Section 25—Reporting
Amendments 1135 and 1136 not moved.

The Convener: Amendment 1137, in the name of Alex Rowley, is in a group on its own.

Alex Rowley: Section 25 requires that a public service authority must publish a report summarising the outcomes of the improvement process,

"describing how and to what extent ... the community participation body ... influenced the process and the outcomes," and that the authority must

"keep the community participation body ... informed about ... changes in the ... process".

Amendment 1137 would require the public service authority, in preparing a report on the outcome improvement process, to seek the views of those bodies that made a participation request on how the process was conducted—and, more important, on whether it led to local improvements.

The amendment would be the final piece in ensuring that the process is as open and transparent as possible and that the views of communities are reflected in the final report. That is particularly important, because public service authorities need to be able to take communities with them in improving local outcomes. That is the Government’s stated view. Failure to do that would mean that progress would stall and improvements, in my view, would not be made. Amendment 1137 is about improving the bill and I hope that the committee and the minister will consider supporting it.

I move amendment 1137.

Marco Biagi: It seems quite reasonable that, when preparing a report on the outcome improvement process, the public service authority should seek the views of the community participation bodies that were involved in that process. I urge committee members to support the amendment.

Alex Rowley: I am grateful to the minister for that support. I press amendment 1137.

Section 52—Asset transfer requests

The Convener: Amendment 1142, in the name of Tavish Scott, is grouped with amendments 1143, 1144, 1148, 1150, 1153, 1155 and 1156.

Tavish Scott: I want to make a very simple case. Amendment 1142 is based on ensuring that an asset transfer request can be made in a case in which a community group wants to run a local service but there is no land involved, which asset transfer requests currently have to relate to. The other amendments are, as I understand it, consequential and give effect to that policy request.

It is important to note that the amendment enables an organisation to request the transfer of a specific service but not to require it. It empowers local community organisations by creating the circumstances in which it would be possible for them to take control of a service affecting their area.

I can give a practical example. There used to be a very good laundry on the island I live on, which was predominantly used by old folk but—as run by a great lady, the late Sheila Henderson—was so successful that working folk and lots of other people ended up using it. It was run under the auspices of the local council, and at a certain point the council decided to close it, for reasons that were understandable in many ways. However, had this kind of provision existed—although the minister may have better ideas as to how to do this—I do not think that there is any doubt that the local community would have said, “Look, this is a service that we value, and it serves a wider purpose than the original intention, so let us see if there is a way in which we can maintain and, indeed, enhance it.”

What the amendment seeks to do is simply to create the potential for a community group—in that case, it would have had to have been some grouping of folk who came together on the island—to take over a service. I appreciate that the minister might have a point about assets, because I suppose that they could have taken over the washing machines, which might have been another way to achieve the same effect. However, it seems to me that that is a legitimate objective, which I hope will be consistent with the measures that he is seeking to introduce to Parliament today.

I move amendment 1142.

Marco Biagi: That example is hauntingly familiar. I have a constituency case regarding the future of a laundry that a group of my constituents wish to continue, so I can relate to Tavish Scott’s experience.

We are slightly in danger of confusing the asset transfer and participation request provisions. The case that Tavish Scott described would be open to an asset transfer of the physical facility to a community group. The bill, unamended, already provides for that.

We also have the participation request mechanism, which would allow a community body to propose to take on the delivery of a service that is more abstract. When we consulted on the proposals for the bill, we looked at the English example of the right to challenge, which allows a community to request that a service is put out to tender and allows a community body to bid for it. However, we found that the important thing—the thing of value—is for communities to be able to influence how services are designed. That has been backed up by a recent report on the right to challenge.

Some community groups feel that they could take on delivery of a service themselves, but not every community wants to do that or has the capacity to do that straight away. Participation requests allow each community body to bring forward what they want, and to discuss with the service provider how they feel the outcomes of the service—which in the case of the laundry would be dealing with economic disadvantage and providing a facility that could not be provided elsewhere—can be improved and how the community can best contribute to those improvements.

John Wilson: I understand the intention behind Tavish Scott’s amendment. He used the example of the laundry, and we can see the laundry’s tangible assets: the building and the machines in it. However, a community group might make a request regarding childcare, which a public body might provide in a community facility. The community group may not want an asset transfer of that facility. Another example would be elderly care in the community. Minister, what is your view of community group requests to deliver services that do not involve tangible assets?

Marco Biagi: In such a situation, a participation request would be the appropriate means. We are not talking about the transfer of an asset; we are talking about how a community group can participate in—this is the jargon and gobbledygook that the committee pointed to before—the outcome improvement process.

I forget the exact line in the national outcomes, but the improvement is about young people living fulfilling lives and having the best start. The proposal that John Wilson talks about would be made under all the mechanisms that are set out for participation requests. The ability of the community to contribute to the service would be considered and there would be ample opportunity. I want to see that happen, and we would share that objective.

Community-controlled childcare bodies have a lot to give. I have met a community centre that has a childcare aspect, and I am scheduling visits to community-controlled childcare organisations in the coming months. It is a really exciting area in which there can be a real—I hate to use this word—synergy of the aims of community empowerment and better childcare. Everybody can win.

In the consultation we did not hear any dissatisfaction with the mechanism of participation requests for such situations. If there was dissatisfaction and issues were raised, we would look at them again.
Let us look at the division: there are participation requests, through which communities can participate in ongoing processes, and there are asset transfer requests for material things— principally land. We should not confuse those two things. If there were to be some kind of change, it might be better to make it to participation requests, but I think that participation requests already have ample scope.

There has not been any consideration of this specific proposal in consultation with stakeholders, so we do not know stakeholders’ views or the wrinkles that might be found if we were to blur the distinction between asset transfer and participation requests.

I ask that Tavish Scott, having made the point, withdraws the amendment. I suggest that we perhaps meet to explore working examples of how participation requests could be used to achieve the aim that he has set out. If further amendments are needed, I would be happy to lodge them following that dialogue.

The Convener: I invite Tavish Scott to wind up and to press or withdraw his amendment.

Tavish Scott: The minister makes an eminently fair point. Mr Wilson’s example of childcare seemed to be quite relevant. My children used to go to the local public hall in Bressay for childcare, so I can think of exactly the scenario that he painted. I take the minister’s assurance in how he responded to the issue, and I will take him up on his offer of a meeting.

I mention in passing Alex Rowley’s earlier amendment on the right of appeal. Although the minister was not hugely in favour, it strikes me that it would strengthen exactly what we have just been discussing and that, in the context of the bill overall, it may absolutely provide for the objective that I suspect we all share.

On that basis, I would be very happy to withdraw the amendment.

Section 53—Community transfer bodies that may request transfer of ownership of land

The Convener: Amendment 1075, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 1083.

Marco Biagi: Amendments 1075 and 1083 together add community benefit societies to the types of community body that can make an asset transfer request for ownership under the bill.

Stakeholders called for that addition throughout the lead-up to the bill, and it has always been our intention to include community benefit societies. Members will note that amendment 1083 refers to the Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies Act 2014. The act had not passed when this bill was introduced and there was no point in referring to old legislation when the reference would need to be amended immediately. We can now add community benefit societies to the bill with an up-to-date reference to an act that is now in force.

I hope that the committee will support the amendments. I move amendment 1075.

Amendment 1075 agreed to.

Section 53, as amended, agreed to.

Section 54—Asset transfer requests: regulations

The Convener: Amendment 1145, in the name of Alex Rowley, is in a group on its own.

Alex Rowley: Amendment 1145 is taken from the committee report recommendation:

relevant authorities will be required to provide to community groups relevant information before they decide to request the transfer of an asset.

Examples of maintenance costs and energy efficiency have been provided in that regard.

The committee received a number of suggestions of what respondents considered vital to inform a community’s assessment of whether to obtain an asset. The amendment seeks to ensure that the following information is provided to community groups: the value of the asset, where appropriate; the rental value, where appropriate; the yearly running costs; the details of impending repairs or maintenance costs; and the energy efficiency of the building.

I would hope that the minister can take on board the principle that I am trying to establish, because that is important for community groups. Only yesterday, I met local groups. I tried to encourage them to go after a building in Kelty that will become surplus to requirement to Fife Council. The council has disposed of a number of buildings to the community. What the amendment calls for seems to me to be common sense, because it would be difficult for communities to make such decisions without that level of information.

I seek the minister’s advice on whether my amendment is the best way to achieve that. However, as I said, in lodging the amendment, I am trying to achieve the principle.

I move amendment 1145.

John Wilson: I support the intention of amendment 1145. I am the chair of a local community organisation that has taken on the lease of a community centre. We attempted to get information from the local authority on the building’s state of repair, only to find out six months after we had taken on the building that there were three major leaks in the main hall, which has meant that we have had to shut down services that we deliver.

It is important that when community asset transfers take place—especially when they relate to land or buildings—communities are given full details of any information that is held by the local authority to ensure that they are fully versed in the issues that relate to the building or land that they might acquire. That is why I intend to support amendment 1145.

Marco Biagi: I thank Alex Rowley for highlighting the issue. I give a cast-iron guarantee that it is our intention to use the power in the bill to make regulations on all such issues and more. We want to do that in partnership with the organisations that are involved in asset transfers so that we capture everything and not just the pieces of information that are set out in amendment 1145.

I have two issues with putting specific requirements on the information that would have to be provided in primary legislation. One is that we would have to get them right not quite for all time but with a very high threshold of specificity between now and the passage of the bill, because it would be very hard to change them after that.

Amendment 1145 specifies that information would have to be provided on running costs, which might be very different if a community group took over a facility, because the public authority might have had access to different tariffs. Similarly, sale price or market value can be split in many different ways by accountants.

I would not be averse in principle to putting something on the issue in primary legislation, but the question is whether by the end of the bill’s consideration we could get to a point at which we could be absolutely certain that whatever requirements we put into the bill would be robust and would resist any foot dragging by organisations or creative pathways around the provisions. It would be better to deal with the issue by statutory instrument, which could be updated relatively quickly to address any such circumstances.

I give a cast-iron guarantee that all the issues that Mr Rowley has included in amendment 1145—and probably more, in the light of what stakeholders say—will be dealt with in the statutory instrument that we bring forward. We would be able to keep that up to date on an ongoing basis to take account of any experiences that we had with its implementation along the way.

The Convener: I ask Mr Rowley to wind up and to press or withdraw amendment 1145.

Alex Rowley: I am grateful to John Wilson for the example that he gave, which highlights what the issues are. I am also grateful to the minister for his assurance that the matter will be looked at and that a statutory instrument will be brought forward under the bill. Therefore, I am happy to seek to withdraw amendment 1145.

The Convener: Amendment 1151, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendment 1152.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 1151 would make a wording change and remove the provision that failure to conclude negotiations does not count as a refusal for the purposes of an appeal—in other words, it would enable a failure to conclude contracts to be brought to appeal. A failure to conclude contracts should not negate the initial agreement entirely. Powers to extend negotiation should be used in addition to that scenario, but it should not be excluded from appeals. If a body cannot agree to a deal because the terms are unacceptable, it should be able to appeal the decision and restart contractual negotiations.

I move amendment 1151.

Marco Biagi: The effect of amendments 1151 and 1152 would be that a community transfer body could make an appeal under section 58 on the basis that no contract had been concluded within the required period after an offer was made in the event of an asset transfer. We did not originally propose an appeal in that area, because negotiations for transfer of a property can fail for many reasons, and there is not necessarily any fault. For example, a community transfer body may be unable to secure funding, or there may be other changes of circumstances.

There are already some safeguards for a community after an asset transfer request has been agreed. First, an appeal can look at the terms and conditions of the contract and, secondly, a community body can apply to the Scottish ministers to extend the period of time for concluding a contract if an extension cannot be agreed with the relevant authority. During that process, the asset cannot be disposed of.

However, I recognise the concerns of communities that relevant authorities could—it might be envisaged—use the negotiation process as a way of backing out of a transfer that has been agreed to. They could also deliberately—I take care to highlight that I am not making an accusation but simply setting out a possibility in law—delay matters until the community is exhausted or its funding has lapsed. I cannot imagine that an appeal on those grounds would be used often, but it may be productive to fill that space with a useful backstop.

We will need to look at the detail, and we may want to tweak the provisions at stage 3. However, I am happy to endorse the principle of ensuring that the failure to conclude a contract could be subject to appeal, and I urge the committee to accept the amendments.

Amendment 1152 moved—[Cameron Buchanan]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 1077, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 1154, 1088, 1089, 1078, 1090 and 1079.

Marco Biagi: Group 14 is substantial, and I will start with the amendments in my name. The purpose of amendment 1077 is to enable ministers to specify whether asset transfer decisions that are made by a particular relevant authority should be subject to appeal to ministers or to review by a local authority. The default position in the bill is that a community transfer body can appeal to the Scottish ministers over an asset transfer decision unless the request was made to a local authority. The default position in the bill is that a community transfer body can appeal to the Scottish ministers over an asset transfer decision unless the request was made to a local authority, in which case they can request a review by the local authority. There are other amendments that will adjust that, which we will come to later.

Section 51(3) allows ministers to designate additional bodies as relevant authorities. One class of bodies that we are considering adding comprises arm’s-length external organisations, where those are wholly owned by one or more relevant authorities, and by local authorities in particular. It seems appropriate that their decisions should come under the umbrella of the local authority appeals process rather than the ministerial appeals process that is set out for public services in the bill as drafted.

The amendment to section 58 will give ministers a power to specify relevant authorities whose decisions are not subject to ministerial appeal. Amendment 1079 will add a new section after section 59, and will apply the local authority review provisions of section 59 to any relevant authority that is specified under amendment 1077. As I said, the local authority review provisions themselves may change as a result of other amendments. Amendment 1079 will also enable ministers to make provision for them to apply with modifications as necessary.

Finally, ministers may specify to which local authority an application for review should be made, either individually or by setting out factors.
determining how that should be decided. For example, it might be determined by the location of the land to which the request relates.

Amendment 1078 will introduce a mechanism for review of decisions on asset transfer requests that are made to the Scottish ministers. The bill already includes provision for review or appeal of decisions where requests are made to local authorities or other public bodies, and that mechanism will fill in the last part of that jigsaw.

The procedure that is set out is similar to those for other organisations. A community transfer body can request a review if its request is refused; if the decision specifies terms and conditions for the transfer that are significantly different from those that the community body proposed; or if no decision is made within the required period. The review can result in the decision being confirmed, overturned or amended, which would include amendments to the terms and conditions, and the Scottish ministers can make regulations about the procedure to be followed and so on.

The key difference with regard to the reviewing of ministerial decisions is that ministers will be able to appoint persons in connection with the review and must have regard to any report that those persons make in deciding the review’s outcome. That approach will allow us to establish a panel of independent advisers to consider these reviews so that we do not just have ministers reviewing their own decisions and that there is a degree of external scrutiny.

Cameron Buchanan: Does this amendment not give too much power to ministers?

Marco Biagi: It relates to reviews of decisions that, under the bill, will already have been taken by ministers. Where a matter goes to ministers, the appeals mechanism will also include a review by an independent advisory body instead of an appeal against a ministerial decision being a case of simply asking the minister to look at the matter again. This amendment creates an additional safeguard with regard to the ministerial appeal mechanism that is already in the bill.

I can see that, in lodging amendment 1154, Cameron Buchanan perhaps intends to make the appeal process more predictable by ensuring that only the parts of the decision to which the appeal relates can be reversed or varied. However, I think that that could have unintended consequences. For a start, it would restrict Scottish ministers’ ability to alter other parts of the decision in consequence of their decision on the issue to which the appeal directly relates. If we were unable to adapt to consequential decisions, there might be restrictions on what an appeal could find.

The approach that is taken in amendment 1154 would also limit ministers’ ability to look at the decision in the round. The current wording follows a standard approach to enable the appeal to be dealt with in a suitable manner and to allow ministers dealing with an appeal to consider matters that had been raised during the course of the appeal as well as matters that had been raised at the start of the process. I therefore ask the member not to move amendment 1154 when the time comes.

I will leave it to Michael Russell to describe the intention behind amendments 1088 to 1090, but essentially they provide for a right of appeal to Scottish ministers in relation to decisions on local authority asset transfers. This is an interesting set of amendments. I have some sympathy with Mr Russell’s aims and experiences, and I look forward to hearing the case that he makes and the views of other committee members.

I move amendment 1077.

Cameron Buchanan: I think that the approach outlined by the minister is going to give too much power to ministers. They should not be able to assess any part of the decision, whether or not it is part of the appeal. If that were to be the case, they would be able to decide the whole outcome, and I think that ministers should be able to review only those parts of the decision that are included in the appeal. As I have said—and in spite of the minister’s comments—I am concerned that the power for ministers is too wide.

Michael Russell (Argyll and Bute) (SNP): I have two reasons for lodging amendments 1088 to 1090, the first of which is particular to my constituency. It is not the launderette experience that Mr Scott related, but a wider experience that concerns Castle Toward. My second reason relates to the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee’s survey of local authorities’ attitude to the disposal of assets.

On the case of Castle Toward, which as I have said is in my constituency, it is fair to say that those who wished to take over that asset, who had a very clear business plan for it, who had a key core tenant for it and who would have created between 90 and 100 jobs, were for a long time frustrated by a local authority that had no intention of selling it. Indeed, were the review process to have been in place, there would have been no faith in it in these circumstances, because the relationship of trust between the community and the local authority had completely broken down. The sense of frustration that was felt and which still exists in the south Cowal area and across the community at the failure of the sale of Castle Toward persuades me that, for exceptional circumstances in which the process has been extraordinarily difficult and as a result of which there is no trust in the local authority review process, the community should have a further opportunity to have its case considered. Such an approach parallels to some extent the appeals process for rural school closures.

The wider issue of the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee’s survey should concern the entire committee—and to members who have not accessed that material, I should say that I think that they might find it useful. It appears that most local authorities, while expressing good will towards the asset transfer process, are still somewhat confused about what it means. They are still influenced by a view of best consideration or best value that, of course, does not apply in all circumstances to the transfer of community assets and which can be set aside.

There also appears to be a very corporate view of what local authorities regard as their estate. If we are to see a real process of asset transfer in Scotland, it is extremely important that that corporate view of assets belonging to local authorities as opposed to being held in trust for communities and citizens by local authorities is changed. The appeal process, where it exists—it will not exist in every local authority—will undoubtedly give the opportunity for that to be overturned.

Finally, I note that COSLA has views on the amendments. It has written to me and other members to give those views. Indeed, it regards one of the amendments as offensive to local government. I invite COSLA to speak to the leader of Argyll and Bute Council, whose actions through his local authority have been offensive to the community of south Cowal, and to consider that the amendments will at least put rest to that and will also enable real community empowerment in the transfer of assets.

John Wilson: Mike Russell has given a good account of why we need to consider his amendments.

I have seen on many occasions how local authorities have effectively stopped communities pursuing the takeover of community assets not necessarily by deciding not to allow the transfer to take place but by placing cost and other burdens on the communities.

We need to get the message over to public bodies that a community asset transfer does not involve just a monetary value and that economic and social values must be included in the decisions that are being made. As Mr Russell indicated, the plan for Castle Toward and the jobs that there would be clearly showed that there would be real economic gain for the community in that area. I know some of the history of Castle Toward and about some of the jobs that were lost during 2005-06 through redundancies and the plans that were made.

What I have said applies to many communities throughout Scotland that have a vision to take forward issues and deliver jobs, security and other services in their communities. That has to be taken into account, because best value is still confusing many officials in local authorities throughout Scotland. They are confused about what best value is. We have to send the clear message out to those local authority officials and public bodies that best value should include the long-term return that can be made within communities when they take on resources and facilities. Best value is not about a monetary figure; it is about what can and could be delivered by communities for their benefit.

I am minded to support Mike Russell’s amendments.

Willie Coffey: I hoped to return to the issue in relation to ALEOs that the minister introduced. Are ALEOs currently outwith the reach and scope of community requests for asset transfer?

Marco Biagi: ALEOs are not prescribed on the face of the bill. There is a power to allow the Scottish ministers to designate additional bodies that will come within the scope of the bill, and it is my firm intention to ensure that ALEOs are included.

It is appropriate that, where something is wholly owned by and reports back to a local authority, it should be subject to the same strictures that the authority is. It may already be the case that, where there is a service level agreement, ALEOs are covered because of the connection that that makes with the local authority, but we intend to return to the area in regulations to designate ALEOs appropriately. That may have to be done on a one-by-one basis, as a category or as a definition, but we are working on that, because we want to make it very clear that, whether an asset is held directly by a public body or local authority or is held through an ALEO, it should be subject to the same provisions as the rest of that organisation’s estate. The section in question will ensure that there is consideration of that for appeals, so that if it is a local authority ALEO, it will qualify for the local authority appeals route. It is important to future proof it so that, once we get ALEOs in, which I assure the member will not take a long time in parliamentary terms, their processes will be properly thought through. My intervention is over.

Willie Coffey: Thank you for that intervention.

Alex Rowley: I have some sympathy with Mike Russell’s arguments, particularly in relation to achieving best value. I also note what COSLA says, although it seems a bit defensive. There are local authorities out there that recognise the wider benefits of community transfer. I had an example in Fife a few years ago. I was supportive of a former fire station being transferred and turned into an arts centre, but without the political drive behind that, the officials would not have gone for it. There had to be a political drive to say that there was a wider benefit to the community. I have experienced that from the point of view of having to drive it politically, so I have some sympathy with what is proposed.

I do not know whether the minister will pick up on the points that Mike Russell made about best value and the ability to look more broadly than simply at the financial gain or what the local authority thinks it might lose.

The Convener: I ask the minister to wind up and press or withdraw amendment 1077.

Marco Biagi: It has been a useful discussion. It is never easy to set up appeals mechanisms or to deal with areas where there are interactions between local and national Government. Against what I asked the committee to do, there is now an appeal to ministers on participation requests, which was introduced by Mr Rowley. I can see a parallel with appeals to ministers on asset transfers. It is appropriate that the focus of any review of local authority decisions is the local authority itself. We have structures in the bill that will create the two-stage process, and Mr Russell’s amendments will ensure that those are political decisions rather than delegated ones, but there is no doubt that, in a very few exceptional cases, giving community bodies a route of appeal to Scottish ministers could be beneficial because it would strengthen part of the bill’s focus on openness, transparency and consistency. It may well be a proportionate measure.

Cameron Buchanan: I also have sympathy with Mr Russell. In Edinburgh, we too have had places where nobody really wants to transfer assets. The local authority does not want to do it for various reasons, which are rather spurious. Basically, it wants to hold on to them.

However, our concern is that there are not too many appeals. Appeals can go on and on. I am not sure how we would do it, but there should be a limit on the number of appeals. However, there must be an appeal.

Marco Biagi: A finite number of appeals is set out and I suppose that, for particularly enthusiastic community groups, there is always judicial review on top of that. I know of one example in my constituency where that happened, all the appeal mechanisms having been used, but I probably cannot say anything more about that. There is a finite set or a finite route, and my amendments add one more at a national level. As I said, it is a proportionate response.

I press amendment 1077.

Section 60—Disapplication of restrictions in lease of land to relevant authority

The Convener: Amendment 1157, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is in a group on its own.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 1157 would remove section 60, which allows conditions in leases between multiple relevant authorities that restrict the subletting to be overridden if an asset transfer is made. That could become a threat to contracts. It is not for the bill to nullify contracts. It would be much fairer and more practical to remove that bar and allow contracts to take account of the bill's provisions—if the bill comes into effect.

I move amendment 1157.

Marco Biagi: Section 60 is a helpful provision for community bodies that seek to lease or otherwise use land or premises. It applies where both the owner and lessee of the land are relevant authorities under the bill. It disapplies any restrictions in the lease that would prevent the lessee from subletting or sharing occupation of the land. That means that the community transfer body can negotiate directly with the authority that they see occupying the premises and does not have to worry about any constraints on that authority as a result of its lease.

We do not want a community body's aspirations to be thwarted simply because of a head lease that prevents subletting or sharing occupancy of land. There is protection in place for the person leasing the land to the authority in section 60(4). The authority remains liable for all matters under the lease and cannot assign it. I do not see a value for community bodies in removing the flexibility that section 60 provides to them. I ask Mr Buchanan to withdraw amendment 1157.

Cameron Buchanan: In spite of what the minister said, I will press amendment 1157.

The Convener: Amendment 1080, in the name of the minister, is in a group on its own.

Marco Biagi: I am pleased to introduce amendment 1080, which will require all relevant authorities to publish registers of the land that they own or lease. That will help community bodies to know what properties might be available for asset transfer so that they can identify those that are most suitable for their needs.

Publishing the register should not be an onerous task for relevant authorities. They should have property management systems that tell them what they own—I will not refer to any current issues in Edinburgh.

John Wilson: It is not only Edinburgh that has a problem with what land a local authority owns, leases or holds in trust.

There are issues with what ownership rights the community might have if it applied for a transfer of land that was held in trust. I hope that, when the minister considers the matter, he will take on board all the land issues that might apply to a community asset transfer.

Marco Biagi: Indeed. In some ways, the amendment is parallel to the common good register provisions in the bill, in that it provides authority to list. We know that there are gaps in some places. The requirement is for local authorities to list what they own or lease "to the best of" their "knowledge and belief".

The Government has made a commitment that all public bodies will complete registration of their titles within five years. That will improve our knowledge.

Ministers will be able to specify types of land that do not need to be included in the register. The legal definition of land is very wide, as it includes rights and interests in land as well as the land and buildings.

Local authorities’ property registers might, for example, include ground rents for traffic lights and responsibility for retaining walls. Those might not necessarily be at the top of communities’ asset transfer lists, although I would be interested to see an asset transfer request for a community group to operate a traffic light because it would be such a legal curiosity.

The power to exclude types of land will allow us to focus the register on the kinds of property that communities will want. We will consider all the complexities of land law in that context because this is about providing information for communities; information about access rights and underground cables can be provided when an inquiry is made. That is, perhaps, more suitable.

Loads of—I am getting away from ministerial language; it has been quite a morning. Many community groups have requested asset registers and I am happy to amend the bill to ensure that it makes provision for them.

I move amendment 1080.

(2) A transfer of ownership in breach of subsection (1)(a) is of no effect.

(b) an owner or operator of that football club sells shares in the club in such a way as to transfer the controlling interest in the club without exposing the club for sale, the owner or operator of the club is not acting in accordance with this section and those shares must be offered for re-sale to the supporters’ trust or trusts with a registered interest in the club.

<Procedure for late applications

(1) This section applies in relation to an application to register a supporters’ trust interest in a football club—

(a) where the application is received by the Scottish Ministers—

(i) after the date on which the owner or operator of the football club has taken action which, if a supporters’ trust interest had been registered, would be prohibited under section (effect of registration), and

(ii) before the date on which—

(A) transfer of ownership of the football club is concluded, or

(B) an option to buy the football club is conferred, in pursuance of that action, or

(b) where another supporters’ trust has registered an interest in the football club, where the application is received by the Scottish Ministers—

(i) after the date on which the owner or operator of the football club has, under section (supporters’ trust right to buy), notified that supporters’ trust that a transfer is proposed, and

(ii) before the Scottish Ministers have consented, under section (exercise of right to buy: approval of supporters’ trust and consent of the Scottish Ministers), to a transfer to that supporters’ trust.

(2) Where this section applies in relation to an application the owner or operator of the football club must, on receipt of an invitation under section (supporters’ trust registration of interest in buying a football club), inform the Scottish Ministers that this section applies.

(3) Where this section applies in relation to an application, the Scottish Ministers may not decide that a supporters’ trust interest is to be entered in the Register unless they are (additionally to the matters as to which they are to be satisfied under section (supporters’ trust registration of interest in buying a football club)) satisfied—

(a) that there were good reasons why the supporters’ trust did not secure the receipt of an application before the owner or operator of the football club took the action, or gave the notice, such as is mentioned in subsection (1).
(b) that the level of support within the supporters’ trust for such registration is significantly greater than that which the Scottish Ministers would, have considered sufficient for the purposes of section (supporters’ trust registration of interest in buying a football club)(5)(d) had the application been received before that action was taken or, as the case may be, the notice was given, and

c) that the factors bearing on whether it is or is not in the public interest that the supporters’ trust be registered are strongly indicative that it is.

(4) Where a supporters’ trust interest in a football club is registered in pursuance of an application in relation to which this section applies—

(a) the owner or operator of the football club is, for the purposes of this Part of this Act (other than section (assessment of value of football club)(4)), deemed to have, on the date on which that interest is so registered, given notice under section (procedure for buying) that a transfer is proposed,

(b) section (procedure for buying) does not apply in so far as it relates to that interest, and

(c) for the purposes of sections (procedure for buying) and (assessment of value of football club), the supporters’ trust is deemed to have sent the confirmation which the Scottish Ministers would, had section (procedure after activation of right to buy) applied, have required to seek under subsection (2)(a) of that section on the date on which the interest is registered.

(5) Where, but for the provision made by subsection (1)(a)(ii), this section would apply in relation to an application to register a supporters’ trust interest in a football club the Scottish Ministers must decline to consider the application.

(a) of an intention to transfer ownership of the club, or

(b) that the club has entered into formal insolvency.

(2) Where subsection (1)(a) or (b) apply the owner or operator of the football club in respect of which the supporter trust interest is registered shall notify that fact to—

(a) the supporters’ trust, or trusts, in respect of which the interest is registered, and

(b) the Scottish Ministers.

(3) Notification under subsection (2) must be given in such form and otherwise in accordance with such provisions as are prescribed.

Procedure after activation of right to buy

(1) On receipt of a notification under section (activation of supporters’ trust right to buy), the Scottish Ministers must direct the Keeper to enter particulars of the notification in the Register.

(2) Not later than 7 days after such receipt of the notification the Scottish Ministers must—
   (a) send to the supporters’ trust or trusts which has registered the interest in the football club a notice in the prescribed form seeking its confirmation in writing that it will exercise its right to buy the football club, and
   (b) send to the owner or operator of the football club a notice in the prescribed form narrating their compliance with paragraph (a).

(3) A notice under subsection (2)(a) must specify the date referred to in and narrate the effect of subsection (4) below.

(4) If, by the date specified in the notice, being a date not later than 30 days after it was sent, the supporters’ trust has not caused its confirmation to be received by the Scottish Ministers, Ministers must be deemed to have received written notice from the supporters’ trust under subsection (1) of section (declinature or extinction of right to buy) that it will not exercise its right to buy the football club and subsections (2) to (4) of that section must apply accordingly.

(5) The Scottish Ministers must send a copy of—
   (a) the notice sent under subsection (2)(a), and
   (b) any confirmation received by them in pursuance of this section, to the owner of the club and to the Keeper.

(6) Any failure to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (2) above does not affect the validity of anything done under this section.

Exercise of right to buy: approval of supporters’ trust and consent of the Scottish Ministers

(1) A supporters’ trust must not proceed to buy the football club under this Part of this Act without—
   (a) the approval of the supporters’ trust, and
   (b) the consent of the Scottish Ministers.
(2) The supporters’ trust are to be taken as having given their approval for the purposes of subsections (1) and (3) if Scottish Ministers are satisfied—

(a) that—

(i) at least half of the members of the supporters’ trust, as defined for the purposes of section (meaning of “supporters’ trust”), have voted in a ballot conducted by the supporters’ trust on the question whether the supporters’ trust should buy the football club, or

(ii) where less than half of the members of the supporters trust have so voted, the proportion which did vote is, in the circumstances, sufficient to justify the supporters’ trust proceeding to buy the football club,

(b) that the majority of those voting have voted in favour of the proposition that the supporters’ trust buy the football club, and

(c) that this vote should have taken place within five months prior to the issue of the notice within section (activation of supporters’ trust right to buy) or during the 30 day period specified within section (procedure after activation of right to buy).

(3) The Scottish Ministers may not consent for the purposes of subsection (1) unless the supporters’ trust have given their approval and the Scottish Ministers are satisfied—

(a) that the football club is a club within the meaning of section (meaning of “Scottish Professional Football League club”),

(b) that the supporters’ trust continues to comply with the provisions of section (meaning of supporters’ trust),

(c) that the proposed purchase of the football club is in the public interest, and

(d) that there has not, since the date on which they decided the supporters’ trust’s interest should be registered, been a change in any matters to the extent that, if the application to register the supporters’ trust interest were made afresh, they would decide that the interest is not to be entered in the Register.

(4) A supporters’ trust may require the Scottish Ministers to treat as confidential any information or document relating to arrangements for the raising or expenditure of money to enable the football club to be purchased.

(5) The Scottish Ministers must, within the time limit specified in subsection (6), send notice of their decision as to consent and their reasons for it in writing to the supporters’ trust and to the owner of the football club and must direct the Keeper to enter a record of that decision in the Register.

(6) That time limit is—

(a) where one supporters’ trust has confirmed that it will exercise its right to buy the football club, the 21 days following receipt of notification, under section (activation of supporters’ trust right to buy), of the result of the ballot conducted by the body, or

(b) where two or more supporters’ trusts have confirmed that they will exercise their right to buy the club, the 21 days following receipt of such notification in respect of the last of the ballots conducted by those bodies.

(7) Any failure to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (6) above does not affect the validity of anything done under this section.
1242 After section 62, insert—

<Declinature or extinction of right to buy

(1) If, at any time, a supporters’ trust which has registered a supporters’ trust interest decides that it will not exercise its right to buy the football club, it must give the Scottish Ministers written notice of its decision.

(2) On receipt of a notice under subsection (1) above, the Scottish Ministers must—
   (a) send a copy of it to the Keeper and direct the Keeper to delete the supporters’ trust interest from the Register, and
   (b) notify the owner or operator of the football club of that fact.

(3) Where, when that notice is given, that right to buy has arisen, the right is then extinguished.

(4) Nothing in or done under subsections (1) to (3) above prevents a supporters’ trust from registering a supporters’ trust interest in the same football club for a second or subsequent time.

(5) If, at any time after the owner or operator of the club has given notice under section (activation of supporters’ trust right to buy) but before the owner has concluded missives with a supporters’ trust for the sale and purchase of the football club in respect of which a right to buy has arisen, the owner or operator of the football club decides not to proceed further with the proposed transfer the owner shall give written notice of that fact to—
   (a) the Scottish Ministers, and
   (b) each supporters’ trust which has registered an interest in the football club.

(6) The Scottish Ministers must send a copy of the notice given under subsection (5) to the Keeper.

(7) Where a notice is given under subsection (5), the right to buy the football club which arose under section (activation of supporters’ trust right to buy) is extinguished.

<Right to buy same club exercisable by only one supporters’ trust

(1) Only one supporters’ trust may exercise the right to buy a football club in which two or more supporters’ trust bodies have registered supporters’ trust interests.

(2) Where two or more supporters’ trusts have confirmed that they will exercise their rights to buy such a football club it is for the Scottish Ministers to decide which one is to proceed.

(3) On the Scottish Ministers so deciding—
   (a) the other supporters’ trust’s right to buy the football club is extinguished, and
(b) they must—
   (i) direct the Keeper to delete its interest from the Register, and
   (ii) notify the owner or operator of the football club and the supporters’ trusts of that fact.

       activation of right to buy) of its intention to buy,
   (b) where the price assessed by the appointed valuer is the subject of an appeal under section (appeals) which has not, within the period of 4 months after the date when the supporters’ trust sent that confirmation, been—
       (i) determined, or

(5) If a supporters’ trust has not, within the period fixed by or agreed under subsection (3)

<Assessment of value of football club

(1) The Scottish Ministers must, within 7 days of the receipt of a confirmation, sought by them under section (procedure after activation of right to buy)(2)(a), that a supporters’ trust will exercise its right to buy the football club, appoint a valuer, being a person who appears to the Scottish Ministers to be suitably qualified, independent and to have knowledge and experience of valuing a club.

(2) The validity of anything done under this section is not affected by any failure by the Scottish Ministers to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (1) above.
(3) In assessing the value of the football club in pursuance of an appointment under subsection (1) above, a valuer—
   (a) does not act on behalf of the owner or operator of the club or the supporters’ trust which is exercising its right to buy the football club, and
   (b) shall act as an expert and not as an arbiter.

(4) The value to be assessed is the market value of the football club—
   (a) as at the date of notification under section (activation of supporters’ trust right to buy)(1) which gave rise to the right to buy the football club; or
   (b) in a case where the supporters’ trust’s interest was registered in pursuance of an application to which section (procedure for late applications) applied, as at the date of the Scottish Ministers’ receipt of that application.

(5) The “market value” of the football club, for the purposes of subsection (4), is the aggregate of the value it would have on the open market as between a seller and a buyer both of whom are, as respects the transaction, willing; and

(6) In assessing, for those purposes, the value which the football would have in the circumstances mentioned in subsection (5) above—
   (a) account may be taken, insofar as a seller and a buyer of the football club such as are mentioned in subsection (5) would do so, of any factor attributable to the known existence of a person who (not being the supporters’ trust which is exercising its right to buy the club) would be willing to buy the football club at a price higher than other persons because of a characteristic of the club which relates peculiarly to that person’s interest in buying it;
   (b) no account shall be taken of—
      (i) the registration of an interest in or the exercise of a right to buy the football club by a supporters’ trust under this Part of this Act,
      (ii) the absence of the period of time during which the football club would, on the open market, be likely to be advertised and exposed for sale,
      (iii) the expenses of the valuation or otherwise related to the sale and purchase of the club.

(7) The expense of a valuation under this section shall be met by the Scottish Ministers.

   (c) a decision by the independent valuer on the valuation of the football club.
(3) A person who is a member of a supporters’ trust as defined for the purposes of section (meaning of “supporters’ trust”) in relation to a supporters’ trust or who has any interest in the football club giving rise to a right which is legally enforceable by that person may, by summary application, appeal to the sheriff against—
   (a) a decision by the Scottish Ministers that a supporters’ trust interest in a football club is to be entered in the Register on the application of the supporters’ trust, or
   (b) a decision by the Scottish Ministers to consent to the exercise of the supporters’ trust right to buy a football club.
(4) An appeal under subsection (1), (2) or (3) above shall be lodged within 28 days of the date on which the Scottish Ministers decided whether to enter the supporters’ trust interest or, as the case may be, whether to consent to the exercise of the right to buy the football club.
(5) The sheriff in whose sheriffdom the land or any part of it is situated has jurisdiction to hear an appeal under this section.
(6) Where an appeal is made—
   (a) under subsection (1) above the owner or operator shall intimate that fact to—

(2) In buying shares under subsection (1), the supporters trust—
   (a) may buy a proportion of shares that would enable the supporters’ trust to have a controlling interest in the football club,
   (b) must buy at least 5% of the shares in the club.

(3) This section does not—
   (a) preclude a supporters’ trust with a registered interest in a football club from purchasing shares in that football club at any other point at which shares are made available for sale,
   (b) require a supporters’ trust with a registered interest in a football club to purchase shares in that club where a right to buy that club has been activated in accordance with section (activation of supporters’ trust right to buy).

Local Government and Regeneration Committee

Wednesday 18 March 2015

[The Convener opened the meeting at 09:30]

Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

The Convener (Kevin Stewart): Good morning, and welcome to the 10th meeting in 2015 of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee. If people wish to use tablets or mobile phones during the meeting, they should please switch them to flight mode, as they may affect the broadcasting system. Committee members may consult tablets during the meeting, because we provide meeting papers in digital format.

We have received apologies from Clare Adamson, and I welcome Stewart Stevenson as Clare’s substitute this morning.

Agenda item 1 is the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill. It is day 3 of our stage 2 consideration of the bill. I welcome back Marco Biagi, the Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment. I also welcome Alison Johnstone and Ken Macintosh. Later in the proceedings, we will also be joined by Alison McInnes.

Everyone should have a copy of the bill as introduced, the latest marshalled list of amendments and the list of groupings of amendments, which sets out the amendments in the order in which they will be debated. There will be one debate on each group of amendments. I will call the member who lodged the first amendment in each group to speak to and move their amendment and to speak to all the other amendments in the group.

Members who have not lodged amendments in the group but who wish to speak should indicate that by catching my attention in the usual way. If the minister has not already spoken on the group, I will invite him to contribute to the debate just before I move to the winding-up speech. The debate on each group will be concluded by my inviting the member who moved the first amendment in the group to wind up.

Following the debate on each group, I will check whether the member who moved the first amendment in the group wishes to press their amendment to a vote or to withdraw it. If they wish to press it, I will put the question on that amendment. If a member wishes to withdraw their amendment after it has been moved, they must seek the committee’s agreement to do so. If any committee member objects to that, the committee must immediately move to the vote on the amendment.

If any member does not want to move their amendment when I call it, they should say, “Not moved.” Please remember that any other MSP may move such an amendment. If no one moves the amendment, I will immediately call the next amendment on the marshalled list.

Only committee members or their official substitutes are allowed to vote at stage 2. Voting in any division is by a show of hands, and it is important that members keep their hands clearly raised until the clerk has recorded the vote.

The committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed each section of the bill, so I will put the question on each section at the appropriate point.

After section 62

The Convener: Amendment 1084, in the name of the minister, is in a group on its own.

The Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment (Marco Biagi): Amendment 1084 responds to the committee’s recommendation to review the legislation relating to Forestry Commission Scotland leasing land to communities for forestry purposes. The amendment is supported by a number of stakeholders, not least the Scottish Woodlot Association.

The existing legislation allows FCS to delegate its forest management functions on the basis of the requirements of the community right-to-buy provisions under part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. It requires a community body to be a company limited by guarantee and to define its community by postcode units. The amendment supports a number of stakeholders, not least the Scottish Woodlot Association.

The amendment will allow any form of corporate body to take on a forestry lease, and the community that is represented by that body need not be defined by geographical boundaries. It also brings the requirements for a community body into line with the criteria for a community-controlled body, which can make an asset transfer request. I should make it clear that those criteria apply only to leases for forestry purposes, which are typically for 25 years or more. FCS also leases and sells land to community organisations for other purposes such as recreation and housing through... the national forest land scheme. In the future, all those transactions will come under the rules for asset transfer requests as set out in the bill, but relevant authorities will be free to set their own policies for leases depending on the length and type of agreement. It just happens that, for FCS, that policy has to be set out in legislation, and that is what the amendment seeks to do.

I move amendment 1084.

Amendment 1084 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 1231, in the name of Alison Johnstone, is grouped with amendments 1232 to 1248.

Alison Johnstone (Lothian) (Green): I thank the committee for its time today, and I thank the convener for agreeing that this important issue should be considered at stage 2. I know that you have a lot of amendments to cover, so I will keep this summary brief. I will explain the purpose and rationale first, and I will then quickly summarise the practical operation of the amendments in the group.

The problem that I am asking Parliament to fix is straightforward, and it should be obvious to everyone. Football has been dragged from the back pages of Scotland's newspapers to the front pages by a series of catastrophic failures, from those of small clubs such as Gretna to those of clubs at the very top, such as Hearts and Rangers. The current model of ownership has failed. We know from examples both in Scotland and elsewhere that fan ownership works, and that fans will obviously be the people with the long-term interests of their clubs closest to their hearts. However, it is hard for fans to assemble the money and an appropriate structure without a right to buy.

My proposals would not force fans to buy—in fact, there would still be substantial hurdles to doing so—but would mean that, if a well-organised fans trust had the support of the fans, it could secure first right of refusal if the club was being sold anyway or if, like so many clubs recently, it fell into administration. That is the base proposal, the key structural elements of which are covered in amendments 1231 to 1238 and 1240 to 1248.

Amendment 1239, on which members may wish to vote separately, would mean that the right to buy would apply at any time, giving fans trusts with clear backing from supporters the ability to make a bid for their club. This is how that would work. First, a trust would express an interest in the purchase of its club, and it would seek to be on the public register of fans trusts. Ministers can reject an application if it is not clear that the trust is predominantly composed of fans of the club, if the trust is not open to join at an affordable rate or if it is not clear that members of the trust are sufficiently supportive of a bid to buy the club. There is also a general public interest test.

If their expression of interest is accepted, fans are assured prefered bidder status for their club if it comes up for sale or goes into administration. Again, that must be approved both by a vote of the trust and by Scottish ministers.

If my second proposal—amendment 1239—is accepted, the trust would be able to buy the club, either for an agreed price or following an independent valuation, at any time. In cases where more than one trust applies to buy a particular club, only one may be permitted to proceed. In most cases, that should encourage fans to bring different bodies together to support a bid, as has happened through the Foundation of Hearts.

The base amendments also propose that trusts should be eligible to apply for funding from the Scottish Government to assist with a purchase. It is not specified in the amendments, but my expectation is that that assistance would be likely to come in the form of loans or underwriting, rather than direct grants, especially if fans of larger clubs apply successfully.

The last two provisions in the base amendments are to allow an appeal by an owner against the exercise of the right to buy, as required by the European convention on human rights, and an option to buy a smaller proportion of the shares in a club, particularly in cases where the trust cannot afford to buy the club outright.

Every party represented around this table is on record as supporting fans, and there will never be a better opportunity to put fans in the driving seat of Scottish football. I urge all members to support my amendments.

I move amendment 1231.

Stewart Stevenson (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP): I do not seek to pick at the underlying principle of this group of amendments, but I seek information about the implementation of that principle.

I will start with something that central belt members might have overlooked: the status and issues relating to the clubs in the Scottish Highland Football League, of which I have three in my parliamentary constituency—in Buckie, Banff and Fraserburgh. As we know, Highland league clubs have successfully been a feeder for more senior leagues. Examples of that are Ross County, which was my father's club, and of course Caley Jags, which interestingly was formed from the merger of two of the three clubs in Inverness—Clachnacuddin refused to play. That immediately opens up one of the issues, which is that a purchase might relate not to a single club but to the circumstances in which clubs are merging. The construction of the amendments that are before us would probably exclude action by supporters in those circumstances. The mover and supporter of the amendments might care to think about that, because I suspect that that is not their intention.

I will by no means cover all the detail, which is substantial, but I will perhaps cover just enough to show that further thinking is needed. There is perhaps a little misunderstanding of how share ownership and voting works—the two might not be as easily connected as is thought. The amendments talk about a majority of the voting shares, which is fine, but there may be circumstances in which previous owners retain a single share that does not have the characteristics of a vote that may cause something to happen, but which carries with it the right to veto a proposed action. When Governments have sold off companies, they have exercised that right, and it also happens in commercial environments. The construction of the amendments perhaps does not fully address that way in which things may happen.

The amendments talk about the purchase of the majority of a club. I understand what is intended, but the difficulty is that an individual purchase could well not be about buying a majority of a club, as it might be about adding to a significant shareholding to create a majority. I suspect that the mover and supporter of the amendments do not seek to exclude that, so they might need to look at the construction of the amendments in that regard.

Another issue is that there may be circumstances in which the transfer of ownership or part of the ownership of a club takes place without any value exchange. Again, the mover and supporter are unlikely to seek to exclude that.
However, that is very tricky territory, so a wee bit more thinking requires to be done.

I have a more general question to which I genuinely do not know the answer. It is simply whether, in operating with the provisions of the Companies Act 2006, which is clearly a reserved matter, we are crossing the line into ultra vires issues. I am sure that advice will have been taken on that, but it would be helpful if the mover of the amendments could give us comfort that that issue has been considered. I would hate to see the initiative fall for that particular reason, above all.

Finally, I sound a note of caution about the use of the word “fans”. Fans come in all shapes and forms. We should not discount the idea that David Murray was a fan of Rangers—a fan with sufficient money that he could act alone in what he thought was the club’s interest. We need to be careful about how we talk about and define fans.

In principle, the amendments are a very good and eminently supportable effort, but further work is required on some of the detail. I do not pretend that I have exhausted all the issues that I might have found if I was a regular member of the committee—rather than someone who was parachuted in at comparatively late notice—and had spent a wee bit more time on the matter.

Cameron Buchanan (Lothian) (Con): I, too, am concerned about the technicalities of the bill, legal and otherwise. We discussed the issue at our group meeting, but I would have liked more time to consider the matter. I think that the principle is agreed, but there is a lack of detail. I share Stewart Stevenson’s disquiet about certain aspects of the amendments. It is difficult to understand the legal actions and technicalities.
However, I am not of a mind to push that issue.

