page 29, line 29, at end insert—

“tenant”, in relation to an occupancy arrangement, means the person who under the arrangement is permitted to occupy the house.

In section 55, page 32, line 16, at end insert—

(3A) Where subsection (3B) applies, the local authority must visit the site before determining whether to issue or renew a Part 1A site licence.

(3B) This subsection applies where a person has made a relevant permanent site application for a site in respect of which the local authority has, at any time in the period of 3 years ending with the date of the application, received from a tenant or an authorised representative of a tenant a complaint about the management of that site.

In section 55, page 33, line 4, at end insert—

(4) Before refusing to consent to the transfer under subsection (2), the authority must give to the applicant a notice stating that—

(a) it is considering refusing the application and its reasons for doing so, and

(b) the applicant has the right to make written representations to the authority before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(5) In making its decision under this section the local authority must consider the application and any representations made in accordance with subsection (4)(b).

In section 55, page 33, line 12, leave out <within 12 months of receiving the application.> and insert <before the time limit specified under subsection (2A).>

(2A) The Scottish Ministers must, by regulations subject to the negative procedure, specify a time limit for the purposes of each application to which this section applies (and in doing so may specify different limits for different applications or types of application).
Margaret Burgess

92 In section 55, page 35, line 3, at end insert—

<(4) A local authority must give to the persons mentioned in subsection (3) its reasons for making a decision mentioned in subsection (2).”>.

Section 56

Margaret Burgess

93 In section 56, page 35, line 15, leave out <3> and insert <5>

Section 57

Margaret Burgess

94 In section 57, page 35, line 32, leave out <as soon as practicable after> and insert <before the end of the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which>

Margaret Burgess

95 In section 57, page 35, line 35, at end insert—

<(4) Where a local authority requests information under subsection (3), the licence holder must provide the information before the end of the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which the request is made.”>.

Section 58

Margaret Burgess

96 In section 58, page 36, line 26, leave out <and its reasons for doing so>

Margaret Burgess

97 In section 58, page 36, line 28, at end insert—

<(5) Where a local authority revokes a licence under this section, the authority must give to the person who held the licence its reasons for doing so.”>.

Section 60

Margaret Burgess

98 In section 60, page 37, leave out lines 18 to 23 and insert—

<( ) the procedure to be followed in relation to—

(i) the issue, renewal, transfer, transmission and revocation of a Part 1A site licence,

(ii) appeals under section 32M,

( ) the determination and consequences of an appeal under section 32M.>

Margaret Burgess

99 In section 60, page 37, line 34, after <section> insert <32G or>
Margaret Burgess

100 In section 60, page 37, line 36, after <section> insert <32G or>

Margaret Burgess

101 In section 60, page 37, line 38, after <section> insert <32G or>

Margaret Burgess

102* In section 60, page 37, line 39, leave out from <and> to end of line 2 on page 38, and insert—

<( ) the time limits for the giving of reasons under section 32I(4) and 32L(5),>

Margaret Burgess

103 In section 60, page 38, leave out lines 4 to 6

Margaret Burgess

104 In section 60, page 38, leave out line 9

Section 61

Margaret Burgess

105 In section 61, page 38, line 31, at end insert—

<( ) committed a breach of an agreement to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 applies,>

Mary Fee

147 In section 61, page 38, line 31, at end insert—

<( ) contravened any guidance issued by the Gas and Electricity Markets Authority established under section 1(1) of the Utilities Act 2000 (c.27) on the resale of gas and electricity,>

Mary Fee

148 In section 61, page 38, line 31, at end insert—

<( ) contravened any guidance issued by Scottish Water on the resale of water,>

After section 62

Margaret Burgess

106 After section 62, insert—

<Fit and proper person: information sharing>

After section 32P of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 62), insert—

“32PA Fit and proper person: information sharing

(1) A local authority may, for the purpose of another local authority deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, provide to that other authority information which falls within subsection (2).
(2) Information falls within this subsection if the local authority holding the information considers that—

(a) it is likely to be relevant to the other authority’s decision under this Part as to whether a person is a fit and proper person, and

(b) it ought to be provided for that purpose.

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) apply despite any duty of confidentiality owed to any person in respect of the information by the authority disclosing the information.”

Section 63

Margaret Burgess

107 In section 63, page 39, line 34, at end insert—

<(1A) It is an offence for a person, without reasonable excuse—

(a) to fail to notify a local authority in accordance with 32K(1) and (2), or

(b) to fail to provide information in accordance with section 32K(3) and (4).>
Margaret Burgess
113 In section 65, page 43, line 22, at end insert—

<(  ) The period specified in a penalty notice under subsection (2)(c) must begin on the later of—

(a) the day on which the period during which the person may make an appeal under subsection (6) expires, or
(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which the appeal is finally determined or abandoned.>

Section 70

Margaret Burgess
114 In section 70, page 49, line 6, at end insert—

<32Z5A Guidance

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, after consulting such persons as they consider appropriate, publish guidance about the operation of this Part.

(2) A local authority must have regard to any guidance published when carrying out its functions under this Part.>

Margaret Burgess
115 In section 70, page 49, leave out lines 7 to 12

After section 71

Margaret Burgess
116 After section 71, insert—

<Agreements to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 applies

In Schedule 1 to the Mobile Homes Act 1983 (c.34)—

(a) after paragraph 1, insert—

“1A (1) The right to station the mobile home under in paragraph 1 is not affected by—

(a) the expiry of a Part 1A site licence in accordance with section 32J(1)(b)(ii) of the 1960 Act,
(b) the refusal to issue or renew a Part 1A site licence under section 32D of the 1960 Act,
(c) the revocation of a Part 1A site licence under section 32L of the 1960 Act, or
(d) the expiry of a site licence in accordance with section 71(2) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014 (asp 00).

(2) Sub-paragraph (1) applies in relation to agreements that were made at any time before the day on which that sub-paragraph comes into force (as well as in relation to agreements made on or after that day).

(3) In this paragraph—>
“the 1960 Act” means the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (c.62), and “Part 1A site licence” has the same meaning as in section 32Z5 of the 1960 Act.”, and

(b) in paragraph 23, after sub-paragraph (1)(a) insert—

“(aa) no regard may be had to any costs paid, or to be paid, by the owner in connection with expenses recovered by a local authority under—

(i) section 32Z2(2) of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960,
(ii) subsection (1)(a) or (c) of section 32Z3 of that Act, or
(iii) section 32Z4 of that Act,

(ab) no regard may be had to any costs paid, or to be paid, by the owner in connection with the owner being convicted of an offence under Part 1A of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.”.

Section 72

Jim Eadie

7 In section 72, page 50, line 36, after <2004”,> insert—

<( ) for subsection (3), substitute—

“(3) The repayable amount is recoverable in—

(a) 30 equal annual instalments payable on the same date (specified in the charge) in each calendar year, or

(b) monthly instalments over such shorter period of time as the local authority determines to be reasonable in the circumstances.

(3A) Where a local authority determines a repayment period under subsection (3)(b), it must provide the owner of, or any other person interested in, any living accommodation subject to the repayment charge with assistance under section 71(1).”.

Malcolm Chisholm

35 In section 72, page 50, line 36, after <2004”,> insert—

<( ) in subsection (4), after the word “register” where it second appears, insert “, and on its being so registered has priority over all existing and future burdens on the same living accommodation”.

After section 72

Margaret Burgess

117 After section 72, insert—

<Notice of potential liability for costs: notice of discharge

(1) In section 10A of the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 9) (notice of potential liability for costs: further provision), after subsection (3) insert—
“(3A) The owner of a burdened property may apply to register a notice (a “notice of discharge”) if—
(a) a notice of potential liability for costs in relation to the property has not expired,
(b) the liability for costs under section 10(2) to which the notice of potential liability relates has, in relation to the property which is the subject of the application, been fully discharged, and
(c) the person who registered the notice of potential liability for costs consents to the application.

(3B) A notice of discharge—
(a) must be in the form prescribed by order made by the Scottish Ministers, and
(b) on being registered, discharges the notice of potential liability for costs as it applies to the property which is the subject of the application.”.

(2) In the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004—
(a) in section 13 (notice of potential liability for costs: further provision), after subsection (3) insert—
“(3A) The owner of a flat may apply to register a notice (a “notice of discharge”) if—
(a) a notice of potential liability for costs in relation to the flat has not expired,
(b) the liability for costs under section 12(2) to which the notice of potential liability relates has, in relation to the flat which is the subject of the application, been fully discharged, and
(c) the person who registered the notice of potential liability for costs consents to the application.

(3B) A notice of discharge—
(a) must be in the form prescribed by order made by the Scottish Ministers, and
(b) on being registered, discharges the notice of potential liability for costs as it applies to the property which is the subject of the application.”, and

(b) in section 29(1) (interpretation), in the definition of “register” after “costs” insert “, a notice of discharge”.

After section 73

Jim Eadie

9 After section 73, insert—

<Home maintenance framework

(1) Before section 42 of the 2006 Act, insert—
“Home maintenance framework

41A Home maintenance framework

(1) Where any premises consist of two or more houses, the owners of those houses must prepare jointly a framework (a “home maintenance framework”) in relation to any part of the premises which is owned in common by those owners.

(2) A home maintenance framework must set out how the maintenance and repair of such parts of the premises will be managed and must in particular include—

(a) arrangements for an annual inspection of any roof areas owned in common by the owners,

(b) a payment plan or other arrangements to fund maintenance and repairs to any part of the premises which is owned in common, and

(c) arrangements for the appointment of a responsible person or agent to manage the implementation of the framework.”

(2) In section 42 of the 2006 Act, after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Where any premises consist of two or more houses, the local authority may consider for the purposes of subsection (2)(b) that those houses are unlikely to be maintained to a reasonable standard if it appears to the authority that a satisfactory home maintenance framework has not been prepared under section 41A in relation to the houses.”

Section 75

James Kelly

56 In section 75, page 51, line 25, at end insert—

<( ) In section 44(1) of the 2006 Act (maintenance plans for two or more houses), after “premises,” insert “and any garden area associated with the premises,”>

After section 76

Margaret Burgess

118 After section 76, insert—

<Charging orders

(1) In Schedule 9 to the 1987 Act (recovery of expenses by charging order)—

(a) in paragraph 4, sub-paragraph (b)(i) is repealed, and

(b) for paragraph 6, substitute—

“6 Every annuity charged by a charging order may be recoverable as a debt due to the person for the time being entitled to it.”.

(2) In section 108(2) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45) (recovery of expenses by charging order), for the words from “modifications” to “paragraph” in the last place where it appears substitute “modification, that is to say, in sub-paragraph (b)(ii) of paragraph 4 of that Schedule”.

(3) In section 19(3) of the Crofters (Scotland) Act 1993 (c.44) (priority of sums due), the words “heads (i), (ii) and (iii) of” are repealed.>
After section 77

Margaret Burgess

119 After section 77, insert—

<First-tier Tribunal: disqualification of members from exercise of certain functions

(1) This section applies to the following functions and jurisdictions of the First-tier Tribunal—

(a) a function or jurisdiction of the sheriff transferred to the Tribunal under section 17 or by virtue of Part 1 of schedule 1,

(b) a function conferred on the Tribunal, by virtue of Part 3 and Parts 2 to 4 of schedule 1, by—

(i) the 2004 Act,

(ii) the 2006 Act,

(c) a function conferred on the Tribunal by or under Part 4.

(2) A member of the First-tier Tribunal is disqualified from exercising a function or jurisdiction to which this section applies if the member is—

(a) a member of the House of Commons,

(b) a member of the Scottish Parliament,

(c) a member of the European Parliament,

(d) a Minister of the Crown,

(e) a member of the Scottish Government.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify subsection (2) by—

(a) adding a disqualification to,

(b) varying the description of a disqualification for the time being mentioned in,

(c) removing a disqualification from,

that subsection.>

Margaret Burgess

120 After section 77, insert—

<Private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership

In Schedule 4 to the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984, after paragraph 1 insert—

“1A (1) A person is disqualified from appointment to, and from remaining a member of, the private rented housing panel if the person is or becomes—

(a) a member of the House of Commons,

(b) a member of the Scottish Parliament,

(c) a member of the European Parliament,

(d) a Minister of the Crown,

(e) a member of the Scottish Government.

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify sub-paragraph (1) by—
(a) adding a disqualification to,
(b) varying the description of a disqualification for the time being mentioned in,
(c) removing a disqualification from,
that sub-paragraph.
(3) An order under sub-paragraph (2) is subject to the negative procedure.”.

Section 79

Margaret Burgess

121 In section 79, page 53, line 20, leave out <Subsection (4)> and insert <A duty on the Regulator to consult in accordance with paragraph (i) or (ii) of subsection (4)(a)>

Margaret Burgess

122 In section 79, page 53, line 27, leave out <the duties under subsection (4)> and insert <that duty>

Margaret Burgess

123 In section 79, page 53, line 28, at end insert—

<(4B) The Regulator must—
(a) issue guidance on subsection (4A), such guidance to include—
   (i) the circumstances in which it considers that subsection (4A) is likely to apply,
   (ii) the actions it expects to take in those circumstances, and
   (iii) how, in those circumstances, it intends to communicate with any of the persons mentioned in paragraph (b) who are affected by its actions, and
(b) before issuing or revising any guidance, consult—
   (i) tenants of registered social landlords or their representatives,
   (ii) registered social landlords or their representatives, and
   (iii) secured creditors of registered social landlords or their representatives.>

Margaret Burgess

124 In section 79, page 53, line 28, at end insert—

<(4C) Where the Regulator proposes to direct a transfer of some (but not all) of a registered social landlord's assets, the Regulator must—
(a) before making a direction, obtain an independent valuation of those assets, and
(b) when making a direction, have regard to that valuation.”.>
After section 79

Margaret Burgess

125 After section 79, insert—

<Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

(1) After section 104 of the 2010 Act insert—

“Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

104A Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

(1) This section applies to a registered social landlord which is—

(a) a registered society, or

(b) a registered company.

(2) An arrangement under which the registered social landlord is to become a subsidiary of a body of which it is not currently a subsidiary has effect only if the Regulator consents to that arrangement before it is completed.

(3) Chapter 3 of Part 10 makes provision for Regulator consent for the purpose of this section.”.

(2) After section 124 of the 2010 Act insert—

“For Chapter 3

REGISTERED SOCIAL LANDLORD BECOMING A SUBSIDIARY OF ANOTHER BODY

124A Regulator’s consent

(1) The special procedure set out in sections 114 to 121 of Chapter 1 applies in relation to an arrangement to which the Regulator’s consent is required under section 104A as it applies in relation to a disposal to which Chapter 1 applies.

(2) The Regulator may determine that the special procedure is not to apply where the Regulator considers that proposed arrangement will result in there being no reduction in the amount of control that the registered social landlord has over its own affairs.

(3) The Regulator must determine that the special procedure is not to apply or is to cease to apply where the Regulator considers that—

(a) the registered social landlord’s viability is in jeopardy for financial reasons,

(b) a person could take a step in relation to the registered social landlord which would require to be notified to the Regulator under section 73, and

(c) the determination under this subsection would substantially reduce the likelihood of a person taking such a step.

(4) Where the Regulator makes a determination under subsection (2) or (3), the Regulator may give or refuse consent to the arrangement.
124B Purchaser protection

Failure by the Regulator or by a registered social landlord to comply with any provision of sections 114 to 121 of Chapter 1 in relation to an arrangement under which the registered social landlord is to become a subsidiary of a body of which it is not currently a subsidiary does not invalidate the Regulator’s consent to the arrangement.”.

(3) In section 164 of the 2010 Act (connected bodies), the definition of “subsidiary” is repealed.

(4) In section 165 of the 2010 Act (interpretation), after the definition of “social landlord” insert—

“subsidiary” has the same meaning as in the Companies Act 2006 (c.46) or, as the case may be, the Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies and Credit Unions Act 1968 (c.55),”.

Section 82

Alex Johnstone

57 In section 82, page 54, line 19, at end insert—

<( ) under section (Scottish starter tenancy)(1),>

James Kelly

37 In section 82, page 54, line 20, at end insert—

<( ) under section (Rent reviews and rent increases)(1),>

James Kelly

38 In section 82, page 54, line 20, at end insert—

<( ) under section (Security of tenure)(1),>

Drew Smith

58 In section 82, page 54, line 20, at end insert—

<( ) under section (Houses let for holiday purposes)(1),>

Margaret Burgess

126 In section 82, page 54, line 21, at end insert—

<( ) under section 41(1) which set out the first code of practice or replace the code of practice,>

Patrick Harvie

127 In section 82, page 54, line 21, at end insert—

<( ) under section 41(1),>

Margaret Burgess

128 In section 82, page 54, line 22, leave out <51(3)> and insert <51(3)(b)>
Schedule 2

Margaret Burgess

39 In schedule 2, page 64, line 2, at end insert—

<(  ) In section 24(5)(d), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.
(  ) In section 31(5)(c), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.
>

Margaret Burgess

40 In schedule 2, page 64, line 31, at end insert—

<(  ) In section 5(4)(a), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.
>

Margaret Burgess

41 In schedule 2, page 65, line 22, at end insert—

<Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1)

In section 22 of the 2006 Act—

(a) subsection (4)(c) is repealed, and
(b) subsection (6) is repealed.
>

Margaret Burgess

129 In schedule 2, page 65, line 29, at end insert—

<(  ) In section 124, for “122” substitute “121”.
>

Section 85

Alex Johnstone

42 In section 85, page 55, line 7, leave out subsection (4)

Margaret Burgess

43 In section 85, page 55, line 8, leave out <3> and insert <2>

Mary Fee

44 In section 85, page 55, line 8, leave out <3> and insert <1>

Long Title

Alex Johnstone

45 In the long title, page 1, line 1, leave out <the abolition of the right to buy,>
2nd Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- a list of any amendments already debated;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the second day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Access to register of letting agents
59

Exemption for solicitor letting agents
134

Registered letting agents: training requirements
60, 69

Register of letting agents: giving of reasons for decisions
61, 71

Register of letting agents: time limit for determining application
62

Register of letting agents: monitoring compliance
63, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84

Fit and proper person: criminal record information
64, 65, 66, 66A

Letting agent registration number
67

Duration of letting agent registration
135, 136

Register of letting agents: minor and technical amendments
68, 70, 86, 88, 89
Register of letting agents: cancellation of registration on request
72

Letting agency work without registration
73, 74, 75

Letting Agent Code of Practice
76, 77, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 130, 126, 127

Enforcement of Code of Practice
131, 78, 132, 79, 133, 145

Meaning of letting agency work
85, 87, 128

Part 1A site licence: site inspection before issue or renewal
146

Part 1A site licences: giving of reasons for local authority decision
90, 92, 96, 97

Part 1A site licence: time limit for determining application
91

Duration of Part 1A site licence
93

Duty to inform where change: period and offence
94, 95, 107, 108

Power to make provision in relation to decisions and appeals
98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104

Part 1A site licence: fit and proper person test
105, 147, 148, 106

Power to vary maximum fine
109

Improvement notices and penalty notices
110, 111, 112, 113

Guidance on operation of Part 5
114

Agreements to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 relates 115, 116

Tenement management schemes
7, 35
Discharge of costs notices applying to owners of property
117

Home maintenance framework duty
9

Maintenance plans: areas
56

Charging orders
118

First-tier Tribunal and private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership
119, 120

Scottish Housing Regulator: transfer of assets following inquiries
121, 122, 123, 124

Registered social landlord disposals and restructuring
125, 129

Amendments already debated

Abolition of right to buy
With 12 – 42, 43, 44, 45

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 42 pre-empts amendments 43 and 44
Amendments 43 and 44 are direct alternatives

Short Scottish secure tenancy created on antisocial behaviour grounds
With 50 – 39, 40

Scottish starter tenancy
With 51 – 57

Enforcement of repairing standard
With 6 – 41

Rent reviews and rent increases – private rented housing
With 33 – 37

Security of tenure – private rented housing
With 34 – 38

Houses let for holiday purposes
With 55 – 58
INFRASTRUCTURE AND CAPITAL INVESTMENT COMMITTEE

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES

15th Meeting, 2014 (Session 4)

Wednesday 21 May 2014

Present:
Jim Eadie
Mary Fee
Adam Ingram (Deputy Convener)
Alex Johnstone
James Kelly (Committee Substitute)
Gordon MacDonald
Maureen Watt (Convener)

Also present: Margaret Burgess and Patrick Harvie

Apologies were received from Mark Griffin.

Housing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 2).

The following amendments were agreed to without division: 60, 61, 63, 68, 69, 70, 71, 74, 75, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 86, 88, 89, 90, 92, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115 and 116.

The following amendments were agreed to (by division)—
62 (For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0)
66 (For 4, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
87 (For 5, Against 0, Abstentions 2)
91 (For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0)
93 (For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0)
94 (For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0)
95 (For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division)—
134 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
64 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
66A (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
135 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
136 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0)
73 (For 1, Against 6, Abstentions 0)
137 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
138 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
139 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
140 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
141 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
142 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
143 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
144 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0).
131 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
145 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
85 (For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were moved and, no member having objected, withdrawn: 59, 67, 72, 76 and 146.

The following amendments were not moved: 65, 130, 132, 133, 147 and 148.

The following provisions were agreed to without amendment: sections 26, 27, 28, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 40, 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 53, 54, 59, 62, 66, 67, 68, 69 and 71.

The following provisions were agreed to as amended: sections 29, 30, 31, 35, 38, 39, 41, 43, 51, 52, 55, 56, 57, 58, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65 and 70.

The Committee ended consideration of the Bill for the day, amendment 116 having been disposed of.
The committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed each section and schedule in the bill, and I will put a question on each section at the appropriate point.

Section 26—Register of letting agents

The Convener: The first group is on access to register of letting agents. Amendment 59, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is the only amendment in the group.

Alex Johnstone (North East Scotland) (Con): The reason for my amendment is simply to ensure that those who wish to consult the register can do so without a charge being levied. Members will be aware that I am the sort of person who often likes to see charges put in place to ensure that measures are self-financing. However, if the register of letting agents—and much of the bill—is to function effectively, it will rely on access to the register being given to people who may be of limited means or who may be experiencing hard times. For that reason, it is important that the bill contains a clear statement that access to the register will be without a fee.

I move amendment 59.

The Minister for Housing and Welfare (Margaret Burgess): Amendment 59, as we have heard, is aimed at preventing ministers from imposing a charge for making publicly available the information that the register contains. There is no provision in the bill that allows Scottish ministers to charge a fee. The register will be an online register that can be accessed by all, and there will be no charge for that access. The amendment is therefore not required, and I invite Alex Johnstone to withdraw it.

Alex Johnstone: I thank the minister for stating clearly that access to the register will be free. That is on the public record, and I therefore seek to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment 59, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 26 agreed to.

After section 26

The Convener: The next group is on exemption for solicitor letting agents. Amendment 134, in the name of Mary Fee, is the only amendment in the group.

Mary Fee (West Scotland) (Lab): Amendment 134 concerns solicitor letting agents. Many solicitors are letting agents and have been providing services as such for many years. Solicitor letting agents operate after notifying the council of the Law Society of Scotland and work in accordance with standards of practice that the Law Society issues. Any breach of those... standards would mean that a solicitor would be guilty of professional misconduct and dealt with appropriately.

Solicitor letting agents are already registered with the council of the Law Society and are subject to its sanctions. My amendment would prevent dual regulation of solicitor letting agents. The Law Society takes the view that it is the body that should regulate and sanction its letting agents. I note the concerns that have been brought to my attention by Shelter and the Scottish Association of Landlords, and I would be happy to meet the minister to discuss how that sector could be recognised in registration.

I move amendment 134.

Alex Johnstone: I have looked at the situation that is likely to exist under the bill's current provisions, and there appears to be duplication in the case of solicitor letting agents. I am concerned that may generate additional cost in the industry, in addition to the confusion associated with dual registration for solicitor letting agents.

I am aware that a single system of registration has its advantages, and I would be keen to hear whether the minister has any ideas about how the system might be simplified and aligned so that it may be easier to impose without duplicating costs in some cases.

Margaret Burgess: The Scottish Government is committed to improving standards across the letting agent industry. The bill's provisions are intended to give tenants and landlords confidence in a consistent standard of service. The bill will also improve the framework for dealing with disputes through a single authority, the first-tier tribunal, underpinned by a code of practice. I am clear that there will be a register for all letting agents, including solicitors. I am also clear that all letting agents must comply with the code of practice. That will ensure consistency of standards across the industry.

I appreciate that solicitors have their own redress arrangements, but I am not convinced that they should be exempted from the regulations that are set out in the bill. I recognise that solicitors must be registered with the Law Society of Scotland. I have already informed the Law Society that I will consider what may be done for solicitors in the registration process to avoid unnecessary duplication in the fit-and-proper-person test. However, I am clear that all those in the industry must be on the register. That includes solicitors who operate as letting agents.

The Scottish Government will work with stakeholders to develop the draft code of practice before it goes out to full public consultation. The Law Society and other professional bodies will therefore have an opportunity to help shape it, taking account of their current requirements. If solicitors wish to operate as letting agents, they must be subject to the same rules as all other letting agents. That includes having the same code of practice and the same means of redress for consumers.

I am clear that there must be a consistent approach to regulating all letting agents. Amendment 134 would undermine that consistent approach, and it could result in confusion for landlords and tenants. Any complaint relating to a breach of the code of practice for letting agents should be taken to the first-tier tribunal.

The Scottish Government will continue to work with stakeholders to ensure that the regulation of letting agents works in a joined-up way with other regulatory regimes, minimising any potential overlap between the Scottish Legal Complaints Commission and the tribunal, for example.

The approach that will be taken will be comprehensive and as simple as possible for letting agents and clients.

I therefore ask Mary Fee to withdraw amendment 134.

Mary Fee: I listened carefully to the minister. Although I accept what she said about the consultation that is to be carried out, I do not feel that I have received the commitment that I was hoping to get regarding recognition of solicitor letting agents within the bill. I accept that there must be one code of practice, and that there must be one set of rules that everyone abides by. The Law Society of Scotland is simply looking for some form of recognition within the bill that it is a body that governs and rules its members and that it will comply with a code.

For those reasons, I press my amendment.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 134 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Caryck, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 134 disagreed to.

Sections 27 and 28 agreed to.
Section 29—Decision on application

The Convener: The next group is on registered letting agents: training requirements. Amendment 60, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 69.

Margaret Burgess: At present, letting agents are not required to have any training before they can operate a lettings business. During stage 1, representatives of the sector argued strongly that all letting agents should have a level of training before they can be registered. I have listened to the points that were made, and I agree that training is an important element of raising standards across the sector as a whole.

For that reason, amendment 60 provides that training is required as a condition of registration for letting agents. Amendment 60 confers a power on the Scottish ministers to specify, in regulations, the content and timing of the training and those persons who must undertake it. That will be done in consultation with key stakeholders.

That will provide ministers with flexibility to take account of the views of the sector, to ensure that the training is fit for purpose and to change the training requirements to suit future circumstances within the sector. The power will also allow ministers to require other persons who are carrying out letting agent work, such as front-line staff, to undertake training, should that be considered necessary.

10:15

Amendment 69 will enable a letting agent to be removed from the register if the agent no longer meets the training requirements. Amendments 60 and 69 will ensure that a letting agent must demonstrate knowledge of letting agency work in order to be registered, thereby providing an important additional assurance to consumers, in addition to the fit-and-proper-person test.

I move amendment 60.

Amendment 60 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on register of letting agents: giving of reasons for decisions. Amendment 61, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is grouped with amendment 71.

Alex Johnstone: We are getting on at tremendous speed, convener.

The purpose of amendments 61 and 71 is to ensure that anyone who is refused access to the register is made aware of the reasons for the refusal. It is reasonable to expect that such a person might want to consider their position and perhaps appeal against the decision, so it is important that the reasons for the refusal are made available at the earliest opportunity.

Amendments 61 and 71 would achieve that objective.

I move amendment 61.

Margaret Burgess: I thank Alex Johnstone for lodging amendments 61 and 71. Amendment 61 would require the Scottish ministers to provide a reason for their decision to refuse an application to the letting agent register or a renewal of application. Ministers would give reasons as a matter of good practice, but I accept that amendment 61 would ensure that that happened.

Amendment 71 seeks the same provision for ministers to provide reasons for their decision, but in the context of removing someone from the register.

The amendments ensure a consistent approach to the notification provisions, and I therefore support amendments 61 and 71.

I move amendment 61.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 61 requires the Scottish ministers to provide a reason for their decision to refuse an application to the letting agent register or a renewal of application. Ministers would give reasons as a matter of good practice, but I accept that amendment 61 would ensure that that happened.

The amendments ensure a consistent approach to the notification provisions, and I therefore support amendments 61 and 71.

Section 29, as amended, agreed to.

After section 29

The Convener: The next group is on register of letting agents: time limit for determining application. Amendment 62, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 62 requires Scottish ministers to make a decision on an application for registration or renewal to the register of letting agents within 12 months of receiving the application. Scottish ministers will have the power to apply to the first-tier tribunal to extend the deadline. However, in practice, a decision would be made within a much shorter timescale. If Scottish ministers do not make a decision within 12 months, that will be taken as tacit approval of the application.

A person whose application has been tacitly approved will stay on the register for only one year before being required to reapply. The Scottish ministers will still have the power to remove such a person from the register under section 35 if they are not a fit and proper person to carry out letting agency work.

I move amendment 62.

Mary Fee: You say that the decision should be made within 12 months but that the reality is that it will be made within a much shorter timescale. What timescale are you referring to?

Margaret Burgess: Every application has to be considered on its merits, and a renewal will very often be much quicker than a new application. The provision ties in with other forms of registration—it is exactly the same procedure that we have for landlord registration and so on. The application should not just lie there without a decision being taken. The idea is that, if there is a lot of work to be done and information to be gathered in order for a decision to be made because the applicant did not provide sufficient information, there is still an onus on ministers to make that decision within a 12-month period. However, as is the case with the other forms of registration, only in unusual circumstances would it take anything close to 12 months.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 62 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

Against
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 62 agreed to.

Section 30—Fit and proper person considerations

The Convener: The next group is on register of letting agents: monitoring compliance. Amendment 63, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 80 to 84.

Margaret Burgess: The committee’s stage 1 report identified some concerns about how the regulatory regime will tackle unregistered letting agents. During an evidence session at stage 1, letting agent representatives put forward a strong argument for further powers to be added to the enforcement measures that are contained in the bill. I have listened to the committee and to stakeholders, and I considered their views carefully before deciding to lodge the amendments in the group.

Amendment 80 enables the Scottish ministers to serve a notice requiring a letting agent to provide information. Scottish ministers will use the power to get evidence of whether a letting agent is complying with the code of practice or the registration requirements. That may include information relating to how a letting agent manages its client accounts or the types of fees that it may charge to tenants. However, it does not include information that it would be unlawful to disclose, for example where to do so would be a breach of confidentiality.

Amendment 81 allows Scottish ministers to authorise an inspection of a letting agent’s business premises in order to check compliance with the regulatory requirements. The power could be used in situations in which ministers suspect that an unregistered letting agent is operating illegally or when it would be more appropriate to inspect for compliance with the code of practice on site.

Amendment 82 provides that a court can grant a warrant for entry in certain circumstances, including when access has been refused. A court may grant a warrant where it considers that there are reasonable grounds to do so.

Amendment 83 sets out further detail about the carrying out of inspections, including—in particular—provision about giving notice and providing evidence of authorisation.

Amendment 84 sets out offences, with fines at level 3 on the standard scale, for non-compliance with certain aspects of the new powers to obtain information and inspection.

Finally, amendment 63 ensures that if a letting agent fails to comply with an inspection or a request to provide information, that failure can be taken into account in determining whether the agent is a fit and proper person.

There is overwhelming support for letting agent regulation. I am clear that the regulatory framework should be robust, that regulation should have teeth and that it will be enforced. I want to see a regulatory system that boosts the confidence of landlords and tenants and raises the professional standards of the industry. I believe that the amendments will help to achieve that.

I move amendment 63.

Amendment 63 agreed to.

Section 30, as amended, agreed to.

Section 31—Fit and proper person: criminal record certificate

The Convener: The next group is on fit and proper person: criminal record information. Amendment 64, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is grouped with amendments 65, 66 and 66A.

Alex Johnstone: The purpose of amendment 64 is to change “may” to “must”, which is a typical amendment that we see often enough. The function in this case is to ensure that the applicants for registration are required to provide a Amendment 65 would have the effect of removing section 31(2).

However, the group also includes amendment 66, in the name of the minister, which will remove the section to which the previous two amendments would apply. As I expect amendment 66 to be agreed to, I have lodged amendment 66A, which is designed simply to make the change to the new provision that I proposed to make to the old, which is to remove “may” and replace it with “must” to ensure that the bill has the effect of requiring applicants to the register to provide a criminal record certificate.

I move amendment 64.

Margaret Burgess: I will speak to amendment 66, in my name, and respond to the amendments in Alex Johnstone’s name. Amendment 66 is a technical amendment to modify section 31, so that it better reflects operational practice. It will not change the intended effect of section 31, which aims to provide the Scottish ministers with access to information on criminal records where they have reasonable grounds to suspect that the information already provided to them under section 30(2) is false or has become inaccurate.

Amendments 64, 65 and 66A are intended to have the same effect, but the latter amendment would change my proposed replacement of section 31 rather than the existing section 31. The amendments would mean that the Scottish ministers “must” have regard to information that would normally be contained in a criminal record certificate where they have reasonable grounds to suspect that the information provided under section 30(2) is false or has become inaccurate.

Amendments 64, 65 and 66A are intended to have the same effect, but the latter amendment would change my proposed replacement of section 31 rather than the existing section 31. The amendments would mean that the Scottish ministers “must” have regard to information that would normally be contained in a criminal record certificate where they have reasonable grounds to suspect that the information provided under section 30(2) is false or has become inaccurate. I do not think that that change would create a proportionate process, as it would mean that ministers would have to look at criminal record information in every case, even in cases where the information provided under section 30(2) did not relate to a criminal offence.

Amendment 66, as currently worded, proposes that the Scottish ministers “may” have regard to that information. It is important to retain that discretion to enable the Scottish ministers to determine whether it is proportionate in the circumstances to have regard to what is highly sensitive information. Applicants will be required to provide information on any criminal offences when they make their application, and it is only in cases where it is thought later that that information was inaccurate or has changed that we would look to the provision that gives ministers discretion to look at an applicant’s full criminal record.

I ask the committee to support amendment 66 but not to support amendments 64, 65 or 66A, as they would create a disproportionate process.

Mary Fee: I ask the minister to clarify something relating to amendment 66, which would leave out section 31. Section 31(3) requires that, if a criminal record check has to be done, ministers have to wait until that check is back before proceeding, but amendment 66 will remove that provision, and I am a bit concerned about that. Why has the minister done that?

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 66 is a technical amendment about operational practices. Ministers are responsible for the system for disclosing criminal records, so ministers can get that information, if necessary, straight from Disclosure Scotland, rather than going by some circuitous route to get it. That is what we are saying. When someone applies, they have to disclose criminal information. If we think that it is not accurate, we can obtain criminal information direct from Disclosure Scotland. The amendment strengthens the provision and makes it more operationally effective than previously.

Alex Johnstone: Although it seems a bit strange, there is a strong likelihood that I will support amendment 66, in the name of the minister. However, for chronological consistency, I will press amendment 64.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 64 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 64 disagreed to.

Amendment 65 not moved.

Amendment 66 moved—[Margaret Burgess].

Amendment 66A moved—[Alex Johnstone].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 66A be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 66A disagreed to.

10:30

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 66 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

Against
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 66 agreed to.

Section 31, as amended, agreed to.

Section 32—Letting agent registration number

The Convener: The next group is on letting agent registration number. Amendment 67, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is the only amendment in the group.

Alex Johnstone: Amendment 67 would make it obligatory to include the letting agent’s registration number in all documentation. There is no practical reason why the registration number cannot appear in all the agent’s documentation, and the requirement should be obligatory.

I move amendment 67.

Margaret Burgess: The bill requires letting agents to “take all reasonable steps” to include their registration number in communications with landlords and tenants and in adverts and other publications. That represents a stringent test for letting agents to adhere to. Failure to use the registration number contravenes the fit-and-proper-person requirements and could lead to the person’s registration being revoked. Amendment 67 seeks to remove the qualification. It would mean that any failure not to include the registration number in a document, advert or publication would become part of the fit-and-proper-person consideration. That would include situations in which, for example, the number had not been included because of an information technology failure or human error. I want a robust and effective regime in place, but the amendment seems a bit draconian. I consider that the qualification provides for a more equitable approach and should be left in place. I invite Alex Johnstone to withdraw his amendment.

Alex Johnstone: The brief discussion that we have had leaves a considerable gap between my position and that of the minister, and that still needs to be addressed. I am content to seek leave to withdraw amendment 67, but I reserve the right to bring back an amendment at stage 3 that seeks to fit into the gap that our discussion has quite obviously left open.

Amendment 67, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 32 agreed to.

Section 33 agreed to.

Section 34—Duration of registration

The Convener: The next group is on duration of letting agent registration. Amendment 135, in the name of Mary Fee, is grouped with amendment 136.

Mary Fee: Amendments 135 and 136 would change the duration of registration from three years to one, the result of which would be to tighten up the sector. The proposed change also sits well with the minister’s comments earlier this morning on the length of registration.

We need a well-regulated private rented sector if those in the sector are to have confidence in it. Annual registration would ensure that we have a well-run, well-managed and well-regulated sector. Any breaches would be caught quickly and the potential for poor practice would be minimal, which would strengthen the sector and demonstrate good governance.

I move amendment 135.

Margaret Burgess: The bill provides that the duration of a letting agent’s period of registration should be three years. Amendments 135 and 136 seek to reduce the registration period to one year. As it stands, the Scottish ministers are able to consider a breach of the fit-and-proper-person test or of the code of practice at any time during the three-year period of registration. Section 35 provides the Scottish ministers with the power to revoke a registration if the agent is no longer a fit and proper person. I consider the three-year registration cycle to be a proportionate approach that safeguards clients without placing an onerous burden on the industry. I therefore invite Mary Fee to withdraw amendment 135 and not to move amendment 136.

Mary Fee: I note the minister’s comments, but I reiterate that we need a well-run, well-maintained and well-governed private rented sector if the people within it are to have confidence in the sector. Amendment 135 would ensure that that would happen, so I will press it.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 135 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 135 disagreed to.

Amendment 136 moved—[Mary Fee].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 136 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 136 disagreed to.

Section 35, as amended, agreed to.

After section 35

The Convener: The next group is on register of letting agents: cancellation of registration on request. Amendment 72, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is the only amendment in the group.

Alex Johnstone: The bill lacks provision for voluntary removal from the register of letting agents. A person might wish to be removed from the register for a number of reasons, including change of career, retirement and sale of the business. Amendment 72 would provide that the Scottish ministers could remove a person from the register at their request if they were satisfied that the letting agent had made adequate arrangements with respect to the business in hand and it was otherwise appropriate to do so.

I move amendment 72.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 72 would provide a mechanism for a letting agent to apply to the Scottish ministers to terminate a registration; otherwise, an agent’s registration will lapse after three years if no application to renew is made. Amendment 72 would require the Scottish ministers to grant termination if they were satisfied that the agent had made adequate arrangements for their letting agency work. I am sympathetic to the aim of amendment 72. However, it is important to get it right, in light of the significant consequences of not being registered, and to ensure the robustness of the register.

I would like to take time to consider the technical points and to return at stage 3 with an amendment addressing the issue that I am confident will work. I hope that Alex Johnstone will take that as a sufficient undertaking for him to withdraw amendment 72.

Alex Johnstone: I hear what the minister has said, and I am confident that, if I seek leave to withdraw the amendment, the minister will produce an alternative, or equivalent, proposal at stage 3.

Amendment 72, by agreement, withdrawn.

Sections 36 and 37 agreed to.
Section 38—No payment for letting agency work where refusal or removal

The Convener: The next group is on letting agency work without registration. Amendment 73, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is grouped with amendments 74 and 75.

Alex Johnstone: Amendment 73 would void all contracts for letting agency work that are concluded between a landlord and a letting agent where the letting agent is refused access to, or is removed from, the register. The bill will prevent a proposed or former letting agent from recovering costs or charges that are incurred in respect of letting agency work that is carried out after a person has been refused registration or has been removed from the register. Those penalties do not affect the existence of a contract or letting agency work.

Amendment 73 would impose a real sanction on the proposed or former letting agent by reducing the contract by making it void. No contractual claims could then be made.

I move amendment 73.

Margaret Burgess: I understand the wish to deter unregistered letting agents from continuing to operate after the date of their deregistration. However, I have some concerns about amendment 73. First, although it might seem to be appropriate to make contracts void on the basis that the person should not be carrying out letting agency work, that could have unintended adverse consequences for third parties—for example, where a letting agent has entered into a contract with a landlord, after the relevant date, to provide letting agency services. If a letting agent then contracts a third party to undertake maintenance or cleaning of the property, that could have adverse consequences for the third party’s contract, and it may affect the recouping of legitimate costs for that work.

I reassure the committee that there are already provisions for dealing with unregistered letting agents who continue to operate; section 39 makes it a criminal offence to do so. Amendment 75, in my name, seeks to increase the level of the fine from level 5 on the standard scale to a maximum of £50,000.

I turn to my amendments in the group. Amendment 74 will amend section 38, which provides that letting agents are not able to recover costs where they have been refused entry to or removed from the register. The amendment makes it clear that costs that are incurred by a letting agent before they are removed from the register are still recoverable. That will allow letting agents, including those who allow their registration to lapse for a legitimate reason, such as their retiring from the industry, to recover costs that are still owed to them.

Amendment 75 seeks to increase to a maximum of £50,000 the level of fine for the offence of operating as a letting agent without registration. The amendment will provide a significant deterrent to that.

Alex Johnstone: I will press my amendment 73, but I look forward to hearing what the minister says on the subject at stage 3.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 73 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 6, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 73 disagreed to.

10:45
Amendment 74 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 38, as amended, agreed to.

Section 39—Offence of operating as a letting agent without registration

Amendment 75 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 39, as amended, agreed to.

Section 40 agreed to.

Section 41—Letting Agent Code of Practice

The Convener: The next group is on letting agent code of practice. Amendment 76, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is grouped with amendments 77, 137 to 144, 130, 126 and 127.

Alex Johnstone: Amendment 76 would replace a “may” with a “must”. Section 41 will give Scottish ministers discretion on whether they issue a code of practice for letting agents. The code is key to the scheme of regulation under the bill, and ministers should therefore not have the option not to issue such a code. Amendment 76 seeks to amend section 41 by removing that discretion.

I move amendment 76.

Margaret Burgess: The bill currently provides that “The Scottish ministers may, by regulations, set out a code of practice” for letting agents. Amendment 76 would place a duty on Scottish ministers to do so.

Amendment 126, in my name, will require the first code of practice, and replacement codes, to be subject to affirmative procedure. If the amendment is accepted, Parliament will be required to approve regulations that set out the first and any future replacement code, before the regulations can be made. The Scottish ministers will not be able to make those regulations without parliamentary approval, so to put on ministers the duty that amendment 76 proposes would pre-empt Parliament’s ability to agree, or not to agree, the code. Therefore, it would not be appropriate to make the change. On that basis, I invite Alex Johnstone to seek to withdraw amendment 76.

The bill provides for ministers to develop a code of practice on professional standards, in consultation with stakeholders. At stage 1, Parliament called for further detail of what is to be included in the code of practice to be put in the text of the bill. Amendment 77 responds to that request and ensures that the important matters of client money protection and professional indemnity arrangements will be included in the code.

The bill provides that the code of practice will be subject to negative procedure. The Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee expressed concerns about that; it considers that affirmative procedure would be a more suitable level of parliamentary scrutiny, given the significant legal consequences of failure to comply with the code. I have reconsidered the issue, and amendment 126 will apply affirmative procedure to the first code and to any replacement code. Any adjustments to the code will be subject to negative procedure. I believe that that is a balanced approach. Amendment 77 is therefore intended to reassure Parliament by providing in the text of the bill more detail on what the code will cover.

Amendment 126 will also allow for an increased level of parliamentary scrutiny of the first, and any future, code. Patrick Harvie’s amendment 127 also aims to ensure that the code of practice for letting agents will be subject to affirmative procedure. That would mean that any change to the code, no matter how minor, would be subject to affirmative procedure. Amendment 126, in my name, provides for the first code and any full revision of the code to be subject to affirmative procedure, so I invite Patrick Harvie not to move amendment 127, in favour of the more balanced approach.

I turn to amendment 130, which is in the name of Patrick Harvie. I share his wish to see progress being made to develop the code of practice, but I want to ensure that the code is drafted with proper consideration of its aims, the desired outcomes and how it will be enforced. There is no question that there will be any delay on my part in implementing the code. It is, however, important that we allow sufficient time to enable the Scottish Government to consult fully the industry and the public.

Furthermore, the code cannot be finalised until the associated tribunals legislation has been commenced. The Tribunals (Scotland) Act 2014 was recently enacted by Parliament. Tribunal reform is progressing and the first-tier tribunal is expected to be up and running by 2016.

I wish to reassure Mr Harvie about my commitment to progressing development of the code, which I expect to be laid before Parliament within 18 months of the bill’s enactment. I ask him not to move amendment 130, because it does not allow sufficient time for the practicalities of full public consultation.

I turn to amendments 137, 138, 139 and 143. I have given careful consideration to the amendments because, like Mr Harvie, I too have heard of the many and varied practices of letting agents, and of the adverse effect that they can have on tenants. That is why we are proposing regulation of the letting agent industry.

However, matters such as rent, deposits, providing documentation and compliance with the repairing standard are legal responsibilities of the landlord. There are already a number of legal requirements relating to such matters. For example, the Tenancy Deposit Schemes (Scotland) Regulations 2011 set out what the legal obligations on a landlord are if they choose to take a deposit. Letting agents need to comply with the law when managing a property and acting on behalf of a landlord. That is why it is important that the code of practice will set out the standards that both tenants and landlords should expect, and why it is important that letting agents can demonstrate that they have the necessary training for registration.
Let me make it clear that I want the regime to be effective. I am willing to consider what people have to say on the important issues that are covered by the amendments in the group and their views on what should be included in the code of practice, but I think that the right time to do that will be when we consult on the draft code. It will be subject to public consultation, and because it is to be dealt with using affirmative procedure, the committee will have an opportunity to consider the detail of the code once it is drafted. I therefore cannot support amendments 137, 138, 139 and 143.

I turn to amendments 140, 141 and 142. I sympathise with people who are struggling to find affordable rented property while they are in receipt of state benefits, and with people whose immigration status is uncertain. However, there are a number of practical difficulties with the amendments. It is ultimately for the landlord, not the letting agent, to decide to whom they will let their property, although the letting agent may provide advice and support to the landlord. I am not clear about how amendment 140 could be enforced, because most landlords would want to check that the tenant could afford the rent.

On amendment 141, let me be clear that I disapprove of the use of the term “no DSS”. Discrimination and the other matters that Patrick Harvie raises in his amendments will be taken up by the Scottish Government with the letting agent industry through the process of developing the code of practice. The Scottish Government will encourage equal opportunities throughout the industry, in order to address the matters that Patrick Harvie raises. I therefore cannot support amendments 140, 141 and 142.

Amendment 144, in the name of Mary Fee, proposes a specific reference to the need for a letting agent to "comply with the Letting Agent Code of Practice."

However, the bill already provides for compliance with the code of practice to be a key aspect of the fit-and-proper-person test for registration. The code will be enforced by application to a tribunal, and decisions found against a letting agency will be reported back to ministers.

Like Mary Fee, and as I have already noted with reference to Patrick Harvie’s amendments, I know of the many and varied practices of letting agents who try to avoid protecting tenancy deposits with one of the three approved schemes. The tenancy deposit scheme has its own enforcement requirements, so proposed paragraph (a) in amendment 144 is unnecessary. Unintentionally, that proposed provision could also be problematic if a landlord wanted to receive the deposit from the letting agent so that the landlord could put it into a scheme, which is permitted.

With regard to proposed paragraph (b) in amendment 144, I am well aware of letting agents who have charged premiums and of the effect that those charges can have on tenants. That is why we have already clarified the law to make crystal clear what is allowed.

On proposed paragraphs (c) and (d) in amendment 144, I sympathise with people who are struggling to find affordable rented property while they are in receipt of state benefits, especially families. All Scottish Government policies reflect Scottish values of fairness and opportunity, and promote equality and social cohesion. As I said in my response to Patrick Harvie’s amendments 140 to 142, the Scottish Government will discuss equality issues with the letting agents industry through the process of developing the code of practice. We will take that seriously. We encourage the discussion of equality issues, which will be part of the code of practice.

I invite Mary Fee not to move her amendment.

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): I begin by acknowledging the extensive treatment of the amendments in this group by the minister.

On what we might call the procedural aspects—Alex Johnstone’s seeking a requirement that ministers make regulations setting out the code, and the minister’s objection that that is not compatible with affirmative procedure—I understand the minister’s argument, but I suggest that there should be, at the very least, a requirement that regulations setting out the code be laid before Parliament within a clearly defined period. I hope that the Government is comfortable with that, to some extent. It has been said by the minister that 18 months might be a reasonable expectation. I would have no objection to lodging an amendment at stage 3 that would set out more or less what my amendment 130 suggests, but which would set out a period of 18 months after royal assent, rather than a year. Accordingly, I will not move amendment 130.

Similarly, given the minister’s decision to apply affirmative procedure for the first code and revisions to it, amendment 127 will not be necessary, either.

My other amendments in the group seek to explore what the code will cover. It has been clear, during the course of the committee’s discussions, that the content of the code is going to be crucial to whether any of the bill will have the effect that is being sought. As the minister said, several of my amendments address matters that are legal requirements, or matters in relation to which some legal requirements exist. My intention in lodging amendments that engage with those issues is simply to explore whether the code of practice will be a relevant instrument in a situation in which a letting agent has not complied with a legal requirement.

For example, we know of several workarounds—including some legal ones—whereby landlords can avoid complying with the intention of the deposit protection scheme. I want to ensure that, when tenants find themselves in that situation—at the mercy of the kind of letting agents whom most responsible letting agents want to see being challenged—they know that they can use the code of practice as their means of redress. The amendments on rent levels, deposits and the provision of information will help to ensure clarity that the code of practice will be relevant in those circumstances.

I am sure that members will acknowledge that, with regard to repairs, people often start off asking for repairs to be done and then eventually stop complaining about it because they figure out that they will just have to put up with basic repairs not being done. That applies to landlords as well as letting agents, but as we have before us a bill that will enable us to place requirements on letting agents, I suggest that we can make a start by setting out a clear time limit within which repairs must be done.

11:00

On the three amendments relating to discrimination—amendments 140 to 142—it is regrettable that the minister focused on the use of the term “no DSS”. I hope that we would all like use of the term to be ended, but more important than use of the term is the practice. If people stop using the term but continue the practice of discriminating against benefits recipients, we will not be much further forward.

I hope that the minister will give some indication that those matters will be addressed in the code when it is laid before Parliament. Discriminating against people purely because they receive benefits, not because they cannot afford the service that they seek to buy, is completely unreasonable and destructive to the social cohesion to which the Government has a commitment.

I will say something about amendment 142 on discrimination on the ground of immigration status. If the minister has a further chance to respond—I know that that is at your discretion, convener—I encourage her to say something more specific about that amendment.

Members will be aware of the statement of concern about the impact of the Immigration Act 2014 on housing as well as health, which are devolved matters. The United Kingdom Government has passed immigration legislation that requires landlords to check immigration status.

A wide range of organisations—including the Scottish Association of Landlords and Shelter—and individuals have set out their serious concerns not only that it is inappropriate in principle for that requirement to be placed on the private rented sector, but that the measure has the potential to increase discrimination and inequality in our society. In particular, it potentially disadvantages prospective legitimate tenants whose status is unclear, those who are not able to produce required documents quickly, and people who are members of visible minority communities who seek accommodation.

The signatories of that statement said:

“Rather than targeting so-called ‘illegal’ migrants the tenant checking scheme may drive both those with irregular status and prospective legitimate tenants with unclear status or documents to unscrupulous landlords, boosting the rogue market”.

That is the opposite of what the bill is intended to achieve and it may be the consequence of the UK Government’s legislation, which clearly impacts on the devolved policy area of housing. If the minister could be encouraged to respond not only to my amendment 142 but to the concerns that have been set out by the wide range of organisations that are working in the private rented sector in Scotland that signed the statement, that would be helpful.

Mary Fee: Amendment 144 in my name relates to the code of practice. Working with Citizens Advice Scotland, I have drafted the amendment to clarify issues that I have previously acknowledged in relation to the introduction of a duty that any “person carrying out letting agency work must comply with the Letting Agent Code of Practice.”

Amendment 144 would also ensure that anyone who is acting as a letting agent must comply with the Tenancy Deposit Schemes (Scotland) Regulations 2011 and section 120 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Proposed paragraph (d) of the second subsection that my amendment would insert into section 41 would prohibit letting agents from discriminating against anyone receiving state benefits under the acts that are listed in the paragraph, and from discriminating against anyone who is responsible for a child. Citizens Advice Scotland has briefed me that it has cases in which potential tenants have been discriminated against because they have children or are in receipt of housing benefit.

I listened with interest to the minister’s earlier comments. However, amendment 144 would strengthen the bill and ensure that the code of practice will be clear and unambiguous. More important is that it would ensure compliance.

James Kelly (Rutherglen) (Lab): There has been much discussion about the code of practice throughout consideration of the bill. Many people feel that it is important that the code of practice is meaningful and has teeth if it is to be effective. Mary Fee’s amendment 144, which would establish absolute compliance with the code, would bring that into force.

Amendments 137 to 139 and 143, in the name of Patrick Harvie, deal with practical issues that we have discussed, and specify certain requirements in relation to advance rents, deposit levels, the requirement to provide a tenant with a standard tenancy, and repairs. Those changes would be meaningful and would make a difference.

Similarly, amendments 140 to 142, in the name of Patrick Harvie, address the issue of discrimination and set out specific provisions to ensure that people would not be discriminated against. The minister has expressed sympathy with many of the issues that the amendments raise. However, if we actually mean to make a difference in those areas, the code of practice must be more specific. The amendments seek to address some of the practicalities and would make a real difference.

Margaret Burgess: I will make a couple of comments in response to issues that Patrick Harvie raised. I anticipate that most of those issues will be part of the code of practice, which will go through affirmative procedure, which will give stakeholders, the public and the committee the opportunity to have their views heard.

As the committee is aware, immigration is a reserved issue, but the Scottish Government does not agree with the UK Government’s position that landlords must check the immigration status of tenants. We have made that very clear to the UK Government. When the code of practice is developed and consulted on, all such matters will be taken into account, as will our position on the issue. We cannot break the law, but we have made it clear to the UK Government that we do not think that landlords should have to do that, and we will continue to make that argument. We anticipate that the code of practice will cover areas of discrimination and equality legislation, and the other issues that Patrick Harvie raised.

In response to Mary Fee’s point, there is already provision in the bill to ensure that someone who breaches the code will lose their registration or be fined a considerable sum of money. What she proposes would not add to that.

I agree with James Kelly that the code of practice is important; it is right that we consult properly on what will be in it. I took on board the earlier concerns, so we will take forward the code and any subsequent replacement code through affirmative procedure.

Alex Johnstone: It seems like quite a few minutes ago now, but I listened with some interest to the minister’s response to amendment 76 in my name. I accept that, because there is a procedural issue, it is appropriate for me to seek leave to withdraw the amendment at this stage, with a view to coming back and having another crack at it at stage 3. So, I seek leave to withdraw amendment 76.

Amendment 76, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendment 77 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Amendment 137 moved—[Patrick Harvie].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 137 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 137 disagreed to.

Amendments 138 to 143 moved—[Patrick Harvie].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 138 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 138 disagreed to.
The Convener: The question is, that amendment 139 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 139 disagreed to.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 140 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 140 disagreed to.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 141 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 141 disagreed to.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 142 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 142 disagreed to.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 143 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 143 disagreed to.

Amendment 144 moved—[Mary Fee].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 144 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 144 disagreed to.

Amendment 130 not moved.

Section 41, as amended, agreed to.
Section 42 agreed to.

Section 43—Applications to First-tier Tribunal to enforce code of practice

The Convener: The next group is on enforcement of code of practice. Amendment 131, in the name of Patrick Harvie, is grouped with amendments 78, 132, 79, 133 and 145.

11:15

Patrick Harvie: The amendments in my name in this group are somewhat simpler than the previous ones, as members will be glad to know.

My proposals have two basic objectives. One is captured in both amendment 131 and amendment 132, which is to ensure that a tenant who wishes to apply to the first-tier tribunal for a determination that their letting agent has failed to comply with the code of practice can authorise someone to do that on their behalf. I do not specify who that might be, but we can envisage a range of voluntary organisations or support services that might wish to take on that role.

There will clearly be tenants who are assertive enough and clear enough in their own minds to raise a complaint about their letting agent failing to comply with the code, but there will be others who do not feel competent enough or feel that they need a bit of help, and it seems reasonable that that initial application could be made by somebody on their behalf who can work with them.

I hope that the Government will be willing to accept that.

Amendment 133 is a little more substantial. It suggests that, when a letting agent has been found in breach of the code and has an enforcement order against them, the tenant will not be due to pay any rent for the period until the enforcement order is complied with. It may be that the Government is sympathetic to the intention of my amendment but would like to apply it in different circumstances, or limit its application, but I hope that the minister will acknowledge the argument that, when there has been a serious breach of the code and when an enforcement order has been made, for the time between that enforcement order and the order being complied with, the letting agent should not be under any expectation that they can charge rent for that period to a tenant who is not having a service delivered to the standard that we all hope to set.

I hope that the minister will respond positively to both my suggestions.

I move amendment 131.

Margaret Burgess: I begin by responding to amendments 131 and 132, in the name of Patrick Harvie.

The bill already provides for a tenant or landlord to apply to the first-tier tribunal for a determination that a letting agent has failed to comply with the code of practice. I know that there may be cases in which a tenant needs some support to make an application to the tribunal, but amendments 131 and 132 propose that tenants should be able to authorise third parties to act for them in that regard, and I do not believe that putting that provision in the bill is necessary.

The arrangements for representation would be a matter for the tribunal’s rules in due course, and I made it clear at the previous meeting that there would be an expectation that people could be accompanied at a tribunal. There is nothing in the bill as drafted to prevent a tenant from seeking support from a third party in assisting them with progressing a complaint. I therefore ask Patrick Harvie to withdraw amendment 131 and not to move amendment 132.

Amendments 78 and 79, in my name, seek to expand the provision in section 43 to allow the Scottish ministers to make an application to the first-tier tribunal. That will strengthen the enforcement provisions in the bill by enabling the Scottish ministers to act on information obtained either through their own compliance checks or from information received from third parties, including tenants.

I have some concerns about amendment 133, in the name of Patrick Harvie. The stopping of rent until the letting agent complies with the enforcement order could primarily penalise the landlord, rather than the agent. I accept Patrick Harvie’s intention in lodging the amendment, but we are dealing here with the letting agent and the code of practice. If the applicant is the tenant and they are suffering, or have suffered, a loss as a result of the letting agent’s failure to comply with the code of practice, the tribunal could make an order under section 43(8)(b) to provide compensation to the tenant.

There are other enforcement measures that the Scottish ministers can take if a letting agent does not comply with an enforcement order that would have a greater impact on the letting agent than the stopping of rent payments would. The tribunal is able to inform the Scottish ministers of the failure to comply, which could result in the letting agent’s registration being revoked. In addition, it is an offence to fail to comply with an enforcement order, and that could result in a fine upon conviction. On the basis that there are other penalties in the bill that rightly target the letting agent rather than the landlord, I therefore invite Patrick Harvie not to move amendment 133.

I turn to amendment 145. In the context of the fit-and-proper-person test, the Scottish ministers currently have discretion over whether they wish to take into account a contravention of an enforcement order and are not required to do so. However, amendment 145 seeks to compel the Scottish ministers to deregister a letting agent who commits an offence by not complying with an enforcement order.

Any letting agent that fails to comply with an enforcement order without reasonable excuse commits an offence under section 46. The Scottish ministers will be able to deregister a letting agent in those circumstances. Through the regulations, we will take a robust line with letting agents to promote compliance, but ministers should retain discretion on this matter to ensure that there is a proportionate response that is dependent on the circumstances of each case.

Amendment 145 goes on to require the Scottish ministers to note the deregistration in the register and to make provision thereafter for the consequences of that deregistration for tenants of properties managed by the agent. However, it is more appropriate for the landlord to make those arrangements rather than the Scottish ministers.

I appreciate that Mary Fee wants to ensure that there is a robust consequence for failing to comply with an enforcement order, but the bill already provides for a robust approach. I therefore ask Mary Fee not to move her amendment.

Mary Fee: The convener will be glad to hear that my comments on my amendment 145 will be brief. The amendment would provide extra protection for potential victims of rogue letting agents who may be acting outside the code. It provides that anyone found to be acting in such a manner must be removed from the register by the Scottish ministers and that that must be noted on the register.

The amendment would also allow for ministers to make provision for tenants in properties where an agent has been removed from the register, because it is currently unclear what the circumstances would be if that were to happen.

I heard the minister’s comments about enforcement but come back to my previous point, which is that we must make the sector as strong as possible. The rules surrounding regulation have to be clear and unambiguous and my amendment would strengthen the bill. I also support the other amendments in the group.

Patrick Harvie: On amendment 133 about the stopping of rent, I understand the minister’s concern that, in effect, what looks like a penalty could be passed on to the landlord rather than borne by the letting agent, but it seems to me that that is a matter between the landlord and the letting agent. If the agreement between a landlord and a letting agent specifies that the letting agent will pay the landlord for every month that it manages the property, the stopping of rent would fall to the letting agent and not to the landlord.

The priority should surely be to ensure that tenants who are not being given the service that they have a right to expect should not have to pay for it during that period. However, I am content not to move the amendment on the basis that I will revise it and come to the chamber at stage 3 with an amendment that tries to take account of the concerns that the minister has expressed.

I am a wee bit disappointed that the Government does not accept the relatively small change proposed in amendments 131 and 132. Enabling tenants to authorise someone else to make an application to the tribunal on their behalf goes further than simply allowing somebody to be accompanied or supported during that process. Some people will, for whatever reason, find it beyond their level of confidence to make an application, but somebody else would be able to do it for them.

I have been aware of situations in Glasgow in which a number of students have been treated badly by the same letting agents in similar circumstances but, because they have been due to move on shortly, they have not thought that it is worth the hassle or the time to make any kind of formal complaint. However, if the amendments were passed, a third party, such as the student welfare rights service, could make an application on behalf of all of the affected students. That would not only give the application greater weight with the tribunal but ensure that the treatment of all tenants in that circumstance—rather than just that of a small minority who are willing to raise the matter themselves—can be addressed in the application.

In short, I will not move amendment 133, but I will seek to return to the issue at stage 3. For the moment, I will press amendment 131.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 131 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.
Amendment 131 disagreed to.
Amendment 78 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.
Amendment 132 not moved.
Amendment 79 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.
Amendment 133 not moved.

Section 43, as amended, agreed to.
Sections 44 and 45 agreed to.

Section 46—Enforcement orders: offence

Amendment 145 moved—[Mary Fee].
The Convener: The question is, that amendment 145 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.
The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.
Amendment 145 disagreed to.
Section 46 agreed to.

After section 46
Amendments 80 to 84 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.
Sections 47 to 50 agreed to.

Section 51—Meaning of letting agency work

The Convener: The next group is on meaning of letting agency work. Amendment 85, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is grouped with amendments 87 and 128.

Alex Johnstone: Sometimes, when you are reading a bill section by section, in the appropriate order, something leaps out at you that just does not seem right. Amendment 85 is inspired by such an experience.

Amendment 85 would leave out section 51(1)(b). Section 51 provides the definition of letting agency work. Section 51(1)(a) is clear when it describes letting agency work as "things done by a person in the course of that person's business in response to relevant instructions" so that a landlord can

"enter into a lease or occupancy arrangement".

However, section 51(1)(b) is more problematic because it includes in letting agency work activities such as "repairing, maintaining, improving, insuring or otherwise managing a house which is ... subject to a lease".

Such a range of activity is not really letting agency work and would bring many people into the regulatory net who should not be included, such as roofers, painters, decorators, builders, insurance companies, house factors and possibly many others. Accordingly, I propose that we remove subsection (1)(b) from section 51 to clarify that. I look forward to hearing how the minister interprets it.

I move amendment 85.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 87 adjusts the existing power in section 51(3) to change the meaning of "letting agency work" through secondary legislation. It makes it clear that the Scottish ministers can specify that work carried out by certain bodies or work under certain types of schemes is to be excluded from the regulatory regime. The power to exempt schemes is limited to schemes that are for the purpose of helping people to secure tenancies in the private rented sector and which are operated by a body on a not-for-profit basis.

Such schemes may include rent deposit guarantee schemes, which carry out activities such as facilitating lettings—which is "letting agency work" within the meaning of part 4. The schemes are not intended to be brought under the letting agent regulatory regime and so that power to exempt is needed.

The power to specify bodies is intended to allow the Scottish ministers the option of excluding organisations such as not-for-profit bodies whose letting agency work includes activities other than those relating to rent deposit schemes. The powers are required to allow ministers to respond flexibly to any future changes in the letting agency sector, and amendment 128 will enable provision of that kind to be made in an order subject to negative procedure.

An order that otherwise modifies the meaning of letting agency work will continue to be subject to the affirmative procedure as before.

I turn to amendment 85 from Alex Johnstone. I am aware that, at stage 1, the Law Society raised some concerns about the definition of letting agency work in section 51. I have considered those concerns, and I am satisfied that the definition captures all the activity that should be regulated. Alex Johnstone talked about roofers, slaters and various workmen, but the key factor is that that work has to be done in the managing of the property. It is not about someone doing work as another contractor; it is work that is involved with the managing of the property, and that is in the bill as it stands.

Amendment 85 would remove on-going property management functions from the meaning of letting agency work when a property is being managed. I consider that those functions form a core part of the remit of many letting agents. The amendment could narrow the coverage of the regulatory regime, and therefore I cannot support it.

Accordingly, I invite Alex Johnstone to withdraw amendment 85, and I ask the committee to support amendments 87 and 128.

Alex Johnstone: I press amendment 85. I have absolute faith in the intent of the minister, but I am not 100 per cent confident that the wording that appears has the effect that the minister intends. As a consequence, we still need to clarify the issue. I therefore press my amendment and will continue to inquire into the matter before stage 3.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 85 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 85 disagreed to.

Amendment 86 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Amendment 87 moved—[Margaret Burgess].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 87 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

Abstentions
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 0, Abstentions 2.

Amendment 87 agreed to.

Section 51, as amended, agreed to.

Section 52—Interpretation of Part 4

Amendments 88 and 89 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 52, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 53 and 54 agreed to.

11:36
Meeting suspended.

11:45
On resuming—

Section 55—Issue, renewal, transfer and transmission of a Part 1A site licence

The Convener: The next group is on part 1A site licence: site inspection before issue or renewal. Amendment 146, in the name of Mary Fee, is the only amendment in the group.

Mary Fee: Amendment 146, in my name, is required to protect tenants and residents on mobile home sites. Licences must not be approved if concerns or complaints have been raised. To ensure that unscrupulous site owners do not continue to operate, the local authority must make an inspection to assess whether any issues are being addressed or have been resolved. Citizens Advice Scotland has briefed in favour of amendment 146, as clients have approached it over issues that could be tackled under the amendment. The amendment would improve governance in the sector and would provide additional safeguards for residents.

I move amendment 146.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 146 seeks to impose further requirements on local authorities as part of their duties under the new licensing regime. I agree that local authorities should be thorough when considering whether a licence should be granted and that it is important for site visits to be carried out. However, I want to leave local authorities with some flexibility to focus resources on the most problematic sites. That is why I have lodged an amendment that will enable ministers to issue guidance to which local authorities will have to have regard in carrying out their functions under the new licensing regime in the bill.

The Scottish Government will develop draft guidance in consultation with all stakeholders. The guidance will be able to cover site visits, including the issue of when they should be carried out, and to set out various circumstances in which a local authority is expected to inspect a site. I believe that that strikes the right balance between flexibility and the clear expectation that a site visit will be necessary in certain circumstances.

I reassure Mary Fee that I am keen to ensure that the regime is robust and that it is effectively enforced by local authorities. I believe that the guidance route will be effective. However, section 60 will allow ministers to make regulations on the procedure that is to be followed when licensing a site, and those regulations could include a requirement for local authorities to visit sites as part of the licensing process.

I understand the thinking behind amendment 146, but it would require a local authority to visit a site if there had been a single complaint and even if the local authority had already visited the site in relation to that complaint and found it to be without merit. I therefore believe that amendment 146 is not necessary, and I recommend that it be resisted.

Mary Fee: I thank the minister for her comments. In light of her points about developing guidance on when site visits should be carried out and considering the responsibilities that are put on local authorities, I am happy to seek to withdraw amendment 146, and I look forward to the guidance being published.

Amendment 146, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: The next group is on part 1A site licence: giving of reasons for local authority decision. Amendment 90, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 92, 96 and 97.

Margaret Burgess: During the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee’s consideration of the bill, it highlighted the importance of a local authority providing reasons for its decisions. Although there are measures in the bill that will require local authorities to provide reasons in most situations, the DPLR committee believed that those should be applied more consistently. The amendments in this group were lodged in response to the committee’s comments, which we considered carefully. They will place a consistent duty on local authorities to provide reasons for their decisions on licence applications, including on the renewal, transfer, and revoking of a licence.

Amendments 92, 96 and 97 will require local authorities to tell the relevant people about their decisions and provide reasons. Amendment 90 addresses the situation before a decision has been made, when a local authority is considering refusing to consent to a licence transfer. The authority will be required to indicate that to the applicant and set out its reasons, allowing the applicant 28 days to respond.

I move amendment 90.

Amendment 90 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on part 1A site licence: time limit for determining application. Amendment 91, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Margaret Burgess: The bill includes provision whereby, if a local authority does not make a decision on a site licence application within 12 months, the application will be deemed to have been approved. The measure was included as a backstop; the Scottish Government expects local authorities to make decisions in a shorter timescale.

At stage 1, stakeholders expressed concern that the approach would give local authorities an unacceptably long time in which to determine applications. In light of that, amendment 91 will remove the 12-month deadline from the bill and give the Scottish ministers the power to set time limits in regulations. That approach will enable the Government to consult the industry and local authorities about realistic timescales, which can be adapted as necessary. Amendment 91 will also enable ministers to set different timescales for different types of application. For example, a shorter timescale might be set for the renewal of an existing licence than would apply to an application for a new licence. That is a sensible way forward.

I move amendment 91.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 91 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

Against
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0.
Amendment 91 agreed to.
Amendment 92 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 55, as amended, agreed to.

Section 56—Duration of a Part 1A site licence

The Convener: The next group is on duration of part 1A site licence. Amendment 93, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Margaret Burgess: An issue that was raised at stage 1 was the move from a system in which licences run in perpetuity to one of fixed-term three-year licences. Fixed-term licences provide for a regular check that a site licence holder continues to be a fit and proper person, and give the opportunity to review and update site licence conditions. I therefore do not support a system in which licences run in perpetuity. The current system has proved to be weak and ineffective.

However, I listened to the points that stakeholders made at stage 1. In light of that, amendment 93 will provide that licence periods run for five years rather than three. The longer period will give greater stability to site owners and residents and reduce the administrative work for local authorities.

In its stage 1 report, the committee highlighted the importance of the provision of clear and accurate information to residents and site owners on what the changes will mean in practice. The Scottish Government has committed to providing such information when it puts the new licensing system in place.

Other Government amendments to the bill will further strengthen the right of residency that is provided by agreements under the Mobile Homes Act 1983, making it clear that the right will remain even if a site owner loses his or her licence.

Amendment 93 provides greater stability for residents, site owners and local authorities, while maintaining the important principle that a site licence runs for a specific period.

I move amendment 93.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 93 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

Against
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 93 agreed to.

Section 56, as amended, agreed to.

Section 57—Duty to inform local authority where change

The Convener: The next group is on duty to inform where change: period and offence. Amendment 94, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 95, 107 and 108.

Margaret Burgess: These amendments will make it an offence not to provide a local authority with the relevant information on changed circumstances in specific timescales. If convicted of an offence, someone can be fined up to level 3 on the standard scale, which is £1,000.

The amendments strengthen the measures in section 57 that require a site licence holder to tell a local authority of any relevant changes in circumstances. With the move to licences for five years, rather than the three years that the bill originally proposed, it is even more important that licence holders are required to tell a local authority if their circumstances change. I ask the committee to support the amendments.

I move amendment 94.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 94 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Mary Fee indicated disagreement.

The Convener: I ask members to say no, please, and not just to shake their heads.

There will be a division.

For
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

Against
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 94 agreed to.

Amendment 95 moved—[Margaret Burgess].
The Convener: The question is, that amendment 95 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Eddie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

Against
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 2, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 95 agreed to.

Section 57, as amended, agreed to.

Section 58—Revocation of a Part 1A site licence: fit and proper person

Amendments 96 and 97 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 58, as amended, agreed to.

Section 59 agreed to.

Section 60—Power to make provision in relation to procedure

The Convener: The next group is on part 1A site licence: fit-and-proper-person test. Amendment 105, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 147, 148 and 106.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 105 makes it clear that local authorities must have regard to whether a site owner has breached an agreement under the Mobile Homes Act 1983 in applying the fit-and-proper-person test for site licensing decisions. Those are personal contracts that individuals have with site owners, and local authorities are not usually involved with them, but they are very relevant to how site owners conduct their business. The amendment will ensure that local authorities can take into account all relevant factors when they make decisions about site licences.

Amendment 106 involves a technical change that specifically enables local authorities to share information that is relevant to the application of the fit-and-proper-person test as part of the process of making site licensing decisions. That will enable greater consistency of decision making across different local authorities and reduce the risk that a site owner may pass the test in one area but fail it in another due to a lack of relevant information.

Mary Fee’s amendments 147 and 148 seek to make it explicit that a local authority must, when it is running the fit-and-proper-person test, take into account any issues around the site owner providing utilities to residents, such as a situation in which a site owner has profiteered from regulations that will be subject to the negative procedure. Will the minister comment further on that?

Margaret Burgess: As I said, the amendments arose from a concern of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee. We will provide it with a detailed explanation in a supplementary delegated powers memorandum, which will be lodged on my behalf after stage 2. The main amendment is amendment 98, which adjusts the power’s focus. The other amendments are consequential. We lodged the amendments to satisfy the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee’s request. I have described how we will proceed.

12:00

Amendment 98 agreed to.

Amendments 99 to 104 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 60, as amended, agreed to.

Section 61—Fit and proper person considerations

The Convener: The next group is on part 1A site licence: fit-and-proper-person test. Amendment 105, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 147, 148 and 106.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 105 makes it clear that local authorities must have regard to whether a site owner has breached an agreement under the Mobile Homes Act 1983 in applying the fit-and-proper-person test for site licensing decisions. Those are personal contracts that individuals have with site owners, and local authorities are not usually involved with them, but they are very relevant to how site owners conduct their business. The amendment will ensure that local authorities can take into account all relevant factors when they make decisions about site licences.

Amendment 106 involves a technical change that specifically enables local authorities to share information that is relevant to the application of the fit-and-proper-person test as part of the process of making site licensing decisions. That will enable greater consistency of decision making across different local authorities and reduce the risk that a site owner may pass the test in one area but fail it in another due to a lack of relevant information.

Mary Fee’s amendments 147 and 148 seek to make it explicit that a local authority must, when it is running the fit-and-proper-person test, take into account any issues around the site owner providing utilities to residents, such as a situation in which a site owner has profiteered from... providing utilities. We believe that such a situation is already covered in the bill, as a local authority “must have regard to all of the circumstances of the case”, which would include any profiteering from utilities. However, I recognise that some of the more important matters are set out on the face of the bill, and I am therefore happy to include this issue in that category.

There are some issues around Mary Fee’s amendments as they stand that we need to do some further work on. Specifically, I want to ensure that the correct guidance and the correct bodies are identified in the legislation. I am therefore happy to lodge an amendment at stage 3 that is specific on the matters that Mary Fee has raised but also takes into account the further work that we need to do on identifying all the relevant guidance. I hope that that undertaking is sufficient for Mary Fee not to move amendments 147 and 148.

I ask the committee to support my amendments 105 and 106.

Mary Fee: I will be brief and will not rehearse the comments that I initially intended to make.

I am grateful for the minister’s comments on my amendments 147 and 148, which seek to provide additional protection for residents of mobile home sites who may be subjected to profiteering. I am happy not to move the amendments, given the assurances that she has given.

Amendment 105 agreed to.
Amendments 147 and 148 not moved.
Section 61, as amended, agreed to.
Section 62 agreed to.

After section 62

Amendment 106 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 63—Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

Amendments 107 and 108 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on power to vary maximum fine. Amendment 109, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 109 seeks to remove the power for ministers to vary the maximum fine for licence offences. I have noted the concerns about the power that were expressed by the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee and supported by this committee in its stage 1 report, and the suggestions for amending it. However, as it is not clear how the provision can be amended to meet the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee’s views, I have concluded that the safest course of action is to remove the power to vary the maximum fines, which is what amendment 109 does.

I move amendment 109.

Amendment 109 agreed to.
Section 63, as amended, agreed to.

Section 64—Improvement notices

The Convener: The next group is on improvement notices and penalty notices. Amendment 110, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 111 to 113.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 112 addresses a concern expressed at stage 1 by removing the provision that residents do not need to pay the site owner for utilities such as gas and electricity in the event of a penalty notice being issued by a local authority. That could lead to utility bills not being paid and residents potentially having their services cut off. Although I recognise the need for appropriate penalties for site owners who do not comply with the terms of the legislation, I do not want such penalties to impact negatively on residents, and I think that amendment 112 achieves the right balance.

The remainder of the amendments in the group are technical ones that affect the period in which a licence holder must carry out steps to fulfil a local authority improvement order or penalty notice. An offence cannot be committed until the period set out in the notice has expired.

I ask the committee to support all the amendments in the group, and I move amendment 110.

Amendment 110 agreed to.
Amendment 111 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.
Section 64, as amended, agreed to.

Section 65—Penalty notices

Amendments 112 and 113 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.
Section 65, as amended, agreed to.
Sections 66 to 69 agreed to.

Section 70—Part 1A of the 1960 Act: miscellaneous provision

The Convener: The next group is on guidance on operation of part 5. Amendment 114, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 114 enables ministers to publish guidance on the operation of the bill’s provisions with regard to mobile home site licensing, and requires local authorities to have regard to that guidance in carrying out their functions in relation to the licensing regime.

I have listened to concerns raised at stage 1 that there is not enough information about how the new regime will operate or how it will be enforced by local authorities, and I agree with the committee’s recommendation about the importance of residents, site owners and local authorities having clear and accurate information. It has always been the Scottish Government’s intention to provide information to accompany the new licensing system, including guidance for local authorities.

The Government’s view is that local authorities should be able to take a risk-based approach and focus their work on sites with problems, and we feel that that work would be enhanced by a requirement on local authorities to take into account published guidance in carrying out their duties. However, the bill as drafted does not give ministers the power to issue guidance to which a local authority “must have regard”, and amendment 114 seeks to address that.

I move amendment 114.

Amendment 114 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on agreements to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 relates. Amendment 115, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 116.

Margaret Burgess: The committee wanted to be sure that residents had a clear right to remain on a site if it lost its licence, and amendments 115 and 116 ensure that that is the case by replacing the bill’s current provisions on residents’ rights with a new, even stronger, section.

The amendments also make provision to address the committee’s concern that the bill did not contain a measure to prevent the cost of enforcement action from being passed on to residents through pitch fees. As a result, if a local authority recovers the cost of enforcement action from a site owner, the site owner cannot pass the costs on to residents through pitch fees.

The amendments address two important areas of concern for residents, and I invite the committee to support them.

I move amendment 115.

Amendment 115 agreed to.

Section 70, as amended, agreed to.
Housing (Scotland) Bill

3rd Marshalled List of Amendments for Stage 2

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

- Sections 1 to 20
- Sections 21 to 84
- Sections 85 and 86
- Schedule 1
- Schedule 2
- Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 72

Sarah Boyack

149 In section 72, page 50, leave out lines 8 to 13 and insert <the principle that, unless an alternative determination appears to the authority to be reasonable in the circumstances, every owner is liable in equal shares for the scheme costs.>

Sarah Boyack

153 In section 72, page 50, line 14, after <section> insert <where subsection (1)(a) applies>

Sarah Boyack

154 In section 72, page 50, line 15, at end insert—

<(... )> Before making a payment under this section where subsection (1)(b) applies, a local authority must publish notice of its intention to pay the missing share in two or more newspapers (of which one must, if practicable, be a local newspaper) circulating in the locality in which the tenement is situated.>

Sarah Boyack

150 In section 72, page 50, line 22, at end insert—

<4B Power to permit registered social landlord to pay share of housing costs

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision that permits a registered social landlord which is the owner, or is responsible for the maintenance, of any part of a tenement building to—

(a) pay a sum representing an owner’s share of scheme costs in circumstances equivalent to those set out in section 4A(1),

(b) recover payments made under such provision from the owner who failed to pay a share of any scheme costs, and

(c) make in favour of itself a charge to recover any such payments.

(2) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as appear to them to be appropriate.
(3) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify, or disapply any provision of, any enactment (including this Act).”.

Sarah Boyack

151 In section 72, page 50, line 25, at end insert—

<(  ) in section 32(2) (orders and regulations), after “except” insert “regulations under section 4B or”.

Jim Eadie

7 In section 72, page 50, line 36, after <2004”, insert—

<(  ) for subsection (3), substitute—

“(3) The repayable amount is recoverable in—

(a) 30 equal annual instalments payable on the same date (specified in the charge) in each calendar year, or
(b) monthly instalments over such shorter period of time as the local authority determines to be reasonable in the circumstances.

(3A) Where a local authority determines a repayment period under subsection (3)(b), it must provide the owner of, or any other person interested in, any living accommodation subject to the repayment charge with assistance under section 71(1).

Sarah Boyack

152 In section 72, page 50, line 36, after <2004”, insert—

<(  ) for subsection (3), substitute—

“(3) The repayable amount is recoverable in instalments at such frequency, and over such period of time not exceeding 30 years, as the local authority determines to be reasonable in the circumstances.

(3A) The local authority must provide the owner of, or any other person with an interest in, any living accommodation subject to the repayment charge with assistance under section 71(1).

(3B) The Scottish Ministers may publish guidance on the factors to be considered by the local authority in determining what frequency and period is reasonable for the purposes of subsection (3).

(3C) The local authority must have regard to any guidance published under subsection (3B).

Malcolm Chisholm

35 In section 72, page 50, line 36, after <2004”, insert—

<(  ) in subsection (4), after the word “register” where it second appears, insert “, and on its being so registered has priority over all existing and future burdens on the same living accommodation”.
After section 72

Margaret Burgess

After section 72, insert—

<Notice of potential liability for costs: notice of discharge

(1) In section 10A of the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 9) (notice of potential liability for costs: further provision), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) The owner of a burdened property may apply to register a notice (a “notice of discharge”) if—

(a) a notice of potential liability for costs in relation to the property has not expired,

(b) the liability for costs under section 10(2) to which the notice of potential liability relates has, in relation to the property which is the subject of the application, been fully discharged, and

(c) the person who registered the notice of potential liability for costs consents to the application.

(3B) A notice of discharge—

(a) must be in the form prescribed by order made by the Scottish Ministers, and

(b) on being registered, discharges the notice of potential liability for costs as it applies to the property which is the subject of the application.”.

(2) In the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004—

(a) in section 13 (notice of potential liability for costs: further provision), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) The owner of a flat may apply to register a notice (a “notice of discharge”) if—

(a) a notice of potential liability for costs in relation to the flat has not expired,

(b) the liability for costs under section 12(2) to which the notice of potential liability relates has, in relation to the flat which is the subject of the application, been fully discharged, and

(c) the person who registered the notice of potential liability for costs consents to the application.

(3B) A notice of discharge—

(a) must be in the form prescribed by order made by the Scottish Ministers, and

(b) on being registered, discharges the notice of potential liability for costs as it applies to the flat which is the subject of the application.”.

(b) in section 29(1) (interpretation), in the definition of “register” after “costs” insert “, a notice of discharge”).>
After section 73

Jim Eadie

9 After section 73, insert—

<Home maintenance framework

(1) Before section 42 of the 2006 Act, insert—

“Home maintenance framework

41A Home maintenance framework

(1) Where any premises consist of two or more houses, the owners of those houses must prepare jointly a framework (a “home maintenance framework”) in relation to any part of the premises which is owned in common by those owners.

(2) A home maintenance framework must set out how the maintenance and repair of such parts of the premises will be managed and must in particular include—

(a) arrangements for an annual inspection of any roof areas owned in common by the owners,

(b) a payment plan or other arrangements to fund maintenance and repairs to any part of the premises which is owned in common, and

(c) arrangements for the appointment of a responsible person or agent to manage the implementation of the framework.”

(2) In section 42 of the 2006 Act, after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Where any premises consist of two or more houses, the local authority may consider for the purposes of subsection (2)(b) that those houses are unlikely to be maintained to a reasonable standard if it appears to the authority that a satisfactory home maintenance framework has not been prepared under section 41A in relation to the houses.”>

Section 75

James Kelly

56 In section 75, page 51, line 25, at end insert—

<( ) In section 44(1) of the 2006 Act (maintenance plans for two or more houses), after “premises,” insert “and any garden area associated with the premises,”.>

After section 76

Margaret Burgess

118 After section 76, insert—

<Charging orders

(1) In Schedule 9 to the 1987 Act (recovery of expenses by charging order)—

(a) in paragraph 4, sub-paragraph (b)(i) is repealed, and

(b) for paragraph 6, substitute—
“6 Every annuity charged by a charging order may be recoverable as a debt due to the person for the time being entitled to it.”.

(2) In section 108(2) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45) (recovery of expenses by charging order), for the words from “modifications” to “paragraph” in the last place where it appears substitute “modification, that is to say, in sub-paragraph (b)(ii) of paragraph 4 of that Schedule”.

(3) In section 19(3) of the Crofters (Scotland) Act 1993 (c.44) (priority of sums due), the words “heads (i), (ii) and (iii) of” are repealed.

After section 77

Margaret Burgess

119 After section 77, insert—

<First-tier Tribunal: disqualification of members from exercise of certain functions

(1) This section applies to the following functions and jurisdictions of the First-tier Tribunal—

(a) a function or jurisdiction of the sheriff transferred to the Tribunal under section 17 or by virtue of Part 1 of schedule 1,

(b) a function conferred on the Tribunal, by virtue of Part 3 and Parts 2 to 4 of schedule 1, by—

(i) the 2004 Act,

(ii) the 2006 Act,

(c) a function conferred on the Tribunal by or under Part 4.

(2) A member of the First-tier Tribunal is disqualified from exercising a function or jurisdiction to which this section applies if the member is—

(a) a member of the House of Commons,

(b) a member of the Scottish Parliament,

(c) a member of the European Parliament,

(d) a Minister of the Crown,

(e) a member of the Scottish Government.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify subsection (2) by—

(a) adding a disqualification to,

(b) varying the description of a disqualification for the time being mentioned in,

(c) removing a disqualification from,

that subsection.>

Margaret Burgess

120 After section 77, insert—

<Private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership

In schedule 4 to the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984, after paragraph 1 insert—
“1A (1) A person is disqualified from appointment to, and from remaining a member of, the private rented housing panel if the person is or becomes—

(a) a member of the House of Commons,
(b) a member of the Scottish Parliament,
(c) a member of the European Parliament,
(d) a Minister of the Crown,
(e) a member of the Scottish Government.

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify sub-paragraph (1) by—

(a) adding a disqualification to,
(b) varying the description of a disqualification for the time being mentioned in,
(c) removing a disqualification from,

that sub-paragraph.

(3) An order under sub-paragraph (2) is subject to the negative procedure.”.

Section 79

Margaret Burgess

121 In section 79, page 53, line 20, leave out <Subsection (4)> and insert <A duty on the Regulator to consult in accordance with paragraph (i) or (ii) of subsection (4)(a)>.

Margaret Burgess

122 In section 79, page 53, line 27, leave out <the duties under subsection (4)> and insert <that duty>.

Margaret Burgess

123 In section 79, page 53, line 28, at end insert—

<(4B) The Regulator must—

(a) issue guidance on subsection (4A), such guidance to include—

(i) the circumstances in which it considers that subsection (4A) is likely to apply,
(ii) the actions it expects to take in those circumstances, and
(iii) how, in those circumstances, it intends to communicate with any of the persons mentioned in paragraph (b) who are affected by its actions, and

(b) before issuing or revising any guidance, consult—

(i) tenants of registered social landlords or their representatives,
(ii) registered social landlords or their representatives, and
(iii) secured creditors of registered social landlords or their representatives.>
Margaret Burgess

124 In section 79, page 53, line 28, at end insert—

<(4C) Where the Regulator proposes to direct a transfer of some (but not all) of a registered social landlord's assets, the Regulator must—

(a) before making a direction, obtain an independent valuation of those assets, and

(b) when making a direction, have regard to that valuation.

After section 79

Margaret Burgess

155 After section 79 insert—

<Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

(1) After section 104 of the 2010 Act insert—

“Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

104A Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

(1) This section applies to a registered social landlord which is—

(a) a registered society, or

(b) a registered company.

(2) An arrangement under which the registered social landlord is to become a subsidiary of a body of which it is not currently a subsidiary has effect only if the Regulator consents to that arrangement before it is completed.

(3) Chapter 3 of Part 10 makes provision for Regulator consent for the purpose of this section.”.

(2) After section 124 of the 2010 Act insert—

“CHAPTER 3

REGISTERED SOCIAL LANDLORD BECOMING A SUBSIDIARY OF ANOTHER BODY

124A Regulator’s consent

(1) The special procedure set out in sections 114 to 121 of Chapter 1 applies in relation to an arrangement to which the Regulator’s consent is required under section 104A as it applies in relation to a disposal to which Chapter 1 applies.