Willie Coffey (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP): I thank Alison Johnstone for the amendments, which I am broadly supportive of.
When Alison sums up, I wonder whether she might give us a little bit more clarity on the problems that fans groups and trusts will face in mounting a bid, with regard to getting the necessary funding to do so and, at the end of that, putting in place any finance that might be required to make the process successful.

Alison Johnstone referred to possible funding eligibility at the beginning of the process by way of loans, underwriting and so on. In my experience, the stumbling block for fans groups when they try to assemble a credible bid can be around getting enough sufficient funding to mount the process to begin with and to demonstrate to all parties concerned that they have sufficient funds to carry it through. I would welcome a wee bit more clarity on those aspects of Alison Johnstone’s amendments.

Alex Rowley (Cowdenbeath) (Lab): I support the amendments. I should say that I am a Kelty Hearts Junior Football Club supporter, but no matter what team people support, if they go regularly to games, they feel quite passionate about the issue. These past few years, there has been disbelief at the events that have taken place in some of the biggest football clubs, as well as some of the lower league football clubs—in clubs such as Dunfermline, for example. When Dunfermline was going through its difficulty, I met the fans regularly and I knew what they were going through as their club came very close to being put out of business.

We need to look at the principle behind the amendments, which is about empowering fans. If there are some technical issues—such as drafting that needs to be tightened up—they could be addressed as the bill goes forward to stage 3. However, getting the amendments into the bill today would be the right thing to do. We can support the principle of the amendments. If there is work to be done, it can be done between now and stage 3. If the amendments are moved today, I will certainly support them.

Ken Macintosh (Eastwood) (Lab): I also want to speak in support of amendment 1231, in the name of Alison Johnstone, and in favour of all the amendments in the group. This is about extending the right to buy to football clubs and communities across Scotland. It is a proposal that all my colleagues in Scottish Labour are proud to support.

I believe that members in the committee and across the Parliament are united in support of the principles behind the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill but, in many ways, the proposals on community ownership are the most exciting part of the legislation. The right to buy that was introduced through the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 has been a hugely important practical as well as symbolic change to how communities interact with the land that they occupy across Scotland. Its benefits have been felt not just in rural areas such as the Highlands and Islands but in urban areas such as Neilston in East Renfrewshire, where local people, through the development trust, now own a wind farm in their community and have exerted direct influence over the community that they live in and the shape of that community.

I believe that it is time that we took that experience and those principles to the next stage and I believe that football club ownership is the ideal place to start. I believe that it would be difficult for anyone in this room—or, frankly, across Scotland—to stand up and argue that the current state of Scottish football, in terms of its accountability, its sustainability, or simply its success, is a model that should be continued.

Successive ownership models, including that of the sugar daddy or the foreign oligarch, have proved an unmitigated disaster and have ruined many once-proud local football clubs. Football fans and local communities have not only lost out but been made to feel powerless. They have even been taken advantage of and had their good will exploited. If we compare those models with fan ownership models such as Barcelona or as practised by virtually every club in Germany, we can see that there are some examples that we should be emulating.

No one is arguing that fan ownership is the only answer or even the best option in every case, but it deserves to at least be one of the options for the future of Scottish football clubs.

I will not repeat the many safeguards and caveats already outlined by Alison Johnstone, but it is clear that, if we accept the amendments, football clubs in Scotland can operate in the fans’ interests, in the community’s interests and in the public interest. I noted the points that Stewart Stevenson, Cameron Buchanan and Willie Coffey made, and they were particularly hesitant about the current framing of the sections before us. I do not entirely accept the argument that they made, but what is more important about the sections before us is that we accept—

Stewart Stevenson: Will Mr Macintosh take an intervention?

Ken Macintosh: I will.

Stewart Stevenson: Would you be sympathetic to the idea that we should extend the provision to the Highland league?

Ken Macintosh: I am delighted that Stewart Stevenson wants to build on the amendments in this group before we have even accepted them, but I think that we should take it one step at a time. I accept the set of proposals for the major Scottish football clubs. I suggest to Cameron Buchanan, who is concerned about technicalities, that there may be minor concerns but the provision that is before us is lifted almost in its entirety from the 2003 act, so it is not new legislation; it is modelled exactly on existing legislation that has been proved to work and to be effective and which is practised currently in Scotland. Not only that, it is not a new approach. There are already many fans in Scotland who have bought out their football clubs, Dunfermline being just one example. However, the current state of legislation in Scotland makes it difficult for them to do so. It puts all sorts of obstacles in their way.

I do not think that we should continue down that route. If we have concerns and we do not adopt the proposals now at stage 2, it is unlikely that we will adopt them at stage 3. It is more important that we adopt the principles and accept the amendments at stage 2, and then work on the technicalities at stage 3. On that basis, I urge all members of the committee to support the amendments.

Marco Biagi: I thank the members who have lodged amendments. I have heard a lot that I can agree with. The Scottish Government is extremely supportive of supporter involvement and ownership, and that is something that we can endorse as an aim. We have already convened a working group under Stephen Morrow, bringing together supporters groups, the Scottish Football Association and the Scottish Professional Football League to construct a consensus way forward.
I can personally relate to the issue. It is not something that is widely known, but the team that I followed in my youth had financial issues, bad management and bankruptcy, and it plummeted four divisions and ended up having to reregister under a different name. Before you assume what club that was, let me tell you that it was the serie A club Fiorentina, which shows that such financial problems can happen in a wide range of contexts and countries and that it is an issue that many football leagues have to grapple with.

On reflection, and in consultation with colleagues, we are convinced that legislation could be helpful in ensuring that this aim is advanced. Therefore, it would be our intention at stage 3 to introduce amendments to allow much of this to be achieved mainly by regulations, but with an explicit reference in the bill to achieving the aim. That would allow us to consult and to co-produce the detail of the regulations with supporters groups, ensuring that we have a system that does not just express the principle and express sympathy but which could actually work.

There are a number of issues with the approach that is taken by the amendments both in detail and in principle. Stewart Stevenson has already brought some of his financial and company law expertise to bear on the detail, and I presume that he has been able to see the amendments only for the past few days. They are complex amendments, almost amounting to a new bill that, if it were to be introduced as a bill, would probably go either to the Health and Sport Committee or, because it concerns the right to buy, to the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee. In making such big changes to a bill, we need to afford due opportunities for parliamentary scrutiny by other subject committees, as well as the opportunity for widespread public consultation. The Scottish Government has not been able to consult directly on the amendments in the way that we would normally consult on proposals if we were going to legislate on anything.

John Wilson (Central Scotland) (Ind): Could the minister give me a clear steer on whether he is minded not to accept the amendments today, or whether he is minded to accept them on the basis that the Scottish Government, along with others, can lodge the amendments that it wishes at stage 3? Like other committee members, I am keen to get something in the bill now that we can move forward with and which, if need be, can be refined at stage 3, rather than voting down the amendments. We might be in a similar position at stage 3 and, perhaps, have less time because we will be able to consider amendments for just a couple of days prior to the stage 3 debate. Is the minister minded to support the amendments in the name of Alison Johnstone and supported by Ken Macintosh to allow the matter to move forward and allow us to work around the issues that have been identified in them?

Marco Biagi: Can I perhaps get to that? I was working towards it but, at this point, I want to highlight the issues with the detail. If the amendments were agreed to, the detail that has already been highlighted would be in primary legislation pending the stage 3 amendments that we would lodge.

Clubs are not land. A lot of their value is intangible and depends on the players who are with them as well as the complex structures of ownership, whereby a stadium might be owned by one holding company and something else might be owned by another. In Fiorentina’s case, the stadium was owned by the municipality. That would be an interesting approach for the Local Government and Regeneration Committee to take, but I do not think that we would quite be at that point in Scotland.

John Wilson: As I understand it, the grounds that some clubs use are owned by the local authorities, so there is already local authority ownership of football grounds in Scotland. One of the difficulties that we and fans have had is in trying to determine what exactly a club is because, as you say, a club’s ground is owned by one company, its name is owned by someone else and the players are employed by another organisation.

I hope that the amendments in this group will help to clarify exactly what entity a football club is in Scotland. At the moment, various different corporations claim to own different parts of clubs and the fans are unaware of what exactly constitutes the ownership of the club.

Marco Biagi: I apologise for my slightly irreverent aside about local authority ownership of stadia in Italy. The point that I was aiming at was made effectively by the deputy convener, who pointed out the complex ownership structures and the need to get valuation systems right if ownership is to operate in the way that is proposed.

If clubs are at the point of insolvency and then hold for six months pending a fan group coming together, that could make liquidation more likely because, in that period, there might be a flight of players or other bidders might be unable to come in. Therefore, an unintended consequence might be that we end up with more clubs going into liquidation than at present. That is the kind of unintended consequence that none of us wants to happen and we have to ensure that the amendments, or whatever legislation is put in place, will not lead to such consequences.

Non-league clubs and potentially competing claims, which are known from land reform, are also issues. There is no test in the amendments for whether a community bid would be financially viable.

Those are all important details of the amendments. However, there is a principle involved. We want to ensure that fans have a greater opportunity to participate in the running and ownership of clubs. We are all on the same page for that, which is great. A better approach would be to include a specific reference to it in the bill and then to develop the detail thereafter through secondary legislation.

The question is whether we can get the matter right by stage 3. If the amendments are agreed to, we can certainly further amend the bill in that direction or move more towards a secondary legislation approach. If we agree to the amendments and then amend them at stage 3, a lot will be riding on getting everything right in the next six weeks, because it is very hard to amend primary legislation. Indeed, introducing primary legislation requires a process of consultation and development that, for the most part—except in emergencies—takes a lot longer than six weeks.

Using affirmative procedure to develop the details, with the bill setting out the aim, would allow for consultation with the wider footballing community and—appropriately—with Parliament. It would ensure that, rather than just endorsing the principle, we get right any legislation that is introduced and keep it more easily updated in light of developments and changing circumstances, and any experience that we gain during its implementation.

I hope that everyone can see the benefits of that approach. We will introduce amendments to that end at stage 3 because, as I said, we all agree with the aim of increasing supporter involvement and ownership, and we consider that legislation would be helpful in advancing that aim.

With that in mind, I ask members not to press their amendments but, in any case, the Government will proceed at stage 3 in the way that I described by lodging amendments for Parliament to consider.

Alison Johnstone: I would certainly be happy to work with the minister before stage 3, but I am afraid that those commitments do not yet cover the essentials of my proposal. I, too, am grateful for the work that Stephen Morrow and his group put in, but the group was expressly asked not to look at this issue, which I think was unfortunate.

It is important to note that, when we initially polled people, 95 per cent supported a right to buy at sale or administration and that, in our latest survey, 81 per cent of people supported the right to buy at any time, with a third of those who responded representing fans trusts.

It is important that this is in the bill. The minister has spoken about regulations, but we as a Parliament cannot amend those regulations. We can only agree or disagree to them.

I want to give members a flavour of some of the support that we have received for the proposals. Dave Scott from Nill by Mouth said that the charity “would be supportive of proposals for greater fan control and ownership of their clubs and feel that this could be an exciting opportunity for the silent majority of fans to find their voice and use their increased position to bring about the real changes required to bring the Scottish game into the 21st century.”

Stuart Duncan, a former director of Greenock Morton Football Club and Supporters Direct UK, said:

“I’m very excited at the prospect of fans being given the right to buy. Clubs provincial and otherwise are community assets as shown by my own club Greenock Morton who now have a vibrant and highly successful community trust, a fan led initiative, which is in their own words, ‘the heartbeat of Inverclyde’. These community assets are best protected by people who have the club as the hub of the community at heart, fans.”

A Kilmarnock fan said to us:

It is fair to say that the bulk of responses from Rangers fans were supportive, but many were also libellous. [Laughter] I will not read out any of those ones, but here is one that should be safe:

“I support Rangers so it would avoid a situation arising like the one that arose over the past few years. Rangers fans are the only people who will take proper care of Rangers football club.”

A St Mirren fan said simply:

I could read out quotes all day, but that would probably guarantee the rejection of my amendments by the committee.

Marco Biagi: Those are sentiments that I think we have all broadly expressed in the committee, and they certainly show a positive approach to supporter ownership that the Government would endorse. However, there is a distinction between those sentiments and what is in the amendments that are before us. In quoting sentiments that we all broadly agree with while speaking to your amendments, you are perhaps manufacturing a disagreement when in fact we agree on those principles and sentiments.

Alison Johnstone: If we agree in principle, and if we are as supportive as we all purport to be, we should support the amendments today and look at... the technicalities before stage 3. If the amendments are passed today, I will work with all parties here to achieve consensus on any refinements that may be required at stage 3 concerning the nature of the organisations that can bid, the role of the Scottish ministers and any other issues that are raised by fans or members. Agreeing to the amendments today could be the last chance for years to ensure a proper fan-led reform of the Scottish game. If the committee does not back fan ownership today, how many clubs will stumble from one crisis to another? How many will fold? How many enterprising groups of local people will continue to be shut out of a role? I urge all members to vote for my amendments today.

I press amendment 1231.

Amendment 1231 agreed to.

Amendments 1232 to 1248 moved—[Alison Johnstone]—and agreed to.

Section 65—Disposal and use of common good property: consultation

The Convener: Amendment 1085, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 1086, 1249 and 1250.

Marco Biagi: I was happy to lodge amendments 1085 and 1086 in response to the committee’s recommendations. As you know, the aim of the bill in relation to common good is to increase people’s awareness of what property is common good and their involvement in decisions about it. When a local authority proposes to dispose of or change the use of any common good property, the bill requires it to consult people about that change. Specifically, it must notify and seek representations from community councils in the local authority area and any community bodies that are known to have an interest in the property.

Many local authorities have separate common good funds for different towns. We recognise that, especially for authorities that cover large geographical areas, it may be burdensome to consult all the community councils in the local authority area over one common good property. Under the Local Government etc (Scotland) Act 1994, in administering their common good property, local authorities are required to “have regard to the interests of the inhabitants of the area to which the common good relates”.

That does not apply to the four city councils, however, as their common good funds cover the whole of their areas. The amendment therefore limits the consultation requirement to those community councils whose area covers all or part of the area to which the common good in question relates. As that implements one of the committee’s recommendations, which arose from the experience of Highland Council, I hope that my amendments will be supported.

The effect of Cameron Buchanan’s amendments would be to remove the requirement for local authorities to have regard to guidance on the management and use of property that forms part of the common good, although they would still be required to have regard to guidance on the specific duties imposed by the bill in relation to common good. I appreciate that Cameron Buchanan may want local authorities to have more freedom in their management of common good property, but the message that I am hearing—I know that the committee has heard it, too—is that people do not feel that common good property is always being managed properly even when no disposal or change of use is involved. I therefore think that we should retain the option of issuing guidance on any aspect of common good management, and I ask Mr Buchanan not to move his amendments.

I move amendment 1085.

Cameron Buchanan: I was going to say that amendment 1249 is a probing amendment. It is all very well that Scottish ministers can issue guidance on the management and use of a property that forms part of the common good, but I wanted to hear—I think that the minister has explained this—what form that guidance would take under the present Government. I would also like him to explain whether the guidance would be technical or policy based.

Marco Biagi: I am not sure that I understand the distinction that Mr Buchanan is making between policy-based guidance and technical guidance. Policy-based guidance can be quite technical. Can he please clarify what he means?

Cameron Buchanan: I really wanted the minister to explain what form the guidance would take. I am not going to move the amendments in my name; I just want to know what form the guidance would take.

Marco Biagi: All guidance is developed in partnership with everyone involved. We know that strong views have been expressed on the management and maintenance of common good assets, and we think that this power will allow us to address some of the uncertainty that is out there and create something that will give local authorities and communities certainty about what they should expect from common good.

Amendment 1085 agreed to.

Amendment 1086 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

Section 65, as amended, agreed to.
Section 66—Disposal etc of common good property: guidance

Amendments 1249 and 1250 not moved.

Section 66 agreed to.

Section 67 agreed to.

Section 68—Meaning of “allotment”

The Convener: Amendment 1164, in the name of Ken Macintosh, is grouped with amendments 1165 to 1167, 1229, 1168, 1252 and 1230. I draw members’ attention to the information in the groupings paper about pre-emptions and direct alternatives in the group.

Ken Macintosh: I will speak to a number of amendments about allotments on behalf of and with the support of the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society, which is the key organisation representing plot holders and the allotment community. First, I thank the members of SAGS for taking the time and effort to brief MSPs, including ministers, on this important subject. I believe that the minister and I are among a number of members who enjoyed SAGS’s hospitality at its international conference centre—I should point out to those who have not been there that that is a portakabin with a solar-power-panelled roof in Inverleith in Edinburgh.

It is fair to say that SAGS appreciates the Government’s commitment to allotments and ministerial efforts to offer some statutory protection to allotment sites in the bill. However, it is also fair to say that the allotment community is hugely anxious that, whatever their good intentions, ministers run the risk of getting things fundamentally wrong with some sections in the bill.

I remind members that, at stage 1, SAGS felt that plot holders might be better off if part 7 were scrapped altogether. SAGS has moved on from that position, and it now believes that the bill will be a move in the right direction if the Parliament can address three outstanding issues: fair rent, waiting times and the size of a standard allotment plot, which is the first issue that we are dealing with this morning.

Section 68(d) defines an allotment as being “of such size as may be prescribed.”

However, the pressure on local authorities to meet the demand for allotments—I should add that that pressure will become a legal obligation for them under the bill—has resulted in many councils dividing and subdividing existing plots. The real fear that SAGS has expressed is that, unless the size of a plot is defined and protected in statute, local authorities will reduce plot sizes further in order to reduce their waiting lists. That is already happening in Glasgow, Edinburgh, Fife and elsewhere across Scotland.

My amendment 1168 would require the land that is offered to a potential plot holder to be approximately 250m$^2$, which is roughly half the size of this room or, for those of a sporting bent, roughly the size of a tennis court. SAGS argues that that amendment to define the size of a standard allotment plot is essential to protecting the unique identity and role of allotments, and it points out that it has been accepted for decades that the amount of land required to provide most of a family unit’s needs is in the region of 250m$^2$. Such space can provide year-round activity for the retired and the unemployed and SAGS is worried that, unless the size of an allotment is so defined, plot holders might not have access to the area of land that is necessary for their needs.

I highlight to the minister and committee members that allotments are a fundamental part of the Scottish Government’s food and drink policy to support and encourage people across Scotland to grow their own fruit and vegetables. A 250m$^2$ allotment would enable a family unit to grow most of the fruit and vegetables that it consumes, and a definition of size is necessary in primary legislation to stop local authorities subdividing plots to reduce their waiting lists and forcing people to accept smaller plots than they require.

The allotment community accepts that not everyone needs or wants 250m$^2$, but amendment 1168 would also ensure that smaller plots could be made available for those who want them. In any case, the choice will be theirs, not imposed on them. The amendment also allows for existing allotments that might be over 250m$^2$.

SAGS has indicated that, whatever her good intentions are, it does not support amendment 1229, in the name of Aileen McLeod, which contains the phrase “no more than 250 square metres in area.”

SAGS firmly believes that that will allow local authorities to offer plot sizes that suit them, the providers, rather than the plot holders. Even with regulations, it will be up to ministers and local authorities to determine what is offered under that process, instead of allowing people and local associations to determine the area that they wish to cultivate. I remind fellow MSPs that the bill’s basic purpose is supposedly to empower communities and give people more control over their own lives and not have government at whatever level dictating what people want and need. The bill’s basic tenet is subsidiarity.
I believe that the City of Edinburgh Council has a waiting list of seven to 10 years, but we also know that, once people are offered half a plot, that plot will be subdivided for ever. Accordingly, I urge members to support amendment 1168 in my name and the consequential amendments 1164 to 1167.

I move amendment 1164.

Marco Biagi: This group of amendments addresses the size of an allotment. The fact that we are faced with three options reflects the considerable debate that there has been on the issue.

Allotments have a long and proud history in this country. Although several factors distinguish them from other forms of growing, one of the most important is scale. In the past few months, we have worked closely with the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society to understand and, wherever possible, meet its needs. We have been listening.

Although 250m² has been discussed as a reference size, I know that the society has recognised that not everyone will want an allotment of that size at all stages of their life. Some new allotment holders might want to start small and move up to a larger area later, and others might no longer feel able to manage such an area and would welcome a smaller piece of ground to grow on.

The amendments in the name of Aileen McLeod provide that flexibility. Amendment 1229 sets the maximum size of an allotment at 250m², which, as Ken Macintosh pointed out, is just smaller than a standard-sized tennis court, while amendment 1230 requires the Government to make further provision in secondary legislation in connection with the sizes of allotments. Our intention is for the maximum size to apply only prospectively; transitional provisions will ensure that existing allotments that are larger than 250m² are protected. In the definition of an allotment, such an approach gives a clear indication of the scale of allotment growing, as opposed to community growing spaces, which, in comparison, are predominantly on a much smaller scale. The approach therefore recognises the uniqueness of allotments.

As well as providing flexibility, we will provide security by introducing secondary legislation that will make further provisions on size. Through that process, we will have the necessary time to encourage and foster collaborative working relationships between the allotment-growing community and local authority allotment providers, which in some instances—although not all—are strained at the moment. That time will allow us to develop secondary legislation to provide the flexibility that everyone agrees is needed, and the intended outcome is secondary legislation that meets the needs of all interested parties.

Ken Macintosh's amendments seek the same outcome as Dr McLeod's amendment 1229—to establish a maximum size of an allotment while providing flexibility to have smaller allotments where they are wanted. However, there is a difficulty with the wording. Defining an allotment as being is too imprecise in law for local authorities and tenants to know what it means. Consequently, it is unclear how subsection (3) in the amendment, which refers to meeting a request for an allotment of

"of a size of approximately 250 square metres"

The definition in subsection (3)—that an allotment should be of whatever size "as has been requested"—may appear attractive in principle, but it would be impractical on the ground, and it would be exceptionally onerous to implement from a local authority perspective. We can imagine an authority having to measure and deliver plots of different sizes to every individual to any level of specificity.

Amendment 1229, in the name of Dr McLeod, is more precise. Introducing secondary legislation will provide the necessary time to ensure that we get the provisions right to meet everyone's competing needs.

John Wilson: I wish to discuss the points that have been made about the 250m² size that SAGS has recommended for a standard-size plot. During our stage 1 consideration, we discussed the issue of plots being subdivided—either halved or quartered—to suit the needs of people coming into allotments, as Ken Macintosh indicated, or those heading out of and taking up retirement from allotment growing.

I am keen for any discussions about the sizes that are offered to be carried out in conjunction with local allotment growers societies. I do not want local authorities to offer people with the only chance that they may get of having an allotment a plot of, say, 50m² or 70m²—anything below the recommended 250m².

I am trying to get clarification on that from the minister in his closing remarks. What would be the problem with an agreement to set the defined size that we can work with, while ensuring that any negotiations and any offers that are made about the size that is given at the first stage are in conjunction with the local allotment growers society, so that it controls the sizes that are allocated, rather than the local authority being the arbiter of the sizes that are offered in the first instance to any new members who wish to take up allotment growing?

The Convener: The minister will not be making the closing remarks for the group, of course, because the lead amendment in the group is in Mr Macintosh’s name. On you go, minister.

Marco Biagi: It was a rather long intervention, but let me be clear that the secondary legislation could deliver what has been described. Members have heard from what I have said about the value of the partnership that we want to build. We want to build bridges between groups where relationships have been strained in some cases.

Ultimately, we can require a lot of consultation, and a lot of consultation mechanisms are strongly provided for in the bill for issues such as rent, which we will come to, where we want to emphasise the importance of development in partnership with local growers. The secondary legislation provides an opportunity to ensure that that happens.

We have committed to a tripartite group, involving ministers and SAGS, which will take an overview of the situation on a more national, strategic level, to ensure that what happens at the local level represents the needs of everybody, with a food-growing strategy that emphasises collaborative working.

A lot of levers will be pulled to ensure local and national collaboration. If everybody is in trenches taking pot shots at one another, we will not get anything done but, if we can manage to find common ground, we can deliver a system that will be practically implementable and which will reflect the views of people who want allotments. We want more people to have allotments, and we are not ashamed to say that. We have to make that happen in a way that everybody on the ground locally can accept.

I will add something about Cameron Buchanan’s amendment 1252. Leaving the size of allotments entirely for local authorities to determine goes against some of the debates that we have had, stakeholders’ views and what the community is asking us to do and consider. I hope that Cameron Buchanan will at least consider not moving that amendment.

I urge members to support amendments 1229 and 1230, as they are the better of two broadly similar options for determining the size of allotments. They are better for implementation and provide a more practical way of achieving the objectives, which we share.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 1252 would give local authorities the power to determine allotment sizes in their areas. I acknowledge and share the intention for allotment holders to have an allotment of a reasonable size, but we must recognise the need for flexibility, which is what I am trying to achieve. To allow allotments to be given to as many people as possible and to minimise waiting lists, which is important, the bill should make it clear that local authorities have the freedom to adjust allotment sizes to fit demand and supply in all local circumstances. That is the point of amendment 1252.

Alex Rowley: I should perhaps declare an interest, in that I am a keen allotment grower and have an allotment in Kelty. I have often discussed with council officials the fact that they need to be more innovative in engaging people in allotment growing.

In Kelty, over the past few years, a number of young mums with kids have been given an allotment. My allotment is bigger than half the size of this room, and the problem is that people find it difficult to maintain and manage an allotment of that size.

From talking to some of the parents, I have found that they want to get the message across to their kids about how food is grown and produced. There are interesting projects. For example, there is a community allotment, and NHS Fife has allotments for one of its mental health projects. However, I do not think that Fife Council has been ambitious enough.

When the size issue came up at stage 1, I did not quite grasp that an unforeseen consequence could be that, to meet the requirements in the bill, councils would start to have smaller allotments. I was thinking more about the fact that councils need to be more innovative and have starter plots, such as quarter or half plots. To do that, it is important that we define roughly what a plot is. Having since looked at the issue further and talked to allotment holders and the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society, I think that there is rightly a genuine concern that councils will meet the bill’s requirements simply by reducing the size of plots, which would be devastating. I talked about starter plots because, as people get used to growing and managing an allotment and become more successful at it, they find that they want to grow more.

I hope that we can find a way to deal with the issue, and I think that the minister acknowledges that there is an issue. If possible, by working with the Government, we should find a way to have a maximum or ideal size, so that councils cannot simply reduce the size to meet the requirements in the bill.

Alison McInnes (North East Scotland) (LD): I am grateful to the committee for the opportunity to speak on this group of amendments. I want to take a moment to reflect on the work that the committee has done on the issue. I am impressed by members’ efforts in seeking the views of allotment holders and other interested parties in taking evidence.

The many benefits of allotment gardening are now recognised. The active lifestyle, healthy eating and healthy ageing combined with community interaction mean that those with allotments reap all sorts of benefits. As many members have done, I have discussed the bill with the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society, and I am sympathetic to its argument that we need specific provision for the size of allotments so that land is not unduly divvied up to meet demand, while retaining flexibility.

I therefore support Ken Macintosh’s amendment 1168, which would mean that a plot is 250m² unless the person seeking to lease the land requests that it be smaller. As Ken Macintosh said, the society notes that it has long been held that that is the size of plot that is needed to ensure that a family of four could grow most of their own fruit and vegetables. I know that the society believes that that will help ensure an appropriate balance between the needs of the allotment community and the needs of the local authority.

Stewart Stevenson: I want to pose some specific questions to Ken Macintosh about the definition of “approximately 250 square metres”. Does it include 25m², 100m², 200m², 300m², 500m²? In other words, how far does the approximation extend? If—for the sake of illustration and not because I advocate this—the definition were “between 200m and 300m”, that would be precise and it would be approximately 250m, but what the amendment actually says is “approximately 250 square metres”. It would be helpful to try to understand at what point something ceases to be approximately 250m. Is it as low as 25m? Is it as high as 500m? Those numbers are entirely arbitrary.

Ken Macintosh: I thank all members for their contributions to this set of amendments. I will deal with the points in reverse order and therefore start with Stewart Stevenson’s point. The word “approximately” is well used in legislation. It is used repeatedly in legislation and there is no difficulty for local authorities—or, for that matter, a court of law, if it came to it—in interpreting that word. I suggest that the term “approximately 250 square metres” is used, because the previous measures included measurements such as poles and other such long-gone units of measurement. The size of 250m² is one that has been agreed on not just by me and SAGS but by the Government. The Government accepts that 250m² is the standard size that we are trying to define. I suggest that Stewart Stevenson’s worries about how far the word “approximately” stretches are ill founded in this case.

The Convener: The minister is trying to intervene. Are you going to take his intervention?

Ken Macintosh: Sorry, yes of course. I did not hear him.

Marco Biagi: I am too softly spoken for my own good sometimes. I was wondering which legislation you looked at as the model for this and whether there is an interaction with “smaller than”, which seems to be an issue here. It is not just a case of where “approximately” kicks in—at 220m or 230m—because there is a subsequent reference to “smaller than” approximately 250m², which, if you will pardon my saying so, is a bit of a recipe for confusion. We would not want something as simple as the size of allotments to end up in court over the interpretation of the primary legislation.

Ken Macintosh: I was going to come on to that point next. One of the reasons why I have not brought several examples of the use of the word “approximately” is that there are so many that it was not worth my quoting or listing them. It is a well-used and well-founded term—it is used by the Scottish Government in fact. I do not accept that this will be a contentious issue. I do not believe that there will be a difficulty in either local authorities or allotment holders defining what is meant by “approximately 250 square metres.”

The minister said that the use of the term “a size smaller than” is not defined. I would suggest that it is very clear what “a size smaller than” means. I contrast his questioning of the definition of “a size smaller than” with his support for the amendment moved by Aileen McLeod that says up to 250m². What is the difference between up to 250m² and “a size smaller than” 250m²?

Marco Biagi: It is a difference between up to 250 and smaller than “approximately 250”. Where does something cease being smaller than approximately 250 and start being approximately 250? Is it 220? Is it 230? Is it 210? That is the doubt that is thrown up by the amendment, the aim of which I have great sympathy with.

The Convener: Minister?

Ken Macintosh: Minister? Thank you for that vote of confidence—if only it were the case.

The Convener: Sorry—Mr Macintosh. I beg your pardon.

Ken Macintosh: The minister’s point is fairly spurious. If you accept up to 250m², you can accept smaller than 250m².
Alex Rowley: I do not know whether I was picking it up correctly, but I understood that the Government was accepting the principle that there is a standard size of allotment. If we all accept the principle of that, can something be worked out with the Government?

Ken Macintosh: Indeed. That is a very helpful comment. In fact, I want to pick up on Mr Rowley's earlier comment as well. I believe that there is clearly good will and the minister has clearly been listening. He talked about listening to SAGS and others and working with them and I know that he has gone out of his way to meet them to try to address their concerns. I think that Alex Rowley captured the spirit of this discussion and of the minister's intention. I think that we can proceed from stage 2 to stage 3 and continue to collaborate and make sure that we agree on the definitions.

The point is that there is very little contention about the standard size of allotment. We are all agreed that it should be 250m². The issue comes back to two questions—one raised by Cameron Buchanan and the other by John Wilson—about flexibility and control. The amendments before us all offer flexibility but as regards flexibility and control, it is about who exercises the discretion. In one case, it is exercised entirely by the local authority. In the case of my amendments, it is exercised by the individuals. It is about empowering individuals and empowering communities.

John Wilson: The difficulty that I have with giving individuals that flexibility is that when individuals are offered an allotment by a local authority, they may take the size that the local authority gives because they may see that as the only option that they have.

My earlier suggestion to the minister was that the decision to offer smaller-sized allotments should be taken in conjunction with SAGS in that area so that there is no undermining of its authority that would diminish what we are trying to achieve in relation to the approximate 250m² allotment size. There is a danger that people might believe that they will only be offered 50m² or 100m² by the local authority without the consultation with SAGS that should exist; it should be assisting in the management of that allotment area.

Ken Macintosh: Mr Wilson makes a very good point. It is similar to the point that Mr Rowley made earlier, which is that there is undoubtedly a process of collaboration—in fact, the one that the minister alluded to—between local authorities, SAGS and plot holders. By innovative thinking about bringing in starter plots and so on and by making sure that the options are clearly spelled out to those who are applying for a plot, we can reach exactly the right solution.

What is crucial, and what is captured in my amendment and not in the other amendments, is that we put in place the protection that existing allotment holders believe they need. If you go to the Inverleith allotment, for example, and have a look round, you can see quite a few allotment plots that are the standard size, but you can also see rows and rows of sheds back to back, which is the result of subdivided plots, where people are being forced into ever smaller areas of land. It is not necessarily their choice and, in many cases, they would like to upsize, but they do not have that opportunity.

We are putting in the bill a particular legal obligation on councils to do something about waiting lists. Councils will be acutely aware of their legal responsibilities and will act on those to cut waiting lists. However, with that pressure to cut waiting lists, councils might take the easy option—if I may put it that way—and, rather than find the land that might be needed, take the existing allotments and cut them in half and cut them in half again. That is exactly what is happening at the moment and that is what allotment holders fear.

That is the fear that we have to address and I believe that the way to address it is by putting in some protection on the face of the bill—in the primary legislation—while working with the minister and SAGS as we approach stage 3 to further define and further refine how we approach this measure.

I urge members, in the spirit of the discussion of the measure, to support the amendments in my name. I press amendment 1164.

Amendment 1167 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 1251, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendments 1256, 1176, 1216, 1269 and 1217. I draw members’ attention to the fact that amendment 1256 pre-empts amendment 1176.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 1251 concerns making a profit out of an allotment.

I find it very difficult to know how one could define profit when selling produce. There are a number of provisions in the bill that seek to prohibit any profit being made from an allotment's produce. It is totally unclear to me why allotment users should be prevented from making a profit.

How does one define profit? Is it when they grow it, or when they buy the seeds? Is it not just the selling price? It is very difficult to define profit.

I think that it would be an issue if large retailers were taking up allotments to supply their stores, but that is not what this is about; they are not taking them up.

We are talking about members of the public who wish to enjoy the use of an allotment space to cultivate vegetables, fruits, herbs or flowers. If they happen to have excess produce and wish to sell it, who are we to forbid it? We heard the example of one person who is a member of SAGS: once a month everyone in their allotments got together to sell their produce openly on a particular day. It was not like a farmers market; it was in the allotments.

I think that, realistically, allotment users can take pride in selling the produce that they have worked hard to cultivate. Any profits gained from such sales are not intended for companies’ balance sheets, but are rather a small reward for the labours that allotment users have put in.

Furthermore, other areas of the bill seek to avoid waste of crops and to allow for compensation where it is due. To simultaneously prohibit any sale of an allotment's produce seems to be contradictory.

For the avoidance of doubt, my amendments in this regard intend to make it clear that allotment holders may sell their produce for a profit if they wish. Small sales for relatively small amounts of money are not a cog in a corporate supply chain but a chance for waste to be avoided and for compensation for hard work to be obtained where it is deserved.

I move amendment 1251.

Marco Biagi: The amendments from Cameron Buchanan would result in surplus produce on allotments being able to be sold for profit. In addition, they would remove the ability of local authorities to include provisions about the sale of surplus produce in regulations about allotments. That would prevent local authorities from taking account of local factors in determining how surplus produce on the allotments in their area may be sold.

The amendments could have the unintended consequence of bringing allotment holders within the scope of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 1991, as such production could fall within the definition of “agricultural land”, which includes land that is being used “for the purposes of a trade or business.”

That would mean that allotments could fall under an entirely different statutory regime that is not tailored specifically to them.

Additionally, the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society has argued very strongly that the purpose of an allotment is to provide self-sufficiency and good food rather than being a means to provide additional income. SAGS considers that any proceeds from sale should only go back to the allotment association to be reinvested in that community of allotment holders.

Amendments 1176, 1216 and 1217, in the name of Dr McLeod, loosen the provisions relating to the sale of surplus produce. The amendments remove the need for Scottish ministers to prescribe what produce may be sold and will allow produce of any type to be sold subject to any regulations that are made by a local authority. The amendments do not affect the definition of an allotment, which will still need to be used otherwise than with a view to making a profit.

Alex Rowley: I am trying to get one point straight in my mind. I know that, during the growing season, some allotments have a table with people selling produce, not only for the allotment committee but to cover the cost of seeds and heating for bringing the plants on. Would that be able to continue?

Marco Biagi: The bill is specifically intended to allow the sale of surplus produce on a not-for-profit basis. That was a request from stakeholders, and we are trying to ensure that that remains the case. If allotments become essentially small agricultural businesses, that would completely change their nature and the type of legislation that they would fall under.

Cameron Buchanan: I do not need to say any more on the subject. I press amendment 1251.

Section 70—Request to lease allotment

The Convener: Amendment 1169, in the name of Aileen McLeod, is grouped with amendments 1170, 1193 and 1194.

Marco Biagi: The bill currently allows for “a disabled person who has a physical impairment” to include information about their needs on the ground of disability when making a request for an allotment, and requires the local authority to include in its annual allotment report information about “the number of allotments ... that are accessible” and which have been adjusted during the year to be “accessible by a disabled person who has a physical impairment”.

In recognition that the provisions should acknowledge a broader definition of disability, amendments 1169, 1193 and 1194 seek to remove the reference to “a physical impairment” and ensure that the provision makes broader reference to “a disabled person”.

Section 70(3) already allows a disabled person who is making a request to lease an allotment to include information about their needs relating to access to an allotment or allotment site, and about possible adjustments to an allotment that might be needed on the ground of disability. Amendment 1170 seeks to extend that provision to ensure that when a disabled person makes a request for an allotment, the request may also include information about possible adjustments to the allotment site that would be needed by that person on the ground of disability. That will enable local authorities to ensure that opportunities for growing food on allotments are open to all, including people who have disabilities, and that authorities are assisted in that by being made aware of any adjustments that might be needed.

The amendments will ensure that the allotments provisions support the equality agenda, so I hope that the committee will support them.

I move amendment 1169.

Stewart Stevenson: I hope that in his concluding remarks the minister will confirm that the disablements in question include those that are temporary or intermittent. After all, I am sure that we would wish to extend those rights to people in that category.

Marco Biagi: The reference to “a disabled person” in the amendments will cover anyone who is disabled, temporarily or otherwise, but I am happy to check that.

Amendment 1169 agreed to.

Amendment 1170 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 1253, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is in a group on its own.

Cameron Buchanan: As members can see, amendment 1253 is quite a simple amendment that seeks to speed up the process for members of the public who apply to lease an allotment. As many submissions point out, it can take a long time for people to move up the allotment waiting list; the last thing that they need is unnecessary delay in getting the process started. As a result, I propose that the time within which the local authority must confirm receipt of a request to lease an allotment be reduced from a lengthy 28 days to a more reasonable 14 days.

I move amendment 1253.

Section 72—Duty to provide allotments

The Convener: Amendment 1254, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendments 1171, 1255 and 1192.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 1254 is another probing amendment. I am all for the principle that waiting lists should be kept as small as possible so that the time that it takes for people to be given an allotment is minimised. That follows on from my amendment 1253. However, I am concerned that the target of maintaining on the waiting list a number that is "no more than one half the total number of allotments owned and leased by the authority" will have unwanted consequences that distort incentives. Can the minister assure me that the target will not create an incentive for local authorities to refuse requests to join the waiting list?

I move amendment 1254.

Ken Macintosh: I will speak to my amendment 1171 and in favour of Alex Rowley’s amendment 1255.

Section 72 places on local authorities a legal duty to provide allotments and to take action to deal with waiting lists. It does so by requiring councils to ensure that the number of people who are waiting for plots is no greater than "half the number of allotments owned and leased by the authority".

My amendment 1171 would put in place an additional caveat or stipulation that no one should wait more than five years.

Amendment 1255, in the name of my colleague Alex Rowley, would ensure that plots are created near the communities that need them—particularly otherwise socioeconomically deprived communities.

The Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society estimates that average plot turnover for most allotments is about 5 per cent a year. Even with the 50 per cent trigger point in the bill, that could easily mean waiting 10 or more years for a plot. Several witnesses have testified that the current waiting time in Edinburgh, for example, is between seven and 10 years.

My amendment 1171 would create an additional trigger point, or time limit, of five years. SAGS believes that that is a reasonable request that would not place an undue burden on local authorities. I believe that it originally wanted the amendment to stipulate a period of three years, but it was willing to compromise on five years. Under the bill, when the trigger point is reached, local authorities are required only to take reasonable steps to make additional provision. There are no absolute deadlines by which additional provision must be in place.

I am sure that members are aware of the many benefits that allotments provide to the community. People need plots for healthy food, to help to recover from physical or mental illness, as a family activity with their children or when facing unemployment or retirement. Allotments offer opportunities for all those who wish to enjoy the benefits of gardening and working in the outdoors.

This is also an issue of social justice. People in areas of multiple deprivation often do not have access to gardens, and they should not have to wait for 10 years for an allotment. It is also important that, in meeting their needs, the geographic area that we consider is the local community rather than the entire local authority area. That is the focus of Alex Rowley’s amendment 1255, which I also urge members to support.

I understand that some local authorities are concerned about the availability of land and the cost of developing allotments, but those fears can be addressed. Very little land is required to fulfil current demand, even in the major cities. To continue the sport analogy that was used earlier, an area the size of a football pitch would satisfy the current demand from a settlement of 10,000 people, and Edinburgh’s entire waiting list of more than 2,500 people could be accommodated on an area of land that is less than that which is required for a golf course.

If land is provided and local authorities work in partnership with allotment associations, the funding that is required to create allotments can be generated from a variety of sources and need not put a strain on local authority finances. I ask members to agree to amendments 1171 and 1255.
Alex Rowley: Amendment 1255 is supported by the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society. The bill currently sets the trigger point above which local authorities are required to take reasonable steps to provide additional allotments.

Amendment 1255 seeks to set a limit on the geographical area to which the trigger point would apply. It proposes that the allocation of allotments should be organised around communities rather than entire local authority areas. I feel that the inclusion in the bill of a trigger point will be ineffective if those who have registered an interest in gaining access to an allotment are told that they can get an allotment only in a location that is unsuitable by virtue of its being too far from their community. For example, if someone in Ballingry in my constituency was told that they could have an allotment along in Methil, that would involve two bus rides and it would take them an hour or so to get there and back. Such an arrangement would not be practical, even though the allocated allotment would be within the local authority area. Therefore, a provision such as the one that is proposed in amendment 1255 is needed.

Under a health and wellbeing and food-growing strategy, people should be able to access an allotment in their community without having to drive to it or to rely on a bus or some other form of public transport to get there. I do not feel that amendment 1255 would place an undue burden on local authorities, and I think that it would help to solidify the trigger-point principle that is contained in the bill.

In relation to Ken Macintosh’s amendment 1171, five years seems like a long time to wait, but I know that in some communities, particularly in the cities, some people have to wait even longer. I support the proposed provision.

I commend the Government for dealing with allotments in the bill, and I hope that it will spur local authorities to recognise the importance of the food-growing strategies. I also hope that, in time, the idea of having to wait for five years for an allotment will seem quite alien, but for now such a provision is necessary.

Marco Biagi: The amendments in the group take different approaches to waiting lists and the provision of allotments.

I am aware that members of the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society have experienced great variability in the performance of local authorities in meeting their current duty to provide allotments. In developing the bill, the Government looked at various ways of framing a revised duty—by timescale, by demand or by population. A key point is that the bill will, for the first time, require local authorities to maintain a waiting list so that demand for allotments is absolutely clear, and we have linked the duty to take reasonable steps to provide allotments to the number of people on the waiting list. Making a link with a clear demand for allotments seems to us to be the most appropriate way to frame the duty.

I recognise that the turnover of allotments can be slow; SAGS has sought an additional timescale-based measure. However, local authorities have expressed the view that linking the duty to a specific timescale would create a substantial practical burden, which is why we have not added a timescale to the duty and why I cannot support Ken Macintosh’s amendment 1171.

What we propose in amendment 1192, in the name of my colleague Dr McLeod, is that a local authority must include in its annual allotments report the number of persons who have been on its waiting list for a continuous period of more than five years. We believe that that would lead to substantial pressure to ensure that the number is kept down. Amendment 1192 will be supplemented by supporting guidance on the bill that will detail expectations about waiting times, and it will ensure that people in the community and elsewhere are all able to monitor a local authority’s performance.

Based on the information that is available to us, we believe that that provision, in tandem with a strengthened duty to take reasonable steps to provide allotments, has the potential to deliver almost 1,000 additional allotments, once the bill is enacted. I believe that our proposal strikes an appropriate balance between the desire to shorten the time that people have to wait for an allotment and the abilities of local authorities.

I note that it is ironic that, at the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities convention that Ken Macintosh and I attended on Friday, he made some comments about the Scottish Government wishing to dictate to local authorities from on high and to engage in centralised decision making. I believe that our proposed measures in this area strike the right balance between practicality and local autonomy.

In addition, Dr McLeod has made a commitment to establish a tripartite group that will meet annually. It will include the Scottish ministers, local authorities and the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society. That group will assess the progress that has been made on implementation of part 7 of the bill and will, we hope, help to foster the more trusting, positive and constructive working relationship that I referred to earlier.

Furthermore, the Government will use the duty in the bill to develop a food-growing strategy as a way to progress a constructive partnership between all parties, including local authorities, SAGS and community growers. We expect that one of the key areas of discussion will be—I do not think that anybody would deny that it will be—the road map for how local authorities will deliver, take reasonable steps and meet the requirement to carry forward the provisions in the bill.

One of the risks that was raised with us was that, if local authorities are under pressure to provide more allotments, allotments might be provided in locations that are distant from the people who want them. Alex Rowley’s amendment 1255 would make it explicit that allotments should be provided where they are wanted. That seems to be a matter of common sense, so I am happy to support the amendment.

Cameron Buchanan’s amendment 1254 would move the bill in completely the opposite direction from what the Government and Ken Macintosh, in particular, are trying to achieve, by lengthening a potential waiting list before the local authority was required to take steps to provide more allotments. I do not know whether Cameron Buchanan supports that flexibility and longer waiting lists, which would be at odds with Ken Macintosh’s amendments, but to clarify the point that he raised, no grounds are set out in the bill for refusing a request to go on a waiting list for an allotment. Therefore, there is no question of perverse incentives being created.

As Cameron Buchanan has got that clarification from me, I ask him to seek to withdraw amendment 1254, and I ask Ken Macintosh—perhaps more in hope than expectation—not to move amendment 1171. I urge members to support the amendment.

Nourish Scotland told the committee:

"Less ground is being used for allotments in Scotland than there is derelict land in Edinburgh."—[Official Report, Local Government and Regeneration Committee, 5 November 2014; c 26.]

Tackling waiting lists is vital to sustaining a new generation of allotment gardeners. Low turnover is, of course, an indication of success in this case, and Alex Rowley is right to stress the need for provision for folks in their local community.

Amendments 1171 and 1255 could foster the process of land reform and encourage local authorities to perceive vacant land as a resource that should be utilised whenever possible.

Cameron Buchanan: It was certainly not my intention to lengthen the waiting lists; it was more to prescribe that they would not stay the same. In view of the minister’s assurance, I seek to withdraw amendment 1254.

Section 73—Allotment site regulations

The Convener: Amendment 1173, in the name of Aileen McLeod, is grouped with amendment 1174.

Marco Biagi: Amendment 1173 will require local authorities to make regulations that include a method of determining a fair rent.

Following extensive discussion with SAGS, amendment 1173 builds on an initial requirement on local authorities to make regulations about allotment sites in their areas, including provisions relating to rent, and to develop the regulations through extensive consultation. The amendment will require a local authority, in setting its rent levels, to take account of "services provided by, or on behalf of, the local authority to tenants of allotments ... the costs of providing those services ... and circumstances that affect, or may affect, the ability of a person to pay the rent".

Therefore, amendment 1173 will further ensure that people who are on low incomes will not be dissuaded from participating in growing food on allotments on the basis of a lack of affordability.

Amendment 1174, which was lodged by Ken Macintosh, would introduce requirements on regulations about rent that have some similarity to the provisions of amendment 1173, lodged by Aileen McLeod. I would say only that great minds sometimes think alike. However, the amendment in the name of Dr McLeod goes one step further than Mr Macintosh’s proposal and, in effect, defines affordability as "circumstances that affect, or may affect, the ability of a person to pay the rent payable under the lease of an allotment".