(2) The Regulator must determine that the special procedure is not to apply or is to cease to apply where the Regulator considers that—

(a) the registered social landlord’s viability is in jeopardy for financial reasons,

(b) a person could take a step in relation to the registered social landlord which would require to be notified to the Regulator under section 73, and

(c) the determination under this subsection would substantially reduce the likelihood of a person taking such a step.

(3) Where the Regulator makes a determination under subsection (2), the Regulator may give or refuse consent to the arrangement.
124B Purchaser protection

Failure by the Regulator or by a registered social landlord to comply with any provision of sections 114 to 121 of Chapter 1 in relation to an arrangement under which the registered social landlord is to become a subsidiary of a body of which it is not currently a subsidiary does not invalidate the Regulator's consent to the arrangement.”.

(3) In section 164 of the 2010 Act (connected bodies), the definition of “subsidiary” is repealed.

(4) In section 165 of the 2010 Act (interpretation), after the definition of “social landlord” insert—

““subsidiary” has the same meaning as in the Companies Act 2006 (c.46) or, as the case may be, the Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies and Credit Unions Act 1968 (c.55),”.

Section 82

Alex Johnstone

57 In section 82, page 54, line 19, at end insert—

<(< ) under section (Scottish starter tenancy)(1),>

James Kelly

37 In section 82, page 54, line 20, at end insert—

<(< ) under section (Rent reviews and rent increases)(1),>

James Kelly

38 In section 82, page 54, line 20, at end insert—

<(< ) under section (Security of tenure)(1),>

Drew Smith

58 In section 82, page 54, line 20, at end insert—

<(< ) under section (Houses let for holiday purposes)(1),>

Margaret Burgess

126 In section 82, page 54, line 21, at end insert—

<(< ) under section 41(1) which set out the first code of practice or replace the code of practice,>

Patrick Harvie

127 In section 82, page 54, line 21, at end insert—

<(< ) under section 41(1),>

Margaret Burgess

128 In section 82, page 54, line 22, leave out <51(3)> and insert <51(3)(b)>
Schedule 2

Margaret Burgess
39 In schedule 2, page 64, line 2, at end insert—
   <( ) In section 24(5)(d), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.
   ( ) In section 31(5)(c), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.

Margaret Burgess
40 In schedule 2, page 64, line 31, at end insert—
   <( ) In section 5(4)(a), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.

Margaret Burgess
41 In schedule 2, page 65, line 22, at end insert—
   <Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1)
     In section 22 of the 2006 Act—
     (a) subsection (4)(c) is repealed, and
     (b) subsection (6) is repealed.
>

Margaret Burgess
129 In schedule 2, page 65, line 29, at end insert—
   <( ) In section 124, for “122” substitute “121”.

Section 85

Alex Johnstone
42 In section 85, page 55, line 7, leave out subsection (4)

Margaret Burgess
43 In section 85, page 55, line 8, leave out <3> and insert <2>

Mary Fee
44 In section 85, page 55, line 8, leave out <3> and insert <1>

Long Title

Alex Johnstone
45 In the long title, page 1, line 1, leave out <the abolition of the right to buy,
>
3rd Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- a list of any amendments already debated;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the third day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Tenement management schemes
149, 153, 154, 150, 151, 7, 152, 35

Discharge of costs notices applying to owners of property
117

Home maintenance framework duty
9

Maintenance plans: areas
56

Charging orders
118

First-tier Tribunal and private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership
119, 120

Scottish Housing Regulator: transfer of assets following inquiries
121, 122, 123, 124

Registered social landlord disposals and restructuring
155, 129
Amendments already debated

Abolition of right to buy
With 12 – 42, 43, 44, 45

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 42 pre-empts amendments 43 and 44
Amendments 43 and 44 are direct alternatives

Short Scottish secure tenancy created on antisocial behaviour grounds
With 50 – 39, 40

Scottish starter tenancy
With 51 – 57

Enforcement of repairing standard
With 6 – 41

Rent reviews and rent increases – private rented housing
With 33 – 37

Security of tenure – private rented housing
With 34 – 38

Houses let for holiday purposes
With 55 – 58

Letting Agent Code of Practice
With 76 – 126, 127

Meaning of letting agency work
With 85 – 128
INFRASTRUCTURE AND CAPITAL INVESTMENT COMMITTEE

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES

16th Meeting, 2014 (Session 4)

Wednesday 28 May 2014

Present:
Jim Eadie Mary Fee
Mark Griffin Adam Ingram (Deputy Convener)
Alex Johnstone Gordon MacDonald
Maureen Watt (Convener)

Also present: Sarah Boyack and Margaret Burgess

Housing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 3).

The following amendments were agreed to without division: 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 155, 126, 128, 39, 40, 41, and 129.

Amendment 43 was agreed to (by division: For 4, Against 2, Abstentions 1).

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division)—
150 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
152 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
56 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
37 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
38 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
58 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
44 (For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were moved and, no member having objected, withdrawn: 149 and 9.

The following amendments were not moved: 153, 154, 151, 7, 35, 57, 127, 42 and 45.

The following provisions were agreed to without amendment: sections 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 80, 81, 83, 84, 86, and the long title.

The following provisions were agreed to as amended: sections 79 and 82, schedule 2 and section 85.

The Committee completed Stage 2 consideration of the Bill.
Scottish Parliament
Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee
Wednesday 28 May 2014

[The Convener opened the meeting at 10:00]

Housing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

The Convener (Maureen Watt): Good morning, everyone, and welcome to the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee’s 16th meeting in 2014. I remind everybody to switch off their mobile devices, because they affect the broadcasting system.

Agenda item 1 continues our stage 2 consideration of the Housing (Scotland) Bill. I welcome Margaret Burgess, who is the Minister for Housing and Welfare, and her officials. I remind members that the officials are here strictly in a supporting capacity and cannot speak during proceedings or be questioned by members.

I hope that everyone has a copy of the bill, the third marshalled list of amendments and the third list of groupings. There will be one debate on each group of amendments. I will call the member who lodged the first amendment in the group to speak to and move the amendment and to speak to all other amendments in the group. I will then call the other members who have amendments in the group; they should speak to their amendments and to the other amendments in the group, but should not move their amendments at that point. Finally, the member who lodged the first amendment in the group will be asked to wind up the debate and to press or withdraw their amendment.

Members who have not lodged amendments in the group but who wish to speak should catch my eye in the usual way. If a member wishes to withdraw their amendment after moving it, I must check whether any member objects to its being withdrawn. If any member objects, the committee will immediately move to a vote. If any member does not want to move their amendment when it is called, they should say, “Not moved.” Any other MSP can move the amendment, but I will not specifically invite other members to do so. If no one moves the amendment, I will proceed to the next amendment.

The committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed to each section and schedule of the bill, so I will put the question on each section and schedule at the appropriate point.

Section 72—Tenement management scheme

The Convener: The first group of amendments is on the tenement management scheme. Amendment 149, in the name of Sarah Boyack, is grouped with amendments 153, 154, 150, 151, 7, 152 and 35. I understand that Sarah Boyack will, in Malcolm Chisholm’s stead, speak to his amendment 35.

Sarah Boyack (Lothian) (Lab): I am grateful for the opportunity to speak to my amendments. I will run through them in the order in which they appear in the groupings.

As members will be aware, repairs to common property have caused considerable controversy in Edinburgh in the aftermath of the statutory repairs scandal. I know that I am not alone among Edinburgh colleagues in that I still receive casework on that. Alongside Dave Stewart’s Defective and Dangerous Buildings (Recovery of Expenses) (Scotland) Bill, which is being considered, the Housing (Scotland) Bill provides an opportunity to mend problems and to learn from the experience in Edinburgh.

Section 72 is welcome, because it will give local authorities the power to pay and—crucially—to recover a share of scheme costs. Inability to proceed with work because of unwilling or unidentifiable owners has caused unacceptable delays to home repairs, and is one reason why constituents have continued to turn to councils for intervention via statutory notices, even though previous legislation enables majority decisions to be made under a tenement management scheme.

Amendment 149 is really a probing amendment on the apportionment of costs when a local authority uses the new power. It is based on the approach in the City of Edinburgh District Council Order Confirmation Act 1991, which provides the basis of the City of Edinburgh Council’s statutory notice system. I am interested to hear the minister's comments on the amendment. I have lodged amendment 149 because, under the 1991 act, the council can apportion the cost of statutory repair work among owners on an equal-share basis. That does not prevent owners from pursuing their fellow owners through civil action when the amount paid does not reflect the situation that is set out in title deeds, but it is a simple way to process and administer the provisions from the council’s perspective, and it would avoid the council’s having to pay costly legal expenses when an owner challenges the apportionment.

Amendment 149 would allow alternative determination methods to be used, when they are considered to be reasonable. For example, if there is only one missing share, it would be very straightforward to determine it as being the remaining shares have been paid according to the tenement management scheme, but the amendment would, in the event that a local authority were to step in to pay for more than one owner’s share, allow the missing shares to be split evenly between those owners. Where owners who are liable for a missing share are unwilling or unable to work with the other owners to find a constructive way forward, the amendment would enable a process that would minimise the risk of expensive and protracted legal action, for which the councils would have to pay, to determine the cost for the owners concerned.

Amendments 153 and 154 seek to clarify the requirement that an owner be notified before a local authority steps in to pay a missing share. One of the scenarios that would allow the local authority to pay a missing share is if the owner cannot be identified or found. In such circumstances, it would not be possible to notify the owner directly, so amendment 154 would require the authority to publish notice of its intention to pay the missing share in two newspapers, including—if it is practical to do so—a local newspaper. To complete the circle, amendment 153 makes it clear that only in circumstances in which the identity of the owner is known would the local authority be required to notify that owner directly rather than advertise in the press.

The requirement to publish notification in the press when an owner cannot be identified has been used before—for example, in the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act 2004. During the process of drafting the amendments, it was noted that there has been a recent trend away from publishing notices due to the falling circulations of newspapers, so if anyone has an alternative suggestion, I would be willing to listen to it. However, my current suggestion is that a notice be published in newspapers, because an understandable transparency comes from that.

I see amendments 150 and 151 as probing amendments, too, but I am very concerned about the issues that they address. They would allow local authorities to pay a missing share to registered social landlords. Amendment 150 would enable Scottish ministers to make regulations to achieve that, following a period of consultation to consider the issue. Such a power would apply only in cases in which the RSL is the owner of, or is responsible for, maintenance of any part of a tenement building. The regulations would have the power to amend primary legislation, so amendment 151 would require that the use of affirmative procedure apply to any such regulations.

Amendments 150 and 151 follow on from the debate that we had in response to Dave Stewart’s Defective and Dangerous Buildings (Recovery of Expenses) (Scotland) Bill. The issue was raised by the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations, which said that, in general, housing associations undertake repairs with agreement from owners, but are in some circumstances required to pay the costs for people who are not prepared to pay up, and so the RSLs in effect bear the cost beyond what they should pay in order to ensure the safety and security of their assets. Civil remedies to recover costs in such cases can be protracted and unsuccessful. That money could otherwise be used to improve existing stock or could go towards much-needed new homes.

Since evidence was taken during the stage 1 process for Dave Stewart’s Defective and Dangerous Buildings (Recovery of Expenses) (Scotland) Bill, I have been made aware that in Edinburgh there are currently 11 examples of housing associations taking properties out of their letting pools because they cannot carry out common repairs and the properties do not meet the standard at which they are prepared to let houses. That means that there is currently lost income of about £40,000. Moreover, the properties are deteriorating, which is bad news for everybody else in the building, and the situation is leading to housing associations selling off properties where there is a minority ownership. That is bad news, because it will lead to less of a spread of tenancies throughout the city, and it is very bad for the income of housing associations.

Amendment 152 seeks to amend the recovery time for repayment charges when a local authority has paid a missing share. It has similarities to amendment 7, which is in the name of Jim Eadie, but it would go slightly further. The current provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 state that a repayment charge is recoverable over a period of 30 years. However, in the evidence that was taken during consideration of Dave Stewart’s Defective and Dangerous Buildings (Recovery of Expenses) (Scotland) Bill, there was a consensus that 30 years is too long a period for recovery of such expenses, so amendment 152 does not take the approach of using 30 annual instalments, but instead would give the local authority much greater flexibility by allowing recovery of “instalments at such frequency, and over such period of time not exceeding 30 years, as the local authority determines to be reasonable in the circumstances.”

It would also give ministers the option of producing guidance on the factors that are to be considered by the local authority in determining what constitutes a reasonable frequency and period of recovery. Such guidance would be useful to ensure that repayment charges were being assessed in a consistent and fair way across the country.
One of the reasons why I was keen to remove the 30 years provision is that, in my experience as both an owner and a representative, houses need to be repaired and maintained much more frequently than every 30 years. That is also true in relation to other amendments that Jim Eadie has prepared, such as amendment 9 in the third group of amendments that we will consider today. We need to create an expectation among owners that repairing is not a once-in-a-lifetime activity, and that they need to repair their properties more regularly. Amendment 152 will create that expectation.

Amendment 35, in the name of Malcolm Chisholm, is on tenement management schemes. One of the key benefits of the approach that is taken in section 72 will be the ability of local authorities not just to pay for a missing share but to be able to recover the costs from the relevant owner. At the moment, local authorities’ finances are being squeezed, but in principle the certainty of being able to recover their costs for carrying out works that will benefit the owner of a property is a good one, and amendment 35 seeks to minimise the risk of non-recovery even further by providing that a repayment charge that is issued in respect of repair work would be secured by prior ranking over all other burdens on a property. That would mean that, in the event of a property’s being sold, repayment of the charge would take precedence over all the other burdens, thereby ensuring full recovery of costs by the local authority.

Thank you for giving me the opportunity to explain the reasoning behind the amendments. I have done so in detail because the provisions that they would insert are not in the bill as introduced, and I know from having experienced many problems with the statutory repairs process in Edinburgh that the details are crucial. I particularly want to test out the different choices for how the legislation could be framed.

I move amendment 149.

The Convener: Jim Eadie will speak to amendment 7 and the other amendments in the group.

Jim Eadie (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP): I welcome the opportunity to speak to amendment 7, which is one of a number of amendments that I have lodged that arise from extensive discussion between myself and elected representatives and officials of the City of Edinburgh Council.

The purpose of amendment 7 is to facilitate recovery of funds when a local authority has covered the costs of a missing share for a common repair. Common repairs can be complex and pose a significant challenge for the City of Edinburgh Council due to the high percentage of older tenements in mixed ownership. Although the proposal to introduce changes that take the onus for debt recovery away from responsible owners who are willing to arrange and pay for repair and maintenance work is welcome, it is unlikely that local authorities would be unable to make use of the current powers.

The 30-year period for the recovery of funds through repayment charges is, arguably, excessive, and many local authorities will have limited resources to lend funds over such a long period. Local authorities cannot borrow for that expenditure without the express permission of Scottish ministers, because the money would technically be revenue and not capital. Increased flexibility about the repayment period will allow more local authorities to make use of existing powers. That will help to facilitate more repair work and improve standards in the private sector.

The current system does not take affordability into account. There is a set repayment period of 30 years, regardless of the amount that is owed or the financial circumstances of the owner. Amendment 7 would link a reduced payment period with a duty on local authorities to provide support through their scheme of assistance. That would address affordability issues through provision of financial assistance or access to advice and information, depending on the circumstances of the case and the range of support that is available through the scheme of assistance.

The Minister for Housing and Welfare (Margaret Burgess): Amendment 149 seeks to have the owners’ share of tenement management scheme costs calculated as the local authority thinks reasonable, but with the principle of favouring equal shares among owners. I am concerned because the amendment could weaken the tenement management scheme, and it lacks control to protect home owners.

The tenement management scheme is designed to be a process of voluntary agreement between owners that is based on clarity over costs and how they are shared. Amendment 149 would provide for circumstances in which the shares could be altered, potentially to the benefit of owners who would have higher than average shares of the costs. That could result in some owners having an incentive to hold out for a local authority to intervene to reduce their costs, while other owners might resist local authority intervention, because of uncertainty about how their share of the costs would be determined.

10:15
Amendment 149 would introduce to the existing arrangements under the tenement management scheme a significant change that has not been subject to consultation. It would not be appropriate to introduce the change at this point in the bill’s progress without first having considered the views of local authorities and of owners. I therefore invite Sarah Boyack to seek to withdraw amendment 149. If she does not, I ask the committee to reject it.

Amendments 153 and 154 seek changes to the procedure for notification of owners by a local authority when it decides to cover a missing share. Section 30(3) of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 already provides a procedure for service of a notice on a person who cannot be identified or found, which involves delivery of a notice to the property. The approach that is provided for in the bill is consistent with other notices under the 2004 act. To require that a notice be advertised in the press would incur additional and unnecessary costs for local authorities. I can see no reason to alter the current arrangements for one particular type of notice, nor do I see any advantage, from amendment 154, to justify the additional costs to local authorities. For those reasons, the amendments are unnecessary. In some cases, because of the costs, the amendments might deter local authorities from using the useful power that we are giving them. I therefore invite Sarah Boyack not to move amendments 153 and 154 and, if she does move them, I ask the committee to reject them.

Amendments 150 and 151 seek to introduce a regulation-making power that would enable registered social landlords to pay for a missing share and recover the costs using a repayment charge. Through the bill, we will introduce discretionary powers for local authorities to step in and provide a missing share where a majority decision allows work to go ahead, and to recover that using a repayment charge. It is right that local authorities, as the strategic housing authorities, should have that role and debt-recovery power. RSLs will be able to engage with the local authority if enforcement or assistance is needed in their area, and I encourage them to do so.

I want to be sure that covering of missing shares by RSLs does not occur at the expense of services for tenants, but amendments 150 and 151 do not provide those assurances. I am also concerned that there has not been any consultation on the proposals. It is not appropriate to introduce such a significant change without first listening carefully to views—in particular the views of lenders, who could be adversely affected by the proposal. I would also want to listen to the views of RSLs and the regulator, because some RSLs have constitutional arrangements that could prevent expenditure that is not expressly for the benefit of members. As I do not currently support the introduction of discretionary powers for RSLs to provide a missing share and to recover that through a repayment charge, I do not see the need to introduce such a regulation-making power at this time.

The Scottish Government’s proposed work on cross-tenure housing quality standards later this year will provide stakeholders with the opportunity to raise issues regarding housing quality. Contributions to the scope and design of a forum to discuss quality standards are currently being requested, with a planned consultation to follow next year. I want to await the outcome of that consultation before making any changes. I therefore ask Sarah Boyack not to move amendments 150 and 151 and, if she moves them, I ask the committee not to support them.

I understand why Jim Eadie and Sarah Boyack have, respectively, lodged amendments 7 and 152, which in some ways reflect the committee’s views in its stage 1 report: 30 years is excessively long for councils to recover their costs. I appreciate the arguments in favour of a shorter period, but I am concerned that they ignore the risks that a shorter period could pose to vulnerable home owners—particularly those who are elderly, living on fixed incomes and with only modest savings.

A repayment charge is a powerful debt-recovery tool. It allows local authorities to convert a debt into a security without recourse to the courts and—this is important—without the consent of the property owner. That power must be balanced by safeguards for owners. As matters stand, the 30-year repayment period provides such a safeguard in practice. Sarah Boyack’s amendments would give councils wide discretion to recover potentially significant sums from owners through repayment charges, over short periods of time and without owners’ consent. They would be able to do so without there being a robust replacement safeguard for owners who might not be able to make such payments, which worries me.

Sarah Boyack has proposed guidance for councils, but I am not convinced that replacing the 30-year repayment period with guidance offers robust compensatory protection against the risks to vulnerable owners. I am clear that any change to local authorities’ powers in this area would have to be accompanied by strong arrangements to ensure that repayment charges were fair to owners, both in respect of the amount of the charges and the period over which they should be made.

The proposed change refers to what the council considers to be “reasonable”. However, there is nothing about a council coming to a view on “reasonable” that requires it to take account of... information on the financial and personal circumstances of affected property owners. There is a real risk, therefore, of a council requiring payments at a level that the property owner cannot afford. That could be a problem for many owners: for example, young families who are struggling with a mortgage, or elderly persons who are living on pensions, with only modest savings. For such groups the proposed change could mean real hardship and distress.

Furthermore, the amendments do not include any specific right to appeal for an owner who may be subjected to unaffordable financial arrangements. I am concerned about that type of major omission, however well intentioned the proposed change may be.

On council recovery of costs, councils already have the option to negotiate a shorter repayment period, or to seek full and immediate recovery through the courts. The existing 30-year repayment period is a backstop. Owners whose property is subject to a repayment charge generally cannot sell the property or create any new borrowing over it without first repaying the council, and the average period between house sales is about seven years. In practice, councils would receive repayment long before the 30-year period.

A reduction in the repayment period does not necessarily make repayment more likely. There is in the amendments no provision that would alter what happens for non-payment. If an owner does not pay, whatever the timescale, the council cannot seek to sell the property as a result of the charge. A council can only seek recovery as a civil debt.

With a shorter period there would be situations in which the council would have to place another charge on the property to ensure it received payment, with additional costs for the council and the property owner.

For all those reasons I cannot support Sarah Boyack’s amendments, so I ask the committee to reject them.

Amendment 35, in the name of Malcolm Chisholm, seeks to ensure that local authorities receive payment before other registered charges on a property are paid. A repayment charge that has been registered by a local authority already has priority over all future burdens. It also has priority over nearly all existing burdens. The exception includes charges that are already registered by the local authority, and a small number of other charges that could be created by other local authorities. As a local authority is already entitled to receive repayment prior to other registered charges in nearly all cases, I do not see any reason to change the current position. I invite Sarah Boyack not to move amendment 35 on Malcolm Chisholm’s behalf, and I ask the committee to reject it if it is moved.

I am aware that I am not supporting any of the amendments in the group and I hope that I have explained why. I understand that there are significant concerns, particularly in the City of Edinburgh Council, regarding the issues that Sarah Boyack and Jim Eadie have raised. We acknowledge the intention behind the amendments, but if we were to make such changes it would require legislation and consultation. My officials are more than willing to explore the issues with the City of Edinburgh Council and to discuss how the council might address its concerns within the existing legislative framework. If it is found that that is not possible and changes are needed, we will carry out proper consultation and bring the changes back in other legislation.

I am absolutely not just dismissing the amendments out of hand; I recognise the reason behind them, but if we were to introduce such changes at this stage, or even at stage 3, we would simply be rushing them through and we would not achieve what we are all looking for. For that reason, I ask the committee not to support the amendments.

Sarah Boyack: I am very disappointed by the minister’s overall response, because the amendments address issues that have been raised through the consultation processes for two bills—the Housing (Scotland) Bill and Dave Stewart’s Dangerous and Defective Buildings (Recovery of Expenses) (Scotland) Bill—and they relate to how we remedy the problems of existing legislation. If we adopted the general principle that the minister has set out, that would lead us to the crazy situation in which if something was not in a minister’s original set of proposals for a bill, we would not amend the bill in that regard. That would defeat the whole purpose of having stage 2 and stage 3, without which we would just approve bills en bloc. If that is the minister’s reason for not accepting the amendments, I find it incredibly weak.

There is no intention to weaken the tenement management scheme. Amendment 149 tries to address a problem that has been identified by the City of Edinburgh Council. We have the bill in front of us and this is the opportunity to get it right, rather than waiting for an unspecified further piece of legislation. That is one of the problems that we have in housing legislation. This bill amends and corrects a variety of pieces of housing legislation in order to make them effective and useful.

As the minister said, Jim Eadie and I lodged amendments on the basis of practical experience and representations from a variety of stakeholders. The principle of just kicking everything into the long grass does not fix the problem. The interrelationship between different pieces of housing legislation that have been developed at different times is in itself a problem.

For that reason, I will not necessarily press all my amendments to a vote, but I will have discussions with colleagues about all this and bring the amendments back at stage 3. I do not think that it is acceptable to reject the amendments simply on the basis that they were not consulted on. That is a poor approach to addressing legislation. I do not think that the bill as currently formulated does the job that it needs to do. We know what does not work in existing housing legislation and some of the provisions in the bill will not help to overcome those problems—hence the representations that we have had from the SFHA and the City of Edinburgh Council, which have concerns that the way in which the bill is worded means that it will not address the challenges that exist.

If the minister was prepared to have a meeting with Jim Eadie and me between stage 2 and stage 3, I would be prepared not to press my amendments. I am not convinced that the detail of what the minister has told us today is correct in every respect. I think that there are gaps in her response to the detail of what we have suggested.

On amendment 150, I am particularly concerned about the point about discretionary power not currently being used. Amendment 150 tries to address a current problem, not a future problem. This bill is the place to address the issue of social landlords walking away from mixed tenement buildings because they cannot be sure that they have properties that are capable of being let. That is a current problem; it is not something to be addressed in the future.

I do not know what the procedure is for this. If the minister was prepared to have discussions between now and stage 3, I would be prepared not to press my amendments. As I said, some of the amendments are probing amendments. If the minister is prepared to at least have the discussion—I am not saying that I have to agree with her in every respect—I would seek to do so before stage 3. If she has taken the view that we should just dismiss all my amendments because my proposals were not in the bill as drafted, I will press my amendments today and come back with them at stage 3, because I do not think that that is a credible response to amendments that were lodged to address existing problems, which we perceive that the bill does not address correctly.

10:30

Margaret Burgess: We have accepted a number of non-Government amendments at stage 2, and we have lodged a number of Government amendments following discussions at stage 1.

I am certainly willing to meet Sarah Boyack and Jim Eadie prior to stage 3. It is not a case of dismissing their amendments out of hand simply because there have not been consultations; we want to ensure that any amendments do what they are intended to do. We are not sure that that is the case for this group of amendments, or that some of the amendments are necessary. I repeat: I am more than willing to meet both Jim Eadie and Sarah Boyack to discuss their concerns.

The Convener: Sarah, are you pressing or withdrawing your amendment?

Sarah Boyack: The first set of amendments that I proposed—

The Convener: We are talking about amendment 149.

Sarah Boyack: I will not press it at this point.

Amendment 149, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 153 and 154 not moved.

Amendment 150 moved—[Sarah Boyack].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 150 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against

Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 150 disagreed to.

Amendments 151 and 7 not moved.

Jim Eadie: May I just say a word by way of response to the minister?

I am grateful for the minister’s response, in particular her recognition that my amendment 7 reflects the committee’s views at stage 1. I particularly welcome her statement that she is not discounting amendment 7 or any of the other amendments in the group out of hand, and the fact that she is willing to instruct her officials to enter a constructive and meaningful dialogue to see whether a middle way can be found on amendment 7 in particular.

I recognise the statement that there is a need to strike a balance between the rights of councils to recover debts and the rights of owner-occupiers to repay their debt at an appropriate level over a reasonable period. The issue requires further discussion and consultation. I very much welcome the willingness to consult further on the matter and to engage in meaningful discussions on the issue.

Sarah Boyack: I have a strong view about the 30-years issue. It is not the right period of time to set. Therefore, I move amendment 152.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 152 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 152 disagreed to.
Amendment 35 not moved.
Section 72 agreed to.

After section 72

The next group is on discharge of costs notices applying to owners of properties. Amendment 117, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 117 proposes changes to the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003 and to the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 to aid the conveyancing process in a particular situation that arises when a notice of potential liability for costs under those acts is registered against a property. The effect of such a notice is that a new owner may become liable for any relevant costs incurred in relation to maintenance or other work. The notice of potential liability expires after three years unless it is renewed. An issue may arise when a home owner wishes to sell their property during the three-year period or a renewal period. Even if the outstanding amount is paid, the title will still show that the property is encumbered with a potential liability for costs. Naturally, buyers may be wary of purchasing a property that is encumbered in that way.

Currently, the keeper of the registers of Scotland can deal with that administratively, but that may no longer be possible with the commencement of the Land Registration etc (Scotland) Act 2012. The change in the keeper’s practice will not bring transactions to a halt, but it will mean more to-ing and fro-ing between solicitors. To avoid such problems arising in conveyancing transactions, amendment 117 will provide for a statutory discharge procedure for home owners. There will be no obligation to use the new procedure and notices of potential liability will continue to expire at the end of three years unless renewed, as is currently laid down in legislation.

I move amendment 117.
Amendment 117 agreed to.
Section 73 agreed to.

After section 73

The next group is on the home maintenance framework duty. Amendment 9, in the name of Jim Eadie, is the only amendment in the group.

Jim Eadie: I am pleased to speak to and move amendment 9, the purpose of which is to require owners to prepare a maintenance plan to cover common repairs, with a view to encouraging responsible home ownership and the avoidance of emergency repairs. Sarah Boyack said in an earlier discussion that there is a need to create an expectation and culture among home owners that repairs are not a one-off event but something that needs to be addressed throughout the lifetime of someone’s ownership of a property. Amendment 9 seeks to achieve that.

In Edinburgh, 76 per cent of all private homes are in some form of disrepair and 38 per cent of private homes are considered to be in urgent disrepair. There is a clear need to encourage home owners to invest in their homes in order to preserve the fabric of the city and to keep buildings safe. Proactive maintenance helps prevent the need for emergency repairs, which can be costly and can potentially pose a danger to residents and the general public. The requirement to establish a maintenance plan would encourage owners to work together and take responsibility for the maintenance of their homes and would mark a shift in culture from reactive repairs to proactive maintenance. That would also help to reinforce the message that home owners have to take responsibility for the maintenance of their homes.

It can be difficult for an owner to take the first step towards organising a common repair if they do not already know their neighbours, and that can lead to small jobs being put off. Establishing a relationship with neighbours to agree a maintenance plan would make it easier for owners to organise repairs when it becomes evident that work needs to be carried out. Under amendment 9, local authorities would have to establish local enforcement policies that could include a requirement for home owners to register details of their maintenance plan with the local authority or the use of powers in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 to require home owners to establish a maintenance plan.

I move amendment 9.

Margaret Burgess: I thank Jim Eadie for raising this issue because it gives me an opportunity to set out some of the existing powers and duties in this area. Under section 8 of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004, there is a general duty for owners to maintain any part of a tenement building that provides support or shelter to any other part. In addition, local authorities have a discretionary power under section 42 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 to require property owners to draw up maintenance plans, which can include common areas where there is evidence of disrepair or which there is reason to believe will not be maintained to a reasonable standard. Historic Scotland is running a pilot voluntary building maintenance scheme in Stirling, and I will assess the results of the pilot. I would want to be able to do that before considering the introduction of a mandatory maintenance scheme.

Amendment 9 would place additional costs on all owners of property with common areas, regardless of their property’s state of repair. Every owner would require to arrange annual inspections of jointly owned roof areas and to appoint persons to implement maintenance plans. I am not convinced that such requirements are justified or that local authorities cannot address the problems of poor maintenance with their existing powers. I hope that that explanation will allow Jim Eadie to seek to withdraw amendment 9.

Sarah Boyack: The minister’s comments are illustrative. Although powers and requirements exist, none of them is being implemented, which leads to a problem.

I have questions about how Jim Eadie’s proposal would work and how it would relate to tenement management schemes. If amendment 9 was agreed to, it would have to be backed up by guidance on its implementation from the Scottish Government, so that a level playing field would apply across the country. I presume that Jim Eadie would suggest an enforcement scheme that is similar to the one that the City of Edinburgh Council outlined in its stage 1 submission.

The idea that buildings do not need annual maintenance inspections does not reflect reality. We have a problem with buildings that need to be jointly maintained but which undergo no regular maintenance inspections. If local authorities currently have powers to deal with that, those powers are not being used. Amendment 9 puts the issue centre stage and it would be useful to have its provisions in the bill.

Margaret Burgess: There are existing powers. Where there is a problem, officials will want to discuss with local authorities why they are not using the powers and how they can be encouraged to use those powers.

Jim Eadie: Amendment 9 has the City of Edinburgh Council’s support and is designed to tackle an issue that it identified as requiring to be addressed. I appreciate the minister’s willingness to engage in dialogue with the council. For that reason, I am content not to press the amendment and to ask to withdraw it.

Amendment 9, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 74 agreed to.

Section 75—Maintenance plans

The Convener: The next group is on maintenance plans: areas. Amendment 56, in the name of James Kelly, is the only amendment in the group. Mark Griffin will speak to and move the amendment.

Mark Griffin (Central Scotland) (Lab): Amendment 56 would clarify the position on premises and gardens. The 2006 act refers to premises, which we feel could be interpreted to mean simply buildings. The amendment would ensure that shared gardens were covered in maintenance plans.

Across Scotland, local authorities and registered social landlords have massive difficulties when their tenants share a garden with private tenants and the garden is not maintained to an acceptable standard. Local authorities can step in if the situation in the garden breaches health and safety standards, but amendment 56 would ensure that action was taken before that point. I ask committee members to support it.

I move amendment 56.

Margaret Burgess: If I understand it correctly, amendment 56 seeks to enable local authorities to require owners to prepare a maintenance plan for common garden areas. Local authorities can already require owners to prepare a maintenance plan when the property consists of a single house or two or more houses, and the plan can include any part of the premises.
A plan can already include a garden area. Section 194(1) of the 2006 act says that a house “includes ... any yard, garden, garage, out-house or other area”, so the amendment is not required to achieve its intended purpose. I invite Mr Griffin to withdraw it and, if he does not do so, I ask the committee to reject it.

10:45

Mark Griffin: I thank the minister for her comments. As I said, the amendment seeks to clarify the position. We want to ensure that gardens are included in order to prevent an interpretation that focuses only on buildings.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 56 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 56 disagreed to.

Section 75 agreed to.

Section 76 agreed to.

After section 76

The Convener: The next group is on charging orders. Amendment 118, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 118 is a technical amendment to the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987. The bill provides an opportunity to tidy up schedule 9 to the 1987 act. Schedule 9 relates to recovery of expenses by charging order. However, the schedule still contains references to feu duties, which are no longer appropriate, as feudal tenure and feu duties were abolished by the Abolition of Feudal Tenure etc (Scotland) Act 2000.

Amendment 118 therefore repeals those references in paragraph 4(b)(i) of schedule 9 and adjusts the references in paragraph 6 of the schedule. It also makes minor consequential changes to the Crofters (Scotland) Act 1993 and the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. As this is a technical amendment to deal with outdated references to feudal tenure, I do not intend to say any more on it.

I move amendment 118.

Amendment 118 agreed to.

Section 77 agreed to.

After section 77

The Convener: The next group is on the first-tier tribunal and Private Rented Housing Panel: disqualification from membership. Amendment 119, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 120.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 119 disqualifies specified office-holders from hearing cases transferred from the jurisdiction of the sheriff and letting agents redress cases as part of the first-tier tribunal. Amendment 120 disqualifies the same office-holders from being appointed as or remaining members of the Private Rented Housing Panel and, in consequence, the Homeowner Housing Panel.

The disqualifications will safeguard the independence of those tribunal jurisdictions and prevent potential conflicts of interest. The amendments also include the ability to amend the list of disqualified offices by secondary legislation, as is the case with some other existing tribunals. Having the power to amend the list will provide the flexibility to consider operational implications more fully when more is known about the organisational structure of the first-tier tribunal, which will include all of those housing-related jurisdictions.

I move amendment 119.

Amendment 119 agreed to.

Amendment 120 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 78 agreed to.

Section 79—Scottish Housing Regulator: transfer of assets following inquiries

The Convener: The next group is on the Scottish Housing Regulator: transfer of assets following inquiries. Amendment 121, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 122 to 124.

Margaret Burgess: The purpose of section 79 is to protect the tenants, and indeed the lenders, of registered social landlords, by enabling the Scottish Housing Regulator to act quickly in the event of an RSL suddenly being in imminent danger of becoming insolvent. As I said when I gave evidence to the committee at stage 1, the risk of that happening is low, and the regulator works hard to avoid such eventualities arising.

Section 79 is therefore a precautionary measure, which the Government hopes will never need to be used. It identifies four tests that need to be met before the regulator can set aside the usual requirement for it to consult the tenants and lenders of an RSL before directing a transfer of the RSL’s assets. The four tests are that the RSL’s viability is in jeopardy for financial reasons, that there is a risk of someone taking steps to have the RSL declared insolvent, that a direction to transfer assets would substantially reduce the likelihood of someone taking steps to have the RSL declared insolvent, and that there is insufficient time for the regulator to consult tenants and lenders before making a direction. Unless all four tests are met, the normal duty on the regulator, under section 67 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010, to consult tenants and lenders before directing a transfer of assets remains in force.

Amendment 121 and consequential amendment 122 provide that the regulator must consider separately whether there is time to consult tenants and lenders. They recognise that, in practice, more time would be needed to consult tenants than lenders. It would invariably take several weeks to conduct a genuine consultation with tenants, whereas lenders could be consulted in less time. The amendments ensure that section 79 sets aside the duty to consult only where there is real lack of time, and I invite the committee to support them.

Amendment 123 addresses the committee’s recommendation in its stage 1 report that the Government should issue guidance on how the regulator will act under section 79. The Government agrees in principle with that recommendation, but the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 prohibits ministers from directing or otherwise seeking to control how the regulator performs its statutory functions. For that reason, it would not be right for ministers to issue the guidance that the committee has in mind. Instead, the regulator itself should be required to do so, and that is what amendment 123 achieves. It requires the regulator to describe the sort of circumstances in which it would not be able to consult tenants and/or lenders, what it would do in such circumstances and how it would communicate with those affected by a decision not to consult. It also requires the regulator to consult the representatives of tenants, landlords and lenders before issuing that guidance. I hope that amendment 123 addresses the concerns behind the committee’s recommendation and that the committee will support it.

Finally in this group, amendment 124 requires the regulator to obtain an independent valuation before directing an RSL to transfer some of its assets and to have regard to the valuation when directing the transfer. It has the effect of reinstating the 2010 act’s requirement to obtain a valuation, which paragraph 79(b) would have removed. The Council of Mortgage Lenders argued that such a duty is necessary and should be retained, and the Government has been persuaded by that argument, which is why we have lodged the amendment.

However, amendment 124 does make one change to the approach taken in the 2010 act. At present, the 2010 act requires that, where the regulator has obtained an independent valuation, it should then direct the transfer of assets at a price that it considers would be fetched if they were to be sold by a willing seller to a willing buyer. In practice, the need for the regulator to direct a transfer of assets is likely to arise in circumstances where the transfer is necessary to avoid the transferring RSL becoming insolvent. In such circumstances, neither the selling RSL nor the purchasing RSL is likely to be entirely willing, in the sense in which we usually understand that concept.

Amendment 124 recognises that by replacing the willing-seller-and-buyer test with a duty on the regulator to have regard to the valuation that it has been required to obtain. That is a more sensible approach, which avoids the risk of the regulator having to set a price that is not realistic in the circumstances in which a transfer has to be made. I hope that the committee will agree with that approach and will support the amendment.

I move amendment 121.

Amendment 121 agreed to.

Amendments 122 to 124 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 79, as amended, agreed to.

After section 79

The Convener: The next group is on registered social landlord disposals and restructuring. Amendment 155, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 129.

Margaret Burgess: Amendments 155 and 129 give effect to the Government’s commitment to require tenants to be balloted before their registered social landlord becomes a subsidiary or part of a group structure of another body. When I gave evidence to the committee on 12 March, I explained that the Government is sympathetic to the argument of the Glasgow and West of Scotland Forum of Housing Associations that, when RSLs become subsidiaries or part of group structures, they lose control over their affairs in the same way as happens when RSLs transfer their assets to other RSLs. I explained that we would consult on proposals to give tenants the same right to be balloted when changes involving group structures and subsidiaries are proposed as they already enjoy when a transfer is proposed.

We consulted stakeholders between 12 March and 9 April, and a majority of those who responded supported the proposal. I confirmed in the stage 1 debate that we would lodge stage 2 amendments to give effect to the measure. Amendment 155 will deliver the policy objective. It replicates the requirements in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 for a ballot when a transfer is proposed for cases in which there is a proposal for an RSL to become a subsidiary or part of the group structure of another RSL. The two types of change will therefore be treated in the same way, in recognition that both situations involve an RSL losing control over its affairs and that tenants should be consulted before either type of change happens. The amendment highlights the Government’s commitment to ensuring that tenants are consulted about changes that would have major implications for them before they happen.

Amendment 129 is technical and will have no legal effect; it simply tidies up a reference that is already in a section of the 2010 act.

I hope that the committee will support the amendments.

I move amendment 155.

Amendment 155 agreed to.

Sections 80 and 81 agreed to.

Section 82—Subordinate legislation

Amendment 57 not moved.

Amendment 37 moved—[Mark Griffin].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 37 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 37 disagreed to.

Amendment 58 moved—[Mark Griffin].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 58 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 58 disagreed to.

Amendment 126 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Amendment 127 not moved.

Amendment 128 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 82, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 83 and 84 agreed to.

Schedule 2—Minor and consequential amendments

11:00

Amendments 39 to 41 and 129 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Schedule 2, as amended, agreed to.
Section 85—Commencement

The Convener: If amendment 42 is agreed to, I will not be able to call amendments 43 and 44, because of pre-emption. Amendments 43 and 44 are direct alternatives.

Amendment 42 not moved.

Amendment 43 moved—[Margaret Burgess].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 43 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

Against
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Abstentions
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 2, Abstentions 1.

Amendment 43 agreed to.

Amendment 44 moved—[Mary Fee].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 44 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)

Against
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 44 disagreed to.

Section 85, as amended, agreed to.

Section 86 agreed to.

Long Title

Amendment 45 not moved.

Long title agreed to.

The Convener: That ends stage 2 consideration of the Housing (Scotland) Bill.
Housing (Scotland) Bill
[As Amended at Stage 2]

CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Topic</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>PART 1</td>
<td>RIGHT TO BUY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>Abolition of the right to buy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>Amendment of right to buy provisions</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PART 2</td>
<td>SOCIAL HOUSING</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Reasonable preference in allocation of social housing</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Rules on priority of allocation of housing: consultation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Factors which may be considered in allocation: ownership of property</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Determination of minimum period for application to remain in force</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Short Scottish secure tenancy</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Creation of short Scottish secure tenancy: antisocial behaviour</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Grant of short Scottish secure tenancy: homeowners</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Short Scottish secure tenancy: term</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Short Scottish secure tenancy: extension of term</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Short Scottish secure tenancy: recovery of possession</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Scottish secure tenancy</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Assignation, sublet and joint tenancy of Scottish secure tenancy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Succession to Scottish secure tenancy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>Grounds for eviction: antisocial behaviour</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>Recovery of possession of properties designed for special needs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PART 3</td>
<td>PRIVATE RENTED HOUSING</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Transfer of sheriff’s jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Regulated and assured tenancies etc.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>Repairing standard</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Right to adapt rented houses</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Landlord registration</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Houses in multiple occupation</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Landlord registration: time limit for determining application

Repairing standard

Carbon monoxide alarms
Electrical safety inspections
Power to modify repairing standard etc.

Enforcement of repairing standard

Third party application in respect of the repairing standard
Procedure for third party applications
Appeals in relation to third party applications

PART 4

LETTING AGENTS

Inclusion in the register

Register of letting agents
Application for registration
Offence of providing false information in an application
Decision on application
Time limit for determining application
Fit and proper person considerations
Fit and proper person: criminal record information

Duties of registered letting agents

Letting agent registration number
Duty to inform: change of circumstances

Removal from the register

Duration of registration
Revocation of registration

Appeals

Consequences of refusal or removal

Note on register where refusal or removal
No payment for letting agency work where refusal or removal

Offences where no registration

Offence of operating as a letting agent without registration
Offence of using a registration number where no registration

Code of practice

Letting Agent Code of Practice
Prohibition on contracting out

Letting agent enforcement orders

Applications to First-tier Tribunal to enforce code of practice
44 Variation and revocation of enforcement orders
45 Failure to comply with enforcement order
46 Enforcement orders: offence

Monitoring of compliance

46A Power to obtain information
46B Power to carry out inspections
46C Warrants for entry
46D Inspections: supplemental
46E Information and inspection: offence

General

47 Transfer of jurisdiction of actions involving letting agents
48 Offences by bodies corporate etc.
49 Delegation of functions relating to the register
50 Landlord registration where agent is a registered letting agent
51 Meaning of letting agency work
52 Interpretation of Part 4

PART 5

MOBILE HOME SITES WITH PERMANENT RESIDENTS

General application

53 Licensing of sites for permanent residents

Part 1A site licence

54 Relevant permanent site application
55 Issue, renewal, transfer and transmission of a Part 1A site licence
56 Duration of a Part 1A site licence
57 Duty to inform local authority where change
58 Revocation of a Part 1A site licence: fit and proper person
59 Appeals relating to a Part 1A site licence
60 Power to make provision in relation to procedure and appeals

Fit and proper persons

61 Fit and proper person considerations
62 Fit and proper person: criminal conviction certificate
62A Fit and proper person: information sharing

Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

63 Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

Local authority enforcement at relevant permanent sites

64 Improvement notices
65 Penalty notices
66 Appointment of interim manager
67 Emergency action
68 Powers of entry
69 Recovery of inspection and enforcement expenses
Miscellaneous

70 Part 1A of the 1960 Act: miscellaneous provision
71 Transitional provision for existing site licences
71A Agreements to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 applies

PART 6
PRIVATE HOUSING CONDITIONS

72 Tenement management scheme
72A Notice of potential liability for costs: notice of discharge
73 Work notices
74 Maintenance orders
75 Maintenance plans
76 Non-residential premises: repayment charges
76A Charging orders

PART 7
MISCELLANEOUS

77 Right to redeem heritable security after 20 years: power to exempt
77A First-tier Tribunal: disqualification of members from exercise of certain functions
77B Private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership
78 Delegation of certain functions
79 Scottish Housing Regulator: transfer of assets following inquiries
79A Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body
80 Repeal of defective designation provisions

PART 8
GENERAL

81 Interpretation
82 Subordinate legislation
83 Ancillary provision
84 Minor and consequential amendments
85 Commencement
86 Short title

Schedule 1—Transfer of jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal
   Part 1—Regulated tenancies, Part VII contracts and assured tenancies
   Part 2—Repairing standard
   Part 3—Right to adapt rented houses
   Part 4—Landlord registration
Schedule 2—Minor and consequential amendments
Housing (Scotland) Bill
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision about housing, including provision about the abolition of the right to buy, social housing, the law affecting private housing, the regulation of letting agents and the licensing of sites for mobile homes.

PART 1

RIGHT TO BUY

1 Abolition of the right to buy
   (1) Sections 61 to 81, 84 and 84A of the 1987 Act (right to buy provisions) are repealed.
   (2) Section 52 of the 2001 Act (reports on right to buy) is repealed.
   (3) Sections 145 to 147 of the 2010 Act (duties to collect information in relation to right to buy) are repealed.

2 Amendment of right to buy provisions
   In the 1987 Act—
   (a) in section 61ZA(1) (limitation on the right to purchase: new tenants), after “occupation” insert “as a tenant”, and
   (b) in section 61F (limitation on the right to purchase: new supply social housing), repeal the words “created before the relevant day” in each place where they occur.

PART 2

SOCIAL HOUSING

Allocation of social housing

3 Reasonable preference in allocation of social housing
   In section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing), for subsection (1) substitute—
“(1) A social landlord must, in relation to all houses held by it for housing purposes, secure that in the selection of its tenants a reasonable preference is given to the persons mentioned in subsection (1ZA).

(1ZA) The persons are—

(a) persons who—

(i) subject to subsection (1A), are homeless persons and persons threatened with homelessness (within the meaning of Part 2), and

(ii) have unmet housing needs,

(b) persons who—

(i) are living under unsatisfactory housing conditions, and

(ii) have unmet housing needs, and

(c) tenants of houses which—

(i) are held by a social landlord, and

(ii) the social landlord selecting its tenants considers to be under-occupied.

(1ZB) For the purposes of subsection (1ZA), persons have unmet housing needs where the social landlord considers the persons to have housing needs which are not capable of being met by housing options which are available.”.

4 Rules on priority of allocation of housing: consultation

(1) After section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing), insert—

“20A Rules on priority of allocation of housing: consultation

(1) Before making or altering its rules governing the priority of allocation of houses, a social landlord must—

(a) consult the persons mentioned in subsection (2), and

(b) prepare and publish a report on the consultation.

(2) The persons are—

(a) applicants on its housing list (within the meaning of section 19),

(b) tenants of the landlord,

(c) bodies for the time being registered in the register of tenant organisations maintained by the landlord under section 53(3) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10), and

(d) such other persons as the landlord thinks fit.

(3) A social landlord may publish a consultation report mentioned in subsection (1)(b) in such manner as it thinks fit (and may in particular publish a joint report with any other social landlord).”.

(2) In section 21 of the 1987 Act, after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) In making or altering its rules governing the priority of allocation of houses, a social landlord must have regard to—
(a) any local housing strategy (within the meaning of section 89(1)(b) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001) for its area, and

(b) any guidance published by the Scottish Ministers.

(3AA) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (3A), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(3B) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe persons of a description or type who a social landlord must include in its rules governing the priority of allocation of houses.

(3C) Regulations under subsection (3B) are subject to the affirmative procedure.”.

(3) The title of section 21 of the 1987 Act becomes “Rules relating to the housing list and to transfer of tenants”.

6 Factors which may be considered in allocation: ownership of property

(1) In section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing), for subsection (2)(a)(viii) substitute—

“(viii) where any of the circumstances in subsection (2C) apply to that person, the ownership of, or value of, heritable property owned by—

(A) the applicant,

(B) a person who normally resides with the applicant, or

(C) a person who it is proposed will reside with the applicant.”.

(2) After subsection (2B) insert—

“(2C) The circumstances are that—

(a) in the case of a property which has not been let, the owner cannot secure entry to that property,

(b) it is probable that occupation of the property will lead to abuse (within the meaning of the Protection from Abuse (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 14) from some other person residing in that property,

(c) it is probable that occupation of it will lead to abuse (within the meaning of that Act) from some other person who previously resided with that person, whether in that property or elsewhere,

(d) occupation of the property may endanger the health of the occupants and there are no reasonable steps which can be taken by the applicant to prevent that danger.”.

7 Determination of minimum period for application to remain in force

(1) In section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing)—

(a) in subsection (2)(a)(iii), at the beginning insert “except to the extent permitted by section 20B,”, and

(b) in subsection (2)(b)(i), at the beginning insert “except to the extent permitted by section 20B,”.
(2) After section 20A of the 1987 Act (inserted by section 4(1)), insert—

20B Determination of minimum period for application to remain in force

(1) A social landlord may impose a requirement that an application must have remained in force for a minimum period before the applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing falling within section 20(1) if, before making that application, any of the circumstances mentioned—

(a) in subsection (5) applied in relation to the applicant, or

(b) in paragraphs (a) to (g) of subsection (5) applied in relation to a person who it is proposed will reside with the applicant.

(2) But a social landlord may not impose a requirement under subsection (1) if the landlord—

(a) in relation to the same application has previously relied on the same circumstance as it applied to an applicant or a person who it is proposed will reside with the applicant to impose a requirement under subsection (1), or

(b) is a local authority and has a duty to the applicant under section 31(2) (duty to secure accommodation where applicant is homeless).

(3) In considering whether to impose a requirement under subsection (1), a social landlord must have regard to any guidance about this section (including the matters mentioned in subsection (4)) published by the Scottish Ministers.

(3A) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (3), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe—

(a) the maximum period preceding the application which a social landlord may consider in relation to any circumstances mentioned in subsection (5),

(b) the maximum period for an application to have remained in force which a social landlord may impose in relation to any circumstances mentioned in subsection (5), and such regulations may make different provision for different cases.

(5) The circumstances are—

(a) the person has—

(i) acted in an antisocial manner in relation to another person residing in, visiting or otherwise engaged in lawful activity in the locality of a house occupied by the person,

(ii) pursued a course of conduct amounting to harassment of such other person, or a course of conduct which is otherwise antisocial conduct in relation to such other person, or

(iii) acted in an antisocial manner, or pursued a course of conduct which is antisocial conduct, in relation to an employee of the social landlord in the course of making the application,

(b) the person has been, or has resided with a person who has been, convicted of—
(i) using a house or allowing it to be used for immoral or illegal purposes, or
(ii) an offence punishable by imprisonment which was committed in, or in the locality of, a house occupied by the person,

(c) an order for recovery of possession has been made against the person in proceedings under—
   (i) the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 (S.I. 1983/1118),
   (ii) the Housing Act 1985 (c.68),
   (iii) this Act,
   (iv) the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (c.43),
   (v) the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10),

(d) the person’s tenancy has been terminated by the landlord under section 18(2) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (repossession where abandoned tenancy),

(e) the person’s interest in a tenancy has been terminated by the landlord under section 20(3) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (abandonment by joint tenant),

(f) in relation to a house where the person was a tenant, a court has ordered recovery of possession on the ground set out in paragraph 3 or 4 of schedule 2 to the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001,

(g) there is or was any outstanding liability (for payment of rent or otherwise) in relation to a house which—
   (i) is attributable to the person’s tenancy of the house, and
   (ii) either—
      (A) section 20(2A) would not be satisfied in respect of that debt, or
      (B) in the case of a debt which is no longer outstanding, section 20(2A) would not have been satisfied at any time while that debt remained outstanding,

(h) the person knowingly or recklessly made a false statement in any application for housing held by a social landlord,

(i) the person has refused one or more offers of housing falling within section 20(1) and the landlord considers the refusal of that number of offers to be unreasonable.

(6) In subsection (5)—

“antisocial”, in relation to an action or course of conduct, means causing or likely to cause alarm, distress, nuisance or annoyance,

“conduct” includes speech, and a course of conduct must involve conduct on at least two occasions, and

“harassment” is to be construed in accordance with section 8 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 (c.40).
(7) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations modify subsections (5) and (6).

(7A) After the social landlord imposes a requirement under subsection (1) (whether or not previously varied under this subsection), it may—

(a) withdraw the requirement, or

(b) vary the requirement in order to shorten the period imposed for the application to have remained in force.

(8) An applicant may by summary application appeal to the sheriff against any decision of a social landlord under subsection (1).

(9) Regulations under subsection (4) and under subsection (7) are subject to the affirmative procedure.”.

8 Creation of short Scottish secure tenancy: antisocial behaviour

(1) In section 34 of the 2001 Act (short Scottish secure tenancies)—

(a) in subsection (7), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”, and

(b) after subsection (8), insert—

“(9) A landlord must have regard to any guidance published by the Scottish Ministers—

(a) before creating a tenancy which is a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of section 35 or paragraph 1, 2 or 2A of schedule 6, and

(b) when taking any steps in relation to such a tenancy with a view to—

(i) extending the term of the tenancy under section 35A, or

(ii) raising proceedings for the recovery of possession of the house under section 36.

(10) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (9), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.”.

(2) In section 35 of the 2001 Act (conversion to a short Scottish secure tenancy)—

(a) for subsection (2) substitute—

“(2) The landlord may serve a notice under subsection (3) only where—

(a) the tenant (or any one of joint tenants) or a person residing or lodging with, or a subtenant of, the tenant is subject to an antisocial behaviour order under—

(i) section 234AA of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), or

(ii) section 4 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8), or

(b) the tenant (or any one of joint tenants), a person residing or lodging with, or a subtenant of, the tenant, or a person visiting the house has, within the period of 3 years preceding the date of service of the notice—
(i) acted in an antisocial manner in relation to another person residing in, visiting or otherwise engaged in lawful activity in the locality of a house occupied by the person, or

(ii) pursued a course of conduct amounting to harassment of such other person, or a course of conduct which is otherwise antisocial conduct in relation to such other person.”.

(aa) in subsection (3)(b), after “order” insert “or, as the case may be, has behaved as described in subsection (2)(b)”.

(b) after subsection (6), insert—

“(7) In this section—

“antisocial”, in relation to an action or course of conduct, means causing or likely to cause alarm, distress, nuisance or annoyance,

“conduct” includes speech, and a course of conduct must involve conduct on at least two occasions, and

“harassment” is to be construed in accordance with section 8 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 (c.40).”.

(3) In section 37(1) of the 2001 Act (conversion to Scottish secure tenancy), in paragraph (a) for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.

(4) In schedule 6 to the 2001 Act (grounds for granting short Scottish secure tenancy)—

(a) after paragraph 2 insert—

“Other antisocial behaviour

2A (1) A person mentioned in sub-paragraph (2) has, within the period of 3 years preceding the date of service of the notice—

(a) acted in an antisocial manner in relation to another person residing in, visiting or otherwise engaged in lawful activity in the locality of a house occupied by the prospective tenant or by a person who it is proposed will reside with the prospective tenant, or

(b) pursued a course of conduct amounting to harassment of such other person, or a course of conduct which is otherwise antisocial conduct in relation to such other person.

(2) The persons are—

(a) the prospective tenant,

(b) any one of prospective joint tenants,

(c) a person visiting a house occupied by the prospective tenant or by a person who it is proposed will reside with the prospective tenant, and

(d) a person who it is proposed will reside with the prospective tenant.

(3) In sub-paragraph (1)—

“antisocial”, in relation to an action or course of conduct, means causing or likely to cause alarm, distress, nuisance or annoyance,

“conduct” includes speech, and a course of conduct must involve conduct on at least two occasions, and
“harassment” is to be construed in accordance with section 8 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 (c.40), and

(b) for paragraph 6 substitute—

“Accommodation for person in receipt of housing support

6 The house is to be let expressly on a temporary basis to a person—

(a) to whom no other paragraph of this schedule applies, and

(b) who is in receipt of a housing support service.”.

(5) In section 31(5) of the 1987 Act (permanent accommodation where duty to secure accommodation for persons found to be homeless), in paragraph (c) for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.

9 Grant of short Scottish secure tenancy: homeowners

In schedule 6 to the 2001 Act (grounds for granting short Scottish secure tenancy), after paragraph 7 insert—

“Temporary letting where other property owned

7A(1) The house is to be let expressly on a temporary basis to a person—

(a) pending the making of arrangements in relation to a property mentioned in sub-paragraph (2) which will allow the person’s housing needs to be met.

(2) The property is heritable property owned by the person or a person who it is proposed will reside with that person.”.

10 Short Scottish secure tenancy: term

(1) In section 34 of the 2001 Act (short Scottish secure tenancies)—

(a) after subsection (5), insert—

“(5A) Subsection (5) does not apply to a tenancy mentioned in subsection (6A).”,

(b) after subsection (6) insert—

“(6A) A tenancy which is a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of section 35 or paragraph 1, 2 or 2A of schedule 6 has a term of 12 months from the day on which the tenancy is granted.”.

(2) In section 35 of the 2001 Act (conversion to short Scottish secure tenancy)—

(a) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A short Scottish secure tenancy created by virtue of this section has a term of 12 months from the day on which the landlord serves a notice under subsection (3).”, and

(b) for subsection (4), substitute—

“(4) Where a tenancy becomes a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of this section—

(a) subsection (5) of section 34 does not apply to the tenancy, but

(b) otherwise subsection (6) of that section does apply to the tenancy.”.

(3) In section 37 of the 2001 Act (conversion to Scottish secure tenancy), after subsection (4) insert—
“(5) Subsection (6) applies to a tenancy which—
(a) became a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of section 35, and
(b) becomes a Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of this section.

(6) The term of the tenancy is the term which applied immediately before the tenancy became a short Scottish secure tenancy.”.

11 Short Scottish secure tenancy: extension of term

(1) After section 35 of the 2001 Act, insert—

“35A Extension of term of short Scottish secure tenancy
(1) The landlord under a tenancy which is a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of section 35 or paragraph 1, 2 or 2A of schedule 6 may extend the term of that tenancy by 6 months from the day which would otherwise be the day of expiry of the tenancy.

(2) Such an extension may not be made unless—
(a) the tenant is in receipt of housing support services, and
(b) the landlord has, on or before the day which is 2 months before the day which would otherwise be the day of expiry of the tenancy, served on the tenant a notice informing the tenant of—
(i) the extension, and
(ii) the reasons for the extension.

(3) A landlord may not give a notice if the landlord has previously given a notice under subsection (2) in relation to that short Scottish secure tenancy.”.

(2) In section 37 of the 2001 Act (conversion to Scottish secure tenancy)—

(a) in subsection (1)—
(i) the words “, in the period of 12 months following the creation of the tenancy,” are repealed,
(ii) after “36(2)” insert “before the expiry of the relevant period”, and
(iii) for “that” substitute “the relevant”,
(b) after subsection (1), insert—
“(1A) In this section, the “relevant period” is—
(a) the period of 12 months following the creation of the tenancy, or
(b) if an extension notice has been served under section 35A, the period of 18 months following the creation of the tenancy.”.

(c) in subsection (2)—
(i) for “period of 12 months following the creation of the tenancy” substitute “relevant period”, and
(ii) for “that period of 12 months”, in both places where it occurs, substitute “the relevant period”.
12 Short Scottish secure tenancy: recovery of possession

In section 36 of the 2001 Act (recovery of possession)—

(a) in subsection (2), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) in the case of a short Scottish secure tenancy created by virtue of section 35 or paragraph 1, 2 or 2A of schedule 6, the landlord considers that any obligation of the tenancy has been broken,”,

(b) in subsection (3), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) state the reason why the landlord is seeking recovery of possession (including, in a case where subsection (2)(aa) applies, the obligations which the landlord considers to have been broken),”,

(c) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) A tenant may, before the end of the period of 14 days beginning with the day of service of a notice under subsection (2), apply to the landlord for a review of a decision to seek recovery of possession of the house which is the subject of the tenancy.

(4B) If an application for a review under subsection (4A) is made, the landlord must, before the day specified in the notice by virtue of subsection (3)(b)—

(a) confirm its decision to seek recovery of possession or withdraw its notice under subsection (2),

(b) notify the tenant of its decision on the review, and

(c) where its decision on the review is to confirm the decision to seek recovery of possession, notify the tenant of the reasons.

(4C) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision about the procedure to be followed in connection with a review following an application under subsection (4A).”,

(ca) in subsection (5)(a), after “34(5)” insert “or, in a case where subsection (2)(aa) applies, the end of the term applicable to the tenancy in accordance with section 34(6A), 35(3A) or 35A(1)”,

(d) in subsection (7), after “16” insert “, but subject to the modification mentioned in subsection (8)”, and

(e) after subsection (7), insert—

“(8) In relation to the recovery of possession of the house which is the subject of a short Scottish secure tenancy, section 14(4) is to be read as if for paragraph (b) there were substituted—

“(b) a date, not earlier than 4 weeks from the date of service of the notice on or after which the landlord may raise proceedings for recovery of possession,”.

Scottish secure tenancy

13Assignation, sublet and joint tenancy of Scottish secure tenancy

(1) In section 11 of the 2001 Act (Scottish secure tenancy)—

(a) in subsection (6), the words “, or is intended to be,” are repealed, and
(b) after subsection (6) insert

“(6A) An application under subsection (5) may be made only where the house in question has been the only or principal home of the person falling within subsection (6) throughout the period of 12 months ending with the date of the application.

(6B) For the purposes of subsection (6A) a period may be considered in relation to a person only if, at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(a) the person, or
(b) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given,

that the house in question was the person’s only or principal home.”.

(2) In section 32 of the 2001 Act (assignation, subletting, etc.)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (b) is repealed,
(ii) in paragraph (b), after “been” insert “the tenant’s and”,
(iii) in paragraph (b), for “6” substitute “12”, and
(iv) after paragraph (b), insert “ and

“(c) in the case of a sublet, only where the house has been the tenant’s only or principal home throughout the period of 12 months ending with the date of the application for the landlord’s consent to the sublet under paragraph 9 of schedule 5.”,

(b) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) For the purposes of an assignation mentioned in subsection (1)(b), a period may be considered in relation to a person only if—

(a) the person was the tenant of the house throughout that period, or
(b) at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(i) the person, or
(ii) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given,

that the house in question was the person’s only or principal home.

(1B) For the purposes of a sublet mentioned in subsection (1)(c), a period may be considered in relation to a tenant only if—

(a) the tenant was the tenant of the house throughout that period, or
(b) at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(a) the tenant, or
(b) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given, that the house in question was the tenant’s only or principal home.”, and

(c) in subsection (3)—
(i) the word “or” immediately preceding paragraph (e) is repealed, and
(ii) after paragraph (e), insert—

“(f) in the case of consent to an assignation by a local authority or a registered social landlord, if the proposed assignee is not a person to whom that local authority or registered social landlord would give a reasonable preference when selecting tenants under section 20(1) of the 1987 Act, or

(g) in the case of consent to an assignation, if the assignation would in the opinion of the landlord, result in the house being under-occupied.”.

14  Succession to Scottish secure tenancy
In schedule 3 to the 2001 Act (succession to Scottish secure tenancy: qualified persons)—
(a) in paragraph 2(2), for “6” insert “12”,
(b) in paragraph 3, for “at the time of” substitute “throughout the period of 12 months ending with”,
(c) in paragraph 4(b), for “at the time of” substitute “throughout the period of 12 months ending with”, and
(d) after paragraph 4, insert—

“Only or principal home

4A For the purposes of paragraph 2, 3 or 4 a period may be considered in relation to a person only if, at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(a) the person, or

(b) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given,

that the house in question was the person’s only or principal home.”.

15  Grounds for eviction: antisocial behaviour
(1) In section 14 of the 2001 Act (proceedings for possession), after subsection (2A) insert—

“(2B) Where such proceedings are to include a ground for recovery of possession set out in paragraph 2 of schedule 2, the landlord must have regard to any guidance published by the Scottish Ministers before raising such proceedings in relation to recovering possession of the house.

(2C) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (2B), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.”.

(2) In section 16 of the 2001 Act (powers of court in possession proceedings)—
(a) in subsection (2), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) whether or not paragraph (a) applies, that—

(i) the landlord has a ground for recovery of possession set out in paragraph 2 of that schedule and so specified, and

(2)
(ii) the landlord served the notice under section 14(2) before the day which is 12 months after—
   (A) the day on which the person was convicted of the offence forming the ground for recovery of possession, or
   (B) where that conviction was appealed, the day on which the appeal is dismissed or abandoned,”; and

(b) after subsection (3), insert—
“(3A) Subsection (2) does not affect any other rights that the tenant may have by virtue of any other enactment or rule of law.”.

16 Recovery of possession of properties designed for special needs

In schedule 2 to the 2001 Act (grounds for recovery of possession of house)—

(a) in paragraph 11(a), the words “longer a” are repealed, and

(b) in paragraph 12(a), the words “longer a” are repealed.

PART 3

PRIVATE RENTED HOUSING

Transfer of sheriff’s jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal

17 Regulated and assured tenancies etc.

(1) The functions and jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to actions arising from the following tenancies and occupancy agreements are transferred to the First-tier Tribunal—

(a) a regulated tenancy (within the meaning of section 8 of the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 (c.58)),

(b) a Part VII contract (within the meaning of section 63 of that Act),

(c) an assured tenancy (within the meaning of section 12 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (c.43)).

(2) But that does not include any function or jurisdiction relating to the prosecution of, or the imposition of a penalty for, a criminal offence.

(3) Part 1 of schedule 1 makes minor and consequential amendments.

18 Repairing standard

(1) The 2006 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 18—

(a) in subsection (1), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in subsection (2)(b), for “sheriff” substitute “Tribunal”.

(3) The title of section 18 becomes “Contracting out with consent of First-tier Tribunal”.

(4) In section 57—
(a) in subsection (2), for “sheriff” substitute “relevant authority”,
(b) after subsection (2) insert—
“(2A) In subsection (2), the relevant authority is—
(a) where the requirement or thing which the person is authorised or entitled to do relates to the repairing standard, the First-tier Tribunal,
(b) in any other case, the sheriff.”.
(5) Part 2 of schedule 1 makes minor and consequential amendments.

19 Right to adapt rented houses
(1) After section 66 of the 2006 Act insert—
“66A Appeals in relation to section 52
(1) A tenant aggrieved by a decision by a landlord—
(a) to impose any condition on a consent to carry out work in pursuance of section 52(2), or
(b) to refuse to consent to the carrying out of any such work, may appeal to the First-tier Tribunal within 6 months of being notified of that decision.
(2) The First-tier Tribunal may, on cause shown, hear an appeal after the deadline set by subsection (1).
(3) The First-tier Tribunal must, unless the Tribunal considers the condition or, as the case may be, refusal appealed against to be reasonable, determine an appeal under subsection (1) by quashing the decision and directing the landlord to withdraw the condition (or to vary it in such manner as the Tribunal may specify) or, as the case may be, to consent to the application (with or without such conditions as the Tribunal may specify).
(4) In determining whether a condition or refusal appealed against under subsection (1) is reasonable, the First-tier Tribunal must, where the appeal relates to an application made for the purposes of section 52(2)(a), have regard to any code of practice issued by the Commission for Equality and Human Rights which relates to section 52 or 53.
(5) The First-tier Tribunal’s determination on an appeal under subsection (1) is final.”.
(2) Part 3 of schedule 1 makes minor and consequential amendments.

20 Landlord registration
(1) The 2004 Act is amended as follows.
(2) In section 92(2), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.
(3) In section 97—
(a) in subsection (1), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(b) in subsection (2), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.
(4) Part 4 of schedule 1 makes minor and consequential amendments.
21 Houses in multiple occupation

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations—
(a) provide that the First-tier Tribunal may make an order of the kind mentioned in section 153(2) of the 2006 Act instead of the sheriff;
(b) provide that the following may be made to the First-tier Tribunal instead of the sheriff—
(i) appeals against decisions of local authorities to which section 158 of that Act applies,
(ii) applications to extend the period mentioned in paragraph 9(1) of schedule 4 to that Act,
(iii) applications for a warrant for the ejection of the occupant from land or premises where the occupant has not complied with a requirement under paragraph 2 of schedule 5 to that Act in relation to the land or premises.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may—
(a) disapply the following provisions of the 2006 Act—
(i) section 153(2),
(ii) section 159(1),
(iii) paragraph 9(2) of schedule 4,
(iv) paragraph 3(1) of schedule 5,
(b) make such other consequential modifications to the 2006 Act and any other enactment as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.

Landlord registration: time limit for determining application

22 Landlord registration: time limit for determining application

(1) After section 85A of the 2004 Act, insert—

“85B Time limit for determining application

(1) This section applies where a relevant person makes an application to a local authority in accordance with section 83.
(2) The local authority must determine the application under section 84 within 12 months of receiving the application.
(3) The period mentioned in subsection (2) may be extended by the First-tier Tribunal, on application by the local authority, by such period as the Tribunal thinks fit.
(4) The First-tier Tribunal may not extend a period unless the local authority applies for the extension before the period expires.
(5) The relevant person is entitled to be a party to any proceedings on such an application.
(6) The decision of the First-tier Tribunal on such an application is final.
(7) If the local authority does not determine the application within the period required by this section—
(a) the authority is to be treated as having entered, on the day by which the authority was required to determine the application, the relevant person in the register maintained by the authority under section 82(1), and
(b) unless otherwise removed from the register in accordance with this Part, that person is to be treated as being removed from the register on the expiry of the period of 12 months beginning with that day.

(8) Where subsection (7) applies the authority must—
(a) enter the name of the relevant person in the register maintained by the authority under section 82(1), and
(b) state in the register a registration number in relation to that person
(which is to be treated as having been given under section 84(5A)).

(9) Subject to the modifications in subsection (10), the relevant person is for all purposes to be treated as having been registered by virtue of section 84(2)(a).

(10) The modifications are—
(a) in the case of an application to which section 84(3)(a) and (b) applies, the relevant person is to be treated as having been registered by virtue of section 84(3), and
(b) in the case of an application to which section 84(4)(a) and (b) applies, the relevant person is to be treated as having been registered by virtue of
section 84(4),
(c) section 84(6) does not apply, and
(d) section 89(2)(b), (3)(b) and (3A)(b) are to be read as if for the words “no longer applies” there were inserted “does not apply”.

(2) In section 86(1)(a) of the 2004 Act (entry in the register), after “section 84(2)” insert “or section 85B(8)(a)”.

Repairing standard

22A Carbon monoxide alarms
In section 13 of the 2006 Act—
(a) the word “and” after paragraph (e) of subsection (1) is repealed,
(b) after paragraph (f) of subsection (1) insert “, and
    (g) the house has satisfactory provision for giving warning if carbon monoxide is present in a concentration that is hazardous to health.”,
(c) after subsection (5) insert—
    “(6) In determining whether a house meets the standard of repair mentioned in subsection (1)(g), regard is to be had to any building regulations and any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers on provision for giving warning if carbon monoxide is present in a concentration that is hazardous to health.”.

22B Electrical safety inspections
(1) In section 13 of the 2006 Act (the repairing standard), after subsection (4) insert—
“(4A) In determining whether a house meets the standard of repair mentioned in subsection (1)(c) and (d) in relation to installations for the supply of electricity and electrical fixtures, fittings and appliances, regard is to be had to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers on electrical safety standards.”.

(2) After section 19 of the 2006 Act insert—

“19A Duty to ensure regular electrical safety inspections

(1) The landlord must ensure that regular inspections are carried out for the purpose of identifying any work which—

(a) relates to installations for the supply of electricity and electrical fixtures, fittings and appliances, and

(b) is necessary to ensure that the house meets the repairing standard.

(2) The duty in subsection (1) is complied with if—

(a) an inspection has been carried out before the tenancy starts (but not earlier than 5 years before the start of the tenancy), and

(b) inspections are carried out during the tenancy at such intervals to ensure that there is a period of no more than 5 years between each inspection.

(3) The landlord must—

(a) before the start of the tenancy, provide the tenant with a copy of the record of the most recent inspection carried out, and

(b) provide the tenant with a copy of the record of any inspection carried out during the tenancy.

(4) For the purposes of sections 16(4), 17, 22 and 24 and schedule 2, references to a duty under section 14(1) include the duties under this section.

(5) In relation to a tenancy which started before the day of commencement of section 22B(2) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014 (asp 00)—

(a) subsections (2)(a) and (3)(a) do not apply, but

(b) the landlord must ensure that an inspection is carried out no later than the end of the period of 12 months beginning on that day (unless the tenancy ends before the end of that period).

19B Electrical safety inspections

(1) An inspection carried out in pursuance of section 19A must be carried out by a competent person.

(2) The person carrying out the inspection must prepare a record of the inspection including the following information—

(a) the date on which the inspection was carried out,

(b) the address of the house inspected,

(c) the name and address of the landlord or the landlord’s agent,

(d) the name, address and relevant qualifications of the person who carried out the inspection,

(e) a description, and the location, of each installation, fixture, fitting and appliance inspected,
(f) any defect identified,
(g) any action taken to remedy a defect.

(3) A copy of the record must be—
(a) given to the landlord, and
(b) retained by the landlord for a period of 6 years.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must publish guidance on the carrying out of inspections.

(5) In determining who is competent to carry out an inspection, the landlord must have regard to the guidance.”.

22C Power to modify repairing standard etc.

(1) After section 20 of the 2006 Act insert—

“20A Power to modify repairing standard etc.

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations vary or extend the repairing standard and a landlord’s duty to ensure a house meets that standard.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may, in particular, make provision about—
(a) the tenancies to which this Chapter applies,
(b) determining whether a house meets the repairing standard,
(c) carrying out inspections in relation to the repairing standard.

(3) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify sections 12 to 14 and any other provision of this Chapter.”.

(2) In section 191(5) of the 2006 Act, after “section” insert “20A,.”.

Enforcement of repairing standard

23 Third party application in respect of the repairing standard

(1) In section 22 of the 2006 Act (tenant application to private rented housing panel)—

(a) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) A person mentioned in subsection (1B) may apply to the private rented housing panel for determination of whether a landlord has failed to comply with the duty imposed by section 14(1)(b) (a person who makes such an application being referred to as a “third party applicant”).

(1B) The persons are—
(a) a local authority,
(b) a person specified by order made by the Scottish Ministers.”;

(b) in subsection (2), for “(1) must set out the tenant’s” substitute “(1) or (1A) must set out the tenant’s, or as the case may be, the third party applicant’s”,

(c) in subsection (3), for “such application may be made unless the tenant” substitute “application under this section may be made unless the person making the application”,

18

Housing (Scotland) Bill
Part 3—Private rented housing
(d) in subsection (4), for “such application” substitute “application under this section”, and
(e) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The tenant of the house concerned is entitled to be a party in the determination of any application made under subsection (1A).”.

(2) The title of section 22 of the 2006 Act becomes “Application in respect of the repairing standard”.

(3) In section 22A(1) of the 2006 Act (information to be given to a local authority), after “22(1)” insert “, or under section 22(1A) where the applicant is not a local authority”.

(4) In section 23 of the 2006 Act (referral to private rented housing committee)—
(a) in subsection (1), after “22(1)” insert “or 22(1A)”,
(b) in subsection (2)(b), after “tenant” insert “or third party applicant”,
(c) in subsection (4), after “application”, where it first occurs, insert “under section 22(1)”,
(d) after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) The president must, as soon as practicable after rejecting an application under section 22(1A) give notice of the rejection to—
(a) the third party applicant, and
(b) the tenant.”, and
(e) in subsection (5), for “Such a notice” substitute “A notice under subsection (4) or (4A)”.

(5) In section 24(1) of the 2006 Act (determination by private rented housing committee) for “a tenant’s application under section 22(1)” substitute “an application under section 22(1) or (1A)”.

(6A) In section 181 of the 2006 Act (rights of entry: general)—
(a) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) Any person authorised by a third party applicant is entitled to enter any house in respect of which an application under section 22 may be made for the purposes of enabling or assisting the third party applicant to decide whether to make an application under section 22(1A).”, and

(b) in subsection (2), for “a tenant’s application under section 22(1)” substitute “an application under section 22(1) or (1A)”.

(6B) In section 182 of the 2006 Act (warrants authorising entry)—
(a) in subsection (1), after “subsection (1)” insert “, (1A)”, and

(b) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) In relation to an application for a warrant under section 181(1A), the reference to the occupier in subsection (3) is to be read as including the tenant, the landlord and any known agent of the landlord.”.

(6C) In section 184 of the 2006 Act (rights of entry: supplemental), after subsection (4) insert—
“(4A) In relation to the exercise of the right conferred by section 181(1A), the reference to occupants in subsection (4) is to be read as including the tenant, the landlord and any known agent of the landlord.”.

(6D) In section 187 of the 2006 Act (formal communications), in subsection (3)(b), for “the recorded delivery service” substitute “a service which provides for the delivery of the communication to be recorded”.

(7) In section 194(1) of the 2006 Act (interpretation), after the definition of “tenant” insert—

“third party applicant” has the meaning given by section 22(1A),”.

(8) Section 35(3) of the Private Rented Housing (Scotland) Act 2011 (asp 14) is repealed.

24 Procedure for third party applications

(1) In paragraph 1 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (notification)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (1), for “a tenant’s application” substitute “an application”,

(b) in sub-paragraph (2), for “either party” substitute “the landlord or the tenant”,

(c) in sub-paragraph (3), for “both parties” substitute “the landlord and the tenant”, and

(d) after sub-paragraph (3), insert—

“(4) In the case of an application under section 22(1A), the committee must, in addition to carrying out the matters mentioned in sub-paragraphs (1) to (3)—

(a) serve on the third party applicant a notice containing the matters mentioned in sub-paragraph (1)(a) to (c),

(b) if the committee thinks fit following a request of the third party applicant, change the day specified for the purposes of sub-paragraph (1)(c),

(c) notify—

(i) the third party applicant of any change under sub-paragraph (2)(b),

(ii) the landlord and the tenant of any change under paragraph (b).”.

(2) In paragraph 2 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (inquiries)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (3)(a), for “or tenant” substitute “, the tenant or, as the case may be, third party applicant”,

(b) in sub-paragraph (3)(b), for “or tenant” substitute “, tenant or, as the case may be, third party applicant”,

(c) in sub-paragraph (4)(a), for “in the notice served under” substitute “in accordance with”, and

(d) in sub-paragraph (4)(b), for “in a notice served under paragraph 1(2)(b)” substitute “in accordance with paragraph 1(2)(b) or (4)(b)”.

(3) In paragraph 3(1) of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (evidence), after “tenant” insert “, third party applicant”.

(4) In paragraph 5 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (expenses)—

(a) after sub-paragraph (2)(b), insert—
“(ba) the third party applicant,,” and
(b) in sub-paragraph (2)(c), for “or tenant” substitute “; tenant or third party applicant”.

(5) In paragraph 6 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (recording and notification of decisions)—
(a) in sub-paragraph (1)(a), for “a tenant’s” substitute “an”,
(b) the word “and” at the end of sub-paragraph (3)(c) is repealed, and
(c) for sub-paragraph (3)(d), substitute—
“(d) in the case of an application under section 22(1A), the third party applicant, and
(e) the local authority (unless the local authority is the third party applicant in relation to the decision).”.

(6) After paragraph 7(1) of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (withdrawal of application), insert—
“(1A) A third party applicant may withdraw an application under section 22(1A) at any time.”.

(7) In paragraph 8(1) of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (further provision on procedure), after “22(1)” insert “and 22(1A)”.

25 Appeals in relation to third party applications

(1) In section 64 of the 2006 Act (Part 1 appeals)—
(a) in subsection (4)(a), for “a tenant’s” substitute “an”,
(b) after subsection (4), insert—
“(4A) A third party applicant aggrieved by a decision by a private rented housing committee which—
(a) is mentioned in subsection (4)(a) to (f),
(b) was made following an application by the applicant under section 22(1A), may appeal to the sheriff within 21 days of being notified of that decision.”,
and
(c) in subsection (5), after “tenant” insert “or a third party applicant”.

(2) In section 65(2) of the 2006 Act (determination of appeals), after “64(4)” insert “, (4A)”.

(3) After section 66(3) of the 2006 Act (appeals procedure), insert—
“(3A) In an appeal by a landlord under section 64(4) which relates to a decision following an application under section 22(1A)—
(a) the third party applicant is to be a party to the proceedings,
(b) the tenant is entitled to be a party to the proceedings.

(3B) In an appeal by a tenant under section 64(4) which relates to a decision following an application under section 22(1A), the landlord and the third party applicant are to be parties to the proceedings.

(3C) In an appeal by a third party applicant under section 64(4A)—
(a) the landlord is to be a party to the proceedings,
(b) the tenant is entitled to be a party to the proceedings.”.

PART 4

LETTING AGENTS

Inclusion in the register

26 Register of letting agents

(1) The Scottish Ministers must establish and maintain a register of letting agents (the “register”).

(2) The register must contain an entry for each person entered in the register setting out—

(a) the name and address of the person entered in the register, and

(b) such information relating to that person as the Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must make the information contained in the register publicly available by such means as they consider appropriate.

27 Application for registration

(1) A person may apply to the Scottish Ministers—

(a) to be entered in the register, or

(b) to renew that person’s existing entry in the register.

(2) The application must—

(a) state the name and address of the applicant,

(b) state whether the applicant is—

(i) trading as a sole trader,

(ii) a partnership,

(iii) a company, or

(iv) a body with some other legal status,

(c) in the case where the applicant is a company registered under the Companies Act 2006 (c.46), state the company’s registered number,

(d) in the case where the applicant is not a natural person, state the name and address of the individual who holds the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body,

(e) state the name and address of any other person who—

(i) owns 25% or more of an applicant which is not a natural person, or

(ii) otherwise is (or is to be) directly concerned with the control or governance of the applicant’s letting agency work (whether or not the applicant is a natural person), and

(f) include such other information as the Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe.
23

Part 4—Letting agents

(3) The application must be accompanied by a fee of such amount (if any) as the Scottish Ministers may determine.

28 Offence of providing false information in an application

(1) It is an offence for a person, in an application under section 27, to—

(a) provide information which the person knows is false in a material particular, or
(b) knowingly fail to specify information required by section 27(2).

(2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

29 Decision on application

(1) The Scottish Ministers must determine an application under section 27 in accordance with this section.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must enter the applicant in the register or renew an existing entry if they are satisfied that—

(a) the applicant is a fit and proper person to carry out letting agency work,
(b) any other person who is required to be identified in an application by virtue of section 27 is a fit and proper person in relation to letting agency work, and
(c) the applicant meets such training requirements as the Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe.

(2A) Regulations under subsection (2)(c) may, in particular, prescribe—

(a) the matters on which training must have been undertaken,
(b) the persons who must have undertaken training,
(c) qualifications which must be held by the applicant or other persons,
(d) the period within which training must have taken place.

(3) An applicant who is entered in the register, or whose entry is renewed, is to be known as a “registered letting agent”.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must refuse to enter the applicant in the register or to renew an existing entry if they are not satisfied in accordance with subsection (2).

(5) Before refusing to enter the applicant in the register or to renew an existing entry, the Scottish Ministers must give to the applicant a notice stating that—

(a) they are considering refusing the application and their reasons for doing so, and
(b) the applicant has the right to make written representations to the Scottish Ministers before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(6) In making their decision under this section the Scottish Ministers must consider the application and any representations made in accordance with subsection (5)(b).

(7) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after making their decision under this section, notify the applicant of—

(a) their decision,
(b) in the case of a decision to enter the applicant in the register, the date of entry in the register,
(c) in the case of a decision to renew an existing entry, the date of renewal, and
(d) in the case of a refusal to enter the applicant in the register or to renew an existing entry, their reasons for the refusal and the date of that refusal.

(8) If the Scottish Ministers refuse to renew an existing entry they must remove the registered letting agent from the register on the date of final refusal.

(9) For the purposes of subsection (8) the date of final refusal is the date on which—
(a) the period mentioned in section 36(2) expires without an appeal being made,
(b) where such an appeal is made, the appeal is finally determined or abandoned.

29A Time limit for determining application

(1) This section applies where a person (referred to in this section as the “applicant”) makes an application in accordance with section 27.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must determine the application under section 29 within 12 months of receiving the application.

(3) The period mentioned in subsection (2) may be extended by the First-tier Tribunal, on application by the Scottish Ministers, by such period as the Tribunal thinks fit.

(4) The Tribunal may not extend a period unless the Scottish Ministers apply for the extension before the period expires.

(5) The applicant is entitled to be a party to any proceedings on an application under subsection (3).

(6) The decision of the Tribunal on such an application is final.

(7) If the Scottish Ministers do not determine the application within the period required by this section—
(a) on the day by which they were required to determine the application, they are to be treated as having entered the applicant in the register or, as the case may be, having renewed the applicant’s existing entry in the register, and
(b) the applicant is to be treated as being removed from the register on the expiry of the period of 12 months beginning with that day unless—
(i) before the expiry of the period, the applicant made a subsequent application in accordance with section 27 to renew the applicant’s entry in the register, or
(ii) the applicant is otherwise removed from the register in accordance with this Part.

(8) Where subsection (7) applies the Scottish Ministers must—
(a) notify the applicant—
(i) that subsection (7) applies, and
(ii) of the day on which, in accordance with subsection (7)(a), they are treated as having entered the applicant in the register or, as the case may be, having renewed the applicant’s existing entry in the register, and
(b) enter the name of the applicant in the register or, as the case may be, renew the applicant’s existing entry in the register.

(9) Subject to the modifications in subsection (10), the applicant is for all purposes to be treated as a registered letting agent entered in the register or, as the case may be, whose entry has been renewed by virtue of section 29(2).

(10) The modifications are—

(a) section 34 does not apply,

(b) paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 35(1) are to be read as if for the words “no longer” there were substituted “not”, and

(c) subsections (1)(b) and (4)(b) of section 38 are to be read as if after the word “under” there were inserted “section 29A(7)(b) or”.

30 Fit and proper person considerations

(1) In deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, the Scottish Ministers must have regard to all of the circumstances of the case, including any material falling within subsections (2) and (3).

(2) Material falls within this subsection if it shows that the person has—

(a) been convicted of an offence—

(i) involving fraud or other dishonesty,

(ii) involving violence,

(iii) involving drugs,

(iv) involving firearms,

(v) which is a sexual offence within the meaning of section 210A(10) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46),

(b) practised unlawful discrimination on the grounds of any of the protected characteristics in Part 2 of the Equality Act 2010 (c.15),

(c) contravened any provision of—

(i) the law relating to housing,

(ii) landlord and tenant law,

(iii) the law relating to debt.

(3) Material falls within this subsection if it shows the extent to which any person mentioned in subsection (1) has—

(a) complied with any Letting Agent Code of Practice made under section 41,

(b) complied with any Letting Code issued under section 92A of the 2004 Act,

(c) failed to comply with a duty applying to that person in accordance with section 32 to use a letting agent registration number,

(d) contravened any provision of any letting agent enforcement order issued under section 43,

(e) failed to pay any costs for which the person is liable under this Part arising from an application to the First-tier Tribunal under section 43,
(f) failed to provide information in accordance with section 46A or 46B(2)(d)(i),

(g) obstructed a person acting in the proper exercise of the persons’ functions under sections 46B to 46D,

(h) failed to comply with a requirement made by a person who is so acting.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify this section by adding to, removing or varying any material in subsections (2) and (3).

31A Fit and proper person: criminal record information

(1) This section applies where the Scottish Ministers have reasonable grounds to suspect that the information provided under this Part in relation to material falling within section 30(2) is, or has become, inaccurate.

(2) In deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, the Scottish Ministers may have regard to—

(a) the information referred to in section 113A(3)(a) of the Police Act 1997 (c.50) (prescribed details of every relevant matter relating to the person which is recorded in central records), and

(b) whether the person is subject to notification requirements under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42).

Duties of registered letting agents

32 Letting agent registration number

(1) The Scottish Ministers must allocate a number to each registered letting agent (the “letting agent registration number”).

(2) A registered letting agent must take all reasonable steps to ensure that the agent’s letting agent registration number is included in—

(a) any document sent to a landlord, tenant, prospective landlord or prospective tenant in the course of the agent’s letting agency work,

(b) any property advertisement or communication in relation to the agent’s letting agency work, and

(c) any other document or communication of a type specified by the Scottish Ministers by order.

(3) For the purposes of this section—

(a) “advertisement” includes any form of advertising whether to the public generally, to any section of the public or individually to selected persons, and

(b) “communication” includes electronic communications sent or placed on a web page on a website operated by or on behalf of the registered letting agent.

33 Duty to inform: change of circumstances

(1) This section applies if, in consequence of a change in circumstances, any information provided by a registered letting agent to the Scottish Ministers by virtue of section 27 or, as the case may be, this section, becomes inaccurate.

(2) The registered letting agent must notify the Scottish Ministers in writing, as soon as practicable after the inaccuracy arises, of the change that has occurred.
(3) The notice must be accompanied by a fee of such amount (if any) as the Scottish Ministers may determine.

(4) It is an offence for a person to fail to comply with subsection (2) without reasonable excuse.

(5) A person who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

Removal from the register

34 Duration of registration

(1) The Scottish Ministers must remove a registered letting agent from the register if, on the expiry of the registration period, the registered letting agent has not made an application in accordance with section 27.

(2) The registration period is—

   (a) in the case of a letting agent whose registration has not previously been renewed, the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the entry was made,

   (b) in any other case, the period of 3 years beginning the day after the end of the previous registration period.

35 Revocation of registration

(1) The Scottish Ministers may remove a registered letting agent from the register if they are satisfied that—

   (a) the agent is no longer a fit and proper person to carry out letting agency work,

   (b) any other person who is required to be identified in an application by virtue of section 27 is no longer a fit and proper person in relation to letting agency work or,

   (c) the agent does not meet the training requirements prescribed under section 29(2)(c).

(2) Before removing a registered letting agent from the register under this section the Scottish Ministers must give to the agent a notice stating that—

   (a) they are considering removing the agent from the register and their reasons for doing so, and

   (b) the agent has the right to make written representations to the Scottish Ministers before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(3) In making their decision under this section the Scottish Ministers must consider any representations made in accordance with subsection (2)(b).

(4) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after making a decision to remove a registered letting agent from the register, notify the agent of—

   (a) their decision and their reasons for that decision,

   (b) the date of removal from the register.
Appeals

36 Appeals

(1) A person may appeal to the First-tier Tribunal against a decision by the Scottish Ministers—

(a) under section 29 to refuse to enter that person in the register or to renew that person’s existing entry in the register,

(b) under section 35 to remove that person from the register.

(2) An appeal must be made before the end of the period of 21 days beginning with the date of notification of the decision.

(3) In determining an appeal the Tribunal may make an order requiring the Scottish Ministers to enter the person in the register.

Consequences of refusal or removal

37 Note on register where refusal or removal

(1) Where the Scottish Ministers refuse to enter a person in the register or to renew a person’s existing entry in the register under section 29, they must, after the date of final refusal, note that fact in the register.

(2) Where the Scottish Ministers remove a person from the register under section 35 they must, after the date of final refusal, note that fact in the register.

(3) For the purposes of this section the date of final refusal is the later of the date on which—

(a) the period mentioned in section 36(2) expires without an appeal being made,

(b) where such an appeal has been made, the appeal is finally determined or abandoned.

(4) Where a fact is noted by virtue of subsection (1) or (2) it must—

(a) remain on the register for the period of 12 months beginning with the date on which the Scottish Ministers are required to note it in the register, and

(b) be removed from the register at the end of that period.

(5) But where a person in respect of whom the Scottish Ministers note a fact by virtue of subsection (1) or (2) is subsequently entered in the register before the end of the period mentioned in subsection (4)(a), the Scottish Ministers must remove the fact from the register.

38 No payment for letting agency work where refusal or removal

(1) This section applies where the Scottish Ministers—

(a) refuse to enter a person in the register or to renew the person’s existing entry in the register under section 29,

(b) remove a person from the register under section 34,

(c) remove a person from the register under section 35.

(2) After the relevant date—

(a) no costs incurred by the person in respect of letting agency work are recoverable,
Part 4—Letting agents

(b) no charge imposed by the person which relates to letting agency work in a period after the relevant date is recoverable.

(2A) Subsection (2)(a) does not apply in relation to costs incurred before the relevant date in a case where the person is removed from the register under section 34.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after the relevant date, publish in such manner as they think fit a notice of—

(a) the refusal or removal mentioned in subsection (1),
(b) the relevant date, and
(c) the effect of subsection (2).

(4) For the purposes of this section, the relevant date—

(a) in the case of a refusal or removal mentioned in subsection (1)(a) or (c), is the later of the date on which—

(i) the period mentioned in section 36(2) expires without an appeal being made,
(ii) where such an appeal has been made, the appeal is finally determined or abandoned,
(b) in the case of a removal mentioned in subsection (1)(b), is the day after the day on which the person is removed from the register under section 34.

Offences where no registration

39 Offence of operating as a letting agent without registration

(1) It is an offence for a person who is not a registered letting agent to carry out letting agency work, unless subsection (2) applies to that person.

(2) This subsection applies to a person from the day on which the person is removed from the register under section 35 until—

(a) where the period mentioned in section 36(2) expires without an appeal being made, the expiry of that period,
(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which it is finally determined or abandoned.

(3) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) to show that the person had a reasonable excuse for acting in the way charged.

(4) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, to a fine not exceeding £50,000, or to both.

40 Offence of using a registration number where no registration

(1) It is an offence for a person who is not entered in the register, without reasonable excuse, to use a number purporting to be a letting agent registration number in any document or communication.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a person who is removed from the register under section 35 until—
(a) where the period mentioned in section 36(2) expires without an appeal being made, the expiry of that period,
(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which it is finally determined or abandoned.

(3) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

Code of practice

41 Letting Agent Code of Practice

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, by regulations, set out a code of practice which makes provision about—

(a) the standards of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work,
(b) the handling of tenants’ and landlords’ money by those persons, and
(c) the professional indemnity arrangements to be kept in place by those persons.

(2) The code of practice is to be known as the Letting Agent Code of Practice.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate on a draft of the code of practice.

42 Prohibition on contracting out

(1) The terms of any agreement of a kind mentioned in subsection (2) are of no effect in so far as they purport to—

(a) exclude or limit any duty a letting agent has under the Letting Agent Code of Practice, or
(b) impose any penalty, disability or obligation in the event of a person enforcing compliance by the letting agent with such a duty.

(2) The agreements are—

(a) an agreement between a landlord and a letting agent,
(b) an agreement between a tenant and a letting agent,
(c) an agreement (including a lease) between a landlord and a tenant.

Letting agent enforcement orders

43 Applications to First-tier Tribunal to enforce code of practice

(1) A tenant, a landlord or the Scottish Ministers may apply to the First-tier Tribunal for a determination that a relevant letting agent has failed to comply with the Letting Agent Code of Practice.

(2) A relevant letting agent is—

(a) in relation to an application by a tenant, a letting agent appointed by the landlord to carry out letting agency work in relation to the house occupied (or to be occupied) by the tenant,
(b) in relation to an application by a landlord, a letting agent appointed by the landlord,
(c) in relation to an application by the Scottish Ministers, any letting agent.

(3) An application under subsection (1) must set out the applicant’s reasons for considering that the letting agent has failed to comply with the code of practice.

(4) No application may be made unless the applicant has notified the letting agent of the breach of the code of practice in question.

(5) The Tribunal may reject an application if it is not satisfied that the letting agent has been given a reasonable time in which to rectify the breach.

(6) Subject to subsection (5), the Tribunal must decide on an application under subsection (1) whether the letting agent has complied with the code of practice.

(7) Where the Tribunal decides that the letting agent has failed to comply, it must by order —

(a) — lettings agent enforcement order —

(i) must specify the period within which each step must be taken,

(ii) may provide that the letting agent must pay to the applicant such compensation as the Tribunal considers appropriate for any loss suffered by the applicant as a result of the failure to comply.

(b) a landlord include a former landlord.

44 Variation and revocation of enforcement orders

(1) The First-tier Tribunal may, at any time—

(a) vary a letting agent enforcement order, or

(b) where it considers that the steps required by the order are no longer necessary, revoke it.

(2) References in this Part (including this section) to a letting agent enforcement order are to be treated as references to the order as so varied.

45 Failure to comply with enforcement order

(1) The First-tier Tribunal may, after the period within which a letting agent enforcement order requires steps to be taken, review whether the letting agent has complied with the order.

(2) If the Tribunal decides that the letting agent has failed to comply with the letting agent enforcement order it must notify the Scottish Ministers of that failure.

(3) But the Tribunal may not make such a decision if it is satisfied that the letting agent has a reasonable excuse for failing to comply.
46 Enforcement orders: offence

(1) A letting agent who, without reasonable excuse, fails to comply with a letting agent enforcement order commits an offence.

(2) A letting agent cannot be guilty of an offence under subsection (1) unless the First-tier Tribunal has decided that the letting agent has failed to comply with the order (but such a decision does not establish a presumption that the letting agent has committed an offence under subsection (1)).

(3) A letting agent who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

Monitoring of compliance

46A Power to obtain information

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, for the purpose of monitoring compliance with the provisions of this Part, serve a notice on a person who appears to be a letting agent requiring the person to provide them with information specified in the notice.

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision about the requiring of information under subsection (1) and, in particular, may make provision about—

   (a) the form of the notice and manner of service,
   (b) the time within which information must be provided.

(3) Nothing in this section authorises the Scottish Ministers to require the disclosure of any information if such disclosure would make the person holding it susceptible under any enactment or rule of law to any sanction or other remedy.

46B Power to carry out inspections

(1) For the purpose of monitoring compliance with the provisions of this Part, an authorised person may carry out an inspection of premises which appear to be being used for the purpose of carrying out letting agency work.

(2) For the purposes of carrying out the inspection, the authorised person may—

   (a) enter and inspect the premises,
   (b) require the production of any book, document, data or record (in whatever form it is held) and inspect it, and take copies of or extracts from it,
   (c) take possession of any book, document, data or record (in whatever form it is held) which is on the premises and retain it for as long as the authorised person considers necessary,
   (d) require any person to—

      (i) give the authorised person such information as the authorised person considers necessary,
      (ii) afford the authorised person such facilities and assistance as the authorised person considers necessary.

(3) Nothing in this section authorises the authorised person to require the disclosure of any information if such disclosure would make the person holding it susceptible under any enactment or rule of law to any sanction or other remedy.
(4) In this section—

“authorised person” means a person authorised by the Scottish Ministers,
“premises” includes any place and any vehicle, vessel, or moveable structure.

46C Warrants for entry

(1) A sheriff, justice of the peace or stipendiary magistrate may by warrant authorise a person to enter premises (if necessary using reasonable force) for the purpose of carrying out an inspection under section 46B.

(2) A warrant may be granted under subsection (1) only if the sheriff, justice or magistrate is satisfied by evidence on oath—

(a) that there are reasonable grounds for entering the premises in question, and

(b) that—

(i) entry to the premises has been or is likely to be refused and that notice of the intention to apply for a warrant under this section has been given to the occupier,

(ii) a request for entry, or the giving of such notice, would defeat the object of the proposed entry,

(iii) the premises are unoccupied, or

(iv) the occupier is temporarily absent and it might defeat the object of the entry to await the occupier’s return.

46D Inspections: supplemental

(1) A person entering any premises under section 46B(2)(a) or in accordance with a warrant granted under section 46C may take on to the premises such other persons and such equipment as the person considers necessary.

(2) A right to enter any premises conferred by section 46B(2)(a) may be exercised only at a reasonable time.

(3) The occupier of the premises concerned must be given at least 24 hours’ notice before a person carries out an inspection under section 46B unless the person carrying out the inspection considers that giving such notice would defeat the object of the proposed inspection.

(4) A person carrying out an inspection under section 46B must, if required to do so, produce written evidence of the person’s authorisation to carry out the inspection.

(5) On leaving any premises which a person is authorised to enter by a warrant granted under section 46C, the person must, if the premises are unoccupied or the occupier is temporarily absent, leave the premises as effectively secured against trespassers as the person found them.

(6) A person who takes possession of any item under section 46B(2)(c) must leave a statement on the premises from which the item was removed—

(a) giving particulars of what has been taken, and

(b) stating that the person has taken possession of it.
46E Information and inspection: offence

(1) It is an offence for a person who has been required to provide information in accordance with section 46A or section 46B(2)(d)(i)—

- (a) without reasonable excuse, to fail or refuse to provide the information,
- (b) to knowingly or recklessly make any statement in respect of that information which is false or misleading in a material particular.

(2) It is an offence for a person—

- (a) to intentionally obstruct a person acting in the proper exercise of the persons’ functions under sections 46B to 46D,
- (b) without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with any requirement made under section 46B(2)(b) or (d)(ii) by a person who is so acting.

(3) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) or (2) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

General

47 Transfer of jurisdiction of actions involving letting agents

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations provide that the functions and jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to the actions between the following persons relating to the carrying out of letting agency work are transferred to the First-tier Tribunal—

- (a) a tenant and a relevant letting agent,
- (b) a landlord and a relevant letting agent.

(2) A relevant letting agent is—

- (a) in relation to a tenant, a letting agent appointed by the landlord to carry out letting agency work in relation to the house occupied (or to be occupied) by the tenant,
- (b) in relation to a landlord, a letting agent appointed by the landlord.

(3) References in this section to—

- (a) a tenant include—
  - (i) a person who has entered into an agreement to let a house, and
  - (ii) a former tenant,
- (b) a landlord include a former landlord.

48 Offences by bodies corporate etc.

(1) Where—

- (a) an offence under this Part has been committed by a body corporate or a Scottish partnership or other unincorporated association, and
- (b) it is proved that the offence was committed with the consent or connivance of, or was attributable to any neglect on the part of—

  - (i) a relevant individual, or
  - (ii) an individual purporting to act in the capacity of a relevant individual,
the individual (as well as the body corporate, partnership or, as the case may be, other unincorporated association) commits the offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(2) In subsection (1), “relevant individual” means—

(a) in relation to a body corporate—

(i) a director, manager, secretary or other similar officer of the body,

(ii) where the affairs of the body are managed by its members, the members,

(b) in relation to a Scottish partnership, a partner,

(c) in relation to an unincorporated association other than a Scottish partnership, a person who is concerned in the management or control of the association.

49 Delegation of functions relating to the register

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, to such extent and subject to such conditions as they think appropriate, delegate any of their functions under this Part (other than a function relating to the making of an order or regulations) to such person as they may determine.

(2) A delegation under subsection (1) may be varied or revoked at any time.

50 Landlord registration where agent is a registered letting agent

(1) In section 84(4) of the 2004 Act (registration), for paragraph (d) substitute—

“(d) either—

(i) the person is a registered letting agent, or

(ii) in the case of a person who is not a registered letting agent, the person is a fit and proper person to act for the landlord such as is mentioned in subsection (3)(c) in relation to the lease or, as the case may be, arrangement.”.

(2) In section 88 of the 2004 Act (registered person: appointment of agent)—

(a) in subsection (2B)—

(i) the word “or” at the end of paragraph (a) is repealed, and

(ii) after subsection (b), insert “, or

(c) the person appointed is a registered letting agent.”,

(b) for subsection (4), substitute—

“(4) The condition is that either—

(a) the person is a registered letting agent, or

(b) in the case of a person who is not a registered letting agent, the person is a fit and proper person to act for the registered person in relation to a lease or occupancy arrangement such as is mentioned in subsection (1)(b).”,

(c) in subsection (5), for “(4)” substitute “(4)(b)”.

(3) In section 89 of the 2004 Act (removal from the register)—

(a) in subsection (3)(b) for “(d)” substitute “(d)(ii)”,
(b) after subsection (3), insert—

“(3A) Where—

(a) a person is registered by the local authority by virtue of section 84(4), and

(b) paragraph (d)(i) of that section no longer applies,

the authority may remove the person from the register.”.

(4) In section 90(1) of the 2004 Act (notification of removal from register: registered person), after “89(1)” insert “, (3A)”.

(5) In section 91(1) of the 2004 Act (notification of removal from register: other persons), after “89(1)” insert “, (3A)”.

(6) In section 92(1)(b) of the 2004 Act (appeal), after “89(1)” insert “, (3A)”.

(7) In section 92ZA(1)(a)(ii) of the 2004 Act (duty to note refusals and removals), after “89(1)” insert “, (3A)”.

(8) In section 92A(1)(b) of the 2004 Act (the Letting Code), after “person” where it first occurs insert “(other than a registered letting agent)”.

(9) In section 101 of the 2004 Act (interpretation of Part 8), after the definition of “registered” insert—

“‘registered letting agent’ has the meaning given by section 29(3) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014 (asp 00),”.

51 Meaning of letting agency work

(1) For the purposes of this Part, “letting agency work” means things done by a person in the course of that person’s business in response to relevant instructions which are—

(a) carried out with a view to a landlord who is a relevant person entering into, or seeking to enter into a lease or occupancy arrangement by virtue of which an unconnected person may use the landlord’s house as a dwelling, or

(b) for the purpose of repairing, maintaining, improving, insuring or otherwise managing a house which is, or is to be, subject to a lease or arrangement mentioned in paragraph (a).

(2) In subsection (1)—

(a) “relevant instructions” are instructions received from a person in relation to the house which is, or is to be, subject to a lease or arrangement mentioned in subsection (1)(a), and

(b) “occupancy arrangement”, “unconnected person”, “relevant person” and “use as a dwelling” are to be construed in accordance with section 101 of the 2004 Act.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by order—

(a) provide that “letting agency work” does not include things done—

(i) on behalf of a specified body, or

(ii) for the purpose of a scheme of a specified description, or

(b) otherwise modify the meaning of “letting agency work” for the time being in this section.
(4) A scheme falling within a description specified by the Scottish Ministers under subsection (3)(a)(ii) must be—
   (a) operated by a body which does not carry on the scheme for profit, and
   (b) for the purpose of assisting persons to enter into leases or occupancy agreements.

52 Interpretation of Part 4

In this Part—

“house” is to be construed in accordance with section 101 of the 2004 Act,
“landlord” is to be construed in accordance with section 101 of the 2004 Act,
“letting agent registration number” has the meaning given by section 32(1),
“letting agent” means a person who carries out letting agency work,
“letting agent enforcement order” has the meaning given by section 43(7),
“register” has the meaning given by section 26(1),
“registered letting agent” has the meaning given by section 29(3), “tenant”, in relation to an occupancy arrangement, means the person who under the arrangement is permitted to occupy the house.

PART 5
MOBILE HOME SITES WITH PERMANENT RESIDENTS

General application

53 Licensing of sites for permanent residents

(1) In section 32(1) of the 1960 Act (application of Part 1 to Scotland), after paragraph (l) insert—

“(m) the modifications in Part 1A.”.

(2) After section 32 of the 1960 Act, insert—

“PART 1A

LICENSES UNDER PART 1A

General application

32A Licences under Part 1A

(1) Subject to the modifications mentioned in subsection (2), Part 1 applies in relation to—

(a) a relevant permanent site as it applies to a caravan site within the meaning of section 1(4),

(b) a relevant permanent site application as it applies in relation to an application for a site licence under Part 1, and

(c) a site licence issued or renewed under this Part (a “Part 1A site licence”) as it applies to a site licence within the meaning of section 1(1).

(2) The modifications are—
(a) the offence in section 1 does not apply to the holder of a Part 1A site licence in relation to that person’s use of the relevant permanent site which is the subject of the licence,

(b) sections 3 and 6 do not apply in relation to a relevant permanent site application,

(c) sections 4 and 9 do not apply in relation to a Part 1A site licence, and

(d) the further modifications in this Part.”.

Part 1A site licence

54 Relevant permanent site application

After section 32A of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 53(2)), insert—

“Part 1A site licence

32B Relevant permanent site application

(1) A relevant permanent site application may be made by the occupier of land to the local authority in whose area the land is situated.

(2) A relevant permanent site application must—

(a) be in writing and in such format as is determined by the local authority,

(b) specify the land in respect of which the application is made,

(c) include information specified in regulations made under section 32N, and

(d) include any information relevant to the material falling within section 32O(2) in relation to—

(i) the applicant,

(ii) any person to be appointed by the applicant to manage the site, and

(iii) any other person whom the local authority is required to be satisfied is a fit and proper person in accordance with section 32D(1)(b) or (2)(b).

(3) An applicant must, either at the time of making the application or subsequently, give to the local authority such other information as the authority may reasonably require.

32C Fee for relevant permanent site application

(1) A relevant permanent site application must be accompanied by a fee of such amount (if any) as the relevant local authority may fix.

(2) An authority may fix different fees for different applications or types of application.

(3) A fee fixed by an authority must not exceed an amount which it considers represents the reasonable costs of an authority in deciding a relevant permanent site application.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations subject to the negative procedure make provision about the charging of fees under subsection (1).
(5) Regulations made under subsection (4) may in particular—

(a) provide for the fee not to exceed such amount as may be prescribed by the regulations,

(b) specify matters to be taken into account by an authority when fixing a fee.”.

55  Issue, renewal, transfer and transmission of a Part 1A site licence

After section 32C of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 54), insert—

“32D  Issue and renewal of a Part 1A site licence

(1) A local authority may issue a Part 1A site licence if—

(a) the applicant is, when the Part 1A site licence is issued, entitled to the benefit of planning permission for the use of the land as a relevant permanent site otherwise than by a development order, and

(b) the authority is satisfied—

(i) that the applicant is a fit and proper person to hold a site licence,

(ii) in the case where an applicant is not a natural person, that the individual who holds the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body is a fit and proper person in relation to a site licence,

(iii) that any person to be appointed by the applicant to manage the site is a fit and proper person to do so, and

(iv) in the case where a person to be appointed by the applicant to manage the site is not a natural person, that any individual who is to be directly concerned with the management of the site on behalf of that manager is a fit and proper person to do so.

(2) A local authority must renew a Part 1A site licence if—

(a) the applicant is, when the Part 1A site licence is renewed, entitled to the benefit of planning permission for the use of the land as a relevant permanent site otherwise than by a development order, and

(b) the authority is satisfied—

(i) that the applicant is a fit and proper person to hold a site licence,

(ii) in the case where an applicant is not a natural person, that the individual who holds the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body is a fit and proper person in relation to a site licence,

(iii) that any person appointed, or to be appointed, by the applicant to manage the site is a fit and proper person to do so, and

(iv) in the case where a person appointed, or to be appointed, by the applicant to manage the site is not a natural person, that any individual who is, or is to be, directly concerned with the management of the site on behalf of that manager is a fit and proper person to do so.
(3) The local authority must not issue a Part 1A site licence to a person whom the local authority knows has held a site licence which has been revoked under this Act less than 3 years before that time.

(4) Before refusing to issue or renew a Part 1A site licence, the authority must give to the applicant a notice stating that—

(a) it is considering refusing the application and its reasons for doing so, and

(b) the applicant has the right to make written representations to the authority before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(5) In making its decision under this section the local authority must consider the application and any representations made in accordance with subsection (4)(b).

32E Application to transfer a Part 1A site licence

(1) This section applies where, under section 10(1), the holder of a Part 1A site licence seeks the consent of the local authority for the transfer of the licence to a person who is to become the occupier of the relevant permanent site (in this section the “transferee”).

(2) The local authority may refuse consent to the transfer on the ground that the authority is not satisfied—

(a) that the transferee is a fit and proper person to hold a site licence,

(b) in the case where the transferee is not a natural person, that the individual who holds the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body is a fit and proper person in relation to a site licence,

(c) that any person to be appointed by the transferee to manage the site is a fit and proper person to do so, and

(d) in the case where a person to be appointed by the transferee to manage the site is not a natural person, that any individual who is to be directly concerned with the management of the site on behalf of that manager is a fit and proper person to do so.

(3) The applicant and the transferee must, either at the time of making the application or subsequently, give to the local authority such information as the authority may reasonably require in order to determine if the persons mentioned in subsection (2) are fit and proper persons.

(4) Before refusing to consent to the transfer under subsection (2), the authority must give to the applicant a notice stating that—

(a) it is considering refusing the application and its reasons for doing so, and

(b) the applicant has the right to make written representations to the authority before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(5) In making its decision under this section the local authority must consider the application and any representations made in accordance with subsection (4)(b).
32F Time limit for determining application

(1) This section applies where a person—

(a) makes a relevant permanent site application to a local authority in accordance with section 32B, or

(b) makes an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E.

(2) The local authority must determine the application under section 32D or, as the case may be, sections 10 and 32E before the time limit specified under subsection (2A).

(2A) The Scottish Ministers must, by regulations subject to the negative procedure, specify a time limit for the purposes of each application to which this section applies (and in doing so may specify different limits for different applications or types of application).

(3) The period mentioned in subsection (2) may be extended by the sheriff, on summary application by the local authority, by such period as the sheriff thinks fit.

(4) The sheriff may not extend a period unless the local authority applies for the extension before the period expires.

(5) The applicant is entitled to be a party to any proceedings on such summary application.

(6) The sheriff’s decision on such summary application is final.

(7) If the local authority does not determine a relevant permanent site application within the period required by this section—

(a) the authority is to be treated as having issued a Part 1A site licence, on the day by which the authority was required to determine the application, and

(b) the relevant person is for all purposes to be treated as having been issued a Part 1A site licence by the local authority under section 32D.

(8) If the local authority does not determine an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E within the period required by this section, the authority is to be treated as having given its consent to the transfer on the day on which the application was made.

32G Local authority power to transfer licence where no application

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the holder of a Part 1A site licence does not seek the consent of the local authority for the transfer of the licence under section 10(1), and

(b) it appears to the authority that the licence holder is no longer the occupier of the relevant permanent site.

(2) The local authority may transfer the licence to a person whom the authority considers to be the occupier of the relevant permanent site (in this section the “transferee”).
(3) Before deciding to transfer the licence under subsection (2), the authority must give to the licence holder and the transferee a notice stating that—

(a) it is considering transferring the licence to the transferee under this section and its reasons for doing so, and

(b) the licence holder and the transferee each have the right to make written representations to the authority before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(4) In making its decision under this section the local authority must consider any representations made in accordance with subsection (3)(b).

(5) The licence holder and the transferee must give to the local authority such information as the authority may reasonably require in order to make a decision under this section.

(6) It is an offence for a person to knowingly or recklessly provide information which is false or misleading in a material respect to a local authority in purported compliance with a request under subsection (5).

(7) A person who commits an offence under subsection (6) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

32H Transfer of Part 1A site licences on death: relevant permanent sites

Where a Part 1A site licence is transferred to a person in accordance with section 10(4), that person must give to the local authority such information as the authority may reasonably require in order to make a determination under section 32L.

32I Notification of decision on Part 1A site licence

(1) A local authority must, as soon as practicable after making a decision mentioned in subsection (2), notify the persons mentioned in subsection (3) of—

(a) the making of the decision, and

(b) the right to appeal under section 32M.

(2) The decisions are—

(a) the determination of a relevant permanent site application,

(b) the determination of an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E,

(c) the decision to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32G.

(3) The persons are—

(a) in the case of a determination of a relevant permanent site application, the applicant,

(b) in the case of a determination of an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E, the applicant and the transferee,
(c) in the case of a decision of the local authority to transfer a licence under section 32G, the previous holder of the Part 1A site licence and the transferee.

(4) A local authority must give to the persons mentioned in subsection (3) its reasons for making a decision mentioned in subsection (2).”.

56 Duration of a Part 1A site licence

After section 32I of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 55), insert—

“32J Duration of a Part 1A site licence

(1) A Part 1A site licence—

(a) comes into operation at the time specified in or determined under the licence, and

(b) unless terminated by its revocation, continues in force until—

(i) the licence holder is not entitled to the benefit of planning permission for the use of the land as a caravan site, or any planning permission for the use of the relevant permanent site as a caravan site expires, or

(ii) if earlier, the day which is 5 years after the day on which the licence comes into operation.

(2) The Scottish Ministers may, by order subject to the affirmative procedure, amend subsection (1)(b)(ii) so as to substitute for the figure for the time being specified there a different figure.”.

57 Duty to inform local authority where change

After section 32J of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 56), insert—

“32K Duty to inform local authority where change

(1) The holder of a Part 1A site licence must notify the local authority which issued the licence—

(a) of the appointment of any new person to manage the site, and

(b) if, in consequence of a change of circumstances, any information provided by the licence holder to the local authority by virtue of this Part becomes inaccurate.

(2) The notification must be made—

(a) in the case of an appointment mentioned in subsection (1)(a), no later than the day on which the appointment takes effect, and

(b) in any other case, before the end of the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which the inaccuracy arises.

(3) The licence holder must, either at the time of notifying the local authority or subsequently, give to the authority such other information in relation to the appointment as the authority may reasonably require.
(4) Where a local authority requests information under subsection (3), the licence holder must provide the information before the end of the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which the request is made.”.

58 Revocation of a Part 1A site licence: fit and proper person

After section 32K of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 57), insert—

“32L Revocation of a Part 1A site licence: fit and proper person

(1) A local authority which issued a Part 1A site licence may revoke the licence if the authority is satisfied—

(a) that the licence holder is not, or is no longer, a fit and proper person to hold a site licence,

(b) in the case where the licence holder is not a natural person, that the individual who holds the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body is not, or is no longer, a fit and proper person in relation to a site licence,

(c) that any person appointed by the licence holder to manage the site is not, or is no longer, a fit and proper person to do so, or

(d) in the case where a person appointed by the licence holder to manage the site is not a natural person, that any individual who is directly concerned with the management of the site on behalf of that manager is not, or is no longer, a fit and proper person to do so.

(2) Where a local authority proposes to revoke a Part 1A site licence under this section, the authority must serve on the licence holder a notice stating that—

(a) it is considering revoking the licence under this section and its reasons for doing so, and

(b) the licence holder has the right to make written representations to the authority before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(3) In making its decision under this section the local authority must consider any representations made in accordance with subsection (2)(b).

(4) Where a local authority revokes a licence under this section, the authority must serve on the person who held the licence a notice which—

(a) states that the authority has revoked the licence,

(b) explains the right of appeal conferred by section 32M.

(5) Where a local authority revokes a licence under this section, the authority must give to the person who held the licence its reasons for doing so.”.

59 Appeals relating to a Part 1A site licence

After section 32L of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 58), insert—

“32M Appeals relating to a Part 1A site licence

(1) A person mentioned in subsection (2) may by summary application appeal to the sheriff against—
(a) the refusal by the local authority to issue or renew a Part 1A site licence following a relevant permanent site application,
(b) the determination by the local authority of an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E,
(c) the decision by the local authority to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32G,
(d) the decision by the local authority to revoke a Part 1A site licence under section 32L.

(2) The persons are—

(a) in the case of a determination of a relevant permanent site application, the applicant,
(b) in the case of a determination of an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E—
   (i) the applicant,
   (ii) the transferee,
(c) in the case of a decision by the local authority to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32G—
   (i) the previous holder of the Part 1A site licence,
   (ii) the transferee,
(d) in the case of a decision of the local authority to revoke a Part 1A site licence under section 32L, the person who held the licence.”.

60 Power to make provision in relation to procedure and appeals

After section 32M of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 59), insert—

‘‘32N Power to make provision in relation to procedure and appeals

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, by regulations subject to the negative procedure, make provision in relation to—

(aa) the procedure to be followed in relation to—
   (i) the issue, renewal, transfer, transmission and revocation of a Part 1A site licence,
   (ii) appeals under section 32M,
(ab) the determination and consequences of an appeal under section 32M.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may in particular make provision for or in connection with—

(a) the procedure to be followed by the person making an application for—
   (i) a new Part 1A site licence,
   (ii) the renewal of an existing Part 1A site licence which is due to expire,
   (iii) consent to transfer a Part 1A site licence,
Part 5—Mobile home sites with permanent residents

(b) the procedure to be followed by a person following the transfer of a licence,

c) the information to be provided in relation to an application mentioned in paragraph (a) or a transfer mentioned in section 32G or 32H,

d) the procedure to be followed in determining an application mentioned in paragraph (a) or in considering a transfer mentioned in section 32G or 32H,

e) the procedure to be followed after an application mentioned in paragraph (a) is determined or a transfer mentioned in section 32G or 32H is considered,

(ea) the time limits for the giving of reasons under section 32I(4) and 32L(5),

g) the time limits applying in relation to appeals,

(h) the procedure to be followed by the person making an appeal.”.

Fit and proper persons

61 Fit and proper person considerations

After section 32N of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 60), insert—

“Fit and proper persons

32O Fit and proper person considerations

(1) In deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, the local authority must have regard to all of the circumstances of the case, including any material falling within subsections (2) to (5).

(2) Material falls within this subsection if it shows that the person has—

(a) been convicted of an offence—

(i) involving fraud or other dishonesty,

(ii) involving violence,

(iii) involving drugs,

(iv) involving firearms,

(v) which is a sexual offence within the meaning of section 210A(10) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46),

(b) practised unlawful discrimination on the grounds of any of the protected characteristics in Part 2 of the Equality Act 2010 (c.15),

(c) contravened any provision of—

(i) the law relating to caravans,

(ii) the law relating to housing,

(iii) landlord and tenant law,

(ca) committed a breach of an agreement to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 applies,

(d) engaged in antisocial behaviour within the meaning of section 143 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),
(e) breached the conditions of a site licence issued under Part 1 or Part 1A of this Act.

(3) Material falls within this subsection if it relates to the failure by a person to provide information which that person is required to give to the local authority in accordance with this Part.

(4) Material falls within this subsection if it relates to a complaint made by a person of which the local authority is aware about antisocial behaviour within the meaning of section 143 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8) on the relevant permanent site.

(5) Material falls within this subsection if it is material of which the local authority is aware as a result of any other function carried out by the authority and it appears to the authority to be relevant to the question of whether the person is a fit and proper person.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may, by order subject to the affirmative procedure, modify this section by adding to, removing or varying any material in subsections (2) to (5).”.

62  Fit and proper person: criminal conviction certificate

After section 32O of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 61), insert—

“32P  Fit and proper person: criminal conviction certificate

(1) A local authority may, in deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, require the person in respect of whom the decision is being made to provide the local authority with a criminal conviction certificate (within the meaning of section 112 of the Police Act 1997 (c.50)).

(2) A local authority may require a criminal conviction certificate to be provided under subsection (1) only if it has reasonable grounds to suspect that the information provided under this Part in relation to material falling within section 32O(2) is, or has become, inaccurate.”.

62A  Fit and proper person: information sharing

After section 32P of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 62), insert—

“32PA  Fit and proper person: information sharing

(1) A local authority may, for the purpose of another local authority deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, provide to that other authority information which falls within subsection (2).

(2) Information falls within this subsection if the local authority holding the information considers that—

(a) it is likely to be relevant to the other authority’s decision under this Part as to whether a person is a fit and proper person, and

(b) it ought to be provided for that purpose.

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) apply despite any duty of confidentiality owed to any person in respect of the information by the authority disclosing the information.”.
Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

63 Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

After section 32P of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 62), insert—

“Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

32Q Offences in connection with information requirements

(1) It is an offence for a person to knowingly or recklessly provide information which is false or misleading in a material respect to a local authority in purported compliance with—

(a) a requirement under section 32B,

(b) a requirement under section 32E(3),

(c) a requirement under section 32H,

(d) a requirement under section 32K.

(1A) It is an offence for a person, without reasonable excuse—

(a) to fail to notify a local authority in accordance with 32K(1) and (2), or

(b) to fail to provide information in accordance with section 32K(3) and (4).

(2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) or (1A) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

32R Relevant permanent sites: use without a licence

(1) It is an offence for the occupier of land to cause or permit that land to be used as a relevant permanent site unless—

(a) the occupier is the holder of a Part 1A site licence in relation to the site, or

(b) subsection (2) or (3) applies to that person.

(2) This subsection applies to a person from the day on which the person makes a relevant permanent site application to a local authority in accordance with section 32B until—

(a) that application is determined under section 32D,

(b) in the case of a refusal by the authority to issue or renew a Part 1A site licence under that section, the day on which the period during which the applicant may make an appeal under section 32M(1)(a) expires without an appeal being made, or

(c) where such an appeal is made, the day on which it is finally determined or abandoned.

(3) This subsection applies to a person from the day on which the person’s Part 1A site licence is revoked under section 32L until—

(a) the day on which the period during which the person can make an appeal under section 32M(1)(d) expires without an appeal being made, or

(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which it is finally determined or abandoned.
(4) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £50,000.

32S Relevant permanent sites: breach of licence conditions

(1) It is an offence for the holder of a Part 1A site licence to fail to comply with any condition of a Part 1A site licence issued in relation to the site.

(2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £10,000.”.

Local authority enforcement at relevant permanent sites

64 Improvement notices

After section 32T of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 63), insert—

“Local authority enforcement at relevant permanent sites

32U Breach of licence condition: improvement notice

(1) If it appears to a local authority which issued a Part 1A site licence that the licence holder is failing or has failed to comply with a condition of the Part 1A site licence, the authority may serve an improvement notice on the licence holder.

(2) An improvement notice is a notice which—

(a) sets out the condition in question and details of the failure to comply with it,

(b) requires the licence holder to take such steps as the local authority considers appropriate and as are specified in the notice in order to ensure that that condition is complied with,

(c) specifies the period within which those steps must be taken,

(d) explains the right of appeal conferred by subsection (3).

(3) The holder of a Part 1A site licence who has been served with an improvement notice may by summary application appeal to the sheriff against—

(a) the issue of that notice,

(b) the terms of that notice.

(3A) The period specified in an improvement notice under subsection (2)(c) must begin on the later of—

(a) the day on which the period during which the person may make an appeal under subsection (3) expires, or

(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which the appeal is finally determined or abandoned.

(4) A local authority may—

(a) suspend an improvement notice,

(b) revoke an improvement notice,

(c) vary an improvement notice by extending the period specified in the notice under subsection (2)(c).
(5) The power to suspend, revoke or vary an improvement notice is exercisable by the local authority—
   (a) on an application made by the licence holder, or
   (b) on the authority's own initiative.

(6) Where a local authority suspends, revokes or varies an improvement notice, the authority must notify the licence holder to whom the notice relates of the decision as soon as is reasonably practicable.

32V Improvement notice: offence

(1) It an offence for a licence holder who has been served with an improvement notice to fail to take the steps specified in the notice within the period so specified.

(3) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £10,000.

(4) In proceedings against a licence holder for an offence under subsection (1), it is a defence that the licence holder had a reasonable excuse for failing to take the steps referred to in subsection (1) within the period referred to in that subsection.

32W Local authority power to carry out steps in an improvement notice

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) an improvement notice has been served in relation to a relevant permanent site, and
   (b) the licence holder fails to take the steps specified in the notice within the period so specified.

(2) The local authority which issued the improvement notice may—
   (a) take any steps required by the improvement notice to be taken by the occupier, but which have not been so taken, and
   (b) take such further action as the authority considers appropriate for ensuring that the condition specified in the improvement notice is complied with.

(3) Where a local authority proposes to take action under subsection (2), the authority must serve on the occupier of the relevant permanent site a notice which—
   (a) identifies the land and the improvement notice to which it relates,
   (b) states that the authority intends to enter onto the land,
   (c) describes the action the authority intends to take on the land,
   (d) if the person whom the authority proposes to authorise to take the action on its behalf is not an officer of the authority, states the name of that person, and
   (e) sets out the dates and times on which it is intended that the action will be taken (in particular, when the authority intends to start taking the action and when it expects the action to be completed).
(4) The notice must be served sufficiently in advance of when the local authority intends to enter onto the land as to give the occupier of the relevant permanent site reasonable notice of the intended entry.”.

65 Penalty notices

After section 32W of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 64), insert—

“32X Penalty notice where no licence or breach of licence

(1) A local authority may serve a penalty notice on the occupier of a relevant permanent site if it appears to the local authority that the occupier—

(a) has caused or permitted the relevant permanent site to be used as a caravan site without being the holder of a Part 1A site licence in relation to the site, or

(b) has been served with an improvement notice and has failed to take the steps specified in the notice within the period so specified.

(2) A penalty notice is a notice which—

(a) sets out the condition in question and details of the failure to comply with it,

(b) explains the effect of subsection (3),

(c) specifies the period within which the penalty applies,

(d) explains the right of appeal conferred by subsection (6).

(3) Where a penalty notice is served under this section—

(a) no amount which a person is required to pay to the occupier of the relevant permanent site in respect of—

(i) the right to station a caravan on the site,

(ii) rent for the occupation of a caravan on the site, or

(iii) the use of the common areas of the site and their maintenance, is payable for the period specified in the notice under subsection (2)(c), and

(b) no commission on sale payable in accordance with paragraph 8 of Part 1 of Schedule 1 to the Mobile Homes Act 1983 (c.34) is payable to the occupier of the relevant permanent site in respect of a caravan on the site for the period specified in the notice under subsection (2)(c).

(3A) The period specified in a penalty notice under subsection (2)(c) must begin on the later of—

(a) the day on which the period during which the person may make an appeal under subsection (6) expires, or

(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which the appeal is finally determined or abandoned.

(4) The local authority must, as soon as practicable after serving a notice under this section and in such manner as it thinks fit, notify the occupiers of caravans on the site of the existence of the notice.
(5) The ways in which a notification under subsection (4) may be carried out include by fixing a notice in a prominent place at or near the main entrance to the relevant permanent site.

(6) The occupier of a relevant permanent site in respect of which a local authority has served a penalty notice may, within the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which the notice was served, by summary application appeal to the sheriff against the decision.”.

66 Appointment of interim manager

After section 32X of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 65), insert—

“32Y Power to appoint interim manager

(1) A local authority which has issued a Part 1A site licence may apply to the sheriff for an order appointing an interim manager of the site.

(2) An order may be granted by the sheriff if—

(a) the authority has refused to renew a Part 1A site licence under section 32D,

(b) the authority has revoked a Part 1A site licence under section 32L, or

(c) the sheriff is satisfied that—

(i) the licence holder is failing or has failed, either seriously or repeatedly, to comply with a condition of the Part 1A site licence,

(ii) the site is not being managed by a person who is a fit and proper person to manage the site, or

(iii) there is no one managing the site.

(3) The appointment of an interim manager is to be on terms (including as to remuneration and expenses) specified in, or determined in accordance with, the appointment.

(4) The interim manager has—

(a) any power specified in the appointment, and

(b) any other power in relation to the management of the site required by the interim manager for the purposes specified in the appointment (including the power to enter into agreements and take other action on behalf of the occupier of the site).

(5) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations subject to the negative procedure make further provision about the appointment of an interim manager.

(6) Regulations under subsection (5) may, in particular, make provision in relation to—

(a) the procedure to be followed in making an application,

(b) the powers of an interim manager,

(c) property which vests in the interim manager on the interim manager’s appointment,

(d) the qualifications that must be held by any person appointed as interim manager,
(e) the actions that must be carried out by an interim manager during and after the manager’s appointment,
(f) the payment and recovery of the remuneration and expenses of the interim manager,
(g) the assistance to be provided to the interim manager by the licence holder and other persons,
(h) powers of entry to the relevant permanent site,
(i) criminal offences which are to apply to failures to comply with the regulations,
(j) the procedure for and consequences of the termination of the interim manager’s appointment.”.

67 Emergency action

After section 32Y of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 66), insert—

“32Z Power to take emergency action

(1) A local authority which has issued a Part 1A site licence may take emergency action in relation to the site concerned if it appears to the authority that—

(a) the licence holder is failing or has failed to comply with a condition for the time being attached to the Part 1A site licence, and

(b) as a result of that failure there is an imminent risk of serious harm to the health or safety of any person who is or may be on the land.

(2) A local authority in whose area land is being used as a relevant permanent site may take emergency action in relation to the land concerned if it appears to the authority that—

(a) the occupier is causing or permitting that land to be used as a relevant permanent site,

(b) the occupier does not hold a Part 1A site licence in relation to the land, and

(c) there is an imminent risk of serious harm to the health or safety of any person who is or may be on the land.

(3) The emergency action a local authority may take is such action as appears to the authority to be necessary to remove the imminent risk of serious harm mentioned in subsection (1)(b) or, as the case may be, subsection (2)(c).

(4) Where a local authority proposes to take emergency action, the authority must serve on the licence holder or, as the case may be, the occupier of the relevant permanent site an emergency action notice.

(5) An emergency action notice is a notice which—

(a) identifies the land to which it relates,

(b) states that the authority intends to enter onto the land,

(c) describes the emergency action the authority intends to take on the land,
(d) if the person whom the authority proposes to authorise to take the action on its behalf is not an officer of the authority, states the name of that person, and

(e) specifies the powers under this section and section 26 as the powers under which the authority intends to enter onto the land.

(6) An emergency action notice may state that, if entry onto the land were to be refused, the authority would propose to apply for a warrant under section 26(2).

(7) The local authority must serve on the licence holder or, as the case may be, the occupier of the relevant permanent site an emergency action report within the period of 7 days beginning with the date when the authority starts taking the emergency action.

(8) An emergency action report is a notice which—

(a) describes the imminent risk of serious harm to the health or safety of persons who are or may be on the land,

(b) describes the emergency action which has been, and any emergency action which is to be, taken by the authority on the land,

(c) sets out when the authority started taking the emergency action and when the authority expects it to be completed,

(d) if the person whom the authority has authorised to take the action on its behalf is not an officer of the authority, states the name of that person, and

(e) explains the right of appeal conferred by subsection (10).

(9) The ways in which an emergency action notice and an emergency action report may be served include by fixing it in a prominent place at or near the main entrance to the relevant permanent site.

(10) A licence holder or, as the case may be, an occupier of land in respect of which a local authority has taken or is taking emergency action may by summary application appeal to the sheriff against the taking of the action by the authority.

(11) The grounds on which the appeal may be brought are—

(a) that there was no imminent risk of serious harm as mentioned in subsection (1)(b) or, as the case may be, subsection (2)(c) (or, where the action is still being taken, that there is no such risk),

(b) that the action the authority has taken was not necessary to remove the imminent risk of serious harm mentioned in subsection (1)(b) or, as the case may be, subsection (2)(c) (or, where the action is still being taken, that it is not necessary to remove the risk).”.

68 Powers of entry

After section 32Z of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 67), insert—

“32Z1 Powers of entry in relation to relevant permanent site

(1) Section 26 (as modified by section 32) applies in relation to a relevant permanent site—
Recovery of inspection and enforcement expenses

After section 32Z1 of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 68), insert—

“32Z2 Expenses of issuing notices

(1) This section applies where a local authority has served—

(a) an improvement notice,
(b) a penalty notice,
(c) an emergency action notice, or
(d) an emergency action report.

(2) The local authority may recover from the licence holder or, as the case may be, the occupier of the relevant permanent site—

(a) expenses incurred by the authority in deciding whether to serve the notice or report,
(b) expenses incurred by the authority in preparing and serving the notice or report, and
(c) interest, at such reasonable rate as the authority may determine, in respect of the period beginning on a date specified by the authority until the whole amount is paid.

(3) The expenses referred to in subsection (2) include in particular the costs of obtaining expert advice (including legal advice).
32Z3 Expenses of taking action under improvement notice or emergency action notice

(1) A local authority which has taken action in accordance with an improvement notice or an emergency action notice may recover from the licence holder or, as the case may be, the occupier of the relevant permanent site—

(a) expenses incurred by the authority in deciding whether to take the action,

(b) expenses incurred by the authority in taking the action, and

(c) interest, at such reasonable rate as the authority may determine, in respect of the period beginning on a date specified by the authority until the whole amount is paid.

(2) The expenses referred to in subsection (1) include in particular the costs of obtaining expert advice (including legal advice).

32Z4 Expenses of local authority in relation to Part 1A licences

The local authority which issued a Part 1A site licence may require the licence holder to pay the amount of any expenses incurred by the authority in relation to—

(a) inspecting a relevant permanent site for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is, or has been, any contravention of the provisions of this Act,

(b) assessing or investigating compliance by the licence holder with the provisions of this Act following an inspection.”.

Miscellaneous

70 Part 1A of the 1960 Act: miscellaneous provision

After section 32Z4 of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 69), insert—

“Miscellaneous

32Z5 Interpretation of Part 1A

(1) In this Part—

“emergency action notice” has the meaning given by section 32Z(5),

“emergency action report” has the meaning given by section 32Z(8),

“excepted permission” means a permission (by virtue of planning permission or a site licence under Part 1) to station a caravan on the land for human habitation all year round, if the caravan is, or is to be, authorised to be occupied by—

(a) the occupier,

(b) a person employed by the occupier but who does not occupy the caravan under an agreement to which section 1(1) of the Mobile Homes Act 1983 (c.34) applies,

“improvement notice” has the meaning given by section 32U(2),

“licence holder” means the person holding the Part 1A site licence,
“Part 1A site licence” has the meaning given by section 32A(1)(c),

“penalty notice” has the meaning given by section 32X(2),

“planning permission” means planning permission under Part 3 of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1997 (c.8),

“relevant permanent site” means land in respect of which a site licence is required under Part 1, other than land for which the relevant planning permission or the site licence—

(a) is expressed to be granted for holiday use only,

(b) is otherwise so expressed or subject to conditions that there are times of the year when no caravan may be stationed on the land for human habitation, or

(c) would meet the conditions in paragraph (a) or (b) if any excepted permission is disregarded,

“relevant permanent site application” means, irrespective of the conditions in the relevant planning permission, an application for the issue or renewal of a Part 1A site licence authorising the use of land as a caravan site, other than an application for a licence—

(a) to be expressed to be granted for holiday use only,

(b) to be otherwise so expressed or subject to conditions that there will be times of the year when no caravan may be stationed on the land for human habitation, or

(c) which would meet the conditions in paragraph (a) or (b) if any part of the application for excepted permission were disregarded.

(2) Any reference in this Part to the sheriff is to the sheriff having jurisdiction in the place where the relevant permanent site is situated.

(3) Otherwise, words and expressions (as modified by section 32) have the same meaning in this Part as in Part 1.

32Z5A Guidance

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, after consulting such persons as they consider appropriate, publish guidance about the operation of this Part.

(2) A local authority must have regard to any guidance published when carrying out its functions under this Part.”.

71 Transitional provision for existing site licences

(1) This section applies to a site licence issued under the 1960 Act which—

(a) was issued before the day on which section 56 comes into force in respect of land which is a relevant permanent site,

(b) is in force on that day.

(2) The site licence continues in force until the earliest of—

(a) the end of the period of 2 years beginning with the day on which section 56 comes into force,
(b) the day on which the licence is revoked under, or expires in accordance with, the provisions of the 1960 Act, or
(c) the day on which a Part 1A site licence is issued in relation to the site.

(3) During the period for which a site licence continues in force under this section, the provisions of Part 1A of the 1960 Act do not apply to the site licence or in respect of the land which is a relevant permanent site.

(4) In this section, “Part 1A site licence” and “relevant permanent site” have the same meanings as in section 32Z5 of the 1960 Act (as inserted by section 70).

71A Agreements to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 applies

In Schedule 1 to the Mobile Homes Act 1983 (c.34)—

(a) after paragraph 1, insert—

“1A (1) The right to station the mobile home under in paragraph 1 is not affected by—

(a) the expiry of a Part 1A site licence in accordance with section 32J(1)(b)(ii) of the 1960 Act,
(b) the refusal to issue or renew a Part 1A site licence under section 32D of the 1960 Act,
(c) the revocation of a Part 1A site licence under section 32L of the 1960 Act, or
(d) the expiry of a site licence in accordance with section 71(2) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014 (asp 00).

(2) Sub-paragraph (1) applies in relation to agreements that were made at any time before the day on which that sub-paragraph comes into force (as well as in relation to agreements made on or after that day).

(3) In this paragraph—

“the 1960 Act” means the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (c.62), and

“Part 1A site licence” has the same meaning as in section 32Z5 of the 1960 Act.”.

(b) in paragraph 23, after sub-paragraph (1)(a) insert—

“(aa) no regard may be had to any costs paid, or to be paid, by the owner in connection with expenses recovered by a local authority under—

(i) section 32Z2(2) of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960, (ii) subsection (1)(a) or (c) of section 32Z3 of that Act, or

(iii) section 32Z4 of that Act, (ab) no regard may be had to any costs paid, or to be paid, by the owner in connection with the owner being convicted of an offence under Part 1A of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.”.
PART 6
PRIVATE HOUSING CONDITIONS

72 Tenement management scheme

(1) In the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 11)—

(a) in section 4(14) (defined terms), after “section” insert “and section 4A”,

(b) after section 4, insert—

“4A Power of local authority to pay share of scheme costs

(1) The local authority for the area in which a tenement is situated may pay a sum representing an owner’s share of scheme costs if that owner—

(a) is unable or unwilling to do so, or

(b) cannot, by reasonable inquiry, be identified or found.

(2) But a local authority may not pay a sum representing an owner’s share of scheme costs which are attributable to a scheme decision mentioned in rule 3.1(e) of the Tenement Management Scheme.

(3) For the purposes of this section an owner’s share of any scheme costs is to be determined in accordance with—

(a) the Tenement Management Scheme as it applies to the owner’s tenement, or

(b) where a tenement burden provides that the entire liability for those scheme costs (in so far as liability for those costs is not to be met by someone other than an owner) is to be met by one or more of the owners, that burden.

(4) Before making a payment under this section, the local authority must notify the owner who has failed to pay a share of any scheme costs.

(5) The local authority may recover from the owner who failed to pay a share of any scheme costs any—

(a) payments made under this section, and

(b) administrative expenses incurred by it in connection with the making of the payment.

(6) This section is without prejudice to any entitlement to recover sums in accordance with section 11 or 12.”,

(c) in section 13(1)(a) (persons who may register a notice of potential liability for costs), after paragraph (ii) insert—

“(iiia) a local authority entitled to recover costs under section 4A(5),”,

(d) in rule 5 of schedule 1 (redistribution of share of costs), after “then” insert “(unless that share has been paid by the local authority under section 4A)”, and

(e) in rule 8.4 of schedule 1 (enforcement by third party), after “concerned” insert “and a local authority entitled to recover costs under section 4A(5)”.

(2) In section 172 of the 2006 Act (repayment charges)—
(a) in subsection (1), for “or paragraph 6(1) of schedule 5” substitute “, paragraph 6(1) of schedule 5 or section 4A(5) of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 11)”,

(b) in subsection (2)(a), for “or paragraph 6(1) of schedule 5” substitute “, section 61(3A), subsection (6A) below, paragraph 6(1) of schedule 5 or section 4A(5) of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004”, and

(c) after subsection (6A), insert—

“(6B) Subsection (6A)(c) does not apply where the recoverable amount relates to a sum the local authority is entitled to recover under section 4A(5) of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 11).”.

72A Notice of potential liability for costs: notice of discharge

(1) In section 10A of the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 9) (notice of potential liability for costs: further provision), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) The owner of a burdened property may apply to register a notice (a “notice of discharge”) if—

(a) a notice of potential liability for costs in relation to the property has not expired,

(b) the liability for costs under section 10(2) to which the notice of potential liability relates has, in relation to the property which is the subject of the application, been fully discharged, and

(c) the person who registered the notice of potential liability for costs consents to the application.

(3B) A notice of discharge—

(a) must be in the form prescribed by order made by the Scottish Ministers, and

(b) on being registered, discharges the notice of potential liability for costs as it applies to the property which is the subject of the application.”.

(2) In the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004—

(a) in section 13 (notice of potential liability for costs: further provision), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) The owner of a flat may apply to register a notice (a “notice of discharge”) if—

(a) a notice of potential liability for costs in relation to the flat has not expired,

(b) the liability for costs under section 12(2) to which the notice of potential liability relates has, in relation to the flat which is the subject of the application, been fully discharged, and

(c) the person who registered the notice of potential liability for costs consents to the application.

(3B) A notice of discharge—

(a) must be in the form prescribed by order made by the Scottish Ministers, and
(b) on being registered, discharges the notice of potential liability for costs as it applies to the flat which is the subject of the application.

(b) in section 29(1) (interpretation), in the definition of “register” after “costs” insert “, a notice of discharge”.

73 Work notices

In section 30(1) of the 2006 Act (work which may be required under a work notice)—

(a) the word “or” at the end of paragraph (a) is repealed, and

(b) at the end of paragraph (b), insert “, or

(c) otherwise improving the security or safety of any house (whether or not situated in an HRA).”.

74 Maintenance orders

In section 42(2) of the 2006 Act (circumstances in which a maintenance order may be made)—

(a) the words “the local authority considers” are repealed,

(b) before paragraph (a), insert—

“(za) a work notice has been served in relation to the house and no certificate has been granted under section 60 in relation to the work required by that notice,”; and

(c) at the beginning of each of paragraphs (a) and (b), insert “the local authority considers”.

75 Maintenance plans

(1) In section 24 of the Building (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 8) (information in the building standards register)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) the word “and” at the end of paragraph (c) is repealed, and

(ii) after paragraph (d), insert “, and

(e) decisions to approve, devise, vary or revoke maintenance plans under Part 1 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.”,

(b) in subsection (2)(a), for “(d)” substitute “(e)”.

(2) In section 47 of the 2006 Act (variation and revocation of maintenance plans)—

(a) in subsection (3), after “if” insert “subsection (3A) applies or if”, and

(b) after subsection (3), insert—

“(3A) This subsection applies where the local authority is satisfied that a property factor (within the meaning of section 2(1) of the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011 (asp 8)) has been appointed to manage or maintain the premises to which the plan relates.”.

(3) In section 61(1) of the 2006 Act (registration in the appropriate land register), paragraphs (e) and (f) are repealed.
76  Non-residential premises: repayment charges

(1) In section 172 of the 2006 Act (repayment charges)—
   (a) in subsection (1), for “living accommodation” in both places where it occurs substitute “property”,
   (b) in subsection (5), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”,
   (c) in subsection (6A), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”,
   (d) in subsection (7), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”,
   (e) in subsection (8), for “living accommodation” in both places where it occurs substitute “property”,
   (f) after subsection (8), insert—
      “(9) In this section and in section 173, “property” means a place which is—
         (a) living accommodation, or
         (b) non-residential premises within the meaning of section 69(3).”.

(2) In section 173 of the 2006 Act (effect of registering repayment charges etc.)—
   (a) in subsection (1), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”,
   (b) in subsection (2), for “living accommodation” in each place where it occurs substitute “property”,
   (c) in subsection (3), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”, and
   (d) in subsection (4), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”.

76A  Charging orders

(1) In Schedule 9 to the 1987 Act (recovery of expenses by charging order)—
   (a) in paragraph 4, sub-paragraph (b)(i) is repealed, and
   (b) for paragraph 6, substitute—
      “6 Every annuity charged by a charging order may be recoverable as a debt due to the person for the time being entitled to it.”.

(2) In section 108(2) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45) (recovery of expenses by charging order), for the words from “modifications” to “paragraph” in the last place where it appears substitute “modification, that is to say, in sub-paragraph (b)(ii) of paragraph 4 of that Schedule”.

(3) In section 19(3) of the Crofters (Scotland) Act 1993 (c.44) (priority of sums due), the words “heads (i), (ii) and (iii) of” are repealed.

PART 7
MISCELLANEOUS

77  Right to redeem heritable security after 20 years: power to exempt

(1) In section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974 (c.38) (right to redeem heritable security after 20 years where security subjects used as a private dwelling), after subsection (3C) insert—
“(3D) The right to redeem a heritable security conferred by this section does not apply to a heritable security which is in security of a debt of a description specified in an order made by the Scottish Ministers.

(3E) An order under subsection (3D) may—

(a) disapply the right to redeem conferred by this section subject to conditions or restrictions,

(b) restrict the disapplication of the right to redeem conferred by this section to—

(i) specified descriptions of debt,

(ii) specified creditors, or creditors of specified descriptions,

(ii) specified heritable securities, or heritable securities of specified descriptions,

(c) prescribe circumstances in which the disapplication of the right to redeem conferred by this section is to apply or cease to apply.

(3F) An order under subsection (3D) is subject to the negative procedure.”.

(2) In section 21 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974 (provisions for contracting out to be void), for “and 11(3A)” substitute “, 11(3A) and 11(3D)”.

77A First-tier Tribunal: disqualification of members from exercise of certain functions

(1) This section applies to the following functions and jurisdictions of the First-tier Tribunal—

(a) a function or jurisdiction of the sheriff transferred to the Tribunal under section 17 or by virtue of Part 1 of schedule 1,

(b) a function conferred on the Tribunal, by virtue of Part 3 and Parts 2 to 4 of schedule 1, by—

(i) the 2004 Act,

(ii) the 2006 Act,

(c) a function conferred on the Tribunal by or under Part 4.

(2) A member of the First-tier Tribunal is disqualified from exercising a function or jurisdiction to which this section applies if the member is—

(a) a member of the House of Commons,

(b) a member of the Scottish Parliament,

(c) a member of the European Parliament,

(d) a Minister of the Crown,

(e) a member of the Scottish Government.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify subsection (2) by—

(a) adding a disqualification to,

(b) varying the description of a disqualification for the time being mentioned in,

(c) removing a disqualification from,

that subsection.
77B Private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership

In Schedule 4 to the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984, after paragraph 1 insert—

"1A (1) A person is disqualified from appointment to, and from remaining a member of, the private rented housing panel if the person is or becomes—

(a) a member of the House of Commons,
(b) a member of the Scottish Parliament,
(c) a member of the European Parliament,
(d) a Minister of the Crown,
(e) a member of the Scottish Government.

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify sub-paragraph (1) by—

(a) adding a disqualification to,
(b) varying the description of a disqualification for the time being mentioned in,
(c) removing a disqualification from,

that sub-paragraph.

(3) An order under sub-paragraph (2) is subject to the negative procedure.”.

78 Delegation of certain functions

(1) In section 21 of the 2006 Act (panel and committees), after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) The president may delegate the president’s functions under section 23 to—

(a) the vice-president of the panel, or
(b) such other member of the panel as the president thinks fit.

(8B) A delegation under subsection (8A) does not affect the president’s—

(a) responsibility for the carrying out of delegated functions, or
(b) ability to carry out delegated functions.”.

(2) In section 16 of the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011 (asp 8) (panel and committees), after subsection (7) insert—

“(8) The president may delegate the president’s functions under section 18 to—

(a) the vice-president of the panel, or
(b) such other member of the panel as the president thinks fit.

(9) A delegation under subsection (8) does not affect the president’s—

(a) responsibility for the carrying out of delegated functions, or
(b) ability to carry out delegated functions.”.

79 Scottish Housing Regulator: transfer of assets following inquiries

In section 67 of the 2010 Act (transfer of assets following inquiries)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—
“(4A) A duty on the Regulator to consult in accordance with paragraph (i) or (ii) of subsection (4)(a) does not apply where the Regulator considers that—

(a) the registered social landlord’s viability is in jeopardy for financial reasons,

(b) a person could take a step in relation to the registered social landlord which would require to be notified to the Regulator under section 73,

(c) the direction would substantially reduce the likelihood of a person taking such a step, and

(d) there is insufficient time to comply with that duty and make a direction which would substantially reduce that likelihood.

(4B) The Regulator must—

(a) issue guidance on subsection (4A), such guidance to include—

(i) the circumstances in which it considers that subsection (4A) is likely to apply,

(ii) the actions it expects to take in those circumstances, and

(iii) how, in those circumstances, it intends to communicate with any of the persons mentioned in paragraph (b) who are affected by its actions, and

(b) before issuing or revising any guidance, consult—

(i) tenants of registered social landlords or their representatives,

(ii) registered social landlords or their representatives, and

(iii) secured creditors of registered social landlords or their representatives.

(4C) Where the Regulator proposes to direct a transfer of some (but not all) of a registered social landlord's assets, the Regulator must—

(a) before making a direction, obtain an independent valuation of those assets, and

(b) when making a direction, have regard to that valuation.”,

(b) in subsection (6), paragraph (a) and the word “and” immediately following it are repealed.

79A Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

(1) After section 104 of the 2010 Act insert—

“Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

104A Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

(1) This section applies to a registered social landlord which is—

(a) a registered society, or

(b) a registered company.

(2) An arrangement under which the registered social landlord is to become a subsidiary of a body of which it is not currently a subsidiary has effect only if the Regulator consents to that arrangement before it is completed.
(3) Chapter 3 of Part 10 makes provision for Regulator consent for the purpose of this section.”.

(2) After section 124 of the 2010 Act insert—

“CHAPTER 3

REGISTERED SOCIAL LANDLORD BECOMING A SUBSIDIARY OF ANOTHER BODY

124A Regulator’s consent

(1) The special procedure set out in sections 114 to 121 of Chapter 1 applies in relation to an arrangement to which the Regulator’s consent is required under section 104A as it applies in relation to a disposal to which Chapter 1 applies.

(2) The Regulator must determine that the special procedure is not to apply or is to cease to apply where the Regulator considers that—

(a) the registered social landlord’s viability is in jeopardy for financial reasons,

(b) a person could take a step in relation to the registered social landlord which would require to be notified to the Regulator under section 73, and

(c) the determination under this subsection would substantially reduce the likelihood of a person taking such a step.

(3) Where the Regulator makes a determination under subsection (2), the Regulator may give or refuse consent to the arrangement.

124B Purchaser protection

Failure by the Regulator or by a registered social landlord to comply with any provision of sections 114 to 121 of Chapter 1 in relation to an arrangement under which the registered social landlord is to become a subsidiary of a body of which it is not currently a subsidiary does not invalidate the Regulator’s consent to the arrangement.”.

(3) In section 164 of the 2010 Act (connected bodies), the definition of “subsidiary” is repealed.

(4) In section 165 of the 2010 Act (interpretation), after the definition of “social landlord” insert—

““subsidiary” has the same meaning as in the Companies Act 2006 (c.46) or, as the case may be, the Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies and Credit Unions Act 1968 (c.55),”.

80 Repeal of defective designation provisions

(1) Part 14 of the 1987 Act (assistance for owners of defective housing) is repealed.

(2) Schedule 20 to the 1987 Act (assistance by way of repurchase) is repealed.

(3) Schedule 21 to the 1987 Act (dwellings included in more than one designation) is repealed.
PART 8

GENERAL

81 Interpretation

In this Act—

- “the 1960 Act” means the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (c.62),
- “the 1987 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 (c.26),
- “the 2001 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10),
- “the 2004 Act” means the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),
- “the 2006 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1),
- “the 2010 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 17),
- “First-tier Tribunal” means the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland.

82 Subordinate legislation

1. Any power of the Scottish Ministers to make an order or regulations under this Act includes power to make—
   (a) different provision for different purposes or different areas,
   (b) incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision.

2. Orders or regulations—
   (a) under section 21(1),
   (b) under section 30(4),
   (ba) under section 41(1) which set out the first code of practice or replace the code of practice,
   (c) under section 51(3)(b),
   (d) under section 83(1) containing provisions which add to, replace, or omit any part of the text of an Act, are subject to the affirmative procedure.

3. All other orders and regulations under this Act are subject to the negative procedure.

4. This section does not apply to an order under section 85(3).

83 Ancillary provision

1. The Scottish Ministers may by order make such incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision as they consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in connection with, any provision made by or under this Act.

2. An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment (including this Act).
84 Minor and consequential amendments
Schedule 2 contains minor amendments and amendments consequential on the provisions of this Act.

85 Commencement

(1) This section and sections 81, 82, 83 and 86 come into force on the day of Royal Assent.

(2) Section 77 comes into force at the end of the period of 2 months beginning with the day of Royal Assent.

(3) The other provisions of this Act come into force on such day as the Scottish Ministers may by order appoint.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may not appoint a day for section 1(1) to come into force which is before the end of the period of 2 years beginning with the day of Royal Assent.

(5) An order under subsection (3) may include transitional, transitory or saving provision as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient.

86 Short title
The short title of this Act is the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014.
SCHEDULE 1
(introduced by sections 17 to 20)

TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION TO FIRST-TIER TRIBUNAL

PART 1

REGULATED TENANCIES, PART VII CONTRACTS AND ASSURED TENANCIES

Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 (c.58)

1 The Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 is amended as follows.

2 In section 7(2), for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”.

3 In section 11—
   (a) in subsection (1)—
      (i) for “a court” substitute “the First-tier Tribunal”,
      (ii) for “the court”, in each place it occurs, substitute “the Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (2), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

4 In section 12—
   (a) in subsection (1), for “a court” substitute “the First-tier Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (2), for “court”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
   (c) in subsection (3), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (d) in subsection (4), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

5 In section 19(1), for “a court” substitute “the First-tier Tribunal”.

6 In section 21, for “court”, where it first occurs substitute, “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”.

7 In section 23(1), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

8 In section 24—
   (a) in subsection (3), for “court”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, in every other place it occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (4), for “court”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, in every other place it occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
   (c) in subsection (5), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (d) in subsection (6), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (e) in subsection (7), for “court”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
   (f) in subsection (8), for “court”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”.

9 In section 25(1), the definition of “the court” is repealed.
10 In section 26, for “court”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”.
11 Section 27 is repealed.
12 In section 31(2)—
   (a) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (b) in paragraph (b), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.
13 In section 32—
   (a) in subsection (4), for “sheriff”, in each place it occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (5), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.
14 In section 35(12), after “court” insert “or tribunal”.
15 In section 39—
   (a) for “a court” substitute “the First-tier Tribunal”,
   (b) for “the court”, in both places it occurs, substitute “the Tribunal”,
   (c) for “direct the clerk of court to correct” substitute “order the correction of”.
16 In section 43B(4)(b), after “court” insert “or tribunal”.
17 In section 45(3), after “court” insert “or tribunal”.
18 In section 60(3)—
   (a) for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
   (b) the words from “and” to the end are repealed.
19 In section 64(6)(b), for “sheriff, on a summary application” substitute “First-tier Tribunal, on an application”.
20 In section 75—
   (a) for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, in each subsequent place it occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
   (b) the title becomes “Power of First-tier Tribunal, in action for possession, to reduce period of notice to quit”.
21 In section 76—
   (a) in subsection (2), for “sheriff may, if he thinks fit,” substitute “First-tier Tribunal may”,
   (b) in subsection (3), for “sheriff” substitute “Tribunal”.
22 In section 77, for “sheriff court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.
23 In section 97—
   (a) in subsection (8), for “sheriff” in both places it occurs substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (9), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier tribunal”.
24 In section 102—
Housing (Scotland) Bill
Schedule 1—Transfer of jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal
Part 1—Regulated tenancies, Part VII contracts and assured tenancies

(a) before subsection (1) insert—

“(A1) The First-tier Tribunal has jurisdiction, either in the course of any proceedings relating to a dwelling-house or on an application made for the purpose by the landlord or the tenant, to determine any question as to the application of this Act (other than Part IX) or as to any matter which is or may become material for determining any such question.”,

(b) in subsection (1), after “this Act” insert “Part IX of”,

(c) subsection (2) is repealed,

(d) in subsection (3), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

25 In section 103, leave out subsections (1) and (2) and insert—

“An application to the sheriff under section 93(1) is to be made by way of summary application.”.

26 In section 104, before “this Act” insert “Part IX of”.

27 In section 115(1), after the definition of “converted tenancy” insert—

“First-tier Tribunal” means the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland;”.

28 In Schedule 1—

(a) in paragraph 3, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in paragraph 7, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

29 In Schedule 1A—

(a) in paragraph 3, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in paragraph 6, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

30 In paragraph 3 of Schedule 1B, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

31 In Schedule 2—

(a) in Cases 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21, for “court”, in each place it occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in paragraph 1 of Part III—

(i) for “a court” substitute “the First-tier Tribunal”,

(ii) for “the court” substitute “the Tribunal”,

(c) in Part IV—

(i) in paragraph 2, for “court”, in the first place it occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, in each subsequent place it occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,

(ii) in paragraph 3(1)(a), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(d) the title to Part I becomes “Cases in which First-tier Tribunal may order possession”,

(e) the title to Part II becomes “Cases in which First-tier Tribunal must order possession where dwelling-house subject to regulated tenancy”.

35
The Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 is amended as follows.

In section 16(2), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 17(8), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 18—
(a) in subsection (1), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(b) in subsection (3)—
   (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
(c) in subsection (3A)—
   (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
(d) in subsection (4)—
   (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (ii) for “he”, in both places it occurs, substitute “the Tribunal”,
(e) in subsection (4A), for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
(f) in subsection (6), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(g) in subsection (6A), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(h) in subsection (7), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 19—
(a) in subsection (1)—
   (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (ii) in paragraph (b), for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
(b) in subsection (2), for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
(c) in subsection (5), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 20—
(a) in subsection (1)—
   (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
(b) in subsection (2)—
   (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
(c) in subsection (3)—
   (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

36
31
32
33
34
35
36
37
(ii) for “he”, in both places it occurs, substitute “the Tribunal”,

(d) in subsection (4)—
   (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,

(e) in subsection (6), for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,

(f) the title becomes “Extended discretion of First-tier Tribunal in possession claims”.

38 In section 21(3)—
   (a) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (b) for “he” substitute “Tribunal”.

39 In section 22—
   (a) in subsection (1), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (2), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

40 In section 25(7), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

41 In section 28(1), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

42 In section 29, for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”.

43 In section 30(2)—
   (a) the word “summary” is repealed,
   (b) in the opening words, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (c) in paragraph (a), for “him” substitute “the Tribunal”,
   (d) in paragraph (b), for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
   (e) in the closing words—
      (i) for “sheriff” substitute “Tribunal”,
      (ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”.

44 In section 33—
   (a) in subsection (1)—
      (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
      (ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (4), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

45 In section 36—
   (a) after subsection (4) insert—
“(4A) Any action to enforce liability arising from this section must be raised in the First-tier Tribunal unless the residential occupant’s claim is founded on the premises in question being subject to a Scottish secure tenancy or to a short Scottish secure tenancy (within the meaning of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10)).”.

(b) in subsection (6)(b), after “sheriff” insert “or First-tier Tribunal”,

(c) in subsection (6B), after “court”, in both places it occurs, insert “or, as the case may be, the First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 42(1)(c)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (i), for “court”, where it first occurs substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in sub-paragraph (ii), for “court”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(c) in sub-paragraph (iii), after “possession” insert “the First-tier Tribunal or, as the case may be,”.

In section 55(1), after the definition of “council tax” insert—

“First-tier Tribunal” means the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland;”.

In Schedule 5—

(a) in grounds 1, 2, 5 and 7, for “sheriff”, in each place it occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) the title of Part I becomes “Grounds on which First-tier Tribunal must order possession”,

(c) the title of Part II becomes “Grounds on which First-tier Tribunal may order possession”,

(d) in paragraph 2 of Part III—

(i) for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(ii) in paragraph (b), for “sheriff” substitute “Tribunal”,

(iii) in the closing words, for “sheriff” substitute “Tribunal”,

(e) in paragraph 3(1)(a) of that Part, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

PART 2

REPAIRING STANDARD

Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1)

The 2006 Act is amended as follows.

In section 24(7)—

(a) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in paragraph (a), for “sheriff’s” substitute “Tribunal’s”.

In section 194, after the definition of “disabled person” insert—

“First-tier Tribunal” means the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland,”.
PART 3

RIGHT TO ADAPT RENTED HOUSES

Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1)

The 2006 Act is amended as follows.

In section 64—

(a) subsection (6) is repealed,
(b) in subsection (7), for “(5) or, as the case may be, (6)” substitute “or (5)”.

Subsections (3) and (4) of section 65 are repealed.

Section 67 is repealed.

PART 4

LANDLORD REGISTRATION

Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8)

The 2004 Act is amended as follows.

In section 92—

(a) subsection (4) is repealed,
(b) in subsection (5)—
(i) for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(ii) the words “shall be made to the sheriff principal and” are repealed,
(c) in subsection (6), for “sheriff principal” substitute “Upper Tribunal”.

In section 92ZA—

(a) in subsection (1)(b)—
(i) in sub-paragraph (i), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(ii) in sub-paragraph (ii), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(iii) in sub-paragraph (ii)(A), for “sheriff’s” substitute “First-tier Tribunal’s”,
(iv) in sub-paragraph (ii)(B), for “sheriff principal” substitute “Upper Tribunal”,
(b) in subsection (2)(b)—
(i) in sub-paragraph (i), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(ii) in sub-paragraph (ii), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(iii) in sub-paragraph (ii)(A), for “sheriff’s” substitute “First-tier Tribunal’s”,
(iv) in sub-paragraph (ii)(B), for “sheriff principal” substitute “Upper Tribunal”.

In section 97—

(a) in subsection (6), for “court” substitute “tribunal”,
(b) in subsection (7), for “court” substitute “tribunal”.

1379

1379
60 In section 101(1)—
(a) before the definition of “house”, insert—

“‘First-tier Tribunal’ means the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland,”,
(b) after the definition of “unconnected person”, insert—

“‘Upper Tribunal’ means the Upper Tribunal for Scotland,”.

SCHEDULE 2
(introduced by section 84)
MINOR AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 (c.65)
1 Section 156(4) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 is repealed.

Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981 (c.59)
2 Section 13(11) of the Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981 is repealed.

Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 (c.58)
3 In Case 7 of Part 1 of Schedule 2 to the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984—
(a) the word “either” is repealed,
(b) paragraph (b) and the word “or” immediately preceding it are repealed.

Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 (c.26)
4 (1) The 1987 Act is amended as follows.
(2) In section 19 of the 1987 Act—
(a) in subsection (1), for “local authority or a registered social landlord” substitute “social landlord”,
(b) in subsection (2)—
(i) for “housing provider” substitute “social landlord”,
(ii) for “housing providers” substitute “social landlords”,
(c) for subsection (3) substitute—
“(3) In this Part, “social landlord” means any local authority or any registered social landlord.”.
(3) In section 20(2)—
(a) for “local authority and a registered social landlord” substitute “social landlord”,
(b) in paragraph (b), after sub-paragraph (ii) insert—

“(iiia) that a dissolution of a civil partnership or a decree of separation of civil partners be obtained, or”.
(4) In section 21(3), paragraph (ia) and the word “and” at the end of that paragraph are repealed.

(4A) In section 24(5)(d), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.

(4B) In section 31(5)(c), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.

(5) In section 82—

(a) the words “this Part and in” are repealed, and

(b) the definitions of “application to purchase”, “heritable proprietor”, “housing co-operative”, “offer to sell”, “police authority” and “secure tenancy” are repealed.

(6) The title to section 82 becomes “Interpretation of sections 14, 19 and 20”.

(7) In section 338(1)—

(a) in the definition of “house”, the words “(except in relation to Part XIV)” are repealed,

(b) the definition of “secure tenancy” is repealed.

Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (c.43)

(1) The Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 42(1)(d), the words “or in pursuance of section 282(3)(b) of that Act (grant of a tenancy upon acquisition by public sector authority of defective dwelling)” are repealed.

(3) Paragraph 7 of Schedule 2 is repealed.

(4) Paragraphs 19 to 26 of Schedule 17 are repealed.

Local Government and Housing Act 1989 (c.42)

Section 166(1) to (5) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 is repealed.

Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 (c.28)

Section 156 of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 is repealed.

Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 (c.39)

Paragraph 152(6) of Schedule 13 to the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 is repealed.

Abolition of Feudal Tenure etc. (Scotland) Act 2000 (asp 5)

Paragraph 48(3) of schedule 12 to the Abolition of Feudal Tenure etc. (Scotland) Act 2000 is repealed.

Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10)

(1) The 2001 Act is amended as follows.

(1A) In section 5(4)(a), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.
(2) Section 23(6)(d) is repealed.
(3) Sections 42 to 51 are repealed.
(4) In schedule 10—
   (a) paragraph 13(3)(c)(ii) is repealed,
   (b) paragraph 13(6) to (20) is repealed,
   (c) paragraph 13(36) to (40) is repealed.

Water Industry (Scotland) Act 2002 (asp 3)
11 Paragraph 18(5) of schedule 7 to the Water Industry (Scotland) Act 2002 is repealed.

Scottish Public Services Ombudsman Act 2002 (asp 11)
12 Paragraph 44 of schedule 2 to the Scottish Public Services Ombudsman Act 2002 is repealed.

Freedom of Information (Scotland) Act 2002 (asp 13)
13 (1) The Freedom of Information (Scotland) Act 2002 is amended as follows.
   (2) In schedule 1, after paragraph 18A insert—
       “18B The Scottish Housing Regulator.”.
   (3) Paragraph 85B of schedule 1 is repealed.

Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 2)
14 (1) The Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 is amended as follows.
   (2) Section 40(4)(g)(v) is repealed.
   (3) Section 65(2)(d) is repealed.
   (4) Section 84(2)(c) is repealed.

Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 11)
15 Section 27(1)(g)(vi) of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 2003 is repealed.

Fire (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 5)
16 Paragraph 13 of schedule 3 to the Fire (Scotland) Act 2005 is repealed.

Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1)
16A In section 22 of the 2006 Act—
   (a) subsection (4)(c) is repealed, and
   (b) subsection (6) is repealed.
Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 17)

17 (1) The 2010 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 58(1), for “the” where it secondly occurs substitute “a”.

(3) Section 108(1)(f) is repealed.

(4) In section 110(1), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) the proposed disposal is not by way of granting security over the land or any interest in it,”.

(4A) In section 124, for “122” substitute “121”.

(5) Sections 140 to 144 are repealed.

(6) In schedule 2—

(a) paragraph 3(4) is repealed,

(b) paragraph 9 is repealed.

Police and Fire Reform (Scotland) Act 2012 (asp 8)

18 Paragraph 56 of schedule 7 to the Police and Fire Reform (Scotland) Act 2012 is repealed.
Housing (Scotland) Bill
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision about housing, including provision about the abolition of the right to buy, social housing, the law affecting private housing, the regulation of letting agents and the licensing of sites for mobile homes.

Introduced by: Nicola Sturgeon
Supported by: Margaret Burgess
On: 21 November 2013
Bill type: Government Bill
This document relates to the Housing (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 41A)

HOUSING (SCOTLAND) BILL

REVISED EXPLANATORY NOTES

INTRODUCTION

1. As required under Rule 9.7.8A of the Parliament’s Standing Orders, these revised Explanatory Notes are published to accompany the Housing (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2. Text has been added or amended as necessary to reflect amendments made to the Bill at Stage 2 and these changes are indicated by sidelining in the right margin.

2. These Explanatory Notes have been prepared by the Scottish Government in order to assist the reader of the Bill and to help inform debate on it. They do not form part of the Bill and have not been endorsed by the Parliament. The Notes should be read in conjunction with the Bill. They are not, and are not meant to be, a comprehensive description of the Bill. So where a section or schedule, or a part of a section or schedule, does not seem to require any explanation or comment, none is given.

3. In these notes:
   - “the 1960 Act” means the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (c.62)
   - “the 1974 Act” means the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974 (c.38)
   - “the 1983 Act” means the Mobile Homes Act 1983 (c.34)
   - “the 1984 Act” means the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 (c.58)
   - “the Defects Act” means the Housing Defects Act 1984 (c.50)
   - “the 1987 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 (c.26)
   - “the 1988 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (c.43)
   - “the 1995 Act” means the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46)
   - “the 2001 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10)
   - “the 2004 Act” means the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8)
   - “the Tenements Act” means the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 11)
   - “the 2006 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1)
   - “the 2010 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 17)
   - “the 2011 Act” means the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011 (asp 8)
   - “the Tribunals Bill” means the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill, introduced on 9th May 2013.
THE BILL

4. The purpose of the Housing (Scotland) Bill (“the Bill”) is to provide additional protection for tenants in the private rented sector and permanent residents of mobile home sites; to support improvements in housing quality in the private rented and privately-owned sectors; to make better use of the existing stock of social rented homes; and to provide more efficient access to justice for landlords and tenants in the private rented sector.

5. A more detailed explanation of the Bill’s purpose can be found in the Policy Memorandum, which also explains the thinking and policy intentions that underpin it.

THE STRUCTURE AND A SUMMARY OF THE BILL

6. The Bill is in eight Parts.

- Part 1 contains provisions which will abolish the right to buy.
- Part 2 makes provision in relation to social housing allocations; the extension of the term of the short Scottish secure tenancy; the right to assign or sublet a tenancy, to establish a joint tenancy and to succeed to a secure tenancy.
- Part 3 transfers jurisdiction for civil cases relating to the private rented sector from the sheriff court to the First-tier Tribunal; makes provisions which deem a landlord as being registered on the landlord register where an application has not been determined by a local authority within 12 months; amends the repairing standard for private rented housing in Part 1 of the 2006 Act and provides third party reporting rights to the private rented housing panel for enforcement of the landlords’ repairing standard.
- Part 4 makes provision for the registration of letting agents (including a fit and proper person test); creates an offence of operating as a letting agent without being registered; sets out the process for handling disputes between letting agents and landlords or tenants; and allows the Scottish Ministers to provide for a letting agent code of practice by regulations.
- Part 5 makes provision for the licencing of relevant permanent sites in Scotland; (including a fit and proper person test); for offences relating to permanent sites and for local authority enforcement of statutory requirements, including powers of entry and recovery of expenses in relation to enforcement action.
- Part 6 amends local authority powers to enforce repairs and maintenance in private homes.
- Part 7 makes a number of miscellaneous amendments: granting the Scottish Ministers powers to exempt certain schemes, such as shared equity schemes, from the right to redeem a heritable security after 20 years in relation to private dwellings; the disqualification of certain persons from sitting on tribunals that are hearing housing cases; it amends the Scottish Housing Regulator’s powers to transfer assets following inquiries; provides for arrangements under which a registered social landlord (RSL) would become the subsidiary of another body and subject to the consent of the Regulator in the same way as arrangements by which a RSL would transfer its assets to another RSL; and repeals provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 that designate pre-cast reinforced concrete houses as defective.
• Part 8 sets out various supplementary and final provisions.

PART ONE – RIGHT TO BUY

7. This Part repeals existing provisions on right to buy in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 (the “1987 Act”), so that right to buy is abolished for all tenants who have a Scottish secure tenancy with a relevant social landlord. Consequently, no tenant of social housing in Scotland will have the right to buy from the date of the coming into force of section 1. It also repeals provisions in the 1987 Act, the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (“the 2001 Act”) and the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 (“the 2010 Act”), which are no longer required following the abolition of right to buy. In addition, it makes two amendments to the 1987 Act to ensure that changes to that Act made by the 2010 Act operate as intended until right to buy ends.

8. Section 1(1) repeals sections 61 to 81, 84 and 84A of the 1987 Act (the right to buy and associated provisions). These sections of the 1987 Act concern secure tenants’ right to buy; the procedure to follow when an application to purchase is made; circumstances in which houses provided for special purposes or liable for demolition are exempt from the right to buy; reference to the Lands Tribunal in cases of dispute; recoverability of discount; the rent to loan scheme; the powers of the Scottish Ministers in relation to right to buy; and the preservation of a tenant’s right to buy where a relevant landlord disposes of the home to a private sector landlord.

9. Section 1(2) repeals section 52 of the 2001 Act. Section 52 obliges the Scottish Ministers to report within four years of the provision coming into force on the extent to which tenants had exercised their right to buy and the effect of this on housing stock, the needs of people for, the demand for and availability of housing accommodation.

10. Section 1(3) repeals sections 145 to 147 of the 2010 Act. These sections require the Scottish Ministers to collect and publish information about right to buy sales in relation to each local authority and registered social landlord and about the number of tenants with the right to buy their house in relation to each local authority.

11. Section 2(a) amends section 61ZA(1) of the 1987 Act. Section 61ZA, inserted by section 141 of the 2010 Act, extends the range of circumstances under which the right to buy cannot be exercised to include new tenants to the social housing sector. This was intended to ensure that tenants taking up a Scottish secure tenancy for the first time (following commencement of section 141) and those returning to the social rented sector after a break would not have the right to buy the property they rent from a social landlord. This amendment to section 61ZA(1) is intended to ensure that occupation other than as a tenant before that date does not exempt a person from the new tenant provisions.

12. Section 2(b) amends section 61F of the 1987 Act. Section 61F, inserted by section 143 of the 2010 Act, extends the range of circumstances set out in sections 61A to 61E of the 1987 Act under which the right to buy cannot be exercised, to include new supply social housing (therefore exempting it from the right to buy, with some exceptions where a tenant with a Scottish secure tenancy moves to new supply social housing in circumstances outwith their control). This amendment is intended to ensure that tenants in this position have their right to buy protected, irrespective of when their tenancy was created.
13. Section 85(4) provides that the Scottish Ministers cannot appoint a date on which the right to buy will end which is less than two years from the date the Bill receives Royal Assent (in other words the Scottish Ministers cannot commence section 1(1) before the end of a two-year period from the date of Royal Assent).

PART TWO – SOCIAL HOUSING

14. Part 2 amends the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 (“the 1987 Act”) and the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (“the 2001 Act”). The changes relate to social landlords’ powers to allocate social housing and grant Scottish secure tenancies and short Scottish secure tenancies.

Allocation of social housing

Reasonable preference in allocation of social housing

15. Section 3 amends section 20 of the 1987 Act to replace the existing categories of persons to whom social landlords must give reasonable preference when allocating social housing. It states that reasonable preference in allocations must be given to persons who are homeless or threatened with homelessness and persons who are living under unsatisfactory housing conditions, in each case where that person’s housing needs are not capable of being met by other housing options which are available. Reasonable preference must also be given to the tenants of any social landlord whom a social landlord considers to be under-occupying a property.

Rules on priority of allocation of housing: consultation

16. Section 4 inserts new section 20A into the 1987 Act. New section 20A requires social landlords to consult those mentioned in subsection 20A(2) and prepare and publish a report on the consultation, before determining the priority of allocation of houses held by it for housing purposes. When making or amending the allocation policy, subsection (2) amends section 21 of the 1987 Act to require social landlords to take account of any local housing strategy and any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers. Before publishing any guidance on the priority of allocation of housing, the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate. Subsection (2) also enables the Scottish Ministers to make regulations subject to the affirmative procedure, which prescribe the type or description of persons whom social landlords must include in their rules governing the priority of allocation of houses. This is intended as a safeguard to ensure that categories of persons are not routinely omitted from an individual landlord’s allocation policies.

17. Section 6 amends section 20 of the 1987 Act to ensure that social landlords take no account of the ownership of or value of heritable property owned by the applicant or by a person who lives with or who it is proposed will live with the applicant, in the limited circumstances set out in new subsection (2C). These circumstances include, for example, where a property has not been let and the owner cannot secure entry to that property or where it is probable that occupation of the property will lead to abuse from some other person residing in that property.

18. Section 7 amends section 20 and inserts new section 20B in the 1987 Act to allow social landlords to impose a minimum period before the applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing, if certain circumstances apply. A minimum period requirement cannot be placed on homeless applicants to whom the local authority has a duty to provide settled accommodation (new subsection (2)(b)). A social landlord may determine that an applicant is ineligible for the allocation of social housing if any of the circumstances in new section 20B(5) apply in relation to the applicant. Some of the circumstances also apply in relation to a person who it is proposed will reside with the applicant. The circumstances include antisocial behaviour, harassment, using a house for immoral or illegal purposes or offences punishable by imprisonment that were committed in the vicinity of the house. Subsection 20B(3) provides the Scottish Ministers with the power to issue guidance on any matter relating to section 20B and requires that the guidance should be consulted on before publication. Subsection 20B(4) provides the Scottish Ministers with the power by regulations to prescribe the maximum period preceding the application that a social landlord may consider any of the circumstances in section 20B(5). Subsection 20B(4) also provides the Scottish Ministers with the power by regulations to prescribe a maximum period for an application to have remained in force before an applicant is eligible for housing to be allocated when a landlord imposes such a period under any of those circumstances. Where a social landlord has imposed a minimum period before the applicant is eligible for the allocation of social housing, subsection 20B(7A) enables the landlord to withdraw or reduce the minimum period. Subsection (8) provides applicants with a right to appeal to the sheriff against a landlord’s decision to make them ineligible for a period for the allocation of housing.