I recognise Mr Macintosh’s desire to have a statement published by an authority about how affordability has been considered, as provided for in proposed subsection (3B) that amendment 1174 would insert into section 73. Local authorities are, of course, already required to consult before making allotment regulations and such a statement could be included in the consultation document. However, if members are concerned that a statement about affordability should be made more explicit, I am happy to consider that with a view to my colleague Dr McLeod lodging an amendment at stage 3.

I urge members to support amendment 1173, in Dr McLeod’s name, which seeks to achieve broadly the same thing as Ken Macintosh seeks to achieve but does it with more precision and stronger safeguards.

I ask Ken Macintosh, having made his point and, perhaps, expressed his agreement—a great sense of consensus is breaking out on the committee—not to move his amendment 1174.

I move amendment 1173.

Ken Macintosh: Allotment and plot holders have long benefited from the protection of a fair rent clause and I suspect—or, at least, I hope—that it was simply an oversight that no such provision appeared in the bill. Without such a provision, there would be nothing to prevent a local authority from increasing rents to generate additional funds, or simply to use rent as a tool to price people off their allotments, thereby enabling it to reduce its waiting list.

Although they are worded differently, the only essential difference between the two amendments in the group is the addition of the reporting provision in amendment 1174, which would ensure transparency in the rent-setting process.

I thank the minister for his comments and his acceptance of the fair rent principle. Fair rent is a social justice issue. A fair rent that takes into account ability to pay will enable people in deprived areas who wish to do so to contribute to their own food supply. It will help community groups to afford to cultivate a plot. In addition, local allotment associations will be able to work with local authorities to determine the level of services required and therefore the rent for the site. Such devolved management incorporates the basic principles of community empowerment and partnership working.

As the minister also alluded to, allotments can contribute to Government policy on food, social justice, health and wellbeing, reducing carbon emissions and enhancing the natural environment. I think that we are all agreed that rents should be set to enable those who are on a low income to participate and not be excluded. I urge members to support either of the amendments in the group. I believe that the only difference is that one has a reporting provision, but both capture the essence of fair rent.

Marco Biagi: To provide a slight insight, the concern about the existing fair rent provision is that it is not precisely defined and there is no understanding out there or in legislation about what fair rent is or how it can be tested. That emphasises the importance of having fairly precise legislation on the issue. The amendment in the name of Aileen McLeod uses the phrase “fair rent”, which makes the intention clear and will allow the level of acceptance from the community that we really need in allotments legislation.

I hope that members will support amendment 1173, given the commitment to include a reporting clause at stage 3.

Amendment 1173 agreed to.

Amendment 1174 not moved.

The Convener: Amendment 1175, in the name of Aileen McLeod, is grouped with amendments 1177, 1190, 1191 and 1218.

Marco Biagi: This is a group of minor amendments relating to allotment site regulations, annual reports and the removal of items from an allotment by the tenant.

Amendment 1175 simply tidies the drafting and removes repetition. Amendment 1177 relates to section 73(5), which provides that local authority regulations “may make different provision for different areas or different types of” allotment sites. The amendment removes the words “types of” so that different regulations can be made for any allotment site.

Amendments 1190 and 1191 are about the annual report that local authorities will be required to prepare and publish under section 79. Under section 79(2)(c), local authorities will have to set out the proportion of land on each site that is used for allotments—as opposed to communal areas in the site—that is not leased from the authority. The amendments will split the paragraph to ensure that information about the proportion of allotments that are unlet is reported for sites on which a local authority leases allotments directly and for sites that a local authority leases to one person, such as an allotment association, that then subleases the allotments.

Section 88 sets out the items that a tenant may remove from an allotment before the end of the lease, which include “any buildings (or other structures) erected by or on behalf of the tenant”.

Amendment 1218 will expand the section to include “any buildings (or other structures) acquired by the tenant”.

I ask the committee to support the amendments in the group.

I move amendment 1175.

Amendment 1175 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 1256, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, was debated with amendment 1251. I remind members that, if amendment 1256 is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 1176.

Section 75—Disposal etc of allotments and allotment sites owned by local authority

Marco Biagi: The amendments in this group relate to circumstances in which a local authority proposes to dispose of, or change the use of, an allotment site that it owns, or proposes to renounce the lease or change the use of an allotment site that it leases. The majority of the amendments clarify that the provisions apply whether the local authority’s proposals relate to the whole or part of the allotment site.

The current provisions require a local authority in such circumstances to offer a tenant of an allotment an alternative allotment in the local authority area, unless ministers were to be satisfied that that is unnecessary or not reasonably practicable. Amendments 1182 and 1188 broaden the duty to include that a tenant may be offered an allotment on the same allotment site, as well as an alternative site, so that if only part of a site is disposed of, the tenant may be offered an alternative allotment on the same site.

I ask the committee to support the amendments.

I move amendment 1178.

Amendment 1178 agreed to.

Amendment 1179 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 1180, in the name of Aileen McLeod, is grouped with amendments 1183, 1257, 1186, 1189, 1258 and 1266 to 1268. I draw members’ attention to the information about pre-emption in the list of groupings.

Marco Biagi: The allotment community has made it clear that allotment sites should be protected whether they are on land that is owned by a local authority or land that is leased by a local authority. That position has been supported through public consultation. We have been listening and have included provisions in the bill that build on the existing protection against change of use of allotments without ministerial consent, which is provided in section 73 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973.

The provisions in the bill as set out at sections 75 and 76 provide protection for allotments against disposal, change of use and, where the land is leased by a local authority for allotments, renunciation of the lease without the Scottish ministers’ consent. In addition, section 84 provides protection against the resumption of possession of the whole or part of an allotment or an allotment site that is let by a local authority without the Scottish ministers’ consent. In each case, the Scottish ministers’ consent may be granted only where each tenant is to be offered an alternative allotment, unless that is unnecessary or not reasonably practicable.

Amendments 1180 and 1186, in the name of Aileen McLeod, will in addition require Scottish ministers to consult the local authority and any other person appearing to have an interest before making any such decision about providing consent. That will allow all parties to have their say on the proposals.

Amendments 1183 and 1189 clarify the consequences of an authority transferring ownership or renouncing a lease of an allotment site without ministerial consent. They provide that such a transfer or renunciation will have no effect without ministerial consent.

Cameron Buchanan’s amendments in this group would remove the requirement for local authorities to obtain the Scottish ministers’ consent before disposing of, changing the use of, renouncing the lease of or resuming possession of an allotment site. Removing that requirement for ministerial consent would be contrary to everything that allotment holders have told us they want in terms of protecting allotment sites from closure, and I urge the committee to reject those amendments.

I ask the committee to support amendments 1180, 1183, 1186 and 1189.

I move amendment 1180.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 1257 seeks to enable a local authority to dispose of, or change the use of, an owned allotment site independently without needing the consent of the Scottish ministers. I think that that would be a productive change for two reasons. First, removing the need for ministerial consent would prevent allotment sites from being stuck in a deadlock between opposing local and national Administrations. Secondly, it is likely that local authorities would be less willing to open up new allotment sites if they were, from then onwards, unable to decide what to do with the land themselves. If local authorities were able to decide for themselves what to do with the allotment sites, which is what my amendments would achieve, more sites might be opened up for use. With control staying in their hands, local authorities would be more likely to be willing to use the land as allotment sites in the first place.

Stewart Stevenson: I have some technical questions. It would be helpful if the minister could confirm that the definition of land includes water, as it does elsewhere in legislation—be that standing water, river water, ditch water, tidal water or water in any other form. Also, will the amendments and the bill in general prevent the acquisition of allotment land and its removal from the allotment site for purposes of wayleave or by the Ministry of Defence or other United Kingdom bodies that have rights to acquire land?

The Convener: Mr Stevenson is keeping you on your toes, minister, as usual.

Marco Biagi: Yes. Believe it or not, the standard legal definition of land includes water. Section 75, which is the subject of our concern here, is on “allotment sites”, which are defined in section 69 as “land consisting wholly or partly of allotments”.

I will consult the lawyers later to check, but I assume that if there was a stream running through an area that was comprised that would be included as part of the overall allotment site, which would be the bit that was being operationalised under the bill.

Stewart Stevenson: Just to make it clear, my concern is primarily that the paths of rivers can vary and nature can modify what is on an allotment site. That is the particular context that I have in mind, although there could be others.

Marco Biagi: I undertake to go away and reflect on that issue. There is an allotment site next to a body of water in my constituency. Were that site to flood, I am not sure what the effects would be in legislation, but I am happy to think about that.

Amendments 1184 to 1189 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

Section 77—Duty to prepare food-growing strategy

The Convener: Amendment 1259, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendments 1260, 1262 and 1263.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 1259 would replace the word “must” with “may”, to avoid making the provision too prescriptive. That is really all that I have to say.

I move amendment 1259.

Marco Biagi: Amendment 1259, as was stated, would replace the duty on each local authority to prepare a food-growing strategy, instead making the power optional. Amendments 1260, 1262 and 1263 would remove the duties on local authorities to publish a food-growing strategy and review it at least every five years.

I have heard from allotment holders that they have experienced variable performance by local authorities in delivering on the current duty to provide allotments, and that in some cases they have found it difficult to engage with their authority on the issue. The duty to prepare and review a food-growing strategy is a key way of bringing together the allotment community with local authorities and community growers as a means of developing and progressing positive partnerships and relationships between all those parties. In a public consultation in November 2013, there was strong agreement from respondents that local authorities should have a duty to produce a food-growing strategy and review it at least every five years.

If it were made an option for each local authority to prepare a food-growing strategy, local authorities would not be required to describe how they intend to increase provision of allotments to meet their duty to take reasonable steps to meet demand.

I add that, in the light of our previous discussions about the power to advance wellbeing, there is nothing to prevent a local authority right now from using its discretion to create and implement a food-growing strategy. Therefore, if Cameron Buchanan’s amendments were agreed to, it would make no difference whether the duty was in the bill at all. It is important that the duty remains and that we make local authorities accountable in relation to it.

I ask Mr Buchanan to withdraw amendment 1259 and not to move the other amendments in the group.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 1259 would remove the obligation on local authorities to prepare a food-growing strategy. It would be very burdensome for local authorities to have that obligation, and fulfilling it would detract from their other duties. The amendment would make it a possibility rather than a necessity.

I lodged the amendments in the group to remove the obligation on local authorities to prepare and publish a food-growing strategy, on the basis that it would be burdensome. A better use of local authorities’ time and resources would be to focus on providing allotments and minimising waiting lists, rather than their having to compile documents to comply with a centrally imposed duty.

I am sure that most people would agree that local authorities should be judged on their ability to provide and maintain allotments rather than on their ability to compile a document. Should a certain council wish to spend its resources on publishing a food-growing strategy, that should be a decision for that council to make, hence the idea of making the requirement a “may” rather than a “must”.

I press amendment 1259.

Amendment 1259 disagreed to.
Amendment 1260 not moved.

The Convener: Amendment 1261, in the name of Alex Rowley, is grouped with amendment 1265.

Alex Rowley: People can use an allotment plot to grow healthy food, to help to recover from physical or mental illness, as a family activity with their children, when facing unemployment or retirement or simply because they enjoy growing food and giving it away. Allotments offer an opportunity for all those who wish to enjoy the benefits of gardening and working in the outdoors.

Amendment 1261 will ensure that, as part of a local authority’s duty to prepare a food-growing strategy and identify land that it considers may be used for allotment sites and/or community cultivation, it will be required to describe whether and how that will increase provision in areas that are affected by socioeconomic disadvantage. In many senses, that links to the local community plans, because there are many healthy eating strategies and healthy eating or cooking projects that already exist as part of local authorities’ health and wellbeing approach. The amendment would simply mean that local authorities would identify particular areas of disadvantage. Communities in which there are high levels of disadvantage should have access to growing sites, so it is important that local authorities identify that as part of their food-growing strategy.

Amendment 1265 will ensure that local authorities pay particular regard to communities in which there is a high level of socioeconomic disadvantage when they are looking to promote allotments and provide training to tenants or potential tenants. The amendment will ensure that those communities that might benefit the most from allotments but often contain the hardest-to-reach citizens know about allotments and have the skills and training to be able to access them.

I move amendment 1261.

Marco Biagi: Mr Rowley is right to point out the connection between the amendments that the Government lodged on community planning and these ones. I welcome the fact that they will develop the theme of ensuring that the provisions explicitly address socioeconomic disadvantage and inequalities.

We know that, when people have the opportunity to grow their own food, it can help to tackle food poverty and issues with physical and mental health and social isolation. The amendments will ensure that local authorities think about the areas that experience socioeconomic disadvantage when they are looking at the provision of allotments and other land for community growing.

Growing your own food benefits everyone and amendment 1265 will encourage local authorities to promote allotments and provide related training to disadvantaged communities to ensure that they see it as something that is for them.

The lawyers tell me that they might need to look at the wording at stage 3. I see Mr Rowley nodding; he knows and those sorts of caveats will be quite familiar to him by now. I urge the committee to support a helpful set of amendments.

Alex Rowley: Yes. We seem to be in agreement, minister. Making this part of the community planning approach is right. We will see what happens at stage 3. I will press the amendment.

Section 81—Delegation of management of allotment sites

The Convener: Amendment 1195, in the name of Aileen McLeod, is grouped with amendments 1196, 1197 and 1264.

Marco Biagi: Section 81 allows a person representing the interests of allotment tenants, such as an allotment association, to request that a local authority delegates management functions of an allotment site to them. All the amendments in the group are minor adjustments to that section.

Amendment 1195 clarifies the allotment sites to which the section applies. Amendment 1197 is a consequential amendment to remove duplication. Amendment 1196 makes clear that the person applying for delegation of the management of a site should represent all or a majority of the tenants.
I turn to the amendments in the name of Cameron Buchanan. A further provision of section 81 enables a local authority to agree to or refuse the request. If the local authority refuses the request, it must provide reasons for its decision. Amendment 1264, which was lodged by Mr Buchanan, would require that the reasons for refusing the request be “valid”. It is not necessary to include the word “valid”. Local authorities are already under a common-law duty to act reasonably and make rational decisions or face the risk of judicial review. Both the taking of decisions about delegation of management and the duty to give reasons must be exercised reasonably, and the offering of invalid reasons would be quite a strong example of not acting reasonably. In addition, it is unclear who is to determine what constitutes a “valid” reason for refusing a request. The inclusion of “valid” in that context is unnecessary and it also creates a lack of clarity. I therefore ask Cameron Buchanan not to move amendment 1264.

I ask the committee to support amendments 1195 to 1197, in the name of Aileen McLeod. I move amendment 1195.

Cameron Buchanan: My reason for lodging amendment 1264, which is a probing amendment, was that I wanted to see whether a local authority would send an applicant a decision notice setting out the reasons for refusal. I just wanted some clarification on that.

Marco Biagi: As I said, if the local authority were to offer invalid reasons, or reasons that were not worthy of respect or were unreasonable, there would be consequences. I therefore consider the word “valid” to be unnecessary.

Section 83—Termination of lease of allotment or allotment site

The Convener: Amendment 1199, in the name of Aileen McLeod, is grouped with amendments 1200 to 1205. I draw members’ attention to the information shown on the list of groupings about pre-emptions in the group.

Marco Biagi: This group of amendments is to clarify the provisions in sections 83 and 84.

Section 83(1) sets out the circumstances in which a local authority may terminate the lease of an allotment or an allotment site. Amendments 1199, 1200 and 1201 clarify that those circumstances override any provision in the lease to the contrary about termination of the lease and that they are the only circumstances in which a lease can be terminated.

Section 84(2) sets out the circumstances in which a local authority may resume possession of the whole or part of an allotment or allotment site and requires that the Scottish ministers give consent to resumption. Amendments 1202 and 1203 clarify that those circumstances override any provision in the lease to the contrary about resumption and that they are the only circumstances in which possession may be resumed. Amendments 1204 and 1205 have the effect of providing that it is the giving of notice of resumption to which the Scottish ministers must consent rather than the resumption itself.

I ask the committee to agree to these clarifying amendments, and I move amendment 1199.

The Convener: Amendment 1206, in the name of Aileen McLeod, is grouped with amendments 1207 to 1214.

Marco Biagi: This group of amendments is to clarify the provisions of sections 85 and 86.

Section 85 deals with the arrangements for notice of termination where a local authority leases an allotment site from another person and receives notice of termination of that lease. Amendment 1206 clarifies that section 85 applies where the local authority leases an allotment site and has granted a sublease either to an allotment association for the whole site or to an individual for an allotment. Amendments 1207 and 1208 clarify that the notice received by the local authority may relate to the termination of either the whole or part of its lease. Amendments 1209 and 1210 set out that the affected subtenants should be notified of the date of termination and that their subleases are terminated on that date.

Section 86 deals with arrangements for notice of termination where the local authority leases a site to a tenant, such as an allotment association, who represents the interests of subtenants.

Amendments 1211 to 1213 clarify the circumstances in which section 86 applies and that the notice may relate to either the whole or part of an allotment site.

Amendment 1214 sets out that, in these circumstances, the tenant must notify each subtenant of the date that the whole or part of the lease is terminated and that their sublease is terminated on that date.

I ask the committee to agree to these clarifying amendments. I move amendment 1206.

Before section 87

The Convener: Amendment 1215, in the name of Aileen McLeod, is in a group on its own.

Marco Biagi: Convener, I will reacquaint you with your old friend, the Allotments (Scotland) Act 1892. Amendment 1215 restates, with some amendments, section 7(3) of the 1892 act, which prohibits the subletting of allotments by a tenant. The amendment expands that provision to include the prohibition of assignation of an allotment without the local authority’s consent. In addition, the amendment identifies the consequence of such transactions being that they are of no effect.

Given that the provisions in part 7 of the bill will provide greater transparency of the actions that a local authority is taking to meet demand for allotments in its area and that an authority will be required to report annually on its allotment provision, it is essential that a local authority is able to identify who is responsible for growing food on and the upkeep of an allotment in its area. Amendment 1215 will ensure that local authorities are able to identify the tenant of an allotment.

Section 89—Compensation for disturbance

The Convener: Amendment 1219, in the name of Aileen McLeod, is grouped with amendments 1220, 1221, 1270 and 1222.

Marco Biagi: The amendments in Dr McLeod’s name in this group are minor and technical.

Section 91 provides that if a local authority resumes possession of an allotment, or part of an allotment, the local authority is required to compensate the tenant for loss of any crop by the tenant as a result of the resumption. The period of notice required for resumption, under section 84, is “at least three months”.

Amendments 1219 and 1220 adjust the provisions to provide that it is the local authority that gives notice, or which has received notice of termination of its own lease of the site, that is liable to pay compensation to the tenant. That will ensure that it is the local authority with which the tenant has the lease that is responsible for paying compensation, even if the local authority has granted a lease outwith its own area.

Amendments 1221 and 1222 make minor corrections.

I ask the committee to support the amendments in Aileen McLeod’s name.

Amendment 1270, which was lodged by Cameron Buchanan, would provide that a local authority would not be liable to pay a tenant compensation for loss of a crop “where the tenant had a reasonable opportunity to remove the crop prior to the resumption”.

I argue that the three-month notice period specified in the bill is a “reasonable opportunity”, if the crop is harvested or ready for harvest at the right time.

However, amendment 1270 fails to take account of the seasonal cycle of food production on allotments. Some crops may have just been put in the ground at the time of the notice being served and so may not be ready for harvest once the notice period is up. Also, fruit trees are normally planted in late autumn or early winter, if there is no ground frost, and would not yield a crop until the summer, so a period of notice given at a point during the planting season and even into early spring would mean that a tenant who had made the investment in a tree would suffer a loss of crop.

Section 91 requires Scottish ministers to make regulations about compensation for loss of crops following resumption and to consult before making those regulations. The regulations must make provision for the procedure for compensating for loss of crops and for an assessment of the amount of compensation for which the authority is liable. That provides safeguards both for the local authority and for tenants. The regulations will be an important piece of legislation to get right.

I ask Cameron Buchanan not to move amendment 1270.

After section 93

The Convener: Amendment 1223, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 1224.

Marco Biagi: I am delighted to speak to amendments 1223 and 1224.

Amendment 1223 provides a new regulation-making power that will enable ministers to require Scottish public authorities—including the Scottish Government—to promote and facilitate the participation of members of the public in the authority’s decisions and activities, including the allocation of its resources. We believe that that will support participatory budgeting in particular.

We know that involving people and communities in decision making helps to build community capacity and also helps the public sector to identify local needs and target budgets more effectively. We also know that decisions that are taken closer to people and through the participation of those who are affected are better decisions. It is clear that, when people know that they have a genuine say in an issue that matters, they will get involved. Our job is to make it clear that their voice matters. A key concern for the committee, and a big concern for me, is how we can give people and communities more opportunity to have their say in the decisions that matter to them in order to make real the objective of community empowerment.

The intention is that the new power will ensure that participatory activity takes place and that the associated guidance will drive the quality and depth of that participatory activity over time. I wanted any legislative solution to have the flexibility to build up, change and develop over time. Given the different functions, budgets and structures of public authorities, I knew that having a single approach would not work.

Amendment 1223 will ensure not only that, through the regulations, promotion and facilitation of participation by Scotland’s public bodies will take place, but that we will be able to refine the regulations so that the participation is relevant for the activities of each public body in its distinct role. In addition, through the regulations, ministers will be able to require public bodies to prepare and publish a report describing the steps that they have taken to promote and facilitate participation.

Amendment 1223 also provides that public bodies will have to regard to any guidance on the matter that is issued by the Scottish ministers.

We have committed to refreshing and renewing the national standards for community engagement, and they will be prominent in the process. However, we will also need to develop guidance on other aspects, including participatory budgeting—about which I have spoken on many occasions and for which I am a terrific enthusiast—and how public bodies can ensure that the decisions that they take on budgets and grants can be developed to encompass meaningful participation.

All of that will be a challenge for public bodies, but local government and other public authorities increasingly use a range of community engagement activities to seek views on their activities, plans and service delivery.

There has been tremendous interest in the Scottish Government’s offer of training and support for participatory budgeting exercises, with more than half of Scotland’s councils taking up the offer. In the next year, the money to be allocated through participatory budgeting methods—if everything goes through—potentially runs into the millions. The range and degree of participation from people and communities can vary considerably. The new power will lead to greater consistency and will improve the quality of that participation over time. It will not happen from day 1, but it will happen. The Parliament will continue to have a role to play as we move forward with this agenda.

Amendment 1224 provides that any regulations laid under the new section to be inserted by amendment 1223 will be subject to the affirmative procedure.

I look forward to developing and implementing participatory budgeting, which will be a major strand of the community empowerment agenda. I hope that the committee will be keen to work with us.

I move amendment 1223.

Alex Rowley: I am happy to support amendment 1223. Participatory budgets need to have a meaning that people can identify with.

I hope that, in the coming weeks as we move towards stage 3, we can have a discussion about some of the amendments on locality planning, which complement the idea of participatory budgeting. Children’s services and education take up 50-odd per cent of a local authority’s budget; if we include health and social care, the figure can increase to 70-odd per cent. If there was a formula in place such that 1 per cent of a local authority’s budget was down at the community level, more people would take part in participatory budgeting because they would be able to identify their priorities and the budget to finance those priorities.

I know that there are some good examples of participatory budgeting. However, a concern for me is that, sometimes, it is a bit like the wee green token that you get as you leave Asda, which you have to stick into one of three pots. Participatory budgeting has to be about a lot more than that. If amendment 1223 can work alongside amendments that we have already agreed to, we could enhance participation. People would be able not only to set their local priorities but to finance some of them. I welcome the amendment.

The Convener: Bravo, minister. I think that a lot of folk out there will applaud amendment 1223. The committee will continue to scrutinise the provision as the bill process continues.

Marco Biagi: I will briefly reflect on a point that Mr Rowley made. I am aware of the supermarket exit form of deciding charitable donations, in which it is noticeable that certain causes do better than others. However, that is not a participative process. It does not bring people together to have the discussion and put cases forward, and it is quite a shallow form of engagement. In public decision making, we want to get past shallow forms of engagement and achieve much deeper forms of participation.

Mr Rowley is right to say that a great deal of a budget can be taken up by statutory requirements. However, we do not want a participatory budgeting process in which a community comes together and decides that it no longer wants to spend any money on having a school. Clearly, some things are obligations. It is in the area of discretionary spend—the priority given to maintenance or expansion, for example—where participatory budgeting offers real opportunities to ensure that budgets target local needs.

John Wilson: Does the minister agree that, when it comes to participatory budgeting, communities need to know about the larger resources? He used the example of a school, and it might be helpful if communities, in their discussions with local authorities and other agencies, were made aware of the bigger-spend items, how they impact on those communities and where the participatory element of budgets could be better utilised to complement those services. The alternative is to ignore totally the fact that many people in communities do not realise where the bulk of the resources spent by local government and other agencies goes in supporting and delivering services for communities.

Marco Biagi: I agree. People need to realise how the spend that they decide on relates to everything else. Ultimately, we hope that the result will be everyone pulling in the same direction.

Amendment 1223 offers a tremendous opportunity to re-empower people and to give our spirit of democratic renewal some real teeth, so that people are able not just to go along and be consulted on something, but to participate directly in decision making. That is a completely different level of involvement.

I am glad that the committee is so enthusiastic, and I press amendment 1223.

Amendment 1223 agreed to.

Section 94—Schemes for reduction and remission of non-domestic rates

The Convener: Amendment 1271, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is in a group on its own.

Cameron Buchanan: I agree that the rating authority should have regard to the interests of persons liable to pay council tax set by the authority before reducing or remitting non-domestic rates. As it stands, however, section 94 suggests that any loss of income due to non-domestic rate cuts would have to be offset from other income raised by the authority.
My amendment seeks to clarify that, before reducing or remitting non-domestic rates, a rating authority should have regard to its own expenditure, income and financial sustainability. In other words, rating authorities could accommodate any change in income due to non-domestic rate cuts by reviewing either their expenditure or their income.

I move amendment 1271.

Marco Biagi: Amendment 1271 would add to the test in the bill, which requires a council to have regard to the interests of persons liable to pay council tax, as well as to the council’s wider statutory financial obligations.

The amendment would make explicit that councils have to have regard to their income and expenditure when exercising the local rates relief power. I think that councils would do so as a matter of course, given the framework and statutory obligations that they operate under, but I am content to support the amendment to reinforce the point in law.

Cameron Buchanan: I thank the minister for agreeing to my point.

Amendment 1271 agreed to.

Section 94—Subordinate legislation

The Convener: Amendment 1224, in the name of the minister, is in a group on its own.

Marco Biagi: The Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee recommended that, where there are powers for ministers to amend the lists of bodies that are subject to the provisions of the bill, those powers should be subject to affirmative, rather than negative, procedure. I agree that changes to the bodies included could make a significant change to the scope of the bill’s powers, so I am happy to make that change to the procedure.

Amendment 1087 provides that changes to the list of public service authorities, in relation to participation requests, and changes to the list of relevant authorities, in relation to asset transfer requests, will be subject to affirmative procedure. It also provides for affirmative procedure where the Scottish ministers specify a relevant authority as subject to local authority review of its decisions in the first instance, rather than ministerial appeal.

Members will remember that that power was discussed last week, as a measure to assist the inclusion of ALEOs in asset transfer.

I move amendment 1087 and ask members to support it.

Stewart Stevenson: I am happy to support the amendment, but I invite the minister to take away for further consideration and discussion with colleagues the thought that, as a matter of good practice, when Governments amend lists by secondary legislation, they should consider publishing the entire amended list in the update. There have been occasions where lists have been amended more than 20 times and it is then all but impossible to work out what the list looks like, as there is no central list of the lists to which reference can be made.

I do not ask the minister for a commitment at this stage, but I ask that he considers the matter.

Marco Biagi: I will take that away for consideration. If I am still the minister when the first amendment to the list is made, I will be sure to put the suggestion into practice.

Amendment 1087 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 1038 was debated with amendment 1015, on day 1 of stage 2, on 4 March 2015.

Amendment 1038 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

The Convener: That is our biggest ever skipping back to a discussion on an amendment.

Amendment 1224 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

Amendment 1071 moved—[Alex Rowley]—and agreed to.

Sections 96, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 97 and 98 agreed to.

Schedule 4—Minor and consequential amendments

The Convener: Amendment 1225, in the name of Aileen McLeod, is grouped with amendments 1226 to 1228.

Marco Biagi: So that other antiquated acts do not feel lonely—and bearing in mind the convener’s love of the 1892 act—I note that amendment 1225 seeks to deal with the Small Landholders (Scotland) Act 1911, the Compensation (Defence) Act 1939, the Agriculture (Scotland) Act 1948 and the Opencast Coal Act 1958, all of which contain various references to allotments. As the committee might imagine, we have to update quite a few references in previous legislation as a result of the bill. Amendment 1225 seeks to insert into schedule 4, which sets out minor and consequential amendments to other legislation, additional consequential amendments that have been identified since the bill was introduced, while amendments 1226, 1227 and 1228 insert into schedule 5, which sets out existing legislation to be repealed as a consequence of the bill’s provisions, additional repeals to existing legislation that again have been identified since the bill was introduced.

I move amendment 1225.

Amendment 1225 agreed to.

Amendments 1039 to 1041 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Before I put the question on schedule 4, I remind members that we are agreeing to the schedule as amended by the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee as well as by this committee today. The Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee agreed to amendments 38 to 41, 88, 46, 47 and 57.

Schedule 4, as amended, agreed to.

Schedule 5—Repeals

Amendments 1226 to 1228 and 1042 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Before I put the question on schedule 5, I remind members that we are agreeing to the schedule as amended by the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee as well as by this committee today. In this case, the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee agreed to amendment 42.

Schedule 5, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 99 and 100 agreed to.

The Convener: Although this committee does not have any amendments to the long title to consider, I remind members that the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee agreed to one amendment to the long title, which was amendment 43. As a result, we are agreeing to the long title as amended by that amendment.

Long title, as amended, agreed to.

The Convener: That ends stage 2 consideration of the bill. The version of the bill as amended at stage 2 will be available from tomorrow morning. I should also say that stage 3 amendments may also be lodged from tomorrow, although we do not yet know when stage 3 will take place.

I thank everyone for their participation. We now move into private session, and I appeal to folks who are leaving to do so quickly.

Meeting continued in private until 12:35.

On resuming—

Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

The Convener: The third item on our agenda today is to begin our consideration of amendments to part 4 of the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill at stage 2.

I welcome the ofﬁcials joining the Minister for Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform— and I welcome the minister again. The ofﬁcials are: Dave Thomson of the Scottish Government’s land reform and tenancy unit; Elizabeth Connell, a Scottish Government lawyer; and David McLeish, who is parliamentary counsel.

Everyone should have with them a copy of the bill as introduced, the marshalled list of amendments, which was published on Monday, and the groupings, which sets out the amendments in the order in which they will be debated.

There will be one debate on each group of amendments. I will call the member who lodged the first amendment in the group to speak to and move that amendment, and to speak to all the other amendments in the group. Members who have not lodged amendments in the group but who wish to speak should indicate that by catching my eye. If the minister has not already spoken on the group, I will invite her to contribute to the debate just before moving to the winding-up speech.

The debate on each group will be concluded by me inviting the member who moved the first amendment in the group to wind up. Following the debate on the group, I will check whether the member who moved the amendment wishes to press it to a vote or to withdraw it. If the member wishes to press ahead, I will put the question on the amendment. If a member wishes to withdraw their amendment after it has been moved, I will check whether any other member objects. If any committee member does object, the amendment is not withdrawn and the committee must immediately move to vote on it.

If any member does not wish to move their amendment when it is called, they should say “Not moved.” Any other MSP present may move such an amendment. If no one moves the amendment, however, I will immediately call the next amendment on the marshalled list.

Only committee members are allowed to vote. Voting on any division is by show of hands. It is important that members keep their hands clearly raised until the clerk has recorded the vote. The committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed each section of the bill, so I will put a question on each section at the appropriate point.

We have agreed to consider sections 27 to 47 and any amendments inserting new sections after section 47 today. If we do not get that far, we will stop at an appropriate point and pick up where we left off next week.

Section 27—Nature of land in which community interest may be registered

The Convener: We start with group 1, which is on the nature of land in which community interest may be registered under part 2 of the 2003 act—separate tenements. Amendment 12, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 13 to 17.

Aileen McLeod: The provisions of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 state at section 33(1), in part 2:

“The land in which a community interest may be registered under this Part of this Act ... is any land other than excluded land.”

Excluded land is deﬁned in section 33(2) of the 2003 act as:

The bill as introduced amended the deﬁnition of excluded land so that it is land “consisting of mineral rights to oil, coal, gas, gold or silver which are owned separately from the land in respect of which they are exigible”;

with the exception of “salmon fishings, or ... mineral rights”.

The current provisions do not exclude other separate tenements such as oyster or mussel-gathering rights, rights of port and ferry, and sporting rights.

The purpose of amendments 12 to 17 is to exclude from the land in respect of which a community interest may be registered all separate tenements that are owned separately from the land, except salmon fishings and mineral rights other than rights to oil, coal, gas, gold or silver. That means that salmon fishings and mineral rights other than the rights to oil, coal, gas, gold or silver are the only separate tenements that are land in which a community interest may be registered under part 2 of the 2003 act.

Specifically, amendment 12 inserts speciﬁc reference to “a separate tenement”. Amendment 13 changes the wording from the plural to the singular, to take account of the change in Amendment 14 inserts reference to the exceptions to the definition of excluded land, as set out in proposed new subsection (2A) of section 33 of the 2003 act—for example, salmon fisheries or certain mineral rights. Amendment 15 amends proposed new subsection (2A) to take account of the change of structure to that section of the 2003 act, which is caused by the new reference to separate tenements. Amendment 16 ensures that rights to oil, coal, gas, gold or silver are not included in the exception of mineral rights from the definition of excluded land.

This group of amendments seeks to bring part 2 of the 2003 act in line with part 3, section 68, of that act, which describes “eligible croft land”. I invite the committee to support these amendments.

I move amendment 12.

Alex Fergusson: I am not against the proposal at all but, so that I can better understand exactly what the implications are, can you tell me whether there is a full list of what those other tenements include? I feel that we are being asked to agree something that appears to be fairly open ended. You have mentioned oyster, mussel and salmon fishing, but I wonder whether it is possible to define what the phrase “a separate tenement” actually includes.

Aileen McLeod: We can provide a full list around that. We are trying to ensure clarity around what the separate tenements owned separately from the land are eligible for—and a community body can specify its interest. We would be happy to provide a full list.

Alex Fergusson: That would be useful before stage 3.

Amendment 12 agreed to.

Amendments 13 to 17 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 27, as amended, agreed to.

Section 28—Meaning of “community”

The Convener: Group 2 is on ways in which community bodies and crofting community bodies may be constituted. Amendment 18, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 19 to 27, 33, 2 and 40.

Aileen McLeod: I am conscious that there is quite a lot for us to get through here. I will try to go through this as quickly as I can.

Stakeholders have indicated a need for legislation to offer a wider range of legal bodies that a community could use when forming a community body for the purposes of registering an interest in land or of exercising a right to buy under part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. The amendments in this group offer community bodies more flexibility in deciding which form of community body best suits them.

Stakeholders highlighted Scottish charitable incorporated organisations—SCIOs—and community benefit companies as being suitable bodies for the purposes of the community right to buy. An amendment to the 2003 act, which provides that a community body can take the form of a SCIO, in addition to the option of being a company limited by guarantee, is set out in section 28 of the bill as introduced.

Amendment 18, which is a technical amendment paving the way for amendment 22, seeks to add community benefit societies as another type of legal entity that a community can use to form a community body for the purposes of registering an interest in land and exercising the community right to buy. Amendments 18 and 22 have been lodged in response to stakeholders’ requirements for greater flexibility in the types of body that are considered to be suitable for a community body.

Under amendments 19 to 21, in order to be a community body the legal entity forming the community body—which if amendments 18 and 22 are agreed to will be a company limited by guarantee, a Scottish incorporated charitable organisation or a community benefit society—must have articles of association, a constitution or registered rules that meet certain requirements. One of the current requirements is that the articles, constitution or registered rules must state that the community body must have at least 20 members.

Amendment 19 seeks to amend in two respects the list of requirements that a company limited by guarantee’s articles must comply with in order to be a community body. First, it amends the requirements to provide that they state that the community body must have at least 10 members instead of the current minimum requirement of 20. That is intended to address difficulties, highlighted by this committee, of certain smaller or remote communities finding enough members to form the community body. Secondly, it seeks to amend the requirements to increase the proportion of members of a community body who must be members of the community from a majority to three quarters. That will ensure that, even for community bodies with a small number of members, the interests of the local community are protected.

comply with in order to be a community body so that it stipulates that the constitution has to contain a provision that the community body must have at least 10 members instead of the current minimum requirement of 20. Amendment 21 also amends one of the requirements of the constitution of a community body that is a Scottish incorporated charitable organisation to increase the proportion of members of the body who must be members of the community from a majority to three quarters. Amendment 22 seeks to set out the requirements that the registered rules of a community benefit society must contain in order for it to be a community body.

With regard to amendment 23, ministers currently have the power to disapply the requirement that the articles of a company limited by guarantee or constitution of a Scottish charitable incorporated organisation must state that the community body must have at least 20 members. If amendments 19, 20 and 21 are agreed to, the minister will have the power to disapply the requirement that the articles or constitution state that the community body must have 10 members instead of disapplying the requirement that they have 20. Amendment 23 extends that power to the requirement that the registered rules of community benefit societies must state that the community body must have a minimum number of 10 members.

On amendment 24, ministers have under the bill as introduced the power to amend the subsection listing the types of legal entities that communities can use to form a community body. Amendment 24 seeks to enable ministers to amend provisions relating to community benefit societies as inserted by amendment 22.

Amendment 25, which is a consequential amendment resulting from the addition of community benefit societies as a type of body that communities can use to form a community body, adds the definitions of “community benefit society” and “registered rules” to the bill.

On amendment 26, in accordance with the 2003 act and the bill as introduced, community bodies are prohibited from modifying their memorandum, articles of association or constitution without ministers’ consent in writing during the period beginning with the application being made and ending with any of the following: the registration of the community interest in land; a decision by ministers that the community interest should not be registered; ministers declining to consider the application; or the application’s withdrawal. Amendment 26 extends that to include a prohibition on modifying a community body’s registered rules in the case of community benefit societies.

On amendment 27, in accordance with the 2003 act and the bill as introduced, community bodies are prohibited from modifying their memorandum, articles of association or constitution without ministers’ consent in writing for as long as the interest remains registered or, as the case may be, the land remains in its ownership. Amendment 27 extends that to include a prohibition on modifying a community body’s registered rules in the case of a community body that is a community benefit society.

On amendment 33, the crofting community right to buy in part 3 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 can be exercised only by crofting community bodies. At the moment, those bodies must take the form of companies limited by guarantee that meet certain requirements. In keeping with the proposed amendments to part 2, amendment 33 seeks to add Scottish charitable incorporated organisations and community benefit societies as types of legal entity that crofting communities may use to form crofting community bodies for the purposes of exercising the crofting community right to buy. In addition, the amendment seeks to provide that the Scottish ministers can add additional types of legal entity at a later date, should that be deemed necessary.

Amendment 33 also seeks to amend the requirements of the articles of association of a crofting community body that is a company limited by guarantee. It proposes to amend the requirement that the articles of a crofting community body that is a company limited by guarantee must state that the body has a majority of members who are members of the crofting community; the amendment seeks to increase the requirement so that the articles state that three quarters of the membership must be members of the crofting community.

The amendment also seeks to remove the requirement for a crofting community body to arrange for its accounts to be audited, while retaining the requirement for crofting community bodies to ensure proper arrangement for financial management. The change aims to avoid confusion among crofting community bodies about the types of audit that they must carry out, and it will prevent unnecessary duplication of effort. The body will continue to submit an audit of accounts by the appropriate governing body, which will be Companies House, Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator or the Financial Conduct Authority as appropriate to the type of legal entity. That is in line with the proposed amendments to part 2 of the 2003 act.

Amendment 33 also addresses issues relating to the definition of a crofting community for the purposes of the crofting community right to buy. At present, the definition might not always include all those who would consider themselves to be members of the crofting community, and the amendment seeks to change that definition in an attempt to capture those persons who consider themselves to be members of the crofting community but who at present might find themselves excluded from the definition. One example might be 16 or 17-year-old crofters who would consider themselves to be members of the crofting community but who are excluded from the definition because they are not on the electoral register.

At the moment, two registers contain details of crofters: the register of crofts, which is held by the Crofting Commission; and the newer crofting register, which is held by Registers of Scotland. We want communities to be able to rely on the information that is held on either of the registers in determining who the crofters are on the land that they are trying to purchase, including tenants and owner-occupiers. Information on tenants is held on both registers but, as was made clear last week, the Crofting Commission does not have a duty to collect information on owner-occupiers. That means that at this stage we cannot amend the bill to make it clear that the definition of a crofting community should rely on information about owner-occupier crofts held in the register of crofts.

We therefore propose to give ministers the power to make regulations to extend the definition of a crofting community at a later date. If the Crofting Commission’s requirements in relation to keeping owner-occupiers’ details on the register of crofts should change in the future, ministers could use the power to extend the definition accordingly. We certainly propose to liaise with the Crofting Commission on this issue.

Amendment 33 also seeks to remove the requirement that members of the crofting community must be resident within 16km of the crofting township that is situated in or which is otherwise associated with the croft land. If accepted, the changes proposed would mean that the definition of a crofting community would be all those persons who: are resident in the crofting township that is situated in, or otherwise associated with, the croft land that the crofting community body has a right to buy, and who are entitled to vote in local government elections in the polling district or districts in which that township is situated; are tenants of crofts in the crofting township whose names are entered in the crofting register or register of crofts as tenants of those crofts; are owner-occupier crofters of owner-occupied crofts in the crofting township whose names are entered in the crofting register as the owner-occupier crofters of such crofts; or are such other persons, or are persons falling within a class of such other persons, as may be set out by ministers in regulations.

Ministers will retain their current power to define a crofting community in another way if it is, in their opinion, inappropriate to define it as set out in the 2003 act.

I am nearly there.

The purpose of amendment 2 is to extend section 72 so that it includes reference to the constitution of a Scottish charitable incorporated organisation and the registered rules of community benefit society, in addition to the memorandum or articles of a company limited by guarantee. That will ensure that crofting community bodies that are Scottish charitable incorporated organisations or community benefit societies cannot modify their constitutions or registered rules without ministers’ consent in writing once they have bought the crofting land.

Amendment 2 also seeks to insert provisions that will allow ministers to make an order relating to, or to matters connected with, the compulsory purchase of croft land by ministers under section 72. It also seeks to insert a power for ministers to make such modifications of enactments as appear necessary or expedient, in consequence of any provision of such an order, or otherwise in connection with the order. That is to mirror the power that is included in section 97E(4) and (5) of the proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act.

Amendment 40 is consequential to amendment 2 and ensures that, when ministers, under section 72 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, exercise the power to compulsorily acquire land, and by virtue of amendment 2, exercise the power to make an order relating to that, the order will be subject to affirmative procedure.

All in all, this group of amendments seeks to give communities greater flexibility to choose the type of community body that suits their needs and to lessen the burden on communities by removing the need for the auditing of accounts. It ensures that smaller communities can take advantage of the right to buy by reducing the minimum number of members while ensuring that the community focus is strengthened.

I encourage the committee to support the amendments.

I move amendment 18.
They are satisfied about its main purpose, ensuring that it is consistent with furthering the achievement of sustainable development. It would be for ministers to do that in written confirmation for each individual request.

Sarah Boyack: And for paragraphs (g) and (h)?

Aileen McLeod: It would be for the community body to decide for each individual request.

Sarah Boyack: So there is no interpretation of what “reasonable” is or any explanation of who you would expect would wish to get access to the information.

Aileen McLeod: This is in line with freedom of information requests.

Sarah Boyack: Okay.

Michael Russell: Viewers at home—if there are any left—will understand the classic Highland definition of a croft being a piece of land bounded by regulation.

I strongly welcome amendment 33. In his evidence to the committee in November, Peter Peacock pointed out that the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003—welcome as it was—is for communities “hugely cumbersome, difficult and bureaucratic”.—[Official Report, Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee, 26 November 2014; c 37.]

That is partly because of the inflexibility of the legislation.

In amendment 33, subsection (6) of the proposed new section gives the opportunity—if I am right—to define by secondary legislation both a crofting community body and a crofting community. Both of those definitions create a flexibility that is not in present community right-to-buy legislation.

Just for the record—this is the sort of thing for which, if there is a dispute about legislation, what is said at the various stages of bill consideration is important—it is presumably in the Government’s mind to use that flexibility in a constructive way, rather than in a restrictive way, to consider the emergence of new community bodies, which is the issue around the definition of a community body, and to ensure that crofting communities are defined as working communities, which is the burden of what the Crofting Commission does, rather than being defined in any way that would assist those who are not working their crofts. I just want to ensure that we understand that the measure is progressive and flexible, rather than one that might be used regressively.

Aileen McLeod: I can give the member the commitment and the assurance that we are trying to simplify the process as much as we can and to get greater flexibility into it. Obviously, that involves taking a ministerial power to expand via the regulations the definition of a crofting community, but that is to be in a progressive and productive way.

The Convener: I ask you to clarify one point, minister. You talked about people who have to live within 16km from their croft. What is the power in relation to the 32km rule, which I think was brought in latterly? Does that impinge on the amendments that you have lodged?

Aileen McLeod: At the moment, the Crofting Reform (Scotland) Act 2010 uses 32km and the bill obviously uses 16km. The two pieces of legislation are currently out of sync. We are trying to ensure that there is greater alignment.

Angus MacDonald: I would be concerned if the overall distance were reduced from 32km to 16km.

The Convener: That is not likely.

Aileen McLeod: No.

The Convener: We will seek clarity afterwards on the two pieces of legislation, which do not seem to be in sync. Do you want to wind up, minister?

Aileen McLeod: I am quite happy to press our amendments.

The Convener: That is not likely.

Aileen McLeod: I am quite happy to press our amendments.

The Convener: We are happy with that, too.

Amendment 18 agreed to.

Amendments 19 to 25 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 28, as amended, agreed to.

Section 29—Modification of memorandum, articles of association or constitution

Amendments 26 and 27 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 29, as amended, agreed to.

After section 29

The Convener: Group 3 is on salmon fishings and mineral rights: public notice of certain applications under part 2 of the 2003 act. Amendment 28, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Aileen McLeod: I assure the committee that this will be a lot shorter than the debates on the previous groups.

In circumstances where a community body is seeking to register an interest in salmon fishings or mineral rights and those rights are owned separately from the land, it is not possible to affix a notice to those rights. Therefore, in circumstances where the community body is seeking to register an interest in salmon fishings or mineral rights that are owned separately from the land, amendment 28 removes the requirement for a conspicuous notice to be affixed to the land where the owner is unknown or cannot be found. The amendment inserts a ministerial power to set out in regulations the type of advertisement that is required in those circumstances. I ask the committee to support it. I move amendment 28.

Amendment 28 agreed to.

Section 30—Period for indicating approval under section 38 of 2003 Act

The Convener: Amendment 48, in the name of Dave Thompson, is grouped with amendment 29.

Michael Russell: This is a probing amendment that fits in well with the discussion that we have had about flexibility in the bill. Section 30 amends section 38 of the 2003 act, which sets out the criteria for registration of community interests. Section 30(b) proposes to insert into section 38 new subsection (2A), which says:

“Ministers may not take into account ... the approval of a member of the community if the approval was indicated earlier than 6 months before the date on which the application to register the community interest in land to which the approval relates was made.”

The amendment proposes to substitute a period of 12 months for the period of six months, in order to give more flexibility. However, to be fair, I would say that amendment 29 probably does the job better, in the sense that it follows the consistency of amendment 33, and gives the minister the right to make a variation that is not tied to a particular figure.

I believe that the purpose of amendment 48 is met by amendment 29. If the minister is prepared to confirm, as she did earlier, that the intention of amendment 29 is to use the power to increase rather than decrease the period, I will have no great difficulty in not pressing amendment 48.

I move amendment 48.