Short Scottish secure tenancy

19. Section 8(1) provides the Scottish Ministers with a power to issue guidance on the creation of a short Scottish secure tenancy for antisocial behaviour and on taking certain steps in relation to such a tenancy. Before publishing this guidance, the Scottish Ministers must consult with such persons as they consider appropriate. Subsection (1) also amends section 34(7) of the 2001 Act to require the landlord to provide, or ensure provision of, the housing support services it considers appropriate to enable the conversion of the tenancy to a Scottish secure tenancy.

20. Section 8(2) substitutes a new subsection (2) in section 35 of the 2001 Act. New section 35(2) extends the circumstances in which a landlord may serve a notice on a tenant under subsection (3) (a notice stating that the Scottish secure tenancy becomes a short Scottish secure tenancy). The circumstances include where a tenant or person associated with the tenant has, within the period of three years preceding the date of service of the notice, acted in an antisocial manner, pursued a course of conduct amounting to harassment or a course of conduct which is otherwise antisocial in relation to another person residing in, visiting or otherwise engaged in lawful activity in the locality. It also amends the information that must be included in the notice to the tenant to include the name of the person who has behaved in an antisocial manner, where no anti-social behaviour order applies. New section 35(3) makes a consequential amendment to section 37(1) (conversion to a Scottish secure tenancy) of the 2001 Act.

21. New section 35(4) inserts new paragraph 2A in schedule 6 to the 2001 Act to provide that the conduct referred to in new section 34(2)(b) if carried out by the persons referred to in new paragraph 2A(2), within the period of three years preceding the date of service of the notice, is a new ground for granting applicants a short Scottish secure tenancy. It also amends paragraph 6 of schedule 6 to the 2001 Act so that the ground for granting a short Scottish secure tenancy related to accommodation for a person in receipt of housing support only applies when no other paragraph in that schedule applies and where the person is in receipt of a housing support service. New section 34(5) makes another consequential amendment to section 31(5) of the 1987 Act to include new paragraph 2A as accommodation considered to be permanent accommodation under the duties of local authorities to persons found to be homeless.
22. Section 9 creates a new ground for granting a short Scottish secure tenancy, for homeowners, where the house is to be let expressly on a temporary basis to a person who owns heritable property, or where a person who it is proposed will reside with them owns heritable property. This is to allow them to make arrangements in respect of the heritable property they own, including sale or installation of adaptations, that will allow the person’s housing needs to be met.

23. Section 10(1) amends section 34 of the 2001 Act to give short Scottish secure tenancies granted on the grounds of antisocial behaviour or a previous eviction order a term of 12 months. It also amends section 34 to provide that, at the end of the 12-month term, the tenancy cannot continue as a short Scottish secure tenancy on the same terms and conditions. Subsection (2) amends section 35 of the 2001 Act to provide that a short Scottish secure tenancy created by virtue of that section also has a term of 12 months. It also provides that, at the end of the 12-month term, the tenancy cannot continue as a short Scottish secure tenancy on the same terms and conditions. Subsection (3) inserts new subsection (5) and (6) into section 37 of the 2001 Act (conversion to Scottish secure tenancy) to provide that after this period, the short Scottish secure tenancy will automatically convert to a Scottish secure tenancy (unless the social landlord has taken steps to extend the short Scottish secure tenancy by a further six months or to seek repossession of the tenancy) on the term which applied before the tenancy became a short Scottish secure tenancy.

24. Section 11 inserts new section 35A in the 2001 Act to provide that the term of a short Scottish secure tenancy granted on antisocial behaviour or previous eviction grounds may be extended by a further period of six months from the date which would otherwise be the expiry day of that tenancy. Tenants must have been given two months’ notice of the extension (including the reasons for the extension) and must be being given housing support services. An extension may be required because the tenant requires support for a further period in order for the tenant to be able to sustain a Scottish secure tenancy. Subsection (2) makes consequential amendments to section 37 of the 2001 Act.

25. Section 12 amends section 36 of the 2001 Act. Section 12(a) inserts a new subparagraph (aa) in section 36(2) to provide that proceedings for recovery of possession may not be raised, in the case of short Scottish secure tenancies created by virtue of section 35 or paragraph 1, 2 or 2A of schedule 6 (those granted on antisocial behaviour or previous eviction grounds), unless the landlord considers that any obligation of the tenancy has been broken. Section 12(b) inserts a new subparagraph (aa) into section 36(3) to require landlords of such tenancies to give tenants reasons why they are seeking recovery of possession of the tenancy (including, if new subsection (2)(aa) applies, the obligations the landlord considers have been broken). This section also gives tenants a right to request that their landlord review the decision to seek recovery of possession before the case goes to court (new subsection (4A)). New subsection (4C) gives the Scottish Ministers the power by regulations to make provisions about the procedure to be followed in such reviews. Section 12(ca) provides that, in cases where section 36(2)(aa) applies, the court must make an order for recovery of possession of the tenancy where the tenancy has reached the end of its 12-month term (or, in a case where an extension applies, the 18-month term applicable to it) and the landlord considers that an obligation of the tenancy has been broken. Section 12(e) inserts a new subsection (8) into section 36 of the 2001 Act to allow the procedure for recovery of possession (with respect to the serving of the notice for recovery of possession) under Scottish secure tenancies to also be used with short Scottish secure tenancies so long as the tenant has been given four weeks’ notice prior to the landlord raising proceedings for recovery of possession.

Scottish secure tenancy

26. Section 13(1) amends section 11 of the 2001 Act to introduce a 12-month qualifying period, where a person has used the house in question as the person’s only or principal home, before a person can apply to be added to a tenancy as a joint tenant. Subsection (2)(a) amends section 32 of the 2001 Act to replace a six-month qualifying period with a 12-month qualifying period before a tenant can apply to assign the tenancy to another person. The proposed assignee will also have to have lived at the property and used it as their only or principal home for 12 months before they may be assigned the property. It also introduces a 12-month qualifying period before a tenant can apply to sublet the tenancy to another person. In joint tenancy and assignation cases, the individual or the tenant of the house in question must have notified the landlord that the individual is living in the property as their only or principal home before the 12-month period begins. The 12-month qualifying period for applying to sublet a tenancy is satisfied where the tenant was the tenant of the house in question throughout the 12-month period ending with the date of application (new subsection (1B) as inserted into section 32 by 13(2)(b)). Section 13(c) inserts new subparagraphs (f) and (g) into section 32(3) to provide new grounds for reasonable refusal of consent.

27. Section 14 amends schedule 3 to the 2001 Act for the purpose of succession to a Scottish secure tenancy. This schedule makes provision as to who are qualified persons to whom a Scottish secure tenancy passes by operation of law on the death of a tenant. Currently paragraph 2(2) of schedule 3 provides that a person living with a tenant as husband and wife or in a relationship of this character, except that they are of the same sex, is a qualified person if the house has been their only or principal home for a period of 6 months preceding the tenant’s death. Section 14(a) replaces this six month qualifying period with a 12-month qualifying period.

28. Paragraph 3 of schedule 3 is amended to provide that a member of the tenant’s family aged at least 16 years is a qualifying person for the purposes of succession to a Scottish secure tenancy, provided the house was their only or principal home throughout the 12 months ending in the tenant’s death. This is a change to the existing requirement that such a family member is a qualifying person where the house was their only or principal home at the time of the tenant’s death.

29. Paragraph 4(b) of schedule 3 is amended to provide that a carer providing, or who has provided, care for the tenant or a member of the tenant’s family where the house was the carer’s only or principal home throughout the period of 12 months ending with the tenant’s death is a qualifying person. This is a change to the existing requirement that such a carer is a qualifying person where the house was the carer’s only or principal home at the time of the tenant’s death and the carer had given up a previous only or principal home.

30. In all cases where a qualifying period applies in section 14, the individual or the tenant must have notified the landlord that the individual is living in the property as their only or principal home before the 12-month period can begin (new paragraph 4A).
This document relates to the Housing (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 41A)

31. Section 15(1) provides the Scottish Ministers with the power to issue guidance on any matter relating to recovering possession of a house where such proceedings are to include a ground for recovery of possession set out in paragraph 2 of schedule 2 to the 2001 Act. The Scottish Ministers are also required to consult such persons as they consider appropriate before publication of the guidance. Subsection (2) inserts paragraph (aa) in section 16(2) of the 2001 Act to remove a requirement that the court considers whether it is reasonable to make an order for eviction, in cases where another court has already convicted a tenant of using the house for immoral or illegal purposes or of an offence punishable by imprisonment, committed in, or in the locality of, the house. The landlord will have to have such grounds for seeking recovery of possession of the property and have, within 12 months of the tenant’s conviction or appeal, served a notice on the tenant that the landlord intends to seek recovery of possession of the property. The tenant retains a right to challenge the court action.

32. Section 16 amends schedule 2 to the 2001 Act to allow landlords to seek recovery of possession of adapted property where it has been allocated to persons who do not need adaptations. Landlords have an existing duty under section 16(2)(b) of the 2001 Act to rehouse any such persons in suitable alternative accommodation.

PART THREE – PRIVATE RENTED HOUSING

33. Part 3 makes provision in relation to the transfer of responsibility for hearing civil cases relating to the private rented sector from the Scottish courts to the Scottish Tribunals.

Transfer of sheriff’s jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal

34. Sections 17 to 21 and schedule 1 to the Bill make provision to transfer the types of civil private rented sector housing court actions specified in these provisions from the jurisdiction of the sheriff court to the jurisdiction of the First-tier Tribunal (“FTT”). These actions include repossession cases and various non-repossession related cases. The FTT is due to be established under the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill (“the Tribunals Bill”) which was introduced in the Scottish Parliament on 9th May 2013. Provisions and powers provided in the Tribunals Bill will allow for operational detail such as the establishment of tribunal rules and appointment of members to the FTT. The Explanatory Notes in relation to this part of the Bill should, therefore, be read in conjunction with the Tribunals Bill.

35. Section 17 provides for the functions and jurisdiction of the sheriff court in relation to civil actions arising from regulated tenancies within the meaning of section 8 of the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 (“the 1984 Act”), Part VII contracts within the meaning of section 63 of the 1984 Act and assured tenancies within the meaning of section 12 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (“the 1988 Act”), to be transferred to the FTT. This includes matters of eviction.

36. Part 1 of schedule 1 makes consequential amendments to this effect.

37. Section 18(2) amends section 18 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (“the 2006 Act”) to provide that applications from a landlord or tenant for an order to exclude or modify the application of sections 14, 15 and 17 of the 2006 Act to the tenancy (with regards to the landlord’s duty to repair and maintain, and the prohibition on contracting out of the landlord’s duty to repair and maintain) are transferred from the jurisdiction of the sheriff court to the jurisdiction of the FTT.
This document relates to the Housing (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 41A)

38. Section 18(4) amends section 57 of the 2006 Act to provide that where the section applies, the FTT, as opposed to the sheriff, may order a person who prevents or obstructs another person from doing anything which that person is required, authorised or entitled to do under Part 1 of the 2006 Act, to permit that person to do all things which they are required, authorised or entitled to do.

39. Part 2 of schedule 1 makes consequential amendments to this effect.

40. Section 19 inserts new section 66A into the 2006 Act. New section 66A provides the ability for tenants to appeal a landlord’s refusal of, or imposition of conditions on, consent to adapt a rented house for a disabled person or for energy efficiency. The effect of the insertion of this section is to transfer jurisdiction to the FTT.

41. Part 3 of schedule 1 makes consequential amendments.

42. Section 20 provides for the jurisdiction to decide civil matters relating to landlord registration arising from the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”) (appeals against local authority decisions regarding landlord registration) to be transferred from the sheriff court to the FTT.

43. Part 4 of schedule 1 makes consequential amendments.

44. Section 21(1)(a) provides a power for the Scottish Ministers, by regulations, to transfer jurisdiction to decide cases under section 153(2) of the 2006 Act (where a person has obstructed another person from completing an action in relation to breaches of houses in multiple occupation (“HMO”) licences or local authority amenity notices) from the sheriff to the FTT.

45. Section 21(1)(b) provides that the Scottish Ministers may also, by regulations, transfer appeals against decisions of local authorities to which section 158 of the 2006 Act applies (against decisions relating to HMOs) and applications to extend the period mentioned in paragraph 9(1) of schedule 4 to that Act and warrants for ejection under paragraph 2 of schedule 5 to that Act in relation to premises or land, from the sheriff to the FTT.

46. Section 21(2) provides that regulations under subsection (1) may also:

- disapply section 153(2) of the 2006 Act (regarding orders in cases where a person has obstructed another person under sections 145(2), 146(2), 151 or schedule 5 of that Act) which would become appropriate if all powers to make orders in these cases have been transferred to the FTT,

- disapply section 159(1) and paragraph 9(2) of schedule 4 to the 2006 Act (which allow any decision of a local authority in relation to HMOs to be appealed by summary application to the sheriff and the sheriff to extend the period in which a local authority must decide whether to grant or refuse an HMO licence application),
• disapply paragraph 3(1) of schedule 5 to the 2006 Act (which relates to warrants for ejection where a person has not complied with a requirement to evacuate to allow work to be carried out), and
• make other consequential amendments to the 2006 Act and any other enactment as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.

Landlord registration

47. Part 3 of the Bill also amends the 2004 Act by including provisions for the introduction of a time limit of 12 months for the determination of landlord registration applications.

48. Section 22 inserts a new section 85B into the 2004 Act and requires that local authorities determine applications for registration (as required by section 84 of the 2004 Act) made by relevant persons under section 83 of the 2004 Act, within 12 months of receipt of the application.

49. New section 85B(3) allows a local authority to apply to the FTT for an extension to this 12 month period. The period may be extended by such a period as the FTT thinks is appropriate, but may not be extended unless the application is made before the 12 month period expires (subsection (4)). The person making the application for registration is entitled to be party to any application for an extension to the 12 month period (subsection (5)). The decision of the FTT on the application will be final (subsection (6)).

50. New section 85B(7) provides that in the event of a local authority failure to determine the landlord application within the 12 month period, authorisation is deemed to have been granted automatically by the local authority. The authority is to be treated as having entered the relevant person in the register maintained by it under section 82(1) of the 2004 Act on the day by which the authority was required to determine the application. Unless the relevant person is otherwise removed from the register in accordance with Part 8 of the 2004 Act, that person is to be treated as being removed from the register on the expiry of the period of 12 months from that date (subsection (7)(b)).

51. Where new section 85B(7) applies (where the local authority has not determined an application within 12 months of its receipt), details of the relevant person’s name and registration number must be entered in the register maintained by the authority under section 82(1) of the 2004 Act (subsection 8). Subsection (9) provides that (subject to the modifications specified in subsection (10)) the relevant person is treated for all purposes as having been registered by virtue of section 84(2)(a) of the 2004 Act (in other words, as if the authority has made a positive determination of the application). The requirement for an authority to remove the entry from the register three years from the day on which the entry is made in the register in terms of section 84(6) of the 2004 Act does not apply to deemed granted applications (in other words to those applications entered by virtue of a local authority having not determined it within 12 months of the date of receipt of the application) (subsection (10)(c)).

52. The modifications specified in subsection (10) are that in the case where an applicant does not specify the name of a person who acts for the landlord in respect of a property specified in the application under section 83(1)(c), the applicant is to be treated as being registered by virtue of section 84(3). Where an applicant specifies at least one house, and the name and address of someone acting in respect of a property specified in the application under section 83(1)(c), the applicant is to be treated as being registered by virtue of section 84(4).

53. Section 22(2) amends section 86(1)(a) of the 2004 Act so that a person entered into the register by virtue of a deemed granted application is notified of that fact as soon as practicable after the entry has been made.

Repairing standard

54. Part 3 of the Bill also makes provision to amend the repairing standard for private rented housing in Part 1 of the 2006 Act.

55. Section 22A amends section 13 of the 2006 Act by inserted a subsection (1)(g) which requires that, in order to meet the repairing standard, a privately rented house must have satisfactory provision for giving warning if carbon monoxide is present in a concentration that is hazardous to health. A new section 13(6) of the 2006 Act provides that, in determining whether a house has satisfactory provision for giving warning of carbon monoxide, regard is to be had to both building regulations and guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.

56. Section 22B inserts a section 13(4A) into the 2006 Act which requires that, in determining whether a house meets the parts of the repairing standard which require that the installations in a privately rented house for the supply of electricity and any electrical appliances provided by the landlord are in a reasonable state of repair and in proper working order, regard is to be had to any guidance on electrical safety standards issued by the Scottish Ministers.

57. Section 22B also inserts section 19A into the 2006 Act. New section 19A requires landlords to arrange electrical safety inspections every five years to identify any work needed to meet the repairing standard in relation to installations for the supply of electricity and electrical fixtures, fittings and appliances. An inspection must be carried out before a new tenancy starts, unless there has been an inspection within the previous five years. Where a tenancy has commenced before the date that section 22B(2) comes into force, the landlord must carry out an inspection within 12 months from the date section 22B(2) comes into force, unless the tenancy comes to an end in the 12-month period (and the property is not relet). Section 19A requires landlords to provide copies of inspection reports to tenants. The duty to carry out an inspection is treated as part of the repairing standard for the purposes of applications to the private rented housing panel and for enforcement of the repairing standard by the private rented housing panel.

58. Section 22B also inserts new section 19B into the 2006 Act. Section 19B provides that an inspection carried out for the purposes of section 19A must be carried out by a competent person and specifies information which must be included in the record of the inspection, which must be retained by the landlord for six years. Section 19B also provides that the Scottish Ministers must publish guidance and that, in determining whether someone is a competent person as required by section 19B(1), landlords must have regard to this guidance.

59. Section 22C inserts section 20A into the 2006 Act. Section 20A provides that the Scottish Ministers may amend the provisions of the 2006 Act which set out the repairing standard and the duty of landlords to ensure that privately rented homes meet the repairing standard. Section 22C(2) requires that any such regulations are made by the affirmative procedure.
Enforcement of repairing standard

60. Part 3 of the Bill also makes provision to expand access to the private rented housing panel by enabling third party applications by local authorities to enforce the repairing standard.

61. Section 23(1)(a) amends section 22 of the 2006 Act by inserting subsections (1A) and (1B), to enable a third party to apply to the private rented housing panel for a determination of whether a landlord has failed to comply with the repairing standard which is provided for in section 13 of the 2006 Act (section 14(1)(b) of the 2006 Act provides that the landlord in a tenancy must ensure that the house meets the repairing standard at all times during the tenancy). New section 22(1B) defines such a third party applicant as a local authority, or a person specified by order by the Scottish Ministers.

62. Section 23(1)(b) amends section 22(2) of the 2006 Act to require that an application made by a third party must set out the third party applicant’s reasons for considering that the repairing standard is not met.

63. Section 23(1)(c) amends section 22(3) of the 2006 Act to provide that an application in respect of the repairing standard cannot be made unless the person making the application has informed the landlord that work needs to be carried out for the purpose of complying with the repairing standard. Section 23(1)(d) amends section 22(4) to provide that applications made under this amended section (both by tenants and by third party applicants) cannot be made if the landlord is a local authority landlord, a registered social landlord, Scottish Water or Scottish Homes.

64. New section 22(4A) as inserted by section 23(1)(e) of the Bill makes provision that the tenant of the house concerned is entitled to be a party to the determination of any application by a third party to the private rented housing panel.

65. Section 23(3) amends section 22A(1) of the 2006 Act to provide that on receipt of an application by a tenant or third party applicant (other than a local authority third party applicant), the private rented housing panel must provide the information specified in section 22A(2) to the local authority for the area in which the house is situated for the purpose of the local authority maintaining the register under section 82(1) of the 2004 Act (landlord register).

66. Section 23(4) of the Bill amends section 23 of the 2006 Act so that the processes whereby the president of the private rented housing panel decides whether to refer an application to a private rented housing committee or to reject it will also apply to applications made by a third party. Notification of rejected third party applications must be given to the third party applicant and the tenant, setting out the reasons for rejection and the procedures for appealing against it (new subsection (4A) as inserted into section 23 of the 2006 Act).

67. Section 23(5) amends section 24 of the 2006 Act so that the private rented housing committee must make a determination of applications made by a tenant or a third party as to whether the landlord has failed to comply with the repairing standard (in other words the landlord’s duty under section 14(1)(b)).
68. Section 23(6A) amends section 181 of the 2006 Act to provide a new power of entry for third parties in relation to the repairing standard. This provides for the right of entry by a person authorised by a third party applicant, for the purposes of deciding whether an application is to be made to the PRHP under section 22(1A) of the 2006 Act.

69. Section 23(6B)(a) amends section 182 of the 2006 Act, which outlines circumstances where a sheriff or justice of the peace may issue a warrant to enter a house, by force if necessary, to include that a warrant may be issued for the purposes of deciding whether an application is to be made to the PRHP under section 22(1A) of the 2006 Act. Section 23(6B)(b) provides that the reference to the ‘occupier’ in section 182(3) for the purposes of an application for a warrant under section 181(1A) includes the tenant, the landlord and any known agent of the landlord. Section 23(6C) inserts a new subsection (4A) into section 184 of the 2006 Act so that the requirement under section 184(4) for at least 24 hours’ notice to be given to the occupants of the land or premises concerned before exercising the right of entry under section 181(1A), is read as requiring notice to be given to the tenant, landlord and any known agent of the landlord.

70. Section 23(6D) amends section 187 of the 2006 Act which sets out the means by which a formal communication under the Act is served, submitted, given, made or issued to a person, by substituting for the reference to “the recorded delivery service” a reference to “a service which provides for the delivery of the communication to be recorded”.

71. Section 23(7) amends section 194(1) of the 2006 Act (interpretation) to include ‘third party applicant’, which is to be interpreted as a local authority or a person specified by order made by the Scottish Ministers.

72. Section 23(8) repeals section 35(3) of the 2011 Act, which was to include the word tenant to the title of section 22 of the 2011 Act entitled ‘representations’.

Procedure for third party applications

73. Section 24 amends schedule 2 to the 2006 Act so that the procedures to be adopted by a private rented housing committee in determining an application to the private rented housing panel in relation to a landlord’s failure to comply with the repairing standard (in terms of section 14(1)(b) of the 2006 Act), take account of applications made by a third party. In the case of a third party application, the third party must be notified and given the opportunity to make written or oral representations. Any changes made at the request of a third party applicant to the date by which evidence must be provided must be notified to the third party, the tenant and landlords.

74. The procedures followed by a committee in making other inquiries must include consideration of any written or oral representations, and any report about the state of the property concerned, by third party applicants (in terms of section 24(2) which amends paragraph 2 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act).

75. The committee may cite any person to give evidence or information, including a third party applicant (in terms of section 24(3) which amends paragraph 3 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act). No allowances or expenses are payable to the landlords, tenant, tenant or landlord representatives of third party applicants (in terms of section 24(4) which amends paragraph 5 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act).
76. Section 24(5) also amends the procedures for recording and notification of decisions in paragraph 6 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act, to include third party applications. Once a private rented housing committee reaches its decision it must send notification to the landlord, tenant, and any person acting for the tenant in relation to the application and the local authority, unless that authority is the third party applicant.

77. Section 24(6) amends paragraph 7(1) of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act to provide that a third party applicant may withdraw the application under new section 22A(1A) of the 2006 Act. Paragraph 7(2), however, provides that, despite the withdrawal the committee may continue to consider the case and make a repairing standard enforcement order if appropriate.

Appeals in relation to third party applications

78. Section 25(1) amends section 64 of the 2006 Act to give a third party applicant aggrieved by a decision by a private rented housing committee mentioned in subsection (4) (a) to (f) of section 64, the right to appeal such a decision to the sheriff within 21 days of notification of the decision (new subsection (4A)).

79. Section 65(2) of the 2006 Act is amended by section 25(2) to provide that the sheriff may determine appeals by third party applicants by confirming the decision, remitting the decision to the president or the private rented housing committee as the case may be for reconsideration or quashing the decision made.

80. New section 66(3A) (as inserted by section 25(3)) makes provision for the third party applicant to be a party to proceedings, and for the tenant to be entitled to be party to the proceedings, where a landlord appeals a decision relating to a third party application to the sheriff under section 64(4) of the 2006 Act.

81. Under new section 66(3B) (also as inserted by section 25(3)), where a tenant appeals a decision of a committee in respect of a third party application to the sheriff under section 64(4) of the 2006 Act, the landlord and third party applicant are to be parties to the proceedings.

82. Under new section 66(3C) (also as inserted by section 25(3)), where a third party applicant appeals to the sheriff under new section 64(4A) against a decision of the committee in relation to that application, the landlord is to be party to the proceedings and the tenant is entitled to be a party.

PART FOUR – LETTING AGENTS

83. Part 4 of the Bill makes provision to further regulate the letting agent industry in Scotland. The purpose of this part of the Bill is to help improve letting agent levels of service and professionalism, by strengthening the regulation of the industry.

84. This involves the creation of a mandatory register of letting agents in Scotland, with an associated ‘fit and proper person test’; and the creation of a statutory code of practice to which all letting agents must adhere. The Bill also enables the First-tier Tribunal (“FTT”) (which is to be established under the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill) to make a range of enforcement orders to provide redress for tenants and landlords in cases where a letting agent fails to comply with that code of practice.

Inclusion in the register

85. Section 26 requires the Scottish Ministers to create and maintain a national register, containing an entry for each letting agent. This will include the name and address of each person entered in the register, and any other information relating to that person the Scottish Ministers may specify in regulations. The register will be available to the public.

86. Section 27 provides that a letting agent may apply to be entered on the register, sets out the information that must be supplied as part of such an application, and makes provision for an application fee to be charged and gives the Scottish Ministers a power to determine this fee. The section should be read alongside section 39 which makes it an offence to operate as a letting agent without being entered on the register.

87. Subsection (2)(a) to (f) of section 27 sets out the information that an application must contain. These provide for what information is required depending on whether an applicant is a sole trader, a partnership, a company or a body with some other legal status. Where the applicant is not a natural person, subsection (2)(d) and (e) require certain details also to be supplied in relation to individual persons within the organisation who hold a senior or controlling position. When determining (under section 29) whether the applicant is a fit and proper person to be a registered letting agent, the Scottish Ministers may take into account information relating to these named individuals. Subsection (2)(a) to (f) should be read alongside section 28, which makes it an offence to knowingly supply false information or fail to supply the required information.

88. Section 28 makes it an offence to knowingly supply false information or to fail to provide the required information in an application under section 27.

89. Section 29 provides that the Scottish Ministers must determine an application which is made under section 27 and sets out aspects of the process they must follow. If they determine that the applicant, and any other person required to be identified in an application by virtue of section 27, is a fit and proper person to carry out letting agency work, and that the applicant meets any training requirements prescribed by the Scottish Ministers in regulations subject to the negative procedure, subsection (2) provides that they must enter the applicant on the register. Subsection (2A) provides that the regulations about training may prescribe further details of the training requirement - such as who should obtain it and when. If the Scottish Ministers determine that the applicant is not a fit and proper person then subsection (4) provides that they must refuse to enter the applicant in the register. These provisions should be read alongside section 30 which sets out the matters that must be considered in determining if a person is a fit and proper person to carry out letting agency work. Subsection (5) provides that where the Scottish Ministers are considering refusal of an application, they must give notice of this to the applicant, including providing reasons, and allow the applicant to make representations. Subsection (7)(d) requires the Scottish Ministers to provide reasons for a decision to refuse an application or a renewal of an existing provision.
90. Section 29A provides a time limit by which the Scottish Ministers must make a decision on applications of 12 months from receipt of the application for registration or renewal. The Scottish Ministers will have the power to apply to the First-tier Tribunal (FTT), before the expiry of the 12 months, for a decision to extend this period. The length of the extension period will be at the discretion of the FTT. There will be tacit approval to the letting agent register if the Scottish Ministers have not made a decision within 12 months of an application being made (or longer period if the Tribunal has extended the period). The effect of tacit approval is that an applicant is treated for all purposes as a registered letting agent (subject to the modifications in subsection (10)). Letting agents registered in these circumstances will have a registration period of 12 months before being required to reapply.

91. Section 30 sets out the material that the Scottish Ministers must take into account when deciding if a person is fit and proper to be entered on the register, which includes the Scottish Ministers having regard to all of the circumstances of the case. Subsection (2) relates to particular criminal convictions and contraventions of the law that must be considered. Subsection (3) lists matters to be considered that are related to compliance with the letting agent code of practice and any associated enforcement orders. Subsection (4) provides a power for the Scottish Ministers to modify the list of convictions and contraventions at subsections (2) and (3) by order subject to the affirmative procedure.

92. Section 31A provides that the Scottish Ministers may have regard to information on “relevant matters” as defined in section 113A of the Police Act 1997 to include convictions within the meaning of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974, including a spent conviction, and any notification requirement under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 where they have reasonable grounds to suspect that the information already provided to them under section 30(2) of the Bill is false or has become inaccurate.

Duties of registered letting agents

93. Section 32 requires the Scottish Ministers to allocate a number to each registered letting agent. Registered letting agents must take all reasonable steps to ensure that the number is included in documents sent to landlords or tenants (prospective or current), advertisements and communications, and any other material that the Scottish Ministers may specify by order. Subsection (3) defines “advertisement” and “communication”.

94. Section 33 places a duty on the registered letting agent to notify the Scottish Ministers in writing, as soon as practicable, if any of the information supplied in the application has become inaccurate due to a change in circumstances. Subsection (3) requires that any notification must be accompanied by such fee as the Scottish Ministers may determine by regulations, and subsection (3) provides a power for the Scottish Ministers to set that fee. Subsection (4) makes it an offence to fail to comply with this duty to inform.

Removal from the register

95. Section 34 provides that, unless a new application is made under section 27, the Scottish Ministers must remove a registered letting agent from the register after three years from the date of registration.
96. Section 35 provides that the Scottish Ministers may remove a registered letting agent from the register without waiting for the expiry of the three-year registration period if they no longer consider the agent, or any other person who is required to be identified in an application by virtue of section 27, to be a fit and proper person to carry out letting agency work or if the agent does not meet the training requirements prescribed under section 29(2)(c). Subsections (2) to (4) set out aspects of the process that the Scottish Ministers must follow before removing the person, including giving notice to the agent informing the agent of the right to make representations to the Scottish Ministers. There is also a requirement under subsection (4)(a) for the Scottish Ministers to provide their reasons for deciding to remove an agent from the register.

Appeals

97. Section 36 provides for appeals to the FTT against decisions of the Scottish Ministers in relation to refusal of a registration application or removal from the register. Subsection (2) sets out the time period (21 days) for an appeal to be made following notification of the decision.

Consequences of refusal or removal

98. Section 37 provides that where a person has been refused registration, or had the registration revoked, the Scottish Ministers must publicise this fact by noting it in the register. The note must remain on the register for a period of 12 months, unless the person is subsequently entered on the register within that time, in which case the note must be removed (subsections (4) and (5)).

99. Section 38 relates to situations where a person has been removed from the register or has been refused entry to the register. It provides that such a person cannot recover any costs relating to carrying out letting agency work after having been refused entry to the register or removed from the register, and after the relevant appeal period has expired. However, subsection (2A) provides that costs incurred before the relevant date may be recovered where the agent has been removed from the register by reason of the current registration expiring and no further application having been received. Subsection (3) also requires the Scottish Ministers to publish as soon as practicable after the relevant date, in such manner as they think fit, a notice of the agent’s refusal or removal and of the fact that no costs are recoverable from the date of refusal or removal.

Offences where no registration

100. Section 39 makes it an offence to carry out letting agency work unless registered. Subsection (2) provides that a person is not committing an offence during the period of 21 days following the date of notification of refusal or removal from the register and during the period of the appeal process up until the appeal is decided or abandoned. Subsection (4) sets out the relevant sanctions and provides on summary conviction for a prison term not exceeding six months or a fine not exceeding £50,000, or both.

101. Section 40 makes it an offence to use a number purporting to be a letting agent registration number without being a registered letting agent. Subsection (2) again provides that the offence will only be committed following 21 days of notification of refusal or removal from the register or following any appeal having been decided or abandoned.
Code of practice

102. Section 41 provides for the establishment of a letting agent code of practice. It gives a power to the Scottish Ministers, by regulations to create a code which sets out the standards of practice; the handling of tenants’ and landlords’ money and the professional indemnity arrangements which are required of persons who carry out letting agency work (which is defined at section 51). Before finalising the code, the Scottish Ministers must carry out consultation on a draft of it. The regulations will be subject to the affirmative procedure for the first version of the Code; and any future complete replacement of the Code. Revisions to the Code would be subject to the negative procedure.

103. Section 42 provides that where the terms of an agreement between the letting agent and either a landlord or tenant purport to exclude or limit any duty of the letting agent under the code or impose any penalty, disability or obligation in the event of a person enforcing compliance by the agent, the terms will have no effect.

Letting agent enforcement orders

104. Section 43 provides that the route of redress where alleged breaches of the code of practice will be determined will be the FTT. Subsection (1) provides that a tenant or landlord or the Scottish Ministers may apply to the FTT for such a determination regarding a relevant letting agent. A “relevant” letting agent is defined at subsection (2). The purpose of this section is to make it clear the circumstances in which a tenant or landlord or the Scottish Ministers can raise a case with the FTT.

105. Subsection (3) provides that a landlord, tenant or the Scottish Ministers applying to have a case heard at the FTT under subsection (1) must specify why they believe the code has been breached by the letting agent. Subsection (4) provides that, before applying to the FTT, a tenant or landlord or the Scottish Ministers must tell the letting agent about the alleged breach of the code and subsection (5) provides that the FTT may reject the application if the letting agent has not been allowed a reasonable opportunity to rectify the matter.

106. Subsection (6) provides that the FTT must decide regarding an application made under subsection (1) whether a letting agent has complied with the code of practice. Subsections (7) and (8) relate to a letting agent enforcement order which must be issued if the letting agent has failed to comply with the code, and set out what the order may consist of.

107. Section 44 provides that the FTT may vary or revoke an enforcement order made under section 43.

108. Section 45 provides steps that may be taken by the FTT to establish if a letting agent enforcement order has been complied with. Subsection (2) provides that the FTT must notify the Scottish Ministers if it determines there has been a failure to comply. This allows the Scottish Ministers to take the matter into account for registration considerations under section 30.

109. Section 46 makes it an offence to fail to comply with a letting agent enforcement order.
Monitoring of compliance

110. Section 46A gives the Scottish Ministers the power to require such documents and information as they may reasonably require from any person carrying out letting agency work (which will include from staff) where the letting agency is a company. For example, information could be requested from company directors, the company owner and its staff. The information is to be obtainable for the purposes of enabling the Scottish Ministers to exercise any of their functions under Part 4 of the Bill. This power covers Ministerial requests for information about compliance with the code of practice or the registration requirements. It does not enable the disclosure of information if such disclosure would be contrary to any enactment or rule of law.

111. Section 46B provides powers for the Scottish Ministers to authorise persons to carry out an inspection of premises which appear to be being used for the purpose of carrying out letting agency work. An authorised person has various powers which can be carried out at an inspection.

112. Section 46C outlines the circumstances where a sheriff, justice of the peace or stipendiary magistrate may issue a warrant to enable an authorised person to enter premises, by force if necessary, for the purpose of carrying out an inspection. In granting a warrant, the sheriff, justice of the peace or stipendiary magistrate will have to be satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for entering the premises and that one of the grounds for obtaining a warrant set out in subsection (2)(b) are met.

113. Section 46D provides a right for the person entering any premises to take such other persons and such equipment as the person considers necessary. The power of entry can only be exercised at a reasonable time and the occupier of the premises must be given at least 24 hours’ notice, unless giving such notice would defeat the object of the proposed inspection. A person carrying out an inspection must, if required to do so, produce written evidence of the person’s authorisation to exercise that right. If the premises are unoccupied or the occupier is temporarily absent, the person authorised to enter must leave the premises as effectively secured against trespassers as the person found them. A statement must be left on the premises giving particulars of what has been taken, and stating that the person has taken possession of it.

114. Section 46E creates offences relating to the powers to obtain information and carry out inspections at sections 46A and 46B. Subsection (1) makes it an offence to fail or refuse to provide information to the Scottish Ministers or an inspector without reasonable excuse or to make a false or misleading statement in a material particular. Subsection (2) provides that it is to be an offence for someone to intentionally obstruct a person in the exercise of a power of entry. It is also an offence to fail to provide information to an inspector or to fail to give an inspector such facilities and assistance as the inspector thinks necessary. Subsection (3) provides that a person committing an offence under subsection (1) or (2) is to be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

General

115. Section 47 provides a power for the Scottish Ministers to transfer, by regulations subject to the negative procedure, other, existing types of cases relating to letting agents which are currently within the jurisdiction of the sheriff court to the FTT.
116. Section 48 sets out, where offences are committed by bodies corporate, who within that body is considered to have committed the offence and be liable to be proceeded against.

117. Section 49 allows the Scottish Ministers to delegate their functions under Part 4 to another person or body (other than the powers to make orders or regulations).

118. Section 50 makes some consequential modifications to the 2004 Act relating to landlord registration.

119. Sections 51 and 52 provide definitions of various terms used within this Part. In particular, section 51, subsections (3) and (4), allows the Scottish Ministers by order to exempt specified bodies or certain types of schemes from the regulatory regime for letting agents, as well as allowing a modification of the general definition of “letting agency work”. An order exempting bodies or schemes would be subject to the negative procedure, whereas an order modifying the meaning of “letting agency work” would be subject to the affirmative procedure.

PART FIVE – MOBILE HOME SITES WITH PERMANENT RESIDENTS

120. Part 5 makes provision for the licensing system for mobile home sites with permanent residents.

General application

121. The provisions in this part of the Bill amend the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (“the 1960 Act”). The 1960 Act requires occupiers of land (referred to in these Notes as “site owners”) to hold a licence before they allow their land to be used as a caravan site. Currently the same licensing regime applies to sites used for holiday caravans, and sites with permanent residents. The Bill changes the licensing regime for most sites with permanent residents. These sites are defined as “relevant permanent sites” in new section 32Z5, which is inserted into the 1960 Act by section 70 of the Bill. New section 32Z5 is an interpretation section for new Part 1A.

122. New Part 1A deals with the licensing of relevant permanent sites in Scotland. Sites that have a licence that only allows mobile homes on them to be used for holidays are not affected by new Part 1A of the 1960 Act. Part 1 of the 1960 Act will continue to apply to such holiday sites. The definition of “excepted permission” (also in new section 32Z5) means that holiday sites that have an employee of the site owner living on them year round (for example to manage the site), are not covered by new Part 1A of the 1960 Act.

123. Section 53 of the Bill amends section 32 of the 1960 Act by inserting a new paragraph (m) into section 32(1). Section 32 changes the operation and wording of Part 1 of the 1960 Act as it applies to Scotland. For example it replaces references to English courts and legal terms with references to the relevant equivalents under Scots law. All the provisions in Part 1 of the 1960 Act need to be read alongside section 32 when considering how the Act applies to Scotland. The effect of the new paragraph (m) is that, when applying the 1960 Act to a relevant permanent site in Scotland, it is also necessary to read the provisions of Part 1A.
Part 1A site licence

124. Section 54 of the Bill inserts new sections 32B and 32C into the 1960 Act. New section 32B has the effect of replacing the existing system for licensing mobile home sites with permanent residents in Scotland (in terms of Part 1 of the 1960 Act) with the new system set out in new Part 1A (in terms of new section 32A(1)). New section 32B(1) provides that a relevant permanent site application may be made by the site owner of the relevant permanent site to the local authority in whose area the site is situated, and new section 32B(2) sets out what such a site licence application must include. For example, it must be in such format as is determined by the local authority, and specify the land in respect of which the application is made. Section 32B(3) requires an applicant to provide such information to the local authority as it reasonably requires.

125. New section 32C provides that the relevant local authority may charge a fee for a site licence application. A local authority may also fix different fees for different applications (subsection (2)). Such a fee cannot exceed the amount a local authority considers represents the reasonable costs of deciding on an application (subsection (3)). Subsection (4) provides that the Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision about the charging of fees for site licence applications. This could include setting out the factors a local authority could take into account when fixing the fee for a site licence, and providing for the fee not to exceed a maximum fee level prescribed by the Scottish Ministers in the regulations.

126. Section 55 inserts new section 32D into the 1960 Act which provides for the issue and renewal of a site licence for a relevant permanent site. New section 32D(1) provides that a local authority may issue a site licence:

- where the applicant has the relevant planning permission (for the use of the land as a caravan site otherwise than by a development order), and
- if the authority is satisfied that the applicant is a fit and proper person or where the applicant is not a natural person, that both the applicant and the individual holding the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body are fit and proper persons, and
- if the authority is satisfied that any person appointed by the applicant to manage the site is a fit and proper person, and in the case where a person to be appointed by the applicant to manage the site is not a natural person, that both the person to be appointed and any individual who is to be directly concerned with the management of the site are fit and proper persons.

127. Section 32D(2) provides that a local authority must renew a licence if:

- the applicant has the relevant planning permission (for the use of the land as a caravan site otherwise than by a development order), and
- if the authority is satisfied that the applicant is a fit and proper person or where the applicant is not a natural person, the both the applicant (subsection (2)(b)(i)) and the individual holding the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body (subsection (2)(b)(ii)) are fit and proper persons, and
• if the authority if satisfied that any person appointed by the applicant to manage the site is a fit and proper person, and in the case where a person to be appointed by the applicant to manage the site is not a natural person, that both the person to be appointed (subsection 2(b)(iii)) and any individual who is to be directly concerned with the management of the site (subsection 2(b)(iv) are fit and proper persons.

128. New section 32D(3) provides that the local authority must not at any time issue a site licence to a person whom the local authority knows had held a site licence which has been revoked under the 1960 Act less than three years before that time.

129. New section 32D(4) provides that before refusing to issue a site licence, the authority must give the applicant a notice stating that it is considering refusal and its reasoning for this, and informing the applicant of the right to make written representations to the authority before the date specified in the notice. New section 32D(5) requires the local authority to consider the application and any representations made in making its decision.

130. Section 55 also inserts new section 32E into the 1960 Act. Section 32E sets out procedures for the transfer of a site licence (other than on the death of a site licence holder) to a person who is to become the site owner of the relevant permanent site. This would occur, for example, where a site was sold to a new owner. Procedures similar to those that apply for a new site licence application apply in this situation, such as the need for the new site licence holder (and any person appointed to manage the site) to be a fit and proper person to hold a site licence (subsection (2)). Subsection (3) also provides that the applicant and transferee must provide the local authority with such information as the authority reasonably requires in order to establish whether the person is a fit and proper person. Subsection (4) requires a local authority, before refusing consent to the transfer of a licence, to give the applicant a notice that states that it is considering refusing its consent, and the reasons why. The applicant then has an opportunity to make written representations to the local authority before the date specified on the notice (which must be at least 28 days after the notice is given). A local authority must consider these representations.

131. Section 55 also inserts new section 32F into the 1960 Act. New section 32F makes provision for the setting of time limits in relation to an application for a site licence and consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E. Under the provision, the Scottish Ministers must set in regulations a time limit within which a local authority must decide on applications to issue a site licence for the first time, an application to renew a site licence, and an application to transfer a site licence. Ministers can set different time limits for different types of application. If a local authority does not meet the time limits set in the regulations then the applicant is to be treated as having been granted a site licence by the authority under new section 32F (subsection (7)). The period may be extended by the sheriff by such period as the sheriff thinks fit (subsection (3)), the sheriff may not extend the period unless the authority applies for the extension before the period expires (subsection (4)), the applicant is entitled to be party to any proceedings to extend the period of determination (subsection (5)), and the sheriff’s decision on such summary application is final (subsection (6)). If a local authority does not determine an application for consent to transfer a licence within the period, then the applicant is to be treated as having been granted consent on the day the application was made (subsection (8)).
Section 55 also inserts new section 32G into the 1960 Act. This provision gives the local authority the power to transfer a site licence to the person it considers to be the site owner of the relevant permanent site (subsection (2)), where a holder of a site licence does not seek consent of the authority for the transfer under section 10(1) of the 1960 Act and where it appears to the authority that the holder of the licence is no longer the site owner. The section introduces an offence of knowingly or recklessly providing false or misleading information to a local authority in relation to a local authority decision to transfer a licence. A person who commits such an offence is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale (subsection (7)). In 2013 this was a maximum of £1,000.

New section 32H as inserted into the 1960 Act by section 55, provides that where a relevant permanent site licence is transferred to a person in accordance with section 10(4) of the 1960 Act, that person must give the authority such information as the authority may reasonably require in order to make a determination under new section 32L, in relation to a decision to revoke a site licence on the basis that someone is not a fit and proper person.

New section 32I is inserted into the 1960 Act by section 55. It requires a local authority after:

- determinations of relevant permanent site applications,
- determinations of an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in new section 32E,
- a decision to transfer a licence mentioned in new section 32G, to notify respectively the applicant, the applicant and the transferee, and the previous holder of the site licence and transferee, of the decision, the reasons for it, and the right to appeal under new section 32M. It must do so as soon as practicable after making the decision (subsection (1)).

Section 56 inserts new section 32J into the 1960 Act and provides that a site licence issued or renewed for a “relevant permanent site” will be for a duration of five years (unless terminated by its revocation, or unless the holder is no longer entitled to planning permission for use of the land as a caravan site, or any planning permission for the use of the site as a caravan site expires). New section 32J(2) gives the Scottish Ministers the power to alter the duration of site licences, by order subject to the affirmative procedure.

Section 57 inserts new section 32K into the 1960 Act. This requires a site licence holder to tell a local authority when the holder has appointed someone new to manage the site. New section 32K also requires a site licence holder to notify a local authority of a change of circumstances that means that information provided by the licence holder has become inaccurate. They must do so within 28 days of the day the information previously provided becomes inaccurate.

Section 58 inserts new section 32L into the 1960 Act. This gives a local authority the power to revoke a site licence if the local authority is satisfied that the licence holder is no longer a fit and proper person, or that the person appointed to manage a site is no longer a fit and proper person. Where the licence holder is a non-natural person, the licence can be revoked where the local authority is satisfied that either the licence holder (subsection (1)(a)) or the individual who... holds the most senior position in the body (subsection (1)(b)) is no longer a fit and proper person.

138. Section 32L(2) sets out the procedures a local authority must follow when revoking a licence (such as the requirement to notify the site owner of the proposed revocation and of the right of the site owner to make written representations). Subsection (4) requires a local authority to serve notice of the revocation on the owner of the relevant permanent site, identifying the site licence to which it relates and explaining the right of appeal. The local authority must also provide its reason(s) for revoking the licence.

139. Section 59 inserts new section 32M into the 1960 Act. Under this section the person involved (the applicant, the applicant and transferee, the previous holder of the licence and the transferee, depending on the determination) can appeal to the sheriff against a local authority’s decision on a site licence application, on the transfer of a licence (whether on death of a site licence holder or not) or a decision to revoke a site licence.

140. Section 60 inserts new section 32N into the 1960 Act. This section gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make regulations in relation to the procedure to be followed in relation to:

- the issue, renewal, transfer, transmission and revocation of a permanent site licence,
- appeals relating to a site licence under new section 32M.

The Scottish Ministers can also make provision for the determination and consequences of an appeal under section 32M.

Fit and proper persons

141. Section 61 inserts new section 32O into the 1960 Act. The section sets out the factors a local authority must consider when applying the fit and proper person test, for example to potential site licence holders, or existing site licence holders seeking to renew a licence. This section provides that the relevant material that can be taken into account includes:

- whether the person has been convicted of offences involving fraud or other dishonesty, violence, drugs, firearms, and sexual offences within the meaning of section 210A(10) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995,
- evidence an applicant has practised unlawful discrimination,
- whether the person has contravened the law relating to caravans, housing, and landlords and tenants
- whether the person has committed a breach of an agreement to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 applies,
- whether the person has engaged in antisocial behaviour,
- whether the person has breached the conditions of the site licence,
- other relevant material a local authority is aware of from its licensing duties.

142. Subsection (6) gives the Scottish Ministers the power to adjust the list of relevant material, by order subject to the affirmative procedure.
143. Section 62 inserts new section 32P into the 1960 Act. This gives a local authority the power, if it is carrying out the fit and proper person test, to require the relevant person to provide a criminal conviction certificate. A local authority can only do so if it has reasonable grounds to suspect that the information an applicant has provided in relation to the fit and proper person test is, or has become, inaccurate.

144. Section 62A inserts new section 32PA into the 1960 Act. This enables local authorities to share information relevant to the application of the fit and proper person test.

Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

145. Section 63 inserts new sections 32Q, 32R and 32S into the 1960 Act. New section 32Q makes it an offence for someone to knowingly or recklessly provide information that is materially false or misleading to a local authority, in respect of an application for, or transfer of, a site licence or where information is provided following a change of circumstances. It also makes it an offence for a person, without reasonable excuse, to fail to notify a local authority of a change of circumstances under section 32K (for example, the appointment of a new person to manage a site). Lastly, section 32Q makes it an offence to fail to provide to a local authority such information as it might reasonably require under section 32K(3) and (4). If a person commits these offences, the penalty is a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale (in 2013 this was a maximum of £1,000).

146. Section 32R makes it an offence for someone to cause or permit land to be used as a relevant permanent site without a licence. The maximum fine, if convicted for doing so, is £50,000. New section 32S makes it an offence for the site owner of a relevant permanent site to fail to comply with any licence conditions. The maximum fine, if convicted of breaching a licence condition, is £10,000.

Local authority enforcement at relevant permanent sites

147. Section 64 inserts new sections 32U, 32V and 32W into the 1960 Act. These sections all relate to improvement notices. New section 32U sets out:

- the situation in which a local authority may issue an improvement notice,
- what must be part of such a notice (such as what needs to be improved, and the period within which action needs to be carried out done),
- that there is a right of appeal to the sheriff by way of summary application,
- when the period specified in the notice begins, and
- the powers a local authority has to suspend, revoke, or vary an improvement notice.

148. New section 32V makes it an offence for a site owner who has been served with an improvement notice to fail to comply with the terms of the notice. If someone is convicted of doing so the maximum fine is £10,000.

149. New section 32W gives a local authority the power, if the site owner fails to take the steps specified in the improvement notice within the period specified, to take the action required on a site to meet the conditions set out in the improvement notice. Subsection (2) requires the local authority to give the site owner notice, and specific details, of the work the local authority will be carrying out (or the authority will be requiring someone else to do on its behalf and to give that person’s name), and the dates and times on which this intended action will be taken.

150. Section 65 inserts new section 32X into the 1960 Act. This gives a local authority the power to issue a penalty notice on the site owner, and provides for the situations in which the authority can do so (where there is no licence or a breach of licence conditions). A penalty notice has the effect of suspending, for a specific period of time, payments residents may be making for:

- the right to station a mobile home on a site,
- rent for the occupation of a mobile home caravan on the site, and
- the use of the common areas on the site, and their maintenance.

It also suspends the commission a mobile home resident can be required to pay the site owner on sale of a mobile home (under paragraph 1 of Part 1 of Schedule 1 to the 1983 Act). The section sets out what must be included in such a notice (subsection (2)), when the penalty period begins (subsection 3A), and the relevant appeal procedures (subsection (6)).

151. Section 66 inserts new section 32Y into the 1960 Act. This provision relates to the appointment of an interim manager to manage a mobile home site. Section 32Y(1) gives a local authority the power to apply to a sheriff to appoint an interim manager for a site. Subsection (5) gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make regulations relating to the appointment of an interim manager. These regulations may, in particular, cover the powers of an interim manager, the qualifications the manager must hold, and the actions the interim manager must carry out.

152. Section 67 inserts section 32Z into the 1960 Act. This gives a local authority the power to take emergency action where it appears to a local authority that:

- the site licence holder is failing, or has failed, to comply with a site licence condition; and as a result of that there is an imminent risk to the health and safety of anyone who is, or may be, on the land, or
- a person is causing or permitting land to be used as a relevant permanent site without a site licence, and there is an imminent risk to the health and safety of anyone who is, or may be, on the land.

153. In the circumstances above the local authority would be able to carry out work to remove the imminent risk of serious harm. The section requires an authority to provide notice to the site owner in an emergency action notice before carrying out emergency action (subsection (4)), and to provide the site owner with an emergency action report after it has begun undertaking emergency action (subsection (7)). It also provides for appeals against an authority taking emergency action.

154. Under section 26 of the 1960 Act any authorised officer of a local authority has a right of entry to a mobile home site, subject to provisions about the purpose of such entry and the hours in which it takes place. Section 68 inserts new section 32Z1 into the 1960 Act. This extends the applicability of the provisions in section 26, so that they cover situations relating to the use of the new enforcement powers a local authority has under this Bill in relation to relevant permanent sites. In relation to an emergency action notice it also has the effect that a site owner is not required to have 24 hours’ notice that someone will be carrying out such works, and that entry to the site does not have to be at a reasonable hour. This is to cover situations where such entry must be carried out urgently, for example to address something that is immediately dangerous on a site.

155. Section 69 inserts new sections 32Z2, 32Z3 and 32Z4 into the 1960 Act. Section 32Z2 gives a local authority the power to recover expenses from a site owner where the local authority has served an improvement notice, penalty notice, or emergency action notice on, or provided at emergency action report to, a site owner. Section 32Z3 allows a local authority to recover from the site owner the expenses of taking action under an improvement notice or emergency action notice.

156. Section 32Z4 gives a local authority the power to recover costs for inspections and other work to investigate or assess compliance with the provisions of this Act.

Miscellaneous

157. Section 70 inserts sections 32Z5 and 32Z5A into the 1960 Act. Section 32Z5 sets out the definitions of terms that are introduced into the 1960 Act through the Bill. Section 32Z5A gives the Scottish Ministers the power to issue guidance about the operation of the mobile home site licensing system set out in Part 5 of the Bill. The Scottish Ministers can issue such guidance after consulting such persons as they consider appropriate, and a local authority must have regard to any guidance issued under section 32Z5A.

158. Section 71 sets out transitional provisions for existing site licences. Under this section an existing site licence would continue in force for two years from the day the relevant section of the Bill comes into force, unless it is revoked or replaced by a new licence issued by the local authority.

159. Section 71A inserts new paragraphs into Schedule 1 to the Mobile Homes Act 1983. Under the paragraphs inserted by section 71A(a), the expiry, non-renewal, or revocation of a site licence has no effect on a person’s right to station a mobile home on a site, if a mobile home resident has an agreement to which the 1983 Act applies. This means that the rights of residents to remain on the site under the 1983 Act will not be affected by a decision to revoke, or to refuse to issue or renew, a site licence, or if a site licence expires.

160. The sub-paragraphs inserted into the 1983 Act by section 71A(b) prevent pitch fees paid to a site owner from being increased to take account of any costs paid, or to be paid, by the site owner as a result of a local authority recovering the costs of enforcement action.

PART SIX – PRIVATE HOUSING CONDITIONS

161. Part 6 amends local authority powers to enforce repairs and maintenance in private homes.
Tenement management scheme

162. Section 72(1)(b) inserts a new section 4A in the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (“the Tenements Act”). This allows local authorities to pay a missing share when the majority of owners in a tenement block have agreed to carry out work to repair or maintain their property, and one or more of the owners has not paid their share of the cost of the work (where the owner is unable or unwilling to do so, or where the owners cannot be identified or found). New section 4A(5) allows the local authority to recover the costs of the missing share and any associated administrative expenses from the owner on whose behalf it was paid. Before exercising this power, the local authority must notify the owner who has not paid a share that it intends to make the payment itself (new section 4A(4)).

163. Section 72(1)(d) amends rule 5 of the Tenement Management Scheme in schedule 1 to the Tenements Act, so that the other owners are not liable for the costs of another owner which are met by a share paid by a local authority.

164. Section 72(2) amends section 172 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (“the 2006 Act”) so that local authorities can use repayment charges to recover the costs of paying missing shares from the owner on whose behalf the missing share was paid.

Notice of potential liability for costs: notice of discharge

165. Section 72A makes amendments to the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003 (“the 2003 Act”) and the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”). These amendments provide for a discharge procedure in respect of notices of potential liability for costs registered under section 10(2) of the 2003 Act and section 12(3) of the 2004 Act. Currently, section 10A(3) of the 2003 Act and section 13(3) of the 2004 Act provide that a notice of potential liability for costs will expire at the end of three years unless it is renewed. This will continue, but the amendment will allow the notice of potential liability to be discharged during the three-year period or any renewal period.

166. Subsection (1) inserts new subsections 10A(3A) and (3B) into the 2003 Act. Subsection (2)(a) inserts new subsections 13(3A) and (3B) into the 2004 Act.

167. Under the new sections 10A(3A) of the 2003 Act and 13(3A) of the 2004 Act, an owner of a burdened property can apply to register a notice of discharge if the notice of potential liability for costs has not expired, the liability for costs in relation to that property has been fully discharged and consent from the person who registered the notice has been obtained. Evidence of such consent would need to be included with the application to register the discharge notice.

168. The new sections 10A(3B)(a) of the 2003 Act and 13(3B)(a) of the 2004 Act provide that the notice of discharge must be submitted in a form prescribed by the Scottish Ministers by order.

169. It is possible to register a notice of potential liability for costs against more than one flat or property. The new sections 10A(3B)(b) of the 2003 Act and 13(3B)(b) of the 2004 Act provide that registration of a notice of discharge in relation to a property discharges the notice of potential liability for costs only to the extent that it applies to that property.
170. Paragraph (2)(b) amends the definition of “register” in section 29 of the 2004 Act to include a notice of discharge.

Work notices

171. Section 73 amends section 30(1) of the 2006 Act, which provides powers for local authorities to issue work notices to require owners to carry out work on substandard houses. The amendment inserts an additional ground on which the local authority may issue a work notice, which is where the work is needed to improve the safety or security of any house (whether or not situated in a housing renewal area).

Maintenance orders and plans

172. Section 74 amends section 42(2) of the 2006 Act, which provides powers for local authorities to issue maintenance orders to require owners to prepare a maintenance plan for securing the maintenance of the house to a reasonable standard. The amendment inserts an additional ground on which the local authority may issue a maintenance order, which is where a work notice has been served and no certificate has been issued to confirm that the work required to be carried out by the work notice has been completed.

173. Section 75(3) repeals the provisions in section 61 of 2006 Act which require local authorities to register in the appropriate land register maintenance plans approved or devised under section 46 of the 2006 Act, or varied under section 47, and notices of revocation of a maintenance plan under section 47. Section 75(1) amends section 24(1) of the Building (Scotland) Act 2003 to require local authorities to include a record of decisions to approve, devise, vary or revoke maintenance plans in the building standards register.

174. Section 75(2) amends section 47 of the 2006 Act, which allows local authorities to vary or revoke maintenance plans. The amendment allows local authorities to revoke a maintenance plan where the local authority is satisfied that a property factor has been appointed to manage or maintain the premises to which the plan relates. “Property factor” is defined in section 2 of the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011.

Non-residential premises: repayment charges

175. Section 76 amends sections 172 and 173 of the 2006 which allow local authorities to recover costs in connection with enforcement of repairs and maintenance to living accommodation by creating a repayment charge which is recoverable in thirty equal annual instalments. A repayment charge is a charge against property and has priority over all future burdens and most existing burdens on the property. The amendment widens the scope of sections 172 and 173 to include any non-residential parts of buildings that contain living accommodation.

Charging orders

176. Section 76A amends paragraphs 4 and 6 of Schedule 9 to the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 by removing references to feu duties.
177. Schedule 9 to the 1987 Act relates to recovery of expenses by charging orders in favour of local authorities after the authority has carried out certain work on a building.

178. The Abolition of Feudal Tenure etc. (Scotland) Act 2000 (“the 2000 Act”) abolished feu duties and related payments. Paragraph 4(b)(i) of Schedule 9 to the 1987 Act made provision on the priority between, on the one hand, a charging order under Schedule 9 and, on the other hand, feu duties and related payments. Given that feu duties and related payments have been abolished, there is no longer any need for this provision. Therefore, it is repealed by section 76A(1)(a).

179. Section 76A(2) and (3) makes consequential amendments to section 108(2) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and section 19(3) of the Crofters (Scotland) Act 1993 to remove references to paragraph 4(b)(i) of Schedule 9 to the 1987 Act.

180. Section 76A(1)(b) amends paragraph 6 of Schedule 9 to the 1987 Act to remove a reference to feu duties and provide that charging order annuities are recoverable as debts under overarching debt recovery legislation.

PART SEVEN – MISCELLANEOUS

Right to redeem heritable security after 20 years: power to exempt

181. Part 7 of the Bill contains a provision, section 77(1) which amends the “20-year security rule” – section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974 (“the 1974 Act”).

182. Section 11 of the 1974 Act permits debtors to redeem a standard security over property used as, or as part of, a private dwelling house once 20 years from the date of creation of the security has elapsed, regardless of the fact that the security is for a longer contractual term. Social landlords, their connected bodies and rural housing bodies are able to renounce their right to redeem a standard security after 20 years.

183. The amendment in section 77(1) which inserts subsection (3D) into section 11 of the 1974 Act provides that the right to redeem a standard security, as permitted by section 11, will not be allowed in certain circumstances to be prescribed by the Scottish Ministers by order subject to the negative procedure.

184. Section 77(1) also inserts subsection (3E) into section 11, which provides that an order under subsection (3D) may disapply the right to redeem a standard security subject to certain conditions or restrictions. Such an order may restrict the disapplication of the right to redeem to specified descriptions of debt, to specified creditors or creditors of specified descriptions, to specified heritable securities or heritable securities of specified descriptions. It may prescribe circumstances in which the disapplication of the right to redeem is to apply or cease to apply. For example, an order under new section 11(3D) could exclude debtors who grant a standard security in favour of the Scottish Ministers as part of a Scottish Government shared equity scheme or equity release scheme from being able to exercise the right to redeem their security after 20 years.
First-tier Tribunal: disqualification of members from exercise of certain functions

185. Section 77A(1) provides that the holders of certain offices are disqualified from exercising functions of the First-tier Tribunal (FTT) in relation to the jurisdiction over private rented sector housing matters transferred from the jurisdiction of the sheriff by Part 3 and disputes involving letting agents conferred by Part 4 of the Bill. This has the effect of disqualifying the holders of the offices listed at subsection (2) from being appointed to exercise those functions. It also has the effect of disqualifying any existing members of the FTT who hold the listed offices from exercising those functions.

186. Section 77A(3) provides that the Scottish Ministers may amend the list of disqualified offices by order. This power could be used to add or remove offices.

Private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership

187. Section 77B inserts new paragraph 1A into Schedule 4 to the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984. Paragraph 1A(1) inserted into Schedule 4 to the 1984 Act provides that the holders of certain offices are disqualified from being a member of the private rented housing panel (PRHP) and lists the offices. The PRHP also has functions conferred by the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011 and when carrying out these functions is known as the homeowner housing panel (HOHP). Members of the PRHP are also members of the HOHP. Therefore these disqualifications also affect the composition of the HOHP...

188. Paragraph 1A(2) inserted into Schedule 4 to the 1984 Act provides that the Scottish Ministers may amend the list of disqualified offices by order. This power could be used to add or remove offices.

Delegation of certain functions

189. Section 78(1) amends section 21 of the 2006 Act by introducing a new power for the president of the private rented housing panel to delegate functions under section 23 of the 2006 Act (to refer applications to the private rented housing panel or reject applications), to the vice-president of the panel or to another member of the panel as the president sees fit (new section 21(8A) of the 2006 Act). This is in addition to the existing powers enabling the transfer of the president’s functions during times of absence or incapacity as provided for in section 21(8) of the 2006 Act. The provision is intended to increase flexibility to manage the multiple work strands undertaken by the panel. New section 21(8B) provides that such a delegation does not affect the president’s responsibility for the carrying out of delegated functions or ability to carry out the delegated functions.

190. Section 78(2) inserts new subsections (8) and (9) into section 16 of the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011 to provide that the functions of the president of the homeowner housing panel under section 18 (to refer applications to the homeowner housing panel for a determination as to whether a property factor has failed to carry out the factor’s duties or to comply with the property factor code of conduct or to reject applications) may be delegated to the vice-president of the panel or to such other member of the panel as the president sees fit. New subsection (9) provides that such a delegation does not affect the president’s responsibility for the carrying out of delegated functions, or ability to carry out delegated functions.
Scottish Housing Regulator: transfer of assets following inquiries

191. Section 79 makes amendments to section 67 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 (“the 2010 Act”).

192. Paragraph (a) introduces new subsections (4A), (4B) and (4C) to section 67 of the 2010 Act.

193. Subsection (4A) has the effect of creating a narrow exception to the duty on the Scottish Housing Regulator (the Regulator), at section 67(4), always to consult and have regard to the views of tenants and secured creditors that hold securities over houses of a registered social landlord (RSL) before it directs a transfer of the RSL’s assets. The exception would apply in circumstances where the Regulator considered that all of the conditions specified at (a) to (d) of the new subsection were satisfied. These relate to the RSL being in financial jeopardy and vulnerable to steps being taken towards its insolvency, winding up etc. Where the direction to transfer assets would reduce the risk of such steps being taken, if made without the delay that consultation with either the RSL’s tenants or its secured creditors would cause, the Regulator could direct the transfer of a RSL’s assets without such consultations. When the Regulator is considering whether to direct a transfer without such consultations, it must consider separately whether there is time for it to consult the tenants and time for it to consult the secured creditors. If it concludes that there would be time to consult one group but not the other, it must consult that group. In all other circumstances, the duty to consult tenants and secured creditors that section 67(4) imposes on the Regulator would remain.

194. Subsection (4B) requires the Regulator to consult and issue guidance on the circumstances in which it would expect subsection (4A) to apply, the actions it would expect to take in circumstances where subsection (4A) applied, and how it would communicate with any tenants and their representatives, RSLs and their representatives, and secured creditors and their representatives affected by subsection (4A) being applied.

195. Subsection (4C) inserts a replacement provision for section 67(6)(a) of the 2010 Act, which paragraph (b) of section 79 of the Bill repeals. Section 67(b)(a) requires the Regulator, when it is directing the transfer of some of the assets of a RSL, always to obtain an independent valuation of the assets to be transferred and to direct the transfer at a price that it considers the assets would fetch on the open market. Subsection (4C) reinstates the duty on the Regulator to obtain an independent valuation, but instead of requiring the Regulator to direct any transfer at an open market price, requires it to have regard to the valuation in directing the transfer.

Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

196. Section 79A adds new sections after sections 104 and 124 of the 2010 Act.

197. Subsection (1) introduces new section 104A. The new section provides that arrangements under which a RSL would become the subsidiary of another body are subject to the consent of the Regulator in the same way as arrangements by which a RSL would transfer its assets to another RSL.

198. Subsection (2) introduces new sections 124A and 124B.
199. Subsection (1) of new section 124A provides that arrangements by which a RSL would become a subsidiary of another body are subject to the special procedures set out in sections 114 to 121 of the 2010 Act. This has the effect of making the Regulator’s consent conditional on the tenants of the RSL having been consulted beforehand. Subsection (2) of the new section describes exceptional circumstances in which the special procedures at sections 114 to 121 of the 2010 Act are not to apply. They are the same circumstances in relation to financial jeopardy that section 79 introduces through new sections 67(4A)(a)-(c) of the 2010 Act. Subsection (3) provides that in these circumstances the Regulator can give or refuse its consent to a RSL becoming a subsidiary of another RSL without the tenants of the RSL having been consulted.

200. New section 124B makes purchaser protection provision (identical to that made by sections 122 and 124 for disposal and restructuring consents) in relation to the provision made by section 124A.

201. Subsections (3) and (4) make the definition of “subsidiary” currently provided for the purposes of section 164 of the 2010 Act apply more generally, to interpret its use in the new provisions. No change is made to the meaning; “subsidiary” continues to have the same meaning as in the Companies Act 2006 or, as the case may be, the Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies and Credit Unions Act 1968.

Repeal of defective designation provisions

202. Section 80 of the Bill provides for the repeal of Part 14 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 (“the 1987 Act”) together with Schedules 20 and 21 of that Act. This removes the provisions of the 1987 Act which deal with the designation as defective of prescribed types of dwelling, the power to provide assistance to owners of such dwellings and the giving of notice to persons seeking to acquire a dwelling that is defective. These provisions are dependent on the Scottish Ministers or local authorities designating classes of buildings as defective, which was last done by the Scottish Ministers in 1984 and appears never to have been done by any local authority. The power to designate is, therefore, being repealed.

203. These provisions were originally set out in the Housing Defects Act 1984 and the provisions affecting Scotland were replaced by Part 14 of the 1987 Act. The designation of dwelling types was made by the Housing Defects (Prefabricated Reinforced Concrete Dwellings) (Scotland) Designations 1984. The period during which applications for assistance could be submitted in respect of these dwelling types has expired, making Part 14 obsolete.

PART EIGHT – SUPPLEMENTARY AND FINAL PROVISIONS

Interpretation

204. Section 81 provides the definition of various terms used in the Bill.

Subordinate legislation

205. Section 82 provides that any power of the Scottish Ministers to make an order or regulations includes a power to make different provision for different purposes or different areas, and incidental, supplemental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision.
Subsection (2) lists orders where the affirmative procedure is required. Subsection (3) provides that all other orders and regulations are subject to the negative procedure. Subsection (4) provides that any commencement order is not subject to either procedure.

Ancillary provision

206. Section 83 gives the Scottish Ministers a free-standing power by order to make such supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional or transitory provision or savings as they consider necessary or expedient for the purposes or in connection with any provision made by or under the Bill.

Minor and consequential amendments

207. Section 84 introduces schedule 2, which amends and repeals enactments as required in consequence of this Bill.

Commencement

208. Section 85 allows the Scottish Ministers by order to set different dates to commence different provisions of the Bill (such an order may include transitional, transitory or saving provision as they consider necessary or expedient). It also specifies that section 1(1) (abolition of right to buy) may not come into force until a period of at least two years has passed, starting from the day of Royal Assent and that section 77 comes into force at the end of the period of two months beginning with the day of Royal Assent.

Short title

209. Section 86 gives the short title of the Bill.

SCHEDULE 1 – TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION TO FIRST-TIER TRIBUNAL

Part 1 – Regulated tenancies, Part VII contracts and assured tenancies

210. Part 1 of schedule 1 makes consequential amendments to the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 (“the 1984 Act”) and the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (“the 1988 Act”) to transfer the jurisdiction for specific civil matters relating to the private rented sector from the sheriff to the First-tier Tribunal (FTT) and to enable the FTT to use the same powers and procedures as the court currently has at its disposal to make determinations for the types of actions outlined below.

Rent (Scotland) Act 1984

211. Paragraph 2 amends section 7(2) of the 1984 Act. Section 7(1) of the 1984 Act makes provision for how the rateable value of dwelling houses should be ascertained and section 7(2) provides the sheriff with powers to determine the proper apportionment of value of a dwelling house, where any question in relation to this arises.

212. Paragraphs 3 and 31 amend section 11 and Schedule 2 of the 1984 Act. Section 11 provides for the grounds for possession of certain dwelling houses repossesssion cases and schedule 2 specifies the circumstances in which orders for possession can be made. These include non-payment of rent or antisocial behaviour.

213. Paragraph 4 amends section 12 of the 1984 Act. Section 12 provides extended discretion to sist or suspend proceedings to allow the sherriff to manage proceedings for repossession. For example, this could be to allow a party to fulfil or complete an action or to pay arrears.

214. Consequential to the transfer of repossession cases to the FTT in paragraph 3, paragraph 5 amends section 19 of the 1984 Act. Section 19 regards the rights of subtenants in circumstances where an order for possession of a dwelling house has been made.

215. Paragraph 6 amends section 21 of the 1984 Act. Section 21 regards circumstances where it appears to a sheriff court, after having given a landlord an order for possession of a dwelling house let on a protected tenancy or subject to a statutory tenancy, that the order was maintained by misrepresentation or concealment of material facts, and provides that the court has the power to order compensation be paid to the former tenants for loss or damage sustained.

216. Paragraph 7 amends section 23(1) of the 1984 Act. Section 23 regards tenancies which are not regulated tenancies or Part VII contracts and provides that the enforcement of repossession eviction for these tenancies is unlawful other than through proceedings before the sheriff.

217. Paragraph 8 amends section 24 of the 1984 Act. Section 24 makes special provision with regard to proceedings for repossession where the tenant is a person employed in agriculture (as defined in section 17 of the Agricultural Wages (Scotland) Act 1949).

218. Paragraph 9 repeals the definition of court from section 25 of the 1984 Act as this is no longer required as relevant proceedings are transferred to the FTT.

219. Consequentially to the transfer of jurisdiction for repossession in paragraphs 7 and 8, paragraph 10 amends section 26 of the 1984 Act. Section 26 provides that proceedings for repossession under Part III of that Act are binding on the Crown.

220. Paragraph 11 repeals section 27 of the 1984 Act which set out the procedure for applications to the sheriff under Part III.

221. Paragraph 12 amends section 31(2) of the 1984 Act. Section 31(2) regards rents under regulated tenancies and provides powers to adjust recoverable rent to cover services and furniture.

222. Paragraph 13 amends section 32(4) and (5) of the 1984 Act. Section 32(4) and (5) regard notices of increase to rent under regulated tenancies and provides powers to amend errors.

223. Paragraph 14 amends section 35(12) of the 1984 Act. Section 35(12) provides for the sufficiency of evidence in relation to rent agreements. The effect of the amendment is to ensure that this applies to proceedings before the Scottish Tribunals.
224. Paragraph 15 amends section 39 of the 1984 Act. Section 39 provides powers to order rectification of rent books after determination of recoverable rent. The effect of the amendment is to provide that the FTT can order the rectification of rent books in applicable cases.

225. Paragraph 16 amends section 43B(4) of the 1984 Act. Section 43B(4) regards changes of rent registration service providers and provides for the continuation of proceedings. The effect of the amendment is to provide that tribunal proceedings can continue following changes of responsibility.

226. Paragraph 17 amends section 45(3) of the 1984 Act. Section 45(3) provides for the sufficiency of evidence in relation to rent registers similar to section 35(12) of the 1984 Act. The effect of the amendment is to ensure that this applies to proceedings before the Scottish Tribunals.

227. Paragraph 18 amends section 60(3) of the 1984 Act. Section 60(3) provides powers to determine questions about rent limits for housing association and housing corporation tenancies.

228. Paragraph 19 amends section 64(6)(b) of the 1984 Act. Section 64(6)(b) regards the rateable value of dwelling houses for the purpose of determining whether Part VII of the 1984 Act applies. It provides powers to determine apportionment of rateable value where parties fail to agree.

229. Paragraphs 20 and 21 amend sections 75 and 76 of the 1984 Act. Sections 75 and 76 provide power to reduce the period of notice to quit or postpone the date of possession in relation to contracts described in Part VII of the 1984 Act.

231. Paragraph 23 amends section 97(8) and (9) of the 1984 Act. Section 97(8) and (9) provides powers to terminate or modify rights for tenants who share accommodation.

232. Paragraph 24 inserts new subsection (A1) into section 102 of the 1984 Act, and repeals subsection (2) and amends subsection (3) of that section. Section 102 provides power to determine any question with regard to the application of the 1984 Act. The effect of the amendment is to make clear that the FTT shall have jurisdiction over civil matters arising from this act with the exception of matters arising under Part IX which will remain within the jurisdiction of the sheriff.

233. Paragraph 25 amends section 103 of the 1984 Act. Section 103 regards the procedure by which certain actions are to be raised in the sheriff court.

234. Paragraph 26 amends section 104 of the 1984 Act. Section 104 regards the Court of Session’s power to make certain rules of procedure. The effect of the amendment is to retain this power for criminal proceedings under Part IX of the 1984 Act and not to apply it for tribunal procedures.
235. Paragraph 27 amends section 115(1) of the 1984 Act to include a definition of the FTT.

236. Paragraph 28 amends paragraphs 3 and 7 of Schedule 1 to the 1984 Act. Schedule 1 regards succession rights of protected tenants following the death of protected tenants and provides powers to determine matters where parties fail to agree.

237. Paragraphs 29 and 30 amend paragraphs 3 and 6 of Schedule 1A and paragraph 3 of Schedule 1B to the 1984 Act. Schedules 1A and 1B regard succession rights for tenants and should be read in conjunction with Section 3A of the 1984 Act.

Housing (Scotland) Act 1988

238. Paragraph 33 amends section 16(2) of the 1988 Act. Section 16(2) regards the power to end assured tenancies.

239. Paragraph 34 amends section 17(8) of the 1988 Act. Section 17(8) regards proceedings to fix terms for statutory assured tenancies.

240. Paragraphs 35 and 48 amend section 18 and Schedule 5 of the 1988 Act. Section 18 and Schedule 5 regard repossession cases for assured and short assured tenancies and specifies the circumstances in which orders for possession can be made.

241. Paragraph 36 amends section 19 of the 1988 Act. Section 19 requires that proceedings must not be entertained unless a notice of proceedings has been served in the prescribed format.

242. Paragraph 37 amends section 20 of the 1988 Act. Section 20 regards discretion to sist or adjourn proceedings for possession to allow the sheriff to manage proceedings for repossession. This could be to allow parties to complete a specific action or to repay arrears.

243. Paragraph 38 amends section 21(3) of the 1988 Act. Section 21(3) regards special powers in relation to shared accommodation.

244. Paragraph 39 amends section 22(1) and (2) of the 1988 Act. Section 22(1) and (2) regards powers to order payment of removal expenses.

246. Paragraph 41 amends section 28(1) of the 1988 Act. Section 28(1) regards the effect of the termination of assured tenancies on sub-tenancies.

247. Paragraph 42 amends section 29 of the 1988 Act. Section 29 regards the power to permit diligence in respect of houses let on assured tenancies.
248. Paragraph 43 amends section 30(2) of the 1988 Act. Section 30(2) regards failure to provide a tenancy agreement for an assured tenancy and provides power to draw up an agreement if one does not already exist.

249. Paragraph 44 amends section 33(1) and (4) of the 1988 Act. Section 33(1) and (4) regards the recovery of possession of short assured tenancies under certain circumstances.

250. Paragraph 45 inserts new subsection (4A) into section 36 of the 1988 Act, and amends section 36(6)(b) and (6B). Section 36(6)(b) and (6B) provides power to award damages for unlawful eviction.

251. Paragraph 46 amends section 42(1)(c) of the 1988 Act. Section 42 regards restrictions on assured tenancies.

252. Paragraph 47 amends section 55(1) of the 1988 Act to include a definition of the FTT.

SCHEDULE 1 - PART 2 - REPAIRING STANDARD

253. Part 2 of schedule 1 makes consequential amendments to the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 ("the 2006 Act") to transfer the jurisdiction for specific civil matters relating to the private rented sector from the sheriff to the First-tier Tribunal (FTT) and to enable the FTT to use the same powers and procedures as the court currently has at its disposal to make determinations for the types of actions outlined below.

Housing (Scotland) Act 2006

254. Paragraph 50 amends section 24(7) of the 2006 Act. Section 24(7) regards repairing standard orders when an order has been made regarding contracting out of the repairing standard.

255. Paragraph 51 amends section 194 of the 2006 Act to include a definition of the FTT.

SCHEDULE 1 – PART 3 – RIGHT TO ADAPT RENTED HOUSES

256. Part 3 of schedule 1 makes consequential amendments to the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 ("the 2006 Act") to transfer the jurisdiction for specific civil matters relating to the private rented sector from the sheriff to the First-tier Tribunal (FTT) and to enable the FTT to use the same powers and procedures as the court currently has at its disposal to make determinations for the types of actions outlined below.

257. Paragraph 53 amends section 64 of the 2006 Act. Section 64 relates to appeals from decisions by local authorities and the private rented housing panel in relation to the repairing standard.

258. Paragraph 54 repeals section 65(3) and (4) of the 2006 Act. Section 65 relates to the determination of an appeal under section 64.
This document relates to the Housing (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 41A)

259. Paragraph 55 repeals section 67 of the 2006 Act. Section 67 provides the Scottish Ministers with the power to transfer jurisdiction for appeals under section 52 of that Act (regarding the right to adapt rented houses) from the sheriff to the private rented housing panel.

SCHEDULE 1 - PART 4 – LANDLORD REGISTRATION

260. Part 4 of schedule 1 makes consequential amendments to the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (“the 2004 Act”) to transfer the jurisdiction for specific civil matters relating to the private rented sector from the sheriff to the First-tier Tribunal (FTT) and to enable the FTT to use the same powers and procedures as the court currently has at its disposal to make determinations for the types of actions outlined below.

Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004

261. Paragraph 57 repeals section 92(4) and amends section 92(5) and (6) of the 2004 Act which regard the procedure for making appeals to the sheriff against decisions of local authorities about landlord registration.

262. Paragraph 58 amends section 92ZA of the 2004 Act. Section 92ZA regards the duty on local authorities to note refusals and removals for the register of landlords.

263. Paragraph 59 amends section 97(6) and (7) of the 2004 Act. Section 97(6) and (7) regards appeals against local authority decisions regarding landlord registration.

264. Paragraph 60 amends section 101(1) of the 2004 Act to include a definition of the FTT.

SCHEDULE 2 – MINOR AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

265. Schedule 2 provides for minor and consequential amendments and is introduced by section 84.

266. The amendments in paragraphs 4 and 10 include the new short Scottish secure tenancy at paragraph 2A of schedule 6 to the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 in the list of accommodation considered to be permanent accommodation for the purposes of a discharge of a social landlord’s homelessness duties.

267. The amendments in paragraphs 12 and 13 reflect a change in the status of the Scottish Housing Regulator, which is now a non-ministerial office holder in the Scottish Administration. These changes do not alter the position of the Regulator being subject to the Scottish Public Services Ombudsman Act 2002 and the Freedom of Information (Scotland) Act 2002.

268. The amendment in paragraph 17(4) removes the requirement for a registered social landlord to consult its tenants before it grants a standard security over existing houses in order to raise finance. The effect of the amendment is to recreate the position that had previously applied under section 68 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 by requiring registered social landlords to consult their tenants only where they are proposing a disposal of land that requires the consent of the Scottish Housing Regulator (other than disposals to which the special procedure in Part 10 of the 2010 Act applies - disposals and restructuring which result in a change of landlord, or disposals by way of security of loan).
This document relates to the Housing (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 41A)

HOUSING (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUPPLEMENTARY FINANCIAL MEMORANDUM

INTRODUCTION

1. As required under Rule 9.7.8B of the Parliament’s Standing Orders, this Supplementary Financial Memorandum is published to accompany the Housing (Scotland) Bill (“the Bill”) (introduced in the Scottish Parliament on 21 November 2013) as amended at Stage 2.

2. This Memorandum has been prepared by the Scottish Government. It does not form part of the Bill and has not been endorsed by the Parliament.

3. This Memorandum supplements the original Financial Memorandum to explain any substantial additional cost implications resulting from Stage 2 amendments to the Bill and where the costs are expected to fall. Amendments agreed at Stage 2 which are not covered in this supplementary Financial Memorandum are considered to not give rise to any substantial additional costs.

PART 3 – PRIVATE RENTED HOUSING

Repairing standard

4. The Scottish Government estimates that there are approximately 300,000 households in the private rented sector (PRS) in Scotland. Part 3 of the Bill makes provision to amend the repairing standard for private rented housing in Part 1 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (“the 2006 Act”).

5. Section 22A amends section 13 of the 2006 Act by inserting a new subsection (1)(g) which requires that, in order to meet the repairing standard, a privately rented house must have satisfactory provision for giving warning if carbon monoxide is present in a concentration that is hazardous to health.

6. Section 22B inserts a new subsection 13(4A) in the 2006 Act which requires that, in order to meet the parts of the repairing standard which require that the installations in a privately rented house for the supply of electricity and any electrical appliances provided by the landlord are in a reasonable state of repair and in proper working order, regard is to be had to guidance on electrical safety standards issued by the Scottish Ministers.

1 http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Housing%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b41as4-stage2-amend.pdf
2 http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Housing%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b41s4-introd-en.pdf
3 Housing Statistics for Scotland - Key Information and Summary Tables’ published 26 August 2013 http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Topics/Statistics/Browse/Housing-Regeneration/HSfS/KeyInfoTables
7. Section 22B also inserts new section 19A in the 2006 Act. New section 19A requires landlords to arrange electrical safety inspections every five years to identify any work needed to meet the repairing standard in relation to installations for the supply of electricity and electrical fixtures, fittings and appliances. An inspection must be carried out before a new tenancy starts, unless there has been an inspection within the previous five-year period. Where a tenancy has commenced before the date that section 19A comes into force, the landlord must carry out an inspection within 12 months from the date the section comes into force, unless the tenancy comes to an end in that period. Section 19A requires landlords to provide copies of inspection reports to tenants. The duty to carry out an inspection is treated as part of the repairing standard for the purposes of applications to the private rented housing panel and for enforcement of the repairing standard by the private rented housing panel.

8. Section 22B also inserts new section 19B in the 2006 Act. New section 19B provides that an inspection carried out for the purposes of new section 19A must be carried out by a competent person and specifies information which must be included in the record of the inspection, which must be retained by the landlord for six years. New section 19B also provides that the Scottish Ministers must publish guidance and that, in determining whether someone is a competent person as required by subsection 19B(1), landlords must have regard to this guidance.

9. The requirement for landlords to arrange electrical safety inspections was supported by 12 trade associations, businesses and charities, including key housing stakeholder organisations such as the Scottish Association of Landlords, Shelter Scotland, the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors Scotland and the Chartered Institute of Housing Scotland. It was also recommended in the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee’s Stage 1 report on the Bill. It was brought forward by amendment at Stage 2 and was supported by the Scottish Government and agreed by the Committee.

10. Section 22C inserts section 20A into the 2006 Act. Section 20A provides that the Scottish Ministers may amend the provisions of the 2006 Act which set out the repairing standard and the duty of landlords to ensure that privately rented homes meet the repairing standard. Section 22C requires that any such regulations are made by the affirmative procedure.

Costs on the Scottish Administration

11. There will be no substantial additional administration costs on the Scottish Administration as a result of the introduction of these requirements. Any costs associated with stakeholder engagement and making of regulations under section 22C will be covered by the existing budget already allocated to the Sustainable Housing Strategy.

Costs on local authorities

12. There will be no substantial additional administration costs on local authorities as a result of the introduction of these requirements

---

5 http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_InfrastructureandCapitalInvestmentCommittee/Reports/trr14-04.pdf (Page 34)
Costs on other bodies, individuals and businesses

Private landlords

13. It is estimated that the cost of a carbon monoxide detector necessary to comply with this duty is around £15.6 This is a relatively low cost for individual landlords, even where the landlord has a number of properties in their portfolio. It is not known how many landlords have already provided carbon monoxide detectors, but it is currently recommended as good practice by the Scottish Association of Landlords7 and in Scottish Government guidance8.

14. In summary, Table 1 shows the assumptions of potential costs which could be incurred as a result of mandatory requirements for privately rented houses to have satisfactory provision for giving warning if carbon monoxide is present in a concentration that is hazardous to health. These assumptions are caveated on the basis that the Scottish Government has no information on current compliance and that not all properties will need a detector because not all properties have a form of heating that is carbon emitting. The assumptions based on low, medium, high scenarios set out below at Table 1 are intended to assist the Committee to understand what the potential level of costs might be.

Table 1: Assumptions of substantial additional costs – Carbon Monoxide Detection

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Scenario - % of properties affected9</th>
<th>Low (25%)</th>
<th>Mid (50%)</th>
<th>High (75%)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>No of Properties</td>
<td>75,000</td>
<td>150,000</td>
<td>225,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cost per property</td>
<td>£15</td>
<td>£15</td>
<td>£15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assumption of Overall Cost</td>
<td>£1,125,000</td>
<td>£2,250,000</td>
<td>£3,375,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

15. The primary responsibility for the additional cost of work to comply with the duty to complete electrical safety testing rests with private landlords. The cost of complying with the duty requires the completion of an electrical safety test which will vary with individual properties and the Scottish Government estimates that the average cost will be between £100 and £150.10 All landlords will require to undertake an inspection for their existing properties in the first year after the provision commences, unless a tenancy ends during that year and the property is not re-let. On commencement, it will become a duty to undertake the inspection before any tenancy commences.

16. Assuming there are about 300,000 PRS properties, then the initial year cost (based on £100-£150 a test per property) is estimated to be between £30,000,000 and £45,000,000 across all private landlords. The on-going cost may actually be higher if it is assumed that there is some turnover in the sector so the number of properties over any five-year period could be greater than the 300,000 quoted. In instances where a safety test identifies the need for remedial work to electrical installations, then an unquantifiable additional cost will occur. Initial costs could be

---

6 http://www.gassaferegister.co.uk/advice/gas_safety_in_the_home/fit_a_carbon_monoxide_alarm.aspx
9 Based on 300,000 properties.
10 https://www.whatprice.co.uk/prices/electrician/periodic-electrical-inspection-incl-certificate.html lower if a landlord already has had a test completed and is able to get the test completed at a lower cost as a result.

17. Compliance with the requirement for electrical safety testing is expected to improve home safety for tenants in the private rented sector. There will be an unquantifiable benefit from the assumption that fewer tenants will be killed or injured as the result of unsafe electrical installations and an assumed unquantifiable saving for emergency and health care services. It is also anticipated to reduce the incidence of property damage resulting from fires where the cause is unsafe electrical installations and may act positively toward decisions on relative risk and adverse selection concerns from home insurance providers.

Home owners
18. The duty refers only to private landlords so there will be no new costs for home owners.

Local businesses
19. The duty refers only to private landlords so there will be no new costs for local businesses.

Summary
20. In summary, Table 2 shows the costs expected from the inclusion of the above provisions in Part 3 of the Bill.

Table 2: Summary of additional costs – Electrical Safety Checks

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Provision</th>
<th>Paragraph reference</th>
<th>Cost per property</th>
<th>Total Additional costs</th>
<th>Timeframe</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Costs on other bodies, individuals and businesses</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carbon Monoxide Detectors</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>£15</td>
<td>Current compliance is unknown. Assumptions are provided at Table 1</td>
<td>2015 onwards</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Electrical Safety Inspections</td>
<td>15-16</td>
<td>£100 and £150.00£11</td>
<td>Between £30,000,000 and £45,000,000£12</td>
<td>2015 and then every five years.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safety test identifies the need for remedial work to electrical installations?</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>Unquantifiable additional cost will occur</td>
<td>Unquantifiable additional cost will occur</td>
<td>2015 and then every five years.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

11 Based on 300,000 properties - All landlords will require to undertake an inspection for their existing properties in the first year after the provision commences, unless a tenancy ends during that year and the property isn’t re-let. Requirement for test to be undertaken every five years.
12 See Footnote 11
PART 4 – LETTING AGENTS

Letting agent registration and code of practice

21. The Scottish Government estimates that there are 719 letting agents in Scotland. Part 4 of the Bill as introduced provides for a registration scheme and a code of practice for letting agents, and redress for tenants and landlords. The Scottish Government has brought forward a number of Stage 2 amendments to Part 4 which have substantial additional cost implications. These are as follows:

- Letting Agent Code of Practice - professional indemnity insurance and client money protection
- Training requirement
- Monitoring of compliance - power to carry out inspections.

Professional indemnity insurance and client money protection

22. The Letting Agent Code of Practice is to include provision about the handling of client money and professional indemnity arrangements. This will enable the Scottish Ministers to regulate how letting agents handle money from landlords and tenants and to require professional indemnity arrangements, such as professional indemnity insurance, to be put in place.

Costs on the Scottish Administration

23. There will be no substantial additional administration costs on the Scottish Administration as a result of the introduction of these requirements around the handling of client money and professional indemnity arrangements.

Costs on local authorities

24. There will be no substantial additional administration costs on local authorities as a result of the introduction of these requirements around the handling of client money and professional indemnity arrangements.

Costs on other bodies, individuals and businesses

Letting agents

25. Information from the Association of Residential Letting Agents (ARLA) estimates that the annual cost to a letting agent for professional indemnity cover will be in the region of £715 on average\(^\text{13}\). This is an average cost as premiums will vary according to previous claims history and on the size of the business. Based on this average, the estimated total cost to the industry would be £514,085\(^\text{14}\). This would not be a new cost to the whole industry as some letting agents will already have this cover in place. However, the new cost cannot be quantified as data is not available on the number of agents who already have this in place.

\(^{13}\) Data source – Association of Residential Letting Agents – average cost per letting agent per annum including insurance premium tax

\(^{14}\) £715 per annum x 719 letting agents
26. Information from ARLA estimates that the annual cost to a letting agent for client money protection is between £297 and £350. This represents an average figure of £324. Based on this average, the estimated total annual cost to the industry would be £232,956\(^{15}\). This would not be a new cost to the whole industry as some letting agents will already have this cover in place. However, the new cost cannot be quantified as data is not available on the number of agents who already have this in place.

Training requirement

27. Section 29 of the Bill makes provision about the Scottish Ministers determining applications for registration as a letting agent and renewal of registration. This amendment introduced at Stage 2 provides a power for the Scottish Ministers to prescribe training requirements which letting agents must demonstrate before they can be entered on the register or have their entry renewed. The aim of this amendment is to raise standards of service by ensuring that only competent persons can legitimately carry out letting agent services. The amendment provides for the specification of the training; who should obtain it; when that training must be completed and when it must be refreshed. The Scottish Ministers may specify those requirements through secondary legislation. This may be as a qualification or as other training requirements as specified.

Costs on the Scottish Administration

28. There will be no substantial additional administration costs on the Scottish Administration as a result of the introduction of these requirements.

Costs on local authorities

29. There will be no substantial additional administration costs on local authorities as a result of the introduction of these requirements

Costs on other bodies, individuals and businesses

Letting agents

30. In order to estimate the potential costs to letting agents, this has been based on the cost of known qualifications (although the specified requirements may include other options to meet the Scottish Ministers’ training requirements, other than a qualification)

31. The Level 3 Award in Residential Letting and Property Management from the National Federation of Property Professionals (NFoPP) is seen as an appropriate level of training for more senior staff. ARLA uses these qualifications as a basis of membership to their organisation. The cost to a letting agent would be £240 for course materials (for non-ARLA members) plus an additional £110 for an examination giving a total per organisation of £350 per award. There will also be a cost in terms of staff time as the four units take a total of 120 hours study time, though it is not possible to quantify this for the purposes of this document as staff costs will vary across businesses; and this training may simply replace other training which staff would have undertaken anyway.

\(^{15}\) £324 per annum x 719 letting agents
32. It is likely that a number of letting agents will already have completed this training as a requirement – for example, roughly 200 members of ARLA. In addition, this qualification has already been taken up by some letting agents who are not members of ARLA. However, it is not possible to quantify the current level of training participation as the data is not available. Therefore, of the estimated 719 letting agents in Scotland, there are potentially 500 letting agents that would either require this training or a similar level (to be specified).

33. Based on the costs of the NFoPP training the estimated cost to the industry would be £175,000\(^1\). This cost would only recur as and when the Scottish Ministers were of the view that a refresh was necessary.

Monitoring of compliance - power to carry out inspections

34. The Scottish Ministers should monitor compliance with the requirements of the letting agent statutory regime, including the Code of Practice. In order to facilitate the Scottish Ministers’ compliance and enforcement functions, an amendment was introduced at Stage 2 to provide associated powers to authorise persons to carry out an inspection of premises which appear to be being used for the purpose of carrying out letting agency work. If on discovering non-compliance with the regulatory regime for letting agents through exercise of this power, the Scottish Ministers could take administrative steps to address the matter or could proceed straight to enforcement action.

Costs on the Scottish Administration

35. Information obtained from ARLA\(^1\) suggests that a wide-ranging check conducted by its own compliance staff might cost in the region of £500 to £1,000 per visit. If an external contractor, such as an accountant, were used the cost would double. Visits are made to roughly 2% of member firms on the basis of risk i.e. the level of complaints and any comments from the letting agent firm’s annual independent audit of their client account. The visits envisaged under the power set out in the Bill, however, would be mainly random checks. Therefore, a higher percentage of 10% of firms is proposed. Taking the mid-point cost of an ARLA check (i.e. £750 to £1,500) and applying it to 10% of the estimated 719 letting agents in Scotland, this would generate an estimated annual cost to the Scottish Administration of between £54,000 and £108,000.

36. Where a warrant is required to gain entry, the cost of obtaining a warrant is £90, which is a first paper fee, and also the fee for a summary application in the sheriff court. On the basis of an estimated seven visits each year requiring a warrant (10% of the total number of expected visits), the total annual cost for obtaining a warrant would be £630.

37. The additional cost to engage staff, such as sheriff officers, would be £18.35 plus VAT to effect the warrant and a further £29.40 plus VAT per half hour to gain entry to the premises, by force if required, including presence during the inspection until the premises have been secured at the end of the inspection. Assuming an inspection lasts three hours in total, the estimated cost would be £233.70 per visit. On the basis of an estimated seven visits each year requiring a

---
\(^{16}\) £350 x 500 letting agents
\(^{17}\) Data source – Association of Residential Letting Agents – compliance checks 2014/2015 warrant (10% of the total number of expected visits), the total annual cost for this element would be £1,636.

38. Based on these assumptions, this could generate an estimated annual cost to the Scottish Administration of between £56,266 and £110,266.

Costs on local authorities

39. There will be no substantial additional administration costs on local authorities as a result of the introduction of these requirements.

Costs on other bodies, individuals and businesses

Letting agents

40. There will be no substantial additional administration costs on letting agents as a result of the introduction of this requirement.

Summary

41. In summary, Table 3 shows the costs expected from the inclusion of the above provisions in Part 4 of the Bill.

Table 3: Summary of additional costs – letting agent registration and code of practice

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Provision</th>
<th>Paragraph reference</th>
<th>Additional costs</th>
<th>Timeframe</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Costs on Scottish Administration</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monitoring of compliance - Power to carry out inspections</td>
<td>34-38</td>
<td>£56,266 to £110,266 p.a.</td>
<td>2016 onwards</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Costs on other bodies, individuals and businesses</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Professional Indemnity Insurance</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>£715 p.a.</td>
<td>£514,085(^{18})</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Client Money Protection</td>
<td>26</td>
<td>£324 p.a.</td>
<td>£232,956(^{19})</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Training requirement</td>
<td>30-33</td>
<td>£350</td>
<td>£175,000(^{20})</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

\(^{18}\) Scottish Government estimated number of Scottish letting agents is 719 – annual cost

\(^{19}\) Scottish Government estimated number of Scottish letting agents is 719 – annual cost

\(^{20}\) Scottish Government estimated number of Scottish letting agents is 719 – See footnote 13.

\(^{21}\) The training cost would recur periodically, as and when changes in practice or law required it.
HOUSING (SCOTLAND) BILL

SUPPLEMENTARY DELEGATED POWERS MEMORANDUM

PURPOSE

1. This Memorandum has been prepared by the Scottish Government to assist the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee in its consideration of the Housing (Scotland) Bill (the Bill). It describes provisions in the Bill conferring power to make subordinate legislation which were introduced, removed or amended at Stage 2. The Memorandum supplements the Delegated Powers Memorandum on the Bill as introduced.

2. The contents of this Memorandum are entirely the responsibility of the Scottish Government and have not been endorsed by the Scottish Parliament.

PROVISIONS CONFERRING POWER TO MAKE SUBORDINATE LEGISLATION INTRODUCED, REMOVED OR AMENDED AT STAGE 2

PART 2 – SOCIAL HOUSING

Section 4: Rules on priority of allocation of housing: consultation
Section 7: Determination of minimum period for application to remain in force
Section 8: Creation of short Scottish secure tenancy: antisocial behaviour
Section 15: Grounds for eviction: antisocial behaviour

3. Although not related to subordinate legislation powers, the Committee may wish to be aware that amendments have been made to these provisions of the Bill relating to the publication of guidance on social housing. Amendments have been made to require all the guidance issued on social housing under powers in Part 2 to be consulted on and published, in line with the Committee’s recommendations in its Stage 1 report on the Bill.

4. The powers to issue guidance under Part 2 of the Bill have also been extended to address issues raised at Stage 1. A requirement to consult such persons as Ministers consider appropriate has been added to guidance enabled by section 4, relating to a social landlord’s rules governing the priority of allocation of social housing. Guidance issued under section 7 can now cover any matter relating to the provisions in that section. Guidance issued under section 8 can now cover steps relating to extending the term of a short Scottish secure tenancy for 6 months and raising proceedings for recovery of possession of a short Scottish secure tenancy. A power to issue guidance has also been included in section 15, relating to eviction on the grounds of antisocial behaviour.

---

1. http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Housing%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b41as4-stage2-amend.pdf

PART 3 – PRIVATE RENTED HOUSING

Section 22C – (inserts new section 20A after section 20 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers.
Power exercisable by: Regulations made by statutory instrument.
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure.
Amended or new power: New

Provision

5. New section 20A provides that Ministers may by regulations vary or extend the repairing standard and a landlord’s duty to ensure a house meets that standard. This includes the power to modify Chapter 4 of Part 1 of the 2006 Act, which sets out standards that private rented housing must meet both before and during any tenancy.

Reason for taking this power

6. A new requirement that let property must have carbon monoxide detectors was added at Stage 2, and the standard relating to electrical safety was in effect extended by a requirement for regular electrical safety inspections (in both cases, by non-Government amendment). The Scottish Government wishes to ensure that any future changes required to quality standards within the private rented sector can, where necessary, be addressed as quickly as possible, while remaining subject to parliamentary scrutiny. The power to modify legislation is necessary to ensure that any changes can be made to fit effectively within existing provision.

Reason for choice of procedure

7. It is considered appropriate that this power is subject to affirmative procedure, as the Stage 2 amendment has provided for, to allow Parliament a higher level of scrutiny. This is appropriate because of the potential effect of the use of the power on private landlords and the private rental market, and the power to modify primary legislation. As the new provisions in relation to electrical safety inspections demonstrate, to craft an effective requirement may need a significant amount of related detail to be included within the legislation, and the Parliament will wish to consider whether to approve such detail.

PART 4 – LETTING AGENTS

Section 29(2A) – Training requirement

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations made by statutory instrument
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure
Amended or new power: New
Provision

8. Section 29 of the Bill makes provision for the Scottish Ministers to determine applications for registration as a letting agent and renewal of registration. Section 29(2)(c) was inserted at Stage 2 and creates a power for the Scottish Ministers to prescribe training requirements which letting agents must meet before they can be entered on the register or have their entry renewed. Section 29(2A) (also added at Stage 2) further sets out what these regulations may prescribe including: the matters on which training must be undertaken; the persons who must have undertaken it; qualifications which must be held by the applicant or other persons; the period within which training must have taken place.

Reason for taking this power

9. The power is being taken to allow for further consultation with the industry on the detail of the training requirements required for registration. Furthermore, a delegated power allows flexibility for the Scottish Ministers to modify training requirements to reflect the future development of the sector.

Reason for choice of procedure

10. The power will be used to set out the technical detail of training requirements, related timings and the persons upon whom the requirements are placed. The power is also likely to be used to reflect any future changes in practice and law for the letting agent sector. It is considered that the negative procedure provides appropriate flexibility for changes to be made expeditiously and that a more detailed level of Parliamentary scrutiny is not required for provisions of this nature.

Section 41(1) and Section 82(2)(ba) – Code of Practice

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations made by statutory instrument
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure for the first Code and any replacement Code and negative procedure for revisions to the Code
Amended or new power: Amended

Provision

11. Section 41(1) of the Bill currently provides that the Scottish Ministers may, by regulations, set out a Code of Practice for letting agents. As drafted at introduction, the negative procedure would apply to the regulations setting out the Code. At Stage 2, an amendment inserted a new section 82(2)(ba) so that the affirmative procedure will now apply to the first Code of Practice or any subsequent replacement code. Any revisions to the Code will be by regulations subject to the negative procedure.

12. An amendment to Section 41 at Stage 2 added in sections 41(1)(b) and (c) which provide that in addition to the Code of Practice setting out standards of practice (section 41(1)(a)), the Code will also now include the handling of tenants’ and landlords’ money; and professional indemnity arrangements. The amendment responds to concerns expressed at Stage 1 by stakeholders and the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee concerning a lack of detail about the Code on the face of the Bill.

Reason for taking this power

13. The Code of Practice will contain standards to which all persons carrying out letting agency work must adhere. As stated in the Delegated Powers Memorandum provided at introduction, the Scottish Government considers it to be appropriate for the detailed set of requirements needed in the Code to be developed in regulations subject to consultation. Furthermore, a delegated power allows the Scottish Ministers the flexibility to amend the Code at a later date to reflect changes in practice and the law as it relates to the letting agent sector.

Reason for choice of procedure

14. At introduction, the intention was that the Code would be subject to the negative procedure. The Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee indicated in its stage 1 Report that it considered the affirmative procedure to be a more suitable level of Parliamentary procedure for the power in section 41(1). This was in light of the serious consequences for letting agents should they breach the Code such as possible de-registration and or potential for prosecution. The Scottish Government accepts this and, to reflect the severity of these legal consequences whilst ensuring an appropriate level of Parliamentary scrutiny, is applying the affirmative procedure to the first Code and any replacement Code. This will enable a high level of Parliamentary scrutiny to be applied to the full details of the Code and any future replacement Code. To ensure a proportionate process and an appropriate use of Parliamentary time, the negative procedure is being applied to revisions of the Code.

Section 46A(2) – Monitoring Compliance – Power to obtain information

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations made by statutory instrument
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure
Amended or new power: New

Provision

15. New Section 46A was introduced at Stage 2 to give the Scottish Ministers the power to serve notice on a person who appears to be a letting agent, requiring the information specified in the notice to be provided to them. This process for obtaining information is for the purpose of enabling the Scottish Ministers to monitor compliance with the provisions in Part 4 of the Bill. The power is qualified at subsection (3) to make it clear that it only extends to requiring information which can be legally disclosed.

16. Subsection (2) allows the Scottish Ministers to make further provision in regulations about the requiring of information, in particular about:

---

4 http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Housing_DPM_final.pdf
5 http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_InfrastructureandCapitalInvestmentCommittee/DPLR_Com_report.pdf
a) the form of the notice and manner of service

b) the time within which information must be provided.

Reason for taking this power

17. This power has been taken to provide the Scottish Ministers with some flexibility on the form of the notice and manner of service, and the time within which information must be provided, to allow these to be developed further to take account of any modifications to the process that may become apparent or be required in the future once implementation of the provisions has been completed and the national register and associated processes established.

Reason for choice of procedure

18. The power relates to the administration and procedure associated with the giving of notices requiring information to be provided to the Scottish Ministers. The Scottish Ministers are being given the power to obtain information for the purposes of monitoring compliance with the regulations. Section 46A(3) sets out that the Scottish Ministers are not authorised to require this information if this would make the person holding it liable for prosecution for doing so. It is common for details about administration and procedure to be prescribed by secondary legislation. It is considered that the level of Parliamentary scrutiny afforded by the negative procedure provides an appropriate balance between expedition and the need for scrutiny of provisions of this nature.

Section 51(3)(a) – Meaning of letting agency work

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order made by statutory instrument
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure
Amended or new power: Addition of new element to existing power

Provision

19. Section 51(1) and (2) of the Bill set out the meaning of “letting agency work” for the purposes of Part 4 of the Bill. Subsection (3) confers delegated powers on the Scottish Ministers to modify the meaning of “letting agency work” by order.

20. Subsection (3) has been amended at Stage 2 to confer the new delegated powers contained in paragraph (a) on the Scottish Ministers. They are an addition to what was in the Bill at introduction, which now form paragraph (b) of the subsection. The new powers enable the Scottish Ministers to provide by order that specified bodies or schemes of a specified description are excluded from the definition of “letting agency work” applying to Part 4 of the Bill. The power to specify a description of a scheme is qualified in subsection (4) so that only a description of a scheme which is operated by a body which does not carry out the scheme for profit and which is for the purpose of assisting persons to enter into leases or occupancy agreements can be specified.

21. Subsection (3)(b) restates the delegated power to modify the meaning of “letting agency work” by order which was section 51(3) in the Bill at introduction. This power has
Reason for taking this power

22. The Scottish Government considers it appropriate to enable the Scottish Ministers to exempt bodies and descriptions of schemes from the scope of the regulatory regime set out in Part 4 of the Bill. This will allow specified bodies and schemes carrying out work which falls within the description of “letting agency work” but which the Scottish Ministers consider should not be subject to the regulatory regime because, for example, they carry out not for profit work to assist vulnerable tenants to access tenancies in the private rented sector, to be exempted from the requirements of the letting agent regulatory regime.

Reason for choice of procedure

23. This power will be used to specify bodies and descriptions of schemes which are not to be covered by the provisions in Part 4 of the Bill. Its future use may include adding newly created bodies or descriptions of schemes from time to time. In contrast to the power at section 51(3)(b) which is subject to affirmative procedure, this power cannot be used to modify primary legislation. The Scottish Government therefore considers the level of Parliamentary scrutiny involved with the negative procedure to strike an appropriate balance between the need for Parliamentary scrutiny and appropriate use of Parliamentary time.

PART 5 – MOBILE HOME SITES WITH PERMANENT RESIDENTS

Section 55 (inserts section 32F into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960) – Power to specify time limits for the determination of applications

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations made by statutory instrument
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure
Amended or new power: New

Provision

24. Section 32F(2A) of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (the 1960 Act), inserted through amendment 91 at Stage 2, places a duty on the Scottish Ministers that they must, by regulations, specify a time limit for a local authority to determine a site licence application. Under section 32F(3) of the 1960 Act if a local authority does not determine an application in that timescale it is deemed to be approved.

Reason for taking this power

25. The Bill as introduced would have required a local authority to determine an application for a site licence, or to decide on the transfer a site licence, within 12 months of receiving an application. If the application was not decided in this timeframe, then it would be deemed to be approved. This provision was included in the Bill to prevent an application being left undetermined.

http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Housing%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b41s4-introd.pdf
26. However in light of views expressed during the Stage 1 consideration of the Bill, an amendment was introduced that required Scottish Ministers to set the timescales in Regulations. This would allow the Scottish Government to discuss realistic timescales with local authorities and the industry, and set them out in Regulations in due course. The amendment also allows Ministers to specify different limits for different types of application. This could be used if (for example) after discussion with local authorities and others, it was clear that it was appropriate for a licence renewal to have a shorter time limit for a decision than the handling of an initial site licence application.

Reason for choice of procedure

27. This power will be used to set out the administrative time limits for local authorities to make decisions on applications and it is therefore considered that the level of Parliamentary scrutiny afforded by the negative procedure is sufficient.

Section 60 (inserts section 32N into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960) – Power to make regulations concerning the procedure to be followed in relation to the application, transfer, and appeals relating to site licences.

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations made by statutory instrument
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure
Amended or new power: Amended

Provision

28. As it stands following Stage 2 consideration, new section 32N of the 1960 Act gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make provision in relation to the procedure to be followed in relation to the issue, renewal, transfer, transmission and revocation of a Part 1A site licence, the procedure to be followed in relation to appeals under section 32M of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 59 of the Bill) and also to make provision in relation to the determination and consequences of an appeal under section 32M.

Reason for taking this power

29. During its examination of the Bill at Stage 1 the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee recommended that the power included in the Bill at introduction should be more tightly focussed. The Scottish Government responded to that recommendation by tabling amendments to this provision at Stage 2, which were agreed by the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee. Section 32N, as amended, now gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make regulations in relation to the procedure to be followed in relation to:

- the issue, renewal, transfer, transmission and revocation of a permanent site licence,
- appeals relating to a site licence under new section 32M.

30. The Scottish Ministers can also make provision for the determination and consequences of an appeal under section 32M. The amended section reflects the policy intention that Regulations under this section should be able to cover only the procedure to be followed for, and determination and consequences of, appeals.

Reason for choice of procedure

31. It is considered appropriate that this power is subject to negative procedure because it will be used to set details of procedure and timescales. These will supplement the overarching framework for handling site licences set out in the Bill. The Bill was accordingly amended at Stage 2.

Section 63 (former insertion of section 32T into the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960) – Power to make regulations concerning maximum fines for having a site without a licence, and breaching licence conditions.

Power removed

32. At introduction, the Bill included a power which would have given the Scottish Ministers the power to amend, by order subject to the affirmative procedure, the maximum fines which can be imposed for operating a mobile home site without a licence, for breaching a licence condition, and for failure to comply with an improvement notice.

33. The Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee expressed some concerns about that power, and these were endorsed by the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee in its stage 1 report on the Bill.

34. The Scottish Government considered the Committee’s suggestion that it should amend section 32T as inserted by section 63 to include a provision that specifies the circumstances in which Ministers would be able to vary the maximum fine levels. However it was not clear how such a provision could be made to work as the Committee intended. In view of that the Scottish Government sought to remove the power to vary maximum fine levels from section 63, by an amendment that was agreed by the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee at Stage 2.

PART 6 – PRIVATE HOUSING CONDITIONS

Section 72A(1) (inserts new subsections (3A) and (3B) into section 10A of the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003 – Notice of potential liability for costs: notice of discharge.

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order made by Scottish Statutory Instrument
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure
Provision

35. The power provides that a notice of discharge must be in a form prescribed by order made by the Scottish Ministers. The form of notice of potential liability for costs is laid down in schedule 1A to the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003. It is considered that taking a power to prescribe the notice of discharge form is preferable to including it in the Bill itself as there may be a need for flexibility to respond to changing circumstances.

Reason for taking this power

36. The amendment provides a statutory discharge procedure for homeowners where the sums under a notice of potential liability for costs registered against a property have been paid.

37. This statutory discharge procedure replaces a non-statutory procedure currently operated by Registers of Scotland.

38. The amendment includes a power for Ministers to prescribe the form for the statutory discharge notice. It is common practice for forms to be prescribed through secondary legislation.

Reason for choice of procedure

39. It is considered appropriate that this power is subject to the negative procedure. The existing form for notice of potential liability for costs is at schedule 1A to the 2003 Act and may be amended by an order subject to the negative procedure. The negative procedure provides an appropriate balance between expedition and convenience on the one hand and the need for scrutiny of a provision of this nature on the other hand. It is common for secondary legislation prescribing forms to be subject to the negative procedure. While the 2003 Act has a form for notice of potential liability for costs, that approach may be considered in the context of the Bill which introduced the form and established a new procedure, as opposed to an amendment modifying the operation of an existing scheme.

Section 72A(2) (inserts new subsections (3A) and (3B) into section 13 of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 – Notice of potential liability for costs: notice of discharge.

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order made by Scottish Statutory Instrument
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

40. The power provides that a notice of discharge must be in a form prescribed by order made by the Scottish Ministers. The form of notice of potential liability for costs is laid down in schedule 2 to the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004. It is considered that taking a power to prescribe the notice of discharge form is preferable to including it in the Bill itself as there may be a need for flexibility to respond to changing circumstances.

Reason for taking this power
41. The amendment provides a statutory discharge procedure for flat owners where the sums under a notice of potential liability for costs registered against a flat have been paid. Analogous provision in respect of burdened properties other than flats is made in the power considered at paragraphs 33 to 37 above.

42. This statutory discharge procedure replaces a non-statutory procedure currently operated by Registers of Scotland.

43. The amendment includes a power for Ministers to prescribe the form for the statutory discharge notice. It is common practice for forms to be prescribed through secondary legislation.

Reason for choice of procedure

44. It is considered appropriate that this power is subject to the negative procedure. The existing form for notice of potential liability for costs is at schedule 2 to the 2004 Act and may be amended by an order subject to the negative procedure. The negative procedure provides an appropriate balance between expedition and convenience on the one hand and the need for scrutiny of a provision of this nature on the other hand. It is common for secondary legislation prescribing forms to be subject to the negative procedure. While the 2004 Act has a form for notice of potential liability for costs, that approach may be considered in the context of the Bill which introduced the form and established a new procedure, as opposed to an amendment modifying the operation of an existing scheme.

PART 7 – MISCELLANEOUS

Section 77A First-tier Tribunal: disqualification of members from exercise of certain functions

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order made by statutory instrument
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure
Amended or new power: New

Provision

45. Section 77A provides that elected and certain other politicians are disqualified from hearing cases transferred to the First-tier Tribunal (FTT). Section 77A provides that the Scottish Ministers may by order amend the list of disqualified offices.

Reason for taking this power

46. The Bill confers responsibility for certain cases directly on the FTT which will be set up following the Tribunals (Scotland) Act 2014, which creates the broad framework for the operation of FTT. On introduction, the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill contained a provision which set out that the holders of certain offices would have been disqualified from also being a member of the FTT. However, these were removed during the passage of that Bill to allow the policy for disqualifications to be a matter for the founding legislation for each individual tribunal jurisdiction.

47. In relation to cases transferred from the jurisdiction of the sheriff and letting agents redress cases, the Scottish Government is of the view that the disqualification of certain offices will safeguard the independence of those jurisdictions and will reduce the potential for conflicts of interest.

48. The list includes elected and certain other politicians but it may also be considered appropriate to, for example, include other office holders in continuing to safeguard the independence of the tribunal. Jurisdictions within the FTT for cases transferred from the sheriff and letting agents redress cases could also be placed into a chamber alongside other jurisdictions within the FTT. The Scottish Ministers consider that an order making power will allow the flexibility to consider both how disqualifications work in practice when more detail about the structure of the FTT is available and to take account of any future changes.

Reason for choice of procedure

49. The principle of enabling certain specified offices to be disqualified has been set out and considered as part of the Bill process. The Scottish Government considers negative procedure is appropriate to amend the listed offices. Negative procedure is used in other tribunal jurisdictions, such as the Mental Health Tribunal Scotland, the Additional Support Needs Tribunals for Scotland and the Scottish Charity Appeals Panel to vary the list of disqualified offices and so is considered to be appropriate for these jurisdictions.

Section 77B - Private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership

Power conferred on: The Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order made by statutory instrument
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure
Amended or new power: New

Provision

50. Section 77B provides that elected and certain other politicians are disqualified from being appointed as, or remaining, a member of the Private Rented Housing Panel/Homeowner Housing Panel (PRHP/HOHP). Section 77B also provides that the Scottish Ministers may by order amend the list of disqualified offices.

Reason for taking this power

51. On introduction, the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill (now passed) contained a provision which set out that the holders of certain offices would have been disqualified from also being a member of the First-tier Tribunal (FTT). These disqualifications would have applied to members of the PRHP/HOHP when those jurisdictions are transferred into the FTT under provisions in the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill. However, they were removed during the passage of that Bill to allow the policy for disqualifications to be a matter for the founding legislation for each individual tribunal jurisdiction.
52. In relation to the PRHP/HOHP, the Scottish Government is of the view that the disqualification of certain offices will safeguard the independence of those jurisdictions and will reduce the potential for conflicts of interest.

53. The list includes elected and certain other politicians but it may also be considered appropriate to, for example, include other office holders in continuing to safeguard the independence of the tribunal. The PRHP/HOHP could also be placed in a chamber alongside other jurisdictions within the FTT. The Scottish Government considers that an order making power will allow the flexibility to consider both how disqualifications work in practice when more detail about the structure of the FTT is available and to take account of any potential future changes.

Reason for choice of procedure

54. The principle of enabling certain specified offices to be disqualified has been set out and considered as part of the Bill process. The Scottish Government considers negative procedure is appropriate to amend the listed offices. Negative procedure is used in other tribunal jurisdictions, such as the Mental Health Tribunal Scotland, the Additional Support Needs Tribunals for Scotland and the Scottish Charity Appeals Panel, to vary the list of disqualified offices and so is considered to be appropriate for the PRHP/HOHP tribunals.
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

41st Report, 2014 (Session 4)

Housing (Scotland) Bill as amended at stage 2

Published by the Scottish Parliament on 17 June 2014
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee

Remit and membership

Remit:

1. The remit of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee is to consider and report on—
   (a) any—
   (i) subordinate legislation laid before the Parliament or requiring the consent of the Parliament under section 9 of the Public Bodies Act 2011;
   (ii) [deleted]
   (iii) pension or grants motion as described in Rule 8.11A.1; and, in particular, to determine whether the attention of the Parliament should be drawn to any of the matters mentioned in Rule 10.3.1;
   (b) proposed powers to make subordinate legislation in particular Bills or other proposed legislation;
   (c) general questions relating to powers to make subordinate legislation;
   (d) whether any proposed delegated powers in particular Bills or other legislation should be expressed as a power to make subordinate legislation;
   (e) any failure to lay an instrument in accordance with section 28(2), 30(2) or 31 of the 2010 Act; and
   (f) proposed changes to the procedure to which subordinate legislation laid before the Parliament is subject.
   (g) any Scottish Law Commission Bill as defined in Rule 9.17A.1; and
   (h) any draft proposal for a Scottish Law Commission Bill as defined in that Rule.

Membership:

Richard Baker
Nigel Don (Convener)
Mike MacKenzie
Margaret McCulloch
Stuart McMillan (Deputy Convener)
John Scott
Stewart Stevenson
Committee Clerking Team:

Clerk to the Committee
Euan Donald

Assistant Clerk
Elizabeth White

Support Manager
Daren Pratt
Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee
41st Report, 2014 (Session 4)
Housing (Scotland) Bill as amended at stage 2

The Committee reports to the Parliament as follows—

INTRODUCTION

1. At its meeting on 17 June 2014, the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee considered the delegated powers provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (“the Bill”)\(^1\). The Committee submits this report to the Parliament under Rule 9.7.9 of Standing Orders.

2. Very broadly, the Bill makes provision about abolition of the right to buy, the allocation of social housing, the law affecting private housing, the regulation of letting agents and the licensing of sites for mobile homes. It also provides for the transfer of jurisdiction from the sheriff courts to the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland (to be established in the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill) in cases involving private rented sector housing disputes.

3. The Scottish Government has provided the Parliament with a supplementary memorandum on the delegated powers provisions in the Bill, in advance of Stage 3 of the Bill (“the SDPM\(^2\)).

4. The Committee reported on certain matters in relation to the delegated powers provisions in the Bill at Stage 1 in its 18\(^{th}\) report of 2014.

DELEGATED POWERS PROVISIONS

5. The Committee considered each of the new, removed or substantially amended delegated powers provisions in the Bill after Stage 2.

---

\(^1\) Housing (Scotland) Bill [as amended at Stage 2 available] at: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Housing%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b41as4-stage2-amend.pdf%20Bill/b41as4-stage2-amend.pdf)

\(^2\) Housing (Scotland) Bill Supplementary Delegated Powers Memorandum available at: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Housing%20(Scotland)%20Bill/Housing_SDPM.pdf%20Bill/Housing_SDPM.pdf)
6. After Stage 2, the Committee reports that it does not need to draw the attention of the Parliament to the new, removed or substantially amended delegated powers provisions listed below and that it is content with the Parliamentary procedure to which they are subject:

- Section 4(2) – Power to issue guidance regarding the making or altering of social landlords’ rules on allocation of housing (inserts new subsection (3A) in section 21 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987)

- Section 7(2) – Power to issue guidance on the imposition of a minimum period before an applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing (inserts new section 20B(3) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987)

- Section 8(1) – Power to issue guidance regarding the creation of, or conversion of a tenancy to, a short Scottish secure tenancy on the grounds of antisocial behaviour (inserts new section 34(9) in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001)

- Section 15(1) – Power to publish guidance on recovery of possession where the grounds for eviction include antisocial behaviour

- Section 22A – Power to issue guidance on provision for giving warning if carbon monoxide is present in a concentration that is hazardous to health (inserts provision in section 13 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006)

- Section 22B – Power to issue guidance on electrical safety standards (inserts provision in section 13 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006)

- Section 22C – Power to modify repairing standard etc. (inserts new section 20A in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006) (new power)

- Section 29(2)(c) – Power to prescribe training requirements for registered letting agents (new power)

- Section 41(1) – Power to set out a code of practice which makes provision about the standard of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work (amended power)

- Section 46A(2) – Power to make provision about information required for the purpose of monitoring compliance (new power)

- Section 51(3)(a) – Power to exclude specified bodies or schemes from the definition of letting agency work (addition of new element to existing power)

- Section 55 – Power to specify time limits for the determination of a site licence application (inserts section 32F(2A) in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960) (new power)

- Section 60 – Power to make provision concerning the procedure to be followed in relation to the application and transfer of site licences, and appeals relating to site licences (Inserts section 32N in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960) (amended power)

- Section 63 - Power to vary maximum fine (formerly inserted section 32T in the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960) (removed power)

- Section 70 – Power to publish guidance on the operation of Part 1A of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (inserts new section 32Z5A in the 1960 Act)

- Section 72A(1) – Power to prescribe form of notice of discharge of potential liability for costs (inserts new subsections (3A) and (3B) in section 10A of the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003) (new power)

- Section 72A(2) – Power to prescribe form of notice of discharge of potential liability for costs (inserts new subsections (3A) and (3B) in section 13 of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004) (new power)

7. The Committee’s comments and, where appropriate, recommendations on the remaining new, removed or substantially altered delegated power in the Bill as amended are detailed below.

Section 77A(3) – Power to modify description of members of the First-tier Tribunal disqualified from the exercise of certain functions

Section 77B – Power to modify description of members of the Private Rented Housing Panel disqualified from membership (inserts new paragraph 1A(2) in Schedule 4 to the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984)

Powers conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Powers exercisable by: order
Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure

8. Section 77A provides that elected and certain other politicians are disqualified from hearing housing cases transferred under the Bill to the First-Tier Tribunal (FTT). Section 77B amends the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 to provide that the same elected and other politicians are also disqualified from being appointed as or remaining a member of the Private Rented Housing Panel (PRHP). Both provisions confer power on the Scottish Ministers by order to modify the list of disqualified offices.

9. The SDPM explains that on introduction, the Tribunals (Scotland) Bill (now passed) contained a provision which set out that the holders of certain offices would have been disqualified from also being a member of the First-tier Tribunal (FTT). These disqualifications would also have applied to members of the PRHP once its jurisdiction was transferred into the FTT under provisions in the Tribunals Bill. However, the provisions were removed during the passage of that Bill to allow the policy on disqualifications to be a matter for the founding legislation for each individual tribunal jurisdiction. Accordingly the Housing Bill, as amended at stage 2, now makes provision about disqualification.
10. The SDPM explains why flexibility to adjust that list of disqualified office holders is required. The jurisdiction of the FTT which deals with housing cases could be placed in a chamber with other jurisdictions of the FTT, set up under a different parent Act. Equally, the PRHP could also be placed in a chamber alongside other jurisdictions within the FTT. It may be desirable for members of the same chamber to be subject to the same disqualification rules. The Scottish Government considers that an order-making power will allow the flexibility to consider how disqualifications work in practice when more detail about the structure of the FTT is available and to take account of any potential future changes.

11. The Committee considers it acceptable for power to be delegated to the Scottish Ministers in those circumstances, to alter the disqualification provisions in line with other jurisdictions (if appropriate), once it is known what these will be.

12. The provisions confer power on the Scottish Ministers to modify primary legislation by adding to, varying or removing an office from the list of disqualified offices set out on the face of the Bill. There is a presumption that powers such as these which enable the amendment of primary legislation will be subject to the affirmative procedure.

13. In explaining the choice of negative procedure in this case, the SDPM mentions powers which exist in connection with other tribunal jurisdictions and which are subject to the negative procedure. The Committee notes, however, that these powers (which relate to the Mental Health Tribunal Scotland, the Additional Support Needs Tribunal for Scotland and the Scottish Charity Appeals Panel) do not enable the modification of primary legislation. Rather they are expressed as powers to specify additional descriptions of offices which would disqualify a person from membership of the relevant tribunal. They are not powers to modify or remove the description of offices set out in those Acts. As such they are on one view quite different to the powers conferred by sections 77A and 77B of the Bill, which do enable modification of the primary legislation. The Committee is concerned that the powers could be exercised, for example, to remove an office from the list of disqualified offices which has been approved by the Parliament on the face of the Bill.

14. The Committee is content in principle with the new powers in section 77A(3) of the Bill and paragraph 1A(2) of Schedule 4 to the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 (inserted by section 77B of the Bill). However, the Committee recommends that the Scottish Ministers lodge amendments at stage 3 to make the powers subject to the affirmative procedure.
Housing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the delegated powers provisions in this Bill after Stage 2.
Housing (Scotland) Bill: After Stage 2

11:36

The Convener: We come to agenda item 6. Members will have noted that the Scottish Government has provided a supplementary delegated powers memorandum and will have seen the briefing paper.

Stage 3 is due to take place on Wednesday 25 June. The deadline for lodging amendments is 4.30 this Thursday—19 June. The committee may therefore wish to agree on its conclusions today.

Newly inserted section 77A provides that elected and certain other politicians are disqualified from hearing housing cases that are transferred under the bill to the first-tier tribunal. Newly inserted section 77B amends the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 to provide that the same elected and other politicians are also disqualified from being appointed as, or remaining, a member of the Private Rented Housing Panel. Both provisions confer power on the Scottish ministers, by order, to modify the list of disqualified offices. Does the committee agree to recommend that the Scottish Government lodge amendments at stage 3 to make the new powers in section 77A(3) and proposed new paragraph 1A(2) of schedule 4 to the 1984 act, which is inserted by section 77B of the bill, subject to the affirmative procedure?

Members indicated agreement.

Stewart Stevenson: I certainly agree with that recommendation, but I make the more general point—I have made it elsewhere—that it would be good practice, if and when the Government amends the list, for it to republish the entire list in the amending order rather than to publish just the amendments. That would avoid the subsequent need to restate the list after large amounts of amendments. It is useful to have that on the record.

The Convener: That is a familiar plea, with which I suspect we all agree.

Does the committee agree to report that it is otherwise content with the newly inserted powers in sections 77A and 77B of the bill?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: It is suggested that the committee may be content with all the other provisions in the bill that were amended at stage 2 to insert or substantially alter provisions that confer powers to make subordinate legislation and other delegated powers. Are we content to report accordingly?
DELEGATED POWERS AND LAW REFORM COMMITTEE

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES

22nd Meeting, 2014 (Session 4)

Tuesday 24 June 2014

Present:
Richard Baker
Mike MacKenzie
Stuart McMillan (Deputy Convener)
Stewart Stevenson

Nigel Don (Convener)
Margaret McCulloch
John Scott

Housing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered further the delegated powers provisions in this Bill after Stage 2.
10:35

The Convener: We come to agenda item 4. The committee agreed its report on the bill, as amended at stage 2, at last week’s meeting. Since then, a non-Government amendment—amendment 61—has been lodged that would confer a new power on the Scottish ministers to make subordinate legislation.

Members will recall that Scottish Government officials wrote to the clerk on 11 June to advise the committee that the amendment would be lodged and that the Government intends to support it. To allow the committee to scrutinise the amendment, the letter explained the provision’s purpose and the reasons why it is proposed that the power be taken. Members have seen that letter and a briefing paper from our legal advisers. Does the committee agree to note the Scottish Government’s letter?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: Is the committee content with amendment 61, in so far as it relates to the committee’s remit?

John Scott (Ayr) (Con): This is a further example of late lodging of amendments, which perhaps Mr Stevenson’s committee needs to look into. We have talked about the need for explanations for amendments; it turns out that we are content with amendment 61, but if we had not been, difficulties might have arisen. The convener might wish to investigate that with Mr Stevenson’s committee—I am afraid that I do not remember its name; is it the standards committee?

The Convener: Yes.

John Scott: I would like the matter to be pursued.

The Convener: With that, is the committee content with amendment 61, in so far as it relates to the committee’s remit?

Members indicated agreement.
Housing (Scotland) Bill

Marshalled List of Amendments selected for Stage 3

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

Sections 1 to 86  Schedules 1 and 2
Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 1

Alex Johnstone

38 Leave out section 1

Section 2

Alex Johnstone

39 Leave out section 2

Section 3

John Lamont

1 In section 3, page 2, line 15, at end insert <, and

(d) persons who—

(i) appear to the social landlord to have a particular connection with a locality or community within its area, and

(ii) have unmet housing needs.

(1ZAA) It is for the social landlord to determine what constitutes a “locality” or “community” for the purposes of subsection (1ZA)(d).

(1ZAB) Reference in subsection (1ZA)(d) to a person having a particular connection with a locality or community is a reference to the person having a connection with that locality or community—

(a) because the person is, or in the past was, normally resident in it of the person’s own choice,

(b) because the person is employed in it,

(c) because of family associations, or

(d) because of any other special circumstances.>

Jackie Baillie

40 In section 3, page 2, line 17, leave out from first <the> to end of line 18 and insert <circumstances prescribed in guidance published by the Scottish Ministers apply.”>
John Lamont

2 In section 3, page 2, line 18, at end insert—

<( ) In section 20 of the 1987 Act, sub-paragraph (i) of subsection (2)(a) and the word “or” immediately following it are repealed.>

After section 4

Alex Johnstone

41 After section 4, insert—

<Factors which may be considered in allocation: age

In section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing)—

(a) subsection (2)(a)(vi) is repealed, and
(b) for subsection (2B) substitute—

“(2B) Where a social landlord takes into account the age of an applicant aged 16 years or over in the allocation of housing falling within subsection (1), the social landlord must nevertheless treat the applicant as protected from unlawful discrimination on the grounds of the protected characteristic of age (within the meaning of Part 2 of the Equality Act 2010 (c.15)).”.

Mary Fee

42 After section 4, insert—

<Factors which must be considered in allocation: sustainable communities

In section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing), after subsection (2B) insert—

“(2C) In the allocation of housing falling within subsection (1), a social landlord may take into consideration the likely effects of that allocation on the sustainability of particular localities or communities.”.

Section 8

Margaret Burgess

4 In section 8, page 7, line 7, leave out from <(3)(b)> to end of line 8 and insert <(3)—

(i) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (b) is repealed,
(ii) in paragraph (b), after “order” insert “or, as the case may be, has behaved as described in subsection (2)(b)”, and
(iii) after paragraph (b), insert—

“(c) if the notice is served under subsection (2)(b), specify—

(i) the actions of the tenant or other person which the landlord has taken into account, and
(ii) the landlord’s reasons for serving the notice, and
(d) explain the right of appeal conferred by subsection (5).”, and>
Section 17

Jim Hume

3 In section 17, page 13, line 27, at end insert—

<( ) Tribunal Rules made under the Tribunals (Scotland) Act 2014 (asp 10) must make provision for the legal representation of tenants and occupiers in relation to actions arising from the tenancies and occupancy agreements listed in subsection (1).>

After section 21

Patrick Harvie

5 After section 21, insert—

<Landlord registration: Letting Code

Landlord registration: the Letting Code

The Scottish Ministers must, no later than the end of the period of 6 months beginning with the day that regulations under section 41(1) setting out the first code of practice come into force, prepare and issue a Letting Code under section 92A of the 2004 Act.>

Drew Smith

45 After section 21, insert—

<Landlord registration: houses used for holiday purposes

Landlord registration: houses used for holiday purposes

In section 83(6) (application for registration: use of a house as a dwelling) of the 2004 Act—

(a) after (b) insert “or”,

(b) paragraph (d) and the word “or” immediately preceding that are repealed.>

Section 22B

Margaret Burgess

6 In section 22B, page 17, leave out lines 24 to 29

After section 22B

Claudia Beamish

7 After section 22B, insert—

<Duty to make provision on energy efficiency standards

(1) After section 13 of the 2006 Act insert—

“13A Duty to make provision on energy efficiency standards

(1) The Scottish Ministers must by regulations extend or vary the repairing standard to include provision—

(a) setting minimum standards for energy efficiency,

(b) the application of those standards where a house forms part only of any premises,
(c) establishing a system of inspection to determine whether premises comply with those standards, and
(d) for penalties to be imposed on a landlord for failure to comply with those standards.

(2) A draft of regulations under subsection (1) must be laid before the Scottish Parliament by 1 April 2015.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as appear to them to be appropriate.”.

(2) In section 191(5) of the 2006 Act, after “section” insert “13A,”.

Before section 23

Malcolm Chisholm

Before section 23, insert—

<Enforcement of landlord contributions to maintenance

(1) In section 15 of the 2006 Act (application of duty in relation to flats etc.), after subsection (2) insert—

“(3) A landlord is to be treated as having failed to comply with the repairing standard if the landlord fails to pay the landlord’s share of the cost of repairs to any part of the premises which the landlord is responsible for maintaining in common with others.”.

(2) In section 28(1) of the 2006 Act (the repairing standard: offences)—

(a) the words from “comply” to “order” become paragraph (a),

(b) after paragraph (a) insert “, or

(b) fails to pay the landlord’s share of the cost of repairs to any part of the premises which the landlord is responsible for maintaining in common with others,“.

Section 23

Malcolm Chisholm

In section 23, page 18, line 31, at end insert—

<(  ) the owner of an adjoining property,

(  ) an organisation providing advice services relating to housing,>

After section 25

Drew Smith

After section 25, insert—

<Houses let for holiday purposes

Houses let for holiday purposes

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations provide that a local authority may serve a closure notice prohibiting access to premises by any person other than—

(a) a person who habitually resides in the premises, or

Drew Smith

After section 25, insert—

<Houses let for holiday purposes

Houses let for holiday purposes

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations provide that a local authority may serve a closure notice prohibiting access to premises by any person other than—

(a) a person who habitually resides in the premises, or
(b) the owner of the premises
in the circumstances set out in subsection (2).

(2) The circumstances are that the premises—
(a) is situated in the local authority’s area,
(b) has been privately let for holiday purposes—
   (i) on at least two occasions during which a person occupying or visiting the premises has engaged in antisocial behaviour, and
   (ii) the authority anticipates further use of those premises that will result in antisocial behaviour.

(3) Regulations under subsection (1) must include provision for—
(a) the form of a closure notice and the means by which it is to be served,
(b) the period for which a closure notice can apply,
(c) the means by which a closure notice is to be enforced,
(d) an appeals mechanism, and
(e) such other matters as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient.

(4) For the purposes of this section, “antisocial behaviour” has the meaning given by section
81(4) of the 2004 Act.>

James Kelly
49 After section 25, insert—

<Rent reviews and rent increases

Rent reviews and rent increases

(1) The Scottish Ministers must by regulations make provision that, in relation to a tenancy of a dwelling-house other than a tenancy granted by a social landlord—
   (a) prohibits a landlord from reviewing the rent payable under such a tenancy before the expiry of the period of one year since the previous such review,
   (b) specifies the maximum amount by which the total of the rent payable under such a tenancy may be increased at each review, and
   (c) makes such further provision in connection with the matters described in paragraphs (a) and (b) as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of those matters.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must lay before the Scottish Parliament a draft Scottish statutory instrument containing regulations under subsection (1) by 1 April 2015.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as appear to them to be appropriate.

(4) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify, or disapply any provision of, any enactment (including this Act).>
After section 25, insert—

Security of tenure

(1) The Scottish Ministers must by regulations make provision that, in relation to a tenancy of a dwelling-house other than a tenancy granted by a social landlord—

(a) establishes that the period of such a tenancy will be at least 3 years,

(b) permits the tenant to terminate the tenancy on giving the landlord notice of one month,

(c) permits the landlord to terminate the tenancy on giving the tenant notice of two months if—

(i) the tenant has such arrears of rent as may be prescribed,

(ii) the tenant has acted in such antisocial manner as may be prescribed,

(iii) the tenant otherwise breaches the terms of the tenancy agreement,

(iv) the landlord wishes to sell the dwelling-house,

(v) the dwelling-house is required as the principal residence of the landlord or a member of the landlord’s family, or

(vi) the landlord intends to refurbish or change the use of the dwelling-house, and

(d) makes such further provision in connection with the matters described in paragraphs (a) to (c) as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of those matters.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must lay before the Scottish Parliament a draft Scottish statutory instrument containing regulations under subsection (1) by 1 April 2015.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as appear to them to be appropriate.

(4) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify, or disapply any provision of, any enactment (including this Act).

Private rented housing: Enhanced Enforcement Areas

(1) The Scottish Ministers must by regulations provide a scheme whereby a local authority may apply to the Scottish Ministers for additional discretionary powers to enable it to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in houses subject to tenancies and occupancy agreements of the type mentioned in section 17(1) (“private rented housing”).

(2) The scheme under subsection (1) must provide—

(a) that a local authority may apply to the Scottish Ministers for an area to be designated as an Enhanced Enforcement Area where it considers that the area is characterised by—
(i) an overprovision or a concentration of private rented housing that appears to the local authority to be—

(A) of a poor environmental standard,
(B) overcrowded, and

(ii) a prevalence of antisocial behaviour, as defined by section 81(4) of the 2004 Act,

(b) where the Scottish Ministers agree to designate an area as an Enhanced Enforcement Area, that the local authority will acquire such additional discretionary powers as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient, to be exercised for prescribed purposes, including in relation to—

(i) the checks it may carry out before entering a relevant person on the register of landlords that it maintains under Part 8 of the 2004 Act,
(ii) authority to inspect dwellings let by a landlord who is entered on that register,

(c) where the Scottish Ministers agree to designate an area as an Enhanced Enforcement Area, that—

(i) the local authority must take steps to advertise the fact that the designation has been granted,
(ii) the designation will apply for a period of five years commencing from the date on which the Scottish Ministers notify a local authority of its decision,
(iii) the local authority may make a further application for the area to be designated as an Enhanced Enforcement Area before the expiry of its first designation.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult—

(a) local authorities,
(b) persons or bodies who appear to them to represent the interests of—

(i) landlords,
(ii) tenants,
(c) such other persons or bodies as they consider appropriate.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must lay before the Scottish Parliament a draft Scottish statutory instrument containing regulations under subsection (1) by 1 April 2015.

(5) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify, or disapply any provision of, any enactment (including this Act) for the purposes of this section.

Section 30

Margaret Burgess

52 In section 30, page 25, line 29, at end insert—

<( ) Material which shows that a person has a conviction which is a spent conviction for the purposes of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) does not fall within subsection (2).>
Section 31A

Margaret Burgess

53 In section 31A, page 26, leave out lines 13 to 17 and insert <the information which would be included in a criminal conviction certificate (within the meaning of section 112 of the Police Act 1997 (c.50)) in relation to that person.>

Section 34

Mary Fee

54 In section 34, page 27, line 14, leave out <3 years> and insert <1 year>

Mary Fee

55 In section 34, page 27, line 15, leave out <3 years> and insert <1 year>

Section 35

Margaret Burgess

8 In section 35, page 27, line 20, after <agent> insert <is not, or>

Margaret Burgess

9 In section 35, page 27, line 22, after <27> insert <or in accordance with the duty in section 33, is not, or>

After section 35

Margaret Burgess

10 After section 35, insert—

<Removal from register on application>

(1) A registered letting agent may apply to the Scottish Ministers to be removed from the register.

(2) The application must be accompanied by a fee of such amount (if any) as the Scottish Ministers may determine.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must remove a registered letting agent from the register if, having considered an application under this section, they are satisfied that—

(a) the registered letting agent is no longer carrying out letting agency work, and

(b) it is otherwise appropriate to remove that agent from the register.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after making their decision under this section, notify the agent who made the application of—

(a) their decision,

(b) in the case of a decision to remove the agent from the register, the date of removal from the register, and

(c) in the case of a decision not to remove the agent from the register, their reasons for that decision.>
After section 35, insert—

<Cancellation of registration on request>

(1) Where subsection (2) applies, the Scottish Ministers must, on receipt of an application by a registered letting agent, remove the registered letting agent from the register.

(2) This subsection applies where the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that—

(a) the registered letting agent has made adequate arrangements with respect to the agent’s letting agency work, and

(b) it is otherwise appropriate to remove the registered letting agent from the register.>

Section 38

In section 38, page 28, line 37, at end insert—

<(d) remove a person from the register under section (Removal from register on application).>

In section 38, page 29, line 4, after <34> insert <or (Removal from register on application)>

In section 38, page 29, line 17, after <(1)(b)> insert <or (d)>

In section 38, page 29, line 18, leave out <under section 34>

Section 41

In section 41, page 30, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) The code of practice set out in regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision about the level of advance rent that a letting agent may charge a tenant.>

In section 41, page 30, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) The code of practice set out in regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision about the level of deposit that a letting agent may charge a tenant.>

In section 41, page 30, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) The code of practice set out in regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision requiring a letting agent to provide a tenant with standard tenancy documents as defined by section 30B of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (c.43).>
Patrick Harvie

20 In section 41, page 30, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) The code of practice set out in regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision prohibiting a letting agent from discriminating against a prospective tenant on socio-economic grounds.>

Patrick Harvie

21 In section 41, page 30, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) The code of practice set out in regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision prohibiting a letting agent from discriminating against a prospective tenant on the grounds that the prospective tenant (or an individual whom the prospective tenant intends will reside or lodge with the prospective tenant) is in receipt of a payment under the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 (c.4), the Jobseekers Act 1995 (c.18) or the Welfare Reform Act 2012 (c.5).>

Patrick Harvie

22 In section 41, page 30, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) The code of practice set out in regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision prohibiting a letting agent from discriminating against a prospective tenant on the grounds of the immigration status of the prospective tenant (or an individual whom the prospective tenant intends will reside or lodge with the prospective tenant).>

Mary Fee

56 In section 41, page 30, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) A person who carries out letting agency work must comply with the Letting Agent Code of Practice.

( ) Regulations under subsection (1) must, in particular, include provision—

(a) requiring that all deposits received by a letting agent must be paid to a tenancy deposit scheme approved under the Tenancy Deposit Schemes (Scotland) Regulations 2011 (SSI 2011/176),

(b) prohibiting a letting agent from charging a prospective tenant, tenant or former tenant any fee, charge or premium before, during or after the end of a tenancy, apart from rent and a tenancy deposit within the meaning of section 120 of the 2006 Act,

(c) setting out any measures that the Scottish Minister consider necessary to ensure that letting agents comply with duties under the Equality Act 2010 (c.15),

(d) prohibiting a letting agent from discriminating against a prospective tenant on the basis that the prospective tenant (or a person whom the prospective tenant intends will reside or lodge with the prospective tenant)—

(i) is in receipt of a payment under the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 (c.4), the Jobseekers Act 1995 (c.18) or the Welfare Reform Act 2012 (c.5), or

(ii) is responsible for the care of a child.>
Section 43

Patrick Harvie
23 In section 43, page 30, line 30, after <tenant,> insert

Patrick Harvie
24 In section 43, page 30, line 36, at end insert—

<(  ) in relation to an application by a third party on behalf of a group of tenants, each letting agent appointed by the landlords of those tenants to carry out letting agency work in relation to the houses occupied (or to be occupied) by the tenants,>

Patrick Harvie
25 In section 43, page 31, line 14, at end insert—

<(  ) must provide that the letting agent must pay to the tenant compensation amounting to not less than the amount of rent that the tenant has paid during the period beginning with the day on which the landlord has been determined to have first failed to comply with the code and ending with the day on which the landlord complies with the enforcement order,>

Patrick Harvie
26 In section 43, page 31, line 15, after <such> insert <further>

Section 51

Alex Johnstone
27 In section 51, page 36, line 25, leave out from <or> to end of line 28

Margaret Burgess
28 In section 51, page 36, line 26, leave out from <repairing> to <house> in line 27 and insert <managing a house (including in particular collecting rent, inspecting the house and making arrangements for the repair, maintenance, improvement or insurance of the house)>

Section 61

Margaret Burgess
29 In section 61, page 46, line 37, at end insert—

<(  ) contravened a direction made under section 37 of the Gas Act 1986 (c.44) (maximum prices for reselling gas),

(  ) contravened a direction made under section 44 of the Electricity Act 1989 (c.29) (maximum prices for reselling electricity),

(  ) contravened a charges scheme made under section 29A of the Water Industry (Scotland) Act 2002 (asp 3) (charges schemes) as it applied to the person by virtue of section 30(1) of that Act (maximum charges for services provided with help of Scottish Water),>
Margaret Burgess

58 In section 61, page 47, line 2, at end insert—

<(  ) Material which shows that a person has a conviction which is a spent conviction for the purposes of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) does not fall within subsection (2).>
Section 72

Sarah Boyack

59 In section 72, page 59, line 23, leave out <notify> and insert <give notice to>

Sarah Boyack

60 In section 72, page 59, line 31, at end insert—

<4B Guidance on operation of sections 4 and 4A

(1) The Scottish Ministers must publish guidance about the operation of sections 4 and 4A.

(2) Before publishing guidance under this section, the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(3) Local authorities must have regard to any guidance published under this section.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must lay a copy of any guidance published under this section before the Scottish Parliament.”>

Sarah Boyack

61 In section 72, page 60, line 10, at end insert—

<(3) After section 174 of the 2006 Act, insert—

“174A Repayment charges: registered social landlords

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision allowing a registered social landlord to make in favour of itself a charge to recover a sum which—

(a) the registered social landlord is entitled to recover from an owner of a flat in a tenement, and

(b) represents the owner’s share of scheme costs as determined in accordance with section 4A(3) of the 2004 Act.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may, in particular—

(a) apply (with or without modifications), or make provision similar to, any provision of or made under this Part,

(b) prescribe conditions which must apply before a charge can be made in relation to a sum mentioned in subsection (1), including conditions relating to—

(i) the registered social landlord which may make a charge,

(ii) the circumstances leading to the sum becoming recoverable by the registered social landlord,

(c) modify the Tenement Management Scheme or its operation,

(d) make provision about rights of appeal which apply in relation to—

(i) the decision to impose a charge,

(ii) the terms of the charge.
(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult—
(a) such bodies representing local authorities,
(b) such bodies representing registered social landlords,
(c) such other persons,
as they think fit.

(4) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify any enactment (including this Act).

(5) In this section—
“owner of a flat in a tenement” is to be construed in accordance with the definition of “owner” in section 28 of the 2004 Act,
“registered social landlord” means a body registered in the register maintained under section 20(1) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 17),
“Tenement Management Scheme” has the same meaning as in the 2004 Act, and
“the 2004 Act” means the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 11).”.

(4) In section 191(5) of the 2006 Act (affirmative procedure for regulations), for “or 121(1)” substitute “, 121(1) or 174A(1)”.> After section 74

Sarah Boyack

62 After section 74, insert—

<Maintenance orders: report on exercise of powers under section 42

After section 42 of the 2006 Act (maintenance orders) insert—

“42A Report on exercise of powers under section 42

(1) As soon as reasonably practicable after the end of the relevant period, the Scottish Ministers must prepare a report setting out how, in relation to the relevant period, local authorities have exercised the power in section 42.

(2) A report under this section must, in particular, include—
(a) the number of maintenance orders issued by each local authority,
(b) the number of such orders that relate to premises that consist of two or more houses,
(c) the number of maintenance plans approved by each local authority under section 46(1)(a),
(d) the number of such plans that relate to premises that consist of two or more houses,
(e) the number of maintenance plans rejected by a local authority where the authority substitutes a plan of its own devising under section 46(1)(b)(ii),
(f) the number of maintenance plans devised by each local authority under section 46(1)(c),
(g) the number of maintenance plans relating to three or more houses not approved by each local authority by virtue of section 46(3),

(h) the number of maintenance plans varied by each local authority under section 47(3)—

(i) on the application of an owner,

(ii) of its own accord,

in the relevant period.

(3) A report under this section must also include such other matters as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of monitoring the use and operation of maintenance orders.

(4) A report prepared under this section must be laid before the Scottish Parliament.

(5) In this section, “relevant period” means—

(a) in relation to the first report under this section, the period beginning with the day of commencement of section 42 of this Act and ending on the day before the day of commencement of section (Maintenance orders: report on exercise of powers under section 42) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014, and

(b) in relation to further reports under this section, each subsequent period of 3 years beginning with the day of commencement of section (Maintenance orders: report on exercise of powers under section 42) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014.>

After section 76

Margaret Burgess

32 After section 76, insert—

<Repayment charges: recovery of repayable amount

(1) In section 172 of the 2006 Act (repayment charges)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (b) is repealed, and

(ii) after paragraph (b), insert—

“(c) providing that the repayable amount is payable in the number of equal annual instalments and on the date in each year determined under subsection (3)(a),

(d) providing that in default of such payment each instalment, together with any amount recoverable in respect of that instalment under subsection (6A), is to be separately recoverable as a debt, and

(e) providing that if immediately after the final instalment falls due any balance of the repayable amount remains unpaid, that balance is immediately due for repayment and is recoverable as a debt.”,

(b) for subsection (3), substitute—

“(3) The local authority must—
(a) determine—

(i) the number of equal annual instalments, being no fewer than 5 and no more than 30, in which the repayable amount is to be paid, and

(ii) the date in each year on which the instalment becomes due, and

(b) notify the owner of its determination under paragraph (a).” , and

(c) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The owner of a property who is liable for the repayable amount does not, by virtue only of ceasing to be such an owner, cease to be liable for the repayable amount.”.

(2) After section 172 of the 2006 Act, insert—

“172A Repayment charge: appeals to the sheriff

(1) A person aggrieved by a determination under section 172(3)(a)(i) may appeal to the sheriff.

(2) On an appeal under this section the sheriff may make such order relating to the number of annual instalments as the sheriff thinks fit.

(3) The decision of the sheriff on appeal under this section is final.”.

Section 76A

Margaret Burgess

33 In section 76A, page 62, line 21, at end insert—

<( ) in paragraph 2, the words “, and shall commence from the date of the order and be payable for a term of 30 years to the local authority” are repealed,

( ) after paragraph 2, insert—

“2A The local authority must—

(a) determine—

(i) the term of the charging order, being no fewer than 5 years and no more than 30 years, and

(ii) the date in each year on which the annuity is payable, and

(b) notify the owner of its determination under paragraph (a).

2B Section 187 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1) applies to a notification under paragraph 2A(b) as if the notification were a formal communication referred to in section 187(1) of that Act.” , and

( ) after paragraph 3, insert—

“3A A charging order must provide—

(a) that the annuity is payable for the term and on the date in each year determined under paragraph 2A(a),

(b) that in default of payment of an annuity, the annuity is to be separately recoverable as a debt, and

(c) that if immediately after the final annuity falls due any balance of the expenses charged by the order remains unpaid, that balance is immediately due for repayment and is recoverable as a debt.
3B(1) A person aggrieved by a determination under paragraph 2A(a)(i), may appeal to the sheriff.

(2) On an appeal under this paragraph the sheriff may make such order relating to the term of the charging order as the sheriff thinks fit.

(3) The decision of the sheriff on appeal under this paragraph is final.

Margaret Burgess
34 In section 76A, page 62, leave out lines 23 to 25 and insert—

( ) after paragraph 5, insert—

“5A The owner of the premises on which an annuity has been charged by a charging order does not, by virtue only of ceasing to be such an owner, cease to be liable for each annuity charged.”, and ( ) paragraph 6 is repealed.

Section 77B

Margaret Burgess
35 In section 77B, page 64, line 16, leave out <negative> and insert <affirmative>

Section 82

Drew Smith
67 In section 82, page 67, line 20, at end insert—

( ) under section (Houses let for holiday purposes)(1),>

James Kelly
68 In section 82, page 67, line 20, at end insert—

( ) under section (Rent reviews and rent increases)(1),>

James Kelly
69 In section 82, page 67, line 20, at end insert—

( ) under section (Security of tenure)(1),>

Drew Smith
70 In section 82, page 67, line 20, at end insert—

( ) under section (Private rented housing: Enhanced Enforcement Areas)(1),>

Margaret Burgess
36 In section 82, page 67, line 24, at end insert—

( ) under section 77A(3),>
Patrick Harvie

37 In section 82, page 67, line 28, at end insert—

<( ) The Scottish Ministers must, before the end of the period of 18 months beginning with the day of Royal Assent, lay before the Scottish Parliament a draft Scottish statutory instrument containing regulations under section 41(1) setting out the first code of practice.>}

Section 85

Alex Johnstone

71 In section 85, page 68, line 10, leave out subsection (4)

Mary Fee

72 In section 85, page 68, line 11, leave out <2 years> and insert <1 year>

Long Title

Alex Johnstone

73 In the long title, page 1, line 1, leave out <the abolition of the right to buy,>
Groupings of Amendments for Stage 3

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the day of Stage 3 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Note: The time limits indicated are those set out in the timetabling motion to be considered by the Parliament before the Stage 3 proceedings begin. If that motion is agreed to, debate on the groups above each line must be concluded by the time indicated, although the amendments in those groups may still be moved formally and disposed of later in the proceedings.

Group 1: Abolition of right to buy
38, 39, 71, 72, 73

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 71 pre-empts amendment 72

Group 2: Allocation of social housing and creation of short Scottish secure tenancies
1, 40, 2, 41, 42, 4

Group 3: Right to representation at the First-tier Tribunal
3

Debate to end no later than 45 minutes after proceedings begin

Group 4: Landlord registration: Letting Code
5

Group 5: Houses let for holiday purposes
45, 48, 67
Group 6: Private rented housing: the repairing standard
6, 7, 46, 47

Debate to end no later than 1 hour 20 minutes after proceedings begin

Group 7: Private rented housing: rent reviews, rent increases and security of tenure
49, 50, 68, 69

Group 8: Private rented housing: Enhanced Enforcement Areas
51, 70

Group 9: Letting agent registration: fit and proper test
52, 53, 8, 9

Debate to end no later than 1 hour 55 minutes after proceedings begin

Group 10: Letting agent registration: duration of registration
54, 55

Group 11: Letting agent registration: removal from register
10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16

Group 12: Letting Agent Code of Practice
17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 56, 37

Debate to end no later than 2 hours 30 minutes after proceedings begin

Group 13: Enforcement of letting agent code of practice
23, 24, 25, 26

Group 14: Meaning of letting agency work
27, 28

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 27 pre-empts amendment 28

Group 15: Mobile home sites with permanent residents
29, 58, 30, 31

Debate to end no later than 3 hours after proceedings begin

Group 16: Tenement management schemes
59, 60, 61, 32, 33, 34

Group 17: Maintenance orders: report on exercise of powers
62
Group 18: First-tier Tribunal and private rented housing panel membership: parliamentary procedure
35, 36

Debate to end no later than 3 hours 35 minutes after proceedings begin
EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Vol. 4, No. 19 Session 4

Meeting of the Parliament

Wednesday 25 June 2014

Note: (DT) signifies a decision taken at Decision Time.

Business Motion: Joe FitzPatrick, on behalf of the Parliamentary Bureau, moved S4M-10468—That the Parliament agrees that, during stage 3 of the Housing (Scotland) Bill, debate on groups of amendments shall, subject to Rule 9.8.4A, be brought to a conclusion by the time limit indicated, that time limit being calculated from when the stage begins and excluding any periods when other business is under consideration or when a meeting of the Parliament is suspended (other than a suspension following the first division in the stage being called) or otherwise not in progress:

- Groups 1 to 3: 45 minutes
- Groups 4 to 6: 1 hour 20 minutes
- Groups 7 to 9: 1 hour 55 minutes
- Groups 10 to 12: 2 hours 30 minutes
- Groups 13 to 15: 3 hours
- Groups 16 to 18: 3 hours 35 minutes

The motion was agreed to.

Housing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 3: The Bill was considered at Stage 3.

The following amendments were agreed to (without division): 4, 51, 52, 53, 8, 9, 12, 14, 15, 16, 28, 29, 58, 30, 31, 59, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36 and 37.

The following amendments were agreed to (by division)—
- 6 (For 82, Against 33, Abstentions 0)
- 10 (For 110, Against 6, Abstentions 0)
- 61 (For 100, Against 13, Abstentions 0)
- 70 (For 97, Against 12, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division)—
- 38 (For 12, Against 103, Abstentions 0)
- 1 (For 13, Against 103, Abstentions 0)
- 2 (For 14, Against 103, Abstentions 0)
- 41 (For 14, Against 70, Abstentions 33)
- 42 (For 47, Against 70, Abstentions 0)
- 5 (For 41, Against 77, Abstentions 0)
- 45 (For 41, Against 76, Abstentions 0)
- 7 (For 41, Against 74, Abstentions 0)
- 46 (For 41, Against 75, Abstentions 0)
47 (For 41, Against 75, Abstentions 0)
48 (For 39, Against 75, Abstentions 0)
49 (For 37, Against 80, Abstentions 0)
50 (For 42, Against 75, Abstentions 0)
54 (For 39, Against 73, Abstentions 0)
55 (For 37, Against 74, Abstentions 0)
17 (For 43, Against 74, Abstentions 0)
18 (For 43, Against 74, Abstentions 0)
19 (For 43, Against 74, Abstentions 0)
20 (For 43, Against 72, Abstentions 0)
21 (For 42, Against 73, Abstentions 0)
22 (For 43, Against 73, Abstentions 0)
56 (For 42, Against 75, Abstentions 0)
23 (For 42, Against 73, Abstentions 0)
25 (For 9, Against 106, Abstentions 0)
27 (For 46, Against 69, Abstentions 0)
60 (For 51, Against 60, Abstentions 0)
62 (For 36, Against 71, Abstentions 0)
72 (For 37, Against 71, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were not moved: 39, 40, 11, 24, 26, 67, 68, 69, 71 and 73.

Amendment 3 was moved and, with the agreement of the Parliament, withdrawn.

The Deputy Presiding Officer extended the time-limits under Rule 9.8.4A(a) and (c).

Housing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 3: The Minister for Housing and Welfare (Margaret Burgess) moved S4M-10438—That the Parliament agrees that the Housing (Scotland) Bill be passed.

After debate, the motion was agreed to (DT) by division: For 93, Against 12, Abstentions 0).
Scottish Parliament

Wednesday 25 June 2014

[The Deputy Presiding Officer opened the meeting at 14:00]

Business Motion

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): Good afternoon. The first item of business this afternoon is consideration of business motion S4M-010468, in the name of Joe FitzPatrick, on behalf of the Parliamentary Bureau, setting out a timetable for stage 3 consideration of the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

Motion moved,

That the Parliament agrees that, during stage 3 of the Housing (Scotland) Bill, debate on groups of amendments shall, subject to Rule 9.8.4A, be brought to a conclusion by the time limit indicated, that time limit being calculated from when the stage begins and excluding any periods when other business is under consideration or when a meeting of the Parliament is suspended (other than a suspension following the first division in the stage being called) or otherwise not in progress:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Groups</th>
<th>Time Limit</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1 to 3</td>
<td>45 minutes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 to 6</td>
<td>1 hour 20 minutes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7 to 9</td>
<td>1 hour 55 minutes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10 to 12</td>
<td>2 hours 30 minutes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13 to 15</td>
<td>3 hours</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16 to 18</td>
<td>3 hours 35 minutes</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—[Joe FitzPatrick]

Motion agreed to.
Housing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 3

14:41

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott):
The next item of business is stage 3 of the Housing (Scotland) Bill. In dealing with the amendments, members should have the bill as amended at stage 2, the marshalled list and the groupings. The division bell will sound and proceedings will be suspended for five minutes for the first division of the afternoon. The period of voting for the first division will be 30 seconds. Thereafter, I will allow a voting period of one minute for the first division after each debate. Members who wish to speak in a debate on a group of amendments should press their request-to-speak buttons as soon as possible after I call the group.

Section 1—Abolition of the right to buy

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Amendment 38, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is grouped with amendments 39, 71, 72 and 73. I draw members’ attention to the pre-emption information on the groupings.

Alex Johnstone (North East Scotland) (Con): The purpose of amendment 38 is to remove section 1 of the bill. The effect would be to remove from the bill the attempt to end the right to buy.

The right to buy council houses has been the greatest driver for social change in Scotland in 50 years. It has created strong mixed-tenure communities that to this day remain examples of how we can do that within many of our towns and cities across Scotland. It has driven the aspiration to home ownership and has been a positive thing in many areas.

The pressure to end the right to buy has existed in Scotland for some time and has been manifest within Parliament. However, the notion that we should somehow protect social housing has not been consistent through the discussions that have taken place. Indeed, the notion of social housing was, in effect, created by the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001. As a consequence, it is only since then that we have been able to divide social housing from rented housing or other forms of tenure.

I deny that the so-called loss of social housing is really happening. Of the 1,400 houses that were sold during the last full year for which information is available, only 347 were sold under the modernised right to buy. However, 1,173 houses were sold under the pre-2001 preserved right to buy to people who had been tenants in their properties for more than 12 years—many for significantly longer than that. I maintain that those who exercised their right to buy were long-term tenants who, had they not decided to buy, would have remained long-term tenants. Houses will not be freed up by removing their right to buy. In fact, the suggestion is that, in the first year, as few as 30 houses might be freed for new tenancies as a result of the proposed change.

Let us contrast that with the effect of the bill and its move to end the right to buy. Provisions in the bill will give a two-year period in which people who are entitled to exercise their right to buy will be able to make up their minds whether to exercise that right. I presume that, in an independent Scotland, rights will not be removed instantaneously from our people without compensation, so I presume that the opportunity to exercise an existing right will be maintained.

The effect of the attempt to remove the right to buy will, I believe, be a feeding frenzy in which the Government might lose rather more houses than it expects to save. I believe that it is a mistake to move forward with the abolition of the right to buy at this time, and I believe that doing so will prove to be counterproductive, by the Government’s own criteria.

I move amendment 38.

Mary Fee (West Scotland) (Lab): Amendment 72 seeks to reduce from two years to one year the period before abolition of the right to buy. That follows the recommendation of the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee and the majority of the evidence that the committee received, and it would enable removal of the right to buy as quickly as possible. Although I am sympathetic to the minister’s wish to allow as much time as possible for people to take up the right to buy before it is abolished, the issue has been in the spotlight for a considerable time, and those who wish to exercise the right have had a decent amount of time in which to do so. One year on from the passing of the bill is, therefore, a fair and equitable period.

I do not support amendments 38, 39, 71 and 73, in the name of Alex Johnstone, which seek to retain the right to buy.

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): I once again record my support for the abolition of the right to buy and state that I oppose Alex Johnstone’s attempt to remove section 1.

Alex Johnstone makes the case that abolition of the right to buy will not, like a magic bullet, transform things overnight. Of course it will not; I do not think that anyone is suggesting that it will. I think that everybody who is proposing abolition of the right to buy recognises that the benefit of abolition will be achieved in the long-term and will be maximised if the measure is accompanied by investment in new-build social housing. I support abolition on those grounds.

Alex Johnstone also tells us that the right to buy “has driven the aspiration to home ownership”.

I would go further; I would say that it has contributed to stigmatisation of other forms of tenure in our society. If we want mixed communities, we should be aspiring to a situation in which all forms of tenure—owner-occupation, the social rented sector and the private rented sector—are seen as respected options that can provide people with places in which they can choose to live with dignity, rather than to a situation in which the idea is that owner-occupation is the tenure of choice to which everybody ought to aspire.

I will oppose Alex Johnstone’s amendments and will support amendment 72, which will reduce to one year the period prior to abolition.

The Minister for Housing and Welfare (Margaret Burgess): The Scottish Government’s policy is to end the right to buy. It is a policy that the majority of stakeholders support; I am grateful for that support.

More than 450,000 homes have been sold under the right to buy, which has been a major cause of housing shortages in many areas. Lots of people choose to rent in the social sector, but for others it is their only option. We want to do everything possible to ensure that social rented housing is protected for those people and for future generations. Ending the right to buy will preserve valuable social housing, increase choice for tenants and people who are on waiting lists and help to ensure social housing’s role in mixed-tenure communities in which people want to live.

Again and again, stakeholders have told us that they support the policy. Tenants have told us of the damaging impact that the right to buy has had on the social housing sector, and social landlords have told us how ending the right to buy will help them with their planning and stock management. Yet, in the face of all the evidence saying that the right to buy has had its day and has no place in the Scotland that we want to build, Mr Johnstone continues to call for that outdated and unpopular policy to continue. That can surely only be because of his party’s historic attachment to the right to buy. However, surely even he must accept that it flies in the face of what is best for landlords, tenants and the community as a whole.

Our ending the right to buy does not mean that the Scottish Government does not support home ownership: far from it. However, we do not have to keep losing housing stock in order to help people to get on the housing ladder. We are committed to helping people into home ownership in other ways, and we support a range of schemes to achieve that. I therefore invite Mr Johnstone to seek to withdraw amendment 38 and not to move amendments 71 and 73.

Amendment 39 seeks to remove section 2 from the bill. That section has nothing at all to do with ending the right to buy; it simply clarifies two provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010. The section protects the right to buy of existing tenants who move to new-supply houses in circumstances that are outwith their control. It also makes it clear that people who lived in social housing before 2 March 2011 and who later became tenants should be treated as new tenants. That was always the 2010 act’s intention, but the provision could have been open to misinterpretation. The bill is simply the first legislative opportunity that we have had to tidy those matters.

Amendment 72, which Mary Fee lodged, would reduce from two years to one year the notice period before the right to buy ends. I share her wish to stop as soon as is reasonably possible the sale of socially rented homes. Most stakeholders told us that they wanted that, too. That is why I lodged a stage 2 amendment to reduce the notice period to two years from the three years that we originally proposed.

I know that Mary Fee disagrees with me, but I do not consider that a period of one year would be fair to tenants. If the notice period were to be reduced to one year, the risk would be that tenants could be rushed into buying something that they cannot afford and that is not right for them. It is important that tenants have time to read the guidance that the Scottish Government will produce, to consider their options and to obtain reputable financial advice.

I will raise one more thing about the notice period. It is important to take into account European convention on human rights considerations. Tenants must be given a fair and reasonable opportunity to exercise their right to buy before it ends. A minimum notice period of two years is fair and reasonable. For those reasons, I cannot support amendment 72.

Alex Johnstone: I will press amendment 38. The right to buy has in recent years been a significant and positive influence on the development of communities. The Government’s attempt to remove that right from Scotland has been driven by political rather than practical aspirations. It is one of those things on which time will tell who is right and who is wrong. I will determinedly dig in my heels today to defend a policy that I believe has contributed positively to large areas of Scotland.
At stage 2, I did not oppose the reduction in the notice period from three to two years, because two years and three years are largely similar. However, the further reduction to a single year that Mary Fee’s amendment 72 proposes would significantly limit individuals’ opportunity to take up an existing right. Consequently, I will oppose that amendment.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 38 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division. As this is the first division at stage 3, I suspend the meeting for five minutes.

14:53

Meeting suspended.

14:58

On resuming—

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Elaine Smith): We move to the division on amendment 38. The question is, that amendment 38 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lamont, John (Etrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh North and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Urwahart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 12, Against 103, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 38 disagreed to.

Section 2—Amendment of right to buy provisions

Amendment 39 not moved.

Section 3—Reasonable preference in allocation of social housing

15:00

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 2 is on allocation of social housing and creation of short Scottish secure tenancies. Amendment 1, in the name of John Lamont, is grouped with amendments 40, 2, 41, 42 and 4.

John Lamont (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con): Amendments 1 and 2 seek to introduce a local connection criterion for social landlords to consider when allocating houses. One of the biggest concerns for my constituents is the frustration that local people cannot always secure local housing in their own communities. People are often forced to apply for and take housing in some of the larger settlements in the Borders, which might be several miles away from their family and community and some distance away from their place of work. Such an approach is not consistent with the aim of encouraging cohesive communities.

The purpose of amendment 1 is to enable social landlords to give extra priority to applicants who have a local connection. I initially proposed my amendments at stage 2, when the minister kindly said that although she was sympathetic to my aims, she was concerned that my amendments did not require the applicant to have an unmet housing need. I took that on board and I have lodged redesigned amendments that would ensure that housing need remains a priority for social landlords.

Amendment 1 would give social landlords discretion to define “particular connection” to meet their needs. In rural areas such as the Borders, a local area might be a particular town or village, whereas in a city it might be a particular street, or it might be even more specific than that.

Amendment 2 clarifies that and confirms the intentions behind amendment 1.

All political parties have paid lip service to the notion of supporting local housing allocations policy. Indeed, the Labour Party said in its 2011 manifesto that it wanted to reform the allocations system, to ensure that “sufficient weight” was “given to meeting the needs of local people.”

I hope that the Parliament will support my amendments today.

I move amendment 1.

Jackie Baillie (Dumbarton) (Lab): Amendment 40 is supported by a number of housing bodies: Homeless Action Scotland, Shelter Scotland, Scottish Churches Housing Action, Crisis and the Legal Services Agency. In essence, amendment 40 would place a requirement on the Scottish ministers to include a definition of “unmet housing needs” in guidance. I am grateful to the minister for meeting me, following stage 2, and for her subsequent letter setting out her intentions, which I will return to.

My concern centres on consistency of approach. The definition of “reasonable preference” appears to rest on the decision of each social landlord on whether someone’s housing needs could indeed be met elsewhere. How that assessment should be made, at what point it should be made and how social landlords will be held to account, particularly if they are not giving appropriate priority to allocating properties to people in housing need, are a bit vague and definitely subjective.

I recognise that the minister’s intentions are good, but I am sure that she would agree that removing the burden of making subjective decisions from social landlords would ensure consistency, which is certainly a desirable outcome.

The amendment also seeks to protect the role of social housing, so that it is not seen as the option of last resort, and links allocations policies to strategic housing priorities.

The minister’s letter helpfully addresses the points raised and it would be useful if she could supplement her response today by publishing the letter in the Scottish Parliament information centre. As the guidance is statutory, it would be helpful if the minister could clarify in her closing remarks whether there would be oversight from the Scottish Housing Regulator.

Before I draw to a close, I will make a couple of brief remarks about John Lamont’s amendments 1 and 2, on local connection. As Homeless Action Scotland and Positive Action in Housing have pointed out, to give priority to people who have a local connection excludes those who are migrants and refugees. In England, where social landlords have introduced a local connection criterion, allocations to black and minority ethnic households have dropped by a quarter. Changes to allocations policies are adversely affecting diversity, so I urge opposition to amendments 1 and 2.

My amendment on succession for carers was not selected. It is the right of Presiding Officers not to select amendments, but nevertheless that was disappointing. There was substantial support for the amendment from carers and carers organisations across Scotland, as well as from a plethora of housing organisations.

I hope that the minister will agree to continue her dialogue with me and those organisations to provide practical reassurance on the implementation of the new restrictions on succession to ensure that the feared negative impact on carers does not materialise.

Alex Johnstone: Amendment 41 would have the unusual effect of putting back in something that the Government took out at stage 2. The consultation and the first draft of the bill contained a section to allow age to be taken into account as a criterion of allocations policy. The measure was removed by the minister at stage 2, following a campaign that argued that it could lead to widespread discrimination against younger people. I believe that the campaign was based on scaremongering and I am aware of no evidence to support the claims about discrimination. The minister argued that age in itself is not an indicator of housing need, but the five organisations that have given me input have never claimed otherwise. The case is based on the argument that, in considering how best to make a particular allocation to someone in significant housing need, it should be possible to consider age as a secondary factor where lifestyle or related issues need to be taken into account in order for a sensible, sustainable let to be made. I believe that the section should be reintroduced to the bill, and that would be the effect of my amendment.

On the other amendments in the group, I support John Lamont’s ideas and have significant experience from my mailbag of the difficulties in certain rural areas, with local people finding it impossible to find a house locally. If local connections were to be considered, that would play a significant role in creating stable communities.

Jackie Baillie’s amendment 40 is one of those amendments that seem to centralise and standardise all decision making. My concern is that it would have the opposite effect and would allow local considerations to be taken into account. Mary Fee’s amendment 42, on the other hand, would have significant value if John Lamont’s amendments or my amendment were not successful. I therefore support amendment 42.

Mary Fee: Amendment 42 would allow the sustainability of communities to be a factor in housing allocation. My amendment would allow local authorities and registered social landlords the flexibility that they told us they wanted when they gave evidence to the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee. Local authorities and RSLs know best what is needed to build and sustain their communities. The amendment would allow for a more holistic approach to housing allocation and would have regard to what is best for communities and individuals. It would also allow RSLs and local authorities to build and sustain strong communities.

For the reasons that I have just given, I feel that my amendment deals with allocation in a more appropriate manner, which would not be discriminatory to any group, while still allowing flexibility. For that reason, I will abstain in the decision on amendment 41, in the name of Alex Johnstone.

On amendment 4, I am pleased that the minister has taken on board the points that I raised in my amendment at stage 2 with regard to short Scottish secure tenancies. I am happy to support that amendment.

Patrick Harvie: I wonder whether, before the member finishes her contribution, she would talk about the concerns raised by the Glasgow and West of Scotland Forum of Housing Associations about her amendment 42, which, it suggests, implies that there exists a legal prohibition on taking certain issues into account. The forum does not think that such a prohibition exists. Would she also respond to Shelter’s concern that housing need should be the primary issue? Would Mary Fee respond to those concerns about amendment 42, as this is the only chance to do so?

Mary Fee: I thank the member for his intervention. Amendment 42 specifically addresses the issue of housing need, which should always be a paramount concern. Local authorities and RSLs need to have the flexibility to build and sustain communities, and amendment 42 would give them the flexibility to do that.

Amendment 4 will ensure that any tenant who was to be moved to an SSST is told about the action that caused that, what support is available to them and their right of appeal. I welcome amendment 4.

Margaret Burgess: I will begin by speaking to amendments 1 and 2. As I said at stage 2, I understand communities’ wish for priority to be given to the housing needs of local people but, as I have previously explained, landlords can already take account of the fact that someone lives in a particular area and can give priority to local people, and some landlords do so.

Amendment 1 would require all social landlords to give reasonable preference to applicants with a local connection, regardless of local circumstances. I believe that it is better for landlords to have the flexibility—as they do at the moment—to take local connection into account if they consider that that is right for their area. That more flexible approach is very important for those landlords who provide housing for a particular client group, such as elderly people or veterans, for whom local connection is not always a relevant factor. Those examples illustrate that making local connection a reasonable preference category in legislation would remove a flexibility that is necessary in some cases.

Amendment 2 would allow landlords to take into account the length of time for which an applicant had been resident in an area when they allocate social housing. As I have said, I understand the wish for priority to be given to the housing needs of local people, but that must be balanced against the needs of all applicants. Landlords can already take local connection into account and can consider how long an applicant has been on the housing list. I am concerned that taking into account the length of time for which an applicant has lived in an area could make it more difficult for people to move when they have good reasons for wanting to do so.

Overall, I think that there is sufficient flexibility in the current arrangements, and I do not think that amendments 1 and 2 are the right way forward. Therefore, I invite John Lamont not to press them.

Jackie Baillie’s amendment 40 would remove “unmet housing needs” from the definition in section 3 and instead would require that the circumstances for unmet housing needs should be prescribed in guidance. As Jackie Baillie said, the committee considered an identical amendment at stage 2, when I argued that having the definition on the face of the bill makes it clear that allocations should focus on addressing cases of unmet needs and that a landlord’s reasonable preference categories should give priority to that. That remains the Government’s position.

As Jackie Baillie also said, I met her to discuss that and other points that she had raised. We discussed the steps that we can take to ensure that there is reasonable consistency in the way that landlords assess unmet housing needs. Jackie Baillie and Homeless Action Scotland argued that tying the assessment to local housing strategies would help to achieve consistency. After the meeting, I wrote to Ms Baillie to confirm that section 4 of the bill requires social landlords to have regard to the Government’s guidance on allocation policies, so the guidance is statutory. I also advised that section 4 requires a landlord to have regard to local housing strategies in developing its allocations policy, and that the Government will use the statutory guidance on allocations to highlight that duty.

Jackie Baillie was also interested in how the impact of the new provisions on allocations will be monitored. The independent Scottish Housing Regulator is responsible for monitoring and reporting on the performance of all social landlords. It does so by reference to the Scottish social housing charter, in which the Government has set the outcomes and standards that landlords should meet, which include outcomes on housing options and access to social housing. The Government will use the regulator’s reports for evidence of how the new arrangements are working.

I hope that the outline that I have provided reassures Jackie Baillie and that she will be content not to move amendment 40. If she does so, I invite the chamber to reject it.

15:15

Alex Johnstone’s amendment 41 would reintroduce section 5 into the bill. That would allow landlords to take age into account in the allocation of social housing. I explained in detail at stage 2 my reasons for lodging an amendment to remove section 5, and my position has not changed.

Section 5 provoked a strong reaction. Landlords were keen to have flexibility to manage their stock effectively. Others, such as Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People, were concerned about the potential for discrimination against young people. I discussed the conflicting views with stakeholders. Having carefully weighed up all the arguments, I decided to remove section 5 from the bill.