Aileen McLeod: I welcome the probing amendment and agree with Mr Russell’s view that amendment 29 better meets the purpose.

Amendment 48 seeks to increase the period of approval from six months to 12 months, so that ministers may take into account the approval of a member of the community if that approval has been indicated within 12 months of the date of application. The amendment is intended to give more flexibility to Scottish ministers to have regard to certain matters.

The Scottish Government believes that it is important for the approval of the members of the community to be current. If the approval of the member of the community was given 12 months prior to the date of application, it may be the case that the community’s plans or the community itself have changed during that time. I therefore ask Mr Russell not to press the amendment.

To cater for the event that the six-month approval period causes difficulties for communities in the future, the Scottish Government has lodged amendment 29 to give ministers the power, by regulations, to amend the six-month time limit in which the approval of a member of the community supporting a community body’s application must be dated. That will allow ministers to respond to any changes in the needs of communities and will give greater flexibility in terms of the time limit in which the approval of a member of the community must be dated.

Amendment 29 gives ministers the power to amend the time limit, should it be considered in the future that the six-month qualifying timescale is a barrier to communities exercising their right to buy, or is causing difficulty to communities when demonstrating support for applications to register an interest in land. I ask that the committee support amendment 29.

Sarah Boyack: I would like you to clarify, on the record, that you see the potential regulation as being used to increase the six-month period, not decrease it. I am keen for the issue to be explored, because regulations would take some time to come through Parliament. The proposal gives more flexibility and will let ministers change the timescale, but I would like you to state clearly that it is about increasing the opportunities for communities by increasing that period, not reducing it.

Aileen McLeod: We do not intend to reduce the timescale at all.

Amendment 48, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendment 29 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 30, as amended, agreed to.

Section 31—Procedure for late applications

The Convener: Group 5 contains minor amendments in relation to parts 2 and 3 of the 2003 act, including procedure for certain regulations. Amendment 30, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 38, 39, 41, and 43.

Aileen McLeod: These are minor amendments that ensure consistency of wording across the bill and provide that the long title of the bill includes part 3 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, in line with the inclusion of proposed changes to that part of the 2003 act.

Amendment 30 is a minor drafting amendment to the wording of section 31(1) of the bill, purely for the purposes of consistency with sections 28(1) and 29(1). The wording is changed from “in accordance with this section”, to “as follows”.

Amendment 38 will ensure consistency of wording across the bill. It is a technical amendment that does not have a substantive effect. The amendment changes the words of paragraph 2(1) of schedule 4 to the bill, so that it provides that the 2003 act is amended to “as follows” rather than “in accordance with this paragraph”.

Section 37(4)(a) of the 2003 act refers to “land in which a community interest is sought”. Amendment 39 is a technical amendment that will amend the wording to refer to “land in which a community is sought to be registered”. That wording is consistent with other provisions in the 2003 act.

Amendment 41 reinserts the provision that the validity of anything done under part 2 of the 2003 act will not be affected by any failure of the Lands Tribunal to comply with the time limits.

The long title of the bill currently refers to the 2003 act but only to part 2 of that act, which relates to the community right to buy. That is because, at the time of the bill’s introduction, no amendments to part 3 of the 2003 act were proposed. Amendment 43 changes the long title of the bill to take account of the proposed amendments to part 3 of the 2003 act that have been lodged at stage 2.

I invite the committee to support the amendments.

I move amendment 30.

Amendment 30 agreed to.

The Convener: Group 6 contains amendments that relate to late applications for registration under part 2 of the 2003 act. Amendment 31, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 50, 49 and 51.
Aileen McLeod: The bill as introduced amends the late application process for the community right to buy in part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. The amendments to part 2 of the 2003 act will require a community body to show that “relevant work” or “relevant steps” were carried out by a person, although not necessarily the community body, before the land was put up for sale. That is in place of the current provisions, which require a community body to show that it has “good reasons” for submitting a late application.

We propose amendment 31 to make changes to the late application process more flexible for communities. That is because there could sometimes be circumstances in which, for example, land has been on sale for a period of time prior to a need being identified by the community. That would currently result in the community that wished to purchase the land being unable to do so, because it could not show that a person took relevant steps or carried out relevant work before the land was marketed for sale. It may be that there is no other land in the area that would be suitable for the community’s purposes, and there could therefore be a good reason why the application should be approved, even though the relevant work or steps have not been carried out.

Amendment 31 seeks to insert provisions to the effect that ministers may approve a late application if it can be shown that there are good reasons why relevant work or relevant steps were not undertaken to submit an application before the land was put up for sale, and, in addition, if it can be shown that there are good reasons why the late application should succeed, notwithstanding the fact that no such relevant steps or work were undertaken. For an application to succeed under amendment 31, ministers would still have to be satisfied that the level of support within the community for the registration is significantly greater than that which ministers would have considered sufficient in a timeous application, and that there are factors that the minister considers to be strongly indicative that it is in the public interest to register the community interest.

I move amendment 31.

Michael Russell: The concerns that were expressed by Dave Thompson have in the public interest to register the community interest.

I accept that, as the email that Community Land Scotland sent yesterday states, it would make more sense if there was a timescale attached to the amendment. I understand that. What I would like to explore with the minister—perhaps she will comment on this in summing up—is whether she agrees to the principle of amendment 49, as Community Land Scotland seems to. Will she consider lodging an amendment of this nature at stage 3? If not, I will probably not move amendment 49 but will bring back a similar amendment at stage 3, bearing in mind Community Land Scotland’s critique of it. I would very much like to hear the minister’s views of the amendment when she sums up.

Claudia Beamish: Following on from Alex Fergusson’s comments on amendment 49, I note that, in correspondence yesterday, Community Land Scotland highlighted that it would be helpful to change “prior to the making of the application” in the amendment to, say, “within a year of any subsequent application”; to make it clear that the offer would be no greater than an independent valuer’s valuation, which would bring it in line with other parts of the 2003 act; and to provide ministers with the flexibility to consider any case made by the community regarding any unreasonable conditions and any offer or other factors which, in the opinion of the minister, made refusal of the offer by the community a reasonable action.

I highlight those points because we hope to reach a conclusion on the matter either at this stage or at stage 3.

Aileen McLeod: I agree with the concerns behind amendment 49 in that community bodies should seek to agree to purchase land in preference to using the community right to buy where that is an option. Any test along the lines suggested in the amendment would need to take into account factors such as the price, the terms under which the land was offered and the community’s reasons for rejecting the offer or not completing the purchase. I am happy to consider developing those factors with Mr Fergusson to ensure that the bill is fair to all parties and I propose to lodge a more detailed amendment at stage 3.

Amendment 31 agreed to.
Amendment 50 not moved.

Alex Fergusson: Given the minister’s closing remarks, I am happy not to move amendment 49. Amendments 49 and 51 not moved.
Section 31, as amended, agreed to.
Sections 32 and 33 agreed to.

After section 33

The Convener: We now come to group 7, which concerns the duration and renewal of registration under part 2 of the 2003 act. Amendment 44, in the name of Dave Thompson, is grouped with amendments 52, 53 and 55. I call Michael Russell to move amendment 44 and speak to all the amendments in the group.

Michael Russell: Again, this is an issue of flexibility. Registration is a complex process. I appreciate that, under this bill, it is being made simpler and I think that communities will find it easier to do.

However, I know that communities find reregistration, which is necessary in certain circumstances, to be onerous. The question is how the issue of reregistration can be better tackled by the bill. There are two proposals in this group of amendments that do that. I think that the minister has moved a considerable distance to make sure that the issues are addressed, but I just want to make the point.

Amendment 44 would double the period for which registration lasts, from five years to 10 years. That change was recommended by the land reform review group in its 2014 report. There should be at least some consideration of why the land reform review group would say that and whether it is something that should be supported.

Amendment 53 is on the renewal of registration. Clearly, things change in communities over a period of time, but going through the process of reregistration is difficult and if nothing material has changed in the applicant’s circumstances, application for reregistration, at the very least, should be made as simple as possible; really, it should simply pick up those circumstances that have changed. If it were to be done electronically, the application could simply present what was applied for last time and what conditions were pertaining, and the applicant would change only those things that have changed.

Both amendments seek commitments from the minister to make sure that there is simplicity and flexibility in the process and that reregistration, where it is necessary, is something that communities can come to without considerable trepidation and in the knowledge that the likelihood and the default position is that they will succeed in it, which is essentially the purpose.

I move amendment 44.

Sarah Boyack: I very much want to speak in support of the objectives of the amendments. As Mike Russell has said, it is about making it easy and straightforward for communities where there has not really been a change—rather than putting them through an onerous reregistration process—and making it as simple as possible. It would be good to get the minister’s views on the matter on the record.
Amendment 52 is quite interesting in that it seeks to make sure that a community knows when its registration is within 12 months of expiring. That would be a very useful prompt. Again, I am keen to hear what the minister has to say on the issue.

If the purpose is to make the process straightforward and transparent for communities, I am very keen to hear, on the record, how the minister thinks that the legislation could be applied to ensure that communities are not put off by a bureaucratic hurdle just because somebody did not notice an expiry date. The secretary of the group might be away for a few months, for example. A trigger mechanism of this kind would be very helpful and would ensure that the legislation is fit for purpose.

Aileen McLeod: I found the comments from both Mike Russell and Sarah Boyack very helpful. Under the existing provisions of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, a community is required to reregister their interest in the land every five years. Amendment 44 seeks to extend the time period for which a registration of interest lasts, from the current five years to 10 years. The amendment is intended to reduce the burden on communities that feel that the reregistration process is an onerous task.

However, that would no longer provide an indication of the community’s support for the acquisition. It could also be the case that ministers would be unaware of other important changes to the circumstances that justified the original registration of interest. That is why I would propose to retain the current five-year period and why I would ask Mr Russell to withdraw amendment 44, for reasons that I will set out in respect of the other amendments.

Amendment 52 would require the keeper of the registers of Scotland to notify a community body 12 months before its registered interest in the land will expire. The amendment is intended to provide adequate notice to the community body of the impending lapse of its registered interest in the land, in order to provide the body with sufficient time to prepare its application for reregistration.

Under section 36 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, the register of community interests must include the name and address of the company that is the community body that registered the interest. However, we do not consider it appropriate to place on the keeper the burden of being the appropriate person to notify the community body of the time limit for expiry of its registered interest. We believe that it would be more appropriate for that matter to fall to ministers, because the data held on the register of community interests is owned by ministers and held by the keeper on behalf of ministers.

I appreciate the concerns behind amendment 52, so to address them I propose that the Scottish Government lodges an amendment at stage 3. The proposed amendment would require ministers to contact the community body and notify it of the expiry of its registered interest in the land 12 months before the registered interest is due to expire. Consideration will need to be given to whether community bodies should be required to provide ministers with up-to-date contact details for ministers to notify the appropriate person. As a matter of courtesy, ministers currently contact the community body as the five-year registration period nears expiry in order to notify the body that it will require to submit its reregistration if it wishes its registration of interest in the land to continue.

I ask Mr Russell not to press amendment 52, given that the Scottish Government will lodge an alternative amendment at stage 3.

Amendment 53 seeks to introduce a presumption in favour of a community body’s reregistration if there has been no material change in circumstances since the first registration of the interest. At the moment, a community body may reregister at any point from six months before its registration expires. As part of its work processes, the community right to buy team in the Scottish Government sends the community body a reminder one year before the expiry date, which gives a community six months in which to collect the information required for reregistration.

The Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 allows ministers to set out a separate application form for the reregistration process and what information must be provided on that form. We have already undertaken to provide a separate application form for reregistration. In doing so, we can introduce a simplified form whereby the community body can either confirm that there have been no changes to their original application or detail the aspects that might have changed.

We would still need the community body to demonstrate that it has a sufficient level of community support for the continued registration, even if the plans that the community body has for the land have not changed; therefore, the community body must demonstrate the continued support each time it makes an application to reregister the interest. In essence, where there have been no material changes to the information provided in the original application form, the reregistration application form will require very little information other than evidence of the continued support of the community.

The main difference between the changes that we are proposing to the application form and those that amendment 53 proposes is that the amendment proposes a presumption in favour of registration where there have been no material changes in circumstances. The amendment also seeks to give ministers the power to set out the form and procedure for reregistration and to set out matters about which they must be satisfied to allow the reregistration and factors to which they must have regard when deciding whether there has been a material change of circumstances. So, what amendment 53 seeks would mean that it would be for ministers to consider whether there had been a material change in circumstances rather than to make a fresh assessment of whether the tests for registration in section 38 of the 2003 act had been met. The tests in section 38 include ministers considering whether reregistration is still in the public interest and whether there is still community support for registering an interest.

Obviously, I am very sympathetic to concerns about the issue of registration. However, Scottish Government plans to simplify the reregistration process by way of a separate application form will achieve the aim of making it less onerous for community bodies to reregister the community interest. In addition, they will ensure that there is still community support for the plans, that they remain in the public interest and that the process is open and transparent.

I reassure the committee of my commitment to ensure that the process is as open, transparent, simplified and straightforward as we can make it. I therefore ask Mr Russell not to move amendment 53.

Michael Russell: I am grateful to the minister for her positive comments on amendment 52. Clearly, her point is a valid and germane one, and I would welcome an amendment from the Government to address it.

I seek clarification from the minister on one small point. Will the information that is to be in the application form be defined in guidance to the bill, or in another way? I am certainly not questioning the bona fides that you are giving, minister; I just want to know where we will find that out.

Aileen McLeod: There is no reason why that cannot be in the guidance.

Michael Russell: If there is an assurance that the form will be covered in guidance to the bill, that is okay. The principles that you have given are entirely correct, and I accept the point that the ministerial role needs to be clarified.

That leaves us with amendment 44. The land reform review group’s recommendation was for a 10-year period, and there is a strong body of opinion that a five-year period is too short. Although I will not—with the committee’s permission—press the amendment when we come to it, I ask the minister to consider, as she moves towards stage 3, whether that advice from the land reform review group requires further thought.

I am sure that Dave Thompson will want to consider whether he wishes to press the issue by lodging an amendment at stage 3. We might seek some sort of procedure after five years, such as reregistration or confirmation of details, but I think that a longer period of time may be desirable for a community, and it has been seen as such by others.

Aileen McLeod: I am happy to have another look at amendment 44.

Michael Russell: Thank you.

Amendment 44, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 52 and 53 not moved.

Sections 34 to 45 agreed to.

After section 45

The Convener: Group 8 is on appeals to Lands Tribunal as respects valuations of land under part 2 of the 2003 act. Amendment 32, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 42.

Aileen McLeod: The Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 requires that the Lands Tribunal must give reasons in writing for its decision on an appeal as to the valuation of land within four weeks of the hearing of the appeal. The bill as introduced removes that four-week time limit. However, I propose to re-insert the time limit for the Lands Tribunal to issue written reasons for its decisions, while extending the four-week time limit to eight weeks after the hearing of the appeal. That is proposed in order to provide the Lands Tribunal with greater flexibility in scheduling its cases.

In addition to inserting an eight-week time limit, amendment 32 provides an option for the Lands Tribunal, if it considers that "it is not reasonable to issue a written statement" of reasons within that eight-week time limit, to notify the parties to the appeal of a new date by which it will issue its written reasons.

In addition to inserting an eight-week time limit, amendment 32 provides an option for the Lands Tribunal, if it considers that "it is not reasonable to issue a written statement" of reasons within that eight-week time limit, to notify the parties to the appeal of a new date by which it will issue its written reasons.

I lodged amendment 32 to provide greater flexibility for the Lands Tribunal in scheduling its workload, while at the same time ensuring that the parties to an appeal have a degree of certainty as to when they will receive the written statement of reasons. The amendment aligns part 2 with the proposed amendments to part 3 of the bill and proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act.

Amendment 42 is linked to amendment 32. Currently, schedule 5 to the bill removes the requirement in section 62 of the 2003 act for the Lands Tribunal to decide an appeal and issue a written statement of reasons within four weeks of the hearing of an appeal under section 62. Schedule 5 to the bill also removes section 62(8) of the 2003 act, which provides that a failure by the Lands Tribunal to comply with that time limit does not affect the validity of anything that is done under part 2 of the 2003 act.

Amendment 32 inserts the eight-week time limit within which the Lands Tribunal must issue a written statement of reasons. The amendment also allows the Lands Tribunal, where it considers that “it is not reasonable to issue a written statement” within eight weeks, to notify the parties to the appeal of the date by which it will issue its written statement.

Amendment 42 removes the repeal of section 62(8) of the 2003 act, so providing that failure by the Lands Tribunal to comply with the time limit in amendment 32 will not affect the validity of anything done under part 2 of the 2003 act.

Amendments 32 and 42 are intended to ease the burden on the Lands Tribunal and give it more flexibility when scheduling its case load. Although there are no consequences should the Lands Tribunal be unable to meet the time limit, stakeholders were clear about the need to provide a date by which the Lands Tribunal is expected to provide its written decision, in order to give an element of certainty to all parties to an application.

I invite the committee to support the amendments.

I move amendment 32.

Michael Russell: What is proposed is admirable and could be applied in all legal circumstances, but we should remember what Derek Flyn said in evidence—it is important that the committee notes his view. He said that there is no sanction for the Scottish Land Court in such circumstances. Indeed, I cannot imagine those in charge of the Land Court, or any other court, accepting such a sanction. Although a time limit is clearly desirable, and I am sure that the committee and everybody else hopes that it will be observed, I do not think that the provision will, of itself, produce the result that we wish for, which is that crofting cases do not take for ever.

Aileen McLeod: In response to Mr Russell’s points, I reassure him that, if the Lands Tribunal is late, that will have no effect on the application.

Amendment 32 agreed to.

Sections 46 and 47 agreed to.

After section 47

Amendments 33 and 2 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

The Convener: We move to group 9, on information to be included in an application under part 3 of the 2003 act. Amendment 3, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Aileen McLeod: Amendment 3 relates to the requirements of an application by a crofting community body under part 3 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. The amendment sets out that the application form must identify

“the owner of the land, ... any creditor in a standard security over the land or any part of it with a right to sell the land or any part of it, ... the tenant of any tenancy of land over which the tenant has an interest,”

and

“the person entitled to any sporting interests”.

It is important that the owner or person entitled to any interest being purchased is identified because of the nature of the legislation. The mechanism in the legislation is such that the owner or person entitled to the interest must be identified in order to transfer the land to the crofting community body.

Section 86(4) of the 2003 act provides for the completion of purchase by the crofting community body by way of the owner of the land or interest transferring title. Section 86(6) of the 2003 act provides that the transfer,

“If the owner or person entitled to the interest refuses or fails to effect

“the Land Court may ... authorise its ... clerk to execute the deeds on their behalf. It is therefore essential to the process that the owner of the land or person entitled to the interest is identified.

The procedure in the 2003 act is different from other compulsory purchase procedures where, if the landowner is unknown or cannot be found, the purchasing authority can declare title, by way of a general vesting declaration that is registered in the land register.

Amendment 3 also seeks to simplify the mapping requirements for crofting community bodies. Currently, the application form that ministers must prescribe in regulations must include provision that the crofting community is required to identify “all rights and interests” in the subjects of the application. Those are:

“sewers, pipes, lines, watercourses or other conduits and fences, dykes, ditches or other boundaries in or on the land, known to the applicant body or the existence of which it is, on reasonably diligent inquiry, capable of ascertaining”.

We consider that in some cases it could be particularly difficult for a crofting community body to identify all those rights and interests. Amendment 3 proposes to simplify the requirement by stating that crofting community bodies must identify “all rights and interests in the subjects of the application” that are “known to the crofting community body”.

We propose to remove the requirement to identify the “sewers, pipes, lines, watercourses ... and fences, dykes, ditches or other boundaries”.

We lodged amendment 3 because we recognise that the current mapping requirements are particularly complex. Ministers will still set out in regulations the information that is required for the application, but including those interests that I have mentioned as being considered particularly difficult to identify will no longer be required.

Amendment 3 also amends the provisions relating to public notice requirements in section 73(11) of the 2003 act. Currently, public notice of the application must be given “by advertisement ... in such newspaper circulating in the area where the subjects of the application are situated as Ministers think appropriate; and ... in the Edinburgh Gazette.”

Amendment 3 removes those requirements and replaces them with a power for ministers to set out in regulations the public notice requirements.

I ask the committee to support the amendment.

I move amendment 3.

Sarah Boyack: I very much welcome amendment 3. It makes the process more straightforward and it will therefore be more likely that the legislation can be used as intended.

Are we covering amendment 5 as well?

The Convener: No.

Sarah Boyack: I will hold off from commenting on amendment 5 at the moment.

The Convener: I think that, given their experience of various buyouts, many people in the crofting communities are very much in favour of the proposals in amendment 3.

Amendment 3 agreed to.

The Convener: Group 10 is on criteria for ministerial consent under part 3 of the 2003 act.

Amendment 4, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Aileen McLeod: Section 74 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 sets out the criteria of which ministers must be satisfied before approving an application by a crofting community body to purchase eligible croft land compulsorily.

Amendment 4 seeks to add to the conditions that are set out in section 74(1) of the 2003 act so that, in order to consent to an application under part 3, ministers must be satisfied that the owner, tenant, person entitled to sporting interests or creditor in a standard security in relation to the land or interests, are correctly identified in the application that is submitted by the crofting community body. Amendment 4 will ensure that all relevant parties are accurately identified during the application process, in line with amendment 3. That will ensure that all parties to the application are fully involved in the process and will be given the opportunity to comment on the application. It will also ensure that ministers will have received all available evidence on which to make a decision on the crofting community right-to-buy application.

As with amendment 3, it is important that the owner of any interest that is being purchased is identified because of the nature of the legislation. The mechanism of the legislation is such that the owner must be identified in order to transfer the land to the crofting community body.

Section 86(4) of the 2003 act provides for completion of purchase by the crofting community body by way of the owner of the land or interest transferring title. Section 86(6) provides that “If the owner of the land or person entitled to the interests refuses or fails to effect such ... transfer ... the Land Court may ... authorise its ... clerk to ... execute ... such deeds” on their behalf. It is therefore essential to the process that the owner of the land or person entitled to the interest is identified. That is different from other compulsory purchase legislation, in which the purchasing authority can register a general vesting declaration in the land register to declare that it has title to the land. I invite the committee to support amendment 4.

I move amendment 4.

Amendment 4 agreed to.

The Convener: Group 11 relates to ballots under part 3 of the 2003 act. Amendment 5, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Aileen McLeod: I have lodged amendment 5 to clarify that the crofting community body is required to meet the expense of conducting the ballot.
However, the amendment will also give ministers the power to make regulations setting out circumstances in which a crofting community body can seek to recover the cost of running the ballot from the Scottish ministers, in certain circumstances.

The reason why we do not propose to lodge an amendment to the effect that ministers will pay for the cost of all ballots carried out under the crofting community body right-to-buy provisions is that, unlike in the procedure for the community right to buy under part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, the ballot is the first indication of whether or not there is community support for the application. Under part 2 of the 2003 act, by the time the ballot takes place the community body must have already indicated community support for registration of its interest in the land.

There is also the issue of the timing of the ballot. Under part 2 of the 2003 act, a ballot would take place after a community’s application to register an interest had been approved. Under part 3, it would take place before the application is received by the Scottish Government. That means that ministers would not have had the opportunity to assess the application in any way before agreeing to pay for the ballot.

Amendment 5 also seeks to give ministers the power to request further relevant information—as they see fit—from the crofting community body in relation to the ballot, including information relating to any consultation of those who are eligible to vote in the ballot. That information will assist ministers with their decision making in relation to the crofting community body’s right-to-buy application. The amendments are in line with the proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act. I urge the committee to support amendment 5.

I move amendment 5.

Sarah Boyack: I want to dig into the reasons why the crofting community has to pay for the ballot. I take the point that the legislation is slightly different, but I am wondering why you have not changed the legislation to make the process the same, or at least more straightforward.

Can you clarify the circumstances in which the community body could seek reimbursement? Would it be when the vote is in favour of the proposal, rather than when the vote is against it? I am asking so that people’s expectations are absolutely clear when we pass the bill.

Aileen McLeod: The ballot is carried out before the application, so someone has to see the application before going forward. In terms of the circumstances—[interruption.]

The Convener: Dave Thomson wants to advise the minister on that point.

Aileen McLeod: If community support were there for the community right to buy that would be a very good reason for the Government to pay for that ballot.

Sarah Boyack: I just wanted to ensure that that was on the record.

Amendment 5 agreed to.

The Convener: Group 12 relates to an application by more than one crofting community body. Amendment 6, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Aileen McLeod: When more than one crofting community body applies to purchase the same land or interests, only one application can proceed and all others are extinguished.

Amendment 6 will ensure that when more than one crofting community body applies to buy the same land or interests and an application is extinguished, all persons who are invited to give views on the applications are notified that an application has been extinguished. That is in line with the provisions of the proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act. I ask the committee to support the amendment.

I move amendment 6.

Amendment 6 agreed to.

The Convener: Group 13 is on references to the Land Court under part 3 of the 2003 act etc. Amendment 7, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 10.

Aileen McLeod: The Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 specifies the persons who are connected to a crofting community right-to-buy application and who may refer a question to the Land Court before a decision is made on the application. Section 81(1) of the 2003 act lists certain persons who have a right to refer a question to the Land Court at any time before ministers reach a decision on an application. Currently, the persons who have the right to refer are:

“(a) Ministers;
(b) any person who is a member of the crofting community ... ;
(c) any person who has any interest in the land or sporting interests which are the subject of the application giving rise to a right which is legally enforceable by that person;

(can) where the subject of the application is a tenant’s interest, any person who has an interest in the lease, being an interest giving rise to a right which is legally enforceable by that person; or

d) any person who is invited ... to send views to Ministers on the application”

Amendment 7 will extend the list of persons who have a right to refer a question to the Land Court
The Convener: I have two questions. Is there enough capacity in the Land Court? Will the processes of the Land Court in such cases be simplified in any way in order to avoid delays in replying?

Aileen McLeod: We are happy to look into the capacity in the Land Court.

The Convener: We would appreciate it if you got in touch with us about that.

Aileen McLeod: I am happy to write formally to the committee on that.

The Convener: Thank you.

Amendment 7 agreed to.

The Convener: Group 14 is on valuations under part 3 of the 2003 act. Amendment 8, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Aileen McLeod: The Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 sets out in section 88 the procedure for the assessment of the value of the croft land or interests that are being purchased. The procedure currently requires the valuer to invite the owner of the land, the tenant or the person who is entitled to the sporting interests, as well as the crofting community body, to make representations in writing about the value of the land. Amendment 8 will allow for counter-representations to be made in relation to comments that are made on the valuation of the land, and will allow the valuer adequate time to take those into account.

Amendment 8 will extend the time limit for notification of the determination by the valuer from six weeks to eight weeks. It seeks to allow counter-representations to be made by the owner of the land, the tenant or the person who is entitled to sporting interests, in response to representations that are made by the crofting community body. The amendment also seeks to allow counter-representations to be made by the crofting community body in response to representations that are made by the owner of the land, the tenant or the person who is entitled to sporting interests. The effect of amendment 8 will be to ensure that the valuer takes account of the views of all parties to the application and has time to do so. The amendment seeks to assist the valuer in reaching a fair assessment of the value of the land or interest that is the subject of the crofting community body’s right-to-buy application.

Amendment 8 will align the provisions of part 3 of the 2003 act with the proposed provisions in part 2 and the proposed new part 3A of that act.

I move amendment 8.

Amendment 8 agreed to.

The Convener: Group 15 is on compensation under part 3 of the 2003 act for certain losses. Amendment 9, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Aileen McLeod: Amendment 9 will replace the requirement under section 89(4) with a power for ministers to make an order to specify the amounts payable by a crofting community body in respect of loss or expense incurred; and the person, including persons other than the crofting community body, who is liable to pay those amounts, along with the procedure under which claims for compensation are to be made.

Amendment 9 will align part 3 with provisions in proposed new part 3A of that act. I ask the committee to support the amendment.

I move amendment 9.

Amendment 9 agreed to.

The Convener: Group 16 is on the meaning of the term “creditor in a standard security with a... right to sell" in part 3 of the 2003 act. Amendment 11, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Aileen McLeod: Amendment 11 will insert a meaning of the expression "creditor in a standard security with a right to sell", for the purposes of the crofting community right-to-buy provisions in part 3 of the 2003 act, just to ensure that there is clarity on the definition of the term. I ask the committee to support the amendment.

I move amendment 11.

Amendment 11 agreed to.

The Convener: That ends stage 2 for today, although I think that some members want the chance to go on, now that their dander is up. However, I am restraining them, because we have to have another session next week. All amendments for consideration by the committee should be lodged with the clerks to the legislation team by 12 noon this Friday.

I thank the minister and her officials. That was a bit of a marathon, but we have succeeded in getting this far.

At our next meeting, the committee will continue stage 2 of the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill and will consider petition PE1547, on conserving Scottish wild salmon. So it is groundhog day next week, then.

Meeting closed at 12:13.
10 March 2015

Dear Rob

At the Committee meeting on 25 February, I offered to write to the Committee to confirm several points. These are addressed below.

Graeme Dey: Do you have any figures for how many times you anticipate the Land Court would miss the target?

The change in the timescales for the Land Court to issue its decisions on appeals as respects valuations in land, in writing, were reached through discussion with the Land Court themselves, who were happy with the extension from four to eight weeks and did not ask for a further extension. The Land Court has given us no indication that it is going to miss the eight-week limit.

To date, there have been no instances where the land court has failed to meet the current deadlines set.

Dave Thompson: Does the Government have the legal power to insist on mediation in relation to disputes under the legislation?

The Scottish Government does not have any powers to enforce mediation under the legislation. Mediation, by its very nature, is a voluntary process, so whilst we can certainly strengthen the guidance to suggest mediation as a viable option, we do not intent to enforce it.

The short life working group that is currently being set up as part of the work towards having 1m acres of land under community ownership, will look at the potential functions and role of a community land agency, one of which could be to facilitate or arrange for such mediation.
Rob Gibson: The Scotland Act 1998 says that we are responsible for ECHR issues. Given that there will almost certainly be challenges in the courts, is it not time that we went back with something that overrides the ECHR?

The ECHR is a very important Convention and one which Scottish Ministers are very supportive of. The requirements of the Convention not only constrain how Scottish Ministers act (since they have no power to act incompatibly with convention rights) but they also place limits on what Acts of the Scottish Parliament may provide (since a provision of such an Act is not law so far as it is incompatible with any of the Convention rights or with EU law). We would not wish to override (nor could we competently purport to override) the ECHR. Currently, Ministers are separately obliged by the Scottish Ministerial Code to comply with international law, including the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, though that is not a legally enforceable duty.

The Scottish Government acknowledges the importance of the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (“Covenant”) and is committed to giving effect to international human rights treaties in a way that works for Scotland. As can be seen by the Scottish Government’s Contribution to the UK Periodic Report (as appended to this letter) the Scottish Government’s purpose is central to the realisation of economic, social and cultural rights and it has taken a number of steps to realise these rights in Scotland.

However, the current position is that, whilst we have regard to the provisions of the Covenant, the Scottish Ministers have no power to act incompatibly with the rights under the ECHR (by virtue of the Scotland Act 1998) when making Ministerial decisions, and must therefore make decisions in accordance with the rights set out in the ECHR. Nor does the Scottish Parliament have legislative competence to make provision in an Act of the Scottish Parliament that is incompatible with the rights under the ECHR. Although Ministers are separately obliged by the Scottish Ministerial Code to comply with international law, including the Covenant, it cannot override the provisions of the ECHR.

We cannot prevent challenges to being made to the provisions of the Bill. However, we consider that the Bill as introduced is compatible with the ECHR, and still allows Ministers to take account of the Covenant when making decisions about individual right to buy applications, provided that such decisions are compatible with the ECHR.

With kind regards

AILEEN MCLEOD

PART 1: REPORT ON REALISATION OF ICESCR ARTICLES

1. The Scottish Government is committed to creating a modern, inclusive Scotland which protects, respects and realises internationally-recognised human rights. We strongly believe in and subscribe to the principles laid out in the International Covenant for Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR). Within the current constitutional settlement, Scotland’s devolved institutions have a key role in implementing and upholding human rights standards. In those areas where we already have competence, Scotland takes a distinctive approach, reflecting our progressive values. We are committed to giving effect to international human rights treaties, in a way that works for Scotland. We are working to ensure that Scotland’s distinctive approach is incorporated into the UK’s reporting to and examination under ICESCR and other international treaties to which the UK is a signatory.

2. The Scottish Government’s purpose is central to the realisation of economic, social and cultural rights. The purpose is to focus government and public services on creating a more successful country, with opportunities for all of Scotland to flourish, through increasing sustainable economic growth. This Purpose is measured by a National Performance Framework, which contain 16 National Outcomes and 50 National Indicators. Progress is reported on annually. The Purpose is further unpinned by the following strategic objectives:
   - Wealthier and Fairer: enabling businesses and people to increase their wealth and more people to share fairly in that wealth;
   - Healthier: helping people to sustain and improve their health, especially in disadvantaged communities, ensuring better, local and faster access to health care;
   - Safer and Stronger: helping communities to flourish, becoming stronger, safer places to live, offering improved opportunities and a better quality of life;
   - Smarter: expanding opportunities to succeed from nurture through to lifelong learning ensuring higher and more widely shared achievements; and
   - Greener: improving Scotland’s natural and built environment and the sustainable use and enjoyment of it.

3. Equality and non-discrimination is at the heart of everything the Scottish Government does; our ambition for Scotland embraces the principles of equality, fairness and social justice. These are at the heart of the vision for a new Scotland. Equality is integral to delivery on our purpose of sustainable economic growth; it is integral to the public service reform agenda and to the increasing shift to prevention.

4. On the right to work, we believe that creating the conditions for sustainable economic growth to flourish will provide more and better opportunities to work. Our educational and vocational training system is one of the most important building blocks, and we are working to integrate our approach into the wider Scottish education and employment systems.
5. On the right to social security, this is generally reserved to the UK Government. However, the Scottish Government is committed to creating a more equal society, and aims to ensure that all our people receive fair and decent support. This includes taking a long term, preventative approach to tackling poverty across Scotland.

6. On the requirement to afford the widest possible protections to children and families, we are taking forward a range of activity which builds on the requirements of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC). In April 2013 we introduced the Children & Young People (Scotland) Bill, which will support the effective and consistent implementation of Getting it right for every child across Scotland, improve services and support for looked after children and those leaving care, increase provision of free and flexible childcare and introduce new powers and duties which explicitly recognise the role of the UNCRC in influencing service planning and delivery. In addition to strengthening the law, we are committed to taking practical steps to improve the culture and practice which exists amongst and within frontline services and which ultimately impacts on the quality of outcomes that we can expect for our children and young people.

7. On the right to an adequate standard of living (including food, clothing and shelter), the Scottish Government is implementing a National Food and Drink Policy that seeks to address issues of quality, health and wellbeing and environmental sustainability whilst recognising the need for access and affordability. On housing, the “Homes Fit for the 21st century” sets out our vision for housing in 2020, and the steps required to make that a reality. Effective supply, choice and quality are our key priorities.

8. On the right to the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, we are working to help people sustain and improve their health, particularly in disadvantaged communities, by ensuring better, local and faster access to healthcare.

9. On the right to education, our curriculum for excellence aims to achieve a transformation in education in Scotland for 3-18 year olds, by creating a more flexible and enriched curriculum, raising standards in learning and teaching and improving our children’s life chances. Likewise, our lifelong learning strategy aims to ensure that everyone develops the skills, knowledge and attribute they will need for learning, work and life. The Education (Scotland) Act 1980 continues to place a statutory duty on all local authorities to provide religious education and observance.

10. On the right to participate freely in cultural life, we believe that supporting our creative communities, while creating the conditions to allow for meaningful access and participation, will enriches our lives, enhance our learning and strengthen both our society and our economy.

<td>Bearing in mind that it is that State party which is responsible for the implementation of the Covenant in all its territories, the Committee urges the State party to ensure the equal enjoyment of the economic, social and cultural rights by all individuals and groups of individuals under its jurisdiction, and recommends that the State party adopt a national strategy for the implementation of the Covenant throughout the State party’s territories.</td>
<td>The Scottish Government is working closely with the Scottish Human Rights Commission and others to develop Scotland’s first National Action Plan for Human Rights (SNAP), which will include reference to CESCR and economic, social and cultural rights.</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>The Committee urges the State party to ensure that the Covenant is given full legal effect in its domestic law, that the Covenant rights are made justiciable, and that effective remedies are available for victims of all violations of economic, social and cultural rights. The Committee reiterates its recommendation that, irrespective of the system through which international law is incorporated in the domestic legal order (monism or dualism), following ratification of an international instrument, the State party is under a legal obligation to comply with such an instrument and to give it full effect in its domestic legal order. In this respect, the Committee again draws the attention of the State party to its general comment no. 9 (1998) on the domestic application of the Covenant.</td>
<td>The Scottish Government is committed to giving effect to international human rights treaties, in a way that works for Scotland. We are working to ensure that Scotland’s distinctive approach is incorporated into the UK’s reporting to international treaty bodies and their subsequent examination of our human rights records under UN and Council of Europe Conventions and Treaties to which the UK is a signatory.</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>The Committee recommends once again that the State party adopt a national human rights plan of action which includes specific programmes regarding the realization of economic, social, and cultural rights. It also encourages the State party to consult widely with civil society and national human rights institutions in the preparation of the national human rights plan of action.</td>
<td>As stated, the Scottish Government is working closely with the Scottish Human Rights Commission and others to develop Scotland’s first National Action Plan for Human Rights (SNAP). The intention is that SNAP will be evidence based, developed in an inclusive way and independently monitored. It will set out realistic and practical ways to fill ‘gaps’, build on good practice and help Scotland look outwards and move forward in relation to the realisation of human rights – particularly the most vulnerable and marginalised in society.</td>

<td>The Committee recommends that the State party take effective measures to increase awareness of economic, social and cultural rights among the public at large as well as among judges, public officials, police and law enforcement officials, medical practitioners, and other health care-related professionals, including by lending adequate support to civil society and national human rights institutions in their efforts in relation to awareness-raising. It also recommends that the State party take steps to improve awareness of the Covenant rights as justiciable human rights and not merely rights as part of the “Welfare State”.</td>
<td>The Scottish Human Rights Commission, established under legislation in 2006, continues to have a key role in promoting rights in Scotland, including economic, social and cultural rights. It also works with public sector organisations to support the development of a human rights based approach. In the context of the development of Scotland’s National Action Plan for Human Rights, the Scottish Government will consider further how rights holders and duty bearers may be further empowered and enabled to ensure the realisation of economic, social and cultural rights.</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>The Committee recommends that the State party take remedial steps to enforce existing legal prohibitions of discrimination and to enact, without delay, a comprehensive anti-discrimination law, guaranteeing protection against discrimination in the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights, as stipulated in article 2, paragraph 2, of the Covenant. It also recommends that the State party consider making such comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation applicable to Northern Ireland.</td>
<td>Equality legislation is largely reserved to the Westminster Government. However, Scottish Ministers have powers to make specific duties to enable the better performance of the public sector equality duty in the Equality Act 2010. The specific duties were made in May 2012 and require public authorities to set equality outcomes, report on mainstreaming equality, gather and use employee information, and assess the impact of applying a new or revised policy or practice against the public sector equality duty.</td>

<td>6</td>
<td>The Committee recommends that the State party ensure that its counter-terrorism measures do not have a discriminatory effect on the enjoyment of the Covenant rights on certain groups in the State party, in particular ethnic and religious minorities.</td>
<td>The Scottish Government agrees wholeheartedly that the UK Government should ensure that the equality characteristics (particularly race and faith) should be taken into account when considering counter-terrorism legislation.</td>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>The Committee, in line with its general comment no. 16 (2005) on the equal right of men and women to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights, recommends that the State party conduct a comprehensive review of its policies to overcome gender inequalities. It also recommends that the State party continue intensifying its efforts to enhance equality between men and women in the workplace, particularly with regard to equal pay for work of equal value in all sectors of employment. The Committee encourages the State party to take into consideration the findings of the inquiry to be conducted by the Equality and Human Rights Commission and to ensure that the Equality Bill contains effective provisions aimed at closing the wage gap in the private sector.</td>
<td>The Scottish Government recognises that solutions to the problem of equal pay is not straightforward, linked as it is to the issue of occupational segregation. Many of the changes needed are cultural or behavioural and as we know these types of changes are the most difficult to make. A large amount of progress has been made over the last 50 years but there is still a long way to go and progress has been slow. We believe a coordinated, collaborative and cooperative approach provides the best chance of success and have established 3 separate but related groups to drive this agenda forward: the Strategic Group on Women and Work; the Occupational Segregation Cross-Directorate Working Group; and the Science and Engineering Profession Working Group on Equality and Diversity.</td>

<td>The Committee recommends that the State party strengthen its measures to reduce the substantial number of unemployed persons and to counteract the impact of the economic downturn on employment in order to implement fully the right to work, in particular with regard to the most disadvantaged and marginalized individuals and groups. It also calls upon the State party to reinforce its measures aimed at ensuring that persons with disabilities, including those with learning disabilities, have equal opportunities for productive and gainful employment, equal pay for work of equal value, and provide them with improved, expanded and equal opportunities to gain the necessary qualifications, in line with its general comment no. 5 (1994) on persons with disabilities.</td>
<td>Employment is reserved to the UK Government. Notwithstanding, the Scottish Government is working hard to reduce high levels of unemployment and help the most vulnerable into employment. Youth Employment Scotland and Community Jobs Scotland aspire to create 11,000 jobs for young people in 2013/14, 1,000 of which will be jobs created in the Third sector through Community Jobs Scotland. 200 of those CJS jobs will be ring-fenced for vulnerable groups including disabled people. European Social Fund monies are also used to support most disadvantaged groups into work, which has stimulated the creation of 205 jobs (2013-2014) for disabled people in the Third Sector. The Scottish Government’s Supported Employment Framework sets out the range of work underway to ensure the provision of consistent high quality services across Scotland to help more disabled people into employment. In driving up workforce capacity and quality of services, we have developed a professional development award for the workforce which has been tested and is currently being evaluated. Local employability partnerships in every local authority area continue to work together to ensure that suitable employability interventions area available to support people towards work, regardless of the barriers they may face. They are supported by a Scottish Government learning network, which includes a website, regular bulletins and quarterly meetings to share learning and agree joint responses to shared challenges. The Scottish Government is also committed to helping people with learning disabilities who want to work to work, and it is our ambition that with the right support, they are able to find work in mainstream employment, suitable to their skills. We requires local authorities, NHS Boards and Third sector organisations to develop a range of supports employment opportunities for people with learning disabilities by 2018.</td>

<td>The Committee encourages the State party to ensure that the conditions of work of all migrant workers comply with the provisions of article 7 of the Covenant and calls upon the State party to take all necessary measures to investigate the activities of companies employing migrant workers and ensure that employers contravening the law in this regard are prosecuted and sanctioned.</td>

<td>The Committee recommends that the State party reinforce its measures to combat violence against women. It further recommends that the State party intensify its efforts to raise awareness of the gravity of this offence and the mechanisms available to victims of domestic violence, to improve training for police and law enforcement officials and judges in relation to rape cases, and to increase the support services for victims at the local level. The Committee further recommends that the State party take appropriate measures to ensure that complaints of rape are diligently and impartially investigated and prosecuted without any inherent bias or scepticism towards alleged victims. The Committee reiterates its recommendation that physical punishment of children in the home be prohibited by law.</td>
<td>The Scottish Government has committed £34.5 million (2012 – 15) for initiatives to tackle all forms of violence against women, including rape and sexual assault. In collaboration with our partners, we are also currently refreshing Scotland’s strategic approach to violence against women. In relation to rape, in December 2010 the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act came into effect, which brought greater clarity to the prosecution of sexual crimes. In establishing the National Sex Crimes Unit, the Crown Office have established a team of specialist prosecutors to ensure these cases are given the best available consideration and preparation. Police Scotland has established a National Rape Task Force which includes Rape Investigation Units in each of the 14 local divisions across Scotland. These units are led by Detective Inspectors and staffed by specially trained officers. In relation to physical punishment of children, the Scottish Government has no wish to criminalise parents for lightly smacking their child. The Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 makes it illegal to punish a child using an implement, by shaking the child, or by hitting the child on the head. The Act also gives the court clear guidance about the factors it must consider when determining whether punishment of a child was a proper exercise of parental authority. The National Parenting Strategy published last year gives a commitment to developing practical advice on different approaches to assist parents in managing their children’s behaviour.</td>

<td>The Committee encourages the State party to ensure that asylum-seekers are not restricted in their access to the labour market while their claims for asylum are being processed. It also recommends that the State party review section 4 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 on support and provision regulating essential services to rejected asylum-seekers, and undocumented migrants, including the availability of HIV/AIDS treatment, when necessary.</td>

<td>The Committee urges the State party to intensify its efforts to combat poverty, fuel poverty, and social exclusion, in particular with regard to the most disadvantaged and marginalized individuals and groups and in the most affected regions and city areas. It also calls upon the State party to develop human rights-based poverty-reduction programmes, taking into consideration the Committee’s Statement on Poverty and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights of 2001 (E/C.12/2001/10). The Committee also encourages the State party to intensify its efforts aimed at achieving its target of reducing child poverty by half by 2010.</td>
<td>In Scotland, our approach is reflected in our key social policy frameworks: the Child Poverty Strategy for Scotland, Achieving Our Potential, Equally Well and the Early Years Framework. These frameworks outline our commitment to collaborative working and investment at a national and local level to tackle the long term drivers of poverty and income inequality. Our Child Poverty Strategy for Scotland expresses our commitment to tackle the long term drivers of poverty through early intervention and prevention. We focus on maximising household resources and improving children’s wellbeing and life chances. This preventative approach to tackling poverty is crucial to our vision of a Scotland that is wealthier and fairer. Most recent figures show that Child Poverty in Scotland has fallen substantially since devolution, from 28% in 1999-00 to 15% in 2011-12. The Scottish Government is protecting household incomes through the Social Wage. This includes free personal care for the elderly, abolition of tuition fees, scrapping of bridge tolls and prescription charges, free eye examinations, freezing of council tax, concessionary bus passes and increasing the provision of free nursery education.</td>

The Committee calls upon the State party, in line with its general comment no. 4 (1991) on the right to adequate housing, to intensify its efforts to ensure that everyone has access to housing and to review its policies and develop effective strategies, including a gender impact assessment, aimed at increasing the levels of affordable housing, including social housing. The Committee also recommends that the State party take into consideration the Homelessness etc. (Scotland) Act 2003 as best practice, especially its provision relating to the right to housing as an enforceable right.

The Scottish Government published its strategy and action plan for housing “Homes Fit for the 21st Century”, in February 2011. The vision for 2020 is that all people in Scotland live in high-quality sustainable homes that they can afford and that meet their needs. In order to achieve this we are working to increase the number of new homes in all sectors. The Scottish Government has set a target to deliver 30,000 new affordable homes by 2016, at least two thirds of which will be for social housing, recognising the vital role of social housing in providing people with an affordable home and a platform for getting on in life. Equalities impact assessments are a routine part of housing policy review and development. The Committee will wish to note that since 31 December 2012, all unintentionally homeless households have been entitled to settled accommodation as set out in the Homelessness etc (Scotland) Act 2003. Alongside the legislative change, a prevention/housing options approach has been taken by local authorities. Most recent figures show that homelessness applications have fallen by 13% between 2011/12 and 2012/13 (currently standing at 39,827 applications).

<td>The Committee recommends that the State party ensure the provision of sufficient, adequate and secure stopping sites for Roma/Gypsies and Irish Travellers. It also recommends that the State party, in the organization of mega-events, ensure the protection of the most disadvantaged and marginalized individuals and groups, which may be disproportionately affected by such events, in line with the Committee’s general comment no. 7 (1997) on the right to adequate housing: forced evictions. It also encourages the State party to review the provisions of the Unauthorised Encampments (Northern Ireland) Order 2005 and to provide for suitable accommodation arrangements for Roma/Gypsies and Irish Travellers.</td>
<td>The Scottish Government recognises that the lack of provision of suitable stopping sites causes difficulties for both the Gypsy/Traveller and settled community. That is why we continue to work with local authorities to address this and to identify suitable land and/or existing sites which require upgrading. In the autumn, The Scottish Government will start working with a broad range of stakeholders including local government, NHS Scotland, Police Scotland, the Gypsy/Traveller community, schools and other educational institutes to produce an overarching strategy document to which a broad range of stakeholders working with Gypsies/Travellers can refer. The Scottish Government considers that key decisions about these issues are best made at the local level. Local authorities must prepare local housing strategies based on their assessment of the needs and demands for housing in their areas, and must consider the needs of the Gypsy/Traveller community in doing so. In response to the a Scottish Parliament report published in March 2013 (Where Gypsies/Travellers Live), the Scottish Government is establishing a group to consider the issue of Gypsy/Traveller site provision and quality, tenancy arrangements, unauthorised sites, and the rights and responsibilities of those living on sites. We do not believe there is a one-size-fits-all solution to these issues. However we are keen to facilitate dialogue between all the parties involved and to promote the spreading of good practice, so that the most effective approaches can be used across the whole of Scotland to address the needs both of Gypsies/Travellers and of the settled community.</td>

<td>The Scottish Government recognise the important role that health professionals have in supporting the right to the highest attainable standard of health. We are exploring with our educational and training agency, NHS Education for Scotland, to identify how existing education and training aligns to economic, social and cultural rights, and consider what scope exists to more explicitly recognise these links within training programmes. We also recognise that there are some training and educational criteria, for example undergraduate and postgraduate medical curricula, and aspects of Continuous Professional Development, that are approved and delivered on a UK-wide basis thus requiring Scotland to work with other UK administrations to effect any change. We will utilise existing governance mechanisms to approach other UK administrations with a view to seeking co-operation and engagement in any efforts to better align training and educational content to economic, social and cultural rights. With regards to dementia, Promoting Excellence is the national dementia skills and competencies framework for health and social services staff across Scotland. It is designed to help services meet the Standards of Care for Dementia in Scotland. Both were key parts of Scotland’s first 3-year dementia strategy (2010-13). An initial 2-year Promoting Excellence implementation plan was published in 2011 and a second plan is running from 2013-16 as part of Scotland’s second 3-year strategy. On dementia awareness-raising, we piloted this in 2009 in Tayside, and the findings from this fed into the establishment of a 3-year HEAT target from this year that everyone diagnosed from 1 April will receive a minimum of a year’s dedicated post-diagnostic support, coordinated by an appropriately trained Link Worker.</td>

The Committee recommends that the State party intensify its efforts to decrease the number of suicides among mental health patients by dealing with the causes of suicide and strengthening the provision of psychological counselling services, as well as training of health professionals on the causes and symptoms of depression and other mental health problems. It also recommends that the State party take all appropriate measures to ensure access of such patients to the complaints system.

Since the publication of Choose Life (Scotland’s anti-suicide strategy) in 2002, much work has taken place all over Scotland to help prevent suicide and respond to those affected by suicide. The work has contributed to a 17% reduction in the suicide rate in Scotland in a 10 year period. Key actions underway include locally tailored suicide prevention action plans, co-funding the annual UK Confidential Inquiry into Suicide and Homicide by People with Mental Illness, and funding the Suicide Information Database for Scotland (SCOTSID) established in 2009 and delivered by NHS Health Scotland / NHS National Services Information Services Division. The Scottish Government is currently considering future strategy and action on prevention of suicide and self-harm, in the context that the Choose Life strategy is approaching the end of its 10 year lifetime. The aim is to publish a new national strategy on suicide and self-harm in autumn 2013. In terms of psychological therapies, the HEAT target ‘Deliver faster access to mental health services by delivering 18 weeks referral to treatment for Psychological therapies from December 2014’ was approved by the Scottish Government in November 2010. NHS Boards have made good progress in improving access to many psychological therapies. This target focuses further attention on access to psychological therapies and mental health service improvement more widely. By December 2014 the standard for referral to the commencement of treatment in psychological therapy will be a maximum of 18 weeks, irrespective of age, illness or therapy. The Scottish Government committed to increasing the availability of evidence-based psychological therapies in a range of settings. This includes, for example, NHS Living Life – a nationally available telephone cognitive behavioural therapy (CBT) service for people who are feeling low, depressed or anxious. In terms of access to complaints, all patients have access to the NHS complaints process either directly or through a representative. The Charter of Patient Rights and Responsibilities was published in October 2012. It sets out what people can expect from the NHS in Scotland and what the NHS expects from its users. The Charter includes information on how to have any concerns or complaints dealt with in the most appropriate way.

<td>The Committee recommends that the State party adopt all appropriate measures to reduce the achievement gap in terms of school performance between British pupils and pupils belonging to ethnic, religious or national minorities in the field of education, inter alia, by ensuring the adequate provision of English-language courses for those students who lack adequate language proficiency and avoiding the overrepresentation of minority students in classes for children with learning difficulties. The Committee further recommends that the State party undertake further studies on the correlation between school failure and social environment, with a view to elaborating effective strategies aimed at reducing the disproportionate dropout rates affecting minority pupils.</td>

We are protecting the pay of the lowest earners we have direct responsibility for and are leading by example by ensuring all staff covered by our public sector pay policy are paid the Scottish Living Wage (currently £7.45 p/h). <td>The Scottish Government remains concerned about the impact of the UK Government's welfare reforms on people in Scotland, including some of the most vulnerable in our society. We continue to press the UK Government for fairer reform and to ensure that safeguards are in place for those who need them most. We are doing all we can, within our existing powers and resources, to mitigate the worst impacts where possible. For example, we are providing an additional £9.2 million for the new Scottish Welfare Fund, giving a total Fund the £33 million which has the capacity to support around 200,000 people in Scotland. We are also providing an additional £7.9 million for advice and support services to help those affected by the reforms.</td>

It also recommends that the State party eliminate the unequal treatment between European Union member State nationals and nationals of other States regarding the reduction of university fees and the allocation of financial assistance.</td>
<td>The Scottish Government firmly believes that access to education for Scottish domiciled students should be based on the ability to learn rather than the ability to pay. For this reason, Scottish and EU students undertaking a first, full-time, under-graduate degree course do not pay tuition fees for attending a Scottish university. Tuition fee levels for these students are regulated by Scottish Ministers and paid by the Student Awards Agency for Scotland. However, tuition fees for international students are not regulated and universities are therefore able to set their own tuition fees for these students. From the start of academic year 2012-13, we made the decision to also de-regulate tuition fees for new students from other parts of the UK. This change was necessary to maintain the cross-border flow of students and to ensure that we were able to safeguard places at Scottish Universities for Scottish students. Had we not made this change, the substantially increased levels of tuition fees in England would have resulted in unprecedented numbers of students from the rest of the UK applying to study at Scottish universities.</td>

(4) Land may be included on the abandoned land register—

(a) at the initiative of the local authority, or

(b) is not land which falls within section 97C(3),

(c) may be in the public interest for the land to be subject to a compulsory sale order under section 97ZD.

(6) Before including land on its abandoned land register, a local authority must—

(a) send notice in writing that it is considering whether to do so to—

(i) the owner of the land, and

(ii) any creditor in a standard security over the land or any part of it, and

(b) invite those persons to make representations in respect of whether the land should be included on the register.

(7) Subsection (6)(a) does not apply if the local authority is unable to trace the person.

(8) In determining whether to include land on its abandoned land register, the local authority must have regard to—

(a) any representations made under subsection (6)(b),

(b) where an application has been made under subsection (4)(b), any information provided with the application.

(10) The local authority must make arrangements for those persons specified in subsection (11) to apply for a review of a determination by the authority as to whether land is to be included on its abandoned land register.

(11) The persons mentioned in subsections (9) and (10) are—

(a) a person mentioned in subsection (6)(a),

(b) a community body.

(12) The local authority must not include land on its abandoned land register until—

(b) where an application for a review has been made, that review has been determined.
(13) A local authority must—
   (a) make arrangements to enable members of the public to inspect, free of charge, its abandoned land register at reasonable times and at such places as the authority may determine, and
   (b) make its abandoned land register available, free of charge, on a website, or by other electronic means, to members of the public.

   (a) without prejudice to the generality of that subsection, may in particular make provision about—
      (i) arrangements that are to apply where land falls within the area of more than one local authority,
      (ii) fees that may be charged by local authorities in respect of abandoned land registers,
   (b) are subject to the affirmative procedure.

   (1) In carrying out any of the duties imposed on it by section 97ZB, a local authority must have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers in relation to the duties.
   (2) Before issuing any such guidance, the Scottish Ministers must consult—
      (a) local authorities,
      (b) community councils, and
      (c) such other persons as the Scottish Ministers think fit.

97ZD Compulsory sale orders
   (1) Where land has been included on an abandoned land register for a continuous period of at least 3 years, the local authority must, if requested to do so by a community body, by notice in writing (a “compulsory sale order”) require the owner of the land to offer the land for sale.
   (2) Where required to offer the land for sale under subsection (1), the owner of the land must do so at a public auction within the period of 6 months beginning with the date of issue of the notice under subsection (1).
   (3) Where either subsection (4) or (5) applies, the local authority must offer the land for sale at a public auction as soon as practicable after the end of the period described in subsection (2).
   (4) This subsection applies if the owner of the land has not offered the land for sale in accordance with subsection (2).
   (5) This subsection applies if—
      (a) the owner of the land has offered the land for sale in accordance with subsection (2),
(b) the land was—
   (i) not sold at the public auction, or
   (ii) sold on terms that in the opinion of the local authority are not in the public interest, and
(c) in the opinion of the local authority the arrangements made for the auction were unsatisfactory in a way that had a material effect on the land not being sold or the terms on which the land was sold.

(6) Where subsection (7) applies, no further application for a compulsory sale order may be made until the expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date of the public auction.

(7) This subsection applies if—
   (a) the owner of the land has offered the land for sale in accordance with subsection (2), and
   (b) the land was not sold at the public auction.

97ZE  Power of local authority where land not put to use

(1) Subsection (2) applies if—

(2) The local authority may acquire the land compulsorily.

97ZF  Regulations on compulsory sale orders

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make such further provision as they see fit in connection with—
   (a) compulsory sale orders under section 97ZD,
   (b) the exercise by local authorities of the power in section 97ZE.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of subsection (1), regulations may in particular make provision about—
   (a) arrangements for payment to the owner of the consideration paid for land sold under section 97ZD(3),
   (b) the circumstances in which and the extent to which local authorities may recover from such sums any costs reasonably incurred by them in carrying out their functions under section 97ZD.

Scottish Parliament
Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee

Wednesday 11 March 2015

[The Convener opened the meeting at 10:00]

Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

The Convener (Rob Gibson): Good morning, everybody, and welcome to the 10th meeting of the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee in 2015.

Before we move to the first item on the agenda, I remind people that mobile phones should be switched off, as they can affect the broadcasting system. However, committee members may use tablets for the business of the meeting.

Agenda item 1 is stage 2 of the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill. Today we will consider further amendments to the bill. I welcome to the meeting the Minister for Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform, Dr Aileen McLeod, and her officials. Dr McLeod is accompanied by Stephen Pathirana, Dave Thomson, Rachel Rayner, Elizabeth Connell and Annalee Murphy.

I now have to read this out—it is nearly as long as one of the explanations from the minister last week about a certain amendment.

Everyone should have with them a copy of the bill as introduced, the marshalled list of amendments, which was published on Monday, and the groupings paper, which sets out the amendments in the order in which they will be debated.

There will be one debate on each group of amendments. I will call the member who lodged the first amendment in the group to speak to and move that amendment, and to speak to all the other amendments in the group. Members who have not lodged amendments in the group but who wish to speak should indicate that by catching my attention in the usual way. If the minister has not already spoken on the group, I will invite her to contribute to the debate just before I move to the winding-up speech.

The debate on each group will be concluded by me inviting the member who moved the first amendment in the group to wind up. Following the debate on the group, I will check whether the member who moved the first amendment in the group wishes to press it to a vote or to withdraw it.

If the member wishes to press the amendment, I will put the question on the amendment. If a member wishes to withdraw their amendment after it has been moved, I will check whether any other member objects. If any committee member does object, the amendment is not withdrawn and the committee immediately moves to a vote on it.

If a member does not wish to move their amendment when it is called, they should say "Not moved." Any other MSP present may move the amendment. If no one moves the amendment, however, I will immediately call the next amendment on the marshalled list.

Only committee members are allowed to vote. Voting on all divisions is by a show of hands. It is important that members keep their hands clearly raised so that the clerk can record the vote. The committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed to each section of the bill, so I will put a question on each section at the appropriate moment.

This is our second day of consideration of amendments at stage 2. [Interruption.]

Section 48—Abandoned and neglected land

The Convener: We come now to section 48 and the first grouping of amendments, on land which is eligible to be bought under part 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. Amendment 58, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 34, 59, 89, 60, 54, 61, 35 to 37 and 97.

The Minister for Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform (Aileen McLeod): Amendment 58 is a technical amendment that seeks to clarify that the land that might be bought under proposed new part 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 is to be given the term “eligible land”, and seeks to bring proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act into alignment with section 68 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, which relates to the crofting community right to buy.

On amendment 34, in the name of Michael Russell, which seeks to expand the type of land that will be eligible under proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act from land that is “abandoned or neglected” to land that is “in substantial need of sustainable development”, I note, first of all, that the bill builds on the 2003 act, which gave communities in crofting areas a compulsory purchase power and those in the rest of Scotland a pre-emptive right to buy. Although the bill will improve those powers, it will also introduce a new compulsory purchase power for communities to buy land that is neglected and abandoned, wherever they might be.
Although that represents another important and progressive step on Scotland's land reform journey, it is clear from the consultation and the committee's considerable work on the matter that the proposal is narrower in scope than what the committee was seeking. Amendment 34 would allow a community body to apply to purchase land under the new right-to-buy provisions on the ground that the land is "in substantial need of sustainable development", and ministers would not need to be satisfied that the land is

"wholly or mainly abandoned or neglected".

I have considered amendment 58 extremely carefully and have listened to the committee’s views and concerns. As I explained when I gave evidence to the committee, any amendment to the bill needs to fall within the competence of the Scottish Parliament, and that includes ensuring that the amendment complies with the European convention on human rights. A right to buy engages the right in ECHR to “peaceful enjoyment of ... possessions”, because the legislation provides for a scheme under which an owner of land can be required to sell that land without their consent. A right to buy will be compatible with ECHR if it is in accordance with law and if it pursues a legitimate aim in a proportionate way.

The phrase “in accordance with law” means that legislation must be clearly stated, foreseeable in its effects and not arbitrary. The test that land must be provides all owners of land with foreseeability, as it allows those who are actively managing their land in a sustainable manner to continue to do so without concerns that they might face unnecessary processes to purchase their land when there is no intention on their part to sell it.

"wholly or mainly abandoned or neglected"

Having taken further legal advice, I consider that amendment 34 would be outwith the competence of the Scottish Parliament. In allowing a community body to make an application under the new right to buy on the ground that the land is

"in substantial need of sustainable development", it does not meet the requirement that legislation be clearly stated, be foreseeable in its effect and not operate in an arbitrary manner. Unlike the requirement that land be neglected or abandoned, a requirement for the land to be

"in substantial need of sustainable development"

is not of itself sufficiently precise to provide an owner of land with sufficient foreseeability and predictability as to when the right to buy may be triggered.

The Scottish Government made it clear in its stage 1 response to the committee that we understand the committee’s concerns and would actively consider whether we could extend the description of land to which the right to buy applies beyond neglected and abandoned land to other problem land. Although the Scottish Government accepts in principle the committee’s desire to broaden the scope, it remains concerned that the proposal and the words that have been chosen are so broad that they would take section 48 outwith the Parliament’s competence. For that reason, the Government cannot support amendment 34.

At the same time, the Government is extremely keen to try to find a solution that broadens out the reference to neglected and abandoned land to add a third test or leg to the proposal and which offers a better and much stronger definition of “eligible land”. I am extremely keen about, and am absolutely committed to, working with the committee prior to stage 3 to craft such a solution. I hope that the committee accepts my offer and will work with the Government to look for a suitable solution. On that basis, I ask Michael Russell not to move amendment 34.

On amendment 59, section 97C(2) of the bill states:

“In determining whether land is eligible, Ministers must have regard to prescribed matters.”

Amendment 59 seeks to avoid confusion by confirming that ministers are not to consider whether each and every holding of land in Scotland is “eligible land”, regardless of whether or not an application has been made, and are to consider only whether land is eligible if and when that land is the subject of an application under proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act.

With regard to amendment 89, proposed new section 97C(2) of the 2003 act will require ministers to make regulations that set out matters that ministers “must have regard to” in determining whether land is wholly or mainly neglected or abandoned for the purposes of the new right to buy neglected and abandoned land. Amendment 89 seeks to provide that, before making such regulations, ministers are required to

or bodies

“as they consider appropriate”.

The amendment also requires that the consultation take place within a year and a day of proposed new section 97C(2) coming into force.

I assure the committee that stakeholder engagement is an essential part of the regulation-making process and that stakeholders and appropriate persons will, as has already been the case, be consulted as draft regulations are prepared. I therefore do not consider it necessary to put in the bill a requirement to consult before making draft regulations, or an associated timescale for consultation. Indeed, stakeholders were consulted on the draft regulations setting out matters that ministers must have regard to in determining whether land is eligible land before the draft regulations were sent to the committee in February. With that assurance, I ask Sarah Boyack not to move amendment 89.

On amendments 60 and 61, the definition of eligible land for the purposes of proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act does not include land on which there is a building or other structure that is an individual’s home unless the building or structure falls within such a class or classes as may be prescribed in regulations. Amendment 60 seeks to remove the regulation-making powers to prescribe homes that are to be exceptions to the general exclusion of homes from the definition of “eligible land”.

Last September, the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee queried the requirement for that additional power and, after consideration, I agree that the power is not required. The Scottish Government is clear that homes should not be subject to the community right to buy under proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act, and the bill needs to make it clear that an individual’s home, or a building that could be treated as an individual’s home, is not considered to be eligible land.

Amendment 61 seeks to give ministers the power, via regulations, to specify what classes of building or structure are an individual’s home for the purposes of proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act. At the moment, ministers can specify only the classes of building or structure that “are to be treated as” an individual’s home; in other words, ministers are allowed to set out only what kinds of buildings are to be “treated” as homes for the purposes of proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act, even if they are not homes. Moreover, the amendment allows ministers to specify in regulations what classes of building or structure are an individual’s home, and that power will be used to avoid confusion about what is meant by the reference to “an individual’s home” for the purposes of the right to buy under proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act.

On amendment 54, land that is classed as bona vacantia or ultimus haeres is currently excluded from the definition of “eligible land” by virtue of section 97C(3)(e) of proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act. Bona vacantia is ownerless property that by law passes to the Crown, and ultimus haeres is land that belonged to a deceased person for whom no spouse, partner or living blood relative can be traced. Amendment 54 seeks to remove bona vacantia and ultimus haeres land from the list of such excluded land and to allow it to be subject to proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act.

Land that is classed as bona vacantia and ultimus haeres is claimed by the Crown through the Queen’s and Lord Treasurer’s Remembrancer, whose purpose is to seek to realise the value of any land that falls to the Crown as bona vacantia or ultimus haeres. The remembrancer seeks to resolve the Crown interest in such land either by a disposal, where there is interest in the land, or a notice of disclaimer in which the remembrancer’s interest in the land is declared—for example where there is no reasonable prospect of a disposal proceeding.

There are good reasons why bona vacantia and ultimus haeres land is excluded from the definition of eligible land. The remembrancer does not to seek to retain land in order to allow time for an acquisition of the land to be completed under part 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. It is not in the remembrancer’s interest to do so as no disposal income would be generated and the remembrancer is not resourced to manage such land on an on-going or long-term basis. The remembrancer also seeks to avoid retaining land because of the risks of liabilities arising in relation to it. It follows from the sources of land falling to the Crown as bona vacantia that it can often be in a poor condition, bringing with it the risk of future problems if the Crown interest in it is not resolved.

In circumstances in which land has fallen to the Crown as bona vacantia or ultimus haeres land, the community body has the option of contacting the remembrancer with a view to acquiring the land. There would, in such circumstances, be no need to rely on the proposed new part 3A process.

For those reasons, I ask Sarah Boyack not to move amendment 54.

Amendment 35 seeks to change the title of the online register on which an application form and all documentation relating to an application under proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act will be maintained. The register is maintained by the keeper of the registers of Scotland in a manner and form that is convenient for public inspection. The amendment seeks to amend the title of the register from the “Register of Community Interests in Abandoned or Neglected Land” to the “Register of Community Interests in Eligible Land”.

Proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act concerns communities’ right to buy abandoned or neglected land, and it is important that that be reflected in the title of the register. Rejecting the amendment will ensure that the title of the register accurately reflects its purpose, and that it is appropriate and relevant to the information relating to abandoned and neglected land that it contains. For that reason, I ask Michael Russell not to move amendment 35.

On amendment 36, section 97G(6)(b) of proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act requires a part 3A community body to give reasons why it considers that the land that is subject to its application is "wholly or mainly abandoned or neglected".

Michael Russell has lodged amendment 34, which is linked to amendment 36. It seeks to expand the definition of eligible land for the purposes of proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act, so that it includes land that is "otherwise in substantial need of sustainable development". Amendment 36 is a consequential amendment to change the reference to "wholly or mainly abandoned or neglected" land in section 97G(6)(b) to a reference to "eligible land". As I have asked Mr Russell not to move amendment 34, I also ask him not to move amendment 36.

Amendment 37 is also linked to amendment 34. The purpose of amendment 37 is to obtain the landowner's views on whether they consider that the land is "eligible", rather than whether the land is "wholly or mainly abandoned or neglected".

That would be consequential to amendment 34. Again, as I have asked Mr Russell not to move amendment 34, I also ask him not to move amendment 37, for the reasons that I have set out already.

Amendment 97 is linked to amendment 89. It seeks to ensure that consultation on the draft regulations that are to be made under proposed new section 97C(2) of the 2003 act takes place within a year and a day of the bill's receiving royal assent.

I assure Sarah Boyack that, as I said, stakeholder engagement is an absolutely essential part of the regulation-making process, and that stakeholders and appropriate persons will be consulted as any draft regulations are prepared. For those reasons, it is not necessary to place in the bill a requirement for consultation before making draft regulations or an associated timescale for consultation. I therefore ask Sarah Boyack not to move amendment 97.

I move amendment 58.

Michael Russell (Argyll and Bute) (SNP): Most people would agree that section 48 is at the heart of the part of the bill that we are considering. I will address my amendments and the minister's comments together.

The key issue that the bill presents is how we enable and assist—indeed, empower—communities to take possession of land for their use. That is not a judgment on other landlords; it is about treating land as an asset and a resource, the possession and use of which can enrich, enable and empower communities. If we make the process difficult in any way, we run the risk of not achieving the bill's central objectives.

We know from the experience of the operation of land reform legislation in Scotland that, despite the strong good intentions that lay behind it and the Parliament's strong support, there have been difficulties for communities in taking possession of land. The process is an incremental one that involves finding out what works and ensuring that that is in legislation so that it may work well.

My problem with leaving the bill as it stands is that the terms “abandoned” and “neglected” as they are presented are in many people's view—not simply mine—not sufficient to achieve the bill's objectives. The minister argued cogently that there are difficulties in the wording of amendment 34 and that the phrase "in ... need of sustainable development" is too vague. I think that she said that a better and stronger definition is needed.

The minister also said that terms should not be subjective. However, I believe that the term "neglected" as presented in the bill is subjective. It is perfectly possible to look at a piece of land in many different ways. For example, someone might say that a piece of land has been subject to benign neglect. Landowners who do not wish the bill to operate—there are some—will undoubtedly use the law to say that land that appears to be abandoned or neglected is not abandoned or neglected. As the committee heard in evidence, they will also use the legal definitions of abandoned and neglected as a barrier to allowing land to be bought.

The minister referred to a third leg. There needs to be something in addition that buttresses the terms “abandoned” and “neglected” in a way that fulfills the bill's intention.

My view, which I know is the view of others, is that the term “sustainable development” is clear and has been used before in legal proceedings—for example, it was used in the Pairc judgment. We should insist that the term becomes more common in legal usage. If we add the phrase "in ... need of sustainable development",

Michael Russell (Argyll and Bute) (SNP): Most people would agree that section 48 is at the
when we judge whether a piece of land is abandoned or neglected, we will be able to see much more clearly what a community might be entitled to do.

However, if there is a difficulty with the term “sustainable development”, we need to find another term that will allow proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act to operate effectively. As I understand it, the Government has moved from its position at the start of the process to the position that the minister articulated, which is that the Government wishes to work with the committee to address the issue that we all raised in the stage 1 report of needing to find the third leg—the other term that will allow us to move forward.

If the minister confirms in summing up that that is the case and that the Government fully accepts that a third leg is required and will work with the committee, I will be willing, with some reluctance, not to move amendments 34 to 37 at this stage. As a new member of the committee and as a recently returned back bencher, I am mindful that it gets harder to amend bills the longer the process continues and that, when we get to stage 3, it becomes considerably harder. We are proceeding very much on trust, but I very much trust the minister to do what she says.

Sarah Boyack will speak to her amendments, but there was a proposal to remove the terms “abandoned” and “neglected” entirely from the bill. I can understand that but, the more I look at the bill, the more I think that that would create additional confusion, because we would be using the terms in one part of Scotland and not in another part, which would create problems for communities.

Provided that I am assured that the Government absolutely accepts that the terms are not yet fully and properly expressed and that, after consultation with the committee, there will be a stage 3 amendment to strengthen the bill and allow communities to use the bill with the third leg in place, I will be prepared not to move my amendments. I say that reluctantly, because my objectives and those of the committee are exactly the same as the Government’s—we want to do everything possible to empower communities, but the provisions that we are discussing do not yet achieve that.

Sarah Boyack (Lothian) (Lab): I look forward to hearing the minister’s wind-up speech. I agree with Mike Russell that this debate is key to the whole bill. I will speak about amendment 89, which is minor, before moving on to amendment 54 and making general comments.

The regulations that follow on from the bill will be crucial. The debates that we have had throughout the process have been about what is in the bill and the regulations that will follow from that. The combination of those will be the test of whether the bill makes it possible for communities to exercise the rights that the Government intends for them. Part of the issue is the commitment to ensuring that people are properly consulted, which is an easy thing to agree about, but a commitment must also be made on timescales.

Proposed new section 97C(2) of the 2003 act requires ministers to make regulations setting out the factors that they must have regard to in deciding whether land is, in their opinion, eligible under part 3. Amendment 89, along with consequential amendment 97, would require ministers to consult on the regulations within a year of the bill receiving royal assent. I have suggested a timescale because we need to get on with the bill. Once we have passed the detail in the bill, it is important that the next stage is followed through swiftly because, until that happens, communities will feel unsure and there will be uncertainty.

Today’s debate about eligible land is a key aspect of our consideration of the bill. The debates that will follow about how the eligibility of land will be judged, and the minister setting out at more length how she sees that happening in practice, will be crucial. For example, we are only now seeing the public duty from the Climate Change (Scotland) Act 2009 coming into effect.

The commitment that I am looking for is not just from the minister but from the whole Government system. Having been a minister, I echo Mike Russell’s point that being a minister is about getting everybody and all the resources aligned, which is why I am asking for a commitment not just from the minister but from the whole system.

Amendment 54 is about the exemption of certain types of Crown land. New section 97C(3) of the 2003 act makes provision for land that is exempted from part 3A, and amendment 54 would remove paragraph (e), which exempts “land which is owned or occupied by the Crown by virtue of its having vested as bona vacantia in the Crown, or its having fallen to the Crown as ultimus haeres”.

I have listened to the minister and I will probably want to go away and read the Official Report. It was not clear why some categories of Crown land are exempted in proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act when other Crown land is included by virtue of section 100(2) of that act and there is not a similar exemption from the definition of eligible crofting land in part 3. I have listened to what the minister said and I want to think about her reflection on why the exemption is at all necessary; she gave reasons, but I want to think about them further.
I have some comments on amendments 34 and 35, which Mike Russell lodged. I have problems with the bill referring only to “wholly ... abandoned or neglected” land. I have problems with what is meant according to the dictionary definition. The last time she came to speak to us, the minister said that she is using the normal understanding of the words and that we should look them up in a dictionary.

I have concerns about the situation in urban and rural settings. The Government’s intentions that led to the bill might be frustrated by the interpretation of neglected and abandoned land if that is not properly defined. I have concerns about how the minister suggested that it would be defined.

The 2003 act was all about furthering sustainable development; the bill is about removing barriers to sustainable development. The policy memorandum to the bill is absolutely clear that

“The Scottish Government considers that there is a general public interest in removing barriers to sustainable development of land by enabling community bodies to purchase neglected and abandoned land.”

I agree with that ambition, but we have to make that a real outcome of the bill. That is why it is important to include the term “sustainable development”. It is a legally defined and accepted term, as Mike Russell said. It appears in environment legislation and planning legislation and it is internationally accepted. Including that is important because the land does not need to be neglected or abandoned. The idea of benign neglect is interesting. The issue is all about perception.

It is questionable, for example, whether the Eigg buyout would have met the requirements in the bill. I also have in mind the Calton test from Glasgow. I visited the east end of Glasgow, where there is land that has been lying for years with no proposals to do anything with it, which causes blight to the community. For how long does land have to be in a neglected or abandoned state before it counts under the minister’s definition in the bill?

In an urban context, we can take for example a piece of land for which a planning proposal— which might be completely against the local plan policy—is made regularly but has no chance of success. Would that land be accepted as being neglected or abandoned, given that, even though the owner has some ambition for it, there is no prospect of that being given planning permission?

The point extends to buildings. There is the Odeon test from the Edinburgh south side, where that building has been vacant for a decade. The owners have ambitions for the site, but there is no prospect of their being given planning permission.

As the bill stands, it is not clear to me how communities will be able to exercise the right to buy. It is good to have the minister’s commitment, which I very much welcome, that she is prepared to look at the issue further. Everybody round the table agrees with the objectives in the policy memorandum; the issue is about making sure that they are delivered.

The minister referred to the ECHR requirements. It is really important that this is tested properly. The test that she mentioned was that the legislation is clear and is not arbitrary—it is about foreseeability and predictability. If we look at planning legislation or the secondary legislation on antisocial behaviour that we have passed, we can see that legislation means that landowners do not have unlimited or unrestricted rights to enjoy their property—their right to enjoy their property is already limited by legislation. This needs to be pinned down and teased out.

I am very supportive of the commitment that the minister has given to look at this further. The challenge is that, once we have got through stage 2, the clock really starts ticking. The opportunity that we will have to debate the subject over the next two or three weeks or over the recess is important. I ask the minister to say how she will take matters forward. She has given a good commitment. We all agree that this is the key issue in the bill. It is about not just environmental sustainability but the social and economic impacts of neglected and abandoned land. We are frustrated that the terms as they appear in the bill will take us back rather than move us forward, in both urban and rural contexts.

I have spoken at more length than I normally would, convener, but this is such an important issue for the bill that I was keen to state our position and draw out how the minister will deliver her good commitment to making sure that we can make this the bill that we all want it to be during a difficult stage that is usually just a rush towards stage 3, because that would help us all.

Alex Fergusson (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con): I will be brief. I absolutely agree with Mike Russell and Sarah Boyack that section 48 is the core of the bill. It is also important to put it on the record that it is the only area of the bill on which there was not unanimous agreement in the committee’s stage 1 report.

When the minister gave evidence, I asked her to confirm what the policy memorandum states—that the powers under section 48 would be used only as a last resort—and, if I recall correctly, she confirmed that that is the case. I can quite happily support that in principle.

What concerns me about Mike Russell’s amendment 34—although I understand that he is likely not to move it at this stage—is that I do not believe that it provides the clarity that the bill requires. Good law is clear, unambiguous and properly defined, and I am concerned that his amendment would take us into areas that require interpretation and definition. A definition of sustainable development is a bit like beauty—sometimes it is in the eye of the beholder and very much open to interpretation. That makes for bad law.

I am happy to welcome the minister’s commitment to go away and look at the matter and try to provide some clarity, because section 48 of the bill really needs it. However, I hope that the Government will stick to its intention that the powers under proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act will be used only as a last resort.

I will make a brief comment on Sarah Boyack’s amendment 54, on the QLTR. I listened carefully to what the minister said about that. I have a situation in my constituency at the moment, of which the minister will be well aware, and it seems to me that the fact that the land has now fallen into not the ownership but the caretakership—if there is such a word—of the QLTR is helping the process of community purchase of the asset. The process would have been much longer and more drawn out if that had not been the case. I know that Sarah Boyack said that she would go away and think about the issue, but that is just one example of where the situation helps rather than hinders the process of community empowerment. I will leave it at that.

Claudia Beamish (South Scotland) (Lab): Good morning, minister. I seek clarification in relation to amendment 60. Will there be a definition, if not in the bill then in regulations, of the amount of land that can surround a home? That might need clarification.

Graeme Dey (Angus South) (SNP): I support Sarah Boyack’s concluding comments, in which she sought an understanding from the minister as to how in practice the minister and the committee will be able to work together to find an appropriate third leg. It would be useful to understand that. Given the consideration that the minister has already given the issue, and as she is aware of the committee’s views, realistically, how optimistic is she that we can between us come up with a third leg that ensures that the bill works as we all want it to work in practice?

The Convener: I will make a couple of comments. First, on a point that was raised about making land available, this is a process and not an event, as we know. I understand that the forthcoming land reform bill might look at aspects of compulsory purchase. Will you confirm that, minister? That might well be a short cut in some cases towards achieving some of the ends that we are interested in.

Secondly, you suggested that Michael Russell’s amendment 34 might be ultra vires—in other words, that it is outwith the Scottish Parliament’s competence. Will you explain that a little further, please? It is important for members to grasp why, if the amendment was pressed, it might be illegal. We need to know something of that.

Aileen McLeod: I will try to answer the points that committee members have raised and I will start with amendment 34. I recognise the case that the committee has put forward, and we are continuing to explore every avenue and every option within the confines of the law.

I give members my absolute commitment that I will sit down with the committee and my officials ahead of stage 3. I have asked my private office to have that discussion with me so that, if the committee decides to go down that route, we can get a date in the diary for us all to sit down, work through the bill and try to find a solution that meets the policy objectives that we all want to achieve and delivers them in practice. I hope that that will enable us to lodge appropriate amendments at stage 3.

I am absolutely committed to working with the committee and our stakeholders to achieve greater clarity. We can find better ways of meeting the objectives that we are pursuing in the bill, and I am committed to doing that by sitting down with the committee together with my officials to see what solutions we can find.

On Graeme Dey’s point, I am optimistic that we can find some agreement. It might not be easy, because the issue is complex, but you have my commitment that I am keen to ensure that committee members can sit down and discuss the bill with me and my officials.

On amendments 89 and 97, I reassure Sarah Boyack that our stakeholders will be engaged as an essential part of the process. We will ensure that stakeholders are consulted on the draft regulations, and I commit to engaging with our stakeholders at the earliest possible opportunity.

On amendment 54, the QLTR is exempted because the process is such that the QLTR does not hold on to land for any length of time; it seeks to release land as quickly as possible. If amendment 54 were agreed to, it would delay that process. Communities can approach the QLTR to see whether they can get land, and I agree with the points that Mr Fergusson made.
Claudia Beamish made points about amendment 60. We can certainly consider setting out an amount of land in regulations, along with considering other regulations.

On the convener’s point about amendment 34, I confirm that the proposal would be outwith the Parliament’s competence, as it would not be in accordance with the law. That is because the amendment is not clearly enough stated for its effects to be foreseeable. The landowner could not have sufficient foreseeability as to when the right to buy would apply.

Amendment 58 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 34, in the name of Michael Russell, has already been debated with amendment 58.

Michael Russell: On the basis of the minister’s reassurances, I will not move amendment 34.

Amendment 34 not moved.

Amendment 59 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 89, in the name of Sarah Boyack, has already been debated with amendment 58.

Sarah Boyack: I would like to move amendment 89, because it is not just about consultation with interested parties; for me, it is also a timescale issue. I would hope that, if a consultation on regulations were held within the year, we would have both the same minister and the same bill team. The expertise that we have at this point needs to be followed through, and the commitments need to be followed through to the regulations. I am keen to push my amendment, so that the consultation can be done and the regulations can be introduced within the year.

Amendment 89 moved—[Sarah Boyack].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 89 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)

Against
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 89 disagreed to.

10:45

Amendment 60 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Amendment 54 not moved.

Amendment 61 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

The Convener: We move to group 2, which is on ways in which proposed new part 3A community bodies may be constituted et cetera. Amendment 62, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 63 to 72 and 88.

Aileen McLeod: During consultation on the bill, respondents have been clear about the need for ministers to offer a wider range of entities that a community body could use. Stakeholders in particular highlighted Scottish charitable incorporated organisations, or SCIOs, and community benefit companies, or bencoms, as being suitable.

At the moment, the right to register an interest in property and the community right to buy in proposed new part 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 can be exercised only by “community bodies”. The bill as introduced sets out the types of legal entities that members of the community may form to be a “community body”. The amendments in this group will add SCIOs and bencoms to the types of legal body that are eligible to be part 3A community bodies under proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act, and will align that part with parts 2 and 3 of the 2003 act.

Amendments 62 and 65 specifically include community benefit societies and SCIOs as eligible legal bodies for the purposes of proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act. Their effect is that community bodies will be able to take the form of a company limited by guarantee, a community benefit society or a SCIO when they form their part 3A community body. That will provide communities with more flexibility to select the type of body that best meets their requirements.

The amendments will mean that the registered rules of a community benefit society and the constitution of a Scottish charitable incorporated organisation must satisfy certain requirements in order for a body to be a community body for the purposes of the community right to buy. Those requirements are similar to those that are currently in place for companies limited by guarantee. The amendments will have a similar effect to the amendments that the committee agreed to last week in relation to parts 2 and 3 of the 2003 act.

Amendment 65 seeks to insert new subsection (1B) into proposed new section 97D of the 2003 act. Paragraph (g) of that new subsection includes a provision that,

“on the request of any person for a copy of the minutes of a meeting of the SCIO, the SCIO must, if the request is reasonable, give the person within 28 days of the request a copy of those minutes”.

The right would be open to a wide range of interested parties. Among the more obvious ones would be the owner of the land in question, members of the community or even other community bodies that were looking for examples of good practice.

As far as what would be considered a reasonable request is concerned, I would expect community bodies making such a decision to base it on common sense. If the request were for the minutes of an annual general meeting, for example, that would be perfectly reasonable, but if it were for the minutes of a meeting that was held, say, 15 years ago or for the minutes of all meetings over the previous 10 years, that would be another matter entirely. Public bodies must make similar considerations in relation to freedom of information requests, although community bodies are not subject to the freedom of information legislation.

Amendment 65 also provides some measure of protection for the community body against unreasonable requests by including a provision that, where a request is made, the community body “may withhold information that is contained in the minutes”.

Information that could be withheld could be personal information or anything—either personal or commercial—that was provided in confidence. Again, we would expect community bodies to base their decisions on factors that are similar in nature to those that are set out in freedom of information legislation, at least in terms of what would be reasonable to withhold.

Amendment 65 also includes a provision that “any surplus funds or assets of the society are to be applied for the benefit of the community.”

It would be for the community body to decide how to use those surplus funds; the provision is simply there to ensure that any such surplus funds are, in keeping with the bill’s policy aims, used solely for the benefit of the community.

I turn to amendments 63 and 64. At present, proposed new section 97D(1) of the 2003 act sets out that a part 3A community body must be a company limited by guarantee that meets certain requirements. Amendment 63 seeks to amend that list of requirements. The bill as introduced states that the articles of association of a community body must provide that the body has at least 20 members, and amendment 63 seeks to reduce the minimum number of members to 10. The intention is to address the difficulties, as highlighted by the committee, that some smaller or remote communities may experience in finding enough members to form the community body.

Amendment 64 also seeks to amend the list of requirements of the articles of association of a community body. Currently, the requirement is that the articles must provide that the majority of members of a community body must be members of the community. The amendment seeks to change that so that the articles must provide that three quarters of the members of the community body are members of the community. That is to ensure that, even in relation to community bodies in which the number of members is small, the interests of the local community are protected. I note that, last week, the committee agreed to similar amendments in relation to community bodies under part 2 of the 2003 act, and to crofting community bodies under part 3.

Amendment 66 will allow ministers to disapply the requirement for a company limited by guarantee, and a community benefit society or Scottish charitable incorporated organisation, as inserted by the amendments in this group, to have no fewer than 10 members if ministers think that that is in the public interest.

Amendment 67 will renumber a subsection following the insertion of the additional types of legal body. Amendment 68 will insert a power to enable ministers to amend at a future date the subsections listing the types of legal entities that communities can use to form part 3A community bodies. The amendment will enable ministers to add to the types of legal entities that communities may use to form community bodies under proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act.

Amendment 69 is a consequential amendment that specifies how a community benefit society and Scottish charitable incorporated organisation, in addition to a company limited by guarantee, will define their community by reference to “a postcode unit or postcode units or a prescribed type of area”.

Amendment 70 is a consequential amendment following the insertion of community benefit societies and Scottish charitable incorporated organisations as types of body that communities can use to form a community body. It will add definitions of “community benefit society”, “registered rules” and “Scottish charitable incorporated organisation” to the bill.

I turn to amendment 71. The bill as introduced does not permit a part 3A community body to modify its memorandum or articles of association without ministers’ consent in writing, as long as the land or any part of it remains in its ownership.
Amendment 71 will apply that prohibition to a Scottish charitable incorporated organisation’s constitution and a community benefit society’s registered rules, following the inclusion of those two types of legal body as eligible bodies for the purposes of proposed new part 3A.

Amendment 72 is a technical change that will add the omitted word “body” after “community” in new section 97E(3) of the 2003 act, as inserted by section 48 of the bill. Amendment 88 is linked to amendment 68 and will subject the ministerial powers inserted by amendment 68 to the affirmative procedure.

I move amendment 62.

Claudia Beamish: I support all the amendments in the group. It is welcome that SCIOs and bencoms are to be included in the bill, and it is right that the eligibility requirements are very carefully defined so that everyone knows where they are. The extension of ministerial discretion over numbers provides a useful flexibility. It is important that, while land bought under proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act remains in the ownership of a community body, that community body cannot change its rules without ministerial permission. That will give reassurance to communities and the wider public. The broadening of the range of bodies, with the clarification on membership numbers and a range of other issues, including reasonable transparency, is important.

Aileen McLeod: I thank Claudia Beamish for her support. The key purpose of this group of amendments is to ensure that we protect our smaller communities. We want to ensure that smaller communities are not disadvantaged if they are unable to identify 20 members. By proposing the decrease in the number of members, we ensure that the interests of such communities are protected.

Amendment 62 agreed to.

Amendments 63 to 72 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Amendments 35 and 36 not moved.

The Convener: The next group is on applications for consent to buy under proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act: information to be included in application and criteria for consent. Amendment 73 is grouped with amendments 74, 75, 45, 90 and 76.

Aileen McLeod: The mapping requirements that are proposed in part 3A are similar to the mapping requirements in part 3 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 on the crofting community right to buy. I propose the group of amendments to replace the proposed mapping requirements in part 3A, taking account of stakeholder feedback in relation to the mapping requirements in part 3 of the 2003 act, and to incorporate the proposed amendments in part 3A of the 2003 act.

Currently, the application form that ministers must prescribe requires the community body to identify all rights and interests in the subjects of the application. Those rights and interests are “sewers, pipes, lines, watercourses or other conduits and fences, dykes, ditches or other boundaries in or on the land ... known to the applicant body or the existence of which it is, on reasonably diligent inquiry, capable of ascertaining”.

Those requirements are widely recognised as likely to be particularly onerous and complex for a community body.

We propose the amendments because we recognise that the current mapping requirements are particularly complex. Ministers will still set out the required information for the application in regulations, but there will no longer be a requirement to include those interests that I mentioned as being considered particularly difficult to identify.

The purpose of amendment 73 is to clarify that the part 3A community body is required to include in the application all rights and interests known to the part 3A community body.

Amendment 74 removes the provision requiring a part 3A community body to specify “all sewers, pipes, lines, watercourses etc.” and simplifies the mapping requirements to a more reasonable level, in the same way as it does for part 3.

Amendment 75 removes another particularly onerous provision, which requires a part 3A community body to detail how its “proposed use, development and management of the land” would affect any of the sewers, pipes, lines, watercourses, fences, boundaries and so on.

Section 97H sets out the matters about which ministers have to be satisfied before they can grant consent to an application. Section 97H(c) provides that, in order to approve an application, ministers must be satisfied that, if the owner of the land were to remain as its owner, that ownership would be inconsistent with “furthering the achievement of sustainable development in relation to the land”.

The purpose of amendment 45 is to introduce a different standard of test of which ministers must be satisfied in order to approve the application. The test that is proposed in the amendment is that ministers must refuse consent unless they are satisfied that it is unlikely that the owner’s continuing ownership would further the achievement of sustainable development in relation to the land.

Section 97G(6) states that the part 3A community body must demonstrate in its application that its proposals are “compatible with furthering the achievement of sustainable development”.

When considering section 97H(c), ministers must satisfy themselves that, if the land were to remain with its current owner, “that ownership would be inconsistent with furthering the achievement of sustainable development in relation to the land”.

That is not something that the part 3A community body is required to demonstrate. Ministers will come to a decision based on all the facts and circumstances.

Of course, the part 3A community body has the option to demonstrate in its application that it is in the public interest for the application to be approved because the current ownership would not be consistent with the sustainable development of the land, but that is not a requirement. Equally, it would be open to the landowner to make representations to the effect that their continued ownership would be consistent with the sustainable development of the land.

In essence, the purpose of section 97H(c) is to ensure that the application is not approved in cases where the current owner has demonstrated that his continued ownership of the land would further the achievement of sustainable development of the land, because if that is the case, the policy objectives of the bill will already have been met.

Amendment 45 seeks to achieve a similar goal. Having listened very carefully to the view of the committee, I am very happy to support the amendment. In deciding whether to consent to the exercise of the right to buy, ministers will have to act reasonably and that will include taking account of all relevant information, including any plans that the landowner has for the land. The change that is made by amendment 45 will not affect that.

The community body is required to accurately identify the current owner of the land in a part 3A application in order for the application to be valid. If the application does not accurately identify the owner, ministers are bound to reject it. Amendment 90 proposes the removal of the requirement for the community body to accurately identify the current owner. The community body would instead be required to have exercised all reasonable diligence in seeking to identify the owner, although the community body is not able to provide an accurate identification of the landowner in the application.

The effect of amendment 90, in circumstances where a part 3A application had been approved without an owner being identified, would be to require title to land to be transferred to a community body even though the current landowner is unknown. First, that amendment could deny landowners the opportunity to comment on the application to buy their land and thus make it difficult for ministers to come to a fair decision about the application.

Further, in circumstances where a community body has tried and failed to identify the owner, the community body has the option of contacting the Queen’s and Lord Treasurer’s Remembrancer to see whether the land has been deemed bona vacantia. If so, the body could take steps to acquire the land when the land is disposed of by the QLTR. For those reasons, I ask Sarah Boyack not to move amendment 90.

One of the current criteria for approval of an application under part 3A is that the application accurately identifies creditors in a standard security over the land that is the subject of the application. Amendment 76 seeks to restrict that so that only creditors in a standard security with a right to sell the land must be identified, and not all creditors in a standard security.

Amendment 76 seeks to make the application process less onerous on the community body, whilst ensuring that the appropriate creditors are identified. If the amendment is approved, there will be no requirement for the community body to identify a creditor in a standard security over the land that is the subject of the application.

I move amendment 73.

Dave Thompson (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP): I will not say very much because the minister has said that she is happy to support amendment 45. I am pleased to hear that. The test that will be put in place because of amendment 45 will be much more reasonable and communities will be able to comply with it. In contrast, the previous test would have been very difficult, if not impossible.

Sarah Boyack: I welcome amendments 73, 74 and 75 because they will help to remove hurdles to community purchase. In some circumstances, it can be a huge challenge to identify the detail of sewers and pipes—that is a level of detail that is not required in relation to pursuing the option of community ownership.