I was concerned about the possibility of some groups, such as young people, being unintentionally discriminated against, and I was simply not prepared to run that risk. I am very much aware that antisocial behaviour can cause nuisance and distress to neighbours and communities. That is why I am introducing measures under the bill that will provide landlords with additional tools to tackle antisocial behaviour.
As I said at stage 2, there is more scope for sensitive lets to be used by social landlords. Officials will work closely with landlords to develop guidance to provide more advice on how sensitive lets can be used effectively in allocations. Removing section 5 was the right thing to do, and I do not support amendment 41, which seeks to reintroduce it.

The stage 2 equivalent to Mary Fee’s amendment 42 was discussed in committee. I completely understand what Ms Fee is trying to achieve, and why. It is not clear, however, how amendment 42 would work in practice to deliver the outcomes that Mary Fee seeks.

The amendment refers to “effects ... on the sustainability of particular localities or communities”. but it does not define what is meant by “sustainability”. I am concerned that, with no proper definition, the provision would mean different things to different people, and would place landlords in an almost impossible position when they had to interpret and apply it.

Different landlords, through different interpretations, could end up applying the provision in very different ways, leading to highly inconsistent and potentially unfair outcomes for people seeking housing in different areas. I do not believe that that is what Mary Fee seeks, but it is what is likely to happen.

Mary Fee: The minister mentioned sensitive lets. Does she not agree with me that the core of my amendment 42 is that same principle of sensitive letting, and that that is what local authorities want to be able to provide?

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Minister, I would be grateful if you could begin to draw your remarks on this grouping to a close.

Margaret Burgess: I will cover the point that Mary Fee has raised.

There is a problem with landlords having to reconcile conflicting interests. The fact that the main stakeholders are divided—as Patrick Harvie mentioned—on the merits of amendment 42 suggests that it is unlikely to achieve what Mary Fee is seeking. The Scottish Federation of Housing Associations supports it, but Shelter and the Glasgow and West of Scotland Forum of Housing Associations oppose it. However, landlords can take account of the overall circumstances, including an individual’s housing needs and the housing options that are available, when making allocations.

As I said earlier, we will work closely with stakeholders and landlords to ensure that that is included when we make guidance on sensitive lettings and local letting initiatives, which we will develop through consultation. The guidance will illustrate the flexibility that is already open to landlords. I believe that that is a more effective means of achieving what Mary Fee and all of us want.

I lodged amendment 4 because of an issue that Mary Fee raised at stage 2. I was happy to do so at this stage, because I agree that it is right that tenants should have enough information to challenge a landlord’s decision to convert their tenancy, if they want to do so.

Amendment 4 provides for that by requiring social landlords to set out a number of things in the conversion notice: first, details of the behaviour of the tenant or other person that the landlord has taken into account; secondly, the reasons why the landlord is serving the notice; and finally, information about the tenant’s right to appeal. I was pleased to take that on board following Mary Fee’s equivalent amendment at stage 2.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call on John Lamont to wind up.

John Lamont: The minister states that she believes that the current flexible system is adequate, but it is clear from the correspondence that I get from my constituents that the current system is not adequate, in that local families are not always able to stay in the local community of their choice.

I will deal with some of the remarks that Jackie Baillie made about my amendment 1. Clearly, there is some misunderstanding about the intentions behind my amendments 1 and 2. Those who are homeless, or other priority groups, would still get priority under my proposed measures. Amendment 1 would simply ensure that, where all other factors are equal, local connections would count more than they currently do.

On the suggestion that ethnic minorities could be disadvantaged by my proposal, I point out that it is often the case that ethnic minority groups also want to live close to family members as part of their own community, so they would also be able to take advantage of the amendment.

Jackie Baillie: Could John Lamont explain what has changed about the process in England, where there has been a change to local connection policies and a quarter fewer houses are now allocated to ethnic minority communities than was the case before?

John Lamont: Amendment 1 is not the same as what has been introduced south of the border. I am proposing my own amendment, which I hope will deal with the concerns that I am getting in my mailbag—I am sure that Jackie Baillie is also receiving letters from her constituents, voicing similar concerns about how local social housing is allocated. I intend to press amendments 1 and 2.

The Conservative group will not be supporting amendment 40, in the name of Jackie Baillie, as we would prefer the matter to be left to the discretion of local authorities. We will support amendment 41, in the name of Alex Johnstone, and we will also support amendment 42, in the name of Mary Fee, which we believe gives further discretion to local landlords in the allocation of social housing.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 1 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christain (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Baillie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Graham, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, lain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carriick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherford) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McCougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfrieshire) (Lab)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)

32709  25 JUNE 2014  32710
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 13, Against 103, Abstentions 0.
Amendment 1 disagreed to.
Amendment 40 not moved.
Amendment 2 moved—[John Lamont].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 2 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen ( Clydesdale) (SNP)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabian, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)

Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, lain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Marr, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Sicbhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McMillan, Stuart (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gill (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)
The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 14, Against 103, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 2 disagreed to.

After section 4

Amendment 41 moved—[Alex Johnstone].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 41 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Davidson, Ruth (Glashow) (Con)
Ferguson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
AlIan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Stevenson, Stewart (Balfourshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urguhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

Abstentions

Ballie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 14, Against 70, Abstentions 33.

Amendment 41 disagreed to.

Amendment 42 moved—[Mary Fee].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 42 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Ferguson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Grant, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McMahon, Michael (Ludington and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfries) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabian, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dunde City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Graeme, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Neill, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thomson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 47, Against 70, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 42 disagreed to.
Section 8—Creation of short Scottish secure tenancy: antisocial behaviour

Amendment 4 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 17—Regulated and assured tenancies etc

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Before we turn to the next group, I should say that we have passed the agreed time limit under rule 9.8.4A but that I consider it necessary to allow the debate on group 3 to continue beyond the limit in order to allow those with the right to speak on the amendment in the group—Jim Hume and the minister—to do so. I am afraid that time is very tight this afternoon and, as members will appreciate, we are now over our time limit.

Group 3 is on the right to representation at the first-tier tribunal. Amendment 3, in the name of Jim Hume, is the only amendment in the group.

Jim Hume (South Scotland) (LD): I am pleased to be able to speak to my amendment 3. I was disappointed that a similar amendment did not receive the necessary support at stage 2. However, I stated then that I was minded to lodge another amendment on the same issue at stage 3 because I believe that the issue is important.

The first-tier tribunals are a welcome addition to the bill. They will deal with some sensitive and important cases, none more so than the eviction of a tenant. Given the seriousness of that matter, I believe that it is important that we ensure that a tenant can obtain legal representation to make the best possible case at a tribunal.

I accept the rationale that the tribunal will provide a more relaxed setting in which to resolve disputes, but evictions are serious and require serious representation. I am keen to ensure that the new tribunal system is not introduced without a clear understanding of how tenants can access justice. That is why I propose that those affected be afforded legal representation through legal aid or an equivalent, assuming that the necessary eligibility criteria are met.

The minister asked me to withdraw a similar amendment at stage 2. She accepted that some people might require legal representation, but the absence of a guarantee from her ensured that I was forced to lodge another amendment on the issue at stage 3.

I thank the minister for meeting me and Homeless Action Scotland earlier this month—after stage 2—to discuss the issue further. I hope that she has taken time to reflect on it and considered how best the Scottish Government can ensure that tenants before a tribunal who face the distressing prospect of losing their home have the ability to present the best possible case. I believe that my amendment 3 can help to achieve that, and I hope that colleagues will support it.

I move amendment 3.

15:30

Margaret Burgess: I agree with Jim Hume that the issue is important, and I will further clarify my position on it.

I still believe that the amendment is not required for the tribunal to balance the interests of landlords and tenants. People who take cases to the tribunal will be able to be represented if they wish. That could be by a friend, family member, lay representative or someone who is legally qualified. Nothing in the bill or in the operational detail of the tribunal will affect that.

Tribunal committees will have a legally qualified chairperson, who will have the expertise to ask questions and seek further information to help parties to make the best of their case. The intention is to set up a system in which most people do not need legal representation, although I am absolutely conscious that some people might need assistance to present their case effectively. I am aware that some cases could raise complex issues and that the subject matter is of a serious nature, particularly when the result could be someone losing their home.

We will consider the most appropriate form of support for parties as part of considering the operational detail of the tribunal. Those issues will be taken into account. Access to justice is at the heart of the process, and we want to allow people to access the tribunal system. We expect that support could be delivered through the provision of funding for legally qualified representation or through the provision of some form of lay representation. When we are setting up the way in which the tribunal operates, we will certainly consider that.

There is nothing in the bill that prevents legal representation for people. My clear intention is that, where it is required, it will be available.

Jim Hume: There can be nothing more gallling than facing eviction. It is difficult to believe that a tenant facing eviction will always be the best-placed person to put forward their case. That is why I believed that it was necessary to get a clearer understanding of how tenants can access justice, and why I lodged amendment 3, with the help of Homeless Action Scotland. We have heard words that lead me to believe that tenants will be able to get such help, I shall therefore seek to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment 3, by agreement, withdrawn.
After section 21

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 4 is on landlord registration: letting code. Amendment 5, in the name of Patrick Harvie, is the only amendment in the group.

Patrick Harvie: During the discussion on the bill, I have consistently welcomed the Government's intention to produce a code of practice for letting agents. At stage 2, I lodged amendments that explored further details that might be included in the code of practice, and we will have the chance to debate those suggestions again this afternoon.

Although the Government was not persuaded on the inclusion of those specific issues in the code of practice for letting agents, the minister said that the issues would be addressed in the code. If that happens, we will end up with a welcome situation in which letting agents have a code of practice. However, individual landlords will not have a code of practice that sets out the management standards that they need to meet.

If we are to take the whole private sector seriously and improve standards across the board—I am sure that all of us, including the Government, want to do that—we should not have a situation in which those who pay their rent to a letting agent can expect a higher standard than those who pay their rent to a landlord.

Since the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 inserted a change into the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act 2004, the Government has had the power to produce “a code of practice, to be known as the Letting Code, making provision about the standards of management of any relevant person who enters into, or who seeks to enter into, a lease or occupancy arrangement by virtue of which an unconnected person may use a house as a dwelling and... any other person who acts for such a relevant person in relation to such a lease or occupancy arrangement.”

Through that pre-existing power to issue a letting code, the Government could have addressed landlords and letting agents in the same way, although perhaps with different approaches that are relevant to those different parts of the industry. That would have addressed the needs of the tenants of landlords as well as the tenants of letting agents. I hope that the minister will say why that route has not been taken and how the Government intends to offer the same protection to the tenants of landlords as the tenants of letting agents are to receive.

I move amendment 5.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Two members wish to contribute. I am afraid that contributions must be brief.

Mary Fee: I will be very brief, Presiding Officer.

I support amendment 5, in the name of Patrick Harvie, on the letting code. A letting code is an important part of the legislation. Letting agents and landlords need a clear and unambiguous code. The amendment would make a sensible addition to the bill and would strengthen the private rented sector. I therefore support amendment 5.

Alex Johnstone: I will also be brief.

The success of the system that we are putting in place today will rely on the understanding that exists between landlords and tenants. We are trying to make all the landlords—and letting agents, for that matter—do what the good ones have been doing for years. When we do that, we sometimes have to think in terms of carrot and stick. I believe that the amendment is too much stick and not enough carrot.

Margaret Burgess: As Patrick Harvie said, at present the issuing of letting codes is a discretionary power. The power to issue a code was created in 2006. No code has been issued and there are currently no plans to do so.

The relevant legislation would require ministers, before issuing a code, to assess the effectiveness of existing obligations and voluntary arrangements relating to standards of management and, in particular, the effectiveness of landlord registration in dealing with harassment, unlawful evictions and unlawful management practices.

Those important issues will be considered as part of our on-going commitment to consider the effectiveness of the enforcement of landlord registration, but at present we do not consider that a code is needed to address such issues. Significant changes have been made to the regulation of the private rented sector since 2006, including those proposed in the bill. The regulation of letting agents will have a positive impact on letting and property management across the sector.

I reassure Mr Harvie that I remain open to issuing a letting agents code at some point in the future if it would genuinely enhance the existing controls that are in place. I invite him to withdraw amendment 5.

Patrick Harvie: I am sorry that the minister does not see the opportunity to commit now to producing a letting code. She talked about the need to review the effectiveness of landlord registration. However, by the time that the amendment—if it were passed—kicked in and required action from Government, the landlord registration scheme would have been in operation for well over a decade. That would be more than ample time to review its operation.

I think that most members, including those like myself who supported the creation of the landlord registration scheme, would recognise that it has not achieved everything that was hoped for from it, not only because of the legislation but because of the resources available for it.

Finally, in response to Alex Johnstone, I point out that I spent about 10 years as a tenant in the private rented sector and I recognise the big bag of carrots that I gave to my landlords every month. Landlords get paid rent— that is their carrot. It is our responsibility to regulate to ensure that the provision of housing meets the needs of tenants. That is why I will press amendment 5.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 5 be agreed to. Are we all agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Baillie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfries and Galloway) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eddie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gill (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Barnfife and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urguhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine)
The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 41, Against 77, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 5 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 5 is on houses let for holiday purposes. Amendment 45, in the name of Drew Smith, is grouped with amendments 48 and 67.

Drew Smith (Glasgow) (Lab): The amendments in group 5 relate to housing that is let for holiday purposes and specifically to an issue that many MSPs will be aware of—very short-term letting of residential property or so-called party flats.

Amendment 45 seeks to extend the scope of landlord registration to encompass such properties in order that records can be kept of individuals who operate those businesses. That will have the effect of making it easier to trace the landlords responsible should disturbance to neighbours become an issue as a result of very short-term letting. It will also mean that landlords who seek to operate holiday businesses in what are otherwise residential buildings will be subject to a fit-and-proper-person test.

By way of very brief background, my motivation for the amendments in group 5 has been the experience of many of my constituents in Glasgow city centre who have had the enjoyment of their homes severely limited by the letting of neighbouring flats, which has resulted in severe and sustained antisocial behaviour, noise nuisance and problems in maintaining common areas.

At a meeting with members of the Beresford residents committee on Monday, I was told of how some guests at these properties seemed to be under the impression that the residents’ concierge in their building was in fact a hotel porter. In itself, that might not be a very serious issue but it illustrates the point that many of the guests who book such properties are entirely unaware that they are in fact hiring rooms in a building in which others have their homes.

None of my amendments seek to ban very short-term holiday letting; they are about a sensible level of regulation, which will ensure that the use of one person’s property or number of properties does not have an impact upon others that restricts their ability to enjoy their home and which results in police being called regularly.

Amendment 48 was previously rejected by Government members at the committee stage. It seeks to extend the power of closure of party flats to local authorities. The power to close is not a new one and clear criteria already exist as to when such a last resort action is appropriate—when there are persistent issues of antisocial behaviour relating to a particular property and when the authorities think that continued operation is likely to result in further nuisance to neighbours.

At present, that power resides only with the police. My proposal is simply to extend that power to include councils, which are likely to be better informed than the police about the issues that are occurring regularly and the extent to which landlords have been prepared to help resolve them. Crucially, I think that councils have more time than the police to take proportionate action in support of long-term solutions rather than simply address the situation as it exists when a police officer is called.

Amendment 67 is a straightforward consequential amendment so I will not take up Parliament’s time on it.

I move amendment 45.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We have little time. Alex Johnstone is next—very briefly, please.

Alex Johnstone: Very briefly indeed, I thank Drew Smith for bringing the issue of party flats to my attention and to the attention of others when it was discussed at committee stage. However, I have concerns about the amendments, given that they specifically address houses that are let for holiday purposes. I am not reassured that the amendments would not have an effect that significantly oversteps the effect that Drew Smith seeks to achieve.

Margaret Burgess: I understand the problems that can be caused by antisocial behaviour in properties that are let on a short-term basis, but I consider that it would be a disproportionate response to require every house that is used for holiday purposes to be registered, as proposed by amendment 45. To do so would mean that properties that are let even for a short period of time would have to be registered, placing a significant additional burden on property owners, local authorities and the tourism industry of Scotland more generally. Landlord registration was not introduced for that purpose.

Local authorities already have powers to tackle antisocial behaviour in properties that are let for holiday purposes. For example, under part 7 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act 2004, local authorities can serve an antisocial behaviour notice on a private landlord where an occupant or visitor engages in antisocial behaviour at, or in the locality, of the house.
In a landmark case last year, the City of Edinburgh Council successfully used existing legislation to apply for a management control order for two party flats in Grove Street. That enabled the council to assume all landlord responsibilities for a period of 12 months. I expect other local authorities to use the existing legislation to take similar action where antisocial behaviour in holiday lets is causing difficulties.

Amendment 48 is the same as an amendment that Drew Smith lodged at stage 2. I explained then that the Scottish Government introduced an order in March 2011 that gives local authorities the powers to deal specifically with the problem of antisocial behaviour in properties that are let for holiday use.

I have already highlighted City of Edinburgh Council’s success in using existing legislation to tackle the issue, and I do not consider that amendment 48 is necessary. Local authorities have a range of powers that they should use to deal with antisocial behaviour in holiday lets.

I do not support Drew Smith’s amendment 45, and I ask him not to move amendments 48 and 67.

Drew Smith: I understand the minister’s principal objection, which is that existing law already allows most of those problems to be resolved. However, if that was the case, I would not be having meetings with members of the public such as the one that I had on Monday in which people told me that their home life is being made a living hell as a result of the inappropriate use or inconsiderate behaviour of others.

Those people were very complimentary about the action that Glasgow City Council took in their case, and they recognised that the council had been instrumental in reducing the problems that they had faced. However, they made it clear to me that issues remain where landlords are unco-operative and unwilling to engage in finding a solution.

Officials from the council are in the Parliament today; they recognise that my amendments could result in more work, but they are willing to do that work to restore the quality of life for those who are affected.

None of the amendments that I have lodged are prescriptive. Amendment 48 simply enables the Scottish Government to provide for closure regulations if it sees fit and if evidence is forthcoming from councils that that would make a difference.

On Alex Johnstone’s point, amendment 45 on registration would leave it up to the Scottish ministers to define precisely who would be affected. Regulations under the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act 2004 mean that the types of dwellings to be registered would remain entirely in the gift of ministers, so Alex Johnstone’s concern that the provision would be too broad could be factored into the guidance that will be produced if the amendment is successful. The amendment simply removes the current blanket exemption for homes that are let for any holiday purpose.

I press amendment 45.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 45 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (LD)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (Lab)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing,ergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Graham, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glascow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGregor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badnoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urguhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 41, Against 76, Abstentions 0.
Amendment 45 disagreed to.

Section 22B—Electrical safety inspections

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 6 is on private rented housing: the repairing standard. Amendment 6, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 7, 46 and 47.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 6 proposes to remove the transitional provision in the electrical safety inspection regime for private rented housing, which was inserted in the bill at stage 2 by an amendment in the name of Bob Doris.

The transitional provision in section 22B would give those who are already landlords when the regime comes into force a year to undertake electrical safety inspections. However, there are two difficulties with that. First, landlords would have only a year from the commencement date to arrange inspections, and the provision would not recognise any inspections that had been carried out before it came into force. That would cause practical difficulties for landlords and electricians, and it would likely discourage landlords from carrying out any planned inspections in the period prior to commencement. That would be worse for tenants and contrary to the intention of the original amendment.

A transitional provision is still required, but I intend to use the general power in section 85(5) to make the commencement order for section 22B. That approach will allow time to work with stakeholders and develop a provision that will avoid delay, protect tenants and be fair to landlords.

I have written to Bob Doris about amendment 6, and he has indicated that he supports the approach. The Electrical Safety Council and the Scottish Association of Landlords, two of the key stakeholders whose submissions encouraged me to support Bob Doris’s original amendment, have also indicated their support.

Amendment 7 seeks to introduce a provision on energy efficiency standards in private rented sector properties. Claudia Beamish lodged a similar amendment at stage 2, and I acknowledge that she has sought in this new amendment to address one of the concerns that I expressed at that time. However, several issues remain that mean that the amendment is unnecessary and inappropriate.

Under the Climate Change (Scotland) Act 2009 and the Energy Act 2011, the Scottish ministers already have powers to introduce minimum standards for energy efficiency in private sector housing, and we have made very clear our commitment to improving energy efficiency to help address fuel poverty and reduce carbon emissions from housing. For example, central Government spend in Scotland in the past financial year is higher than that elsewhere in the UK at an average of £36.48 for each low-income household in Scotland compared with only £3.52 in England. We are working with stakeholders including environmental, fuel poverty, local authority, private rented sector and consumer interests to identify proposals for minimum energy efficiency standards for consultation in spring 2015.

Although amendment 7 extends the timescale, it would still constrain the time available to understand properly the issues identified by the working group, particularly on the level of regulation that is technically feasible and appropriate, and to conduct supporting research. Consultation on the Scottish Government's sustainable housing strategy also strongly indicated the need for a sufficient lead-in time for the sector to prepare for minimum standards.

My amendment to enable the repairing standard to be amended by regulations, which was agreed to at stage 2, provides the means to vary the repairing standard. After appropriate consideration and consultation, we think that this is the most effective way to regulate the private rented sector. For those reasons, I do not consider that amendment 7 is necessary or that it would achieve the desired purpose.

Amendment 46 seeks to make landlords in breach of the repairing standard if they fail to pay for their share of work to common parts, and makes such a failure a criminal offence. Private landlords are already required to meet the repairing standard, and that requirement can be enforced by an application to the Private Rented Housing Panel by a tenant and, under the provisions introduced by the bill, by a local authority on behalf of a tenant. In addition, an owner of a tenement property can already enforce a majority decision of owners about repairs against any other owner under the tenement management scheme.

Amendment 46 would also make repairs that are not required under the repairing standard, such as repairs to common entry systems or common public lighting that is inadequate but not in serious disrepair, matters that can be brought before the Private Rented Housing Panel. I do not think it appropriate to widen the panel's remit and require it to adjudicate in disputes between owners instead of dealing with matters that are set out in legislation on behalf of the tenants.

Amendment 47, in the name of Malcolm Chisholm, seeks to specify two additional types of person who may apply to the Private Rented Housing Panel for a determination in respect of the repairing standard. The bill enables local authorities to make such applications, and new inspection powers that are part of the third-party reporting provisions support the strategic role that local authorities play in ensuring that properties across Scotland meet minimum standards. The bill also enables ministers to make an order extending the range of bodies that can make applications in future, if that is considered useful.

However, I believe it important first to allow local authorities the time to exercise the bill's new powers to tackle poor standards in the private rented sector. Consideration of the effective use of third-party reporting powers by local authorities once the provisions are implemented will indicate whether there is any justification for expanding the powers to additional types of person.

I believe that the bill strikes the right balance in allowing local authorities to make the applications and granting a power to ministers to broaden access to the Private Rented Housing Panel through secondary legislation, if that is considered necessary and appropriate in the future.

I move amendment 6.

Claudia Beamish (South Scotland) (Lab): Amendment 7 seeks to allow the Scottish ministers to create regulations on energy efficiency standards, which would be included as part of the repairing standard in the private rented sector. It would also establish a system of inspection and enforcement.

As she highlighted, the minister put forward reasons for not supporting my amendment at stage 2. I intend to address the amendment, even though those remarks have already been made.

First, it was highlighted today that the minister felt that including the provision in the bill was unnecessary because the Climate Change (Scotland) Act 2009 provides powers to introduce minimum standards of energy efficiency. Although that is the case, I still argue that the phraseology of section 64 of the 2009 act is different and less focused than what I suggest. It requires ministers to set regulations to provide for the assessment of energy performance and greenhouse gas emissions and requires owners to take steps to improve the accommodation. That may or may not be realised through minimum standards, which is what I propose. In addition, it does not specifically address the standards where a house forms only part of a premises, which my amendment does.

Another argument that the minister put forward against the amendment was that a working group is already tasked with reporting back on measures to improve energy efficiency in the domestic housing sector. Again, I support the reasoning... behind the setting up of such a group and wish it well, but there are energy efficiency measures that my amendment highlights that would be best placed in the bill among the provisions that relate to the repairing standard. Organisations such as the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors, the City of Edinburgh Council and Friends of the Earth Scotland agree with that approach.

Others may disagree and would like to wait for some as yet not defined piece of legislation in the future. If and when that legislation comes before the chamber, there is no reason why it cannot refer to the amendment to the bill. I see no reason to wait and to actively oppose amendment 7. Tenants are suffering from fuel poverty in multi-ownership houses, and it is important that that is addressed now.

The final criticism that the minister put forward at stage 2 related to the timescale. As she has acknowledged today, I have altered the timescale. That should help the possibility of amendment 7 being accepted and the regulations being taken forward. Even at this late stage, I hope that the minister will reconsider.

Malcolm Chisholm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab): Amendments 46 and 47 deal with massive problems in Edinburgh, which is why their substance was supported by the Labour-Scottish National Party council in Edinburgh in its submission on the bill.

Amendment 46 deals with the problem of landlords not taking part in and paying their share of common repairs. It says that it would be a breach of the repairing standard if a landlord failed “to pay the landlord’s share of the cost of repairs”.

Under amendment 46, the landlord could be referred to the Private Rented Housing Panel and, if they did not contribute to common repairs, they could be found guilty of an offence and face removal from the register. It is time that we used the register to put pressure on landlords and not just as a bureaucratic exercise. This could be one important example of using the register.

The minister referred to the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004, but it can be a disincentive for some people because of its complexity and the time that the process sometimes takes.

Amendment 47 would allow owners of an adjoining property and organisations that provide advice services to report breaches of the repairing standard to the Private Rented Housing Panel; in other words, it says that not just the local authority should do that. Certain people may not want to go to the local authority or, indeed, the local authority could decide not to report, I presume. Therefore, we should give that power to adjoining residents. Again, that problem is often brought to me in surgeries, and I know that my constituents would expect me to press the amendment.

The issue of advice services is also relevant, because some residents may prefer to access support through an advice agency rather than the local authority either because it is conveniently located or because they have some special relationship with it.

I am minded, as we all are on this side of the chamber, to oppose the minister’s amendment 6 on removing the obligation for a landlord to ensure that an inspection is carried out within 12 months of the housing act coming into force. I listened carefully to her arguments, but if she identified such a problem, why did she not move an amendment saying that an inspection had to be carried out one year from the commencement date unless one had been carried out in the intervening period? That would have been the absolutely simple and obvious thing for her to do, if the reason that she gave was the real reason.

16:00

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I have two members who wish to contribute. Bob Doris will be followed by Alex Johnstone; I ask that they be as brief as possible.

Bob Doris (Glasgow) (SNP): I will try to be brief and to stick to amendment 6.

I am content that the general power under section 85(5) would be adequate in relation to the commencement order in section 22B, which was added to the bill at stage 2 by my amendment. The vast majority of section 22B remains fully intact. It will place a requirement on all private landlords to ensure that all fixtures, fittings and appliances have relevant electrical safety checks every five years. That is a new burden and responsibility on the private sector. Amendment 6 is merely an implementing and consequential amendment, to ensure that there are no unintended consequences.

I point out to Malcolm Chisholm that Electrical Safety First, the organisation that worked with me to bring my amendment to the Parliament, is content with the provisions; so, too, is the Scottish Association of Landlords, which has been critical about the issue.

It is not very often that a member comes to the chamber and places an additional burden and responsibility on landlords and they step forward and say, “Yes, we’re up for that. It is the right thing to do.” That is what has happened and we should welcome that. We should support amendment 6.

I thank Electrical Safety First and the Scottish Association of Landlords. I ask that Parliament support amendment 6.
Alex Johnstone: I support amendment 6, in the name of the minister, and I accept her position on amendments 7 and 47. However, I confess that I have some attraction to amendment 46, in the name of Malcolm Chisholm.

I heard what the minister said about the repairing standard and how that process is available by other means. I seek further assurances from her that the means that she described to deal with the circumstances are not of the type that would, in effect, exclude people as a result of onerous processes.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Members will note that we have passed the agreed time limit for the debate on group 6. Therefore, I exercise my power under rule 9.8.4A to allow the debate on the group to continue beyond the limit in order to avoid the debate being unreasonably curtailed.

I ask the minister to wind up.

Margaret Burgess: In response to Malcolm Chisholm, I accept that it would have been preferable to set out the transitional rules in the bill. However, as Bob Doris said, we want to ensure that there are no unintended consequences. I have considered the views of stakeholders. Consequently, we need further engagement to develop a solution that will protect tenants, be fair to landlords and avoid unnecessary delay in bringing the measure into force.

On energy efficiency standards, we are taking a proportionate approach. We are examining how to progress the issue with the active participation of stakeholders. It is only sensible to continue that process by looking at all private housing and not just the rented sector.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Excuse me, minister. I am afraid that the noise in the chamber is becoming rather loud. Can we hear the minister, please?

Margaret Burgess: If, after the Scottish Government's planned consultation on energy efficiency, it is considered appropriate to vary the repairing standard in relation to energy efficiency, that can be done through regulation-making powers.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 6 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)

Beatie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Alileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McGregor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
Mckelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 82, Against 33, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 6 agreed to.

After section 22B

Amendment 7 moved—[Claudia Beamish].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 7 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffith, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)

Against

Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dorrian, John (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Donaldson, Greenie (Eastwood) (SNP)
Dorrian, John (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Donnie, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Earl, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Ferguson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)

Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffith, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McIntyre, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McManus, Siobhan (South Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
Mctaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfrieshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Clydebank) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Earl, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Ferguson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 41, Against 74, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 7 disagreed to.

Before section 23

Amendment 46 moved—[Malcolm Chisholm].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 46 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Miline, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Barnffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 41, Against 75, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 46 disagreed to.

Section 23—Third party application in respect of the repairing standard
Amendment 47 moved—[Malcolm Chisholm].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 47 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfrieshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crabbe, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabian, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 41, Against 75, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 47 disagreed to.

After section 25

Amendment 48 moved—[Drew Smith].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 48 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Baillie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahan, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahan, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfries and Galloway) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowsley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamsom, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beatlee, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
B_TAC, Alasdair (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Neil (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Dorris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Edie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Graham, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Etrurry, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
McKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeen West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, John (Ayr) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 39, Against 75, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 48 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The next group of amendments is on private rented housing, rent reviews, rent increases and security of tenure. Amendment 49, in the name of James Kelly, is grouped with amendments 50, 68 and 69.

James Kelly (Rutherglen) (Lab): There is no doubt that the biggest problem that we face in Scotland in relation to housing is the lack of supply. That is partly because we have the lowest number of completions since 1947. That is witnessed in the social housing waiting list of 155,000 people.

One of the consequences of that has been the massive growth in the private rented sector, which has doubled in size to 300,000 households and contains people who have not been able to get houses either in the social sector or in the private purchasing sector. There is no doubt that the resultant rise in the private rented sector has placed too much power in the hands of landlords and letting agents and that, as a consequence, there have been unacceptable rent rises in some parts of the country.

That can be witnessed by the recent Citylets quarterly report, in relation to which Thomas Ashdown of Citylets said that urban hotspots are providing great returns for landlords. There is no doubt that that is true, and the report gives some examples. Average rents in the EH8 postcode in Edinburgh have experienced a year-on-year rise of 8.9 per cent. The figure for DD1, in Dundee, is 17.5 per cent, and the figure for G2, in Glasgow, is 21.5 per cent. Those inflation-busting rises heap misery on many of the families who are struggling in the private rented sector. The Joseph Rowntree Foundation reckons that, of the 120,000 households that are in poverty, 40 per cent are having to cut back on heating and a third are cutting back on food.

Through this bill, Parliament has the opportunity to do something about that by supporting Labour’s proposals to cap rent rises and to ensure that rent reviews take place no more than once a year. We are not proposing a specific scheme; we are asking for Parliament to agree to the principle and for the Scottish Government to lay regulations before Parliament by 1 April 2015. That would allow the Government, in proper consultation, to work up a proper scheme and to cap rises at an acceptable level.

The issue is also linked to tenancies. As the size of the market has grown, there has been a growing number of short tenancies. It is reckoned that 74 per cent of the tenancies in the market are short tenancies, which drive up rent. They also result in pressure being put on vulnerable tenants, who sometimes have to deal with housing problems not being addressed, repairs not being done and a lack of quality housing. Therefore, we propose a three-year tenancy, giving tenants the ability to terminate a tenancy with one month’s notice and landlords the ability to terminate contracts with two months’ notice. Again, we want regulations on that matter to be laid before Parliament by 1 April 2015.

The recent welfare expert group recognised that issue and supported longer tenancies. It also supported capping rent increases. Surely, on this issue, if it is good enough for the Government’s expert group, it should be good enough to be included in the bill.

I urge Parliament to support the amendments.

I move amendment 49.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We are tight for time, so I ask Mr Johnstone to be brief.

16:15

Alex Johnstone: I do not disagree with James Kelly’s analysis of the cause of the growth in the private rented sector. It is only fair to say that the demand that other pressures in the system have created is demonstrating how supply and demand work in a marketplace, although the way in which the rental market in some areas of Edinburgh and Aberdeen operates is divorced from the system that we have been describing.
However, I disagree with James Kelly on the solutions. The private rented sector has grown so much because of demand, and it has satisfied that demand because the market has supported it. If we intervene in the market by capping rents or doing other things, the private rented sector will simply begin to melt away. If a private landlord sees a lack of return from his property, he has the option to place it on the market, which shrinks the private rented sector.

There are definitely problems. James Kelly has identified them, but he has not identified the appropriate solution.

Patrick Harvie: Alex Johnstone attempts to portray a picture of a well-functioning market. We can no longer afford to regard the private rented sector as involving just a free market exchange between equals. As James Kelly said, the sector has doubled in size in 10 years. Some in the sector want it to double again in coming years.

For a growing proportion of our population, no other housing is available. Our society is not making social housing available and the economy is not making owner occupation affordable, so those people are stuck between a rock and a hard place. They are left to depend only on the private rented sector and they are far too open to exploitation.

I will support amendments 49 and 50, but I particularly support the security of tenure proposals. Security of tenure underpins pretty much everything else that the Government is trying to achieve under the bill. It underpins every area in which tenants are vulnerable to exploitation by landlords who are willing to exploit their current position of power.

The Government has previously indicated that it will not accept amendments to the bill on such subjects but that it is open to the longer-term argument. I hope that the minister will say something about the timescale on which the Government intends to take action, even if it does not support amendments 49 and 50.

On security of tenure and rent reviews, we are not looking for anything dramatically radical; we are looking only to join the European main stream, where some rent control and a more secure model of tenure are the norm. That enables tenants to live with a bit of dignity in the private rented sector.

Margaret Burgess: When we debated similar amendments from James Kelly at stage 2, I said that they would impose potentially onerous regulations without any consultation and without a clear understanding of their impact on tenants and landlords.

Rent levels were not raised by anyone in the ICI committee’s evidence sessions or at stakeholder events, other than by Patrick Harvie. Many stakeholders have expressed their surprise at the proposed late addition to the bill and have noted their concerns about the lack of proper consultation.

In contrast to Mr Kelly’s last-minute intervention, the Scottish Government has been looking at reform of the private rented sector tenancy regime as part of its wider strategy for the sector. We commissioned an independent review of the tenancy regime last year and received the report of that review a few weeks ago.

The review recommended that we introduce a new tenancy regime. We will consult on that in the autumn and, at the same time, we will explore issues that relate to rent levels. That will allow us to understand the problem across Scotland—including in hotspots such as Aberdeen—and to identify in consultation with tenants and landlords what might need to be done to ensure that tenants in the private rented sector get a fair deal.

That is the right way to develop legislation on complex matters, so that we minimise the risk of it backfiring on tenants and landlords, as I fear that the approach in Mr Kelly’s amendments would do.

Amendment 50 would place a duty on the Scottish ministers to introduce regulations to establish the new type of tenancy that I mentioned. Like amendment 49, it would introduce a significant new duty on ministers in respect of matters that formed no part of the bill as introduced. Consequently, I have the same objection in principle to amendment 50 as I had to amendment 49. I have talked about what we are doing in relation to a new tenancy in the private rented sector.

James Kelly: The minister suggested that the amendments that I have lodged are somehow last-minute amendments. When we debated housing in December, I made absolutely clear, in response to a speech from Patrick Harvie, that we would consider rent controls and tenancies. I made that clear at stage 1, too. These are not last-minute amendments; they are amendments that address issues that are happening on the ground just now, which it is incumbent on the Government to address.

Alex Johnstone said that the market merely responds to demand and that landlords are entitled to a fair return. However, the Citylets report talks about rent rises of 16 per cent in Dundee and Aberdeen. Landlords are getting massive returns.

The minister complained that my proposed approach would be too onerous for landlords and letting agents. What about the onerous burdens that are being borne by people in poverty, who must decide whether to cut back on their fuel bills so that they can pay their rent? Those are the onerous burdens that we should be addressing.

Why is the Government launching another consultation? All afternoon, in response to amendments from other parties, the Government has said that it will launch a consultation. This Government had three years to consult on the bill; it should be getting it right now—[Interruption.]

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): Order.

James Kelly: We lodged amendments that would make a difference on the ground and help tenants in the private rented sector. It is time to consider what would make a difference. I urge members to support the amendments in this group and help tenants in the private rented sector.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 49 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For:
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against:
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Graham, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Amendment 50 moved—[James Kelly].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 50 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For:
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Humie, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Ruterglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougal, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against:
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 37, Against 80, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 49 disagreed to.

Amendment 50 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 37, Against 80, Abstentions 0.

Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 37, Against 80, Abstentions 0.

Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 37, Against 80, Abstentions 0.

Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against:
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 37, Against 80, Abstentions 0.

Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseannia (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eddie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Garvie, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Ken (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Alileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milton, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Peterson, Gill (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Housing should provide homes for individuals and families; it should not be a source of exploitation of tenants or other criminality.

Members who represent Glasgow will be aware that Govanhill is an area where a range of problems relating to housing exist and where concerted effort is needed to make change at the community level. Glasgow members will also be aware that amendments 51 and 70 are supported by COSLA and explicitly by Glasgow City Council.

Glasgow City Council told me that the minister’s decision not to include enhanced enforcement areas in the bill, as promised, restricts its ability to support the community in Govanhill to achieve a better quality of local environment and decent and safe homes for the people who live there. I ask Parliament to support amendment 51.

I move amendment 51.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: As we are falling behind, I invite Sandra White to speak briefly.

Sandra White (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP): I rise to support amendment 51, which will tackle the very serious problems that Drew Smith mentioned. A previous group of amendments concerned party flats. I believe that people in the Beresford building and other places in Glasgow city centre in my constituency who live near antisocial tenants will benefit from the power in amendment 51. I thank the minister for meeting me and others and I look forward to supporting amendment 51.

Alex Johnstone: I understand why amendment 51 has been lodged, but surely when we pass the bill its powers should be enforced fairly and equally across the country. I believe that there should be enhanced enforcement, but I believe that people outside enhanced enforcement areas should have the same level of protection as those within them. For that reason I believe that we should not have enhanced enforcement areas.

Margaret Burgess: I appreciate the concerns from members across the chamber regarding local authorities’ ability to tackle poor property management and conditions. We have included further powers in the bill for local authorities to tackle those problems, including a new power of inspection where a local authority believes that the repairing standard is not being met, and third-party reporting rights to the Private Rented Housing Panel. Those powers will apply throughout Scotland.

We recognise that, as Drew Smith said, the power to designate enhanced enforcement areas would be used in exceptional circumstances and that many local authorities might not use it. However, the power would be there for local authorities to use in circumstances in which it would help to tackle acute problems in their area. On that basis the Government is happy to support amendments 51 and 70 and invites the chamber to do the same.
Drew Smith: Alex Johnstone’s argument was perhaps for an extension of enhanced enforcement areas. Perhaps he could take up the issues that he was concerned with in the areas that he represents.

I am grateful for the comments from Sandra White and the minister and for the Government’s support for the amendment. I hope that it will lead to a continuation of the partnership that I believe exists between Glasgow City Council and the Scottish Government on tackling the serious issues that are faced by the constituents of a number of members in the Govanhill area. I hope that lessons learned in that area will assist communities represented by other members.

Amendment 51 agreed to.

16:30

Section 30—Fit and proper person considerations

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We move to group 9. Amendment 52, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 53, 8 and 9.

Margaret Burgess: I will first speak to amendments 52 and 53. The Scottish Government is giving full and careful consideration to the recent Supreme Court ruling that mandatory disclosure of all previous convictions, including spent convictions, is contrary to article 8 of the European convention on human rights. The amendments to the fit-and-proper-person test for letting agents are in response to that ruling. They retain the policy intention to be able to check the accuracy of information that has been disclosed, but clarify that that does not include spent convictions.

Amendment 53 will change the existing level of disclosure for letting agent registration that may be required by the Scottish ministers, where they have reasonable grounds to suspect that material falling under section 30(2) of the bill is, or has become, inaccurate. That will now be at the basic disclosure level. Amendment 52 further makes it clear that spent convictions do not fall under the material that is set out at section 30(2).

Amendments 8 and 9 are also in my name. Both amendments will modify section 35, which deals with revocation of a registration. At present, section 35 will allow the Scottish ministers to deregister a letting agent if the agent or key personnel are no longer fit and proper. Amendments 8 and 9 will also allow that where the letting agent or key person is not fit and proper. For example, if a mistake had been made, or information had been withheld at the time of the application, the Scottish ministers may find that the applicant or key person had never been fit and proper, and would subsequently seek to remove them from the register.

Amendment 9 also provides the power to revoke a registration where a change of circumstances under section 33 triggers a failure of the fit-and-proper-person test, where a key person transpires not to be, or is deemed no longer to be, fit and proper.

I move amendment 52.

James Kelly: I wish to support amendments 52 and 53. They make good sense in that they are consistent with current employment practice and ECHR, as they will ensure that spent convictions are not taken into account in the fit-and-proper-person test.

In relation to amendment 53, which deals with the inclusion of the criminal conviction certificate, what checks can be introduced to ensure that the information that will be collected as a result of section 30 is accurate, and to flag up inaccuracies? What monitoring will be in place as a result of section 30?

Margaret Burgess: Amendments 52 and 53 will ensure accuracy. I am not sure what Mr Kelly is looking for, further to that. We are retaining the policy intention to be able to check the accuracy of information that has been disclosed, but as I previously said, we are clarifying that it will be a basic disclosure and not enhanced disclosure.

Amendment 52 agreed to.

Section 31A—Fit and proper person: criminal record information

Amendment 53 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 34—Duration of registration

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We move to group 10. Amendment 54, in the name of Mary Fee, is grouped with amendment 55.

Mary Fee: As amendments 54 and 55 are fairly simplistic, Presiding Officer, you will be pleased to know that I will be fairly brief. Both of them would require landlords to register on an annual basis—[Interruption.]

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Could members who are leaving the chamber do so quickly and quietly, please?

Mary Fee: Amendments 54 and 55 would require landlords to register annually instead of every three years, as is proposed in the bill. My amendments would tighten up the process and would lead to greater confidence and security for tenants, because they would allow problems to be caught and dealt with more quickly.
There is nothing to suggest that the registration process would be onerous once the initial registration had been done, so it makes sense to require landlords to reregister annually.

I move amendment 54.

Margaret Burgess: As things stand, the Scottish ministers can consider a breach of the fit-and-proper-person test or of the code of practice at any time during the three-year registration period. Section 35 provides the Scottish ministers with the power to revoke a registration if the agent is no longer a fit and proper person. I consider the use of a three-year registration cycle to be a proportionate approach that will safeguard clients without placing an onerous burden on the industry. It would be disproportionate to have a period of anything less than three years, so I do not support amendments 54 and 55.

Mary Fee: I welcome the minister’s comments, but she makes the presumption that registration is a lengthy and onerous process and that we would be placing a burden on the Government and letting agents. There is no evidence to support that so, on that ground, I press amendment 54.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 54 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougal, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeill, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (East Ayrshire) (SNP)
Lockett, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Easter) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milne, Nanette (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alasdair (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Claybank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 39, Against 73, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 54 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 55 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
MacIntosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glascow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfrieshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chyeston) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Pertshire South and Kinross- shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gill (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinnery, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 37, Against 74, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 55 disagreed to.

Section 35—Revocation of registration

Amendments 8 and 9 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

After section 35

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We come to group 11. Amendment 10, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 11, 12 and 14 to 16.

Margaret Burgess: Currently, the bill makes no specific provision to allow a letting agent to terminate their registration voluntarily—for example, if the agent retires. Amendment 10 provides a mechanism for a letting agent to apply to the Scottish ministers to terminate their registration. The mechanism requires the Scottish ministers to comply if they are satisfied that the agent has ceased to operate or that it is otherwise appropriate to do so. Should the Scottish ministers decide to refuse an application, they must provide their reasons for doing so.

Alex Johnstone’s amendment 11 also seeks to establish a mechanism for removal of a registration, on application. However, amendment 11 would require the Scottish ministers to be satisfied that "the letting agent has made adequate arrangements with respect to" the business. It is unclear, however, what those arrangements would be. Given that the Scottish ministers would be required to assess the arrangements’ adequacy, I cannot support the amendment. I therefore ask Alex Johnstone not to move amendment 11.

Amendment 12, in my name, will prevent a letting agent who has been deregistered at their own request from seeking to recover costs and charges that are incurred for work done after the date of deregistration. In other words, it will discourage that letting agent from continuing to operate.

Amendments 14 to 16 are linked to amendment 12. They clarify what is meant by the relevant date for deregistration, and confirm that costs that are incurred by a letting agent before the date of their deregistration are recoverable.

I move amendment 10.

Alex Johnstone: Amendment 11 is a resubmission of an amendment that was lodged and debated at stage 2. As members can see by the consecutive numbering on the marshalled list, it may have crossed in the post, so to speak, with the minister’s amendment 10. Having read through amendment 10, I believe that it will achieve the objective that was set out in my amendment at stage 2, and in amendment 11 today at stage 3. Consequently, I am inclined to support amendment 10.

The only area that I am somewhat concerned about is subsection (2) of the proposed new section that will be introduced by amendment 10, which says that "The application must be accompanied by a fee of such amount (if any) as the Scottish Ministers may determine."

I seek reassurance from the minister at this stage that the fee will be reasonable and will be designed only to cover the costs of such a process. If that reassurance is given, I will support the minister’s amendment 10 and the other Government amendments in the group, and I will not move my amendment 11.

Mary Fee: I support all the amendments—10 to 12 and 14 to 16—in the group. I support the amendments in the names of both Margaret Burgess and Alex Johnstone because they are all sensible and practical additions to the bill. They offer a straightforward solution to agents who wish to be removed from the register, and they will allow the register to be kept up to date. The consequence of all the amendments will be to tighten up the sector, so they must be welcomed.

Margaret Burgess: I have no comments other than to give Alex Johnstone the assurance that he seeks—that the fee will be appropriate.

By reason of subsection (2) of the proposed new section that will be introduced by amendment 10, which says that "The application must be accompanied by a fee of such amount (if any) as the Scottish Ministers may determine."

I seek reassurance from the minister at this stage that the fee will be reasonable and will be designed only to cover the costs of such a process. If that reassurance is given, I will support the minister’s amendment 10 and the other Government amendments in the group, and I will not move my amendment 11.

Mary Fee: I support all the amendments—10 to 12 and 14 to 16—in the group. I support the amendments in the names of both Margaret Burgess and Alex Johnstone because they are all sensible and practical additions to the bill. They offer a straightforward solution to agents who wish to be removed from the register, and they will allow the register to be kept up to date. The consequence of all the amendments will be to tighten up the sector, so they must be welcomed.

Margaret Burgess: I have no comments other than to give Alex Johnstone the assurance that he seeks—that the fee will be appropriate.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is that amendment 10 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
The minister did not agree with my amendments that I raised would be addressed in the code. I hope that, even if she is not persuaded that my amendments would help to set that out in the code, she will give some further indication of the means by which the issues will be addressed.

At stage 2, I lodged a number of amendments seeking to explore the detail of what would be included in the code of practice that the Government intends to produce for letting agents, and I am again seeking to explore specific issues that the code of practice could—and, I believe, should—address.

The minister did not agree with my amendments at stage 2, but did give a commitment that the issues that I raised would be addressed in the code. I hope that, even if she is not persuaded that my amendments would help to set that out in the bill, she will give some further indication of the means by which the issues will be addressed.
Specifically, I am asking that issues around the level of advance rent and level of deposit are addressed. Members will be aware that there are letting agents who are seeking workarounds to the provisions that we have put in place in the past, by finding other ways of describing the payments or pretending that they are not really advance rents or deposits. Even when advance rent is called advance rent, there are situations, as we can see from the Citizens Advice Scotland report that has been circulated to all members, in which people are being asked not just for one or two months' rent but for three months' rent and, in some cases, even six months' advance rent.

Another issue that I would like the code of practice to address is socioeconomic discrimination and discrimination against benefit recipients. The term “no DSS” will be very familiar to anyone who has looked at the private rented sector. The minister has said that she wants to see an end to the use of that term, but I am seeking an end to the practice itself, regardless of the use of the term. Discrimination against people because they are in receipt of benefits basically undermines the provision of housing, which the private rented sector is seeking the right to manage on behalf of our society. Housing has to be available not just to those whom individual landlords or letting agents consider to be good, reliable, dependable tenants. That housing must be available to those who need it, and that means ending discrimination.

If we consider the two issues in concert—discrimination on the ground that people are benefit recipients and the requirement for three or six months' advance rent—it will be pretty clear to anybody that someone who is given notice to quit one property and is seeking to find another while they are on benefits, and who is asked to come up with three months' or six months' advance rent, will find that it is simply not feasible.

My amendments in this group also seek to end discrimination on the grounds of immigration status. That is connected with the wrong-headed provisions that have been put through the Westminster Parliament in the Immigration Act 2014. I ask the minister to take this opportunity to address the interaction between the reserved function of immigration and the devolved function of housing. How can we ensure that we use housing law to prevent any undue discrimination against migrants and immigrants who are in need of housing in Scotland from the private rented sector?

I acknowledge that amendment 56 proposes an alternative means of addressing some of the issues that I have outlined, and I look forward to hearing the argument for that amendment. However, I hope that with amendment 37 I am on ground that the Government will be more comfortable with. I moved an amendment at stage 2 to require the code of practice for letting agents to be laid before the Parliament within a year. The minister explained that that was a wee bit too much but said that she shared my “wish to see progress being made to develop the code ... but I want to ensure that the code is drafted with proper consideration”.

She went on to say:

“I wish to reassure Mr Harvie about my commitment to progressing the development of the code, which I expect to be laid before Parliament within 18 months of the bill’s enactment.”—[Official Report, Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee, 21 May 2014; c 3104.]

Amendment 37 is my new version of my stage 2 amendment and it suggests that 18-month timescale. On that basis, I am sure that the minister can find no reason at all to object to amendment 37.

I move amendment 17.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Mary Fee to speak to amendment 56 and other amendments in the group.

Mary Fee: Amendment 56 seeks to strengthen the code of practice as it would require deposits to be paid into a tenant deposit scheme, prohibit letting agents from charging fees to tenants or prospective tenants before or after a tenancy and prohibit letting agents from discriminating against those in receipt of benefits. Amendment 56 aims to strengthen the private rented sector; it is a sensible amendment that would give more safety and security to tenants.

I support Patrick Harvie’s amendments 17 to 22 and 37. Amendments 17 to 22 would strengthen and enhance the code of practice because they seek to protect tenants from overcharging and discrimination by letting agents. Amendment 37 makes sense, as it sets out a timetable for the code of practice to be published.

Alex Johnstone: There is an old story that the traditional definition of a croft is a small piece of land surrounded by legislation. The amendments in this group would take us to a point at which we might be in some danger of a private let being defined as a property surrounded by regulation. There is a significant danger that if we regulate over-onerously in this area we will create regulations that are unenforceable and a situation that would be worse than the one that we would have, described by Patrick Harvie, under the bill as it stands. It is important that regulation should be capable of implementation and of policing, but I am not convinced that if we pass all the amendments in this group we will get to a stage at which that is possible.
Margaret Burgess: I will begin by speaking to Patrick Harvie’s amendments 17 to 22. The equivalents of all those amendments were debated at stage 2 and were rejected by the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee. I understand Patrick Harvie’s intention, which is to prohibit letting agents from discriminating against a prospective tenant on various grounds, including socioeconomic, being in receipt of state benefits and immigration status. I sympathise with people who are struggling to find affordable rented property while in receipt of state benefits and with those whose immigration status is uncertain, but we will take up the whole issue of discrimination and barriers to accessing housing with the letting agent industry through the process of developing the code of practice.

I welcome Patrick Harvie’s amendment 37. I had intended, as I indicated at stage 2, to lodge a similar amendment, but Patrick Harvie beat me to it. I welcome amendment 37 and I am happy to support it.

What Mary Fee’s amendment 56 seeks was debated and rejected by the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee at stage 2. I said then that the Scottish ministers have already clarified the law to make crystal clear what is allowed. It is unacceptable for a letting agent to flout the law on the charging of premiums. On discrimination, I have said in my responses to Patrick Harvie on numerous occasions, including my response to his amendments 17 to 22, that the Scottish Government will discuss equality issues with the letting agents industry in the context of developing the code of practice. The issues in all Patrick Harvie’s amendments are appropriate issues to discuss when developing the code of practice, which we will consult on, as that is the right and proper thing to do. On that basis, I invite Mary Fee not to move amendment 56.

Patrick Harvie: My excitement knows no bounds at hearing that an Opposition member will have an amendment agreed to for the second time today—although perhaps I have slightly undercounted. I thank the minister for the commitment to amendment 37, which will set a clear timescale for the development of a code of practice, as it will have to be laid before the Parliament within 18 months. I am grateful for that.

I understand the minister’s position on amendments 17 to 22, although it disappoints me. I am sure that she intended to say that she will consult not only with letting agencies and industry bodies but with a wide range of other organisations, including those that represent tenants as well as equality and anti-poverty organisations. I am sure that she intends to consult all those. However, I will press amendment 17.

Presiding Officer, I suspect that the support for amendments 17 to 22 will be the same so, if it saves time, can they be decided on as a group?

The Deputy Presiding Officer: No, they will all have to be decided on individually, but thank you, anyway.

The question is, that amendment 17 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Ballie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Amendment 17 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 18 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Fergusson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMaon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMaon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfries and Galloway) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richar
Amendment 20 moved—[Patrick Harvie].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 43, Against 74, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 19 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 20 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.
The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 43, Against 72, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 20 disagreed to.

17:00

Amendment 21 moved—[Patrick Harvie].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 21 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.
Amendment 21 disagreed to.

Amendment 22 moved—[Patrick Harvie].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 22 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)

Against

Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfrieshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 42, Against 73, Abstentions 0.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 42, Against 73, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 21 disagreed to.

Amendment 22 moved—[Patrick Harvie].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 22 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Amendment 22 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 56 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Ruterglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeill, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfries and Galloway) (SNP)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linthgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeill, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfries and Galloway) (SNP)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Elaine (Coatbridge and Chryston) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Mline, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Neil, Alex (Airdrie and Shotts) (SNP)
Paterson, Gill (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeen North) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 42, Against 75, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 56 disagreed to.

Section 43—Applications to First-tier Tribunal to enforce code of practice

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We move to group 13. Amendment 23, in the name of Patrick Harvie, is grouped with amendments 24, 25 and 26.

Patrick Harvie: Amendments 23 and 24 make one relatively simple change to section 43.

Section 43 introduces the procedures for the application to first-tier tribunal in relation to the enforcement of the letting agent code of practice. All members have acknowledged that there is a great deal of strength in that process and welcome the general thrust of the bill as it stands. However, at the moment, the applications can be made only by a tenant or a landlord—those being the individuals or bodies that would be seen to have a complaint against a letting agent as the go-between. My amendments simply seek to broaden that provision to ensure that a third party can make an application on behalf of a group of tenants.

The minister has previously said that she is perfectly comfortable with the idea that tenants could be supported in the application process. I am sure that some tenants will be articulate enough, know what they are doing and have the confidence to make an application on their own behalf without support. However, others will not have that confidence and may feel that they will be put under pressure or receive threats from their landlord or letting agent if they make such an application. Alternatively, they may simply not know how to go about the process.

For an individual to be supported in that situation may be enough, but I am concerned about groups of tenants—for example, in a student community, where a large number of tenants are in rapid turnover in short-term tenancies and do not necessarily have the motivation or confidence to take a complaint about a letting agent’s behaviour to the tribunal.

A single letting agent may be the source of a number of complaints that affect a whole community or a large group of students. It seems entirely reasonable that we allow the student rights organisation or another welfare rights or housing adviser to make the application on the students’ behalf. It might be a long-term problem for the student community concerned but only a short-term problem for any individual tenant or, even, particular household, so it would be reasonable to allow third-party applications on behalf of groups of tenants where that is the only way for the tribunal to address the issue.

Amendments 25 and 26 address compensation. It seems unreasonable that tenants should be expected to pay rent during a period in which their letting agent is in breach of the code. The code will exist to protect tenants as well as landlords and, if a tenant is not being given the standard of service to which they are entitled under it, they should not pay rent.

I sought to raise that issue at stage 2. The minister said to me that the amendment that I proposed was not appropriate because the letting agent could simply pass the cost on to the landlord even though the reason for the breach of the code may not be the landlord’s responsibility. Therefore, in amendment 25, I suggest that compensation should be given to the tenants in respect of the rent that they pay during the period in which the letting agent is in breach of the code but that that compensation be paid for by the letting agent.

I hope that the minister will show greater willingness to address those issues in the form that I have proposed this time.

I move amendment 23.
Mary Fee: I support amendments 23 and 24 in Patrick Harvie’s name. As he has already expressed most of the reasons that I would have given for supporting them, I will be brief.

Amendments 23 and 24 would allow for third-party representation to a tribunal for groups of tenants to be properly represented. It is only fair and right that groups of tenants who may otherwise be prohibited from going to a tribunal be able to be represented by a third party and take their complaint to the tribunal. It is a sensible approach and a good way forward.

Although I have a great deal of sympathy for what Patrick Harvie said when he spoke to amendment 25, I cannot support it or amendment 26. I am concerned with the way that amendment 25 is drafted in relation to compensation that would be paid to a tenant if a letting agent did not comply with the code. It may not be just or equitable and could be open to abuse, as a tenant could delay proceeding to accrue compensation.

Alex Johnstone: I agree with Mary Fee’s position on amendments 25 and 26.

On amendments 23 and 24, I have some concerns about the ability of third parties to act on behalf of groups of tenants. One of the things that we are trying to achieve in the bill is a better relationship between the tenant and landlord or letting agent. We need to work hard to ensure that that relationship is genuine and direct. The introduction of third parties acting on behalf of groups of tenants would have the potential to turn relationships into adversarial positions that are not helpful to the long-term outcome of the bill.

Margaret Burgess: Patrick Harvie requests first-tier tribunal representation by a third party, but I have some reservations about that.

The arrangements for representation would be a matter for the tribunal’s rules in due course. There is nothing in the bill to prevent a group of tenants seeking support from a third party in assisting them with progressing their complaint. However, I would have concerns about a third party proceeding with the sort of class action that I believe that Patrick Harvie has in mind.

As the bill currently indicates, the Scottish Government can bring an action to the first-tier tribunal on behalf of a group of people. Given the complexities that may arise from third parties doing so, it would be unwise to rush through such an amendment without proper consideration of the consequences. For example, if a third party advises the tribunal that he or she is acting for a particular group of tenants, how would the tribunal know that all the tenants in that group have agreed to be part of the action? What would happen if one of the tenants were to change his or her mind and drop out?

Patrick Harvie: Just to reinforce my point, part of the argument in favour of the amendment concerns situations in which not all tenants have the motivation, concern or desire to raise a case but a potential or alleged breach of the code by a letting agent will still be a long-term problem for others who will be living in those properties. I mention students because they often have short-term tenancies that run for a year or six months.

How will the code be enforced against letting agents in situations where tenants have no motivation to bring a case because they know that they will soon be moving on?

Margaret Burgess: As I said in my earlier remarks, the Scottish Government can, in circumstances such as the one that Patrick Harvie outlines, make an application to the first-tier tribunal, and the tribunal can order an inspection of the premises, so that issue is covered.

I understand what Patrick Harvie is getting at, but when we look at the detail of what he proposes we see that it is incredibly complex. I am well aware that other tribunals, such as the Homeowner Housing Panel, can deal with conjoined cases in which a number of complainers have lodged an application against the same person. Tribunals will often allow a third party to support a complainer or a group of complainers, but Patrick Harvie’s proposal goes further. Amendment 24 would allow a third party to act for a group of tenants in complaining about—in some instances—multiple letting agents.

I suggest that we allow the new legislation time to bed in. If the provision to allow the Scottish Government to make applications is not sufficient, we can reassess the position with the benefit of experience and with the time to reflect on the complexities that the amendment generates. I invite Patrick Harvie to withdraw amendments 23 and 24.

Patrick Harvie’s amendment 25 is well-intentioned, but it is flawed because there is no requirement in the bill for landlords to comply with the letting agent code of practice or an enforcement order that is made by the tribunal.

There are already a number of enforcement measures that can be taken if a letting agent does not comply with the code. The tribunal is able to award compensation on a proportionate basis, and it may also inform the Scottish ministers of the failure to comply. In the event that the letting agent is considered to be no longer a fit and proper person, that could result in their registration being revoked. It is also an offence to fail to comply with an enforcement order, which could result in a fine on conviction.
On the basis that other penalties exist in the bill, I cannot support amendments 25 and 26, and I ask Patrick Harvie not to move them.

Patrick Harvie: Without wanting to labour the point, I note that the minister may find that some of us will seek to hold her to the commitment that the Scottish Government will raise those applications with the tribunal on behalf of tenants. There will be cases in which tenants do not wish to proceed but the issues still need to be addressed.

I am sorry that the Government is not persuaded of the need for my amendments, either with regard to third-party applications or the need to protect tenants who will still be left paying rent through a letting agent who is breaching the code.

I press amendment 23, and I will move amendment 25 when the time comes.

17:15

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Elaine Smith):

The question is, that amendment 23 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eddie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Gaithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Paterson, Gil (clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelerhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 42, Against 73, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 23 disagreed to.

Amendment 24 not moved.

Amendment 25 moved—[Patrick Harvie].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 25 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Alieen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)

Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Graeme, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, lain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rathglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McGregor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Peterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 9, Against 106, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 25 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call amendment 26, in the name of Patrick Harvie, which has already been debated with amendment 23. Do you wish to move or not move, Mr Harvie?

Patrick Harvie: I know when I am beaten, Presiding Officer.

Amendment 26 not moved.

Section 51—Meaning of letting agency work

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 14 is on the meaning of “letting agency work”. Amendment 27, in the name of Alex Johnstone, is grouped with amendment 28.

I draw members’ attention to the pre-emption information in the groupings. If amendment 27 is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 28 because of pre-emption.

Alex Johnstone: I am sure that we will be okay with the pre-emption, Presiding Officer.

Amendment 27 is a re-lodging of an amendment that I lodged at stage 2, while amendment 28, which was lodged at about the same time for stage 3, seeks to have the same effect.

The problem lies with section 51(1)(b), which seeks to define the term “letting agency work”. Although it was fairly obvious from previous discussions that the bill’s drafters knew what they meant by the terms in section 51(1)(b), I was not convinced that that was what the bill actually said. As a consequence, I lodged an amendment to delete section 51(1)(b) completely.

With the minister’s amendment, which seeks to clarify the definition in section 51(1)(b), I believe that the wording is now far more effective and, indeed, will mostly have the desired effect. However, I am not convinced that redrafting the paragraph is the right way to go, and I think that we would better off if, as amendment 27 suggests, section 51(1)(b) were deleted completely. I will therefore move and press amendment 27, but, if it fails, I am prepared to support amendment 28 as a fall-back position.

I move amendment 27.

Margaret Burgess: During stages 1 and 2, some stakeholders noted concerns about the definition of letting agency work, as Alex Johnstone pointed out. They felt that it might inadvertently cover those who repair or improve a landlord’s property, such as roofers, painters and other contractors, which would unintentionally bring them within the scope of letting agent regulation.

Amendment 28 clarifies the position by amending the existing definition of the property management aspect of letting agency work to make clear the range of management activities that the Scottish ministers intend to be within the scope of letting agency work. Those activities include collecting rent, inspecting the house and arranging repairs, maintenance, improvement or insurance. The amendment will make it clear that people who solely provide building services to the private rented sector are not intended to be covered by the letting agent regulatory regime.

Amendment 27, which was lodged by Alex Johnstone, would simply delete all section 51(1)(b). That would remove property management work from the scope of letting agency work and narrow the scope of the regulatory regime. I cannot support that consequence.

In light of my amendment 28, which clarifies the position, I ask Alex Johnstone to withdraw his amendment 27.

James Kelly: Both amendments in the group seek to deal with the discussion that took place at stage 2, when it was clear that there was confusion about the wording of section 51 in respect of letting agency work. Having studied the amendments and listened to the contributions, I am convinced that Alex Johnstone’s solution is the best way forward, but if his amendment is defeated, we will support the minister’s amendment.

Alex Johnstone: I will be brief. I think that we have come to a reasonable solution. I will press amendment 27 but commit my support to amendment 28 should amendment 27 not be agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 27 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Baillie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNee, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Milne, Namest (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rowley, Alex (Covendenbeath) (Lab)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Alian, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Aliard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Almond Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Donnan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eddie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Hyslop, Fiona (Linlithgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 46, Against 69. Abstentions 0.
Amendment 27 disagreed to.
Amendment 28 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 61—Fit and proper person considerations

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 15 is on mobile home sites with permanent residents. Amendment 29, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 58, 30 and 31.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 29 makes it explicit that a local authority must, when running the fit-and-proper-person test, take into account any issues around the site owner profiteering from providing utilities to residents. The amendments reflect amendments that Mary Fee lodged during stage 2. There were some technical issues that we wanted to consider after stage 2. I am happy to say that we have worked through them so that amendment 29 addresses the issues that were raised by Mary Fee’s stage 2 amendments.
Amendment 58 clarifies that, when a site licence applicant provides details of convictions in their application, only unspent convictions should be covered. This technical amendment would put beyond doubt that only convictions not yet spent under the terms of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 are required to be disclosed. Any spent convictions that a person has will not require to be disclosed; the amendment ensures that the bill is clear on that requirement.

I will now speak to amendment 30. One of the measures in the bill will allow a local authority to take emergency action on a site where there is imminent risk of serious harm. That is an important measure that allows a local authority to take action quickly and fix a significant problem where someone could be seriously harmed.

However, the bill as drafted includes three requirements that have to be met before a local authority can take emergency action on a site without a licence. One of those requirements would mean that a local authority would have to establish that the person in control of the land was “causing or permitting” the land to be used as a mobile home site with permanent residents. Amendment 30 will remove that requirement. The key issues in such a situation are that a site exists and that there is imminent risk of serious harm; whether someone is “causing or permitting” land to be used as a site is irrelevant. A local authority’s power to take emergency action is for use when there is a dangerous situation that needs to be urgently addressed. We want to avoid a local authority having to go through unnecessary stages before it can take that action.

Amendment 31 provides that, where an offence has been committed under part 5 of the bill by a corporate body and it can be proven that a specific individual played a role in committing the offence, that person also commits an offence and can be punished accordingly. That would mean that, for example, unscrupulous site owners cannot evade legal responsibility for their actions by setting up companies to own land and hold the site licence.

Amendment 31 reflects the position in other similar licensing regimes, including the new mobile home licensing regimes in England and in Wales. It provides a useful additional measure to tackle unscrupulous site owners, and I ask members to support it.

I move amendment 29.

Mary Fee: I will speak to amendments 29 and 30, in the name of the minister.

As the minister said, amendment 29 reflects an amendment that I lodged at stage 2 about the ability of local authorities to take into account breaches of gas, electricity and water agreements by mobile home site owners when carrying out a fit-and-proper-person test. I am grateful for the minister’s agreement to take forward my proposal and I am happy to support amendment 29.

I am also happy to support amendment 30, and I welcome the minister’s additional clarification today. I had concerns about the wording of subsection 2 of new section 322 of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960—my concern was about the drafting and whether the wording was too broad or would curtail certain things—but, given her comments, I am happy to support the amendment.

Margaret Burgess: We have covered the issue of profiteering in the bill as a local authority must have regard to all the circumstances of a case. I was pleased to take forward the amendments on profiteering that Mary Fee lodged at stage 2.

I have nothing further to add on amendments 58, 30 and 31.

Amendment 29 agreed to.

Amendment 58 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

AMENDMENT 31

Section 67—Emergency action

Amendment 30 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Before section 70

Amendment 31 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 72—Tenement management scheme

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 16 is on tenement management schemes. Amendment 59, in the name of Sarah Boyack, is grouped with amendments 60 and 61, and 32 to 34.

17:30 Sarah Boyack (Lothian) (Lab): Under subsection (4) of new section 4A of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004, as introduced by section 72 of the bill, a local authority will be required to notify an owner if it intends to pay a share of scheme costs on that owner’s behalf. Amendment 59 seeks to ensure that the bill is sufficiently clear about the process in circumstances in which the reason for the local authority intervening is an inability to identify or find the owner in question. When I raised the issue at stage 2, I was directed to section 30 of the 2004 act, which states that, when an owner cannot be identified, a notice will be deemed to have been sent if it is delivered to the property addressed to the owner, proprietor or something similar.

That might seem to be a trivial point, but I am keen for us to be clear about what that means and I want to tease out from the minister whether the current requirement in the bill to notify an owner is consistent with the issuing of an official notice under the 2004 act. Amendment 59 would remove any ambiguity around that point.

Amendment 60 would require the Scottish Government to publish guidance about the operation of section 4 of the 2004 act on tenement management schemes and new section 4A on the power of local authorities to pay a missing share of scheme costs. New section 4A introduces significant and welcome new powers to minimise delays and assist owners who take their maintenance responsibilities seriously to get repairs moving.

Getting the powers right is one thing; ensuring that they are being used to the best effect is another challenge. The requirement for the Scottish Government to produce guidance in consultation with local authorities and other stakeholders will help to ensure that all parties are aware of the provisions and the scope that they provide for ensuring that common repairs are implemented timeously. That will also allow for a review of any existing guidance that is available to local authorities and others on the operation of the tenement management scheme to ensure that, 10 years on from the 2004 act, the legislation is operating effectively. From talking to local authority colleagues, I think that it is clear that the existing legislation is complex and not necessarily being used to best effect. It would be useful to bring together the new legislation with existing legislation.

Alongside official guidance for professionals, I would welcome the minister’s comments on whether, in light of the bill, the Government will revisit and update the “Common Repair, Common Sense” booklet to assist consumers and residents to navigate the amended legislation that we are going to pass tonight.

Amendment 61 acknowledges that registered social landlords would benefit from having a discretionary power to recover their costs from private owners by a repayment charge along the same lines as that introduced for local authorities. I was first made aware of that by a constituent who sought support from the local housing association to help with getting repairs carried out when the housing association owns one or more properties, but the housing associations would not act. When I raised the issue in evidence sessions on David Stewart’s Defective and Dangerous Buildings (Recovery of Expenses) (Scotland) Bill, there was a strong mood that we need to act on the issue.

I am pleased that the minister has listened to the arguments that I made on the issue at stage 2 and I am also grateful for her assistance in crafting a revised amendment that I hope will be crafted in such a way that we can pass it happily this afternoon. Housing associations are expected to ensure that the properties that they let meet the minimum standard that is set out in the Scottish housing quality standard, but they cannot do that in some cases because they cannot get consent from owners in other parts of the buildings to carry out common works. As co-owners, they have the right to carry out work in tenements in which they own a majority of flats or if they can secure the support of a sufficient number of owners to form a majority, but they cannot force those other owners to come to the table. That is left up to civil remedies, which are not as successful because the process is protracted and hugely costly and it is not a route that housing associations choose.

We clearly have a problem here. If registered social landlords had the discretionary power to recover costs from private owners by using repayment charges that are along the same lines as those introduced for local authorities by using repayment charges that are along the same lines as those introduced for local authorities in section 72 of the bill, that would transform the situation.

Amendment 61 creates a regulation-making power. Before using it, the Scottish Government would be required to carry out a consultation and consider the views of stakeholders. That is critical, because it gives everyone the opportunity to comment on the detail of how the regulation might be made. If we put it in the bill today, it means that it will happen, but the details need to be sorted out. Enabling the minister to propose the regulatory powers would be the right way to do that, because it would mean that the Parliament would be able to scrutinise them.

I am aware that housing associations have been forced to take properties out of their letting pools because they cannot afford to cover the necessary common repairs. That reduces the availability of social housing when we already have a challenge because of a shortage of housing. Amendment 61 is crucial because it will allow housing associations to play their part in ensuring that buildings are kept wind and watertight and up to the Scottish housing quality standard. The amendment provides protection for vulnerable home owners who might be adversely affected by a registered social landlord’s decision to recover costs because it includes a right to appeal to ministers.

The amendments in this part of the bill are crucial to strengthening the bill when it is passed tonight.

I move amendment 59.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 32 replaces the current fixed 30-year period for repayment of a debt that is owed to a local authority in connection with work that has been done to repair and maintain private homes with a flexible period of between five and 30 years, to be determined by the local authority.

That recovery power will also apply to the new missing-share power for tenement buildings that will be introduced by section 72, and will provide local authorities with an effective tool to secure repayment of their costs in paying a missing share.

Amendments 33 and 34 make a similar change to charging order powers under the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987.

Amendment 59 changes the wording of the duty to notify owners before using the new missing-share power by local authorities. The tenement management scheme provides a framework for collective decision making by owners of tenements. It helps them to take responsibility for work to common parts of their own homes and allows them to enforce majority decisions against owners who will not cooperate.

Although new section 4A provides a power for local authorities to intervene to support majority decisions, that is intended to be a last resort, and the operation of the tenement management scheme is primarily a matter between owners, to which the local authority would not normally be party. It is not obvious what purpose would be served by publishing guidance to local authorities about the operation of section 4.

As Sarah Boyack said, the Scottish Government already provides non-statutory guidance to home owners in the leaflet “Common Repair, Common Sense”, which we took over from Consumer Focus Scotland last year and which we will be revising to bring up to date. We also provide guidance for local authorities on their role in providing assistance to home owners under the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006. We will also be revising that guidance to take account of other changes in the bill.

Amendment 61 seeks to address an issue that was raised during the stage 2 debate. Together with the amendments in my name in this group, the amendment will provide a powerful debt recovery tool to support registered social landlords who need the co-operation of private owners to carry out work to address poor-quality tenements.

As Sarah Boyack mentioned, since stage 2 I have discussed her concerns with her and have considered the views of the SFHA. It is important that there should be protection for vulnerable tenants, so I am pleased to note the scope for an appeal procedure in the amendment.

In conclusion, I ask members to support amendments 32, 33, 34, 59 and 61. I invite Sarah Boyack not to move amendment 60.

Alex Johnstone: I am happy to support amendments 32, 33 and 34, because they make valuable improvements to the bill.

With regard to Sarah Boyack’s amendments, I am happy to support amendment 59. In all honesty, I am happy to support amendment 60 as well, as it simply requests the Government to provide clarity by publishing the guidance to which it refers.

The minister has accepted amendment 61, but I still have some concerns about it. It extends the scope of the provisions for the recovery of expenses from local authorities to registered social landlords. I contend that local authorities and RSLs are rather different in their operation and their perspective and that, as a consequence, it would be irresponsible of us to assume that the same legislation could act effectively for the same purpose.

Sarah Boyack proposes that we should legislate today and then consult. I am more cautious and I am concerned that we need to get the provisions right. I understand the suggestion that we should extend the approach to RSLs, but I am not convinced that amendment 61 is the right way to do that. I will support any process that leads us in that direction, but it would be premature of us to support the amendment.

Sarah Boyack: I am delighted that, as I understand it, the minister will support amendment 59. On amendment 60, I agree with her that the tenement management scheme should be the first port of call, but I am concerned that that is not the case for many residents. That is partly because of a lack of guidance and partly because local authorities lack the power to concentrate minds.

When the bill is passed, it will give local authorities more powers to act—that will be discussed further in the debate on the next group of amendments. Amendment 60 would strengthen those powers.

The legislative provisions are complex. When the situation is difficult, most owners walk away from sorting out the problems, which leaves us with a major public safety problem and a major problem with the maintenance and repair of our buildings.

The new framework that we will create tonight will improve matters hugely. I am keen for the Scottish Government to be as proactive as possible in ensuring that local authorities and owners know as much as they can, so that the difficult part of forcing people to pay is the last backstop and not the first approach.

We have not mentioned the statutory notices problem in Edinburgh; notices were used principally because owners did not work together. The bill will help, because it will tell owners that, if they do not work together, the local authority will step in. Owners will still have to pay, but the works will definitely go ahead. For that reason, the bill is a huge step forward.

I say to Alex Johnstone that not including registered social landlords would be a huge missed opportunity. They must be part of the picture. That would improve the situation significantly when RSLs can act and are ready to act.

We know that the principle is the right thing to do, but it is only right and proper that the detail should be in separate regulations. Many members have argued for such an approach to different issues in the past.

It is important to support all the amendments in my name, which form a package, alongside the minister’s proposed measures. The amendments would strengthen the bill and ensure that it delivers on the aspirations that we all have for it.

Amendment 59 agreed to.

Amendment 60 moved—[Sarah Boyack].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 60 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mcculloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Graham, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 51, Against 60, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 60 disagreed to.

17:45
Amendment 61 moved—[Sarah Boyack].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 61 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For:
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Claire (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Aliard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Bailie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Doman, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Dugdale, Kezia (Lothian) (Lab)
Edie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Ferguson, Patricia (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, Johann (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McKelvie, Christina (Hamilton, Larkhall and Stonehouse) (SNP)
McLeod, Aileen (South Scotland) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfriesshire) (Lab)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scott, Tavish (Shetland Islands) (LD)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stevenson, Stewart (Bar Giovane and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Amendment 62 aims to dig into the operation of the existing powers by requiring the Scottish Government to report regularly on the use of maintenance orders. If the amendment is agreed to, it will require the Government to produce a report on a variety of issues to do with local authorities’ use of maintenance orders from the time when the powers came into force to the present day. The amendment would also require subsequent reports to be produced on a three-yearly basis. Such reports would provide us with useful insight into how the powers are being used. The findings would put us in a much better position to be able to assess whether the powers as currently constituted are achieving their purpose, or whether further work is needed to support local authorities to use them effectively.

We have the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004, and we have since 2004 considered several bills that relate to housing. It is important that the Scottish Government monitor the effectiveness of our legislation and that the Parliament carry out legislative scrutiny. Amendment 62 would help us to achieve those objectives by providing for reporting mechanisms, so that we can be sure that the provisions in the bill and previous housing legislation are being put into effect and used by local authorities, as Parliament intended.

I move amendment 62.

Alex Johnstone: We often come across situations in which it turns out that local authorities have powers that they did not know about. When the amendment that was similar to amendment 62 was lodged at stage 2, the minister’s defence was that the powers already exist for local government. I was and remain content with the explanation, but as we progress towards the end of stage 3 I look forward with interest to hearing what the minister will say.

Margaret Burgess: Amendment 62 would require the Scottish Government to produce a report on local authorities’ use of maintenance order powers, which were brought into force on 1 April 2009. Local authorities have made less use of the powers than was expected because they find administration of the process to be onerous. In response to those concerns, I have made a number of changes that will streamline the process, and which are set out in sections 74 and 75 and were supported by most local authorities during the Scottish Government’s consultation.

One of the changes is to move information on maintenance plans from the land register to the building registers that are held by local authorities. That will reduce the cost of using maintenance orders, but will mean also that there is no central point of information for some of the details that the provision in amendment 62 seeks to require the Scottish Government to obtain.
I am happy to engage with local authorities on the use that they make of the powers that we provide for them, and I am happy to seek information on numbers from the keeper of the Registers of Scotland and from local authorities, as required. The amendments that we have made to the bill demonstrate that we have been listening and have made changes to improve use of the maintenance powers, but I do not think that the proposal to formalise reporting on the numbers of orders and plans would help with that. I therefore cannot support amendment 62.

Sarah Boyack: Notwithstanding the minister’s comments, I will press amendment 62.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 62 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Baillie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, lain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Marra, Jenny (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
Mahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfrieshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Rennie, Willie (Mid Scotland and Fife) (LD)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)
Smith, Drew (Glasgow) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)

Against

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eddie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabian, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunningham North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lamont, John (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
McAlpine, Joan (South Scotland) (SNP)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
McLeod, Aileen (Lothian) (SNP)
McLeod, Fiona (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP)
McMillan, Stuart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Paterson, Gil (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP)
Robertson, Dennis (Aberdeenshire West) (SNP)
Robison, Shona (Dundee City East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)
Stevenson, Stewart (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkcaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 36, Against 71, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 62 disagreed to.
After section 76

Amendment 32 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 76A

Amendments 33 and 34 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Section 77B—Private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 18 is entitled “First-Tier Tribunal and private rented housing panel membership: parliamentary procedure”. Amendment 35, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 36.

Margaret Burgess: At stage 2 the Government amended the bill to provide ministers with powers to vary certain tribunal disqualifications. Amendments 35 and 36 will change the procedure that is to be used from negative to affirmative. The change responds to an issue that was raised by the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee. Although the powers relate to quite straightforward administrative matters, I am content to amend the powers to require use of affirmative procedure, as recommended by the committee.

I move amendment 35.

James Kelly: Disqualification from the Private Rented Housing Panel is a serious matter that should get appropriate scrutiny by Parliament. The change from use of negative procedure to affirmative procedure makes good sense, so I support the minister’s amendments.

Alex Johnstone: I was not going to say anything, but I decided to stand up merely to defend the negative procedure, which is much maligned in Parliament. Committees often argue that affirmative procedure is preferable to negative procedure, but I find the negative procedure very attractive and responsive. We should use it with pride in our parliamentary processes.

Notwithstanding that comment, I support amendment 35, which is in the minister’s name.

Nigel Don (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP): As the convener of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee, I am delighted that the Government has responded to our suggestion.

Amendment 35 agreed to.

Section 82—Subordinate legislation

Amendments 67, 68 and 69 not moved.

Amendment 70 moved—[Drew Smith].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 70 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Ballie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Alieen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Ewing, Fergus (Inverness and Nairn) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Fitzpatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caitliness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Ruterglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Mackay, Derek (Renfrewshire North and West) (SNP)
MacKenzie, Mike (Highlands and Islands) (SNP)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
Mason, John (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP)
Matheson, Michael (Falkirk West) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West Scotland) (SNP)
Amendment 72 moved.

Amendment 37 moved—[Patrick Harvie]—and agreed to.

Section 85—Commencement

Amendment 71 not moved.

Amendment 72 moved—[Mary Fee].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 72 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For

Balie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baker, Claire (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
Finnie, John (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
Macintosh, Ken (Eastwood) (Lab)
Martin, Paul (Glasgow Provan) (Lab)
McArthur, Liam (Orkney Islands) (LD)
McCulloch, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McDougall, Margaret (West Scotland) (Lab)
McInnes, Alison (North East Scotland) (LD)
McMahon, Michael (Uddingston and Bellshill) (Lab)
McMahon, Siobhan (Central Scotland) (Lab)
McNeil, Duncan (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab)
McTaggart, Anne (Glasgow) (Lab)
Murray, Elaine (Dumfrieshire) (Lab)
Pentland, John (Motherwell and Wishaw) (Lab)
Stewart, David (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)
Sturgeon, Nicola (Glasgow Southside) (SNP)
Swinney, John (Perthshire North) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)
Torrance, David (Kirkaldy) (SNP)
Urquhart, Jean (Highlands and Islands) (Ind)
Watt, Maureen (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP)
Wheelhouse, Paul (South Scotland) (SNP)
White, Sandra (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP)
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Yousaf, Humza (Glasgow) (SNP)

Against

Brown, Gavin (Lothian) (Con)
Carlaw, Jackson (West Scotland) (Con)
Davidson, Ruth (Glasgow) (Con)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Goldie, Annabel (West Scotland) (Con)
Johnstone, Alex (North East Scotland) (Con)
Lamont, John (Etrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con)
McGrigor, Jamie (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Milne, Nanette (North East Scotland) (Con)
Mitchell, Margaret (Central Scotland) (Con)
Scanlon, Mary (Highlands and Islands) (Con)
Smith, Liz (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con)

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 97, Against 12, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 70 agreed to.

Amendment 36 moved—[Margaret Burgess]—and agreed to.

Amendment 37 moved—[Patrick Harvie]—and agreed to.
Housing (Scotland) Bill

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Elaine Smith): The next item of business is a debate on motion S4M-10438, in the name of Margaret Burgess, on the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

I call Margaret Burgess to speak to and move the motion. Minister, you have around 10 minutes, but at this stage we have some time for interventions.

18:01

The Minister for Housing and Welfare (Margaret Burgess): Thank you, Presiding Officer.

I will start by thanking everyone who contributed to the development of the Housing (Scotland) Bill, including members of all parties and stakeholders from across all sectors of housing. I am grateful to those stakeholders for their considered thoughts on the bill, both while the Government was shaping its policy and during the Parliament’s consideration of the bill, and I thank the members of the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee for their detailed scrutiny of the bill. I was pleased to lodge a number of amendments at stage 2 in response to the committee’s recommendations.

I believe that the broad consensus in favour of the policies in the bill reflects our commitment to working with stakeholders on its provisions. Following its enactment, we will continue that dialogue as we develop draft guidance and proceed with implementation.

The Scottish Government published its strategy for housing, “Homes Fit for the 21st Century”, in February 2011. It included a number of measures that required legislation, and the bill fulfils our commitment. The bill will safeguard the interests of consumers, support improvements to the quality of housing and secure better outcomes for communities. It will introduce greater flexibility for social landlords to manage their houses and, by ending the right to buy, it will provide social landlords with more certainty in planning to invest in those houses as well as in new homes.

The committee and stakeholders had concerns that a three-year notice period was too long for ending the right to buy, and I reduced it to two years. I believe that a two-year period balances the need to stop social housing being sold at a discount as soon as is reasonably possible while ensuring that those who have the right to buy and are able to exercise it will have a reasonable opportunity to do so. A period of two years will give them time to consider their options carefully.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 37, Against 71, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 72 disagreed to.

Amendment 73 not moved.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: That ends consideration of amendments. and to seek reputable financial advice without being rushed into a decision.

Ending the right to buy sits alongside the Government’s target to deliver 30,000 new affordable homes in the five years of this session of Parliament. By 31 March 2014, we had already delivered 19,903 affordable homes, 14,294 of which were for social rent. That represents 71 per cent of our social rent target. We are therefore on track to meet the 30,000 target, and we have now committed £1.7 billion to delivering those vital homes in the five years of the current session of Parliament. Yesterday, the First Minister announced that we had reached a spend of £1 billion, which is a substantial investment in housing. That spend is not only an investment in housing; it sustains 8,000 jobs each year.

James Kelly (Rutherglen) (Lab): The minister refers to the £1 billion spend that the First Minister announced yesterday. Do you recognise that there has been a 29 per cent cut in the housing budget, as a result of which we have seen the lowest number of completions since 1947? The effect of that is apparent in our constituencies, where there are growing waiting lists. That is the effect that the cuts in the budget are having.

Margaret Burgess: The Scottish Government is investing more and is building more social houses than any previous Administration in the Parliament—more council houses and more houses by registered social landlords. That is a fact; it cannot be disputed. [Interruption.] We are doing that at the same time as we are investing in affordable houses in mid-market rent—[Interruption.]

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Order, please.

Margaret Burgess: We are committed to housing in this country. There are more houses per head of population being built in Scotland than in the rest of the UK. We are building the houses—[Interruption.]—no matter what James Kelly is trying to say. We are outperforming any other place in the UK in building houses.

The private rented sector has grown significantly over the past 10 years. That is why the Government consulted on and published the first private rented sector strategy for Scotland. The bill introduces measures that will strengthen the regulation of that sector. It gives local authorities increased powers to tackle poor conditions through third-party reporting to the private rented housing tribunal and the power to inspect a property. It gives local authorities new discretionary powers to tackle disrepair in the owner-occupied sector. It establishes a housing tribunal to deal with private rented sector cases.

James Kelly: What does the bill offer to tenants in the private sector who are facing rent rises of nearly 20 per cent? What is your answer to those tenants, minister?

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Members should remember to speak through the chair, please.

Margaret Burgess: The Government is absolutely committed to those who rent in the private sector. We introduced the first private sector strategy for Scotland. We are ensuring that the landlord registration scheme is being enforced. We will also regulate the letting agency industry, ensuring that tenants get a fair deal. We are already examining the tenancy regime, and I will discuss that later in my speech. We were considering that long before James Kelly ever talked about it.

All those measures were developed through consultation with stakeholders. I am clear that they will help to ensure that there are good standards across the private rented sector. There is broad consensus for the approach to regulating letting agents, and I believe that the framework has been strengthened during the scrutiny of the bill.

The Scottish Government will continue to work closely with stakeholders and others to develop the code of practice and to ensure that it delivers a robust regime. I hope that that answers Patrick Harvie’s earlier point: when we are considering the code of practice, it will be a very wide consultation, and not just with the letting agency industry. Members from all parties have been keen to understand what the code will cover, so it is right that it should come back to Parliament for consideration and agreement before being implemented.

Measures to improve standards in the sector have been strongly supported. The new requirements on landlords to have regular electrical safety checks and to install carbon monoxide detectors—provisions that were introduced by Bob Doris and Jim Eadie—have been welcomed by landlord and tenant organisations alike.

There are those in the chamber who have been critical, saying that the bill does not go far enough and that it should include measures on energy efficiency, increasing security of tenure and capping rent increases. The Scottish Government is pursuing work to develop energy efficiency standards for the private rented sector and will consult on them in 2015. The consultation will invite views on what those standards should be, as well as on the timescale for introducing the standards. It is right that we take time to work with stakeholders to identify the right proposals and to consult fully on them.

The independent private tenancy review group published its report last month. I have accepted its recommendation for a new single private tenancy that would cover all future lets in the sector. We will develop detailed proposals for that, and we will consult on them in the autumn. Those measures deal with issues that were identified by the private rented sector strategy group and the Government’s consultation on its draft strategy. That group, which was made up of stakeholders from across the sector, did not identify issues with rent levels or rent increases.

James Kelly’s proposals to cap rent increases would require major legislative change. Any such change should be based on a clear understanding of the nature and scale of the problem and of what the options are for addressing it, so that we can be sure that it has a positive outcome and that it avoids any unintended consequences. That should be done through discussion, consultation and careful drafting of provisions if required, not by an amendment that gives ministers very broad powers and sets unrealistic timescales for introduction. We will be looking at the issue in our consultation on the tenancy regime in the autumn.