If I understood correctly, the minister now accepts Dave Thompson’s amendment 45. Amendment 45 proposes a more proportionate test of ownership, rather than requiring bodies to prove that “if the owner of the land were to remain as its owner, that ownership would be inconsistent with furthering the achievement of sustainable development in relation to the land”.

Amendment 45 is an improvement to the bill and I welcome the minister’s acceptance of it.

I am disappointed that the minister does not feel able to support amendment 90, which seeks to ensure that where a community group has exercised all reasonable diligence in seeking to identify the owner, that is sufficient. The new section 97H of the 2003 act sets out that “Ministers must not consent to an application” for a part 3 community right to buy, unless they are satisfied about the matters that are listed in the section. Paragraph (d) provides that ministers must refuse consent unless they are satisfied “that the owner of the land is accurately identified in the application”.

Community Land Scotland raised concerns that that sets a high bar for part 3 community bodies to meet, given the often complex process of determining ownership. Amendment 90 would give the minister flexibility to consent to an application where the community body has exercised all reasonable diligence in seeking to identify the landowner, but has not been able to do so. What if there is a complex trail of ownership and, ultimately, the land is owned overseas and the community body cannot track that?

There is a similar provision in section 73(5)(b) of the 2003 act, in relation to applications by crofting community bodies for consent to buy croft land.
That section requires the inclusion of information regarding all

“rights and interests in the subjects of the application ... known to the applicant body or the existence of which it is, on reasonably diligent inquiry, capable of ascertaining”.

I want to tease out from the minister whether she objects to the principle or the detail of my amendment. I could understand it if the land in question was regarded as bona vacantia; in that respect, I go back to my earlier amendment 54, which I did not move. However, the real question is how much time and resource communities are expected to put into tracking down owners. There is a lack of clarity, and my amendment seeks to ensure that a community will not be frustrated in bringing forward its proposals merely because the ownership of the land is hidden or the trail of ownership is too complex for it to understand. We are not talking about bona vacantia; the land in question is owned, but a community is unable to track down the owner. That frustrates the bill’s ambition for communities to be able to exercise their right to buy in line with the bill’s aims.

I am keen for the Government to give amendment 90 proper consideration, because I think that there is a real reason why it should be accepted.

Alex Fergusson: I return to the issue of clarity that I highlighted earlier. What disturbs me about Dave Thompson’s amendment 45—and the reason why I am afraid I cannot support it—is the inclusion of the word “unlikely”, which I think takes us into the realms of cloudiness. It lacks the clarity that I believe we need. I have some difficulties with this part of the bill anyway, but I have great difficulties with the lack of clarity in the amendment. For a start, I do not know who would be called on or asked to determine whether “sustainable development … would be … furthered” by the ownership of land. Someone has to sit there and make those judgments; I assume that it would be Scottish ministers, but I am afraid that the lack of clarity that has been highlighted means that I cannot support amendment 45.

Aileen McLeod: I tried to point out in my remarks that, if agreed to, amendment 90 would require title to land to be transferred when the land was purchased, even if the current landowner were unknown. It would also deny landowners the opportunity to make representations on the application. An owner has to be identified for land to be purchased; it cannot be bought from an unknown entity. The Government is committed to completing the land register to assist us in this task, and as part of the land reform legislation we consulted on ways of improving transparency of ownership. For those reasons, I ask Sarah Boyack not to move amendment 90.

Amendment 76 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on the reimbursement of costs of holding a ballot under part 3A of the 2003 act. Amendment 77 is grouped with amendment 78.

Aileen McLeod: As introduced, the bill requires the part 3A community body to meet the expense of conducting a ballot. Amendment 78 introduces subsections (6A) and (6B) into new section 97J. They give ministers regulation-making powers, which will allow a part 3A community body, in particular prescribed circumstances, to apply to ministers to seek reimbursement of the cost of conducting the ballot. For example, one such circumstance could be if community support were demonstrated as a result of the ballot. We would develop those ideas further in discussions with stakeholders, should the bill be passed.

Amendment 77 provides that the current obligation under proposed new section 97J(6), that the part 3A community body is to meet the expenses of a ballot, is subject to the new regulation-making power inserted by amendment 78.

Amendments 77 and 78 bring part 3A into alignment with part 3 of the 2003 act, on the crofting community right to buy.

I move amendment 77.

Sarah Boyack: The minister has said that there might be circumstances in which Scottish ministers would reimburse communities for the cost of conducting a ballot. She said today that that would be the case if there had already been an indication of support in the community and the ballot merely confirmed that support. I would be interested to hear where the minister thinks that it would not be appropriate to provide financial support for a ballot. In what circumstances can she conceive of that happening?

Where crofting communities already have buy-in to a proposal and have considered the community support to satisfy the legislation, I would expect the community to be given support automatically. I cannot see why there is a set of criteria given that we do not really know why it would not be appropriate and why a community might not automatically get the cost of the ballot reimbursed. It would be much clearer to allow communities to have the finance to conduct a ballot automatically. I still do not see why the minister would not do that for them.

Alex Fergusson: I agree with Sarah Boyack’s issue, but for an entirely different reason. I find it very difficult to see which way to go on the matter without knowing the circumstances under which the reimbursement would apply. There could be a huge cost implication. Without knowing more of the details, I find it difficult to know where to go. It would be useful if the minister were to give us further explanation in her summing up.

The Convener: We discussed the issue last week and there was some explanation then. I look forward to the minister clarifying it again for members.

Aileen McLeod: I can say that the ballot in part 3A would be held before the application is received by the Scottish Government, so at that point we would not know anything about the community. An example of the circumstances that I was referring to might be that there is a protest group that wishes to delay a particular sale or development and all that it would have to do would be to say that it was holding a ballot, which the Scottish Government would then have to run and pay for, even if the protest group knew that it did not have the support of the majority of the community.

Amendment 77 agreed to.

Amendment 78 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.
The Convener: The next group is on the effect of ministers’ decisions on the right to buy under part 3A of the 2003 act. Amendment 79 is grouped with amendments 80 to 85.

Aileen McLeod: Amendments 79 to 85 address the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee’s concerns regarding the wording of the provisions in proposed new section 97N, and seek to clarify the nature of the regulation-making powers that are set out in that section. The revised wording makes it clear that the powers that will be given to ministers by section 97N are to make provision in regulations for or in connection with prohibiting, during such periods as may be specified in the regulations, specified persons from transferring or dealing with land that is the subject of a part 3A application. The regulations may specify transfers and dealings that are not prohibited; require or enable specified persons to register notices in the register of community rights in abandoned or neglected land; and, in specified circumstances, require information to be incorporated into deeds relating to the land.

I move amendment 79.

Claudia Beamish: I will be brief. I support the group of amendments, which I regard as tidying up the language of the provision. Clarity is always key.

Aileen McLeod: I thank Claudia Beamish for supporting the amendments.

Amendment 79 agreed to.

Amendments 80 to 85 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Meeting suspended.

On resuming—

The Convener: The next group of amendments is on the valuation of land under part 3A of the 2003 act: representations about appointment of valuer and valuation of land, and reasons for Lands Tribunal decisions. Amendment 91 is grouped with amendments 86 and 87.

Sarah Boyack: I am proposing amendment 91 to ensure that there is another way to deal with the issue of valuation if either of the parties is unhappy about the valuer appointed. It is quite an important issue to tease out.

New section 97S of the 2003 act sets out the procedure for a valuation of the land in respect of which a part 3A community body is exercising its right to buy. Section 97S(1) requires ministers to appoint a valuer to assess the value of that land within seven days of consenting to an application. It is not unreasonable to imagine a scenario in which one of the parties to a part 3A community right to buy might have an objection to the appropriateness of the valuer selected by ministers.

My amendment 91 would require ministers to notify the landowner and the community body of the appointment and give them the opportunity to raise any concerns. It would then be at ministers’ discretion whether to appoint a different valuer, based on the strength and nature of the objection, or to press ahead with the original valuer, providing an explanation to the objector as to why that was being done.

Amendment 91 would give more legitimacy and transparency and allow us to achieve a better outcome.

I move amendment 91.

Aileen McLeod: Amendment 91 would require ministers, within seven days of the appointment of a valuer, to invite written representations from the landowner and part 3A community body on the appointment of the valuer. The landowner and part 3A community body would then have seven days in which to respond. Ministers would have to have regard to written representations received and, within three days of the expiry of the deadline for written representations, appoint another suitably qualified valuer or confirm the appointment of the valuer and provide a written explanation of that decision to any person who submitted written representations objecting to the appointment of the valuer. That whole process could take up to 17 days, eating into the eight-week timetable for the completion of the valuation process, unless that timescale was also amended.

New section 97S(1) already requires ministers to appoint a valuer whom ministers consider “to be suitably qualified, independent and to have knowledge and experience of valuing land of a kind which is similar to the land being bought”.

Subsection (11) requires the valuation to be carried out within eight weeks of the appointment of the valuer, or such other period as ministers agree to, following an application by the valuer.

If amendment 91 were agreed to, a further amendment would be needed to ensure that the eight-week period for carrying out the valuation began only when the new valuer’s appointment was made or the original valuer’s appointment was confirmed. Amendment 91 would extend the valuation period and therefore delay the application process.

The bill as introduced requires the valuer to invite the owner of the land and the community body to make representations in writing about the value of the land. If Government amendment 86 is agreed to, the landowner and part 3A community body will have the opportunity to make counter-representations on the value of the land. The landowner will be invited to make counter-representations on the community body’s representations and vice-versa. Seeking counter-representations will allow the valuer to take all circumstances into consideration.

The valuer will take account of all representations and counter-representations received when assessing the value of the land in order to reach a fair assessment. Should the landowner or the part 3A community body dispute the valuation, the parties already have the option of appealing to the Lands Tribunal in relation to the valuation of the land.

I urge Sarah Boyack to withdraw amendment 91, on the basis that there are currently enough safeguards in place to ensure a fair valuation process.

The current provisions of proposed new part 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 require the valuer to invite the owner of the land, the tenant or the person who is entitled to the sporting interests—whichever it may be—and the community body to make representations in writing about the value of the land.

In the interests of completeness, I lodged amendment 86, which would allow for counter-representations to be made on comments that were made relating to the valuation of the land, and to allow the valuer adequate time to take those into account. The amendment seeks to allow counter-representations to be made by the owner of the land, the tenant or the person who is entitled to sporting interests, in response to representations made by the part 3A community body.

Amendment 86 also seeks to allow counter-representations to be made by the part 3A community body in response to representations made by the owner of the land, the tenant, or the person who is entitled to sporting interests. The amendment’s effect is to ensure that the valuer takes account of all parties’ views on the application and has time to do so.

The Government amendments seek to assist the valuer in reaching a fair assessment of the value of the land or interest that is the subject of the part 3A community body’s right-to-buy application.

Amendment 86 aligns the provisions of proposed new part 3A with the provisions in parts 2 and 3 of the 2003 act, as agreed by the committee last week, and I ask the committee to support it.

I move on to amendment 87. New section 97W(5) of the 2003 act, which will be inserted by section 48 of the bill, states:

“The Lands Tribunal must give reasons for its decision on an appeal under this section.”

However, currently, there is no time limit on when a written decision should be provided. With amendment 87, I propose to insert a time limit of eight weeks after the hearing of the appeal for the Lands Tribunal to issue written reasons for its decisions. That limit is proposed in order to provide the Lands Tribunal with flexibility when scheduling its cases.

In addition to inserting an eight-week time limit, the amendment also provides an option for the Lands Tribunal, if it considers that it is not reasonable to issue a written statement of reasons within the eight-week time limit, to notify the parties to the appeal of a new date by which it will issue its written reasons.

I propose amendment 87 in order to provide flexibility for the Lands Tribunal when scheduling its workload while at the same time ensuring that the parties to the appeal have a degree of certainty as to when they will receive the written statement of reasons. The amendment also provides that the validity of anything done under part 3A is not affected by failure by the Lands Tribunal to comply with these provisions.

Amendment 87 aligns proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act with the changes to parts 2 and 3 of the 2003 act that were agreed to by the committee last week, and I ask the committee to support it.

Sarah Boyack: I have listened carefully to what the minister said. I can see that amendment 86 would provide more clarity and new opportunities for the parties to reply to each other’s representations. That is a very good thing.

However, the minister did not address what would happen when either party is fundamentally not happy about the valuer, for whatever reason. I still think that this is an important new opportunity to address that situation, and the minister did not say why addressing it would not be a good thing. I would like the minister to come back between now and the stage 3 debate to clarify why amendment 91 is not an intelligent addition to the bill, as a safeguard. I will not press amendment 91 at this point.
Amendment 91, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 86 and 87 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on financial support for part 3A community bodies. Amendment 92, in the name of Sarah Boyack, is the only amendment in the group. Sarah Boyack will speak first; other members can listen carefully to see whether they wish to join in.

Sarah Boyack: At present, community bodies utilising the provisions in part 2 of the 2003 act are able to apply to the Scottish land fund, which provides practical and funding support. Funding comes from the Scottish Government and is delivered in partnership by the Big Lottery Fund and Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

My purpose in lodging amendment 92 is to ask whether that support will be replicated for part 3A community bodies and to have a discussion about that. The amendment places a requirement on the Scottish Government to adjust the application criteria for the land fund to include part 3A community bodies.

I am interested to hear the minister’s thoughts on how the operation of the land fund will be modified in light of the bill, because the bill expands the areas where communities will be able to use the community right to buy, and a key lesson from the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 was the importance of supporting communities financially to enable them to buy land. If we are expanding the scope of the legislation to cover more communities, it begs the question of how the new legislation will be implemented and what funds will be available to those communities.

I am keen to hear the minister’s comments about the principle and the detail of amendment 92. I certainly hope that she will support the principle. I hope that I have got the detail right, although that can never be guaranteed. I am also keen to hear the minister’s comments on the intention behind the amendment. I hope that she will support it and that I have at least got some of the detail right.

I move amendment 92.

Aileen McLeod: I welcome the intention behind Sarah Boyack’s amendment 92. The amendment requires ministers to adjust the application criteria that apply to any funds that are maintained by ministers and which provide financial support to community bodies for the purchase of land. That ensures that funding provision is made for both part 3A and part 2 community bodies, so that they will have the same access to funds for the acquisition of land.

Current funding would be available, via the Scottish land fund, to part 3A community bodies in the same way that funding is currently available to part 2 community bodies. The current Scottish land fund, which funds land acquisitions, runs until March 2016. We are considering how the fund will operate, and the scope of its eligibility throughout Scotland, from 2016 to 2020.

As the First Minister announced in June last year, a further £3 million has been allocated to the Scottish land fund for 2015-16, with a total of £9 million since 2012-13. We have also committed to extending the Scottish land fund until 2020. Community bodies can, of course, also seek funding from sources other than funds that are maintained by ministers.

On that basis, I ask Sarah Boyack to withdraw amendment 92.

Sarah Boyack: If I understand the minister rightly, she has said that communities already have the rights that I am intending to include in the bill. She has made that commitment on the record—I will seek clarity that my understanding is correct after the meeting. For that reason, I will not press amendment 92. However, I reserve the right to bring an amendment back if my understanding of that commitment is in any way not 100 per cent right.

Amendment 92, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 48, as amended, agreed to.

After section 48

The Convener: The next group is on persistently abandoned and neglected land: compulsory sale order. Amendment 93, in the name of Sarah Boyack, is the only amendment in the group.

Sarah Boyack: The package of changes that we are debating should include amendment 93, because it was one of the recommendations of the land reform review group’s final report. When we debated the Scottish Government consultation on the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill many months ago, the then Minister for Local Government and Planning, Derek Mackay, said that he would address extending local authorities’ compulsory purchase powers. I was keen for the Scottish Government to do that, but I do not see it in the bill.

I want to address the gap in respect of the potential role of local authorities as the key democratic and civic players with the capacity to bring land back into use for public benefit and to assist and empower community groups to identify new and better uses for that land. That is especially important in an urban context, where land can lie abandoned or neglected for years and become a blight on the community, thereby frustrating social and economic progress.

Amendment 93 would introduce a new part 3B to the 2003 act, to address “persistently abandoned or neglected land”, through the introduction of compulsory sale orders. Proposed new section 97ZB will introduce a requirement for local authorities to establish and maintain an abandoned land register. Subsection (5) sets out that “Land is eligible to be included in an abandoned land register if in the opinion of the local authority it ... has been abandoned or neglected for a continuous period of at least 3 years” and it “may be in the public interest for the land to be subject to a compulsory sale order under section 97ZD.”

Land that is excluded from proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act’s provisions on the community right to buy abandoned or neglected land will also be excluded from proposed new part 3B. Proposed new section 97B(4) provides that “Land may be included on the abandoned land register ... at the initiative of the local authority, or ... on an application by a community body.”

Under subsection (6), the local authority is required to send notice to the land owner and any creditor and to invite representations, although, under subsection (7), that it is not required if the individuals cannot be identified. The local authority must notify its decision on whether land is to be included in the abandoned land register to owners, creditors and the community body, as set out in subsection (9), and make arrangements for those parties to apply for a review of the decision under subsection (10).

Proposed new section 97B(13) of the 2003 act provides that the local authority must make its abandoned land register available for inspection in person and online. Subsection (14) provides ministers with the power to make regulations on further provisions in relation to abandoned land registers, as they see fit.

Proposed new section 97ZC of the 2003 act states that “a local authority must have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers in relation to the duties” that will be imposed by section 97ZB.

Proposed new section 97ZD of the 2003 act will introduce compulsory sale orders so that where “land has been included on an abandoned land register for a continuous period of at least 3 years, the local authority must, if requested to do so by a community body,” issue a compulsory sale order, requiring the owner to offer the land for sale through a public auction. That public auction must take place within six months of the order being issued. Under subsections (2) to (5), after that period, if certain conditions are met, the local authority “must offer the land for sale at a public auction as soon as practicable”.

Where land is put up for sale at a public auction and the land is not sold, no further application for a compulsory sale order may be made for at least three years from the date of auction. Where land has been purchased following a compulsory sale order, the owners have three years to at least commence work towards appropriate development, or the local authority may acquire the land for itself.

Proposed new section 97ZF of the 2003 act makes provision for ministers to make further provisions by regulations, as they see fit, in connection with the powers of the part.

Amendment 93 is based on recommendations from the land reform review group’s final report. There is a gap in the proposed legislation that needs to be filled. I am concerned that land is blighted year on year. The amendment would improve the capacity to deliver on the objectives that have been set out in the policy memorandum by ministers. I hope that the minister will look favourably on the proposals that I have made.

I move amendment 93.

Aileen McLeod: The purpose of amendment 93 is to require each local authority to establish and maintain a register of
in its area—that is, land which has been continuously neglected or abandoned for at least three years. Amendment 93 would enable a community body to request that a local authority instruct the landowner to offer the abandoned or neglected land for sale. The land would have to be offered for sale via public auction within six months of the landowner’s being instructed to do so by the local authority. The amendment would also require the local authority to offer the land for sale via public auction, and allow the local authority to compulsorily acquire land that had been sold via public auction, in certain circumstances.

I appreciate what Sarah Boyack is trying to achieve with amendment 93, and the ideas behind it. However, a great deal of careful thought and consultation would be required for such far-reaching proposals, and no consultation of local authorities has yet taken place.

The aim of the abandoned and neglected land provisions in proposed new part 3A is to get such land back into productive use. It might be difficult for community bodies to obtain funding to use the proposed provisions and bid for the land at auction. The proposals require land to have been abandoned or neglected for a total period of six years before the local authority can, at a community body’s instigation, require the landowner to sell the land at public action. However, the bill as drafted will allow a community body to acquire abandoned or neglected land six months from the date on which ministers consent to the application.

I consider that the provisions in section 48 offer far more to communities, while balancing the rights of landowners, and will ensure that land is brought back into productive and sustainable use far more quickly and effectively than amendment 93 proposes.

Section 48 will ensure that a community body’s proposals will further sustainable development of the abandoned or neglected land, and that acquisition of the land is permitted only where that is in the public interest. It will also ensure that landowners are fully compensated for sale of their land by way of the provisions that require an appropriate valuation to be carried out, which attracts appeal rights, and it will ensure that the landowner is properly compensated for any loss or expense that is incurred in connection with an application that is made by a proposed new part 3A community body.

The section 48 provisions will ensure that a community body must demonstrate that it has plans to use the abandoned or neglected land in a way that will further the achievement of sustainable development of the land. However, there are in amendment 93 no such requirements for when the land is sold via public auction. I do not consider that the proposals are sufficient to ensure that the issues that are afflicting land that is classified as abandoned or neglected would be fully and properly addressed. For that reason, I ask Sarah Boyack to seek to withdraw amendment 93.

Sarah Boyack: I listened carefully to the minister’s comments. She said that there are better provisions for communities in the bill as drafted and that there are flaws in some of the detail of what I suggest in terms of the timescale. I want to look at that and may bring the issue back at stage 3. Accordingly, I seek agreement to withdraw the amendment. However, I think that there is an issue in relation to involving local authorities and enabling local authorities to play a role that I think they do not currently have under the bill.

The minister said that the detail has not been consulted on. That is true, but the provision is something that was talked about in the land reform review group report. The ambition to allow stronger community purchase powers by local authorities was also something that was in the initial consultation.

I will consider the drafting of my amendment, but I dispute the view that there has been no discussion of the issue, because ministers themselves floated the prospect of using some form of local authority compulsory purchase order process to ensure easier access to community right to buy.

Amendment 93, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: Amendment 94, which concerns the right to register an interest in land and be notified of proposed changes in its use, is in the name of Sarah Boyack and is the only amendment in the group.

Sarah Boyack: I lodged amendment 94 in order to try and implement a community right to register an interest in land, as recommended by the land reform review group in its final report. The review group referred to that right as “a low threshold opportunity to register an interest in land”.

Essentially, a community group’s registering an interest would result in that group being notified of sales and changes in owner. The benefit of that approach is explained in the review group’s report. The group noted that such a register of interest would reduce the chances of community interests being damaged, by making landowners and planning authorities aware of those interests.

It is also suggested that the approach could encourage greater co-operation between landowners and communities, and that it would help communities to be better prepared to make use of part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, with the knock-on effect of reducing late and missed applications.

In the stage 1 evidence sessions, the committee was keen to avoid communities missing the boat and having to make use of late applications. The proposed new section of the 2003 act that amendment 94 would insert would raise awareness among owners and communities, and it would shift the balance of power.

Rather than land and buildings remaining empty for years, the measures would potentially change how we think about unused land. They would provide a hugely valuable opportunity to enable community development, which would strengthen the opportunities and influence of communities and local authorities in bringing that about.

I move amendment 94.

Aileen McLeod: Amendment 94 seeks to give a community body the power to request that an interest in land be registered. Ministers could direct the keeper of the registers of Scotland to register that interest if they decided that that was in the public interest.

Where an interest was registered, amendment 94 would require the keeper to notify the landowner and any creditor in a standard security of the registered interest. Where the landowner or creditor in a standard security proposes to transfer or take any action with a view to transferring the land or to undertake development of a kind set out in regulations in relation to the land, the amendment would place a duty on the landowner or creditor to notify the community body of the proposal.

Where an interest is registered, under amendment 94 a landowner or creditor who is proposing to take steps to transfer their land, or who is developing their land in certain ways, would be required to notify the community bodies that have registered an interest of the intention to do so. However, there are no timescales within which the landowner or creditor in a standard security must do that. There is nothing in the amendment to stop the owner or creditor immediately selling the land directly after notifying the community body of their intention to do so. That would mean that, even if a community body was notified of the intention to sell the land, it would not necessarily have time to take any action to acquire the land before it was sold to someone else.

There are no prohibitions placed on the landowner in relation to disposal of the land, which would give the community time to take steps to acquire the land after notification to the community body. The landowner or creditor will be freely able to transfer or develop the land, notwithstanding the existence of the registration of interest. The landowner is not prevented from taking steps to transfer the land, so there may not be an opportunity or time for a community body to submit a late application under part 2 of the 2003 act or to contact the landowner with a view to purchasing the land.

Further, amendment 94 does not contain any enforcement provisions that would place any kind of sanction on the landowner or creditor if they did not comply with the provisions of the amendment and just sold or developed the land without notifying the community body. That is different from part 2 of the 2003 act, which places certain prohibitions on landowners throughout the application process in order to ensure that the landowner cannot undertake avoidance measures to avoid the effect of the provisions of part 2 of the 2003 act.

Unlike part 2 of the 2003 act, which contains well-considered checks and balances throughout the application procedure, the provisions in amendment 94 could place a disproportionate burden on landowners. It could be the case that many community bodies register their interest in a piece of land, which would require the landowner to notify each of those community bodies each and every time the landowner took any action with a view to selling the land or developing the land in certain ways.

Amendment 94 seeks to include notification requirements when a landowner is undertaking development on the land in certain ways, but I do not think that it is necessary to deal with the development of land in that way. Planning legislation already includes requirements for public consultation.

The provisions of amendment 94 do not require a community body to undertake any further work after its initial registration of interest. Unlike under part 2, the community body would not be required to carry out further work for a potential acquisition—for example, preparing its business plan and demonstrating why its plans will further the achievement of sustainable development. However, it is clear that stakeholders welcome measures that encourage communities to be proactive when seeking to purchase land. The provisions of part 2 of the 2003 act currently achieve that aim, but amendment 94 would not.

I know that the proposal behind amendment 94 is the first in the land reform review group’s menu of land rights, but we are still considering the review group’s final report and recommendations, through the likes of the land reform bill consultation. For those reasons, I ask Sarah Boyack to seek to withdraw amendment 94.

The Convener: No other members wish to speak, so I invite Sarah Boyack to wind up and to say whether she wishes to press or withdraw her amendment.

Sarah Boyack: I welcome the fact that what I am proposing is not ruled out for the future, even though the minister has said why she thinks the detail of amendment 94 is not fit for purpose. However, the matter could be considered as part of the next stage of land reform. In the absence of a queue of colleagues speaking in support of amendment 94, I shall graciously withdraw it, with the committee’s permission.

Amendment 94, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: We move on to a duty on local authorities to support community bodies, crofting community bodies and part 3A community bodies. Amendment 95, in the name of Sarah Boyack, is grouped with amendment 98.

Sarah Boyack: The backdrop to amendment 95 is that, having been involved in the local government brief over the past three years, I am keen that local authorities and communities work together. The intention behind the amendment is to add another route to help communities to exercise the right to buy.

The provisions in the bill will significantly strengthen the legal framework for communities to work together to take ownership of local assets for the benefit of local people, but I hope to explore more closely with amendment 95 and the consequential amendment 98 how the bill will support that in practice. Even with the streamlined processes that the bill seeks to introduce, the journey for a community from the initial idea to taking ownership remains complex. I know from my work as an MSP how challenging that process can be for communities, so I am keen to ensure that information and support are available to communities from the outset to help them to take forward their ideas.

For the purposes of getting this important issue discussed, my amendments suggest that local authorities could be of great assistance in providing support in the first instance. Amendment 95 would place a duty on local authorities to provide support to groups seeking to constitute themselves as community bodies for the purposes of parts 2 and 3 and proposed new part 3A of the 2003 act, and to provide support to groups that are already constituted as community bodies and are seeking to register interest or progress the right to buy.

I understand that that is a significant change, so ahead of that duty coming into force, the Scottish Government would be required to consult and issue guidance to local authorities on how they would be expected to carry out that function. I am not trying to set out the detail of exactly how that would happen; I accept that to do that in the bill is not the best way. However, one of the things that concerns me is that it is not just a question of legislation but one of community capacity. We are seeking to increase community empowerment, and although there are many communities out there for whom the potential in the legislation could be fantastic, we have to accept that skills, resources and knowledge are not equally distributed throughout society and that not all community groups will have the necessary first-hand experience on day 1.

Amendment 95 is about communities having the capacity to exercise the provisions of the bill, however they end up in detail once we have gone through stages 2 and 3. I am very keen that the human aspect of the bill be assisted and promoted, and that social and community aspects will be supported, so that communities can exercise the new powers in the bill.

If the Scottish Government does not see local authorities as the best route to achieving that aim, I would be keen to hear from the minister how she thinks community empowerment might be taken forward. Do you see, for example, Co-operative Development Scotland having a role, with the new community bodies definition bringing co-operative organisations into play? Do you see Highlands and Islands Enterprise’s powers being expanded? Do you see Scottish Enterprise, which does not currently have a social aspect to its constitution, becoming an alternative way to support communities? If Scottish Enterprise were to be involved, that would change its purpose.

I strongly prefer the local authority route, because it would be consistent across the country. Local authorities already have community development functions and community development experience. There is an accountability issue, which would apply across the whole country. That would be a better route, in terms of clarity and consistency. I am not suggesting what should be the detail; amendment 95 is more about competence for local authorities. I hope that the minister will look favourably on my intentions and the detail of my amendment.

I move amendment 95.

Aileen McLeod: I appreciate where Sarah Boyack is coming from with amendment 95 and I welcome the local government experience that she brings to the discussion, with regard to local authorities and community capacity.

Amendment 95 would place a duty on local authorities to provide support to groups of people within a local authority area who are seeking to form bodies for the purposes of exercising the various rights to buy in the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. The amendment would also place a duty on local authorities to support “community bodies, crofting community bodies and Part 3A community bodies” in exercising the various rights to buy under the 2003 act.

Amendment 95 would also require ministers to issue local authorities with guidance to assist them in carrying out the support services that they would provide under the amendment. Finally, amendment 95 would also provide that, before issuing that guidance to local authorities and within one year of the provision coming into force, ministers would be required to consult such persons or bodies as they considered appropriate.

I recommend that the amendment be rejected as I do not believe that the duty to provide a support service to community groups is best placed on local authorities. There are currently a number of sources of support for community groups that wish to exercise the rights to buy under parts 2 and 3 of the 2003 act. Those sources of support include the Scottish Government and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, both of which support communities through the entire right-to-buy processes. It is ministers’ intention that the support provided by the Scottish Government will be extended to communities that wish to exercise a right to buy under the new part 3A of the 2003 act.

I take Sarah Boyack’s point about the building of community capacity, but that could be a function of the community land agency that is to be created and which was announced in the programme for government. Once established, the agency may have a key role in supporting all communities that wish to exercise the various rights to buy under the 2003 act, and to support them through the processes.

I do not believe that there is a need to include in the bill provisions that state that there must be consultation on any guidance issued by Scottish ministers about the various rights to buy. Stakeholder engagement is an essential part of such a process, and stakeholders and appropriate persons will be consulted as any draft guidance is prepared.

Amendment 98, which is linked to amendment 95, seeks to require ministers to consult on the guidance to be issued under amendment 95 within a year and a day of royal assent to the bill. As I said, stakeholder engagement is always an essential part of the process, and stakeholders and appropriate persons will be consulted as any guidance is prepared by Scottish ministers on the changes that the bill makes to the community right to buy and the crofting community right to buy and on the new right to buy neglected and abandoned land.

For those reasons I ask Sarah Boyack to withdraw amendment 95 and not move amendment 98.

Sarah Boyack: I welcome some of the comments in the minister’s speech. I note the reference to the proposed community land agency. There may be opportunities, through the agency, to help with this process.

The point that I wanted to draw attention to was that, if we are thinking about social justice, not all community bodies will be equally placed at the start of the journey to exercise greater influence on their communities. Areas that have been economically deprived and socially held back will struggle with the complexity of implementing the bill and with how they can make use of its provisions.

Although I will reflect on what the minister has said, I wanted to ensure that Co-operative Development Scotland, HIE and Scottish Enterprise were mentioned in the Official Report in relation to the bill. We should be thinking about the range of agencies that could promote community ownership and community use of land. Local authorities are a key interest group. They have a unique democratic legitimacy that the community land agency and HIE do not have at the local level.

I am interested in the idea that the Scottish Government itself will provide support to communities. I support the localism principle—I have not seen colleagues queueing up to support it, so perhaps I will speak to them afterwards about it—so I think that we should not pass legislation that looks to the centre to provide all the support. The shape of the community land agency might be the solution. However, I was keen to explore with colleagues, in public, the idea that local authorities, with their range of experience and other social and economic obligations, might be a beneficial player in the process. I seek leave to withdraw amendment 95.

Amendment 95, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 49 agreed to.

After section 49

The Convener: We come to review of compulsory purchase legislation and guidance. Amendment 96, in the name of Sarah Boyack, is in a group on its own.

Sarah Boyack: Right, colleagues, my last few amendments have not been universally supported. Why have I lodged this one? One of the opportunities of stage 2 is to anticipate how the legislation will work in practice, to test the strength of the proposals in the bill and to ensure that, when ministers respond to our amendments, they make commitments in public, on the official record.

I have raised the issue of a review of compulsory purchase legislation. It was a commitment from ministers, in the chamber, when we debated the bill at an early stage, before a committee had been allocated to take it forward. When I was on the case as local government spokesperson, I was keen to explore the opportunities of using compulsory purchase legislation. During the initial consultation, the Government asked whether communities should have the right to request that a local authority use a compulsory purchase order on their behalf.

The minister said that the detail of my previous amendment was not fit for purpose and that there were better alternatives in the bill. One of the things that we have to do, in passing legislation, is to ensure that that legislation will last, not just for the first couple of years but for a significant period. In a way, I would like to future proof the legislation.

The consultation document highlighted that, under their existing guidance, local authorities can use CPO powers to bring vacant and unused property back into use and that there is the possibility of transferring property to a community group once it has been purchased. It was noted at the time that powers have not been used for such a purpose. The analysis of responses to the Government’s initial consultation, which was published in December 2012, found overall support from respondents for communities having the right to request that the local authority use CPO powers on their behalf. Many community groups and third sector representatives saw that as representing a significant shift in the balance towards community empowerment.

In response to questions about the extension of the community right to buy, the Glasgow and West of Scotland Forum of Housing Associations noted that such an extension would be “a useful additional route” to CPO, which it described as the “most obvious route” for bringing unused buildings back into productive use.

However, in the Government’s second, more detailed consultation in November 2013, all reference to community purchase was gone, with the focus shifting to a compulsory right for communities to purchase land that would later evolve into the part 3 provisions in the bill.

Amendment 96 seeks to return us to the discussion on whether compulsory purchase could be a useful route by which communities can bring assets back into productive use. If ministers do not like my previous amendment, amendment 93, they may view this one as providing a less prescriptive route. It would require ministers to conduct a review of compulsory purchase powers as they sit at present and to report on the outcome. Such a review would allow consideration of how community purchase contributes to sustainable development; whether communities are sufficiently involved; whether communities should have the right to request the initiation of compulsory purchase; and whether the process could be made more efficient.

As with the community right to register an interest in land, which we discussed earlier, the right to request a CPO was recommended by the land reform review group. Amendment 96 would help to take us towards that point.

The amendment would also potentially provide future proofing. We know that local authorities will change over time and that experience will grow following the initial implementation of the bill. I would like the option that the amendment provides to be available, certainly in principle. The amendment is a lot less prescriptive than the others that I have lodged.

I would like local authorities to be part of the process in the future. If there is a complex network of land ownership in an urban area, there may be circumstances in which one might want the local authority to bring some of that land into use, potentially for housing that could be delivered either by the local authority or by other housing providers. We might want to guarantee that there is a community option, so that land can be acquired and given to the community. It might be about thinking about the community from day 1 when a bigger CPO is taking place.

The amendment offers a slightly different route. It would require the Government not necessarily to bring forward a right to request a CPO at this stage but to make a commitment that there will be a review over time. For that reason, it would be a useful addition to the bill.

I move amendment 96.

Michael Russell: I have considerable sympathy with Sarah Boyack’s point about the involvement of communities in compulsory acquisition processes. That is an element that is missing, and local authorities have been notoriously unwilling to undertake compulsory purchase actions in circumstances in which they should have undertaken them. One of the reasons is that local authorities are reluctant to find themselves the owners of property on which they then have to expend resources.

The involvement of communities in compulsory purchase actions would solve that problem, and would in fact create a virtuous circle. I can think of a number of circumstances in my constituency in which communities would very much favour an action of compulsory purchase by the local authority if that led to the transfer of the asset to the community.

The issue is genuine and important, and the fact that the land reform review group made the recommendation adds weight to it. However, I do not think that the bill is the place in which to stipulate a Government review. That is problematic: if the review took place and the Government reported, that part of the bill would go out of use, unless the Government carried on reviewing. There is no indication in amendment 96 that a review should take place every five or 10 years, which is the sort of stipulation that would have a place in the bill.

The bill is not the place for specifying a review, but I hope that the minister might commit to considering the issue again. If a specific proposal was made at stage 3 to introduce the ability for communities to request compulsory purchase, that would, although the issue is complex, certainly be of interest. If the minister and the Government were to look again at the use of compulsory purchase in order to transfer assets to communities, perhaps with a view to bringing forward a proposal in further land reform legislation, that would meet the objective, which is a genuine one.

The Convener: As no other members wish to comment, I invite the minister to respond.

Aileen McLeod: Amendment 96 would require ministers to carry out a review of compulsory purchase legislation and guidance in order to consider how communities could be further empowered in relation to the better use or acquisition of land. I take on board the points that were very eloquently made by Mr Russell. I appreciate that it is an important issue.

It is not appropriate to add provisions to the bill that would require a review to be carried out of compulsory purchase legislation. In December 2014, the Scottish Law Commission published its discussion paper on compulsory purchase, and it seeks responses to its consultation by June. The discussion paper examines the current statute law on compulsory purchase, suggests that it is antiquated, outdated and unfit for purpose, and proposes that it should be replaced by a comprehensive modern statute. Following consultation, the Scottish Law Commission will issue its final report and recommendations for future action. We will be happy to consider that as part of the consultation process on the proposed land reform bill.

I therefore ask Sarah Boyack to withdraw amendment 96.

Sarah Boyack: I welcome Mike Russell’s supportive comments. I think that the amendment deals with an important issue, and I welcome the minister’s comment that it can be looked at in the future.

We are talking about bringing in an important additional route. A review of CPO powers is under way, and I hope that I have highlighted the importance of bringing communities into that discussion. We should seek opportunities to expand the existing compulsory purchase legislation and the capacity to use it in the interests of community groups so that, in the context of the bill, we can make better use of land that is not meeting its full potential.

On those grounds, I seek the committee’s permission to withdraw amendment 96.

Amendment 96, by agreement, withdrawn.

Schedule 4—Minor and consequential amendments

Amendments 38 to 41 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Amendment 55 not moved.

Amendment 88 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on decisions under parts 2, 3 or 3A of the 2003 act: ministers to have regard to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Amendment 46, in the name of Mike Russell, is the only amendment in the group.

Michael Russell: I will quote from the covenant. I apologise for the gender-specific language, but it was written in 1966. It says:

“Recognizing that, in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the ideal of free human beings enjoying freedom from fear and want can only be achieved if conditions are created whereby everyone may enjoy his economic, social and cultural rights, as well as his civil and political rights,

Considering the obligation of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and freedoms, Realizing that the individual, having duties to other individuals and to the community to which he belongs, is under a responsibility to strive for the promotion and observance of the rights recognized in the present Covenant”.

The Scotland Act 1998 places an obligation on the Scottish Parliament to observe and implement international obligations. That is a matter that is devolved. Of course, it is not entirely clear what that means, and there are some difficulties with it. However, in light of what I have quoted, it is important to ensure that those rights are respected and that everything that we can do is focused on ensuring that we meet our international obligations.

If we fail to recognise those wider rights and are mindful only of, for example, the European convention on human rights, we are promoting—always promoting—the concept of individual rights and never promoting the concept of community rights. It is important, at least at the base of decision making by ministers, that they should be mindful of those wider obligations.

In the area of land reform, it is also important that they are mindful of those wider obligations, because, as we can see in the developing debate over land reform, the issue will, at times, become a debate between the rights and expectations of an individual and the rights and expectations of a community. Ministers have to be able at least to consider the wider obligations that the Parliament and the Government owe to a community.

The international covenant lays out a wide range of obligations, not all of which are relevant, but it would be helpful to ministers to have reference to it; it would be helpful to the land reform debate; and, most importantly, it would be helpful to communities, which would be able to see that they are not always pitted alone against individuals, some of whom are extremely powerful, but have a wider body of law and international agreement on which to draw.

In my view, this is a modest amendment. I know that there are those who are of the school of thought that says that the more you put into a bill, the more can be challenged, and who might therefore think that the amendment could add a complication, but I think that it would reassure communities that, when they find themselves challenging powerful individuals, there is a wider, global context and there is protection for their rights.

I hope that this modest proposal will prove acceptable to my colleagues on the committee and to the Government.

I move amendment 46.

The Convener: In a 2013 review of the application of the covenant, the Scottish Government said that it is committed to giving effect to international human rights treaties in a way that works for Scotland. It said:

“We are working to ensure that Scotland’s distinctive approach is incorporated into the UK’s reporting to international treaty bodies and their subsequent examination of our human rights records under UN and Council of Europe Conventions and Treaties to which the UK is a signatory."

That underlines the fact that the covenant has a purpose that is reviewed regularly.

To back up what Michael Russell says about the interests of communities, it might well be that the convention becomes something that it is even more important to have incorporated into domestic law as we move into the land reform processes. I would like to give my support to Michael Russell’s comments.

Alex Fergusson: As we all did, I received a letter from the minister yesterday that seems to indicate that the covenant is subservient—that might not be the right technical expression—to the ECHR. Can she clarify that when she responds? I see that heads are being shaken, but that was the impression that I got from the letter.

Claudia Beamish: I support the amendment, in view of the sometimes very powerful individual interests in relation to matters concerning urban and rural land. I believe that the inclusion of the amendment will be a recognition of the importance and value of the rights of communities to be empowered and take forward their own destiny.

Aileen McLeod: As we have heard, amendment 46 requires ministers to have regard to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights when making decisions under parts 2, 3 or 3A of the 2003 act.

As Mr Russell has explained, the covenant is an international human rights treaty that sets out certain rights that state parties agree to recognise, and aspirations to work towards. As is highlighted in the Scottish Government’s contribution to the UK’s periodic report to the Committee on Economic, Social and Political Rights, a copy of which I provided to the committee as an appendix to my letter of yesterday, we are committed to giving effect to international human rights treaties in a way that works for Scotland, and that document sets out the steps that the Scottish Government has already taken to give effect to the treaty.

In response to the question that Mr Fergusson asked, I note that neither the ECHR nor the covenant is subservient. They are taken into account together.

The rights in the covenant are high-level and aspirational rights that are suitable for implementation by Governments as part of, for example, a legislative programme. The introduction of the bill could be considered evidence of Scotland’s commitment to take into consideration the rights that are recognised by the covenant.

Amendment 46 would place the responsibility for testing and directing Scotland’s approach to the covenant at the door of the courts, even though the covenant’s wording does not easily translate into clear, enforceable rights. The terms of the covenant have not been drafted in a way that lends itself to interpretation by the courts. However, it is absolutely certain that acts of the Scottish Parliament and decisions of ministers are not law if they are incompatible with the rights that are set out in the European convention on human rights, and the amendment would not affect that.

Ministers must in any event have regard to the covenant and other international treaties in order to comply with their obligations under the ministerial code. I appreciate that Mr Russell is keen to ensure that ministerial decisions about the right to buy are taken subject to appropriate safeguards to ensure that they are fair and in the public interest. I consider that the 2003 act and the bill already provide for that. However, in the interest of stating the Government’s support for the covenant within those rights to buy, I support amendment 46.
If the committee agrees to the amendment, I will need to consider whether any amendments are needed at stage 3 to ensure that the amendment is effective.

The Convener: I call on Mike Russell to wind up and press or withdraw amendment 46.

Michael Russell: I very much welcome the minister’s comments. At the risk of using this as an advertising slot, I note that the Scottish Human Rights Commission and Community Land Scotland, along with me, will be hosting an event in the Parliament on 1 April, which members are welcome to attend, to consider the wider question of human rights and land reform. That is just a little plug for that event. I press amendment 46.

The Convener: I hope that the event will be after midday so that it is not an April fool.

The question is, that amendment 46 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Alex Fergusson: I will say something briefly, convener, if I am allowed to. I wish to abstain to keep my options open at stage 3.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Beamish, Claudia (South Scotland) (Lab)
Boyack, Sarah (Lothian) (Lab)
Dey, Graeme (Angus South) (SNP)
Gibson, Rob (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP)
Hume, Jim (South Scotland) (LD)
MacDonald, Angus (Falkirk East) (SNP)
Russell, Michael (Argyll and Bute) (SNP)
Thompson, Dave (Skye, Lochaber and Badenoch) (SNP)

Abstention
Fergusson, Alex (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 8, Against 0, Abstentions 1.

Amendment 46 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on acquisitions of land under parts 2, 3 or 3A of 2003 act: mediation. Amendment 47, in the name of Graeme Dey, is the only amendment in the group. I call on Graeme Dey, who has waited a long time for this, to speak to and move his amendment.

Graeme Dey: Thank you, convener. I will be brief.

It would be nice to think that the aims of the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill, which the past two and a half hours have demonstrated everyone round the table supports, will be realised without any instances of disagreement or indeed conflict. However, we live in the real world and there will be scenarios of that nature—and often, once the dust settles, those who have been involved in the process will have to live alongside each other or at least come into contact on occasion. Therefore, if it is practically possible to facilitate mediation when it is requested, common sense tells us that that should be done.

It is in everyone’s interests to make the bill work as simply and cleanly as possible, and stakeholders such as Peter Peacock of Community Land Scotland and Sandy Murray of NFU Scotland were clear in their evidence to the committee about the merits of being able to call on mediation. Certainly, private discussions that I have had with landowning interests suggest that they, too, would favour it. I hope that this amendment is one that the Government might be prepared to accept.

I move amendment 47.

Alex Fergusson: I very much agree with the principles that have been put forward by Mr Dey, and I am very supportive of the amendment.

Aileen McLeod: The purpose of amendment 47 is to give ministers the power to introduce a mediation service to assist with the negotiated transfers of land from landowners to those community bodies that wish to exercise their right to buy under parts 2, 3 or 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003.

That would enable ministers to make the necessary arrangements and would enable their departments and agencies to arrange the facilitation of negotiated transfers of land that would otherwise be the subject of a proposed acquisition under the community right to buy, the crofting community right to buy or the new right to buy abandoned or neglected land.

Such a service could well be a function of the dedicated resource for community land ownership that was announced in the programme for government, such as a community land agency. A short-life working group will be set up as part of the 1 million acres target work and will look into that.

In proposing the amendment, Graeme Dey is giving a clear indication of this Government’s commitment to support all parties in trying to find solutions that are acceptable to everyone concerned, and for that reason I support amendment 47. However, I also propose lodging an amendment at stage 3 to ensure that it refers to community bodies, crofting community bodies and part 3A community bodies specifically, as well as ensuring that the amendment is technically correct.

Graeme Dey: I welcome that support and I press amendment 47.

Amendment 47 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on acquisitions of land under parts 2, 3 or 3A of 2003 act: mediation.
Claudia Beamish: Part 4 of the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill builds on the experience that we have gathered over the past decade—and far back from that as well—in relation to the community right to buy and the findings of the land reform review group.

We have heard strong evidence highlighting the complexity of the process for community bodies, and a number of provisions in part 4 are about streamlining that process. My amendments aim to recognise and ease the pressure that is placed on community bodies during the right-to-buy process in two very specific ways.

Amendment 56 would give community bodies under parts 2, 3, and 3A of the 2003 act the opportunity to correct clerical and other non-material errors in an application at any time before it is disposed of. Given the complexity of the process, that would reduce pressure on community bodies and ensure that applications are as accurate as possible.

Amendment 57 seeks to provide some flexibility in the numerous short timescales throughout parts 2 and 3A, which principally fall on community bodies. I recognise the need for those timescales and, as drafted, they are not unreasonable. However, although community bodies should seek to meet the timescales—

The Convener: We are only talking about amendment 56 at this point.

Claudia Beamish: I apologise. I moved on to amendment 57—my mistake.

I move amendment 56.

Jim Hume (South Scotland) (LD): Amendment 56 is clearly a reasonable amendment, and I would be quite happy to support Claudia Beamish if she is so minded to press the amendment.