A crucial factor in driving up rents in the private rented sector is limited supply. The Government is working with a range of partners to deliver homes for mid-market rent through initiatives such as the national housing trust, which is on track to deliver more than 2,000 much-needed new homes in communities across Scotland. We are also supporting Homes for Scotland in its work to attract new institutional investment into the sector, by funding a dedicated Scottish private rented sector champion who will be tasked with bringing developers and potential funders together to deliver new high-quality homes in the sector.

I am not complacent. As I said earlier during the consideration of amendments, the consultation on a new single tenancy will also explore issues relating to rent levels in the private sector.

The bill also introduces new rights for those living in mobile homes, many of whom are elderly people who live permanently on sites across Scotland, and they will benefit from the provisions that update legislation dating from the 1960s. The measures will ensure that site owners are fit and proper persons and will strengthen local authority licensing powers so that they can target those who are not complying with the law.

The Housing (Scotland) Bill brings together a wide-ranging package of measures that the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee concluded will make improvements across the social, private rented and owner-occupied sectors. The measures were developed in consultation with stakeholders and have been strengthened by the scrutiny of the Parliament, and I commend them to members.

I move,

That the Parliament agrees that the Housing (Scotland) Bill be passed.

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): I call Mary Fee, to be followed by Alex Johnstone. I point out at this stage that we have a little time in hand, so I will be as flexible as I can.

18:12

Mary Fee (West Scotland) (Lab): I welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate on the Housing (Scotland) Bill, and I confirm that Scottish Labour members support the aims of the bill and welcome many of the measures that it brings to the housing sector.

There can be no denying that housing in Scotland faces some significant and complex challenges, and I am sure that everyone in the chamber will agree that we want a strong and growing housing sector. Although we support the principles of the bill, we feel that it is a missed opportunity, and I will expand on that as I progress.

This is the eighth year in which the current Administration has been in control of Scotland’s housing sector, and we are now about to pass its second housing bill. In the past eight years, the Scottish Government has failed to make housing a priority. More than 150,000 people are on waiting lists in Scotland, many of them in houses that are unsuitably small or in poor condition, and many in the private rented sector are paying far more than they can afford.

House building is at its lowest level since the end of world war two, with fewer than 15,000 homes completed in the past few years. However, we can hardly be shocked at that figure, as the capital housing budget was cut by 29 per cent between 2008-09 and 2011-12. Audit Scotland has estimated that Scotland will need 500,000 new homes over the next 25 years to meet demand. In the period from 2001 to 2006, there were 144,749 home completions under Labour, with a further 112,319 home completions between 2007 and 2012 under the Scottish National Party. It can be easy for both sides to assign blame, but it does not change the fact that not enough houses have been built.

Maureen Watt (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP): When will Mary Fee point out that the decline has been due to a decline in the private house building sector but not in the public sector?

Mary Fee: There is a decline across housing in general in Scotland. I remind the member that housing is devolved and that it is the Scottish Government’s responsibility. The budget has been... cut and we are facing a shortfall of 160,000 homes. I have carefully read the Government’s white paper and I would be grateful if a member could point out to me on which page it tells us how much more the Scottish Government will invest in housing to make it right and better when we are independent. There is no answer from any member on that.

The Deputy First Minister and Cabinet Secretary for Infrastructure, Investment and Cities (Nicola Sturgeon): It is not relevant.

Mary Fee: It is relevant.

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): Will the member give way?

Mary Fee: Can I just make a little progress?

When key stakeholders across the sector are saying that housing in Scotland is in crisis, we must listen to them. [Interruption.]

The Presiding Officer: Ms Baillie and Ms Sturgeon, you are at it again.

Mary Fee: I would like to progress.

The Presiding Officer: One minute, Ms Fee. Ms Baillie and Ms Sturgeon, you are at it again. Will the two of you just behave yourselves?

I call Mary Fee.

Mary Fee: Thank you, Presiding Officer.

The Housing (Scotland) Bill was an opportunity to take control of this crisis and start tackling the challenges that we face. We would have liked to have seen more progressive parts included in the bill and are disappointed that our proposed amendments to create sustainable committees, cap yearly rent rises and ensure security for tenants in the private rented sector did not gain support.

The abolition of the right to buy has been long overdue and needed to protect social housing, and we welcome the measure in the bill. However, we would have preferred, in line with the recommendation of the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee and the majority of those who gave evidence to it, for the right to buy to be abolished one year, rather than two years, from the date of royal assent.

Protecting social housing does not stop at ending the right to buy. Ensuring that everyone has a right to social housing that is suitable for their needs remains a priority for Scottish Labour. That is why we wanted the amendment on sustainable communities. With such an approach, we can consider sustainability by matching tenants to homes and, we hope, build long-lasting communities. Living in sustainable communities benefits everyone. Our local authorities and housing associations, working with community groups, know best what their communities need. Working to make sure that people can sustain their tenancy and tackle antisocial behaviour is a priority for Labour.

Part 3 of the bill, on the transfer of power to the first-tier tribunal, is a practical move. Sheriff courts across Scotland are struggling to support criminal justice proceedings, and it is a step in the right direction to take housing-related issues out of those courts. However, careful monitoring is required to ensure that tribunals remain fair and representative.

On the private rented sector, James Kelly proposed amendments on rent reviews and increases in tenancy lengths that would have improved the bill. Indeed, the SNP’s expert working group on welfare said in relation to the private rented sector:

“This means looking at the nature of tenancies, for example, giving tenants in the private sector longer-term tenancies than generally exist at present, as well as building into tenancy agreements that rents should increase in line with inflation but not above it”.

Another feature of the bill is the registration of letting agents. We need a strong, well-regulated private rented sector with meaningful sanctions that give confidence and security to both tenants and landlords. I am pleased that the minister has recognised the merit of my stage 2 amendments on short Scottish secure tenancies, and I welcome her amendment that ensures that tenants will get more information on why they are being transferred to a Scottish secure tenancy, what action will be taken and the right of appeal.

At stages 1 and 2, concerns were raised regarding mobile home site owners adding further charges for utilities. Again the minister took on board my proposed amendment on that issue and has amended the bill with her amendment.

I can confirm that Scottish Labour will support the passing of the bill. As I mentioned earlier, the housing sector in Scotland faces some complex and difficult challenges going forward. It is disheartening that the bill does not contain any new or radical proposals, but that highlights the lack of vision on housing from the Scottish Government.

Scottish Labour’s vision would be for a strong and vibrant housing sector. We would engage with key stakeholders across Scotland to build a policy that makes a real difference, with a long-term strategy for rural and urban housing. We would seek to regenerate our town centres and to tackle the empty properties that affect all of Scotland. We would be innovative and have a long-term housing action plan that would tackle Scotland’s housing crisis head on.
Alex Johnstone (North East Scotland) (Con): It has been an exciting afternoon. I can say that because sitting on the front benches dealing with the amendments allows the time to pass rather more quickly than it does for the poor unfortunates who find themselves sitting at the back trying to do paperwork and watching the clock. It has been an exciting day. I have made a spirited defence of the negative procedure, which puts me in a minority in the Parliament. I also managed to lead my party into voting against an amendment that was consequential to one that we had agreed to earlier in the proceedings. It has been an eventful day so far. By the way, Presiding Officer, that was a mistake, but these things happen.

In this debate on the motion that the bill be passed, I will cover a number of key issues. The bill has some things that are of value. Commendable work is being done to reach a position in which those who work in the private rented sector and who are reputable can succeed in providing housing for those who need it. The work that the Government is doing with the private sector representative organisations—the landlords organisations—is commendable.

The bill is the first attempt to bring letting agents into line. Landlords and letting agents have an enormous amount to contribute to housing in Scotland in the long term. By bringing them into the regulatory structure, we can ensure that, as I have said before, all landlords do what the good landlords have been doing for ages. That is important.

In Scotland, our housing structure is creaking at the seams. I know that I have been accused of defending some of the issues that might have caused that. However, there is hope in the discussion that we have had today. I believe that our obsession with social housing masks a fault or flaw in the market in Scotland. We seem to take the view that government responsibility at local and national level is to deal with those who are in the greatest need through the provision of social housing. Implicit in that is the idea that everyone else can look after themselves, but I do not believe that that is the case. We need to think long and hard about the shape of the Scottish housing market. That is why I was particularly delighted to hear the minister talk in her opening remarks about the Government making efforts to bring together developers and investors so that they can go on and build affordable houses in Scotland.

The greatest pressure on social housing today comes from the fact that there is no process by which those who are in it can move up the ladder. We can provide the next rung on the ladder by taking the investment opportunities that I know exist to build affordable housing for mid-market rent in large quantities. The reason why there is such demand in the private rented sector is our failure to provide an alternative in the centre of the housing market. What I heard from the minister suggested that the Government might put more effort into achieving what can be achieved through private or institutional investment and through the developers that are in a position to build homes and relieve the pressure in the market.

Another positive element of the bill is the move to first-tier tribunals in dispute resolution. From the evidence on the bill, it was obvious that there is an appetite for that. In fact, those who saw the opportunities that are offered by introducing that for the private rented sector want to extend it to the social rented sector. The minister has spoken about that in previous debates. We can take heart from the fact that the Government’s view is that, if the tribunals are a success in their proposed form, a future opportunity will be taken to consider extending their range so that we make more effective use of their powers.

There are, however, things that I wanted to see in the bill that are not in it. The change to the allocations policy that would have allowed age to be taken into account in allocations was in the original draft of the bill but was removed by the minister at stage 2. I tried to put it back in today, but my amendment was rejected. We have problems in our allocations policy that we need to address, and I saw taking age into account as a criterion as a small first step towards dealing with some of those problems. The Government’s failure to press ahead with the recommendations of its consultation in that area is, I believe, a weakness in the bill.

Another issue that was addressed in the original consultation draft but which never saw the light of day when the bill was published is the concept of starter or initial tenancies. At stage 2, I lodged a detailed amendment on the subject that was rejected. I would have liked something in the bill that would have given us a specific tenancy to be granted to those who have the greatest difficulties and required those who supply tenancies to be taken into account in allocations was in the bill. The change to the tribunals are a success in their proposed form, a future opportunity will be taken to consider extending their range so that we make more effective use of their powers.

The Presiding Officer: Can you bring your remarks to a close?

Alex Johnstone: Sorry—I thought that I was still in time, Presiding Officer. I will bring my speech to a close.

My key point relates to the right to buy. I understand that I will have the opportunity to close the debate on behalf of my party, so I will leave that part of my speech until later.

The Presiding Officer: Thank you, Mr Johnstone. I appreciate your efforts.
We move to the open debate. At the moment, I can offer members five minutes each instead of four minutes.

18:27

Jim Eadie (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP): I am pleased to take part in the stage 3 debate on the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

In the stage 1 debate, I welcomed the general principles of the bill, particularly the abolition of the right to buy, which will result in more than 15,000 homes in the social rented sector being retained over the coming decade. We must remember that the right to buy led to a significant reduction in the number of houses that are available for rent. Over the years, since it was introduced, the right to buy has greatly diminished the amount of housing stock of good quality that is available for rent to families throughout Scotland. We have a duty to provide homes of good quality for all families, including those who cannot afford to buy. The abolition of the right to buy will ensure that better properties in the more desirable areas will no longer be sold off, reducing the number of homes that are available for social rent. The abolition of the right to buy is long overdue, which is why it has been widely welcomed across Scotland. It will enhance social housing and protect the investment that is made in it.

I want to nail the lie that the Government’s record is anything other than a good one. The Government is outperforming the previous Labour-Liberal Democrat Administration’s record on council house building. Since 2007-08, 4,618 new council homes have been completed, compared with only six under the previous Administration. In fairness to James Kelly, whenever the issue has been raised in the chamber, he has always pointed to the fact that that statistic ignores the number of housing association homes that were completed. However, the SNP Government’s record in that area is also impressive. Since 2007-08, 30,292 housing association homes have been completed, which represents a rise of 12 per cent on the 27,000 homes that were completed under the Labour-Liberal Democrat Administration.

The bill has been greatly enhanced and strengthened by the improvements that have been made during its passage through Parliament. In a number of key areas, the Government has worked with stakeholders and MSPs from across the chamber to strengthen the bill. The Minister for Housing and Welfare, Margaret Burgess, deserves credit for the positive way in which she has entered into constructive dialogue on a range of issues. She has been willing to listen to and reflect on the arguments that have been presented to her, and the bill is better as a consequence of the approach that she has taken.

I am particularly grateful to the minister for meeting me and my colleague Alex Rowley to discuss temporary accommodation for homeless families. We were both concerned as a result of representations that we received from Shelter Scotland that, although the number of homeless families being placed in temporary bed and breakfast accommodation had reduced significantly since changes to legislation were introduced in 2004, a number of families, particularly pregnant women and children, were still being placed by some local authorities—by no means all—in accommodation that, to be frank, was not suitable for human habitation and was unacceptable in a civilised society.

The outcome of our discussions is that the Government will amend the Homeless Persons (Unsuitable Accommodation) (Scotland) Order 2004 to include a reference to accommodation being wind and watertight. The amended order will provide further clarity to local councils regarding the provision of temporary accommodation. All people, regardless of what type of accommodation they find themselves in, have a right to enjoy their lives in comfort, safety and dignity. I look forward to the amended order coming into force by the end of the year to achieve that. I very much welcome the progress that has been made on that during the bill’s passage. I am grateful to Alex Rowley for his support and to Shelter Scotland for its expertise on the issue.

I was also grateful for the opportunity to meet the minister along with Sarah Boyack to discuss a number of issues on behalf of the City of Edinburgh Council. As a result of that meeting, the Government introduced further changes in relation to the recovery of costs under a repayment charge that will allow local authorities to determine a repayment period of between five and 30 years and provide a right of appeal for any person who is aggrieved by the period of the charge.

The final area on which progress has been made is making carbon monoxide detectors mandatory in the private rented sector. Again, I am pleased to have worked with Shelter Scotland to bring about that change and I am glad that the Parliament has acted to address the issue so that all private tenants can feel safe from the threat of that so-called silent killer.

18:32

Malcolm Chisholm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab): In the stage 1 debate, I welcomed much of the bill and said that the problem was the issues that were missing from it. That is still the situation at the end of stage 3. In between, of course, some amendments have been accepted. I welcome that, but I regret that several that would have been useful have been rejected today.
I came at the bill from two points of view: first, because of the problems on housing that constituents regularly bring to me and, secondly, because of the issues that the City of Edinburgh Council highlighted. Jim Eadie referred to the latter in his speech.

In the stage 1 debate, Jim Eadie and I raised some of the issues that the Labour-SNP council in Edinburgh had brought to our attention. Although it is true that the council will be pleased that there has been some flexibility on the 30-year repayment period, it is fair to say that it will be disappointed that none of the other proposals that it made has been accepted. The Government rejected today the amendment on maintenance plans, which was a reasonable proposal by Sarah Boyack, modifying the original position. Of course, all the amendments that I lodged, which were all based on the council’s submission, were also rejected. The City of Edinburgh Council will not be pleased that the main amendments that it highlighted for the bill have not been progressed.

Over and above that, I came at the bill from the point of view of constituents. I am sure that all members deal with housing issues regularly at their surgeries, so I will pick up on four of the issues that I am regularly asked about.

Supply is obvious. We all know about issues with housing supply. I do not object to the abolition of the right to buy, but there is a danger that we will overstate its effect on housing supply. It is not the most important measure that can be taken to improve the supply of housing in the social rented sector, but I certainly do not object to it, although it would have been better to accept the amendment that Mary Fee moved at stage 2 to reduce the notice period for abolition to one year.

The more significant issue with regard to supply concerns the housing association grant and the declining trajectory of the number of social rented houses that are being built. A lot of the half-respectable figures that are presented to us in that respect are based on the higher HAG levels in the earlier years of the SNP Administration. Given the current HAG levels, we will have increasing difficulties in keeping up the number of social rented homes. Nicola Sturgeon changed the levels slightly last summer, but the housing associations all tell us that there is still a problem.

The second problem that constituents bring to me—and, I am sure, to every other member—is antisocial behaviour. I hope that the short SST will help in that respect, but Mary Fee was quite right to lodge an amendment, which was agreed to in committee, to require more information on all the safeguards that are needed.

The number of tenants who cause problems is obviously very small, but we all have examples in which massive problems are caused by a very small number of people. I welcome the increased availability of the short SST, which I hope will make it easier to evict the very small number of people who unfortunately require to be evicted because of their behaviour.

With regard to tackling antisocial behaviour, it would have been better if Drew Smith’s amendment on holiday lets had been accepted. In addition, we could do more to beef up the landlord registration system in order to get more effective action from landlords in the private sector.

In general, it is on the private sector that there are the most parts missing from the bill. I mentioned briefly the issue of repairs. Even Alex Johnstone and his colleagues almost supported my amendment on common repairs, and I was very encouraged by that, although they did not press the right button in the end. Nevertheless, he and his colleagues recognised that—as people bring to our attention all the time—there is a big problem with regard to repairs. So, it is a pity that my amendment was not accepted.

The provision for electrical safety checks is a step forward, but what will happen with all the existing tenancies? I do not know why the minister did not accept my amendment on that point.

My time is nearly up, but I highlight, as one of the most important amendments—possibly the most important—that was lodged at stage 3: James Kelly’s amendment on capping rent rises. Again, the minister used the standard response of, “Oh well, it’s very complicated and we would need to do more work.”

The Presiding Officer: You need to bring your remarks to a close, Mr Chisholm.

Malcolm Chisholm: James Kelly’s amendment would have required the introduction of regulations, and the work could have been done in the context of those regulations. It is deeply regrettable that his proposal—which was also a proposal of the SNP’s expert working group on welfare—was not accepted.

18:37

Jim Hume (South Scotland) (LD): I welcome the opportunity to participate in this evening’s debate. The bill is important, and I hope that it will begin to make the private rented sector more fit for purpose. The sector has experienced extraordinary growth in the past decade, and more than 300,000 households are now renting privately. That is little wonder when one considers that, since March 2007, more than 11,000 properties have been lost from social renting housing stock and the ever-increasing length of waiting lists has driven people towards the private sector.

It is long since time that we ensured that standards in the sector were improved, and I reiterate my support for the regulation of letting agents; the introduction of a tribunal system; the inclusion of basic safety measures; and the scrapping of the right to buy. It is for those reasons that I and the Liberal Democrats will vote for the bill later on.

Since I last had an opportunity to debate the policy measures in the Government's bill at stage 1, a series of interesting amendments has come to the fore. Many of those amendments genuinely enhance the package of measures that the Government has laid before the Parliament, and I am pleased to see that some—although not all—of them are included in the final bill on which we will vote later.

I was disappointed when my amendments were defeated at stage 2, in particular my amendment that sought to clarify the position regarding legal representation for tenants participating in the new tribunal process. I felt that it was important to reintroduce the amendment at stage 3, but—as I said earlier—I am satisfied, after discussions on the issue with the minister and Homeless Action Scotland, and following the minister's positive words earlier in today's proceedings, that the matter is now in hand and that a satisfactory conclusion has been reached. I am grateful to the minister for her words in that regard.

My inbox, like those of many of my colleagues, has been inundated in the past week—and even during today's debate—with emails from landlords. I understand their concerns, and there is no doubt that the majority of landlords are diligent, fair and provide a good level of service. However, there is also no doubt that a minority operate in a predatory fashion and prey upon the vulnerability of some tenants. We need to weed those people out of the sector, and I appreciate the fact that letting associations agree with that.

I had some sympathy with the proposal to introduce more secure tenancies. Had amendment 50 been agreed to, a landlord would have retained the ability to terminate a tenancy after the first six months for antisocial behaviour, the accrual of rent arrears or if the landlord had planned to change the use of the property or even use it for his or her own living accommodation. The amendment would have afforded the tenant two months' notice to vacate a property, and I believe that to be a fair compromise, given the upheaval and inconvenience caused by such an event.

Although I appreciate that many tenants in the private rented sector are struggling with unreasonably high rent increases, I could not support amendment 49, which related to rent control. The new duty that was set out in the amendment was so significant that it could not have been reasonably introduced without the sector having the opportunity to comment on it first or, for that matter, without full parliamentary scrutiny. That said, I reiterate that some people are struggling with exorbitant rent increases. The Minister for Housing and Welfare must reflect upon that and consider how she can assist with that in the future.

An important amendment that I did not lodge at stage 2 because it was not supported by any other party related to the fact that local authorities do not always use referrals under section 5 of the Homelessness etc (Scotland) Act 2003 for homeless families or individuals. I wonder whether the minister will at least keep an eye on that matter.

We had the usual SNP rhetoric about its building more houses than we built but, as Mary Fee has already pointed out, completions of social rented houses are at a lifetime low. We also heard again the change in language with regard to the 6,000—

The Presiding Officer: You must bring your remarks to a close, Mr Hume.

Jim Hume: The 6,000 socially rented houses that were promised have now become 6,000 affordable houses, and as we all know, there is quite a difference in that respect.

I welcome the passage of the bill, although I still believe—

The Presiding Officer: I am sorry, Mr Hume—your time is up.

18:42

Maureen Watt (Aberdeen South and North Kincardine) (SNP): I feel honoured to have played a part in taking the bill through Parliament, and I look forward to its being passed at decision time.

For me—and, I am sure, for many in the Parliament and in wider Scottish society—this is landmark legislation. Abolishing the right to buy social rented housing will have a very positive effect on all those involved in the sector. It will protect and enhance social housing, and it will protect the public investment that has been made in such housing over generations.

Since the right to buy was introduced, around 455,000 properties have been taken out of the social rented sector, and that continual depletion of social housing stock is unsustainable in the face of continued high levels of need for social housing in Scotland. As a representative from Shelter has said, the right to buy is like trying to fill a sink without the plug in. Moreover, David Bookbinder of the Chartered Institute of Housing in Scotland told the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee:

“The key benefit is supply. ... The certainty that abolishing right to buy will give local authorities, landlord local authorities and housing associations with regard to their strategic and business planning roles—they will know how much rental income they will have and how much stock they can use for allocations and homelessness—will be a huge benefit.”—[Official Report, Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee, 22 January 2014; c 2429.]

Removing the right to buy will give social landlords greater confidence to build new homes, and 15,500 social rented houses will be safeguarded for future generations.

As we know, many right-to-buy properties end up in the private rented sector, where the rents are higher and higher benefit claims can be made.

The protection of the social rented stock, together with the Government’s commitment to build new social housing, is welcomed by the sector. Some 30,292 housing association homes have been completed since 2007-08, which is a rise of 7 per cent on the previous seven years, and 1,324 council houses were completed in 2013-14 alone. That is a far cry from the six that were built in the last four years of the Labour-Lib Dem Administration.

Abolition of the right to buy and other aspects of the bill will increase the flexibility that social landlords have when they allocate homes to allow them to better respond to their communities’ needs and make better use of affordable rented housing.

I turn to the legislation on mobile homes. There are a number of mobile homes in my constituency and I welcome the strengthening of the protection for those who live in them. People in my area who contacted me about the legislation seemed to be content with the way in which their site was run, but I was really surprised by how little they knew about the existence of organisations that represent those who live in park homes. Many sites are well run, but there is definitive evidence of unscrupulous landlords. Giving local authorities more powers in that area is therefore very welcome. I look forward to seeing the new model standards for mobile home sites reflecting up-to-date best practice.

I cannot conclude without commenting on Labour members’ cynical stance on the bill. Mary Fee said that the abolition of the right to buy was long overdue. Labour had eight years to abolish it, but it did not do so.

James Kelly said that he spoke about rents in one of Labour’s debates in December. I cannot recall that, but why did he not therefore support Patrick Harvie’s amendment, which specifically called for rent controls? Labour members on the committee did not ask any questions of witnesses or stakeholders with whom the committee engaged during its consideration regarding rent controls.

James Kelly: Will the member give way?

The Presiding Officer: I am sorry, Mr Kelly, but the member is in her last 30 seconds.

Maureen Watt: Labour members had to wait until Ed Miliband gave them their lead from down south. Their conflation of private and public house building is typical of them, but they are not believed by the sector or, indeed, the public, who are much more savvy than Labour gives them credit for.

The Presiding Officer: You need to end, Ms Watt.

Maureen Watt: Yes. Alex Johnstone mentioned the Government’s initiatives in ensuring that the private sector and the public sector get together to build more houses.

I have great pleasure in supporting the bill.

18:47

Alex Rowley (Cowdenbeath) (Lab): I thank the minister for meeting Jim Eadie, Shelter and me, and for the positive response that we got.

I will certainly support the bill because, as Sarah Boyack and others have said, there are a number of positive measures in it, although it must be said that it would be a fairly dire situation if a housing bill that did not address some of the concerns that are out there was brought forward at this stage.

I think that it is fair to say that the bill will not be judged as something that grasped the issues of the time; nor will it be remembered for trying to tackle the many problems out there. It lacks that level of ambition. I say to Margaret Burgess that the next Labour Government that is elected to the Scottish Parliament in 2016 will cap rent increases, because that is the right thing to do. Hiding behind technicalities is not an excuse for not doing the right thing.

I remember the poverty trap in the 1980s and the 1990s and the number of people who were caught in it and therefore unable to progress, take employment and move forward. The excessive rents in the private sector now are creating that poverty trap again and holding many people back from getting into work and taking jobs that are not necessarily the best paid.
We can talk about the facts. Mary Fee mentioned the Audit Scotland report “Housing in Scotland.” The report says that one of the major challenges is a 29 per cent real-terms cut in the capital housing budget from 2008-09 to 2011-12. It also acknowledges that the number of new homes in the private sector has more than halved in recent years, despite the pressures of an ageing population.

The fact is that there are fewer affordable homes available for rent now than there were in 2008, 2010 or 2011. As Jim Hume said, we can have a bun fight over who built more houses, but to the people who come to my surgeries and the families who are homeless, it does not matter who built what. The fact is that we have a major housing crisis in every community the length and the breadth of the country but we are not making any radical proposals that would begin to tackle that. Therefore, I intend to work with Shelter over the next year or so to highlight why its policy to build 10,000 houses a year is the right one to begin to tackle the issues that are out there.

The private sector cannot solve the housing crisis; it is a flawed strategy that believes that the private rented market can tackle the housing crisis. I am not ideologically driven by public or private, but in this particular sector we need to build council and housing association housing now and at a much faster rate.

There are many families and people who are trapped in housing that is not suitable for them. Some families’ houses are massively overcrowded. I would have thought that every MSP must have a massive housing caseload and be engaged with their local authorities.

I also make the point to the minister that a lot of the housing that is being built up and down the country is being built by councils. Those councils have been quite innovative in working with tenants to raise money to build houses, so when we are giving credit for the houses that are being built, that credit should go to the local authorities.

The Presiding Officer: You need to wind up, Mr Rowley.

Alex Rowley: I will conclude, Presiding Officer, by saying that, while I support the bill, we have a housing crisis that the bill does not begin to address. That is what we need to do.

18:53

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): The private rented sector is not just a market; a tenancy agreement is not just a transaction. A home that is available for rent is not just an investment: it is someone’s home; it is where they live. That is its primary function in public policy terms—it is not an investment, it is a home.

If the private rented sector wants to continue to grow and manage more of our country’s housing stock, it must recognise that meeting someone’s housing need is not just about giving them the keys. It is a much more complex job than that. There are landlords and letting agents who get that and who understand that their responsibility to a tenant is not just to give them the keys and rake in the cash; rather, their responsibility goes much deeper than that.

It may be that we should be seeking to support and cultivate social enterprise to get involved in the private rented sector—the people and organisations who understand more than just a financial bottom line. It may be that we should be supporting the landlords and letting agents who understand the issues, but there are many—I suggest that this applies to most of them—who do not, who regard their property merely as an investment and who are not interested in meeting someone’s housing need, but simply in gaining the profit from that investment.

If we continue to see the private rented sector growing and if, at the same time, economic recovery leads again to a period of rising house prices and property values, then we are sowing the seeds of greater inequality. In the long run, people will continue to spend their money on rent that makes somebody else wealthier, and we will see rising inequality.

We need to recognise our responsibility to regulate the private rented sector for the public good, particularly at a time when so many—a growing proportion of our population—do not just spend a year or two in the private rented sector while they are a student or while they are moving from one job to another. There is an increasing proportion of people who have no other choice, for whom we have made no social housing or not enough social housing available, and for whom we have allowed economic conditions to make owner-occupation unaffordable.

There is more to welcome in the bill than the abolition of the right to buy, but I will say a few words about that. It is true that the abolition of the right to buy will deliver maximum benefit only in the context of increased investment in supply. However, the supply of social housing is not just about how much money the Scottish Government is spending from its budget each year. That is a big part of it, but it is not the whole of it. I encourage members and ministers who work on housing issues to look again at what the land reform review group had to say about the affordability and availability of land. That is crucial if we want to improve the affordability and availability of housing, and if we want to make it easier for developers, whether they are in the private sector or the social rented sector, to build more housing of the type that is needed. I encourage members to take a look at that.

There are three areas in which there is work to do and to which the Government has committed. There is security of tenure. There is also a code of practice for letting agents and, again, I welcome the clear and fixed timescale that has been committed to on that. There is also energy efficiency. There is work to do within the current term of the Scottish Parliament and opportunities to influence those pieces of work to ensure that they meet the public good, and pressure will be needed. I will continue to advocate for that pressure, and the Infrastructure and Capital Investment Committee will also have a role to play.

I have welcomed the opportunity to engage with that committee in recent weeks and months. I know that the political atmosphere is charged right now but, frankly, I was dismayed at the level of hostility on display between the two larger parties in that committee. The committee must understand that it has a responsibility to hold the Government to account, not to go in to bat for ministers. Large parties in Opposition and Government will have the responsibility to come together once our political atmosphere is less charged in a few months’ time, and find common ground on which they can work together for the common good.

18:57

Alex Johnstone: All of us in the chamber come from a diverse range of backgrounds and arrive here with political priorities that differ greatly. Our responsibility is to serve those who put us here and to serve the Scottish people as a whole.

Political principles often mean that individuals or parties in the Parliament will hold to a philosophy that sets us out on a limb. Nowhere is that more obvious than in the Conservative Party’s steadfast support for the right to buy.

Many people in Scotland aspire to own property and we have a responsibility to understand and support that where appropriate. We all agree that a house is not just a house, but a home; Patrick Harvie said that just a few moments ago. It is, however, appropriate for Scots to aspire to own the home that they live in and we should be willing to support that.

Many of us are lucky enough to be in a position to be homeowners through choice. We are able to participate in the market and use the resources that are available to us to buy our homes and live in them. That is a privilege and we should all consider ourselves lucky to have it. Should it be a privilege for only the most wealthy in our communities? We should aspire to give the right to own their home to everyone in society who is willing to make the necessary sacrifice to achieve that objective.

This Government appears to understand that. It has gone some way towards introducing shared equity schemes and other opportunities that will allow people to become home owners. However, the problem is that, as yet, we have failed to find an alternative way to enable that objective to be achieved on the scale of the right to buy.

Many people who used the first right to buy were long-term tenants. As we have seen from the figures that are available from last year, the vast majority of those who continue to seek to exercise their right to buy are, themselves, long-term tenants. By ending the right to buy, we free up very few houses, and we end the opportunity for many to become home owners.

It is an essential part of our responsibility to ensure that we do not miss the opportunity to enable people to aspire to property ownership. The Minister for Housing and Welfare has, in recent speeches in the chamber, talked about the need to ensure that people can accrue wealth. For many, the only opportunity to accrue wealth in a modern society is to borrow against the value of a house and then pay it up over time.

We need to make mortgages more affordable and make the opportunity to buy homes more available to those on lower incomes.

The Conservative Party, through its support for the right to buy, has changed the dynamic of Scottish housing. It has turned us into a country in which we are home owners, not simply home renters. It has turned us into a country in which people aspire to improve themselves.

There is much that is good in the bill—although less than there was when it was published at stage 1. However, as a result of this Government’s decision to use the bill to end the right to buy, the Conservatives will vote against it at decision time.

19:02

James Kelly (Rutherglen) (Lab): In her initial remarks, the Labour Party’s Mary Fee said that we will be supporting the bill at decision time, in recognition of the fact that some of the issues that are addressed in the bill will improve the housing sector and help us to make progress. However, Mary Fee and Alex Rowley also gave an accurate portrayal of some of the issues that are faced in housing in Scotland: the pressures that exist in relation to supply, the consequences of that in terms of a lack of affordable housing, and the impact of the growth of the private sector on rent levels that people are having to endure. There are wider issues that need to be addressed, aside from the issues with which the bill deals.

I was a bit disappointed by the process around the passage of the bill. I feel that Labour interacted quite positively with the bill. We lodged an awful lot of amendments that were, on the whole, rejected. Listening to the minister during the course of the debate, I was struck by the fact that we have a plethora of consultations and working groups. The minister herself said that the Government's housing strategy was launched in February 2011, which means that it has taken three years for the bill to come to fruition. We seem to have a lot of talking shops, but what people really need on the ground is action and practical support.

The bill's headline issue, which the Government wants to promote, is abolition of the right to buy. We have supported that; it is the right thing to do. However, I do not think that abolishing the right to buy will have the grand consequences that the Government envisages. The figure that Maureen Watt quoted—15,500 social rented houses being safeguarded over 10 years—is welcome, but when we have 155,000 people on social housing waiting lists, its impact will be minimal.

As for action on letting agents and landlords, a number of members have spoken about the growth in the private rented sector, which means that proper regulation is needed. Many letting agents and landlords are responsible, but there are a number of unscrupulous individuals, which is why proper regulation is needed. The bill will improve the situation, but if some amendments that were not agreed to had been taken on board, the bill could have improved it more.

A similar point is true of the measures on maintenance plans, which Sarah Boyack raised, and on electrical safety. Such provisions could have been strengthened.

I was disappointed that the Government did not accept my amendments to control rent increases and to introduce longer and more stable tenancies. I was particularly disappointed because between stages 2 and 3 I changed my amendments to give the Scottish ministers more time. I was looking for the Government to lay regulations by April 2015, which would have given it nearly 10 months to work up proposals. I thought that that was a reasonable way forward; the response that the task would be too onerous or too difficult is not satisfactory.

In such debates, members always trade a lot of statistics to back up their arguments—I acknowledge that I do it, too. However, in a lot of ways, I do not need to look at the statistics on housing. I can look at the area that I grew up in, which I am lucky enough to represent and where I still stay. Almost weekly, I see people at my surgeries who stay in overcrowded accommodation and who cannot access adequate housing. I see houses that have been in my constituency since before I was born and that are falling into disrepair but where people still stay. We have problems with people getting on the housing ladder, accessing social housing and living in inadequate accommodation.

The Presiding Officer: Can you bring your remarks to a close?

James Kelly: The challenge for the Government and all political parties is to come up with a plan for housing that addresses the supply issues and which does something for people who do not stay in good-quality accommodation and who are struggling to find a house. We all have a responsibility to improve the lives of our constituents and people throughout Scotland. We should bear that in mind when we bring forward legislation and plans for housing.

19:08

Margaret Burgess: We have had a lot of consensus throughout the debate, although we still disagree on some issues. I reiterate that I appreciate stakeholders' support for the bill. I say to James Kelly that that is not about talking shops; we talk to and listen to our stakeholders. We worked up the bill in consultation with and along with them, which is why many aspects of the bill have so much stakeholder support. That is an important point.

James Kelly: In all the discussions with stakeholders, were excessive rent levels and the length and security of tenure raised with the Government?

Margaret Burgess: I said when I was speaking to amendments that, during the discussions, rent levels were not raised with us, other than by Patrick Harvie. Shelter Scotland mentioned security of tenure early on, but the bill had progressed through a stage by then. We discussed the issue, which is why we set up the review group to look at the tenancy regime in the private sector. The group is not a talking shop. It is chaired by Douglas Robertson and its 18 stakeholder members include representatives from landlords associations, letting associations, the Chartered Institute of Housing, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Council of Mortgage Lenders, the Scottish Property Federation, Shelter Scotland, Homeless Action Scotland and Edinburgh private tenants action group. The group came together to discuss the tenancy regime, and I have said today that we will take forward its recommendations. We will consult in the autumn, and as part of that we will look at rent levels.
Alex Rowley and Mary Fee also talked about capping rents. I say to them that we are absolutely keeping rent levels under review. We are aware that rising rents are an issue in parts of Scotland—in particular in Aberdeen. I repeat that it is important to be clear about the nature and scale of the problem and the options for addressing it, so that we can be sure that action that we take has a positive outcome and does not have unintended consequences. I stand by that.

The Joseph Rowntree Foundation recently reported that households in Scotland spend a smaller share of their income on housing than households in England. In the same report, the foundation said that poverty rates in Scotland are lower than they are in England, across all housing tenures. However, the Scottish Government is not complacent about the matter. That is why we continue to support affordable and mid-market rents and to work with the house building industry to increase institutional investment in building new homes for private rent.

That is the right way to take on an issue of the magnitude of the one that James Kelly talked about. It is right to consult and take evidence from stakeholders, to work up proposals and to bring them to Parliament for full scrutiny. That is what we intend to do, and it is the right approach, as opposed to parachuting in proposals at stage 2 of a bill. If we tried to give the Scottish ministers more powers, James Kelly would criticise us for doing so, but the right to buy has had its day in Scotland, and I think that all parties support us on that except, of course, the Conservatives. That does not surprise me.

This bill will introduce other landmark measures, such as tribunals for the private rented sector, which will ensure that there is fair and easy access to justice in the private sector. That is new and it is a landmark. It is something that we have been asked to do for some time. We have worked the measure out. It is a very important thing, which tenants will very much appreciate.

Regulation of letting agents is another landmark. It was good to get the support of the letting industry and landlords organisations for the measure. We got that because we worked together with them. We listened to what they had to say and took some of it on board, but we made it absolutely clear from the outset that we intended to regulate and that our regulation would have teeth. That is what we will do. When we work out the code of guidance our view on that will not change. The regulators of the private sector will have teeth. The private sector welcomes that as well, because it does not—

The Presiding Officer: Can you bring your remarks to a close, minister?

Margaret Burgess: Sorry, Presiding Officer.

I ask members to support the bill. We have done something today that we should all be proud of. We have got there by working together, and I hope that that continues.
Decision Time

19:17

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): There are three questions to be put as a result of today’s business.

The first question is, that motion S4M-10438, in the name of Margaret Burgess, on the Housing (Scotland) Bill, be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

For
Adam, George (Paisley) (SNP)
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Allan, Dr Alasdair (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP)
Allard, Christian (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Baillie, Jackie (Dumbarton) (Lab)
Baxter, Jayne (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Beattie, Colin (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP)
Biagi, Marco (Edinburgh Central) (SNP)
Bibby, Neil (West Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Brodie, Chic (South Scotland) (SNP)
Brown, Keith (Clackmannanshire and Dunblane) (SNP)
Burgess, Margaret (Cunninghame South) (SNP)
Campbell, Aileen (Clydesdale) (SNP)
Chisholm, Malcolm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Crawford, Bruce (Stirling) (SNP)
Cunningham, Roseanna (Perthshire South and Kinross-shire) (SNP)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP)
Doris, Bob (Glasgow) (SNP)
Dornan, James (Glasgow Cathcart) (SNP)
Eadie, Jim (Edinburgh Southern) (SNP)
Ewing, Annabelle (Mid Scotland and Fife) (SNP)
Fabiani, Linda (East Kilbride) (SNP)
Fee, Mary (West Scotland) (Lab)
Findlay, Neil (Lothian) (Lab)
FitzPatrick, Joe (Dundee City West) (SNP)
Gibson, Kenneth (Cunninghame North) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Grahame, Christine (Midlothian South, Tweeddale and Lauderdale) (SNP)
Grant, Rhoda (Highlands and Islands) (Lab)
Gray, Iain (East Lothian) (Lab)
Griffin, Mark (Central Scotland) (Lab)
Harvie, Patrick (Glasgow) (Green)
Henry, Hugh (Renfrewshire South) (Lab)
Hepburn, Jamie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
Ingram, Adam (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP)
Johnstone, Alison (Lothian) (Green)
Keir, Colin (Edinburgh Western) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Rutherglen) (Lab)
Kidd, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (SNP)
Lochhead, Richard (Moray) (SNP)
Lyle, Richard (Central Scotland) (SNP)
MacAskill, Kenny (Edinburgh Eastern) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
MacDonald, Gordon (Edinburgh Pentlands) (SNP)
Macdonald, Lewis (North East Scotland) (Lab)
The Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 93, Against 12, Abstentions 0.

Motion agreed to,

That the Parliament agrees that the Housing (Scotland) Bill be passed.
CONTENTS

PART 1

RIGHT TO BUY

1. Abolition of the right to buy
2. Amendment of right to buy provisions

PART 2

SOCIAL HOUSING

Allocation of social housing
3. Reasonable preference in allocation of social housing
4. Rules on priority of allocation of housing: consultation
6. Factors which may be considered in allocation: ownership of property
7. Determination of minimum period for application to remain in force

Short Scottish secure tenancy
8. Creation of short Scottish secure tenancy: antisocial behaviour
9. Grant of short Scottish secure tenancy: homeowners
10. Short Scottish secure tenancy: term
11. Short Scottish secure tenancy: extension of term
12. Short Scottish secure tenancy: recovery of possession

Scottish secure tenancy
13. Assignation, sublet and joint tenancy of Scottish secure tenancy
14. Succession to Scottish secure tenancy
15. Grounds for eviction: antisocial behaviour
16. Recovery of possession of properties designed for special needs

PART 3

PRIVATE RENTED HOUSING

Transfer of sheriff’s jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal
17. Regulated and assured tenancies etc.
18. Repairing standard
19. Right to adapt rented houses
20. Landlord registration
21. Houses in multiple occupation
Landlord registration: time limit for determining application
22 Landlord registration: time limit for determining application

Repairing standard
22A Carbon monoxide alarms
22B Electrical safety inspections
22C Power to modify repairing standard etc.

Enforcement of repairing standard
23 Third party application in respect of the repairing standard
24 Procedure for third party applications
25 Appeals in relation to third party applications

Private rented housing: Enhanced Enforcement Areas
25A Private rented housing: Enhanced Enforcement Areas

PART 4
LETTING AGENTS

Inclusion in the register
26 Register of letting agents
27 Application for registration
28 Offence of providing false information in an application
29 Decision on application
29A Time limit for determining application
30 Fit and proper person considerations
31A Fit and proper person: criminal record information

Duties of registered letting agents
32 Letting agent registration number
33 Duty to inform: change of circumstances

Removal from the register
34 Duration of registration
35 Revocation of registration
35A Removal from register on application

Appeals
36 Appeals

Consequences of refusal or removal
37 Note on register where refusal or removal
38 No payment for letting agency work where refusal or removal

Offences where no registration
39 Offence of operating as a letting agent without registration
40 Offence of using a registration number where no registration

Code of practice
41 Letting Agent Code of Practice
42 Prohibition on contracting out

Letting agent enforcement orders
43 Applications to First-tier Tribunal to enforce code of practice
44 Variation and revocation of enforcement orders
45 Failure to comply with enforcement order
46 Enforcement orders: offence

Monitoring of compliance
46A Power to obtain information
46B Power to carry out inspections
46C Warrants for entry
46D Inspections: supplemental
46E Information and inspection: offence

General
47 Transfer of jurisdiction of actions involving letting agents
48 Offences by bodies corporate etc.
49 Delegation of functions relating to the register
50 Landlord registration where agent is a registered letting agent
51 Meaning of letting agency work
52 Interpretation of Part 4

PART 5
MOBILE HOME SITES WITH PERMANENT RESIDENTS

General application
53 Licensing of sites for permanent residents

Part 1A site licence
54 Relevant permanent site application
55 Issue, renewal, transfer and transmission of a Part 1A site licence
56 Duration of a Part 1A site licence
57 Duty to inform local authority where change
58 Revocation of a Part 1A site licence: fit and proper person
59 Appeals relating to a Part 1A site licence
60 Power to make provision in relation to procedure and appeals

Fit and proper persons
61 Fit and proper person considerations
62 Fit and proper person: criminal conviction certificate
62A Fit and proper person: information sharing

Offences relating to relevant permanent sites
63 Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

Local authority enforcement at relevant permanent sites
64 Improvement notices
65 Penalty notices
66 Appointment of interim manager
67 Emergency action
68 Powers of entry
69 Recovery of inspection and enforcement expenses

Miscellaneous

69A Offences by bodies corporate etc. under Part 1A of the 1960 Act
70 Part 1A of the 1960 Act: miscellaneous provision
71 Transitional provision for existing site licences
71A Agreements to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 applies

PART 6

PRIVATE HOUSING CONDITIONS

72 Tenement management scheme
72A Notice of potential liability for costs: notice of discharge
73 Work notices
74 Maintenance orders
75 Maintenance plans
76 Non-residential premises: repayment charges
76ZA Repayment charges: recovery of repayable amount
76A Charging orders

PART 7

MISCELLANEOUS

77 Right to redeem heritable security after 20 years: power to exempt
77A First-tier Tribunal: disqualification of members from exercise of certain functions
77B Private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership
78 Delegation of certain functions
79 Scottish Housing Regulator: transfer of assets following inquiries
79A Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body
80 Repeal of defective designation provisions

PART 8

GENERAL

81 Interpretation
82 Subordinate legislation
83 Ancillary provision
84 Minor and consequential amendments
85 Commencement
86 Short title

Schedule 1—Transfer of jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal
  Part 1—Regulated tenancies, Part VII contracts and assured tenancies
  Part 2—Repairing standard
  Part 3—Right to adapt rented houses
  Part 4—Landlord registration
Schedule 2—Minor and consequential amendments
Housing (Scotland) Bill

[AS PASSED]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision about housing, including provision about the abolition of the right to buy, social housing, the law affecting private housing, the regulation of letting agents and the licensing of sites for mobile homes.

PART 1

RIGHT TO BUY

1 Abolition of the right to buy
(1) Sections 61 to 81, 84 and 84A of the 1987 Act (right to buy provisions) are repealed.
(2) Section 52 of the 2001 Act (reports on right to buy) is repealed.
(3) Sections 145 to 147 of the 2010 Act (duties to collect information in relation to right to buy) are repealed.

2 Amendment of right to buy provisions
In the 1987 Act—
(a) in section 61ZA(1) (limitation on the right to purchase: new tenants), after “occupation” insert “as a tenant”, and
(b) in section 61F (limitation on the right to purchase: new supply social housing), repeal the words “created before the relevant day” in each place where they occur.

PART 2

SOCIAL HOUSING

Allocation of social housing

3 Reasonable preference in allocation of social housing
In section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing), for subsection (1) substitute—
“(1) A social landlord must, in relation to all houses held by it for housing purposes, secure that in the selection of its tenants a reasonable preference is given to the persons mentioned in subsection (1ZA).

(1ZA) The persons are—

(a) persons who—

(i) subject to subsection (1A), are homeless persons and persons threatened with homelessness (within the meaning of Part 2), and

(ii) have unmet housing needs,

(b) persons who—

(i) are living under unsatisfactory housing conditions, and

(ii) have unmet housing needs,

(c) tenants of houses which—

(i) are held by a social landlord, and

(ii) the social landlord selecting its tenants considers to be under-occupied.

(1ZB) For the purposes of subsection (1ZA), persons have unmet housing needs where the social landlord considers the persons to have housing needs which are not capable of being met by housing options which are available.”.

4 Rules on priority of allocation of housing: consultation

(1) After section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing), insert—

“20A Rules on priority of allocation of housing: consultation

(1) Before making or altering its rules governing the priority of allocation of houses, a social landlord must—

(a) consult the persons mentioned in subsection (2), and

(b) prepare and publish a report on the consultation.

(2) The persons are—

(a) applicants on its housing list (within the meaning of section 19),

(b) tenants of the landlord,

(c) bodies for the time being registered in the register of tenant organisations maintained by the landlord under section 53(3) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10), and

(d) such other persons as the landlord thinks fit.

(3) A social landlord may publish a consultation report mentioned in subsection (1)(b) in such manner as it thinks fit (and may in particular publish a joint report with any other social landlord).”.

(2) In section 21 of the 1987 Act, after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) In making or altering its rules governing the priority of allocation of houses, a social landlord must have regard to—
Part 2—Social housing

(a) any local housing strategy (within the meaning of section 89(1)(b) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001) for its area, and

(b) any guidance published by the Scottish Ministers.

(3AA) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (3A), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(3B) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe persons of a description or type who a social landlord must include in its rules governing the priority of allocation of houses.

(3C) Regulations under subsection (3B) are subject to the affirmative procedure.”.

(3) The title of section 21 of the 1987 Act becomes “Rules relating to the housing list and transfer of tenants”.

6 Factors which may be considered in allocation: ownership of property

(1) In section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing), for subsection (2)(a)(viii) substitute—

“(viii) where any of the circumstances in subsection (2C) apply to that person, the ownership of, or value of, heritable property owned by—

(A) the applicant,
(B) a person who normally resides with the applicant, or
(C) a person who it is proposed will reside with the applicant.”.

(2) After subsection (2B) insert—

“(2C) The circumstances are that—

(a) in the case of a property which has not been let, the owner cannot secure entry to that property,
(b) it is probable that occupation of the property will lead to abuse (within the meaning of the Protection from Abuse (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 14)) from some other person residing in that property,
(c) it is probable that occupation of it will lead to abuse (within the meaning of that Act) from some other person who previously resided with that person, whether in that property or elsewhere,
(d) occupation of the property may endanger the health of the occupants and there are no reasonable steps which can be taken by the applicant to prevent that danger.”.

7 Determination of minimum period for application to remain in force

(1) In section 20 of the 1987 Act (persons to have priority on housing list and allocation of housing)—

(a) in subsection (2)(a)(iii), at the beginning insert “except to the extent permitted by section 20B,“., and

(b) in subsection (2)(b)(i), at the beginning insert “except to the extent permitted by section 20B,”.
(2) After section 20A of the 1987 Act (inserted by section 4(1)), insert—

20B Determination of minimum period for application to remain in force

(1) A social landlord may impose a requirement that an application must have remained in force for a minimum period before the applicant is eligible for the allocation of housing falling within section 20(1) if, before making that application, any of the circumstances mentioned—

(a) in subsection (5) applied in relation to the applicant, or

(b) in paragraphs (a) to (g) of subsection (5) applied in relation to a person who it is proposed will reside with the applicant.

(2) But a social landlord may not impose a requirement under subsection (1) if the landlord—

(a) in relation to the same application has previously relied on the same circumstance as it applied to an applicant or a person who it is proposed will reside with the applicant to impose a requirement under subsection (1), or

(b) is a local authority and has a duty to the applicant under section 31(2) (duty to secure accommodation where applicant is homeless).

(3) In considering whether to impose a requirement under subsection (1), a social landlord must have regard to any guidance about this section (including the matters mentioned in subsection (4)) published by the Scottish Ministers.

(3A) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (3), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe—

(a) the maximum period preceding the application which a social landlord may consider in relation to any circumstances mentioned in subsection (5),

(b) the maximum period for an application to have remained in force which a social landlord may impose in relation to any circumstances mentioned in subsection (5), and such regulations may make different provision for different cases.

(5) The circumstances are—

(a) the person has—

(i) acted in an antisocial manner in relation to another person residing in, visiting or otherwise engaged in lawful activity in the locality of a house occupied by the person,

(ii) pursued a course of conduct amounting to harassment of such other person, or a course of conduct which is otherwise antisocial conduct in relation to such other person, or

(iii) acted in an antisocial manner, or pursued a course of conduct which is antisocial conduct, in relation to an employee of the social landlord in the course of making the application,

(b) the person has been, or has resided with a person who has been, convicted of—
(i) using a house or allowing it to be used for immoral or illegal purposes, or
(ii) an offence punishable by imprisonment which was committed in, or in the locality of, a house occupied by the person,

(c) an order for recovery of possession has been made against the person in proceedings under—
   (i) the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 (S.I. 1983/1118),
   (ii) the Housing Act 1985 (c.68),
   (iii) this Act,
   (iv) the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (c.43),
   (v) the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10),

(d) the person’s tenancy has been terminated by the landlord under section 18(2) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (repossession where abandoned tenancy),

(e) the person’s interest in a tenancy has been terminated by the landlord under section 20(3) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (abandonment by joint tenant),

(f) in relation to a house where the person was a tenant, a court has ordered recovery of possession on the ground set out in paragraph 3 or 4 of schedule 2 to the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001,

(g) there is or was any outstanding liability (for payment of rent or otherwise) in relation to a house which—
   (i) is attributable to the person’s tenancy of the house, and
   (ii) either—
      (A) section 20(2A) would not be satisfied in respect of that debt, or
      (B) in the case of a debt which is no longer outstanding, section 20(2A) would not have been satisfied at any time while that debt remained outstanding,

(h) the person knowingly or recklessly made a false statement in any application for housing held by a social landlord,

(i) the person has refused one or more offers of housing falling within section 20(1) and the landlord considers the refusal of that number of offers to be unreasonable.

(6) In subsection (5)—

“antisocial”, in relation to an action or course of conduct, means causing or likely to cause alarm, distress, nuisance or annoyance,

“conduct” includes speech, and a course of conduct must involve conduct on at least two occasions, and

“harassment” is to be construed in accordance with section 8 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 (c.40).
(7) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations modify subsections (5) and (6).

(7A) After the social landlord imposes a requirement under subsection (1) (whether or not previously varied under this subsection), it may—

(a) withdraw the requirement, or

(b) vary the requirement in order to shorten the period imposed for the application to have remained in force.

(8) An applicant may by summary application appeal to the sheriff against any decision of a social landlord under subsection (1).

(9) Regulations under subsection (4) and under subsection (7) are subject to the affirmative procedure.”.

Short Scottish secure tenancy

8 Creation of short Scottish secure tenancy: antisocial behaviour

(1) In section 34 of the 2001 Act (short Scottish secure tenancies)—

(a) in subsection (7), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”, and

(b) after subsection (8), insert—

“(9) A landlord must have regard to any guidance published by the Scottish Ministers—

(a) before creating a tenancy which is a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of section 35 or paragraph 1, 2 or 2A of schedule 6, and

(b) when taking any steps in relation to such a tenancy with a view to—

(i) extending the term of the tenancy under section 35A, or

(ii) raising proceedings for the recovery of possession of the house under section 36.

(10) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (9), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.”.

(2) In section 35 of the 2001 Act (conversion to a short Scottish secure tenancy)—

(a) for subsection (2) substitute—

“(2) The landlord may serve a notice under subsection (3) only where—

(a) the tenant (or any one of joint tenants) or a person residing or lodging with, or a subtenant of, the tenant is subject to an antisocial behaviour order under—

(i) section 234AA of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), or

(ii) section 4 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8), or

(b) the tenant (or any one of joint tenants), a person residing or lodging with, or a subtenant of, the tenant, or a person visiting the house has, within the period of 3 years preceding the date of service of the notice—
(i) acted in an antisocial manner in relation to another person residing in, visiting or otherwise engaged in lawful activity in the locality of a house occupied by the person, or

(ii) pursued a course of conduct amounting to harassment of such other person, or a course of conduct which is otherwise antisocial conduct in relation to such other person.”,

(aa) in subsection (3)—

(i) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (b) is repealed,

(ii) in paragraph (b), after “order” insert “or, as the case may be, has behaved as described in subsection (2)(b)”, and

(iii) after paragraph (b), insert—

“(c) if the notice is served under subsection (2)(b), specify—

(i) the actions of the tenant or other person which the landlord has taken into account, and

(ii) the landlord’s reasons for serving the notice, and

(d) explain the right of appeal conferred by subsection (5).”, and

(b) after subsection (6), insert—

“(7) In this section—

“antisocial”, in relation to an action or course of conduct, means causing or likely to cause alarm, distress, nuisance or annoyance,

“conduct” includes speech, and a course of conduct must involve conduct on at least two occasions, and

“harassment” is to be construed in accordance with section 8 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 (c.40).”.

(3) In section 37(1) of the 2001 Act (conversion to Scottish secure tenancy), in paragraph (a) for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.

(4) In schedule 6 to the 2001 Act (grounds for granting short Scottish secure tenancy)—

(a) after paragraph 2 insert—

“Other antisocial behaviour

2A (1) A person mentioned in sub-paragraph (2) has, within the period of 3 years preceding the date of service of the notice—

(a) acted in an antisocial manner in relation to another person residing in, visiting or otherwise engaged in lawful activity in the locality of a house occupied by the prospective tenant or by a person who it is proposed will reside with the prospective tenant, or

(b) pursued a course of conduct amounting to harassment of such other person, or a course of conduct which is otherwise antisocial conduct in relation to such other person.

(2) The persons are—

(a) the prospective tenant,

(b) any one of prospective joint tenants,
(c) a person visiting a house occupied by the prospective tenant or by a person who it is proposed will reside with the prospective tenant, and
(d) a person who it is proposed will reside with the prospective tenant.

(3) In sub-paragraph (1)—
“antisocial”, in relation to an action or course of conduct, means causing or likely to cause alarm, distress, nuisance or annoyance,
“conduct” includes speech, and a course of conduct must involve conduct on at least two occasions, and
“harassment” is to be construed in accordance with section 8 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 (c.40).”, and

(b) for paragraph 6 substitute—
“Accommodation for person in receipt of housing support
6 The house is to be let expressly on a temporary basis to a person—
(a) to whom no other paragraph of this schedule applies, and
(b) who is in receipt of a housing support service.”.

(5) In section 31(5) of the 1987 Act (permanent accommodation where duty to secure accommodation for persons found to be homeless), in paragraph (c) for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.

9 Grant of short Scottish secure tenancy: homeowners
In schedule 6 to the 2001 Act (grounds for granting short Scottish secure tenancy), after paragraph 7 insert—
“Temporary letting where other property owned
7A(1) The house is to be let expressly on a temporary basis to a person pending the making of arrangements in relation to a property mentioned in sub-paragraph (2) which will allow the person’s housing needs to be met.
(2) The property is heritable property owned by the person or a person who it is proposed will reside with that person.”.

10 Short Scottish secure tenancy: term
(1) In section 34 of the 2001 Act (short Scottish secure tenancies)—
(a) after subsection (5), insert—
“(5A) Subsection (5) does not apply to a tenancy mentioned in subsection (6A).”,
(b) after subsection (6) insert—
“(6A) A tenancy which is a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of section 35 or paragraph 1, 2 or 2A of schedule 6 has a term of 12 months from the day on which the tenancy is granted.”.

(2) In section 35 of the 2001 Act (conversion to short Scottish secure tenancy)—
(a) after subsection (3) insert—
“(3A) A short Scottish secure tenancy created by virtue of this section has a term of 12 months from the day on which the landlord serves a notice under subsection (3),”.

(b) for subsection (4), substitute—

“(4) Where a tenancy becomes a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of this section—

(a) subsection (5) of section 34 does not apply to the tenancy, but

(b) otherwise subsection (6) of that section does apply to the tenancy.”.

(3) In section 37 of the 2001 Act (conversion to Scottish secure tenancy), after subsection (4) insert—

“(5) Subsection (6) applies to a tenancy which—

(a) became a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of section 35, and

(b) becomes a Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of this section.

(6) The term of the tenancy is the term which applied immediately before the tenancy became a short Scottish secure tenancy.”.

11 Short Scottish secure tenancy: extension of term

(1) After section 35 of the 2001 Act, insert—

“35A Extension of term of short Scottish secure tenancy

(1) The landlord under a tenancy which is a short Scottish secure tenancy by virtue of section 35 or paragraph 1, 2 or 2A of schedule 6 may extend the term of that tenancy by 6 months from the day which would otherwise be the day of expiry of the tenancy.

(2) Such an extension may not be made unless—

(a) the tenant is in receipt of housing support services, and

(b) the landlord has, on or before the day which is 2 months before the day which would otherwise be the day of expiry of the tenancy, served on the tenant a notice informing the tenant of—

(i) the extension, and

(ii) the reasons for the extension.

(3) A landlord may not give a notice if the landlord has previously given a notice under subsection (2) in relation to that short Scottish secure tenancy.”.

(2) In section 37 of the 2001 Act (conversion to Scottish secure tenancy)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) the words “, in the period of 12 months following the creation of the tenancy,” are repealed,

(ii) after “36(2)” insert “before the expiry of the relevant period”, and

(iii) for “that” substitute “the relevant”,

(b) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) In this section, the “relevant period” is—
(a) the period of 12 months following the creation of the tenancy, or
(b) if an extension notice has been served under section 35A, the period of 18 months following the creation of the tenancy.”.

(c) in subsection (2)—

(i) for “period of 12 months following the creation of the tenancy” substitute “relevant period”, and
(ii) for “that period of 12 months”, in both places where it occurs, substitute
“the relevant period”.

12 Short Scottish secure tenancy: recovery of possession

In section 36 of the 2001 Act (recovery of possession)—

(a) in subsection (2), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) in the case of a short Scottish secure tenancy created by virtue of section 35 or paragraph 1, 2 or 2A of schedule 6, the landlord considers that any obligation of the tenancy has been broken,”,

(b) in subsection (3), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) state the reason why the landlord is seeking recovery of possession (including, in a case where subsection (2)(aa) applies, the obligations which the landlord considers to have been broken),”,

(c) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) A tenant may, before the end of the period of 14 days beginning with the day of service of a notice under subsection (2), apply to the landlord for a review of a decision to seek recovery of possession of the house which is the subject of the tenancy.

(4B) If an application for a review under subsection (4A) is made, the landlord must, before the day specified in the notice by virtue of subsection (3)(b)—

(a) confirm its decision to seek recovery of possession or withdraw its notice under subsection (2),
(b) notify the tenant of its decision on the review, and
(c) where its decision on the review is to confirm the decision to seek recovery of possession, notify the tenant of the reasons.

(4C) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision about the procedure to be followed in connection with a review following an application under subsection (4A).”,

(ca) in subsection (5)(a), after “34(5)” insert “or, in a case where subsection (2)(aa) applies, the end of the term applicable to the tenancy in accordance with section 34(6A), 35(3A) or 35A(1)”,

(d) in subsection (7), after “16” insert “, but subject to the modification mentioned in subsection (8)”, and

(e) after subsection (7), insert—
“(8) In relation to the recovery of possession of the house which is the subject of a short Scottish secure tenancy, section 14(4) is to be read as if for paragraph (b) there were substituted—

“(b) a date, not earlier than 4 weeks from the date of service of the notice on or after which the landlord may raise proceedings for recovery of possession,”.

13 Assignation, sublet and joint tenancy of Scottish secure tenancy

(1) In section 11 of the 2001 Act (Scottish secure tenancy)—

(a) in subsection (6), the words “, or is intended to be,” are repealed, and

(b) after subsection (6) insert

“(6A) An application under subsection (5) may be made only where the house in question has been the only or principal home of the person falling within subsection (6) throughout the period of 12 months ending with the date of the application.

(6B) For the purposes of subsection (6A) a period may be considered in relation to a person only if, at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(a) the person, or

(b) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given,

that the house in question was the person’s only or principal home.”.

(2) In section 32 of the 2001 Act (assignation, subletting, etc.)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (b) is repealed,

(ii) in paragraph (b), after “been” insert “the tenant’s and”,

(iii) in paragraph (b), for “6” substitute “12”, and

(iv) after paragraph (b), insert “

“(c) in the case of a sublet, only where the house has been the tenant’s only or principal home throughout the period of 12 months ending with the date of the application for the landlord’s consent to the sublet under paragraph 9 of schedule 5.”,

(b) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) For the purposes of an assignation mentioned in subsection (1)(b), a period may be considered in relation to a person only if—

(a) the person was the tenant of the house throughout that period, or

(b) at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(i) the person, or

(ii) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given,
that the house in question was the person’s only or principal home.

(1B) For the purposes of a sublet mentioned in subsection (1)(c), a period may be considered in relation to a tenant only if—

(a) the tenant was the tenant of the house throughout that period, or

(b) at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(a) the tenant, or

(b) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given, that the house in question was the tenant’s only or principal home.”, and

(c) in subsection (3)—

(i) the word “or” immediately preceding paragraph (e) is repealed, and

(ii) after paragraph (e), insert—

“(f) in the case of consent to an assignation by a local authority or a registered social landlord, if the proposed assignee is not a person to whom that local authority or registered social landlord would give a reasonable preference when selecting tenants under section 20(1) of the 1987 Act, or

(g) in the case of consent to an assignation, if the assignation would in the opinion of the landlord, result in the house being under-occupied.”.

14 Succession to Scottish secure tenancy

In schedule 3 to the 2001 Act (succession to Scottish secure tenancy: qualified persons)—

(a) in paragraph 2(2), for “6” insert “12”,

(b) in paragraph 3, for “at the time of” substitute “throughout the period of 12 months ending with”,

(c) in paragraph 4(b), for “at the time of” substitute “throughout the period of 12 months ending with”, and

(d) after paragraph 4, insert—

“Only or principal home

4A For the purposes of paragraph 2, 3 or 4 a period may be considered in relation to a person only if, at any time before that period began, the landlord was notified by—

(a) the person, or

(b) any other person who was the tenant of the house in question when the notice was given,

that the house in question was the person’s only or principal home.”.

15 Grounds for eviction: antisocial behaviour

(1) In section 14 of the 2001 Act (proceedings for possession), after subsection (2A) insert—
“(2B) Where such proceedings are to include a ground for recovery of possession set out in paragraph 2 of schedule 2, the landlord must have regard to any guidance published by the Scottish Ministers before raising such proceedings in relation to recovering possession of the house.

(2C) Before publishing any guidance mentioned in subsection (2B), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.”.

(2) In section 16 of the 2001 Act (powers of court in possession proceedings)—

(a) in subsection (2), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) whether or not paragraph (a) applies, that—

(i) the landlord has a ground for recovery of possession set out in paragraph 2 of that schedule and so specified, and

(ii) the landlord served the notice under section 14(2) before the day which is 12 months after—

(A) the day on which the person was convicted of the offence forming the ground for recovery of possession, or

(B) where that conviction was appealed, the day on which the appeal is dismissed or abandoned,”; and

(b) after subsection (3), insert—

“(3A) Subsection (2) does not affect any other rights that the tenant may have by virtue of any other enactment or rule of law.”.

16 Recovery of possession of properties designed for special needs

In schedule 2 to the 2001 Act (grounds for recovery of possession of house)—

(a) in paragraph 11(a), the words “longer a” are repealed, and

(b) in paragraph 12(a), the words “longer a” are repealed.

PART 3

PRIVATE RENTED HOUSING

Transfer of sheriff’s jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal

17 Regulated and assured tenancies etc.

(1) The functions and jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to actions arising from the following tenancies and occupancy agreements are transferred to the First-tier Tribunal—

(a) a regulated tenancy (within the meaning of section 8 of the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 (c.58)),

(b) a Part VII contract (within the meaning of section 63 of that Act),

(c) an assured tenancy (within the meaning of section 12 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (c.43)).

(2) But that does not include any function or jurisdiction relating to the prosecution of, or the imposition of a penalty for, a criminal offence.
(3) Part 1 of schedule 1 makes minor and consequential amendments.

18 Repairing standard

(1) The 2006 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 18—

(a) in subsection (1), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in subsection (2)(b), for “sheriff” substitute “Tribunal”.

(3) The title of section 18 becomes “Contracting out with consent of First-tier Tribunal”.

(4) In section 57—

(a) in subsection (2), for “sheriff” substitute “relevant authority”,

(b) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) In subsection (2), the relevant authority is—

(a) where the requirement or thing which the person is authorised or entitled to do relates to the repairing standard, the First-tier Tribunal,

(b) in any other case, the sheriff.”.

(5) Part 2 of schedule 1 makes minor and consequential amendments.

19 Right to adapt rented houses

(1) After section 66 of the 2006 Act insert—

“66A Appeals in relation to section 52

(1) A tenant aggrieved by a decision by a landlord—

(a) to impose any condition on a consent to carry out work in pursuance of section 52(2), or

(b) to refuse to consent to the carrying out of any such work, may appeal to the First-tier Tribunal within 6 months of being notified of that decision.

(2) The First-tier Tribunal may, on cause shown, hear an appeal after the deadline set by subsection (1).

(3) The First-tier Tribunal must, unless the Tribunal considers the condition or, as the case may be, refusal appealed against to be reasonable, determine an appeal under subsection (1) by quashing the decision and directing the landlord to withdraw the condition (or to vary it in such manner as the Tribunal may specify) or, as the case may be, to consent to the application (with or without such conditions as the Tribunal may specify).

(4) In determining whether a condition or refusal appealed against under subsection (1) is reasonable, the First-tier Tribunal must, where the appeal relates to an application made for the purposes of section 52(2)(a), have regard to any code of practice issued by the Commission for Equality and Human Rights which relates to section 52 or 53.
(5) The First-tier Tribunal’s determination on an appeal under subsection (1) is final.”.

(2) Part 3 of schedule 1 makes minor and consequential amendments.

20 Landlord registration

(1) The 2004 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 92(2), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

(3) In section 97—

(a) in subsection (1), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in subsection (2), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

(4) Part 4 of schedule 1 makes minor and consequential amendments.

21 Houses in multiple occupation

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations—

(a) provide that the First-tier Tribunal may make an order of the kind mentioned in section 153(2) of the 2006 Act instead of the sheriff,

(b) provide that the following may be made to the First-tier Tribunal instead of the sheriff—

(i) appeals against decisions of local authorities to which section 158 of that Act applies,

(ii) applications to extend the period mentioned in paragraph 9(1) of schedule 4 to that Act,

(iii) applications for a warrant for the ejection of the occupant from land or premises where the occupant has not complied with a requirement under paragraph 2 of schedule 5 to that Act in relation to the land or premises.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may—

(a) disapply the following provisions of the 2006 Act—

(i) section 153(2),

(ii) section 159(1),

(iii) paragraph 9(2) of schedule 4,

(iv) paragraph 3(1) of schedule 5,

(b) make such other consequential modifications to the 2006 Act and any other enactment as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.

Landlord registration: time limit for determining application

22 Landlord registration: time limit for determining application

(1) After section 85A of the 2004 Act, insert—

“85B Time limit for determining application

(1) This section applies where a relevant person makes an application to a local authority in accordance with section 83.
(2) The local authority must determine the application under section 84 within 12 months of receiving the application.

(3) The period mentioned in subsection (2) may be extended by the First-tier Tribunal, on application by the local authority, by such period as the Tribunal thinks fit.

(4) The First-tier Tribunal may not extend a period unless the local authority applies for the extension before the period expires.

(5) The relevant person is entitled to be a party to any proceedings on such an application.

(6) The decision of the First-tier Tribunal on such an application is final.

(7) If the local authority does not determine the application within the period required by this section—

(a) the authority is to be treated as having entered, on the day by which the authority was required to determine the application, the relevant person in the register maintained by the authority under section 82(1), and

(b) unless otherwise removed from the register in accordance with this Part, that person is to be treated as being removed from the register on the expiry of the period of 12 months beginning with that day.

(8) Where subsection (7) applies the authority must—

(a) enter the name of the relevant person in the register maintained by the authority under section 82(1), and

(b) state in the register a registration number in relation to that person (which is to be treated as having been given under section 84(5A)).

(9) Subject to the modifications in subsection (10), the relevant person is for all purposes to be treated as having been registered by virtue of section 84(2)(a).

(10) The modifications are—

(a) in the case of an application to which section 84(3)(a) and (b) applies, the relevant person is to be treated as having been registered by virtue of section 84(3), and

(b) in the case of an application to which section 84(4)(a) and (b) applies, the relevant person is to be treated as having been registered by virtue of section 84(4),

(c) section 84(6) does not apply, and

(d) section 89(2)(b), (3)(b) and (3A)(b) are to be read as if for the words “no longer applies” there were inserted “does not apply”.

(2) In section 86(1)(a) of the 2004 Act (entry in the register), after “section 84(2)” insert “or section 85B(8)(a)”.

Repairing standard

22A Carbon monoxide alarms

In section 13 of the 2006 Act—

(a) the word “and” after paragraph (e) of subsection (1) is repealed,
(b) after paragraph (f) of subsection (1) insert “, and

(g) the house has satisfactory provision for giving warning if carbon monoxide is present in a concentration that is hazardous to health.”;

(c) after subsection (5) insert—

“(6) In determining whether a house meets the standard of repair mentioned in subsection (1)(g), regard is to be had to any building regulations and any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers on provision for giving warning if carbon monoxide is present in a concentration that is hazardous to health.”.

22B Electrical safety inspections

(1) In section 13 of the 2006 Act (the repairing standard), after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) In determining whether a house meets the standard of repair mentioned in subsection (1)(c) and (d) in relation to installations for the supply of electricity and electrical fixtures, fittings and appliances, regard is to be had to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers on electrical safety standards.”.

(2) After section 19 of the 2006 Act insert—

“19A Duty to ensure regular electrical safety inspections

(1) The landlord must ensure that regular inspections are carried out for the purpose of identifying any work which—

(a) relates to installations for the supply of electricity and electrical fixtures, fittings and appliances, and

(b) is necessary to ensure that the house meets the repairing standard.

(2) The duty in subsection (1) is complied with if—

(a) an inspection has been carried out before the tenancy starts (but not earlier than 5 years before the start of the tenancy), and

(b) inspections are carried out during the tenancy at such intervals to ensure that there is a period of no more than 5 years between each inspection.

(3) The landlord must—

(a) before the start of the tenancy, provide the tenant with a copy of the record of the most recent inspection carried out, and

(b) provide the tenant with a copy of the record of any inspection carried out during the tenancy.

(4) For the purposes of sections 16(4), 17, 22 and 24 and schedule 2, references to a duty under section 14(1) include the duties under this section.

19B Electrical safety inspections

(1) An inspection carried out in pursuance of section 19A must be carried out by a competent person.

(2) The person carrying out the inspection must prepare a record of the inspection including the following information—

(a) the date on which the inspection was carried out,

(b) the address of the house inspected,
(c) the name and address of the landlord or the landlord’s agent,
(d) the name, address and relevant qualifications of the person who carried out the inspection,
(e) a description, and the location, of each installation, fixture, fitting and appliance inspected,
(f) any defect identified,
(g) any action taken to remedy a defect.

(3) A copy of the record must be—
(a) given to the landlord, and
(b) retained by the landlord for a period of 6 years.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must publish guidance on the carrying out of inspections.

(5) In determining who is competent to carry out an inspection, the landlord must have regard to the guidance.”.

22C Power to modify repairing standard etc.

(1) After section 20 of the 2006 Act insert—

“20A Power to modify repairing standard etc.

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations vary or extend the repairing standard and a landlord’s duty to ensure a house meets that standard.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may, in particular, make provision about—
(a) the tenancies to which this Chapter applies,
(b) determining whether a house meets the repairing standard,
(c) carrying out inspections in relation to the repairing standard.

(3) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify sections 12 to 14 and any other provision of this Chapter.”.

(2) In section 191(5) of the 2006 Act, after “section” insert “20A,”.

Enforcement of repairing standard

23 Third party application in respect of the repairing standard

(1) In section 22 of the 2006 Act (tenant application to private rented housing panel)—

(a) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) A person mentioned in subsection (1B) may apply to the private rented housing panel for determination of whether a landlord has failed to comply with the duty imposed by section 14(1)(b) (a person who makes such an application being referred to as a “third party applicant”).

(1B) The persons are—
(a) a local authority,
(b) a person specified by order made by the Scottish Ministers.”,
(b) in subsection (2), for “(1) must set out the tenant’s” substitute “(1) or (1A) must set out the tenant’s, or as the case may be, the third party applicant’s”,

c) in subsection (3), for “such application may be made unless the tenant” substitute “application under this section may be made unless the person making the application”,

(d) in subsection (4), for “such application” substitute “application under this section”, and

e) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The tenant of the house concerned is entitled to be a party in the determination of any application made under subsection (1A).”.

(2) The title of section 22 of the 2006 Act becomes “Application in respect of the repairing standard”.

(3) In section 22A(1) of the 2006 Act (information to be given to a local authority), after “22(1)” insert “, or under section 22(1A) where the applicant is not a local authority”.

(4) In section 23 of the 2006 Act (referral to private rented housing committee)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “22(1)” insert “or 22(1A)”,

(b) in subsection (2)(b), after “tenant” insert “or third party applicant”,

c) in subsection (4), after “application”, where it first occurs, insert “under section 22(1)”,

(d) after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) The president must, as soon as practicable after rejecting an application under section 22(1A) give notice of the rejection to—

(a) the third party applicant, and

(b) the tenant.”, and

e) in subsection (5), for “Such a notice” substitute “A notice under subsection (4) or (4A)”.

(5) In section 24(1) of the 2006 Act (determination by private rented housing committee) for “a tenant’s application under section 22(1)” substitute “an application under section 22(1) or (1A)”.

(6A) In section 181 of the 2006 Act (rights of entry: general)—

(a) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) Any person authorised by a third party applicant is entitled to enter any house in respect of which an application under section 22 may be made for the purposes of enabling or assisting the third party applicant to decide whether to make an application under section 22(1A).”, and

(b) in subsection (2), for “a tenant’s application under section 22(1)” substitute “an application under section 22(1) or (1A)”.

(6B) In section 182 of the 2006 Act (warrants authorising entry)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “subsection (1)” insert “, (1A)”, and

(b) after subsection (3) insert—
“(3A) In relation to an application for a warrant under section 181(1A), the reference to the occupier in subsection (3) is to be read as including the tenant, the landlord and any known agent of the landlord.”.

(6C) In section 184 of the 2006 Act (rights of entry: supplemental), after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) In relation to the exercise of the right conferred by section 181(1A), the reference to occupants in subsection (4) is to be read as including the tenant, the landlord and any known agent of the landlord.”.

(6D) In section 187 of the 2006 Act (formal communications), in subsection (3)(b), for “the recorded delivery service” substitute “a service which provides for the delivery of the communication to be recorded”.

(7) In section 194(1) of the 2006 Act (interpretation), after the definition of “tenant” insert—

“third party applicant” has the meaning given by section 22(1A),”.

(8) Section 35(3) of the Private Rented Housing (Scotland) Act 2011 (asp 14) is repealed.

24 Procedure for third party applications

(1) In paragraph 1 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (notification)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (1), for “a tenant’s application” substitute “an application”,

(b) in sub-paragraph (2), for “either party” substitute “the landlord or the tenant”,

(c) in sub-paragraph (3), for “both parties” substitute “the landlord and the tenant”, and

(d) after sub-paragraph (3), insert—

“(4) In the case of an application under section 22(1A), the committee must, in addition to carrying out the matters mentioned in sub-paragraphs (1) to (3)—

(a) serve on the third party applicant a notice containing the matters mentioned in sub-paragraph (1)(a) to (c),

(b) if the committee thinks fit following a request of the third party applicant, change the day specified for the purposes of sub-paragraph (1)(c),

(c) notify—

(i) the third party applicant of any change under sub-paragraph (2)(b),

(ii) the landlord and the tenant of any change under paragraph (b).”.

(2) In paragraph 2 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (inquiries)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (3)(a), for “or tenant” substitute “, the tenant or, as the case may be, third party applicant”,

(b) in sub-paragraph (3)(b), for “or tenant” substitute “, tenant or, as the case may be, third party applicant”,

(c) in sub-paragraph (4)(a), for “in the notice served under” substitute “in accordance with”, and

(d) in sub-paragraph (4)(b), for “in a notice served under paragraph 1(2)(b)” substitute “in accordance with paragraph 1(2)(b) or (4)(b)”.
(3) In paragraph 3(1) of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (evidence), after “tenant” insert “, third party applicant”.

(4) In paragraph 5 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (expenses)—
   (a) after sub-paragraph (2)(b), insert—
   “(ba) the third party applicant,”, and
   (b) in sub-paragraph (2)(c), for “or tenant” substitute “, tenant or third party applicant”.

(5) In paragraph 6 of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (recording and notification of decisions)—
   (a) in sub-paragraph (1)(a), for “a tenant’s” substitute “an”,
   (b) the word “and” at the end of sub-paragraph (3)(c) is repealed, and
   (c) for sub-paragraph (3)(d), substitute—
   “(d) in the case of an application under section 22(1A), the third party applicant, and
   (e) the local authority (unless the local authority is the third party applicant in relation to the decision).”.

(6) After paragraph 7(1) of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (withdrawal of application), insert—
   “(1A) A third party applicant may withdraw an application under section 22(1A) at any time.”.

(7) In paragraph 8(1) of schedule 2 to the 2006 Act (further provision on procedure), after “22(1)” insert “and 22(1A)”.

25 Appeals in relation to third party applications

(1) In section 64 of the 2006 Act (Part 1 appeals)—
   (a) in subsection (4)(a), for “a tenant’s” substitute “an”,
   (b) after subsection (4), insert—
   “(4A) A third party applicant aggrieved by a decision by a private rented housing committee which—
   (a) is mentioned in subsection (4)(a) to (f),
   (b) was made following an application by the applicant under section 22(1A), may appeal to the sheriff within 21 days of being notified of that decision.”, and
   (c) in subsection (5), after “tenant” insert “or a third party applicant”.

(2) In section 65(2) of the 2006 Act (determination of appeals), after “64(4)” insert “, (4A)”.

(3) After section 66(3) of the 2006 Act (appeals procedure), insert—
   “(3A) In an appeal by a landlord under section 64(4) which relates to a decision following an application under section 22(1A)—
   (a) the third party applicant is to be a party to the proceedings,
   (b) the tenant is entitled to be a party to the proceedings.”
(3B) In an appeal by a tenant under section 64(4) which relates to a decision following an application under section 22(1A), the landlord and the third party applicant are to be parties to the proceedings.

(3C) In an appeal by a third party applicant under section 64(4A)—

(a) the landlord is to be a party to the proceedings,

(b) the tenant is entitled to be a party to the proceedings.”.

Private rented housing: Enhanced Enforcement Areas

25A Private rented housing: Enhanced Enforcement Areas

(1) The Scottish Ministers must by regulations provide a scheme whereby a local authority may apply to the Scottish Ministers for additional discretionary powers to enable it to target enforcement action at an area characterised by poor conditions in houses subject to tenancies and occupancy agreements of the type mentioned in section 17(1) (“private rented housing”).

(2) The scheme under subsection (1) must provide—

(a) that a local authority may apply to the Scottish Ministers for an area to be designated as an Enhanced Enforcement Area where it considers that the area is characterised by—

(i) an overprovision or a concentration of private rented housing that appears to the local authority to be—

(A) of a poor environmental standard,

(B) overcrowded, and

(ii) a prevalence of antisocial behaviour, as defined by section 81(4) of the 2004 Act,

(b) where the Scottish Ministers agree to designate an area as an Enhanced Enforcement Area, that the local authority will acquire such additional discretionary powers as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient, to be exercised for prescribed purposes, including in relation to—

(i) the checks it may carry out before entering a relevant person on the register of landlords that it maintains under Part 8 of the 2004 Act,

(ii) authority to inspect dwellings let by a landlord who is entered on that register,

(c) where the Scottish Ministers agree to designate an area as an Enhanced Enforcement Area, that—

(i) the local authority must take steps to advertise the fact that the designation has been granted,

(ii) the designation will apply for a period of five years commencing from the date on which the Scottish Ministers notify a local authority of its decision,

(iii) the local authority may make a further application for the area to be designated as an Enhanced Enforcement Area before the expiry of its first designation.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult—
(a) local authorities,

(b) persons or bodies who appear to them to represent the interests of—

(i) landlords,

(ii) tenants,

(c) such other persons or bodies as they consider appropriate.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must lay before the Scottish Parliament a draft Scottish statutory instrument containing regulations under subsection (1) by 1 April 2015.

(5) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify, or disapply any provision of, any enactment (including this Act) for the purposes of this section.

PART 4

LETTING AGENTS

Inclusion in the register

26 Register of letting agents

(1) The Scottish Ministers must establish and maintain a register of letting agents (the “register”).

(2) The register must contain an entry for each person entered in the register setting out—

(a) the name and address of the person entered in the register, and

(b) such information relating to that person as the Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must make the information contained in the register publicly available by such means as they consider appropriate.

27 Application for registration

(1) A person may apply to the Scottish Ministers—

(a) to be entered in the register, or

(b) to renew that person’s existing entry in the register.

(2) The application must—

(a) state the name and address of the applicant,

(b) state whether the applicant is—

(i) trading as a sole trader,

(ii) a partnership,

(iii) a company, or

(iv) a body with some other legal status,

(c) in the case where the applicant is a company registered under the Companies Act 2006 (c.46), state the company’s registered number, in the case where the applicant is not a natural person, state the name and address of the individual who holds the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body,

(e) state the name and address of any other person who—

(i) owns 25% or more of an applicant which is not a natural person, or

(ii) otherwise is (or is to be) directly concerned with the control or governance of the applicant’s letting agency work (whether or not the applicant is a natural person), and

(f) include such other information as the Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe.

(3) The application must be accompanied by a fee of such amount (if any) as the Scottish Ministers may determine.

28 Offence of providing false information in an application

(1) It is an offence for a person, in an application under section 27, to—

(a) provide information which the person knows is false in a material particular, or

(b) knowingly fail to specify information required by section 27(2).

(2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

29 Decision on application

(1) The Scottish Ministers must determine an application under section 27 in accordance with this section.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must enter the applicant in the register or renew an existing entry if they are satisfied that—

(a) the applicant is a fit and proper person to carry out letting agency work,

(b) any other person who is required to be identified in an application by virtue of section 27 is a fit and proper person in relation to letting agency work, and

(c) the applicant meets such training requirements as the Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe.

(2A) Regulations under subsection (2)(c) may, in particular, prescribe—

(a) the matters on which training must have been undertaken,

(b) the persons who must have undertaken training,

(c) qualifications which must be held by the applicant or other persons,

(d) the period within which training must have taken place.

(3) An applicant who is entered in the register, or whose entry is renewed, is to be known as a “registered letting agent”.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must refuse to enter the applicant in the register or to renew an existing entry if they are not satisfied in accordance with subsection (2).

(5) Before refusing to enter the applicant in the register or to renew an existing entry, the Scottish Ministers must give to the applicant a notice stating that—
(a) they are considering refusing the application and their reasons for doing so, and
(b) the applicant has the right to make written representations to the Scottish Ministers before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(6) In making their decision under this section the Scottish Ministers must consider the application and any representations made in accordance with subsection (5)(b).

(7) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after making their decision under this section, notify the applicant of—
(a) their decision,
(b) in the case of a decision to enter the applicant in the register, the date of entry in the register,
(c) in the case of a decision to renew an existing entry, the date of renewal, and
(d) in the case of a refusal to enter the applicant in the register or to renew an existing entry, their reasons for the refusal and the date of that refusal.

(8) If the Scottish Ministers refuse to renew an existing entry they must remove the registered letting agent from the register on the date of final refusal.

(9) For the purposes of subsection (8) the date of final refusal is the date on which—
(a) the period mentioned in section 36(2) expires without an appeal being made,
(b) where such an appeal is made, the appeal is finally determined or abandoned.

29A Time limit for determining application

(1) This section applies where a person (referred to in this section as the “applicant”) makes an application in accordance with section 27.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must determine the application under section 29 within 12 months of receiving the application.

(3) The period mentioned in subsection (2) may be extended by the First-tier Tribunal, on application by the Scottish Ministers, by such period as the Tribunal thinks fit.

(4) The Tribunal may not extend a period unless the Scottish Ministers apply for the extension before the period expires.

(5) The applicant is entitled to be a party to any proceedings on an application under subsection (3).

(6) The decision of the Tribunal on such an application is final.

(7) If the Scottish Ministers do not determine the application within the period required by this section—
(a) on the day by which they were required to determine the application, they are to be treated as having entered the applicant in the register or, as the case may be, having renewed the applicant’s existing entry in the register, and
(b) the applicant is to be treated as being removed from the register on the expiry of the period of 12 months beginning with that day unless—
(i) before the expiry of the period, the applicant made a subsequent application in accordance with section 27 to renew the applicant’s entry in the register, or
(ii) the applicant is otherwise removed from the register in accordance with this Part.

(8) Where subsection (7) applies the Scottish Ministers must—

(a) notify the applicant—

(i) that subsection (7) applies, and

(ii) of the day on which, in accordance with subsection (7)(a), they are treated as having entered the applicant in the register or, as the case may be, having renewed the applicant’s existing entry in the register, and

(b) enter the name of the applicant in the register or, as the case may be, renew the applicant’s existing entry in the register.

(9) Subject to the modifications in subsection (10), the applicant is for all purposes to be treated as a registered letting agent entered in the register or, as the case may be, whose entry has been renewed by virtue of section 29(2).

(10) The modifications are—

(a) section 34 does not apply,

(b) paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 35(1) are to be read as if for the words “no longer” there were substituted “not”, and

(c) subsections (1)(b) and (4)(b) of section 38 are to be read as if after the word “under” there were inserted “section 29A(7)(b) or”.

30 Fit and proper person considerations

(1) In deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, the Scottish Ministers must have regard to all of the circumstances of the case, including any material falling within subsections (2) and (3).

(2) Material falls within this subsection if it shows that the person has—

(a) been convicted of an offence—

(i) involving fraud or other dishonesty,

(ii) involving violence,

(iii) involving drugs,

(iv) involving firearms,

(v) which is a sexual offence within the meaning of section 210A(10) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46),

(b) practised unlawful discrimination on the grounds of any of the protected characteristics in Part 2 of the Equality Act 2010 (c.15),

(c) contravened any provision of—

(i) the law relating to housing,

(ii) landlord and tenant law,

(iii) the law relating to debt.

(2A) Material which shows that a person has a conviction which is a spent conviction for the purposes of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) does not fall within subsection (2).
(3) Material falls within this subsection if it shows the extent to which any person mentioned in subsection (1) has—
   (a) complied with any Letting Agent Code of Practice made under section 41,
   (b) complied with any Letting Code issued under section 92A of the 2004 Act,
   (c) failed to comply with a duty applying to that person in accordance with section 32 to use a letting agent registration number,
   (d) contravened any provision of any letting agent enforcement order issued under section 43,
   (e) failed to pay any costs for which the person is liable under this Part arising from an application to the First-tier Tribunal under section 43,
   (f) failed to provide information in accordance with section 46A or 46B(2)(d)(i),
   (g) obstructed a person acting in the proper exercise of the persons’ functions under sections 46B to 46D,
   (h) failed to comply with a requirement made by a person who is so acting.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify this section by adding to, removing or varying any material in subsections (2) and (3).