The Convener: Thank you. We will see whether the minister thinks that it is reasonable when she responds.

Aileen McLeod: There are no provisions in the 2003 act that allow a community body to amend its application to correct any errors. If an application contains a technical error, ministers will be bound to reject the application. However, Scottish Government officials work closely with community bodies during the application process to reduce the likelihood of a technical error being made in the application.

Amendment 56 seeks to enable a community body to correct any clerical or non-material error in its application before a ministerial decision is made on the application or the application is otherwise disposed of. We should consider the overall effect that that would have on the timing of the application process.

If a process were introduced to allow the amendment of applications, an additional time period would need to be introduced to allow the other parties to reconsider the amended application. Additional time would also be required to enable counter-representations to be made on that amended application.

In addition, amendment 56 could open up the potential for applications to be appealed if they have been changed to any large extent. We believe that the assistance that officials give the applicants in submitting their application is sufficient to deal with the issue of clerical or non-material errors.

For those reasons, I ask Claudia Beamish to withdraw amendment 56.

Claudia Beamish: In view of the minister's remarks, I will withdraw the amendment. I will consider whether to reintroduce the proposal with more clarity and detail at stage 3, possibly following discussion with the minister.

Amendment 56, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: We move on to parts 2 and 3A of the 2003 act and the extension of periods of seven days to 14 days in certain circumstances. Amendment 57 is the only amendment in the group.

Claudia Beamish: Thank you convener, and my apologies for rushing on to speak about amendment 57 earlier.

Amendment 57 seeks to provide some flexibility in the numerous short timescales throughout parts 2 and 3A, which principally fall on community bodies. I recognise the need for the timescales and, as drafted, they are not unreasonable. However, although community groups should seek to meet the timescales—

The Convener: Thank you. We will see whether the minister thinks that it is reasonable when she responds.

Alex Fergusson: I feel that, if the provisions in the amendment are appropriate, we should just extend the timescale to 14 days anyway. I am concerned that we are creating two categories of timescale.
Aileen McLeod: The effect of amendment 57 would be to allow ministers to extend the seven-day timescale in which either community bodies or ministers are required to take certain action, such as for the community body to provide certain information in connection with its application or ballot, or for the ministers to appoint a valuer. It is proposed that ministers may have discretion to extend the timescale to 14 days, when there are good and sufficient reasons for doing so, in order to give community bodies an element of additional flexibility should they require it.

If the option to extend these seven-day limits is offered, when time is of the essence it could cause timing issues for a community body, as ministers would have to set out their reasons for any decision to extend the time limit. If the request is considered to be invalid and is refused, most of the original seven days will, by then, have passed.

As you know, convener, I always like to end on a positive note. Therefore, to ensure that key stages of the process are met, I would propose bringing forward an amendment at stage 3 to ensure that amendment 57 achieves the intended effect and is technically correct. On that basis, I support amendment 57.

Claudia Beamish: I am pleased that the minister has accepted the amendment.

Amendment 57 agreed to.

Amendment 42 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 99—Commencement

Amendments 97 and 98 not moved.

Amendment 43 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

The Convener: That ends this committee’s stage 2 consideration of the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill. The amended version of the bill will be printed once the Local Government and Regeneration Committee has completed its stage 2 consideration. Stage 3 amendments may be lodged after that point.

I thank the minister and members for the process. It has been a useful debate that has thrown up various issues that still have to be settled at stage 3, but it has made a lot of progress on behalf of the aims of the bill and in terms of improvements to it.
26 March 2015

Dear Rob

At the Committee meeting on 4 March, I offered to write to the Committee to confirm two points. These are addressed below.

Your first query related to the discussions about an amendment, which was agreed to by the Committee, which means that the Scottish Land Court will have 8 weeks rather than 4 to issue its written statement of reasons in response to an appeal under the crofting community right to buy. The amendment also provides that, where the Land Court considers it will not be able to meet that 8 week timescale, it will be able to set a new date by which it will issue its written statement of reasons. During that discussion you asked whether or not the Land Court has the capacity to cope with any appeals that may arise in relation to the crofting community right to buy.

I have been in contact with the Land Court on the question of whether or not they have enough members of the bench to cope with the work in hand. Whether the Court will need more members to allow it to deal timeously with appeals or references under the provisions of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 (“2003 Act”) as amended by the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill will very much depend on how many appeals there are.

Since the 2003 Act came into force, the Land Court has dealt with only one reference in relation to the crofting community right to buy under section 81 of the 2003 Act (Scottish Ministers v Pairc Trust Ltd and Others 2007 SLCR 166) and there have been no appeals to the Land Court about valuations for the crofting community right to buy under section 92.

The Land Court keep their workload under review and, whilst appointing new members to the Land Court could take a minimum of 6 months, they would have no hesitation in asking for more resources if they were needed.
Secondly, an amendment was agreed at Committee on 4 March to exclude certain separate tenements from the definition of “registrable land” for the purposes of the community right to buy in Part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. Mr Russell asked me to update the Committee with a list of the types of separate tenements that exist in Scotland.

There are two types of separate tenements in Scotland: legal separate tenements and conventional separate tenements.

Legal separate tenements include rights to salmon fishings, rights to gather mussels and oysters, rights to port and ferry, rights to hold fairs and markets, rights to mine minerals (gold, silver, petroleum, natural gas and coal), rights to “teinds” (which relates to the rights of churches to parts of land), and rights to unclaimed wrecks. Conventional separate tenements arise expressly in conveyancing transactions, and include rights to minerals and individual tenement flats.

Therefore, the effect of the amendment is that all separate tenements are excluded from the right to buy in Part 2, with the exception of the rights to salmon fishing and rights to minerals (other than rights to oil, gas, gold or silver).

I hope that answers your queries in full.

With kindest regards

Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill

[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision about national outcomes; to confer functions on certain persons in relation to services provided by, and assets of, certain public bodies; to amend Parts 2 and 3 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003; to enable certain bodies to buy abandoned or neglected land; to make provision for registers of common good property and about disposal and use of such property; to restate and amend the law on allotments; to enable local authorities to reduce or remit non-domestic rates; and for connected purposes.

NATIONAL OUTCOMES

1 National outcomes

(1) The Scottish Ministers must by regulations prescribe outcomes for Scotland (referred to in this Part as “the national outcomes”) that result from, or are contributed to by, the carrying out, by the persons mentioned in subsection (1A), of the functions mentioned in subsection (1B).

(1A) The persons are—

(a) a cross-border public authority,
(b) any other Scottish public authority,
(c) any other person carrying out functions of a public nature.

(1B) The functions are—

(a) in the case of a cross-border public authority, any function that is exercisable in or as regards Scotland and does not relate to reserved matters,
(b) in the case of any other Scottish public authority, any function that does not relate to reserved matters,
(c) in the case of any other person carrying out functions of a public nature, any such function that is exercisable in or as regards Scotland and does not relate to reserved matters.

(1C) Nothing in subsection (1A) or (1B) requires the Scottish Ministers to determine outcomes under subsection (1) that result from, or are contributed to by, the carrying out of functions by the Scottish Parliament or the Scottish Parliamentary Corporate Body.
(1D) In determining the national outcomes, the Scottish Ministers must have regard to the reduction of inequalities of outcome which result from socio-economic disadvantage.

(2) Before determining the national outcomes, the Scottish Ministers must—
   (a) consult such persons as they consider appropriate,
   (b) having consulted the persons mentioned in paragraph (a), prepare draft national outcomes, and
   (c) consult the Scottish Parliament on the draft national outcomes during the consultation period.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must, no earlier than the expiry of the consultation period, publish the national outcomes.

(3A) In subsections (2) and (3), “consultation period” means the period of 40 days beginning with the day on which the consultation mentioned in subsection (2)(c) commences; and in calculating the period of 40 days, no account is to be taken of any time during which the Scottish Parliament is dissolved or in recess for more than 4 days.

(4) The persons mentioned in subsection (1A) in relation to whom the duty under subsection (1) applies must have regard to the national outcomes in carrying out the functions mentioned in subsection (1B).

(7) In this section—
   “cross-border public authority” has the meaning given by section 88(5) of the Scotland Act 1998, “reserved matters” is to be construed in accordance with that Act.

1A Regulations under section 1(1): procedure

(1) Regulations under section 1(1) must not be made unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the regulations has been laid before, and approved by resolution of, the Scottish Parliament.

(2) Before laying draft regulations before the Parliament under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must consult—
   (a) individuals eligible to vote at a local government or parliamentary election,
   (b) communities and community bodies,
   (c) community planning partners,
   (d) third sector interfaces,
   (e) third sector bodies,
   (f) children and young people and organisations working for and on behalf of children and young people, and
   (g) such other persons as they consider appropriate.

(3) For the purposes of such a consultation, the Scottish Ministers must—
   (a) lay a copy of the proposed draft regulations before the Parliament,
   (b) publish in such manner as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate a copy of the proposed regulations, and
(c) have regard to any representations about the proposed draft regulations that are made to them within 60 days of the date on which the copy of the proposed draft regulations are laid before the Parliament.

(4) In calculating any period of 60 days for the purposes of subsection (3)(c), no account is to be taken of any time during which the Parliament is dissolved or is in recess for more than 4 days.

(5) When laying draft regulations before the Parliament under subsection (1), the Scottish Ministers must also lay before the Parliament an explanatory document giving details of—

(a) the consultation carried out under subsection (2),

(b) any representations received as a result of the consultation, and

(c) the changes (if any) made to the proposed draft regulations as a result of those representations.

2 Review of national outcomes

(1) The Scottish Ministers may review the national outcomes at any time (but subject to subsections (2) and (3)).

(2) The Scottish Ministers must begin a review of the national outcomes before the expiry of the period of 5 years beginning with the date on which the national outcomes were published under section 1(3).

(3) The Scottish Ministers must begin further reviews of the national outcomes before the expiry of each 5 year period.

(3A) In carrying out a review of the national outcomes under subsection (1), (2) or (3), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(4) Following a review, the Scottish Ministers—

(za) may propose revisions to the national outcomes,

(zb) must—

(i) where they propose to make revisions to the national outcomes, consult the Scottish Parliament on the proposed revisions during the consultation period,

(ii) where they do not propose to make revisions to the national outcomes, consult the Scottish Parliament during the consultation period on the national outcomes as most recently published under section 1(3) or paragraph (b)(i) or republished under paragraph (b)(ii),

(a) may revise the national outcomes after the expiry of the consultation period, and

(b) must—

(i) where the national outcomes are revised, publish the outcomes as revised,

(ii) where the national outcomes are not revised, republish the outcomes after the expiry of the consultation period.

(6) References to the national outcomes in section 1(4) and in section 3 include references to the national outcomes revised under subsection (4)(a) of this section.
(7) In subsection (3), “5 year period” means the period of 5 years beginning with the date on which the national outcomes were published under sub-paragraph (i) of paragraph (b) of subsection (4) or, as the case may be, republished under sub-paragraph (ii) of that paragraph.

(8) In subsection (4), “consultation period” means the period of 40 days beginning with the day on which the consultation mentioned in subsection (4)(zb)(i) or (ii) commences; and in calculating the period of 40 days, no account is to be taken of any time during which the Scottish Parliament is dissolved or in recess for more than 4 days.

3 Reports

(1) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after the end of each 2 year period, lay before the Scottish Parliament a report about the extent to which the national outcomes have been achieved.

(10) An invitation given under subsection (9)(a)(i) must also invite the owner to give Ministers information about—

(b) whether the owner’s continuing to own the land would be compatible with furthering the achievement of sustainable development in relation to the land,

(c) whether the owner considers the land to be wholly or mainly neglected or abandoned and the reasons for the owner’s view,

(d) any proposals that the owner has for the land,

(e) any rights or interests in the land of which the owner is aware that are not mentioned in the application, and

(f) any other matter that the owner considers is relevant to the application.

(11) Ministers must, as soon as practicable after receiving an application, give public notice of it and of the date by which, under subsection (9)(a), views are to be received by them and, in that notice, invite persons to send to Ministers, so as to be received by them not later than 60 days after the publication of the notice, views in writing on the application.

(16) Ministers must not reach a decision on an application before—

(a) the date which is 60 days after the last date on which the Part 3A community body may provide Ministers with a response to the invitation given under subsection (13), or

(b) if by that date the Lands Tribunal has not advised Ministers of its finding on any question referred to it under section 97X in relation to the application, the date on which the Lands Tribunal provides Ministers with that finding.

(17) A Part 3A community body may require Ministers to treat as confidential any information or document relating to arrangements for the raising or expenditure of money to enable the land to be put to a particular use, being information or a document made available to Ministers for the purposes of this section.

97H Criteria for consent

Ministers must not consent to an application made under section 97G unless they are satisfied—

(a) that the land to which the application relates is eligible land,

(i) in the public interest, and

(ii) compatible with furthering the achievement of sustainable development in relation to the land,

   (b) in the ballot—

   (i) at least half of the members of the community so defined have voted, or

   (ii) fewer than half of the members of the community so defined have voted but the proportion which voted is sufficient to justify the Part 3A community body’s proceeding to buy the land, and

   (c) the majority of those voting have voted in favour of the proposition that the Part 3A community body buy the land.

(2) The ballot is to be conducted as prescribed.

(3) The provisions prescribed must in particular include provision for—

   (a) the result,

   (b) the number of persons eligible to vote,

   (c) the number of persons who voted, and
(d) the number of persons who voted in favour of the proposition mentioned in subsection (1)(c).

(5) Ministers may require the Part 3A community body—

(a) to provide such information relating to the ballot as they think fit, and

(b) to provide such information relating to any consultation with those eligible to vote in the ballot undertaken during the period in which the ballot was carried out as Ministers think fit.

(6A) Ministers may by regulations make provision for or in connection with enabling a Part 3A community body, in such circumstances as may be specified in the regulations, to apply to them to seek reimbursement of the expense of conducting a ballot under this section.

(6B) Regulations under subsection (6A) may in particular make provision in relation to—

(a) the circumstances in which a Part 3A community body may make an application by virtue of that subsection,

(e) persons who may consider such an appeal,

97K Right to buy same land exercisable by only one Part 3A community body

(1) Only one Part 3A community body may exercise the right under this Part to buy the same land.

(2) Where two or more such bodies have applied to buy the same land, it is for Ministers to decide which application is to proceed.

(3) Ministers may not make such a decision unless they have had regard to all views on each of the applications, and responses to the views, which they have received in answer to invitations under section 97G.

(4) On Ministers so deciding—

(a) the other body’s right to buy the land which is the subject of the body’s application is, so far as proceeding on that application, extinguished, and 97L  Consent conditions

Ministers may make their consent to an application made under section 97G subject to conditions.

(a) the applicant Part 3A community body,

(c) every other person who was invited, under section 97G(9)(a), to send them views on the application, and
(d) the Keeper of the Registers of Scotland.

(2) The form of notice is to be prescribed so as to secure that the notice includes a full description of—

(a) the land to which the application relates (provided, where appropriate, by or by reference to maps and drawings), and
(b) where their decision is to consent to the application, any conditions imposed under section 97L.

(3) The notice given under subsection (1) must—

(a) contain information about the consequences of the decision notified and of the rights of appeal against it given by this Part, and
(b) state the date on which consent is given or refused.

97N  Effect of Ministers’ decision on right to buy

(1) Ministers may by regulations make provision for or in connection with prohibiting, during such period as may be specified in the regulations, persons so specified from transferring or otherwise dealing with land in respect of which a Part 3A community body has made an application under section 97G.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may in particular include provision—

(a) specifying transfers or dealings which are not prohibited by the regulations,
(b) requiring or enabling such persons as may be specified in the regulations, in such circumstances as may be so specified, to register in the Register of Community Rights in Abandoned or Neglected Land notices as may be so specified,
(c) requiring, in such circumstances as may be specified in the regulations, such information as may be so specified to be incorporated into deeds relating to the land as may be so specified.
(3) Ministers may by regulations make provision for or in connection with suspending, during such period as may be specified in the regulations, such rights in or over land in respect of which a Part 3A community body has made an application under section 97G as may be so specified.

(4) Regulations under subsection (3) may in particular include provision specifying—

(a) rights to which the regulations do not apply,

(b) rights to which the regulations do not apply in such circumstances as may be specified in the regulations.

(5) Nothing in this Part—

(a) affects the operation of an inhibition on the sale of the land,

(b) prevents an action of adjudication from proceeding, or

(c) affects the commencement, execution or operation of any other diligence.

97P Confirmation of intention to proceed with purchase and withdrawal

(1) A Part 3A community body’s right to buy land under this Act is exercisable only if, within 21 days of the date of notification under section 97S(10), it sends notice in writing confirming its intention to proceed to buy the land to—

(a) Ministers, and

(b) the owner of the land.

(2) A Part 3A community body may, at any time after—

(a) making an application under section 97G, withdraw the application, or

(b) confirming its intention to proceed under subsection (1), withdraw that confirmation, by notice in writing to that effect sent to Ministers.

(3) Ministers must, within 7 days of receipt of notice under subsection (1) or (2), acknowledge receipt and send a copy of that acknowledgement to the owner of the land.

97Q Completion of purchase

(1) It is for the Part 3A community body to secure the expeditious exercise of its right to buy and, in particular—

(a) to prepare the documents necessary to—

(i) effect the transfer to it of the land, and

(ii) impose any conditions (including any real burdens or servitudes) which Ministers, under section 97L, require to be imposed upon the title to land, and

(b) in so doing, to ensure—

(i) that the land in the application to which Ministers have consented is the same as that to be transferred, and
Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill
Part 4—Community right to buy land

(ii) that the transfer is to be effected in accordance with any other conditions imposed by Ministers under section 97L.

(2) Where the Part 3A community body is unable to fulfil the duty imposed by subsection (1)(b) because the land or part of the land in respect of which Ministers’ consent was given is not owned by the person named as its owner in the application made under section 97G, it must refer that matter to Ministers.

(3) On a reference under subsection (2), Ministers must direct that the Part 3A community body’s right to buy the land is, so far as proceeding on that application, extinguished.

(4) The owner of the land being bought is obliged—

(a) to make available to the Part 3A community body such deeds and other documents as are sufficient to enable the body to proceed to complete its title to the land, and

(b) to transfer title accordingly.

(5) If, within 6 weeks of the date on which Ministers consent to an application to buy land, the owner of the land refuses or fails to make those deeds and other documents available, or they cannot be found, the Lands Tribunal may, on the application of the Part 3A community body, order the owner or any other person appearing to the Lands Tribunal to have those deeds and documents to produce them.

(6) If the owner of the land refuses or fails to effect such sufficient transfer as is mentioned in subsection (4), the Lands Tribunal may, on the application of the Part 3A community body, authorise its clerk to adjust, execute and deliver such deeds or other documents as will complete such transfer to the like force and effect as if done by the owner or person entitled.

97R Completion of transfer

(1) The consideration for the transfer of the land is its value as assessed under section 97S.

(2) Subject to subsections (3) and (4), that consideration must be paid not later than the “final settlement date”, being the date on which expires a 6 month period beginning with the date (the “consent date”) when Ministers consented to the application made under section 97G to buy the land.

(3) Where—

(a) the Part 3A community body and the owner so agree, the consideration may be paid on a date later than the final settlement date,

(b) the assessment of the valuation of the land has not been completed by a date 4 months after the consent date, the consideration must be paid not later than 2 months after the date when that assessment is completed,

(c) that valuation is the subject of an appeal which has not been determined within 4 months of the consent date, the consideration must be paid not later than 2 months after the date of that determination.

(4) If, on the date the consideration is to be paid, the owner is not able to effect the grant of a good and marketable title to the Part 3A community body—

(a) the consideration, or
(b) if, for any reason, the consideration has not been ascertained, such sum as may be fixed by the valuer appointed under section 97S as a fair estimate of what the consideration might be, must be consigned into the Lands Tribunal until that title is granted or the Part 3A community body gives notice to the Tribunal of its decision not to proceed to complete the transaction.

(5) Except where subsection (4) applies, if the consideration remains unpaid after the date not later than which it is to be paid, the Part 3A community body’s application made under section 97G in relation to the land is to be treated as withdrawn.

(6) Any heritable security which burdened the land immediately before title is granted to the Part 3A community body in pursuance of this section ceases to do so on the recording of that title in the Register of Sasines or registration in the Land Register of Scotland of the body’s interest in the land.

(7) Where such a security also burdens land other than the land in respect of which title is granted to the Part 3A community body, the security does not, by virtue of subsection (6), cease to burden that other land.

(8) Unless the creditors in right of any such security otherwise agree, the Part 3A community body must pay to them according to their respective rights and preferences any sum which would, but for this subsection, be paid to the owner by the Part 3A community body as consideration for the land.

(9) Any sum paid by a Part 3A community body under subsection (8) must be deducted from the sum which the body is to pay to the owner as consideration for the land.

97S Assessment of value of land etc.

(1) Where Ministers consent to an application made under section 97G, they must, subject to subsection (2), within 7 days of doing so appoint a valuer, being a person who appears to Ministers to be suitably qualified, independent and to have knowledge and experience of valuing land of a kind which is similar to the land being bought, to assess the value of the land to which the application relates.

(2) The validity of anything done under this section is not affected by any failure by Ministers to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (1).

(3) In assessing the value of land in pursuance of an appointment under subsection (1), a valuer—

(a) does not act on behalf of the owner of the land or of the Part 3A community body which is exercising its right to buy the land under this Part, and

(b) is to act as an expert and not as an arbiter.

(4) The value to be assessed is the market value of the land as at the date when Ministers consented to the application made under section 97G relating to the land.

(5) The “market value” of land is the aggregate of—
Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill
Part 4—Community right to buy land

(a) the value it would have on the open market as between a seller and a buyer both of whom are, as respects the transaction, willing,

(b) any depreciation in the value of other land or interests belonging to the seller which may result from the transfer of land, including depreciation caused by division of the land by the transfer of land to the Part 3A community body, and

(c) the amount attributable to any disturbance to the seller which may arise in connection with the transfer of the land to the Part 3A community body.

(6) In arriving, for the purposes of this section, at the value which land would have on the open market in the circumstances mentioned in subsection (5)(a)—

(a) account may be taken, in so far as a seller and buyer such as are mentioned in subsection (5) would do so, of any factor attributable to the known existence of a person who (not being the Part 3A community body which is exercising its right to buy the land) would be willing to buy the land at a price higher than others would because of a characteristic of the land which relates peculiarly to that person’s interest in buying it,

(b) no account is to be taken of—

(i) any depreciation of the type mentioned in subsection (5)(b),

(ii) any disturbance of the type mentioned in subsection (5)(c),

(iii) the absence of the period of time during which the land would, on the open market, be likely to be advertised and exposed for sale.

(7) The expense of a valuation under this section is to be met by Ministers.

(8) In carrying out a valuation under this section, the valuer must—

(a) invite—

(i) the owner of the land, and

(ii) the Part 3A community body which is exercising its right to buy the land,

(b) consider any representations made accordingly.

(8A) Where written representations under subsection (8) are received—

(a) from the owner of the land, the valuer must invite the Part 3A community body which is exercising its right to buy the land to send its views on the representations in writing,

(b) from the Part 3A community body which is exercising its right to buy the land, the valuer must invite the owner of the land to send the owner’s views on the representations in writing.

(8B) In carrying out a valuation under this section, the valuer must consider any views sent under subsection (8A).

(9) Where the Part 3A community body and the owner of the land have agreed the valuation of the land they must notify the valuer in writing of that valuation.
(10) The valuer must, within the period set out in subsection (11), notify Ministers, the Part 3A community body and the owner of the land of the assessed value of the land.

(11) The period referred to in subsection (10) is the period of 8 weeks beginning with the date of appointment of the valuer or such longer period as Ministers may, on an application by the valuer, fix.

(12) The validity of anything done under this Part is not affected by any failure by a valuer to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (11).

97T Compensation

(1) Any person, including an owner or former owner of land, who has incurred loss or expense—

(a) in complying with the requirements of this Part following the making of an application under section 97G by a Part 3A community body,

(b) as a result of the withdrawal by the Part 3A community body of its confirmation under section 97P or its failure otherwise to complete the purchase after having so confirmed its intention under that section, or

(c) as a result of the failure of the Part 3A community body which made that application to complete the purchase, is entitled to recover the amount of that loss or expense from the Part 3A community body.

(2) There is no such entitlement where the application made under section 97G is refused.

(3) Where such an application has been refused, the owner of the land who has incurred loss or expense as mentioned in subsection (1)(a) is entitled to recover the amount of that loss or expense from Ministers.

(4) Ministers may, by order, make provision for or in connection with specifying—

(a) amounts payable in respect of loss or expense incurred as mentioned in subsection (1),

(b) amounts payable in respect of loss or expense incurred by virtue of this Part by a person of such other description as may be specified,

(c) the person who is liable to pay those amounts,

(d) the procedure under which claims for compensation under this section are to be made.

(5) Where, at the expiry of such period of time as may be fixed for the purposes of this subsection by an order under subsection (4)(d), any question as to whether compensation is payable or as to the amount of any compensation payable has not been settled as between the parties, either of them may refer the question to the Lands Tribunal.

97U Grants towards Part 3A community bodies’ liabilities to pay compensation

(1) Ministers may, in the circumstances set out in subsection (2), pay a grant to a Part 3A community body.
(2) Those circumstances are—

(a) that after settlement of its other liabilities connected with the exercise of its right to buy land under this Part, the Part 3A community body has insufficient money to pay, or to pay in full, the amount of compensation it has to pay under section 97T,

(b) that the Part 3A community body has taken all reasonable steps to obtain money in order to pay, or to pay in full, that amount (other than applying for a grant under this section) but has been unable to obtain the money, and

(c) that it is in the public interest that Ministers pay the grant.

(3) The fact that all the circumstances set out in subsection (2) are applicable in a particular case does not prevent Ministers from refusing to pay a grant in that case.

(4) A grant under this section may be made subject to conditions which may stipulate repayment in the event of breach.

(5) Ministers may pay a grant under this section only on the application of a Part 3A community body.

(6) An application for such a grant must be made in such form and in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed.

(7) Ministers must issue their decision on an application under this section in writing accompanied by, in the case of a refusal, a statement of the reasons for it.

(8) Ministers’ decision on an application under this section is final.

(1) An owner of land may appeal to the sheriff against a decision by Ministers to give consent to the exercise by a Part 3A community body of its right to buy the land.

(2) A Part 3A community body may appeal to the sheriff against a decision by Ministers not to give consent to the exercise by the Part 3A community body of its right to buy.

(3) Subsection (2) does not extend to Ministers’ decision under section 97K on which of two or more applications to buy the same land is to proceed.

   (ii) Ministers, and

   (iii) any creditor in a standard security with a right to sell the land to which the appeal relates,

(b) under subsection (2) the Part 3A community body must intimate that fact to—

(b) where subsection (5A) applies, by such later date referred to in paragraph (b)(ii) of that subsection.

(5A) This subsection applies where—

(a) the Lands Tribunal considers that it is not reasonable to issue a written statement mentioned in subsection (5) by the time limit specified in paragraph (a) of that subsection, and

(b) before the expiry of that time limit, the Lands Tribunal has notified the parties to the appeal—

(i) that the Lands Tribunal is unable to issue a written statement by that time limit, and

(ii) of the date by which the Lands Tribunal will issue such a written statement.

(a) to comply with the time limit specified in paragraph (a) of subsection (5) above, or

(b) to issue a written statement by the date referred to in paragraph (b) of that subsection.

(6) Ministers are not competent parties to any appeal under this section by reason only that they appointed the valuer whose valuation is the subject of the appeal.

(7) Ministers’ powers under the Lands Tribunal Act 1949 to make rules as respects that Tribunal extend to such rules as may be necessary or expedient to give full effect to this section.

97X Reference to Lands Tribunal of questions on applications

(1) At any time before Ministers reach a decision on an application which has been made under section 97G—

(1) A supporters’ trust interest in buying a football club may be registered only upon an application to the Scottish Ministers in the prescribed form and accompanied by information of the prescribed kind.

(2) An application by a supporters’ trust may only be made in relation to one football club.

(3) More than one supporters’ trust may be registered in respect of the same football club.

(4) On receipt of an application, the Scottish Ministers must—

(a) send a copy of the application and the accompanying information to the owner or operator of the football;

(5) The Scottish Ministers may not decide that a supporters’ trust interest in a football club is to be entered into the register unless they are satisfied that—

(a) the application pertains to a football club which is for the time being a member of the Scottish Professional Football League,

(b) a significant number of the members of the supporters’ trust have a substantial connection with the club,

(c) membership of the supporters’ trust is open to all fans of the relevant football club at an affordable rate,

(e) that it is in the public interest that the supporters’ trust interest be so registered.

(6) Where the Scottish Ministers decide that a supporters’ trust interest is to be entered in the Register they must direct the Keeper to so enter the interest with effect from the date on which the Scottish Ministers made the decision.

62G Effect of registration

(1) For so long as a supporters’ trust’s interest in a football club is registered the owner or operator of the football club is prohibited from—

(a) transferring ownership of that football club,

(b) taking any action with a view to the transfer of ownership of that football club, except in accordance with this Part of this Act.

(2) A transfer of ownership in breach of subsection (1)(a) is of no effect.

(3) Action is taken with a view to a transfer of ownership of a football club for the purposes of this section when—

(a) the football club is, by or with the authority of the owner or operator of the football club advertised or otherwise exposed for sale,

(b) the owner or operator of the football club, or a person acting on behalf of the owner or operator, enters into negotiations with another person with a view to the transfer of ownership of the football club, or

(b) an owner or operator of that football club sells shares in the club in such a way as to transfer the controlling interest in the club without exposing the club for sale,
CommUnity Empowerment (Scotland) Bill
Part 5B—Supporters’ Trust’s right to buy Scottish Professional Football League clubs

the owner or operator of the club is not acting in accordance with this section and those shares must be offered for re-sale to the supporters’ trust or trusts with a registered interest in the club.

62H Procedure for late applications

(1) This section applies in relation to an application to register a supporters’ trust interest in a football club—

(a) where the application is received by the Scottish Ministers—

(i) after the date on which the owner or operator of the football club has taken action which, if a supporters’ trust interest had been registered, would be prohibited under section 62G, and

(ii) before the date on which—

(A) transfer of ownership of the football club is concluded, or

(B) an option to buy the football club is conferred, in pursuance of that action, or

(b) where another supporters’ trust has registered an interest in the football club, where the application is received by the Scottish Ministers—

(i) after the date on which the owner or operator of the football club has, under section 62J, notified that supporters’ trust that a transfer is proposed, and

(ii) before the Scottish Ministers have consented, under section 62L, to a transfer to that supporters’ trust.

(2) Where this section applies in relation to an application the owner or operator of the football club must, on receipt of an invitation under section 62F, inform the Scottish Ministers that this section applies.

(3) Where this section applies in relation to an application, the Scottish Ministers may not decide that a supporters’ trust interest is to be entered in the Register unless they are satisfied—

(a) that there were good reasons why the supporters’ trust did not secure the receipt of an application before the owner or operator of the football club took the action, or gave the notice, such as is mentioned in subsection (1),

(b) that the level of support within the supporters’ trust for such registration is significantly greater than that which the Scottish Ministers would, have considered sufficient for the purposes of section 62F(5)(d) had the application been received before that action was taken or, as the case may be, the notice was given, and

(c) that the factors bearing on whether it is or is not in the public interest that the supporters’ trust be registered are strongly indicative that it is.

(4) Where a supporters’ trust interest in a football club is registered in pursuance of an application in relation to which this section applies—

(a) the owner or operator of the football club is, for the purposes of this Part of this Act (other than section 62Q(4)), deemed to have, on the date on which that interest is so registered, given notice under section 62O that a transfer is proposed,

(b) section 62O does not apply in so far as it relates to that interest, and
(c) for the purposes of sections 62O and 62Q, the supporters’ trust is deemed to have sent the confirmation which the Scottish Ministers would, had section 62K applied, have required to seek under subsection (2)(a) of that section on the date on which the interest is registered.

(5) Where, but for the provision made by subsection (1)(a)(ii), this section would apply in relation to an application to register a supporters’ trust interest in a football club the Scottish Ministers must decline to consider the application.

Activation of right to buy

62I Activation of supporters’ trust right to buy

(1) The right to buy a football club in which a supporters’ trust interest has been registered arises and may be exercised when the owner or operator of that club is deemed to have given notice under subsection (2)—

(a) of an intention to transfer ownership of the club, or

(b) that the club has entered into formal insolvency.

(2) Where subsection (1)(a) or (b) apply the owner or operator of the football club in respect of which the supporters trust interest is registered shall notify that fact to—

(a) the supporters’ trust, or trusts, in respect of which the interest is registered, and

(b) the Scottish Ministers.

(3) Notification under subsection (2) must be given in such form and otherwise in accordance with such provisions as are prescribed.

Supporters’ trust right to buy

62J Supporters’ trust right to buy

The right to buy a football club in which a supporters’ trust interest has been registered may be exercised at any time after that interest has been entered into the register by the Keeper.

62K Procedure after activation of right to buy

(1) On receipt of a notification under section 62I, the Scottish Ministers must direct the Keeper to enter particulars of the notification in the Register.

(2) Not later than 7 days after such receipt of the notification the Scottish Ministers must—

(a) send to the supporters’ trust or trusts which has registered the interest in the football club a notice in the prescribed form seeking its confirmation in writing that it will exercise its right to buy the football club, and

(b) send to the owner or operator of the football club a notice in the prescribed form narrating their compliance with paragraph (a).

(3) A notice under subsection (2)(a) must specify the date referred to in and narrate the effect of subsection (4) below.
(4) If, by the date specified in the notice, being a date not later than 30 days after it was sent, the supporters’ trust has not caused its confirmation to be received by the Scottish Ministers, Ministers must be deemed to have received written notice from the supporters’ trust under subsection (1) of section 62M that it will not exercise its right to buy the football club and subsections (2) to (4) of that section must apply accordingly.

(5) The Scottish Ministers must send a copy of—
   (a) the notice sent under subsection (2)(a), and
   (b) any confirmation received by them in pursuance of this section, to the owner of the club and to the Keeper.

(6) Any failure to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (2) above does not affect the validity of anything done under this section.

62L Exercise of right to buy: approval of supporters’ trust and consent of the Scottish Ministers

(1) A supporters’ trust must not proceed to buy the football club under this Part of this Act without—
   (a) the approval of the supporters’ trust, and
   (b) the consent of the Scottish Ministers.

(2) The supporters’ trust are to be taken as having given their approval for the purposes of subsections (1) and (3) if Scottish Ministers are satisfied—
   (a) that—
      (i) at least half of the members of the supporters’ trust, as defined for the purposes of section 62B, have voted in a ballot conducted by the supporters’ trust on the question whether the supporters’ trust should buy the football club, or
      (ii) where less than half of the members of the supporters trust have so voted, the proportion which did vote is, in the circumstances, sufficient to justify the supporters’ trust proceeding to buy the football club,
   (b) that the majority of those voting have voted in favour of the proposition that the supporters’ trust buy the football club, and
   (c) that this vote should have taken place within five months prior to the issue of the notice within section 62I or during the 30 day period specified within section 62K.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may not consent for the purposes of subsection (1) unless the supporters’ trust have given their approval and the Scottish Ministers are satisfied—
   (a) that the football club is a club within the meaning of section 62C,
   (b) that the supporters’ trust continues to comply with the provisions of section 62B,
   (c) that the proposed purchase of the football club is in the public interest, and
   (d) that there has not, since the date on which they decided the supporters’ trust’s interest should be registered, been a change in any matters to the extent that, if the application to register the supporters’ trust interest were made afresh, they would decide that the interest is not to be entered in the Register.
A supporters’ trust may require the Scottish Ministers to treat as confidential any information or document relating to arrangements for the raising or expenditure of money to enable the football club to be purchased.

The Scottish Ministers must, within the time limit specified in subsection (6), send notice of their decision as to consent and their reasons for it in writing to the supporters’ trust and to the owner of the football club and must direct the Keeper to enter a record of that decision in the Register.

That time limit is—

(b) where two or more supporters’ trusts have confirmed that they will exercise their right to buy the club, the 21 days following receipt of such notification in respect of the last of the ballots conducted by those bodies.

Any failure to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (6) above does not affect the validity of anything done under this section.

If, at any time, a supporters’ trust which has registered a supporters’ trust interest decides that it will not exercise its right to buy the football club, it must give the Scottish Ministers written notice of its decision.

On receipt of a notice under subsection (1) above, the Scottish Ministers must—

(a) send a copy of it to the Keeper and direct the Keeper to delete the supporters’ trust interest from the Register, and

(b) notify the owner or operator of the football club of that fact.

Where, when that notice is given, that right to buy has arisen, the right is then extinguished.

Nothing in or done under subsections (1) to (3) above prevents a supporters’ trust from registering a supporters’ trust interest in the same football club for a second or subsequent time.

If, at any time after the owner or operator of the club has given notice under section 62I but before the owner has concluded missives with a supporters’ trust for the sale and purchase of the football club in respect of which a right to buy has arisen, the owner or operator of the football club decides not to proceed further with the proposed transfer the owner shall give written notice of that fact to—

(a) the Scottish Ministers, and

(b) each supporters’ trust which has registered an interest in the football club.

The Scottish Ministers must send a copy of the notice given under subsection (5) to the Keeper.

Where a notice is given under subsection (5), the right to buy the football club which arose under section 62I is extinguished.

Nothing in subsection (7) above prevents a right to buy a football club from arising for a second or subsequent time.
62N Right to buy same club exercisable by only one supporters’ trust

(1) Only one supporters’ trust may exercise the right to buy a football club in which two or more supporters’ trust bodies have registered supporters’ trust interests.

(2) Where two or more supporters’ trusts have confirmed that they will exercise their rights to buy such a football club it is for the Scottish Ministers to decide which one is to proceed.

(3) On the Scottish Ministers so deciding—

(a) the other supporters’ trust’s right to buy the football club is extinguished, and

(b) they must—

(i) direct the Keeper to delete its interest from the Register, and

(ii) notify the owner or operator of the football club and the supporters’ trusts of that fact.

Procedure for buying

62O Procedure for buying

(1) It is for the supporters’ trust to make the offer to buy in exercise of the right conferred by this Part of this Act.

(2) The offer shall be at a price—

(a) agreed between the supporters’ trust and the owner or operator of the football club; or

(b) where no such agreement is reached, equal to—

(i) the value assessed by the appointed valuer, or

(ii) if that value is the subject of an appeal under section 62R, the value determined by the appeal, and shall specify the date of transfer of ownership and of payment of the price in accordance with subsection (3).

(3) The date of transfer of ownership and payment of the price shall be—

(a) a date not later than 6 months from the date when the supporters’ trust sent the confirmation sought by the Scottish Ministers under section 62K of its intention to buy,

(b) where the price assessed by the appointed valuer is the subject of an appeal under section 62R which has not, within the period of 4 months after the date when the supporters’ trust sent that confirmation, been—

(i) determined, or

(ii) abandoned following agreement between the supporters’ trust and the owner of the club, a date not later than 2 months after the appeal is so determined or, as the case may be, abandoned, or

(iii) such later date as may be agreed between the supporters’ trust and the owner of the club.

(4) The offer may include such other reasonable conditions as are necessary or expedient to secure the efficient progress and completion of the transfer.
(5) If a supporters’ trust has not, within the period fixed by or agreed under subsection (3) above, done any of the things mentioned in subsection (6) below, the supporters’ trust right to buy the club is extinguished and the Scottish Ministers must—

(a) direct the Keeper to delete its interest in the club from the Register, and

(b) notify the owner of the club of that fact.

(6) The things referred to in subsection (5) above are—

(a) concluding missives with the owner or operator of the football club for its sale to the supporters’ trust,

(b) if the supporters’ trust has not so concluded missives, taking all steps which, in the opinion of the Scottish Ministers, it could reasonably have taken in the time available towards so concluding missives.

(7) The Scottish Ministers may, by regulations, make provision about when ownership is to be treated as transferred for the purposes of this section.

62P Application for funding

(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, the Scottish Ministers may make payments to a supporters’ trust applying to the Scottish Ministers for funding in order to make an offer to buy a football club in exercise of the right conferred by this Part of this Act.

(2) Any supporters’ trust applying for funding must have—

(a) obtained the approval of the supporters’ trust to proceed to buy the football club,

(b) obtained the consent of the Scottish Ministers to proceed to buy the football club,

(c) met any other conditions as the Scottish Ministers may so prescribe.

(3) Any application for funding must be made in such form and manner and by such date as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe, and the applicant in question shall provide such particulars and information relating to the application as the Scottish Ministers may reasonably require.

(4) The applicant shall furnish to the Scottish Ministers such further information and evidence in relation to the application as the Scottish Ministers reasonably may require in order to allow proper consideration of the application.

(5) A person may submit more than one application under this paragraph.

(6) The Scottish Ministers shall inform an applicant in writing whether the application is approved or not and if it is not approved shall give reasons in writing for not approving it.

62Q Assessment of value of football club

(1) The Scottish Ministers must, within 7 days of the receipt of a confirmation, sought by them under section 62K(2)(a), that a supporters’ trust will exercise its right to buy the football club, appoint a valuer, being a person who appears to the Scottish Ministers to be suitably qualified, independent and to have knowledge and experience of valuing a club.

(2) The validity of anything done under this section is not affected by any failure by the Scottish Ministers to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (1) above.
(3) In assessing the value of the football club in pursuance of an appointment under subsection (1) above, a valuer—
   (a) does not act on behalf of the owner or operator of the club or the supporters’ trust which is exercising its right to buy the football club, and
   (b) shall act as an expert and not as an arbiter.

(4) The value to be assessed is the market value of the football club—
   (a) as at the date of notification under section 62I(1) which gave rise to the right to buy the football club; or
   (b) in a case where the supporters’ trust’s interest was registered in pursuance of an application to which section 62H applied, as at the date of the Scottish Ministers’ receipt of that application.

(5) The “market value” of the football club, for the purposes of subsection (4), is the aggregate of the value it would have on the open market as between a seller and a buyer both of whom are, as respects the transaction, willing; and

(6) In assessing, for those purposes, the value which the football would have in the circumstances mentioned in subsection (5) above—
   (a) account may be taken, insofar as a seller and a buyer of the football club such as are mentioned in subsection (5) would do so, of any factor attributable to the known existence of a person who (not being the supporters’ trust which is exercising its right to buy the club) would be willing to buy the football club at a price higher than other persons because of a characteristic of the club which relates peculiarly to that person’s interest in buying it;
   (b) no account shall be taken of—
      (i) the registration of an interest in or the exercise of a right to buy the football club by a supporters’ trust under this Part of this Act,
      (ii) the absence of the period of time during which the football club would, on the open market, be likely to be advertised and exposed for sale,
      (iii) the expenses of the valuation or otherwise related to the sale and purchase of the club.

(7) The expense of a valuation under this section shall be met by the Scottish Ministers.

   (a) a decision by the Scottish Ministers that a supporters’ trust interest in the football club is to be entered in the Register,

(b) a decision by the Scottish Ministers to consent to the exercise of the supporters’ trust right to buy a football club.

(4) An appeal under subsection (1), (2) or (3) above shall be lodged within 28 days of the date on which the Scottish Ministers decided whether to enter the supporters’ trust interest or, as the case may be, whether to consent to the exercise of the right to buy the football club.

(5) The sheriff in whose sheriffdom the land or any part of it is situated has jurisdiction to hear an appeal under this section.

(6) Where an appeal is made—

(3) This section does not—
   (a) preclude a supporters’ trust with a registered interest in a football club from available for sale,

   (b) require a supporters’ trust with a registered interest in a football club to purchase

Bill type: Government Bill
COMMUNITY EMPOWERMENT (SCOTLAND) BILL
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

REVISED EXPLANATORY NOTES

INTRODUCTION

1. As required under Rule 9.7.8A of the Parliament’s Standing Orders, these Revised Explanatory Notes are published to accompany the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill (which was introduced in the Scottish Parliament on 11 June 2014) as amended at Stage 2. Text has been added or deleted as necessary to reflect the amendments made to the Bill at Stage 2 and these changes are indicated by sidelining in the right margin.

2. These Explanatory Notes have been prepared by the Scottish Government in order to assist the reader of the Bill and to help inform debate on it. They do not form part of the Bill and have not been endorsed by the Parliament.

3. The Notes should be read in conjunction with the Bill. They are not, and are not meant to be, a comprehensive description of the Bill. So where a section or schedule, or a part of a section or schedule, does not seem to require any explanation or comment, none is given.

OVERVIEW

4. The Bill reflects the policy principles of subsidiarity, community empowerment and improving outcomes and provides a framework which will:

- empower community bodies through the ownership of land and buildings and strengthening their voices in the decisions that matter to them; and
- support an increase in the pace and scale of public service reform by cementing the focus on achieving outcomes and improving the process of community planning.

5. The Bill comprises 12 Parts with 5 schedules:

- Part 1 places a duty on the Scottish Ministers to prescribe a set of national outcomes for Scotland, which builds on the “Scotland Performs” framework.
- Part 2 places community planning partnerships on a statutory footing and imposes duties on them around the planning and delivery of local outcomes. Schedule 1 lists the bodies which are to be community planning partners. This Part replaces provision in Part 2 of the Local Government in Scotland Act 2003, which is repealed by schedule 5.

- Part 3 provides a mechanism for communities to have a more proactive role in having their voices heard in how services are planned and delivered. Schedule 2 lists “public service authorities” to whom participation requests can be made.

- Part 4 amends Part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, extending the community right to buy to all of Scotland, and introduces a new Part 3A to that Act to make provision for community bodies to purchase neglected and abandoned land where the owner is not willing to sell that land. It also makes changes to the procedures set out in Part 3 of that Act, relating to the crofting community right to buy.

- Part 5 provides community bodies a right to request to purchase, lease, manage or use land and buildings belonging to local authorities, certain Scottish public bodies or the Scottish Ministers. The list of “relevant authorities” affected is given in schedule 3.

- Part 5A amends the meaning of “community body” in the Forestry Act 1967, in relation to the delegation of the Forestry Commissioners’ functions.

- Part 5B introduces a mechanism for supporters’ trusts to have a right to buy football clubs within the Scottish Professional Football League. The provisions are modelled on those of Part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, but they allow for a supporters’ trust to exercise the right to buy at any time after it has registered an interest.

- Part 6 places a statutory duty on local authorities to establish and maintain a register of all property held by them for the common good. It also requires local authorities to publish their proposals and consult community bodies before disposing of or changing the use of common good assets.

- Part 7 updates and simplifies legislation on allotments. It requires local authorities to take reasonable steps to provide more allotments if waiting lists exceed certain trigger points and ensures appropriate protection for local authorities and plot holders. This replaces the provisions of the Allotments (Scotland) Acts 1892, 1922 and 1950, which are repealed in their entirety by schedule 5, and some provisions of the Land Settlement (Scotland) Act 1919.

- Part 7A provides a power for the Scottish Ministers to make regulations to promote or facilitate participation in public decision-making, including in decisions on the allocation of resources.

- Part 8 provides for a new power which will allow councils to create and fund their own localised business rate relief schemes to better reflect local needs and support communities. It does this by inserting a new section into the Local Government (Financial Provisions etc.) (Scotland) Act 1962.

- Part 9 makes general provisions in relation to the Bill, including provision about subordinate legislation, ancillary provision and commencement. Schedule 4 makes minor and consequential amendments to other legislation, and schedule 5 provides for repeals.
COMMENTARY ON SECTIONS

Part 1: National outcomes

6. The Bill places a duty on the Scottish Ministers to prescribe a set of national outcomes for Scotland. They must also consult on and then lay a report before the Scottish Parliament every two years outlining progress towards those outcomes. These duties do not require governments to use a particular model of purpose, targets, outcomes and indicators. They require national outcomes to be determined, but there is flexibility as to how these may be presented and measured.

7. The Bill now contains two separate processes for setting and reviewing the national outcomes. In particular, two public consultations and two parliamentary procedures are required when the national outcomes are first set and every time they are changed.