31A Fit and proper person: criminal record information

(1) This section applies where the Scottish Ministers have reasonable grounds to suspect that the information provided under this Part in relation to material falling within section 30(2) is, or has become, inaccurate.

(2) In deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, the Scottish Ministers may have regard to the information which would be included in a criminal conviction certificate (within the meaning of section 112 of the Police Act 1997 (c.50)) in relation to that person.

Duties of registered letting agents

32 Letting agent registration number

(1) The Scottish Ministers must allocate a number to each registered letting agent (the “letting agent registration number”).

(2) A registered letting agent must take all reasonable steps to ensure that the agent’s letting agent registration number is included in—
   (a) any document sent to a landlord, tenant, prospective landlord or prospective tenant in the course of the agent’s letting agency work,
   (b) any property advertisement or communication in relation to the agent’s letting agency work, and
   (c) any other document or communication of a type specified by the Scottish Ministers by order.

(3) For the purposes of this section—
   (a) “advertisement” includes any form of advertising whether to the public generally, to any section of the public or individually to selected persons, and
(b) “communication” includes electronic communications sent or placed on a web page on a website operated by or on behalf of the registered letting agent.

33 Duty to inform: change of circumstances

(1) This section applies if, in consequence of a change in circumstances, any information provided by a registered letting agent to the Scottish Ministers by virtue of section 27 or, as the case may be, this section, becomes inaccurate.

(2) The registered letting agent must notify the Scottish Ministers in writing, as soon as practicable after the inaccuracy arises, of the change that has occurred.

(3) The notice must be accompanied by a fee of such amount (if any) as the Scottish Ministers may determine.

(4) It is an offence for a person to fail to comply with subsection (2) without reasonable excuse.

(5) A person who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

Removal from the register

34 Duration of registration

(1) The Scottish Ministers must remove a registered letting agent from the register if, on the expiry of the registration period, the registered letting agent has not made an application in accordance with section 27.

(2) The registration period is—

(a) in the case of a letting agent whose registration has not previously been renewed, the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the entry was made,

(b) in any other case, the period of 3 years beginning the day after the end of the previous registration period.

35 Revocation of registration

(1) The Scottish Ministers may remove a registered letting agent from the register if they are satisfied that—

(a) the agent is not, or is no longer a fit and proper person to carry out letting agency work,

(b) any other person who is required to be identified in an application by virtue of section 27 or in accordance with the duty in section 33, is not, or is no longer a fit and proper person in relation to letting agency work or,

(c) the agent does not meet the training requirements prescribed under section 29(2)(c).

(2) Before removing a registered letting agent from the register under this section the Scottish Ministers must give to the agent a notice stating that—

(a) they are considering removing the agent from the register and their reasons for doing so, and
(b) the agent has the right to make written representations to the Scottish Ministers before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(3) In making their decision under this section the Scottish Ministers must consider any representations made in accordance with subsection (2)(b).

(4) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after making a decision to remove a registered letting agent from the register, notify the agent of—

(a) their decision and their reasons for that decision,

(b) the date of removal from the register.

35A Removal from register on application

(1) A registered letting agent may apply to the Scottish Ministers to be removed from the register.

(2) The application must be accompanied by a fee of such amount (if any) as the Scottish Ministers may determine.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must remove a registered letting agent from the register if, having considered an application under this section, they are satisfied that—

(a) the registered letting agent is no longer carrying out letting agency work, and

(b) it is otherwise appropriate to remove that agent from the register.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after making their decision under this section, notify the agent who made the application of—

(a) their decision,

(b) in the case of a decision to remove the agent from the register, the date of removal from the register, and

(c) in the case of a decision not to remove the agent from the register, their reasons for that decision.

Appeals

36 Appeals

(1) A person may appeal to the First-tier Tribunal against a decision by the Scottish Ministers—

(a) under section 29 to refuse to enter that person in the register or to renew that person’s existing entry in the register,

(b) under section 35 to remove that person from the register.

(2) An appeal must be made before the end of the period of 21 days beginning with the date of notification of the decision.

(3) In determining an appeal the Tribunal may make an order requiring the Scottish Ministers to enter the person in the register.
37 Note on register where refusal or removal

(1) Where the Scottish Ministers refuse to enter a person in the register or to renew a person’s existing entry in the register under section 29, they must, after the date of final refusal, note that fact in the register.

(2) Where the Scottish Ministers remove a person from the register under section 35 they must, after the date of final refusal, note that fact in the register.

(3) For the purposes of this section the date of final refusal is the later of the date on which—

(a) the period mentioned in section 36(2) expires without an appeal being made,

(b) where such an appeal has been made, the appeal is finally determined or abandoned.

(4) Where a fact is noted by virtue of subsection (1) or (2) it must—

(a) remain on the register for the period of 12 months beginning with the date on which the Scottish Ministers are required to note it in the register, and

(b) be removed from the register at the end of that period.

(5) But where a person in respect of whom the Scottish Ministers note a fact by virtue of subsection (1) or (2) is subsequently entered in the register before the end of the period mentioned in subsection (4)(a), the Scottish Ministers must remove the fact from the register.

38 No payment for letting agency work where refusal or removal

(1) This section applies where the Scottish Ministers—

(a) refuse to enter a person in the register or to renew the person’s existing entry in the register under section 29,

(b) remove a person from the register under section 34,

(c) remove a person from the register under section 35,

(d) remove a person from the register under section 35A.

(2) After the relevant date—

(a) no costs incurred by the person in respect of letting agency work are recoverable,

(b) no charge imposed by the person which relates to letting agency work in a period after the relevant date is recoverable.

(2A) Subsection (2)(a) does not apply in relation to costs incurred before the relevant date in a case where the person is removed from the register under section 34 or 35A.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after the relevant date, publish in such manner as they think fit a notice of—

(a) the refusal or removal mentioned in subsection (1),

(b) the relevant date, and

(c) the effect of subsection (2).

(4) For the purposes of this section, the relevant date—
(a) in the case of a refusal or removal mentioned in subsection (1)(a) or (c), is the later of the date on which—

(i) the period mentioned in section 36(2) expires without an appeal being made,

(ii) where such an appeal has been made, the appeal is finally determined or abandoned, and

(b) in the case of a removal mentioned in subsection (1)(b) or (d), is the day after the day on which the person is removed from the register.

Offences where no registration

39 Offence of operating as a letting agent without registration

(1) It is an offence for a person who is not a registered letting agent to carry out letting agency work, unless subsection (2) applies to that person.

(2) This subsection applies to a person from the day on which the person is removed from the register under section 35 until—

(a) where the period mentioned in section 36(2) expires without an appeal being made, the expiry of that period,

(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which it is finally determined or abandoned.

(3) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) to show that the person had a reasonable excuse for acting in the way charged.

(4) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, to a fine not exceeding £50,000, or to both.

40 Offence of using a registration number where no registration

(1) It is an offence for a person who is not entered in the register, without reasonable excuse, to use a number purporting to be a letting agent registration number in any document or communication.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to a person who is removed from the register under section 35 until—

(a) where the period mentioned in section 36(2) expires without an appeal being made, the expiry of that period,

(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which it is finally determined or abandoned.

(3) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

Code of practice

41 Letting Agent Code of Practice

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, by regulations, set out a code of practice which makes provision about—
(a) the standards of practice of persons who carry out letting agency work,
(b) the handling of tenants’ and landlords’ money by those persons, and
(c) the professional indemnity arrangements to be kept in place by those persons.

(2) The code of practice is to be known as the Letting Agent Code of Practice.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate on a draft of the code of practice.

42 Prohibition on contracting out

(1) The terms of any agreement of a kind mentioned in subsection (2) are of no effect in so far as they purport to—

(a) exclude or limit any duty a letting agent has under the Letting Agent Code of Practice, or
(b) impose any penalty, disability or obligation in the event of a person enforcing compliance by the letting agent with such a duty.

(2) The agreements are—

(a) an agreement between a landlord and a letting agent,
(b) an agreement between a tenant and a letting agent,
(c) an agreement (including a lease) between a landlord and a tenant.

Letting agent enforcement orders

43 Applications to First-tier Tribunal to enforce code of practice

(1) A tenant, a landlord or the Scottish Ministers may apply to the First-tier Tribunal for a determination that a relevant letting agent has failed to comply with the Letting Agent Code of Practice.

(2) A relevant letting agent is—

(a) in relation to an application by a tenant, a letting agent appointed by the landlord to carry out letting agency work in relation to the house occupied (or to be occupied) by the tenant,
(b) in relation to an application by a landlord, a letting agent appointed by the landlord,
(c) in relation to an application by the Scottish Ministers, any letting agent.

(3) An application under subsection (1) must set out the applicant’s reasons for considering that the letting agent has failed to comply with the code of practice.

(4) No application may be made unless the applicant has notified the letting agent of the breach of the code of practice in question.

(5) The Tribunal may reject an application if it is not satisfied that the letting agent has been given a reasonable time in which to rectify the breach.

(6) Subject to subsection (5), the Tribunal must decide on an application under subsection (1) whether the letting agent has complied with the code of practice.
(7) Where the Tribunal decides that the letting agent has failed to comply, it must by order (a “letting agent enforcement order”) require the letting agent to take such steps as the Tribunal considers necessary to rectify the failure.

(8) A letting agent enforcement order—

(a) must specify the period within which each step must be taken,

(b) may provide that the letting agent must pay to the applicant such compensation as the Tribunal considers appropriate for any loss suffered by the applicant as a result of the failure to comply.

(9) References in this section to—

(a) a tenant include—

(i) a person who has entered into an agreement to let a house, and

(ii) a former tenant,

(b) a landlord include a former landlord.

44 Variation and revocation of enforcement orders

(1) The First-tier Tribunal may, at any time—

(a) vary a letting agent enforcement order, or

(b) where it considers that the steps required by the order are no longer necessary, revoke it.

(2) References in this Part (including this section) to a letting agent enforcement order are to be treated as references to the order as so varied.

45 Failure to comply with enforcement order

(1) The First-tier Tribunal may, after the period within which a letting agent enforcement order requires steps to be taken, review whether the letting agent has complied with the order.

(2) If the Tribunal decides that the letting agent has failed to comply with the letting agent enforcement order it must notify the Scottish Ministers of that failure.

(3) But the Tribunal may not make such a decision if it is satisfied that the letting agent has a reasonable excuse for failing to comply.

46 Enforcement orders: offence

(1) A letting agent who, without reasonable excuse, fails to comply with a letting agent enforcement order commits an offence.

(2) A letting agent cannot be guilty of an offence under subsection (1) unless the First-tier Tribunal has decided that the letting agent has failed to comply with the order (but such a decision does not establish a presumption that the letting agent has committed an offence under subsection (1)).

(3) A letting agent who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.
46A  Power to obtain information

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, for the purpose of monitoring compliance with the provisions of this Part, serve a notice on a person who appears to be a letting agent requiring the person to provide them with information specified in the notice.

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision about the requiring of information under subsection (1) and, in particular, may make provision about—

(a) the form of the notice and manner of service,

(b) the time within which information must be provided.

(3) Nothing in this section authorises the Scottish Ministers to require the disclosure of any information if such disclosure would make the person holding it susceptible under any enactment or rule of law to any sanction or other remedy.

46B  Power to carry out inspections

(1) For the purpose of monitoring compliance with the provisions of this Part, an authorised person may carry out an inspection of premises which appear to be being used for the purpose of carrying out letting agency work.

(2) For the purposes of carrying out the inspection, the authorised person may—

(a) enter and inspect the premises,

(b) require the production of any book, document, data or record (in whatever form it is held) and inspect it, and take copies of or extracts from it,

(c) take possession of any book, document, data or record (in whatever form it is held) which is on the premises and retain it for as long as the authorised person considers necessary,

(d) require any person to—

(i) give the authorised person such information as the authorised person considers necessary,

(ii) afford the authorised person such facilities and assistance as the authorised person considers necessary.

(3) Nothing in this section authorises the authorised person to require the disclosure of any information if such disclosure would make the person holding it susceptible under any enactment or rule of law to any sanction or other remedy.

(4) In this section—

"authorised person" means a person authorised by the Scottish Ministers,

"premises" includes any place and any vehicle, vessel, or moveable structure.

Warrants for entry

(1) A sheriff, justice of the peace or stipendiary magistrate may by warrant authorise a person to enter premises (if necessary using reasonable force) for the purpose of carrying out an inspection under section 46B.

(2) A warrant may be granted under subsection (1) only if the sheriff, justice or magistrate is satisfied by evidence on oath—
(a) that there are reasonable grounds for entering the premises in question, and
(b) that—
   (i) entry to the premises has been or is likely to be refused and that notice of the intention to apply for a warrant under this section has been given to the occupier,
   (ii) a request for entry, or the giving of such notice, would defeat the object of the proposed entry,
   (iii) the premises are unoccupied, or
   (iv) the occupier is temporarily absent and it might defeat the object of the entry to await the occupier’s return.

46D Inspections: supplemental
(1) A person entering any premises under section 46B(2)(a) or in accordance with a warrant granted under section 46C may take on to the premises such other persons and such equipment as the person considers necessary.
(2) A right to enter any premises conferred by section 46B(2)(a) may be exercised only at a reasonable time.
(3) The occupier of the premises concerned must be given at least 24 hours’ notice before a person carries out an inspection under section 46B unless the person carrying out the inspection considers that giving such notice would defeat the object of the proposed inspection.
(4) A person carrying out an inspection under section 46B must, if required to do so, produce written evidence of the person’s authorisation to carry out the inspection.
(5) On leaving any premises which a person is authorised to enter by a warrant granted under section 46C, the person must, if the premises are unoccupied or the occupier is temporarily absent, leave the premises as effectively secured against trespassers as the person found them.
(6) A person who takes possession of any item under section 46B(2)(c) must leave a statement on the premises from which the item was removed—
   (a) giving particulars of what has been taken, and
   (b) stating that the person has taken possession of it.

46E Information and inspection: offence
(1) It is an offence for a person who has been required to provide information in accordance with section 46A or section 46B(2)(d)(i)—
   (a) without reasonable excuse, to fail or refuse to provide the information,
   (b) to knowingly or recklessly make any statement in respect of that information which is false or misleading in a material particular.
(2) It is an offence for a person—
   (a) to intentionally obstruct a person acting in the proper exercise of the persons’ functions under sections 46B to 46D.
Housing (Scotland) Bill
Part 4—Letting agents

(b) without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with any requirement made under section 46B(2)(b) or (d)(ii) by a person who is so acting.

(3) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) or (2) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

5

47 Transfer of jurisdiction of actions involving letting agents

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations provide that the functions and jurisdiction of the sheriff in relation to the actions between the following persons relating to the carrying out of letting agency work are transferred to the First-tier Tribunal—

(a) a tenant and a relevant letting agent,

(b) a landlord and a relevant letting agent.

(2) A relevant letting agent is—

(a) in relation to a tenant, a letting agent appointed by the landlord to carry out letting agency work in relation to the house occupied (or to be occupied) by the tenant,

(b) in relation to a landlord, a letting agent appointed by the landlord.

(3) References in this section to—

(a) a tenant include—

(i) a person who has entered into an agreement to let a house, and

(ii) a former tenant,

(b) a landlord include a former landlord.

48 Offences by bodies corporate etc.

(1) Where—

(a) an offence under this Part has been committed by a body corporate or a Scottish partnership or other unincorporated association, and

(b) it is proved that the offence was committed with the consent or connivance of, or was attributable to any neglect on the part of—

(i) a relevant individual, or

(ii) an individual purporting to act in the capacity of a relevant individual,

the individual (as well as the body corporate, partnership or, as the case may be, other unincorporated association) commits the offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(2) In subsection (1), “relevant individual” means—

(a) in relation to a body corporate—

(i) a director, manager, secretary or other similar officer of the body,

(ii) where the affairs of the body are managed by its members, the members,

(b) in relation to a Scottish partnership, a partner,

(c) in relation to an unincorporated association other than a Scottish partnership, a person who is concerned in the management or control of the association.
Delegation of functions relating to the register

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, to such extent and subject to such conditions as they think appropriate, delegate any of their functions under this Part (other than a function relating to the making of an order or regulations) to such person as they may determine.

(2) A delegation under subsection (1) may be varied or revoked at any time.

Landlord registration where agent is a registered letting agent

(1) In section 84(4) of the 2004 Act (registration), for paragraph (d) substitute—

“(d) either—

(i) the person is a registered letting agent, or

(ii) in the case of a person who is not a registered letting agent, the person is a fit and proper person to act for the landlord such as is mentioned in subsection (3)(c) in relation to the lease or, as the case may be, arrangement.”.

(2) In section 88 of the 2004 Act (registered person: appointment of agent)—

(a) in subsection (2B)—

(i) the word “or” at the end of paragraph (a) is repealed, and

(ii) after subsection (b), insert “,or

(c) the person appointed is a registered letting agent.”,

(b) for subsection (4), substitute—

“(4) The condition is that either—

(a) the person is a registered letting agent, or

(b) in the case of a person who is not a registered letting agent, the person is a fit and proper person to act for the registered person in relation to a lease or occupancy arrangement such as is mentioned in subsection (1)(b).”,

(c) in subsection (5), for “(4)” substitute “(4)(b)”.

(3) In section 89 of the 2004 Act (removal from the register)—

(a) in subsection (3)(b) for “(d)” substitute “(d)(ii)”,

(b) after subsection (3), insert—

“(3A) Where—

(a) a person is registered by the local authority by virtue of section 84(4), and

(b) paragraph (d)(i) of that section no longer applies,

the authority may remove the person from the register.”.

(4) In section 90(1) of the 2004 Act (notification of removal from register: registered person), after “89(1)” insert “,(3A)”.

(5) In section 91(1) of the 2004 Act (notification of removal from register: other persons), after “89(1)” insert “,(3A)”.

(6) In section 92(1)(b) of the 2004 Act (appeal), after “89(1)” insert “,(3A)”.
(7) In section 92ZA(1)(a)(ii) of the 2004 Act (duty to note refusals and removals), after “89(1)” insert “, (3A)”.

(8) In section 92A(1)(b) of the 2004 Act (the Letting Code), after “person” where it first occurs insert “(other than a registered letting agent)”.

(9) In section 101 of the 2004 Act (interpretation of Part 8), after the definition of “registered” insert—

“‘registered letting agent’ has the meaning given by section 29(3) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014 (asp 00),”.

51 Meaning of letting agency work

(1) For the purposes of this Part, “letting agency work” means things done by a person in the course of that person’s business in response to relevant instructions which are—

(a) carried out with a view to a landlord who is a relevant person entering into, or seeking to enter into a lease or occupancy arrangement by virtue of which an unconnected person may use the landlord’s house as a dwelling, or

(b) for the purpose of managing a house (including in particular collecting rent, inspecting the house and making arrangements for the repair, maintenance, improvement or insurance of the house) which is, or is to be, subject to a lease or arrangement mentioned in paragraph (a).

(2) In subsection (1)—

(a) “relevant instructions” are instructions received from a person in relation to the house which is, or is to be, subject to a lease or arrangement mentioned in subsection (1)(a), and

(b) “occupancy arrangement”, “unconnected person”, “relevant person” and “use as a dwelling” are to be construed in accordance with section 101 of the 2004 Act.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by order—

(a) provide that “letting agency work” does not include things done—

(i) on behalf of a specified body, or

(ii) for the purpose of a scheme of a specified description, or

(b) otherwise modify the meaning of “letting agency work” for the time being in this section.

(4) A scheme falling within a description specified by the Scottish Ministers under subsection (3)(a)(ii) must be—

(a) operated by a body which does not carry on the scheme for profit, and

(b) for the purpose of assisting persons to enter into leases or occupancy agreements.

52 Interpretation of Part 4

In this Part—

“house” is to be construed in accordance with section 101 of the 2004 Act,

“landlord” is to be construed in accordance with section 101 of the 2004 Act,

“letting agent registration number” has the meaning given by section 32(1),
“letting agent” means a person who carries out letting agency work,
“letting agent enforcement order” has the meaning given by section 43(7),
“register” has the meaning given by section 26(1),
“registered letting agent” has the meaning given by section 29(3),
“tenant”, in relation to an occupancy arrangement, means the person who under the arrangement is permitted to occupy the house.

PART 5
MOBILE HOME SITES WITH PERMANENT RESIDENTS

General application

53 Licensing of sites for permanent residents

(1) In section 32(1) of the 1960 Act (application of Part 1 to Scotland), after paragraph (l) insert—

“(m) the modifications in Part 1A.”.

(2) After section 32 of the 1960 Act, insert—

“PART 1A

LICENSING OF RELEVANT PERMANENT SITES IN SCOTLAND

General application

32A Licences under Part 1A

(1) Subject to the modifications mentioned in subsection (2), Part 1 applies in relation to—

(a) a relevant permanent site as it applies to a caravan site within the meaning of section 1(4),

(b) a relevant permanent site application as it applies in relation to an application for a site licence under Part 1, and

(c) a site licence issued or renewed under this Part (a “Part 1A site licence”) as it applies to a site licence within the meaning of section 1(1).

(2) The modifications are—

(a) the offence in section 1 does not apply to the holder of a Part 1A site licence in relation to that person’s use of the relevant permanent site which is the subject of the licence,

(b) sections 3 and 6 do not apply in relation to a relevant permanent site application,

(c) sections 4 and 9 do not apply in relation to a Part 1A site licence, and

(d) the further modifications in this Part.”.

54 Relevant permanent site application

After section 32A of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 53(2)), insert—
Part 5—Mobile home sites with permanent residents

“Part 1A site licence

32B Relevant permanent site application
(1) A relevant permanent site application may be made by the occupier of land to the local authority in whose area the land is situated.

(2) A relevant permanent site application must—
(a) be in writing and in such format as is determined by the local authority,
(b) specify the land in respect of which the application is made,
(c) include information specified in regulations made under section 32N,
(d) include any information relevant to the material falling within section 32O(2) in relation to—
(i) the applicant,
(ii) any person to be appointed by the applicant to manage the site, and
(iii) any other person whom the local authority is required to be satisfied is a fit and proper person in accordance with section 32D(1)(b) or (2)(b).

(3) An applicant must, either at the time of making the application or subsequently, give to the local authority such other information as the authority may reasonably require.

32C Fee for relevant permanent site application
(1) A relevant permanent site application must be accompanied by a fee of such amount (if any) as the relevant local authority may fix.

(2) An authority may fix different fees for different applications or types of application.

(3) A fee fixed by an authority must not exceed an amount which it considers represents the reasonable costs of an authority in deciding a relevant permanent site application.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations subject to the negative procedure make provision about the charging of fees under subsection (1).

(5) Regulations made under subsection (4) may in particular—
(a) provide for the fee not to exceed such amount as may be prescribed by the regulations,
(b) specify matters to be taken into account by an authority when fixing a fee.”.

Issue, renewal, transfer and transmission of a Part 1A site licence

After section 32C of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 54), insert—

“32D Issue and renewal of a Part 1A site licence
(1) A local authority may issue a Part 1A site licence if—
Part 5—Mobile home sites with permanent residents

(a) the applicant is, when the Part 1A site licence is issued, entitled to the benefit of planning permission for the use of the land as a relevant permanent site otherwise than by a development order, and

(b) the authority is satisfied—

(i) that the applicant is a fit and proper person to hold a site licence,

(ii) in the case where an applicant is not a natural person, that the individual who holds the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body is a fit and proper person in relation to a site licence,

(iii) that any person to be appointed by the applicant to manage the site is a fit and proper person to do so, and

(iv) in the case where a person to be appointed by the applicant to manage the site is not a natural person, that any individual who is to be directly concerned with the management of the site on behalf of that manager is a fit and proper person to do so.

(2) A local authority must renew a Part 1A site licence if—

(a) the applicant is, when the Part 1A site licence is renewed, entitled to the benefit of planning permission for the use of the land as a relevant permanent site otherwise than by a development order, and

(b) the authority is satisfied—

(i) that the applicant is a fit and proper person to hold a site licence,

(ii) in the case where an applicant is not a natural person, that the individual who holds the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body is a fit and proper person in relation to a site licence,

(iii) that any person appointed, or to be appointed, by the applicant to manage the site is a fit and proper person to do so, and

(iv) in the case where a person appointed, or to be appointed, by the applicant to manage the site is not a natural person, that any individual who is, or is to be, directly concerned with the management of the site on behalf of that manager is a fit and proper person to do so.

(3) The local authority must not issue a Part 1A site licence to a person whom the local authority knows has held a site licence which has been revoked under this Act less than 3 years before that time.

(4) Before refusing to issue or renew a Part 1A site licence, the authority must give to the applicant a notice stating that—

(a) it is considering refusing the application and its reasons for doing so, and

(b) the applicant has the right to make written representations to the authority before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(5) In making its decision under this section the local authority must consider the application and any representations made in accordance with subsection (4)(b).
32E Application to transfer a Part 1 A site licence

(1) This section applies where, under section 10(1), the holder of a Part 1A site licence seeks the consent of the local authority for the transfer of the licence to a person who is to become the occupier of the relevant permanent site (in this section the “transferee”).

(2) The local authority may refuse consent to the transfer on the ground that the authority is not satisfied—

(a) that the transferee is a fit and proper person to hold a site licence,

(b) in the case where the transferee is not a natural person, that the individual who holds the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body is a fit and proper person in relation to a site licence,

(c) that any person to be appointed by the transferee to manage the site is a fit and proper person to do so, and

(d) in the case where a person to be appointed by the transferee to manage the site is not a natural person, that any individual who is to be directly concerned with the management of the site on behalf of that manager is a fit and proper person to do so.

(3) The applicant and the transferee must, either at the time of making the application or subsequently, give to the local authority such information as the authority may reasonably require in order to determine if the persons mentioned in subsection (2) are fit and proper persons.

(4) Before refusing to consent to the transfer under subsection (2), the authority must give to the applicant a notice stating that—

(a) it is considering refusing the application and its reasons for doing so, and

(b) the applicant has the right to make written representations to the authority before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(5) In making its decision under this section the local authority must consider the application and any representations made in accordance with subsection (4)(b).

32F Time limit for determining application

(1) This section applies where a person—

(a) makes a relevant permanent site application to a local authority in accordance with section 32B, or

(b) makes an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E.

(2) The local authority must determine the application under section 32D or, as the case may be, sections 10 and 32E before the time limit specified under subsection (2A).

(2A) The Scottish Ministers must, by regulations subject to the negative procedure, specify a time limit for the purposes of each application to which this section applies (and in doing so may specify different limits for different applications or types of application).
(3) The period mentioned in subsection (2) may be extended by the sheriff, on summary application by the local authority, by such period as the sheriff thinks fit.

(4) The sheriff may not extend a period unless the local authority applies for the extension before the period expires.

(5) The applicant is entitled to be a party to any proceedings on such summary application.

(6) The sheriff’s decision on such summary application is final.

(7) If the local authority does not determine a relevant permanent site application within the period required by this section—

(a) the authority is to be treated as having issued a Part 1A site licence, on the day by which the authority was required to determine the application, and

(b) the relevant person is for all purposes to be treated as having been issued a Part 1A site licence by the local authority under section 32D.

(8) If the local authority does not determine an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E within the period required by this section, the authority is to be treated as having given its consent to the transfer on the day on which the application was made.

32G Local authority power to transfer licence where no application

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the holder of a Part 1A site licence does not seek the consent of the local authority for the transfer of the licence under section 10(1), and

(b) it appears to the authority that the licence holder is no longer the occupier of the relevant permanent site.

(2) The local authority may transfer the licence to a person whom the authority considers to be the occupier of the relevant permanent site (in this section the “transferee”).

(3) Before deciding to transfer the licence under subsection (2), the authority must give to the licence holder and the transferee a notice stating that—

(a) it is considering transferring the licence to the transferee under this section and its reasons for doing so, and

(b) the licence holder and the transferee each have the right to make written representations to the authority before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(4) In making its decision under this section the local authority must consider any representations made in accordance with subsection (3)(b).

(5) The licence holder and the transferee must give to the local authority such information as the authority may reasonably require in order to make a decision under this section.
(6) It is an offence for a person to knowingly or recklessly provide information which is false or misleading in a material respect to a local authority in purported compliance with a request under subsection (5).

(7) A person who commits an offence under subsection (6) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

32H Transfer of Part 1A site licences on death: relevant permanent sites
Where a Part 1A site licence is transferred to a person in accordance with section 10(4), that person must give to the local authority such information as the authority may reasonably require in order to make a determination under section 32L.

32I Notification of decision on Part 1A site licence
(1) A local authority must, as soon as practicable after making a decision mentioned in subsection (2), notify the persons mentioned in subsection (3) of—
   (a) the making of the decision, and
   (b) the right to appeal under section 32M.

(2) The decisions are—
   (a) the determination of a relevant permanent site application,
   (b) the determination of an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E,
   (c) the decision to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32G.

(3) The persons are—
   (a) in the case of a determination of a relevant permanent site application, the applicant,
   (b) in the case of a determination of an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E, the applicant and the transferee,
   (c) in the case of a decision of the local authority to transfer a licence under section 32G, the previous holder of the Part 1A site licence and the transferee.

(4) A local authority must give to the persons mentioned in subsection (3) its reasons for making a decision mentioned in subsection (2).”.

56 Duration of a Part 1A site licence
After section 32I of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 55), insert—

“32J Duration of a Part 1A site licence
(1) A Part 1A site licence—
   (a) comes into operation at the time specified in or determined under the licence, and
   (b) unless terminated by its revocation, continues in force until—
57 Duty to inform local authority where change

After section 32J of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 56), insert—

“32K Duty to inform local authority where change

(1) The holder of a Part 1A site licence must notify the local authority which issued the licence—

(a) of the appointment of any new person to manage the site, and

(b) if, in consequence of a change of circumstances, any information provided by the licence holder to the local authority by virtue of this Part becomes inaccurate.

(2) The notification must be made—

(a) in the case of an appointment mentioned in subsection (1)(a), no later than the day on which the appointment takes effect, and

(b) in any other case, before the end of the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which the inaccuracy arises.

(3) The licence holder must, either at the time of notifying the local authority or subsequently, give to the authority such other information in relation to the appointment as the authority may reasonably require.

(4) Where a local authority requests information under subsection (3), the licence holder must provide the information before the end of the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which the request is made.”.

58 Revocation of a Part 1A site licence: fit and proper person

After section 32K of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 57), insert—

“32L Revocation of a Part 1A site licence: fit and proper person

(1) A local authority which issued a Part 1A site licence may revoke the licence if the authority is satisfied—

(a) that the licence holder is not, or is no longer, a fit and proper person to hold a site licence,

(b) in the case where the licence holder is not a natural person, that the individual who holds the most senior position within the management structure of the relevant partnership, company or body is not, or is no longer, a fit and proper person in relation to a site licence,
(c) that any person appointed by the licence holder to manage the site is not, or is no longer, a fit and proper person to do so, or

(d) in the case where a person appointed by the licence holder to manage the site is not a natural person, that any individual who is directly concerned with the management of the site on behalf of that manager is not, or is no longer, a fit and proper person to do so.

(2) Where a local authority proposes to revoke a Part 1A site licence under this section, the authority must serve on the licence holder a notice stating that—

(a) it is considering revoking the licence under this section and its reasons for doing so, and

(b) the licence holder has the right to make written representations to the authority before the date which is specified in the notice (such date to be at least 28 days after the date on which the notice is given).

(3) In making its decision under this section the local authority must consider any representations made in accordance with subsection (2)(b).

(4) Where a local authority revokes a licence under this section, the authority must serve on the person who held the licence a notice which—

(a) states that the authority has revoked the licence,

(b) explains the right of appeal conferred by section 32M.

(5) Where a local authority revokes a licence under this section, the authority must give to the person who held the licence its reasons for doing so.”.

59 Appeals relating to a Part 1A site licence

After section 32L of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 58), insert—

“32M Appeals relating to a Part 1A site licence

(1) A person mentioned in subsection (2) may by summary application appeal to the sheriff against—

(a) the refusal by the local authority to issue or renew a Part 1A site licence following a relevant permanent site application,

(b) the determination by the local authority of an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E,

(c) the decision by the local authority to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32G,

(d) the decision by the local authority to revoke a Part 1A site licence under section 32L.

(2) The persons are—

(a) in the case of a determination of a relevant permanent site application, the applicant,

(b) in the case of a determination of an application for consent to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32E—

(i) the applicant,

(ii) the transferee,
(c) in the case of a decision by the local authority to transfer a licence mentioned in section 32G—
   (i) the previous holder of the Part 1A site licence,
   (ii) the transferee,

(d) in the case of a decision of the local authority to revoke a Part 1A site licence under section 32L, the person who held the licence.”.

60 Power to make provision in relation to procedure and appeals

After section 32M of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 59), insert—

“32N Power to make provision in relation to procedure and appeals

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, by regulations subject to the negative procedure, make provision in relation to—

   (aa) the procedure to be followed in relation to—

      (i) the issue, renewal, transfer, transmission and revocation of a Part 1A site licence,

      (ii) appeals under section 32M,

   (ab) the determination and consequences of an appeal under section 32M.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may in particular make provision for or in connection with—

   (a) the procedure to be followed by the person making an application for—

      (i) a new Part 1A site licence,

      (ii) the renewal of an existing Part 1A site licence which is due to expire,

      (iii) consent to transfer a Part 1A site licence,

   (b) the procedure to be followed by a person following the transfer of a licence,

   (c) the information to be provided in relation to an application mentioned in paragraph (a) or a transfer mentioned in section 32G or 32H,

   (d) the procedure to be followed in determining an application mentioned in paragraph (a) or in considering a transfer mentioned in section 32G or 32H,

   (e) the procedure to be followed after an application mentioned in paragraph (a) is determined or a transfer mentioned in section 32G or 32H is considered,

   (ea) the time limits for the giving of reasons under section 32I(4) and 32L(5),

   (g) the time limits applying in relation to appeals,

   (h) the procedure to be followed by the person making an appeal.”.
Fit and proper persons

61 Fit and proper person considerations

After section 32N of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 60), insert—

“Fit and proper persons

32O Fit and proper person considerations

(1) In deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, the local authority must have regard to all of the circumstances of the case, including any material falling within subsections (2) to (5).

(2) Material falls within this subsection if it shows that the person has—

(a) been convicted of an offence—

(i) involving fraud or other dishonesty,

(ii) involving violence,

(iii) involving drugs,

(iv) involving firearms,

(v) which is a sexual offence within the meaning of section 210A(10) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46),

(b) practised unlawful discrimination on the grounds of any of the protected characteristics in Part 2 of the Equality Act 2010 (c.15),

(c) contravened any provision of—

(i) the law relating to caravans,

(ii) the law relating to housing,

(iii) landlord and tenant law,

(ca) committed a breach of an agreement to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 applies,

(cb) contravened a direction made under section 37 of the Gas Act 1986 (c.44) (maximum prices for reselling gas),

(cc) contravened a direction made under section 44 of the Electricity Act 1989 (c.29) (maximum prices for reselling electricity),

(cd) contravened a charges scheme made under section 29A of the Water Industry (Scotland) Act 2002 (asp 3) (charges schemes) as it applied to the person by virtue of section 30(1) of that Act (maximum charges for services provided with help of Scottish Water),

(d) engaged in antisocial behaviour within the meaning of section 143 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

(e) breached the conditions of a site licence issued under Part 1 or Part 1A of this Act.

(2A) Material which shows that a person has a conviction which is a spent conviction for the purposes of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) does not fall within subsection (2).
(3) Material falls within this subsection if it relates to the failure by a person to provide information which that person is required to give to the local authority in accordance with this Part.

(4) Material falls within this subsection if it relates to a complaint made by a person of which the local authority is aware about antisocial behaviour within the meaning of section 143 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8) on the relevant permanent site.

(5) Material falls within this subsection if it is material of which the local authority is aware as a result of any other function carried out by the authority and it appears to the authority to be relevant to the question of whether the person is a fit and proper person.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may, by order subject to the affirmative procedure, modify this section by adding to, removing or varying any material in subsections (2) to (5).”.

62 Fit and proper person: criminal conviction certificate

After section 32O of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 61), insert—

“32P Fit and proper person: criminal conviction certificate

(1) A local authority may, in deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, require the person in respect of whom the decision is being made to provide the local authority with a criminal conviction certificate (within the meaning of section 112 of the Police Act 1997 (c.50)).

(2) A local authority may require a criminal conviction certificate to be provided under subsection (1) only if it has reasonable grounds to suspect that the information provided under this Part in relation to material falling within section 32O(2) is, or has become, inaccurate.”.

62A Fit and proper person: information sharing

After section 32P of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 62), insert—

“32PA Fit and proper person: information sharing

(1) A local authority may, for the purpose of another local authority deciding under this Part if a person is a fit and proper person, provide to that other authority information which falls within subsection (2).

(2) Information falls within this subsection if the local authority holding the information considers that—

(a) it is likely to be relevant to the other authority’s decision under this Part as to whether a person is a fit and proper person, and

(b) it ought to be provided for that purpose.

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) apply despite any duty of confidentiality owed to any person in respect of the information by the authority disclosing the information.”.
Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

63 Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

After section 32P of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 62), insert—

“Offences relating to relevant permanent sites

32Q Offences in connection with information requirements

(1) It is an offence for a person to knowingly or recklessly provide information which is false or misleading in a material respect to a local authority in purported compliance with—

(a) a requirement under section 32B,
(b) a requirement under section 32E(3),
(c) a requirement under section 32H,
(d) a requirement under section 32K.

(1A) It is an offence for a person, without reasonable excuse—

(a) to fail to notify a local authority in accordance with 32K(1) and (2), or
(b) to fail to provide information in accordance with section 32K(3) and (4).

(2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) or (1A) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

32R Relevant permanent sites: use without a licence

(1) It is an offence for the occupier of land to cause or permit that land to be used as a relevant permanent site unless—

(a) the occupier is the holder of a Part 1A site licence in relation to the site, or
(b) subsection (2) or (3) applies to that person.

(2) This subsection applies to a person from the day on which the person makes a relevant permanent site application to a local authority in accordance with section 32B until—

(a) that application is determined under section 32D,
(b) in the case of a refusal by the authority to issue or renew a Part 1A site licence under that section, the day on which the period during which the applicant may make an appeal under section 32M(1)(a) expires without an appeal being made, or
(c) where such an appeal is made, the day on which it is finally determined or abandoned.

(3) This subsection applies to a person from the day on which the person’s Part 1A site licence is revoked under section 32L until—

(a) the day on which the period during which the person can make an appeal under section 32M(1)(d) expires without an appeal being made, or
(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which it is finally determined or abandoned.
(4) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £50,000.

32S Relevant permanent sites: breach of licence conditions

(1) It is an offence for the holder of a Part 1A site licence to fail to comply with any condition of a Part 1A site licence issued in relation to the site.

(2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £10,000.”.

Local authority enforcement at relevant permanent sites

64 Improvement notices

After section 32T of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 63), insert—

“Local authority enforcement at relevant permanent sites

32U Breach of licence condition: improvement notice

(1) If it appears to a local authority which issued a Part 1A site licence that the licence holder is failing or has failed to comply with a condition of the Part 1A site licence, the authority may serve an improvement notice on the licence holder.

(2) An improvement notice is a notice which—

(a) sets out the condition in question and details of the failure to comply with it,

(b) requires the licence holder to take such steps as the local authority considers appropriate and as are specified in the notice in order to ensure that that condition is complied with,

(c) specifies the period within which those steps must be taken,

(d) explains the right of appeal conferred by subsection (3).

(3) The holder of a Part 1A site licence who has been served with an improvement notice may by summary application appeal to the sheriff against—

(a) the issue of that notice,

(b) the terms of that notice.

(3A) The period specified in an improvement notice under subsection (2)(c) must begin on the later of—

(a) the day on which the period during which the person may make an appeal under subsection (3) expires, or

(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which the appeal is finally determined or abandoned.

(4) A local authority may—

(a) suspend an improvement notice,

(b) revoke an improvement notice,

(c) vary an improvement notice by extending the period specified in the notice under subsection (2)(c).
(5) The power to suspend, revoke or vary an improvement notice is exercisable by the local authority—
   (a) on an application made by the licence holder, or
   (b) on the authority's own initiative.

(6) Where a local authority suspends, revokes or varies an improvement notice, the authority must notify the licence holder to whom the notice relates of the decision as soon as is reasonably practicable.

32V Improvement notice: offence

(1) It an offence for a licence holder who has been served with an improvement notice to fail to take the steps specified in the notice within the period so specified.

(3) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £10,000.

(4) In proceedings against a licence holder for an offence under subsection (1), it is a defence that the licence holder had a reasonable excuse for failing to take the steps referred to in subsection (1) within the period referred to in that subsection.

32W Local authority power to carry out steps in an improvement notice

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) an improvement notice has been served in relation to a relevant permanent site, and
   (b) the licence holder fails to take the steps specified in the notice within the period so specified.

(2) The local authority which issued the improvement notice may—
   (a) take any steps required by the improvement notice to be taken by the occupier, but which have not been so taken, and
   (b) take such further action as the authority considers appropriate for ensuring that the condition specified in the improvement notice is complied with.

(3) Where a local authority proposes to take action under subsection (2), the authority must serve on the occupier of the relevant permanent site a notice which—
   (a) identifies the land and the improvement notice to which it relates,
   (b) states that the authority intends to enter onto the land,
   (c) describes the action the authority intends to take on the land,
   (d) if the person whom the authority proposes to authorise to take the action on its behalf is not an officer of the authority, states the name of that person, and
   (e) sets out the dates and times on which it is intended that the action will be taken (in particular, when the authority intends to start taking the action and when it expects the action to be completed).
(4) The notice must be served sufficiently in advance of when the local authority intends to enter onto the land as to give the occupier of the relevant permanent site reasonable notice of the intended entry.”.

65 Penalty notices

After section 32W of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 64), insert—

“32X Penalty notice where no licence or breach of licence

(1) A local authority may serve a penalty notice on the occupier of a relevant permanent site if it appears to the local authority that the occupier—

(a) has caused or permitted the relevant permanent site to be used as a caravan site without being the holder of a Part 1A site licence in relation to the site, or

(b) has been served with an improvement notice and has failed to take the steps specified in the notice within the period so specified.

(2) A penalty notice is a notice which—

(a) sets out the condition in question and details of the failure to comply with it,

(b) explains the effect of subsection (3),

(c) specifies the period within which the penalty applies,

(d) explains the right of appeal conferred by subsection (6).

(3) Where a penalty notice is served under this section—

(a) no amount which a person is required to pay to the occupier of the relevant permanent site in respect of—

(i) the right to station a caravan on the site,

(ii) rent for the occupation of a caravan on the site, or

(iii) the use of the common areas of the site and their maintenance, is payable for the period specified in the notice under subsection (2)(c), and

(b) no commission on sale payable in accordance with paragraph 8 of Part 1 of Schedule 1 to the Mobile Homes Act 1983 (c.34) is payable to the occupier of the relevant permanent site in respect of a caravan on the site for the period specified in the notice under subsection (2)(c).

(3A) The period specified in a penalty notice under subsection (2)(c) must begin on the later of—

(a) the day on which the period during which the person may make an appeal under subsection (6) expires, or

(b) where such an appeal is made, the day on which the appeal is finally determined or abandoned.

(4) The local authority must, as soon as practicable after serving a notice under this section and in such manner as it thinks fit, notify the occupiers of caravans on the site of the existence of the notice.
(5) The ways in which a notification under subsection (4) may be carried out include by fixing a notice in a prominent place at or near the main entrance to the relevant permanent site.

(6) The occupier of a relevant permanent site in respect of which a local authority has served a penalty notice may, within the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which the notice was served, by summary application appeal to the sheriff against the decision.”.

66 Appointment of interim manager

After section 32X of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 65), insert—

“32Y Power to appoint interim manager

(1) A local authority which has issued a Part 1A site licence may apply to the sheriff for an order appointing an interim manager of the site.

(2) An order may be granted by the sheriff if—

(a) the authority has refused to renew a Part 1A site licence under section 32D,

(b) the authority has revoked a Part 1A site licence under section 32L, or

(c) the sheriff is satisfied that—

(i) the licence holder is failing or has failed, either seriously or repeatedly, to comply with a condition of the Part 1A site licence,

(ii) the site is not being managed by a person who is a fit and proper person to manage the site, or

(iii) there is no one managing the site.

(3) The appointment of an interim manager is to be on terms (including as to remuneration and expenses) specified in, or determined in accordance with, the appointment.

(4) The interim manager has—

(a) any power specified in the appointment, and

(b) any other power in relation to the management of the site required by the interim manager for the purposes specified in the appointment (including the power to enter into agreements and take other action on behalf of the occupier of the site).

(5) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations subject to the negative procedure make further provision about the appointment of an interim manager.

(6) Regulations under subsection (5) may, in particular, make provision in relation to—

(a) the procedure to be followed in making an application,

(b) the powers of an interim manager,

(c) property which vests in the interim manager on the interim manager’s appointment,

(d) the qualifications that must be held by any person appointed as interim manager,
Part 5—Mobile home sites with permanent residents

(e) the actions that must be carried out by an interim manager during and after the manager’s appointment,

(f) the payment and recovery of the remuneration and expenses of the interim manager,

(g) the assistance to be provided to the interim manager by the licence holder and other persons,

(h) powers of entry to the relevant permanent site,

(i) criminal offences which are to apply to failures to comply with the regulations,

(j) the procedure for and consequences of the termination of the interim manager’s appointment.”.

67 Emergency action

After section 32Y of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 66), insert—

“32Z Power to take emergency action

(1) A local authority which has issued a Part 1A site licence may take emergency action in relation to the site concerned if it appears to the authority that—

(a) the licence holder is failing or has failed to comply with a condition for the time being attached to the Part 1A site licence, and

(b) as a result of that failure there is an imminent risk of serious harm to the health or safety of any person who is or may be on the land.

(2) A local authority in whose area land is being used as a relevant permanent site may take emergency action in relation to the land concerned if it appears to the authority that—

(b) the occupier does not hold a Part 1A site licence in relation to the land, and

(c) there is an imminent risk of serious harm to the health or safety of any person who is or may be on the land.

(3) The emergency action a local authority may take is such action as appears to the authority to be necessary to remove the imminent risk of serious harm mentioned in subsection (1)(b) or, as the case may be, subsection (2)(c).

(4) Where a local authority proposes to take emergency action, the authority must serve on the licence holder or, as the case may be, the occupier of the relevant permanent site an emergency action notice.

(5) An emergency action notice is a notice which—

(a) identifies the land to which it relates,

(b) states that the authority intends to enter onto the land,

(c) describes the emergency action the authority intends to take on the land,

(d) if the person whom the authority proposes to authorise to take the action on its behalf is not an officer of the authority, states the name of that person, and
(e) specifies the powers under this section and section 26 as the powers under which the authority intends to enter onto the land.

(6) An emergency action notice may state that, if entry onto the land were to be refused, the authority would propose to apply for a warrant under section 26(2).

(7) The local authority must serve on the licence holder or, as the case may be, the occupier of the relevant permanent site an emergency action report within the period of 7 days beginning with the date when the authority starts taking the emergency action.

(8) An emergency action report is a notice which—

(a) describes the imminent risk of serious harm to the health or safety of persons who are or may be on the land,

(b) describes the emergency action which has been, and any emergency action which is to be, taken by the authority on the land,

(c) sets out when the authority started taking the emergency action and when the authority expects it to be completed,

(d) if the person whom the authority has authorised to take the action on its behalf is not an officer of the authority, states the name of that person, and

(e) explains the right of appeal conferred by subsection (10).

(9) The ways in which an emergency action notice and an emergency action report may be served include by fixing it in a prominent place at or near the main entrance to the relevant permanent site.

(10) A licence holder or, as the case may be, an occupier of land in respect of which a local authority has taken or is taking emergency action may by summary application appeal to the sheriff against the taking of the action by the authority.

(11) The grounds on which the appeal may be brought are—

(a) that there was no imminent risk of serious harm as mentioned in subsection (1)(b) or, as the case may be, subsection (2)(c) (or, where the action is still being taken, that there is no such risk),

(b) that the action the authority has taken was not necessary to remove the imminent risk of serious harm mentioned in subsection (1)(b) or, as the case may be, subsection (2)(c) (or, where the action is still being taken, that it is not necessary to remove the risk).”.

Powers of entry

After section 32Z of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 67), insert—

“32Z1 Powers of entry in relation to relevant permanent site

(1) Section 26 (as modified by section 32) applies in relation to a relevant permanent site—

(a) as if after every reference to “this Part” there were inserted “or Part 1A”,

(b) as if after paragraph (a) of subsection (1) there were inserted—“(aa) for the purpose of inspecting a relevant permanent site;”, and
(c) subject to the further modifications in this section.

(2) If, under an improvement notice or an emergency action notice, a local authority authorises a person other than an officer of the authority to take the action on its behalf, the reference in section 26(1) to an authorised officer of the local authority is to be read as including that person.

(3) In its application to an improvement notice, the requirement in section 26(1) to give 24 hours’ notice of the intended entry applies only in relation to the day on which the local authority intends to start taking the action on the relevant permanent site.

(4) In its application to an emergency action notice, section 26(1) has effect as if—
(a) the words “at all reasonable hours” were omitted, and
(b) the words from “Provided that” to the end were omitted.”.

69 Recovery of inspection and enforcement expenses

After section 32Z1 of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 68), insert—

“32Z2 Expenses of issuing notices

(1) This section applies where a local authority has served—
(a) an improvement notice,
(b) a penalty notice,
(c) an emergency action notice, or
(d) an emergency action report.

(2) The local authority may recover from the licence holder or, as the case may be, the occupier of the relevant permanent site—
(a) expenses incurred by the authority in deciding whether to serve the notice or report,
(b) expenses incurred by the authority in preparing and serving the notice or report, and
(c) interest, at such reasonable rate as the authority may determine, in respect of the period beginning on a date specified by the authority until the whole amount is paid.

(3) The expenses referred to in subsection (2) include in particular the costs of obtaining expert advice (including legal advice).

32Z3 Expenses of taking action under improvement notice or emergency action notice

(1) A local authority which has taken action in accordance with an improvement notice or an emergency action notice may recover from the licence holder or, as the case may be, the occupier of the relevant permanent site—
(a) expenses incurred by the authority in deciding whether to take the action,
(b) expenses incurred by the authority in taking the action, and
(c) interest, at such reasonable rate as the authority may determine, in respect of the period beginning on a date specified by the authority until the whole amount is paid.

(2) The expenses referred to in subsection (1) include in particular the costs of obtaining expert advice (including legal advice).

32Z4 Expenses of local authority in relation to Part 1A licences

The local authority which issued a Part 1A site licence may require the licence holder to pay the amount of any expenses incurred by the authority in relation to—

(a) inspecting a relevant permanent site for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is, or has been, any contravention of the provisions of this Act,
(b) assessing or investigating compliance by the licence holder with the provisions of this Act following an inspection.”.

Miscellaneous

69A Offences by bodies corporate etc. under Part 1A of the 1960 Act

After section 32Z4 of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 69), insert—

“Miscellaneous

32Z4A Offences by bodies corporate etc.

(1) Where—

(a) an offence under this Part has been committed by a body corporate or a Scottish partnership or other unincorporated association, and
(b) it is proved that the offence was committed with the consent or connivance of, or was attributable to any neglect on the part of—

(i) a relevant individual, or
(ii) an individual purporting to act in the capacity of a relevant individual,

the individual (as well as the body corporate, partnership or, as the case may be, other unincorporated association) commits the offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(2) In subsection (1), “relevant individual” means—

(a) in relation to a body corporate—

(i) a director, manager, secretary or other similar officer of the body,
(ii) where the affairs of the body are managed by its members, the members,

(b) in relation to a Scottish partnership, a partner,
(c) in relation to an unincorporated association other than a Scottish partnership, a person who is concerned in the management or control of the association.”.

70 Part 1A of the 1960 Act: miscellaneous provision

After section 32Z4 of the 1960 Act (inserted by section 69), insert—

“32Z5 Interpretation of Part 1A

(1) In this Part—

“emergency action notice” has the meaning given by section 32Z(5),

“emergency action report” has the meaning given by section 32Z(8),

“excepted permission” means a permission (by virtue of planning permission or a site licence under Part 1) to station a caravan on the land for human habitation all year round, if the caravan is, or is to be, authorised to be occupied by—

(a) the occupier,

(b) a person employed by the occupier but who does not occupy the caravan under an agreement to which section 1(1) of the Mobile Homes Act 1983 (c.34) applies,

“improvement notice” has the meaning given by section 32U(2),

“licence holder” means the person holding the Part 1A site licence,

“Part 1A site licence” has the meaning given by section 32A(1)(c),

“penalty notice” has the meaning given by section 32X(2),

“planning permission” means planning permission under Part 3 of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1997 (c.8),

“relevant permanent site” means land in respect of which a site licence is required under Part 1, other than land for which the relevant planning permission or the site licence—

(a) is expressed to be granted for holiday use only,

(b) is otherwise so expressed or subject to conditions that there are times of the year when no caravan may be stationed on the land for human habitation, or

(c) would meet the conditions in paragraph (a) or (b) if any excepted permission is disregarded,

“relevant permanent site application” means, irrespective of the conditions in the relevant planning permission, an application for the issue or renewal of a Part 1A site licence authorising the use of land as a caravan site, other than an application for a licence—

(a) to be expressed to be granted for holiday use only,

(b) to be otherwise so expressed or subject to conditions that there will be times of the year when no caravan may be stationed on the land for human habitation, or
Part 5—Mobile home sites with permanent residents

(c) which would meet the conditions in paragraph (a) or (b) if any part of the application for excepted permission were disregarded.

(2) Any reference in this Part to the sheriff is to the sheriff having jurisdiction in the place where the relevant permanent site is situated.

(3) Otherwise, words and expressions (as modified by section 32) have the same meaning in this Part as in Part 1.

32Z5A Guidance

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, after consulting such persons as they consider appropriate, publish guidance about the operation of this Part.

(2) A local authority must have regard to any guidance published when carrying out its functions under this Part.”.

71 Transitional provision for existing site licences

(1) This section applies to a site licence issued under the 1960 Act which—

(a) was issued before the day on which section 56 comes into force in respect of land which is a relevant permanent site,

(b) is in force on that day.

(2) The site licence continues in force until the earliest of—

(a) the end of the period of 2 years beginning with the day on which section 56 comes into force,

(b) the day on which the licence is revoked under, or expires in accordance with, the provisions of the 1960 Act, or

(c) the day on which a Part 1A site licence is issued in relation to the site.

(3) During the period for which a site licence continues in force under this section, the provisions of Part 1A of the 1960 Act do not apply to the site licence or in respect of the land which is a relevant permanent site.

(4) In this section, “Part 1A site licence” and “relevant permanent site” have the same meanings as in section 32Z5 of the 1960 Act (as inserted by section 70).

71A Agreements to which the Mobile Homes Act 1983 applies

In Schedule 1 to the Mobile Homes Act 1983 (c.34)—

(a) after paragraph 1, insert—

“1A (1) The right to station the mobile home under in paragraph 1 is not affected by—

(a) the expiry of a Part 1A site licence in accordance with section 32J(1)(b)(ii) of the 1960 Act,

(b) the refusal to issue or renew a Part 1A site licence under section 32D of the 1960 Act,

(c) the revocation of a Part 1A site licence under section 32L of the 1960 Act, or

(d) the expiry of a site licence in accordance with section 71(2) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014 (asp 00).
(2) Sub-paragraph (1) applies in relation to agreements that were made at any time before the day on which that sub-paragraph comes into force (as well as in relation to agreements made on or after that day).

(3) In this paragraph—

“the 1960 Act” means the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (c.62), and

“Part 1A site licence” has the same meaning as in section 32Z5 of the 1960 Act.”;

(b) in paragraph 23, after sub-paragraph (1)(a) insert—

“(aa) no regard may be had to any costs paid, or to be paid, by the owner in connection with expenses recovered by a local authority under—

(i) section 32Z2(2) of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960,
(ii) subsection (1)(a) or (c) of section 32Z3 of that Act, or
(iii) section 32Z4 of that Act,

(ab) no regard may be had to any costs paid, or to be paid, by the owner in connection with the owner being convicted of an offence under Part 1A of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960.”.

PART 6

PRIVATE HOUSING CONDITIONS

72 Tenement management scheme

(1) In the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 11)—

(a) in section 4(14) (defined terms), after “section” insert “and section 4A”,

(b) after section 4, insert—

“4A Power of local authority to pay share of scheme costs

(1) The local authority for the area in which a tenement is situated may pay a sum representing an owner’s share of scheme costs if that owner—

(a) is unable or unwilling to do so, or

(b) cannot, by reasonable inquiry, be identified or found.

(2) But a local authority may not pay a sum representing an owner’s share of scheme costs which are attributable to a scheme decision mentioned in rule 3.1(e) of the Tenement Management Scheme.

(3) For the purposes of this section an owner’s share of any scheme costs is to be determined in accordance with—

(a) the Tenement Management Scheme as it applies to the owner’s tenement, or

(b) where a tenement burden provides that the entire liability for those scheme costs (in so far as liability for those costs is not to be met by someone other than an owner) is to be met by one or more of the owners, that burden.
(4) Before making a payment under this section, the local authority must give notice to the owner who has failed to pay a share of any scheme costs.

(5) The local authority may recover from the owner who failed to pay a share of any scheme costs any—
   (a) payments made under this section, and
   (b) administrative expenses incurred by it in connection with the making of the payment.

(6) This section is without prejudice to any entitlement to recover sums in accordance with section 11 or 12.”

(c) in section 13(1)(a) (persons who may register a notice of potential liability for costs), after paragraph (ii) insert—
   “(iiia) a local authority entitled to recover costs under section 4A(5),”

(d) in rule 5 of schedule 1 (redistribution of share of costs), after “then” insert “(unless that share has been paid by the local authority under section 4A),” and

(e) in rule 8.4 of schedule 1 (enforcement by third party), after “concerned” insert “and a local authority entitled to recover costs under section 4A(5)”.

(2) In section 172 of the 2006 Act (repayment charges)—
   (a) in subsection (1), for “or paragraph 6(1) of schedule 5” substitute “, paragraph 6(1) of schedule 5 or section 4A(5) of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 11),”

   (b) in subsection (2)(a), for “or paragraph 6(1) of schedule 5” substitute “, section 61(3A), subsection (6A) below, paragraph 6(1) of schedule 5 or section 4A(5) of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004”, and

   (c) after subsection (6A), insert—
      “(6B) Subsection (6A)(c) does not apply where the recoverable amount relates to a sum the local authority is entitled to recover under section 4A(5) of the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 11).”

(3) After section 174 of the 2006 Act, insert—

“174A Repayment charges: registered social landlords

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision allowing a registered social landlord to make in favour of itself a charge to recover a sum which—
   (a) the registered social landlord is entitled to recover from an owner of a flat in a tenement, and

   (b) represents the owner’s share of scheme costs as determined in accordance with section 4A(3) of the 2004 Act.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may, in particular—
   (a) apply (with or without modifications), or make provision similar to, any provision of or made under this Part,

   (b) prescribe conditions which must apply before a charge can be made in relation to a sum mentioned in subsection (1), including conditions relating to—
(i) the registered social landlord which may make a charge,
(ii) the circumstances leading to the sum becoming recoverable by the registered social landlord,
(c) modify the Tenement Management Scheme or its operation,
(d) make provision about rights of appeal which apply in relation to—
   (i) the decision to impose a charge,
   (ii) the terms of the charge.

(3) Before making regulations under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult—
   (a) such bodies representing local authorities,
   (b) such bodies representing registered social landlords,
   (c) such other persons,
as they think fit.

(4) Regulations under subsection (1) may modify any enactment (including this Act).

(5) In this section—
   “owner of a flat in a tenement” is to be construed in accordance with the definition of “owner” in section 28 of the 2004 Act,
   “registered social landlord” means a body registered in the register maintained under section 20(1) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 17),
   “Tenement Management Scheme” has the same meaning as in the 2004 Act, and
   “the 2004 Act” means the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 11).”.

(4) In section 191(5) of the 2006 Act (affirmative procedure for regulations), for “or 121(1)” substitute “, 121(1) or 174A(1)”.

72A Notice of potential liability for costs: notice of discharge

(1) In section 10A of the Title Conditions (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 9) (notice of potential liability for costs: further provision), after subsection (3) insert—
   “(3A) The owner of a burdened property may apply to register a notice (a “notice of discharge”) if—
   (a) a notice of potential liability for costs in relation to the property has not expired,
   (b) the liability for costs under section 10(2) to which the notice of potential liability relates has, in relation to the property which is the subject of the application, been fully discharged, and
   (c) the person who registered the notice of potential liability for costs consents to the application.

(3B) A notice of discharge—
(a) must be in the form prescribed by order made by the Scottish Ministers, and

(b) on being registered, discharges the notice of potential liability for costs as it applies to the property which is the subject of the application.”.

(2) In the Tenements (Scotland) Act 2004—

(a) in section 13 (notice of potential liability for costs: further provision), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) The owner of a flat may apply to register a notice (a “notice of discharge”) if—

(a) a notice of potential liability for costs in relation to the flat has not expired,

(b) the liability for costs under section 12(2) to which the notice of potential liability relates has, in relation to the flat which is the subject of the application, been fully discharged, and

(c) the person who registered the notice of potential liability for costs consents to the application.

(3B) A notice of discharge—

(a) must be in the form prescribed by order made by the Scottish Ministers, and

(b) on being registered, discharges the notice of potential liability for costs as it applies to the flat which is the subject of the application.”, and

(b) in section 29(1) (interpretation), in the definition of “register” after “costs” insert “, a notice of discharge”.

73 Work notices

In section 30(1) of the 2006 Act (work which may be required under a work notice)—

(a) the word “or” at the end of paragraph (a) is repealed, and

(b) at the end of paragraph (b), insert “, or

(c) otherwise improving the security or safety of any house (whether or not situated in an HRA).”.

74 Maintenance orders

In section 42(2) of the 2006 Act (circumstances in which a maintenance order may be made)—

(a) the words “the local authority considers” are repealed,

(b) before paragraph (a), insert—

“(za) a work notice has been served in relation to the house and no certificate has been granted under section 60 in relation to the work required by that notice,”, and

(c) at the beginning of each of paragraphs (a) and (b), insert “the local authority considers”.
75  Maintenance plans

(1) In section 24 of the Building (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 8) (information in the building standards register)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) the word “and” at the end of paragraph (c) is repealed, and

(ii) after paragraph (d), insert “, and

(c) decisions to approve, devise, vary or revoke maintenance plans under Part 1 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006.”;

(b) in subsection (2)(a), for “(d)” substitute “(e)”.

(2) In section 47 of the 2006 Act (variation and revocation of maintenance plans)—

(a) in subsection (3), after “if” insert “subsection (3A) applies or if”, and

(b) after subsection (3), insert—

“(3A) This subsection applies where the local authority is satisfied that a property factor (within the meaning of section 2(1) of the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011 (asp 8)) has been appointed to manage or maintain the premises to which the plan relates.”.

(3) In section 61(1) of the 2006 Act (registration in the appropriate land register), paragraphs (e) and (f) are repealed.

76  Non-residential premises: repayment charges

(1) In section 172 of the 2006 Act (repayment charges)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “living accommodation” in both places where it occurs substitute “property”,

(b) in subsection (5), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”,

(c) in subsection (6A), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”,

(d) in subsection (7), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”,

(e) in subsection (8), for “living accommodation” in both places where it occurs substitute “property”,

(f) after subsection (8), insert—

“(9) In this section and in section 173, “property” means a place which is—

(a) living accommodation, or

(b) non-residential premises within the meaning of section 69(3).”.

(2) In section 173 of the 2006 Act (effect of registering repayment charges etc.)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”,

(b) in subsection (2), for “living accommodation” in each place where it occurs substitute “property”,

(c) in subsection (3), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”, and

(d) in subsection (4), for “living accommodation” substitute “property”.

76ZA Repayment charges: recovery of repayable amount

(1) In section 172 of the 2006 Act (repayment charges)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (b) is repealed, and
(ii) after paragraph (b), insert—

“(c) providing that the repayable amount is payable in the number of equal annual instalments and on the date in each year determined under subsection (3)(a),

(d) providing that in default of such payment each instalment, together with any amount recoverable in respect of that instalment under subsection (6A), is to be separately recoverable as a debt, and

(e) providing that if immediately after the final instalment falls due any balance of the repayable amount remains unpaid, that balance is immediately due for repayment and is recoverable as a debt.”,

(b) for subsection (3), substitute—

“(3) The local authority must—

(a) determine—

(i) the number of equal annual instalments, being no fewer than 5 and no more than 30, in which the repayable amount is to be paid, and

(ii) the date in each year on which the instalment becomes due, and

(b) notify the owner of its determination under paragraph (a).” , and

(c) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The owner of a property who is liable for the repayable amount does not, by virtue only of ceasing to be such an owner, cease to be liable for the repayable amount.”.

(2) After section 172 of the 2006 Act, insert—

“172A Repayment charge: appeals to the sheriff

(1) A person aggrieved by a determination under section 172(3)(a)(i) may appeal to the sheriff.

(2) On an appeal under this section the sheriff may make such order relating to the number of annual instalments as the sheriff thinks fit.

(3) The decision of the sheriff on appeal under this section is final.”.

76A Charging orders

(1) In Schedule 9 to the 1987 Act (recovery of expenses by charging order)—

(a) in paragraph 2, the words “, and shall commence from the date of the order and be payable for a term of 30 years to the local authority” are repealed,

(b) after paragraph 2, insert—

“2A The local authority must—

(a) determine—
(i) the term of the charging order, being no fewer than 5 years and no more than 30 years, and

(ii) the date in each year on which the annuity is payable, and

(b) notify the owner of its determination under paragraph (a).

Section 187 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1) applies to a notification under paragraph 2A(b) as if the notification were a formal communication referred to in section 187(1) of that Act.”, and

(zc) after paragraph 3, insert—

“3A A charging order must provide—

(a) that the annuity is payable for the term and on the date in each year determined under paragraph 2A(a),

(b) that in default of payment of an annuity, the annuity is to be separately recoverable as a debt, and

(c) that if immediately after the final annuity falls due any balance of the expenses charged by the order remains unpaid, that balance is immediately due for repayment and is recoverable as a debt.

3B(1) A person aggrieved by a determination under paragraph 2A(a)(i), may appeal to the sheriff.

(2) On an appeal under this paragraph the sheriff may make such order relating to the term of the charging order as the sheriff thinks fit.

(3) The decision of the sheriff on appeal under this paragraph is final.”,

(a) in paragraph 4, sub-paragraph (b)(i) is repealed,

(c) after paragraph 5, insert—

“5A The owner of the premises on which an annuity has been charged by a charging order does not, by virtue only of ceasing to be such an owner, cease to be liable for each annuity charged.”,

(d) paragraph 6 is repealed.

(2) In section 108(2) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45) (recovery of expenses by charging order), for the words from “modifications” to “paragraph” in the last place where it appears substitute “modification, that is to say, in sub-paragraph (b)(ii) of paragraph 4 of that Schedule”.

(3) In section 19(3) of the Crofters (Scotland) Act 1993 (c.44) (priority of sums due), the words “heads (i), (ii) and (iii) of” are repealed.

PART 7

MISCELLANEOUS

77 Right to redeem heritable security after 20 years: power to exempt

(1) In section 11 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974 (c.38) (right to redeem heritable security after 20 years where security subjects used as a private dwelling), after subsection (3C) insert—
“(3D) The right to redeem a heritable security conferred by this section does not apply to a heritable security which is in security of a debt of a description specified in an order made by the Scottish Ministers.

(3E) An order under subsection (3D) may—

(a) disapply the right to redeem conferred by this section subject to conditions or restrictions,

(b) restrict the disapplication of the right to redeem conferred by this section to—

(i) specified descriptions of debt,

(ii) specified creditors, or creditors of specified descriptions,

(ii) specified heritable securities, or heritable securities of specified descriptions,

(c) prescribe circumstances in which the disapplication of the right to redeem conferred by this section is to apply or cease to apply.

(3F) An order under subsection (3D) is subject to the negative procedure.”.

(2) In section 21 of the Land Tenure Reform (Scotland) Act 1974 (provisions for contracting out to be void), for “and 11(3A)” substitute “, 11(3A) and 11(3D)”.

77A First-tier Tribunal: disqualification of members from exercise of certain functions

(1) This section applies to the following functions and jurisdictions of the First-tier Tribunal—

(a) a function or jurisdiction of the sheriff transferred to the Tribunal under section 17 or by virtue of Part 1 of schedule 1,

(b) a function conferred on the Tribunal, by virtue of Part 3 and Parts 2 to 4 of schedule 1, by—

(i) the 2004 Act,

(ii) the 2006 Act,

(c) a function conferred on the Tribunal by or under Part 4.

(2) A member of the First-tier Tribunal is disqualified from exercising a function or jurisdiction to which this section applies if the member is—

(a) a member of the House of Commons,

(b) a member of the Scottish Parliament,

(c) a member of the European Parliament,

(d) a Minister of the Crown,

(e) a member of the Scottish Government.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify subsection (2) by—

(a) adding a disqualification to,

(b) varying the description of a disqualification for the time being mentioned in,

(c) removing a disqualification from,

that subsection.
77B Private rented housing panel: disqualification from membership

In Schedule 4 to the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984, after paragraph 1 insert—

“1A (1) A person is disqualified from appointment to, and from remaining a member of, the private rented housing panel if the person is or becomes—

(a) a member of the House of Commons,
(b) a member of the Scottish Parliament,
(c) a member of the European Parliament,
(d) a Minister of the Crown,
(e) a member of the Scottish Government.

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by order modify sub-paragraph (1) by—

(a) adding a disqualification to,
(b) varying the description of a disqualification for the time being mentioned in,
(c) removing a disqualification from,

that sub-paragraph.

(3) An order under sub-paragraph (2) is subject to the affirmative procedure.”.

78 Delegation of certain functions

(1) In section 21 of the 2006 Act (panel and committees), after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) The president may delegate the president’s functions under section 23 to—

(a) the vice-president of the panel, or
(b) such other member of the panel as the president thinks fit.

(8B) A delegation under subsection (8A) does not affect the president’s—

(a) responsibility for the carrying out of delegated functions, or
(b) ability to carry out delegated functions.”.

(2) In section 16 of the Property Factors (Scotland) Act 2011 (asp 8) (panel and committees), after subsection (7) insert—

“(8) The president may delegate the president’s functions under section 18 to—

(a) the vice-president of the panel, or
(b) such other member of the panel as the president thinks fit.

(9) A delegation under subsection (8) does not affect the president’s—

(a) responsibility for the carrying out of delegated functions, or
(b) ability to carry out delegated functions.”.

79 Scottish Housing Regulator: transfer of assets following inquiries

In section 67 of the 2010 Act (transfer of assets following inquiries)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—
“(4A) A duty on the Regulator to consult in accordance with paragraph (i) or (ii) of subsection (4)(a) does not apply where the Regulator considers that—

(a) the registered social landlord’s viability is in jeopardy for financial reasons,

(b) a person could take a step in relation to the registered social landlord which would require to be notified to the Regulator under section 73,

(c) the direction would substantially reduce the likelihood of a person taking such a step, and

(d) there is insufficient time to comply with that duty and make a direction which would substantially reduce that likelihood.

(4B) The Regulator must—

(a) issue guidance on subsection (4A), such guidance to include—

(i) the circumstances in which it considers that subsection (4A) is likely to apply,

(ii) the actions it expects to take in those circumstances, and

(iii) how, in those circumstances, it intends to communicate with any of the persons mentioned in paragraph (b) who are affected by its actions, and

(b) before issuing or revising any guidance, consult—

(i) tenants of registered social landlords or their representatives,

(ii) registered social landlords or their representatives, and

(iii) secured creditors of registered social landlords or their representatives.

(4C) Where the Regulator proposes to direct a transfer of some (but not all) of a registered social landlord’s assets, the Regulator must—

(a) before making a direction, obtain an independent valuation of those assets, and

(b) when making a direction, have regard to that valuation.”

(b) in subsection (6), paragraph (a) and the word “and” immediately following it are repealed.

79A Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

(1) After section 104 of the 2010 Act insert—

“Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

104A Registered social landlord becoming a subsidiary of another body

(1) This section applies to a registered social landlord which is—

(a) a registered society, or

(b) a registered company.

(2) An arrangement under which the registered social landlord is to become a subsidiary of a body of which it is not currently a subsidiary has effect only if the Regulator consents to that arrangement before it is completed.
(3) Chapter 3 of Part 10 makes provision for Regulator consent for the purpose of this section.”.

(2) After section 124 of the 2010 Act insert—

“CHAPTER 3

REGISTERED SOCIAL LANDLORD BECOMING A SUBSIDIARY OF ANOTHER BODY

124A Regulator’s consent

(1) The special procedure set out in sections 114 to 121 of Chapter 1 applies in relation to an arrangement to which the Regulator’s consent is required under section 104A as it applies in relation to a disposal to which Chapter 1 applies.

(2) The Regulator must determine that the special procedure is not to apply or is to cease to apply where the Regulator considers that—

(a) the registered social landlord’s viability is in jeopardy for financial reasons,

(b) a person could take a step in relation to the registered social landlord which would require to be notified to the Regulator under section 73, and

(c) the determination under this subsection would substantially reduce the likelihood of a person taking such a step.

(3) Where the Regulator makes a determination under subsection (2), the Regulator may give or refuse consent to the arrangement.

124B Purchaser protection

Failure by the Regulator or by a registered social landlord to comply with any provision of sections 114 to 121 of Chapter 1 in relation to an arrangement under which the registered social landlord is to become a subsidiary of a body of which it is not currently a subsidiary does not invalidate the Regulator’s consent to the arrangement.”.

(3) In section 164 of the 2010 Act (connected bodies), the definition of “subsidiary” is repealed.

(4) In section 165 of the 2010 Act (interpretation), after the definition of “social landlord” insert—

““subsidiary” has the same meaning as in the Companies Act 2006 (c.46) or, as the case may be, the Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies and Credit Unions Act 1968 (c.55)”.

80 Repeal of defective designation provisions

(1) Part 14 of the 1987 Act (assistance for owners of defective housing) is repealed.

(2) Schedule 20 to the 1987 Act (assistance by way of repurchase) is repealed.

(3) Schedule 21 to the 1987 Act (dwellings included in more than one designation) is repealed.
PART 8

GENERAL

81 Interpretation

In this Act—

“the 1960 Act” means the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 (c.62),
“the 1987 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 (c.26),
“the 2001 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10),
“the 2004 Act” means the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),
“the 2006 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1),
“the 2010 Act” means the Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 17),
“First-tier Tribunal” means the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland.

82 Subordinate legislation

(1) Any power of the Scottish Ministers to make an order or regulations under this Act includes power to make—

(a) different provision for different purposes or different areas,
(b) incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision.

(2) Orders or regulations—

(a) under section 21(1),
(aa) under section 25A(1),
(b) under section 30(4),
(ba) under section 41(1) which set out the first code of practice or replace the code of practice,
(c) under section 51(3)(b),
(ca) under section 77A(3),
(d) under section 83(1) containing provisions which add to, replace, or omit any part of the text of an Act,

are subject to the affirmative procedure.

(3) All other orders and regulations under this Act are subject to the negative procedure.

(3A) The Scottish Ministers must, before the end of the period of 18 months beginning with the day of Royal Assent, lay before the Scottish Parliament a draft Scottish statutory instrument containing regulations under section 41(1) setting out the first code of practice.

(4) This section does not apply to an order under section 85(3).
83 Ancillary provision

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make such incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision as they consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in connection with, any provision made by or under this Act.

(2) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment (including this Act).

84 Minor and consequential amendments

Schedule 2 contains minor amendments and amendments consequential on the provisions of this Act.

85 Commencement

(1) This section and sections 81, 82, 83 and 86 come into force on the day of Royal Assent.

(2) Section 77 comes into force at the end of the period of 2 months beginning with the day of Royal Assent.

(3) The other provisions of this Act come into force on such day as the Scottish Ministers may by order appoint.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may not appoint a day for section 1(1) to come into force which is before the end of the period of 2 years beginning with the day of Royal Assent.

(5) An order under subsection (3) may include transitional, transitory or saving provision as the Scottish Ministers consider necessary or expedient.

86 Short title

The short title of this Act is the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014.
SCHEDULE 1
(introduced by sections 17 to 20)

TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION TO FIRST-TIER TRIBUNAL

PART 1

REGULATED TENANCIES, PART VII CONTRACTS AND ASSURED TENANCIES

Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 (c.58)

The Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 is amended as follows.

1 In section 7(2), for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”.

2 In section 11—
   (a) in subsection (1)—
      (i) for “a court” substitute “the First-tier Tribunal”,
      (ii) for “the court”, in each place it occurs, substitute “the Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (2), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

3 In section 12—
   (a) in subsection (1), for “a court” substitute “the First-tier Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (2), for “court”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
   (c) in subsection (3), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (d) in subsection (4), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

4 In section 19(1), for “a court” substitute “the First-tier Tribunal”.

5 In section 21, for “court”, where it first occurs substitute, “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”.

6 In section 23(1), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

7 In section 25(1), the definition of “the court” is repealed.
In section 26, for “court”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”.

Section 27 is repealed.

In section 31(2)—

(a) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”;

(b) in paragraph (b), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 32—

(a) in subsection (4), for “sheriff”, in each place it occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”;

(b) in subsection (5), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 35(12), after “court” insert “or tribunal”.

In section 39—

(a) for “a court” substitute “the First-tier Tribunal”;

(b) for “the court”, in both places it occurs, substitute “the Tribunal”;

(c) for “direct the clerk of court to correct” substitute “order the correction of”.

In section 43B(4)(b), after “court” insert “or tribunal”.

In section 45(3), after “court” insert “or tribunal”.

In section 60(3)—

(a) for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”;

(b) the words from “and” to the end are repealed.

In section 64(6)(b), for “sheriff, on a summary application” substitute “First-tier Tribunal, on an application”.

In section 75—

(a) for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, in each subsequent place it occurs, substitute “Tribunal”;

(b) the title becomes “Power of First-tier Tribunal, in action for possession, to reduce period of notice to quit”.

In section 76—

(a) in subsection (2), for “sheriff may, if he thinks fit,” substitute “First-tier Tribunal may”;

(b) in subsection (3), for “sheriff” substitute “Tribunal”.

In section 77, for “sheriff court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 97—

(a) in subsection (8), for “sheriff” in both places it occurs substitute “First-tier Tribunal”;

(b) in subsection (9), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier tribunal”.

In section 102—
(a) before subsection (1) insert—

“(A1) The First-tier Tribunal has jurisdiction, either in the course of any proceedings relating to a dwelling-house or on an application made for the purpose by the landlord or the tenant, to determine any question as to the application of this Act (other than Part IX) or as to any matter which is or may become material for determining any such question.”,

(b) in subsection (1), before “this Act” insert “Part IX of”,

(c) subsection (2) is repealed,

(d) in subsection (3), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

25 In section 103, leave out subsections (1) and (2) and insert—

“An application to the sheriff under section 93(1) is to be made by way of summary application.”.

26 In section 104, before “this Act” insert “Part IX of”.

27 In section 115(1), after the definition of “converted tenancy” insert—

“First-tier Tribunal” means the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland;”.

28 In Schedule 1—

(a) in paragraph 3, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in paragraph 7, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

29 In Schedule 1A—

(a) in paragraph 3, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in paragraph 6, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

30 In paragraph 3 of Schedule 1B, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

31 In Schedule 2—

(a) in Cases 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21, for “court”, in each place it occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in paragraph 1 of Part III—

(i) for “a court” substitute “the First-tier Tribunal”,

(ii) for “the court” substitute “the Tribunal”,

(c) in Part IV—

(i) in paragraph 2, for “court”, in the first place it occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, in each subsequent place it occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,

(ii) in paragraph 3(1)(a), for “court” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(d) the title to Part I becomes “Cases in which First-tier Tribunal may order possession”,

(e) the title to Part II becomes “Cases in which First-tier Tribunal must order possession where dwelling-house subject to regulated tenancy”.
The Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 is amended as follows.

In section 16(2), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 17(8), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 18—
(a) in subsection (1), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”;
(b) in subsection (3)—
(i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”;
(ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
(c) in subsection (3A)—
(i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”;
(ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
(d) in subsection (4)—
(i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”;
(ii) for “he”, in both places it occurs, substitute “the Tribunal”,
(e) in subsection (4A), for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
(f) in subsection (6), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(g) in subsection (6A), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(h) in subsection (7), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 19—
(a) in subsection (1)—
(i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(ii) in paragraph (b), for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
(b) in subsection (2), for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,
(c) in subsection (5), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 20—
(a) in subsection (1)—
(i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
(b) in subsection (2)—
(i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
(c) in subsection (3)—
(i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(ii) for “he”, in both places it occurs, substitute “the Tribunal”,

(d) in subsection (4)—
   (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,

(e) in subsection (6), for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”,

(f) the title becomes “Extended discretion of First-tier Tribunal in possession claims”.

38 In section 21(3)—
   (a) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (b) for “he” substitute “Tribunal”.

39 In section 22—
   (a) in subsection (1), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (2), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

40 In section 25(7), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

41 In section 28(1), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

42 In section 29, for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal” and, where it second occurs, substitute “Tribunal”.

43 In section 30(2)—
   (a) the word “summary” is repealed,
   (b) in the opening words, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
   (c) in paragraph (a), for “him” substitute “the Tribunal”,
   (d) in paragraph (b), for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
   (e) in the closing words—
      (i) for “sheriff” substitute “Tribunal”,
      (ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”.

44 In section 33—
   (a) in subsection (1)—
      (i) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
      (ii) for “he” substitute “the Tribunal”,
   (b) in subsection (4), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

45 In section 36—
   (a) after subsection (4) insert—
“(4A) Any action to enforce liability arising from this section must be raised in the First-tier Tribunal unless the residential occupant’s claim is founded on the premises in question being subject to a Scottish secure tenancy or to a short Scottish secure tenancy (within the meaning of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10)).”,

(b) in subsection (6)(b), after “sheriff” insert “or First-tier Tribunal”,

(c) in subsection (6B), after “court”, in both places it occurs, insert “or, as the case may be, the First-tier Tribunal”.

In section 42(1)(c)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (i), for “court”, where it first occurs substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in sub-paragraph (ii), for “court”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(c) in sub-paragraph (iii), after “possession” insert “the First-tier Tribunal or, as the case may be;”.

In section 55(1), after the definition of “council tax” insert—

“‘First-tier Tribunal’ means the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland;”.

In Schedule 5—

(a) in grounds 1, 2, 5 and 7, for “sheriff”, in each place it occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) the title of Part I becomes “Grounds on which First-tier Tribunal must order possession”,

(c) the title of Part II becomes “Grounds on which First-tier Tribunal may order possession”,

(d) in paragraph 2 of Part III—

(i) for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(ii) in paragraph (b), for “sheriff” substitute “Tribunal”,

(iii) in the closing words, for “sheriff” substitute “Tribunal”,

(e) in paragraph 3(1)(a) of that Part, for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”.

PART 2

REPAIRING STANDARD

Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1)

The 2006 Act is amended as follows.

In section 24(7)—

(a) for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,

(b) in paragraph (a), for “sheriff’s” substitute “Tribunal’s”.

In section 194, after the definition of “disabled person” insert—

“‘First-tier Tribunal’ means the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland,”.
Housing (Scotland) Bill
Schedule 1—Transfer of jurisdiction to First-tier Tribunal
Part 3—Right to adapt rented houses

Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1)

The 2006 Act is amended as follows.

In section 64—
(a) subsection (6) is repealed,
(b) in subsection (7), for “(5) or, as the case may be, (6)” substitute “or (5)”.

Subsections (3) and (4) of section 65 are repealed.
Section 67 is repealed.

Part 4

LANDLORD REGISTRATION

Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8)

The 2004 Act is amended as follows.

In section 92—
(a) subsection (4) is repealed,
(b) in subsection (5)—
(i) for “sheriff”, where it first occurs, substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(iii) the words “shall be made to the sheriff principal and” are repealed,
(c) in subsection (6), for “sheriff principal” substitute “Upper Tribunal”.

In section 92ZA—
(a) in subsection (1)(b)—
(i) in sub-paragraph (i), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(ii) in sub-paragraph (ii), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(iii) in sub-paragraph (ii)(A), for “sheriff’s” substitute “First-tier Tribunal’s”,
(iv) in sub-paragraph (ii)(B), for “sheriff principal” substitute “Upper Tribunal”,
(b) in subsection (2)(b)—
(i) in sub-paragraph (i), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(ii) in sub-paragraph (ii), for “sheriff” substitute “First-tier Tribunal”,
(iii) in sub-paragraph (ii)(A), for “sheriff’s” substitute “First-tier Tribunal’s”,
(iv) in sub-paragraph (ii)(B), for “sheriff principal” substitute “Upper Tribunal”.

In section 97—
(a) in subsection (6), for “court” substitute “tribunal”,
(b) in subsection (7), for “court” substitute “tribunal”.
In section 101(1)—
   (a) before the definition of “house”, insert—
       “First-tier Tribunal” means the First-tier Tribunal for Scotland,”,
   (b) after the definition of “unconnected person”, insert—
       “Upper Tribunal” means the Upper Tribunal for Scotland,”.

SCHEDULE 2
(introduced by section 84)

MINOR AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 (c.65)

1 Section 156(4) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 is repealed.

Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981 (c.59)

2 Section 13(11) of the Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981 is repealed.

Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 (c.58)

3 In Case 7 of Part 1 of Schedule 2 to the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984—
   (a) the word “either” is repealed,
   (b) paragraph (b) and the word “or” immediately preceding it are repealed.

Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 (c.26)

4 (1) The 1987 Act is amended as follows.
   (2) In section 19 of the 1987 Act—
       (a) in subsection (1), for “local authority or a registered social landlord” substitute “social landlord”,
       (b) in subsection (2)—
           (i) for “housing provider” substitute “social landlord”,
           (ii) for “housing providers” substitute “social landlords”,
       (c) for subsection (3) substitute—
           “(3) In this Part, “social landlord” means any local authority or any registered social landlord.”.
   (3) In section 20(2)—
       (a) for “local authority and a registered social landlord” substitute “social landlord”,
       (b) in paragraph (b), after sub-paragraph (ii) insert—
           “(iia) that a dissolution of a civil partnership or a decree of separation of civil partners be obtained, or”.
(4) In section 21(3), paragraph (ia) and the word “and” at the end of that paragraph are repealed.

(4A) In section 24(5)(d), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.

(4B) In section 31(5)(c), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.

(5) In section 82—

(a) the words “this Part and in” are repealed, and

(b) the definitions of “application to purchase”, “heritable proprietor”, “housing co-operative”, “offer to sell”, “police authority” and “secure tenancy” are repealed.

(6) The title to section 82 becomes “Interpretation of sections 14, 19 and 20”.

(7) In section 338(1)—

(a) in the definition of “house”, the words “(except in relation to Part XIV)” are repealed,

(b) the definition of “secure tenancy” is repealed.

Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 (c.43)

5  (1) The Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 42(1)(d), the words “or in pursuance of section 282(3)(b) of that Act (grant of a tenancy upon acquisition by public sector authority of defective dwelling)” are repealed.

(3) Paragraph 7 of Schedule 2 is repealed.

(4) Paragraphs 19 to 26 of Schedule 17 are repealed.

Local Government and Housing Act 1989 (c.42)

6  Section 166(1) to (5) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 is repealed.

Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 (c.28)

7  Section 156 of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993 is repealed.

Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 (c.39)

8  Paragraph 152(6) of Schedule 13 to the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 is repealed.

Abolition of Feudal Tenure etc. (Scotland) Act 2000 (asp 5)

9  Paragraph 48(3) of schedule 12 to the Abolition of Feudal Tenure etc. (Scotland) Act 2000 is repealed.

Housing (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 10)

10 (1) The 2001 Act is amended as follows.

(1A) In section 5(4)(a), for “or 2” substitute “, 2 or 2A”.
(2) Section 23(6)(d) is repealed.
(3) Sections 42 to 51 are repealed.
(4) In schedule 10—
(a) paragraph 13(3)(c)(ii) is repealed,
(b) paragraph 13(6) to (20) is repealed,
(c) paragraph 13(36) to (40) is repealed.

Water Industry (Scotland) Act 2002 (asp 3)
11 Paragraph 18(5) of schedule 7 to the Water Industry (Scotland) Act 2002 is repealed.

Scottish Public Services Ombudsman Act 2002 (asp 11)
12 Paragraph 44 of schedule 2 to the Scottish Public Services Ombudsman Act 2002 is repealed.

Freedom of Information (Scotland) Act 2002 (asp 13)
13 (1) The Freedom of Information (Scotland) Act 2002 is amended as follows.
(2) In schedule 1, after paragraph 18A insert—
“18B The Scottish Housing Regulator.”.
(3) Paragraph 85B of schedule 1 is repealed.

Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 2)
14 (1) The Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 is amended as follows.
(2) Section 40(4)(g)(v) is repealed.
(3) Section 65(2)(d) is repealed.
(4) Section 84(2)(c) is repealed.

Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 11)
15 Section 27(1)(g)(vi) of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 2003 is repealed.

Fire (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 5)
25 Paragraph 13 of schedule 3 to the Fire (Scotland) Act 2005 is repealed.

Housing (Scotland) Act 2006 (asp 1)
16A In section 22 of the 2006 Act—
(a) subsection (4)(c) is repealed, and
(b) subsection (6) is repealed.
Housing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 17)

17 (1) The 2010 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 58(1), for “the” where it secondly occurs substitute “a”.

(3) Section 108(1)(f) is repealed.

(4) In section 110(1), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) the proposed disposal is not by way of granting security over the land or any interest in it,”.

(4A) In section 124, for “122” substitute “121”.

(5) Sections 140 to 144 are repealed.

(6) In schedule 2—

(a) paragraph 3(4) is repealed,

(b) paragraph 9 is repealed.

Police and Fire Reform (Scotland) Act 2012 (asp 8)

18 Paragraph 56 of schedule 7 to the Police and Fire Reform (Scotland) Act 2012 is repealed.
Housing (Scotland) Bill
[AS PASSED]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision about housing, including provision about the abolition of the right to buy, social housing, the law affecting private housing, the regulation of letting agents and the licensing of sites for mobile homes.

Introduced by: Nicola Sturgeon
Supported by: Margaret Burgess
On: 21 November 2013
Bill type: Government Bill