National outcomes

8. Subsection (1) of section 1 provides that the Scottish Ministers must prescribe national outcomes by way of regulations. National outcomes are outcomes for Scotland that result from or are contributed to by the devolved functions set out in subsection (1B) carried out by the persons set out in subsection (1A). The provisions are wide to allow the inclusion of all organisations that could be considered as “public bodies”, and other organisations that carry out public functions, such as private or third sector bodies who are contracted to deliver public services. The persons included in the category “Scottish public authority” include the Scottish Ministers and local authorities. Subsection (1C) makes it clear that the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Parliamentary Corporate Body are not subject to the duty to have regard to national outcomes in carrying out their functions.

9. Subsections (1D) to (3A) set out the first of the two procedures which must be followed in relation to setting the national outcomes. The first procedure is based on the national outcomes being determined by the Scottish Ministers. The second procedure is based on the national outcomes being prescribed by regulations.

10. Subsection (1D) requires that when determining the national outcomes, the Scottish Ministers must have regard to the reduction of inequalities of outcomes which result from socio-economic disadvantage.

11. Subsection (2)(a) requires the Scottish Ministers to consult “such persons as they consider appropriate” before determining the national outcomes. No list is specified, but since the national outcomes will have an impact on the devolved functions of all public bodies, it is expected that Ministers will want to consult widely. Having consulted such persons as they consider appropriate, subsection (2)(b) requires the Scottish Ministers to prepare draft national outcomes. Subsection (2)(c) requires the Scottish Ministers to then consult the Scottish Parliament on the draft national outcomes for a period of 40 days (as set out in subsection (3A)). Rule 17.5 of the Scottish Parliament’s Standing Orders will apply to the consultation. Subsection (3) provides that the national outcomes cannot be published until the 40 day period for consulting the Scottish Parliament has elapsed.
Subsection (4) imposes a duty on those persons set out in subsection (1A) to “have regard to” the national outcomes in carrying out the devolved functions mentioned in subsection (1B). “Have regard to” means that all of these bodies should be consistent with the national outcomes in what they are trying to achieve in carrying out their devolved functions. The duty in subsection (4), however, does not apply to the bodies mentioned in subsection (1C).

Regulations under section 1(1): procedure

Subsection (1) provides that a draft statutory instrument containing the draft national outcomes must be laid before, and approved by, the Scottish Parliament before the regulations are made by the Scottish Ministers. This is equivalent to the affirmative Parliamentary procedure for Scottish statutory instruments.

Subsections (2) to (4) impose an additional stage upon the process normally required by affirmative procedure, so that an enhanced or “super-affirmative” procedure applies. Subsection (2) provides a list of individuals and groups who must be consulted for a period of 60 days before the draft regulations are laid before the Scottish Parliament for approval. For the purposes of this consultation, the Scottish Ministers are required to publish and lay a copy of the proposed draft regulations in the Scottish Parliament. Provision in relation to the 60 day consultation period, including on how it is to be calculated, is contained in subsections (3)(c) and (4).

Subsection (5) requires the Scottish Ministers to provide the Scottish Parliament with a document giving details of the consultation process when laying the draft regulations before the Parliament.

Review of national outcomes

Subsection (1) of section 2 provides that the Scottish Ministers may review the national outcomes at any time. This is subject to subsection (2) which requires that, once the Scottish Ministers have published national outcomes, they must begin to review them before the expiry of 5 years from publication at a minimum. It will be for the Scottish Ministers to decide how frequently within that 5 year period they wish to review the national outcomes.

Subsection (1) is also subject to subsection (3) which provides that the Scottish Ministers must begin further reviews of the national outcomes every 5 years at a minimum from the date of publication of revised national outcomes or republished national outcomes. It is also subject to subsection (3A) which provides that in any review of the national outcomes the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

Subsection (4) provides that the Scottish Ministers may revise the national outcomes following a review. Subsection (4)(zb) provides that if after a review revisions are made to the national outcomes, the Scottish Ministers must then consult the Scottish Parliament for a period of 40 days on these proposed revisions. It also provides that if after a review has taken place no revisions are proposed, the Scottish Parliament will still be consulted for the 40 day period on the existing national outcomes. Rule 17.5 of the Scottish Parliament’s Standing Orders will apply to the consultation, and subsection (8) provides detail on how the 40 day period is to be calculated.

20. After the consultation period, the national outcomes must then either be published as revised or, where no changes are made, they must be republished. In either case, this will mark the beginning of the 5 year period under subsection (3).

21. The effect of sections 1(1) and 1A is that a further procedure is required, in addition to that set out in section 2, before the national outcomes could in fact be revised. Any changes to the national outcomes prescribed by regulations under section 1(1) would need to be made by regulations subject to the enhanced affirmative procedure set out at section 1A. Consequently, two public consultations and two parliamentary processes must be carried out in order to revise the national outcomes.

Reports

22. Subsection (1) of section 3 requires that the Scottish Ministers must lay before the Scottish Parliament a report on progress towards achieving the national outcomes, whether that is positive or negative progress, at the end of each 2 year period (defined in subsection (6) as beginning with the day on which section 3 comes into force). The report must include information on progress since the previous report (subsection (2)).

23. Subsection (4) provides that in preparing the report, the Scottish Ministers must consult with a list of individuals and groups.

24. Subsection (5) provides that as soon as practicable after laying the report before the Scottish Parliament, the Scottish Ministers must publish the report in such manner as they consider appropriate.

Interpretation of Part 1

25. Section 3A contains definitions for “community”, “postcode unit”, “third sector bodies” and “third sector interface” for the purposes of Part 1 of the Bill. These terms are used in relation to people who must be consulted. “Community” is defined by reference to persons who are resident or entitled to vote in a particular area.

Part 2: Community planning

26. This Part replaces provisions on community planning in Part 2 of the Local Government in Scotland Act 2003. It provides a statutory basis for community planning partnerships, and places duties on them around the planning and achievement of local outcomes. It also focuses responsibilities on community planning partners to support each partnership to fulfil its duties.

Community planning

27. Section 4 defines “community planning”, “community planning partners” and “community planning partnerships”. Community planning is planning that is carried out for the purpose of improving the achievement of outcomes resulting from, or contributed to by, the provision of services delivered by or on behalf of the community planning partners. Subsection
This document relates to the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2
(SP Bill 52A)

(3) states that these local outcomes must be consistent with national outcomes which the Scottish Ministers determine under section 1(1), or as revised under section 2(4)(a). The persons listed in schedule 1, together with local authorities, are the community planning partners. The community planning partnership comprises these partners when they participate together in community planning.

28. Subsection (5) requires a community planning partnership to consider which community bodies are likely to be able to contribute to community planning, having regard in particular to which of those bodies represent the interests of persons who experience inequalities of outcome which result from socio-economic disadvantage. The community planning partnership must make all reasonable efforts to secure the participation of appropriate community bodies in community planning, and to take steps to enable them to participate to the extent they wish to.

29. Subsection (6) enables the Scottish Ministers to amend the list of community planning partners in schedule 1 by regulations. Subsection (7) states that the regulations may provide that a community planning partner may participate in community planning for a specific purpose, where participation is required in relation to some of that partner’s functions but not others.

Socio-economic inequalities

30. Section 4A requires that community planning partnerships when carrying out their functions do so with a view to reducing inequalities of outcome which result from socio-économic disadvantage, unless the partnership consider it inappropriate to do so. Whilst community planning partnerships must act with a view to reducing inequalities this should not preclude them taking actions which improve outcomes without of themselves reducing inequalities.

Local outcomes improvement plan

31. Under section 5 each community planning partnership must prepare a local outcomes improvement plan. To that end the community planning partnership must identify the local outcomes to which it is to give priority with a view to improving the achievement of the outcomes. The plan will provide a description of the improvement in local outcomes that is sought and the timeframe for achieving the improvement (subsection (2)). Subsection (3) requires the partnership to consult such community bodies and other persons as it considers appropriate when it prepares its plan. Subsection (4) sets out what a partnership must take account of before it publishes its final plan. This includes representations it receives as a result of the consultations with community bodies and other persons carried out in accordance with subsection (3). The partnership must also take account of the needs and circumstances of people and communities in the area.

Local outcomes improvement plan: review

32. Section 6 requires that the community planning partnership must monitor progress in improving the achievement of local outcomes referred to in its local outcome improvement plan.
This document relates to the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2
(SP Bill 52A)

It must keep the plan under review to determine whether the plan itself is still appropriate and must publish any revised plan which results from such a review.

Local outcomes improvement plan: progress report

33. Under section 7, each partnership must prepare and publish an annual report of progress, setting out its assessment of whether there has been any improvement in the achievement of local outcomes referred to in its local outcome improvement plan, the extent to which the community planning partnership has participated with community bodies, and the extent to which that participation has been effective in contributing to community planning. The period which these reports must cover is the year beginning on 1 April, unless Ministers specify another date for the year to start in a direction to the partnership.

Governance

34. Section 8 places governance responsibilities on specified community planning partners for the purpose of effective community planning. Under subsection (1)(a) the specified partners must facilitate community planning and under subsection (1)(b) the specified partners must take reasonable steps to ensure that the partnership operates efficiently and effectively. Subsection (2) lists the persons to whom these governance duties apply. Subsection (3) enables Ministers to modify this list by regulations.

Duties on community planning partners

35. Subsections (2) to (5) of section 9 describe how the community planning partners, listed in schedule 1, must participate in community planning. These responsibilities include cooperating with other community planning partners in carrying out community planning (subsection (2)) and taking account of the published local outcomes improvement plan as part of its work (subsection (5)). They also include committing appropriate resources to the achievement of local outcomes set out in that plan and for the purpose of securing the participation of relevant community bodies in community planning (subsection (3)). Each community planning partner must provide the partnership with such information about the local outcomes in the plan which the partnership may request (subsection (4)). Section 9(1) enables a partnership to agree with a partner a reduction in the extent to which that partner is expected to comply with its duties to that partnership.

Guidance by Scottish Ministers

36. Section 10 provides that each community planning partnership and community planning partner must have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers about the carrying out of their community planning functions. The Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they think fit before they issue any such guidance.

Duty to promote community planning

37. Section 11 requires the Scottish Ministers to promote community planning when discharging any function which might affect community planning, or a community planning partner. It reproduces a provision previously in section 16(8) of the Local Government in Scotland Act 2003.
Establishment of corporate bodies

38. Section 19 of the Local Government in Scotland Act 2003 gives the Scottish Ministers a power to establish corporate bodies to co-ordinate community planning. As a body corporate, a community planning partnership could, for example, hold its own budgets and assets and employ its own staff.

39. Section 12 of the Bill retains the option of incorporation in appropriate cases, by replacing the provisions of section 19 of the 2003 Act. Subsection (1) allows the Scottish Ministers to establish a body corporate by regulations, following an application made jointly by each person mentioned in section 8(2). Any application must include information about the matters which are listed in subsection (2). Subsection (3) lists matters about the body corporate which the Scottish Ministers can specify in any regulations they make. Subsection (4) allows the regulations to provide that the corporate body may discharge a function, even where another enactment specifies that as the function of another body or prevents the carrying out of that function by the corporate body.

Part 3: Participation requests

40. This Part sets out how a “community participation body” can make a request to a “public service authority” to participate in a process with a view to improving an outcome of a public service, and how public service authorities are to deal with such requests. The Bill provides the main structure of the approach, and there are powers for the Scottish Ministers to make regulations adding more detail about procedures to be followed, timescales, and information to be provided or published. There is also a requirement (in section 25B) for public service authorities to have regard to guidance in carrying out their functions under this Part.

Community controlled body

41. Section 14 defines a “community-controlled body”. This can be a corporate body or unincorporated, but it must have a written constitution which:

- defines the community to which the body relates;
- provides membership rules which ensure the body is open to and controlled by members of that community, and that the majority of the members of the body are members of that community;
- sets out aims and purposes which include the promotion of a benefit for that community; and
- provides that any surplus funds or assets are to be used for the benefit of that community.

There are no restrictions on how a community may be defined for this purpose: it may be based, for example, on geographical boundaries, common interests, or shared characteristics of its members (such as ethnic background, disability, religion, etc.).
Community participation body

42. Section 15 defines a “community participation body”, which is the type of body which can make a participation request under section 17. A community participation body may be a community-controlled body, a community council, or a body designated by the Scottish Ministers. The Scottish Ministers may designate individual bodies as community participation bodies, or may designate a whole class of bodies, so that any body of that type will qualify as a community participation body. Subsection (3) states that where a trust is designated, the designated body will be the trustees, since a trust is not incorporated.

Public service authority

43. Schedule 2, introduced by section 16, lists the bodies to which a participation request can be made, to be known as “public service authorities”. This includes local authorities, Health Boards, and certain other Scottish public bodies. The public bodies selected are involved in providing or supporting local services. The list does not include, for example, boards which advise Ministers or which regulate certain professions.

44. The remainder of section 16 gives the Scottish Ministers a power to remove or amend any entry on the list, or to make an order designating other bodies or classes of bodies as public service authorities. Subsection (4) provides that persons may only be designated if they fall into the following categories:

- part of the Scottish Administration (which has the meaning given in sections 126(6) to (8) of the Scotland Act 1998);
- “Scottish public authorities with mixed functions or no reserved functions under the Scotland Act 1998” – this means that UK Government Departments and public bodies that deal with matters reserved to the UK Government cannot be included;
- companies wholly-owned by public service authorities.

Under subsection (9), when adding a person to the list, the Scottish Ministers may exclude some of the services they provide from being subject to participation requests.

Participation requests and the outcome improvement process

45. Section 17 provides that a community participation body, or two or more bodies jointly, may make a participation request to a public service authority. This is a request to take part in a process established by the authority with a view to improving an outcome of a public service. Subsection (2) says that the request must focus on an outcome relating to a service provided by that authority, and the community participation body must explain why it considers it should be involved, what it can bring to the process (for example, members’ experience as users of the service), and what improvement it expects might be achieved as a result. Subsection (3A) provides that the request may also ask that one or more other public service authorities should participate in the outcome improvement process, in addition to the authority to which the request is made.

46. Section 18 gives the Scottish Ministers powers to make regulations setting out further detail on participation requests. Regulations can, in particular, cover how requests are to be made, how public service authorities should deal with them, additional information to be provided in connection with requests, and ways in which public service authorities are to promote the use of participation requests and support communities to make them and participate in outcome improvement processes.

47. Section 19 requires a public service authority to agree to or refuse any participation request it receives, and sets out in subsections (3) to (5) how the authority must make that decision. In addition to the reasons provided in the request, the authority must consider whether agreeing to the request would be likely to promote or improve economic development, regeneration, public health, social or environmental wellbeing, to reduce inequalities that arise from socio-economic disadvantage or increase participation of people experiencing such disadvantage, and any other benefits or matters the authority considers relevant. The authority must also take into account its responsibilities in relation to equal opportunities. It must agree to the request unless there are reasonable grounds for refusal. Subsection (6) requires the authority to give notice of its decision to the community participation body within a prescribed period, and if it refuses the request, it must give reasons for that refusal.

48. When a public service authority agrees to a participation request, the decision notice sent to the community participation body must, under section 20, describe how the outcome improvement process will work, how the body is expected to take part in the process, and whether and how any other person (including another body or another authority) will be involved. The authority may already have established a process with which the community participation body can join in, in which case the authority must say what stage the process has reached. If a new process is to be established as a result of the request, the community participation body has 28 days to comment on that new process, under section 21(2) and (3). The public service authority has a further 28 days to provide final details of that process, taking those representations into account, and must then (under section 23) establish the outcome improvement process within 90 days, and maintain it. The authority must publish information about the process if required to do so by regulations made under section 21(6). Section 24 provides that the public service authority may modify the process, following consultation with the community participation body. If it does so, it must publish information about the modification, if required to do so by regulations.

49. Section 22 allows a public service authority to decline to consider a participation request, if a new request is made within 2 years about the same outcome relating to the same service. The new request may be declined whether it is made by the same community participation body as the previous request or by a different body.

50. Section 24A provides that a community participation body may appeal to the Scottish Ministers if a participation request is refused, or if the body has significant concerns about the outcome improvement process described in the decision notice, whether this is a pre-existing process or the proposed process after the community participation body has made representations under section 21. The Scottish Ministers may make regulations about the procedures and time limits for such appeals. The Scottish Ministers may dismiss the appeal, may direct the public service authority to agree the request, or may direct the authority to make specified alterations to the decision notice.
51. When an outcome improvement process has been completed, section 25 requires the public service authority to publish a report on the process. The report must summarise the outcome of the process, including whether the outcome to which it related has been improved, and describe how the community participation body that made the request influenced the process and the outcomes. It must also explain how the authority will keep the community participation body and others informed about changes in the outcomes of the process and any other matters relating to the outcomes. In preparing the report, the public service authority must seek the views of the community participation body which made the request, and any others that participated in the outcome improvement process. Subsection (4) gives the Scottish Ministers power to make regulations setting out further detail about these reports and the information they are to contain.

52. Section 25A requires a public service authority to publish an annual report on the number of participation request received and their outcomes, and any action taken by the authority to promote the use of participation requests and support community bodies to make them.

Part 4: Community right to buy land (sections 27 to 47 – modifications of Part 2 of Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003)

Introduction

54. Part 2 of the 2003 Act provides bodies representing rural communities with rights to register an interest in land with which the community has a connection. These bodies have a right to purchase that land if the owner is willing to sell it. Part 2 of the 2003 Act sets out the land in respect of which an interest can be registered, and the procedure for registering an interest. It also sets out the circumstances in which the right to buy the land in respect of which an interest is registered arises and the procedures for exercising it (including procedures for valuation of the land, for appeals and for compensation).

Nature of land in which community interest may be registered

55. Section 27 of the Bill amends section 33 of the 2003 Act. Section 33 of the 2003 Act sets out the land in which a community body may register an interest. It provides that an interest can be registered in “registrable land”, which is anything other than “excluded land”. “Excluded land” is designated in the Community Right to Buy (Definition of Excluded Land) (Scotland) Order 2009 as land comprising the settlements listed in the order (which are all settlements of over 10,000 people). In this way, the community right to buy under the 2003 Act applies to community bodies representing rural communities.

56. Section 27(1)(a) of the Bill removes references to “registrable land” in section 33(1) of the 2003 Act which means that an interest can be registered in any land other than “excluded land”. As a result, community bodies will be able to register an interest in respect of land across Scotland, irrespective of the size of settlement.

57. Section 27(1)(b) of the Bill removes the power of the Scottish Ministers to define “excluded land” by order. It amends the definition of “excluded land” in section 33(2) of the 2003 Act to make reference to land consisting of a separate tenement in which an interest cannot be registered if these rights are owned independently of the land.

58. Section 27(1)(d) of the Bill repeals subsections (3) to (7) of section 33 of the 2003 Act. Section 27(1)(c) inserts new subsection (2A) into section 33 of the 2003 Act which reflects the terms of the repealed subsection (6) to provide that a community interest may be registered in salmon fishings and mineral rights (other than rights to oil, coal, gas, gold or silver) which are owned separately from the land to which those interests relate.

Meaning of “community”

59. Section 28 of the Bill modifies section 34 of the 2003 Act which defines a community body eligible to register an interest in land. Section 34 of the 2003 Act provides that a community body is a company limited by guarantee that meets certain criteria.

60. Section 28(2) of the Bill inserts subsection (A1) into section 34 of the 2003 Act. This extends the types of body which may be community bodies under Part 2 of the 2003 Act to include Scottish charitable incorporated organisations (“SCIOs”), community benefit societies (“BenComs”) and any other type of body which Ministers specify in regulations. Section 28(2) also confers a power on Ministers to specify in regulations, and subsequently modify, any requirements which must be met by any such type of body.

61. Section 28(3)(c) of the Bill provides an additional requirement that must be satisfied for a company limited by guarantee to be a community body. The company’s articles of association must make provision for the minutes of meetings to be given to a person on request within 28 days of the request being made if that request is reasonable. The articles of association must also allow the community body to withhold information, provided that reasons are given for doing so.

62. Section 28(3)(d) of the Bill amends section 34(1)(h) of the 2003 Act to include reference to “Part 3A community bodies” which are provided for in the new Part 3A of the 2003 Act (inserted by section 48 of the Bill). This means that community bodies eligible to apply to purchase land under the new Part 3A of the 2003 Act are among the alternative bodies to which community bodies under Part 2 of the 2003 Act may pass their assets upon winding up in terms of their articles of association.

63. Section 28(4) of the Bill inserts new subsections (1A) and (1B) into section 34 of the 2003 Act, which set out the provisions that a SCIO or BenCom must include in its constitution or registered rules for it to be a community body and so eligible to apply to register an interest in land under Part 2 of the 2003 Act.

64. Section 28(5) of the Bill amends section 34(2) of the 2003 Act to allow Ministers to disapply the requirement that the articles of association, constitution or registered rules must state that a community body must have a minimum of 10 members.

65. Section 28(6) of the Bill inserts subsection (4A) into section 34 of the 2003 Act. This subsection gives Ministers the power to modify, by way of regulations, the criteria which must... be met by companies limited by guarantee, SCIOs and BenComs in order to be community bodies under Part 2 of the 2003 Act.

66. Section 28(6) of the Bill also inserts subsection (4B) into section 34 of the 2003 Act. This subsection gives Ministers the power to amend, by way of regulations, subsection (1) and the new subsection (A1) of section 35 of the 2003 Act (inserted by section 29 of the Bill) where Ministers have exercised the power contained in the new subsection (A1)(b) of section 34 of the 2003 Act to extend, by way of regulation, the types of bodies which may be eligible to be community bodies under Part 2 of the 2003 Act. The power contained in subsection (4B) means that the prohibition on a community body modifying its articles of association, memorandum or constitution without the written consent of the Scottish Ministers can be amended to extend to any other kind of constitutive document which may apply to new types of body which may be community bodies as a result of the regulations made by Ministers under the new subsection (A1)(b) of section 34 of the 2003 Act.

67. Section 28(7) of the Bill amends subsection (5) of section 34 of the 2003 Act which provides for the use of postcode units in order to define the community that the community body represents. Section 28(7) of the Bill confers a power on Ministers to make regulations which prescribe other types of area with which a community may define itself.

68. Section 28(8) of the Bill inserts definitions of “community benefit society”, “registered rules” and “Scottish charitable incorporated organisation” into the 2003 Act.

Modification of memorandum, articles of association or constitution

69. Section 29 of the Bill amends section 35 of the 2003 Act which provides that a community body may not modify its memorandum or articles of association without Ministers’ consent whilst they hold a registered interest or own land purchased under Part 2 of the 2003 Act.

70. Section 29(2) of the Bill inserts subsection (A1) into section 35 of the 2003 Act which prohibits a community body from modifying its memorandum, articles of association, constitution or registered rules without the consent of Ministers during a specified period prior to registration of an interest. Section 29(2) of the Bill also inserts subsection (A2) into section 35 of the 2003 Act which provides that the specified period starts with the day a community body submits an application for a registered interest in land and ends with the registration of interest in land, rejection of the application to register land, Ministers declining to consider the application under section 39(5) of the 2003 Act or withdrawal of the application by the community body. This means that the existing prohibition which applies whilst the interest is registered and throughout the time they own land purchased under Part 2 of the 2003 Act (in terms of subsection (1) of section 35 of the 2003 Act) is extended to the period prior to registration.

71. Section 29(3) of the Bill amends subsection (1) of section 35 of the 2003 Act to make reference to the “constitution” or “registered rules” of a community body. This amendment takes account of the inclusion of SCIOs and BenComs as bodies which may be community bodies.
Public notice of certain applications

72. Section 29A of the Bill amends section 37(4) of the 2003 Act and inserts subsections (4A) and (4B). The new provisions set out that, where the owner of the land is unknown or cannot be found and the type of proposed application is one to register an interest in land consisting of salmon fishings or mineral rights which are owned separately from the land in respect of which they are eligible, Ministers have the power to set out in regulations the manner in which the public notice of the application must be made.

Period for indicating approval under section 38 of the 2003 Act

73. Section 30 of the Bill amends section 38 of the 2003 Act which sets out the criteria which must be met before an application to register a community interest in land is approved by Ministers. Subsection (1)(d) of section 38 of the 2003 Act provides that there must be sufficient community support to justify the registration.

74. The word “substantial” is repealed in section 38(1) of the 2003 Act and so the requirement concerning community members having a substantial connection with the land that the community body is seeking to register an interest in will be amended to just refer to a connection with that land.

75. Section 30 of the Bill inserts new subsections (2A) and (2B) into section 38 of the 2003 Act. Subsection (2A) precludes Ministers considering any community support that is dated earlier than 6 months before the date an application to register a community interest in land is received by Ministers. Subsection (2B) gives Ministers the power to amend the time limit in which the approval of a member of the community supporting a community body’s application must be dated.

Procedure for late applications

76. Section 31 of the Bill amends section 39 of the 2003 Act relating to the procedure for late applications. An application is deemed to be “late” when it is received by Ministers after the owner of the land to which an application relates has taken action to transfer the land but before missives are concluded, or an option to acquire is granted, in pursuance of that action.

77. Section 31(2) of the Bill rewords subsection (1) of section 39 of the 2003 Act which sets out the conditions which must be met in order for section 39 to apply.

78. Section 31(3) of the Bill inserts a new paragraph (aa) into section 39(2) of the 2003 Act. The new paragraph allows Ministers to request further information from the owner of the land or a creditor in a standard security with the right to sell the land before the end of the 7-day period following the landowner or the creditor giving their views on the application under section 37(5) of the 2003 Act. The owner of the land or the creditor must provide the information within 7 days of receipt of the request. This information is requested to ensure that Ministers have the necessary evidence on which to decide whether the application is “late”.

79. Section 31(3)(b) of the Bill modifies subsection (2)(b)(ii) of section 39 of the 2003 Act to extend the time in which Ministers have to make a decision on whether the interest should be registered in the case of a “late” application where further information is requested. Where Ministers request further information, this period will be 44 days instead of 30 days.

80. Section 31(4) of the Bill amends subsection (3) of section 39 of the 2003 Act which sets out matters on which Ministers must be satisfied, in addition to the matters set out in section 38, before approving a “late” application. Section 31(4) of the Bill removes the requirement to show “good reasons” why an application was not submitted prior to the land coming on the market and replaces it with a requirement that such relevant work as Ministers consider reasonable was carried out by a person or such relevant steps as Ministers consider reasonable were taken by a person. Section 31(9) of the Bill inserts a new subsection (6) into section 39 of the 2003 Act to define “relevant work” and “relevant steps”.

81. Section 31(4) of the Bill also inserts paragraph (aa) into section 39(3). This sets out the timescales in which the relevant work or steps must have been taken. It is for Ministers to determine whether the relevant work or steps were carried out sufficiently in advance of the landowner taking action with a view to selling the land or giving notice that a transfer was proposed under section 48(1). The new paragraph (aa) also provides that the relevant work or steps undertaken must be in relation to the land to which the application relates or other land being used for the same purposes as the land to which the application relates. The relevant work or steps are to have been carried out by the community body or by another person with a view to the application being made by the community body. The definitions of “relevant work” and “relevant steps” are inserted as new subsection (6) of section 39 of the 2003 Act by section 31(9) of the Bill. Section 31(5) inserts subsection (3ZA) into section 39 which sets out that, in cases where there are good reasons that relevant work or steps have not been undertaken prior to the land being marketed for sale, and that there are good reasons to allow the late application despite the lack of relevant work or steps prior to the land being marketed for sale, Ministers may accept the application.

82. Section 31(5) of the Bill also inserts a new subsection (3A) into section 39 of the 2003 Act. The new subsection (3A) allows Ministers to request further information about an application from any relevant party they deem necessary in connection with the criteria on which Ministers must be satisfied under section 39(3) of the 2003 Act. Ministers can request such information until the end of the 7-day period following receipt of the landowner’s views (or the views of a creditor in a standard security with a right to sell the land) under section 37(5) of the 2003 Act.

83. Section 31(6) of the Bill amends section 39(4)(c) which sets out the impact of an application being “late” on the community right to buy process. For the purposes of the provisions listed, the community body is deemed to have confirmed their intention to proceed with the purchase on the date on which the interest is registered. The amendment inserts a reference to the new section 60A(1) of the 2003 Act.

84. Section 31(7) of the Bill inserts a new subsection (4A) into section 39 of the 2003 Act and section 31(8) amends subsection (5) of the same. These provisions provide that where missives have been concluded in respect of the sale of land or an option conferred in respect of that land, Ministers must decline to consider the application. These amendments simplify the wording in the 2003 Act.
85. Section 31(9) of the Bill provides for a new subsection (7) of section 39 of the 2003 Act which makes it clear that the land in respect of which the relevant work or steps have been carried out does not need to be the same land as that to which the application relates.

Evidence and notification of concluded missives or option agreements

86. Section 32 of the Bill inserts a new section 39A into the 2003 Act in relation to evidence and notification of concluded missives or option agreements. The new subsection (4A) and amended subsection (5) of section 39 of the 2003 Act (under section 31(7) and (8) of the Bill) provide that where an application is received after missives have been concluded in respect of the land or an option conferred, Ministers must decline to consider the application. If the application did not disclose that missives have been concluded or an option conferred then the owner of the land (or a creditor in a standard security with a right to sell) must provide evidence of concluded missives or an option agreement to Ministers within 21 days of receiving a copy of the application under section 37(5)(a). Additional information on option agreements must also be provided, namely, the date of the option agreement and whether or not and how it may be extended. If the application does disclose that missives have been concluded or an option conferred and by virtue of section 39(4A) and (5) of the 2003 Act Ministers are not required to send a copy of the application to the land owner or a creditor in a standard security with a right to sell, then section 39A(4) will apply. This requires Ministers to send a copy of the application to the land owner and any such creditor and require them to provide evidence of the concluded missives or option conferred. The land owner and creditor will also be required to provide further information about the option conferred.

Notification of transfer

87. Section 33 of the Bill amends section 41 of the 2003 Act which is supplementary to and explanatory of section 40 of the 2003 Act. Section 40 of the 2003 Act prohibits owners and certain creditors from transferring land or taking action with a view to transferring land that is subject to a registered interest for so long as the interest is registered, other than in accordance with section 40(4) of the 2003 Act, which provides for “exempt” transfers.

88. Section 33 of the Bill inserts subsection (3) into section 41 of the 2003 Act. It requires that where an owner or a creditor in a standard security with a right to sell land makes a transfer in terms of section 40(4) of the 2003 Act, they must inform Ministers within 28 days of this taking place. The new subsection (3) of section 41 of the 2003 Act also sets out the information which the owner or creditor must provide.

Changes to information relating to registered interests

89. Section 34 of the Bill inserts a new section 44A into the 2003 Act, which applies where a community interest in land is registered.

90. Subsection (2) of the new section 44A of the 2003 Act requires that where any change has been made in the contact information of a community body provided in its application to register an interest, that community body must inform Ministers of that change as soon as is reasonably practicable.
91. Subsection (3) of the new section 44A of the 2003 Act requires that where any change has been made in the contact information of an owner provided in an application by a community body, the owner must inform Ministers of any changes to their contact information as soon as is reasonably practicable.

92. Subsection (4) of the new section 44A of the 2003 Act requires that the owner of the land must in certain circumstances notify Ministers of any changes to the information in an application relating to a creditor in a standard security as soon as is reasonably practicable.

93. Subsections (5) and (6) of the new section 44A of the 2003 Act require that where there is a creditor in a standard security over an interest in land to which an application relates and the application does not disclose the existence of such a creditor (either because the existence of the creditor was omitted or because it did not exist at the time the application was made), the owner must notify Ministers of the existence of the creditor and its contact details as soon as is practicable after the registration of the interest.

94. Subsections (7) and (8) of the new section 44A of the 2003 Act require that a community body or owner of land must, as soon as is reasonably practicable, make Ministers aware of any subsequent changes to any information submitted under subsections (2), (3), (4) or (6) of the new section 44A of the 2003 Act.

Notification under section 50 of the 2003 Act

95. Section 35 of the Bill amends section 50 of the 2003 Act. Section 50(1) sets out the circumstances in which the Lands Tribunal must notify Ministers that a landowner or creditor in a standard security with a right to sell the land has acted in breach of a prohibition notice under section 37(5)(e) or section 40(1) of the 2003 Act.

96. Section 35(a) of the Bill amends subsection (3)(b) of section 50 of the 2003 Act. It inserts reference to any creditor with a right to sell the land. This requires Ministers to send a copy of the notice from the Lands Tribunal under section 50(1) to such a creditor as well as to the owner of the land.

97. Section 35(b) of the Bill provides for a new subsection (6) to be inserted in section 50 of the 2003 Act. This sets out that a community interest in land remains in effect for the purposes of section 50(2)(c) where a community body has applied to re-register an interest under section 44(2) of the 2003 Act and the Keeper has re-entered the interest on the Register accordingly. Where a registered interest in land under consideration by the Lands Tribunal is due to expire, the relevant community body should ensure that it re-registers their interest in terms of section 44(2) of the 2003 Act. Section 50(2)(b) of the 2003 Act is repealed.

Approval of members of community to buy land

98. Section 36 of the Bill amends section 51(2)(a) of the 2003 Act which relates to the community’s approval of the exercise of the right to buy. Section 51(2)(a) provides that at least half of the members of the community must have voted or, if half of the members have not voted, the proportion which voted is sufficient in the circumstances to justify the community body buying the land.

99. Section 36 of the Bill removes the reference to at least half of the members of the community voting and provides that the requirement in section 51(2)(a) of the 2003 Act is met if the proportion of the members of the community who voted is sufficient to justify the community body proceeding to buy the land. Section 51(3)(a) of the 2003 Act is repealed.

Appointment of person to conduct ballot on proposal to buy land

100. Section 37 of the Bill inserts a new section 51A into the 2003 Act. It provides for an independent ballotter to undertake the community ballot as required under section 51(1)(a) of the 2003 Act.

101. Sections 51 and 52 of the 2003 Act provide for a ballot to be carried out by the community body. Section 37 of the Bill amends the procedure of the ballot and provides that it is to be carried out by an independent ballotter. The responsibility for appointing a ballotter and the expense of conducting the ballot are with Ministers.

102. Subsections (2) to (6) of the new section 51A of the 2003 Act set out the procedure for the conduct of the ballot. So that the ballotter has all the necessary information in order to undertake the ballot, Ministers are obliged under subsection (2) to provide the ballotter with a copy of the application under section 37 of the 2003 Act and such other information as Ministers may prescribe in regulations. Subsection (3) provides that Ministers must do this within 28 days of the valuer being appointed under section 59 of the 2003 Act. Ministers must also provide the community body with the contact details of the ballotter under subsection (4).

103. Subsections (5) and (6) of the new section 51A of the 2003 Act require that the community body must, within 7 days of receiving notification of the value of the land under section 60(2) of the 2003 Act, provide the ballotter with wording for the proposition that the community body buy the land, together with other information as set out in regulations. The other information to be set out in regulations may relate to the community body, its proposals, the valuation and other matters. The form of the notification of the other information referred to may also be set out in regulations. Section 52(2) of the 2003 Act is repealed.

104. Section 38 of the Bill inserts a new section 51B into the 2003 Act. This section sets out the information which Ministers must take account of when deciding whether to approve a community body’s exercise of the right to buy.

105. The new section 51B of the 2003 Act confers a power on Ministers to specify the type of information which a community body must provide in regulations, including, in particular, information relating to the matters referred to in subsection (3) of section 51 of the 2003 Act. Subsection (3) of the new section 51B of the 2003 Act requires that the information must be provided in a form set out by Ministers in regulations. Ministers can also take account of any information which they consider to be relevant, regardless of whether it is of the type specified in regulations.

106. Subsection (5) of the new section 51B of the 2003 Act provides that Ministers have 7 days from receipt of information to request further information. Furthermore, in terms of subsection (6) of the new section 51B of the 2003 Act, the community body has 7 days from the receipt of such a request to provide Ministers with the information.

Representations etc. regarding circumstances affecting ballot results

107. Section 39 of the Bill inserts a new section 51C into the 2003 Act which sets out a process for where a community body considers that circumstances have affected the ballot result.

108. Subsection (1) of the new section 51C allows the community body, within 7 days of receiving notification of the result of the ballot, to make representations to Ministers on circumstances that the community body considers impacted the ballot result.

109. Subsection (2) requires the community body to provide Ministers with such evidence as is reasonably necessary to establish the existence and effect of the circumstances that affected the ballot result. A copy of the evidence and representations must be sent to the owner of the land by the community body. Subsection (3) allows Ministers to request further information if required and the community body must respond within 7 days under subsection (4).

110. Subsection (5) provides that the owner of the land may provide comments in connection with the representations and evidence provided by the community body within 7 days of receiving copies of such representations and evidence. The owner of the land must send copies of any comments to the community body (subsection (6)). The community body may give their views to Ministers on the owner of the land’s comments (subsection (7)).

111. Subsection (8) provides that Ministers may request further information from the community body and, in terms of subsection (9), the community body must respond within 7 days.

112. Subsection (10) provides that Ministers must take account of any of the representations, evidence, information, comments or views which have been provided in this process when considering whether the ballot turnout requirement under section 51(2)(a) of the 2003 Act has been met.

113. Due to the administrative steps which have been provided for, section 39(2) of the Bill amends section 51 of the 2003 Act to extend the length of the period in which Ministers must decide whether to consent to the exercise of the right to buy from 21 days to 35 days in cases where representations have been made under section 51C(1).
Ballot not conducted as prescribed 114. Section 40 of the Bill amends section 52 of the 2003 Act. Section 52(1) of the 2003 Act provides that a ballot should be conducted as prescribed in regulations. Furthermore, in terms of section 52(2), if a ballot is deemed to be flawed, the community’s right to buy is extinguished.

115. Section 40 of the Bill provides that section 52 of the 2003 Act is amended to include a new subsection (7). The new subsection (7) provides Ministers with the powers to make regulations in connection with reviewing whether a ballot has been properly conducted and other matters relating to ballots not conducted as prescribed.

Period in which ballot results and valuations are to be notified

116. Section 41 of the Bill amends section 52(4) of the 2003 Act which provides the timescale for the conduct of the ballot and section 60 which provides the timescale for notification of the valuation figure.

117. Section 52(4) of the 2003 Act provides that the ballot is to take place within 28 days of the notification of the value of the land under section 60(2) and the ballot date is determined by the date of that notification. Section 41(1) of the Bill amends section 52(4) of the 2003 Act to provide that the ballot takes place within the 12 week period beginning on the date the valuer is appointed under section 59(1) of the 2003 Act. Alternatively, in cases where the valuation period has been extended by the valuer under section 60(3) of the 2003 Act and the date to which the valuation period has been extended to is after the 12-week period following the appointment of the valuer, the 12-week period begins on the day following the notification of the date under section 60(3C) of the 2003 Act. This means that the ballotter will in all cases have a minimum of 12 weeks to conduct the ballot and notify Ministers of the results.

118. Section 41(2) of the Bill provides that section 60 of the 2003 Act is amended to insert new subsections (3A) to (3D). These provisions detail the procedure of when and how the valuer is able to seek an extension to the timings for reporting the value of the land to parties set out in section 60(2). The community body, the landowner and the ballotter must be informed of the existence of any extension, the length of any extension and the end period for the extension.

Exercise of right to buy: date of entry and payment of price

119. Section 42 of the Bill amends section 56 of the 2003 Act which sets out the time limits which apply to a community body in respect of payment of the price for the land.

120. Subsection (3) of section 56 of the 2003 Act provides that where the valuation figure is not being appealed under section 62 of the 2003 Act and where the time limit has not been extended by agreement, the price must be paid within 6 months of the date on which the community body confirmed its intention to proceed with the community right to buy in response to a notice under section 49(2)(a) of the 2003 Act or, in the case of a late application, within 6 months of the date of Ministers decision to register that interest in land. Section 42(a) of the Bill extends this time period from 6 months to 8 months.
121. Section 42(b) of the Bill provides for a new subsection (7) in section 56 of the 2003 Act. Where an extension to the 8-month period provided for in the amended section 56(3)(a) of the 2003 Act is required (such extension being permitted by section 56(3)(c) of the 2003 Act), the extension must be agreed, by both parties (landowner and community body), before the 8-month period ends. The community body must notify Ministers of any extension within 7 days of that agreement being made, including when that agreement was made and what that later extended date is. Evidence of such an agreement will be required by Ministers.

Views on representations under section 60 of the 2003 Act

122. Section 43 of the Bill amends section 60 of the 2003 Act, subsection (1) of which requires the valuer to invite the landowner and the community body to comment on issues that may have an impact on the valuation.

123. Section 43 of the Bill inserts a new subsection (1A) into section 60 of the 2003 Act which imposes an obligation on the valuer to pass on any written representations about the value of the land, whether by the landowner or the community body, to the other party and invite counter-representations from that party. The valuer must consider any views made by both or either party while undertaking the valuation under section 59 of the 2003 Act.

Circumstances where expenses of valuation to be met by owner of the land

124. Section 44 of the Bill inserts a new section 60A into the 2003 Act. The new section 60A provides that, in certain circumstances, Ministers may require the landowner to pay the expenses of Ministers in connection with the valuation.

125. Subsection (1) of the new section 60A sets out the circumstances in which Ministers may exercise their discretion and require the landowner to pay the expenses incurred by Ministers in connection with the valuation.

126. Subsection (2) sets out that Ministers have a discretion to require the landowner to meet the costs associated with the valuation where the circumstances in subsection (1) are met. Where Ministers exercise their discretion, a demand for payment will be sent to the landowner.

127. Subsection (3) allows Ministers to request information from the landowner before deciding whether to exercise their discretion.

128. Subsection (4) provides that the landowner may appeal Ministers’ decision to exercise their discretion to the sheriff within 21 days of the Ministers’ decision. In terms of subsection (5), the sheriff’s decision is final.

129. Subsection (6) provides that, where the landowner has not appealed the Ministers’ decision, the landowner must pay the amount specified within 28 days of receiving the demand. Where the landowner appeals the Ministers’ decision and the appeal is not successful, the landowner must pay the amount within 28 days of the determination of the appeal.
Creditors in standard security with right to sell land: appeals

130. Section 45 of the Bill amends section 61 of the 2003 Act. Section 61 provides a right of appeal to the sheriff for the landowner, the community body and other interested parties in respect of certain decisions by Ministers. In terms of section 48(4) of the 2003 Act, where there is a creditor with a right to sell the land and that creditor gives notice of a proposal to sell the land under section 48(1), the creditor would also have a right of appeal.

131. Section 45(a) of the Bill expands the interested parties to include a “creditor in a standard security with a right to sell land” in all cases (including where the creditor has not given notice of a proposal to sell the land under section 48(1) of the 2003 Act). Section 45(b) and (c) of the Bill amend the remaining sections of section 61 of the 2003 Act to take account of the creditor’s right of appeal. The words “or” to “person” in section 61(3) of the 2003 Act are repealed.

Appeals to Lands Tribunal: valuation

132. Section 45A of the Bill amends section 62 of the 2003 Act, and provides that the Lands Tribunal is required, within 8 weeks of the hearing of the appeal, to issue a written statement of reasons. Where the Land Tribunal considers that it is not reasonable to issue a written statement within 8 weeks, it must notify the parties to the appeal of the date by which it will issue its written statement.

Calculation of time periods in Part 2 of 2003 Act

133. Section 46(1) of the Bill inserts a new section 67A into the 2003 Act which provides that public or local holidays are not to be taken into account when calculating time periods in Part 2 of the 2003 Act.

134. New section 67A(2) of the 2003 Act provides a number of exceptions to the rule provided in new section 67A(1) – statutory periods for the date of entry, the valuation process and any appeals are not to be extended if a public or local holiday falls during the time when these steps are active.

Duty to provide information about community right to buy

135. Section 47 of the Bill inserts a new section 67B into the 2003 Act concerning the monitoring of community right to buy.

136. Inserted section 67B(1) and (2) of the 2003 Act provide that a community body, owner or former owner of land in respect of which an application to register an interest was made may be requested by Ministers to provide information, for the purposes of monitoring or evaluating any impacts that the right to buy land conferred by Part 2 of the 2003 Act has had or may have.

137. Inserted section 67B(3) of the 2003 Act sets out the type of information that may be requested by Ministers. It provides that it is any information which Ministers may reasonably require for the purpose of monitoring or evaluating the impact of the right to buy under Part 2 of the 2003 Act. Where a request has been made by Ministers, the recipient must comply to the extent that they are able to do so (inserted section 67B(4)).
Part 4: Crofting community right to buy land (sections 47A to 47K – modifications of Part 3 of Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003)

Introduction

138. Sections 47A to 47K of the Bill amend provisions of Part 3 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, the crofting community right to buy.

139. Part 3 of the 2003 Act provides a properly constituted crofting community body representing an identified crofting community with a right to acquire eligible croft land (including salmon fishings, certain mineral rights, sporting rights and the interest of the tenant in tenanted land, where the tenant’s interests in the land relate to the land being acquired). Part 3 sets out the eligible land which may be acquired by the crofting community body, and the process for acquiring that land, including procedures for a ballot to prove community support for the acquisition, for valuation of the land, for appeals and for compensation.

Crofting community bodies

140. Section 47A(2) of the Bill inserts subsection (A1) into section 71 of the 2003 Act. This subsection extends the types of body which may be crofting community bodies under Part 3 of the 2003 Act to include Scottish charitable incorporated organisations (“SCIOs”) and community benefit societies (“BenComs”) and any other type of body which Ministers specify in regulations.

141. Section 47A(4) of the Bill inserts new subsections (1A) and (1B) into section 71 of the 2003 Act which sets out the provisions that a SCIO or BenCom must include in its constitution or registered rules for it to be a crofting community body and so eligible to make an application under Part 3 of the 2003 Act.

142. Section 47A(5) of the Bill amends section 71(2) of the 2003 Act which allows Ministers to disapply the requirement that the articles of association, constitution or registered rules of an community body must require that the body have a minimum of 10 members.

143. Section 47A(6) of the Bill inserts subsection (4A) into section 71 of the 2003 Act. This subsection gives Ministers the power to modify, by way of regulations, the criteria which must be met by companies limited by guarantee, SCIOs and BenComs in order to be crofting community bodies under Part 3 of the 2003 Act.

144. Section 47A(7) of the Bill amends section 71(5) of the 2003 Act and amends the definition of a “crofting community”. The definition of a crofting community will include tenants of crofts whose names are entered in the Crofting Register, or the Register of Crofts, as tenants of those crofts; owner-occupier crofters of crofts in the crofting township whose names are entered in the Crofting Register; and such other persons or classes of persons as may be set out by Ministers in regulations.

145. Section 47A(8) of the Bill inserts definitions of “owner-occupied croft” and “owner-occupier crofter” into section 71(6) of the 2003 Act.
146. Section 47A(9) of the Bill inserts definitions of “community benefit society”, “registered rules” and “Scottish charitable incorporated organisation” into section 71(8) of the 2003 Act.

147. Paragraph (a) of section 47B of the Bill amends section 72(1) of the 2003 Act which provides that a crofting community body which bought land under Part 3 of the 2003 Act shall not, for as long as the land remains in its ownership, modify its memorandum or articles of association without the consent of Ministers. The amendment provides for the same restriction in relation to a constitution (in the case of Scottish charitable incorporated organisations) or registered rules (in the case of community benefit societies).

148. Paragraph (b) of section 47B of the Bill inserts subsections (3), (4) and (5) into section 72. Subsection (2) provides that Ministers may compulsorily acquire croft land if they are satisfied that the crofting community body which has bought the croft land, if it had not done so, would no longer be entitled to do so. Section 72(3) provides that the provision in section 72(2) will not apply when the land is no longer eligible croft land. Section 72(4) provides Ministers with the power to make an order relating to the compulsory acquisition of the croft land. Section 72(5) provides that the order made under section 72(4) may apply, modify or exclude any matter as to which an order could be made relating to the compulsory acquisition of the land by Ministers.

Application by crofting community body for consent to buy croft land

149. Section 47C(2) of the Bill removes the provision in section 73(5)(b)(ii) which requires a crofting community body to provide information about sewers, pipes, lines, watercourses or other conduits and fences, dykes, ditches or other boundaries in or on the land.

150. Section 47C(3) of the Bill inserts new subsection (5ZA) after section 73(5) of the 2003 Act. Section 73(5) requires all persons listed in new subsection (5ZA) to be correctly identified in the application. Those persons who must be correctly identified are the owner of the land; any creditor in a standard security over the land with a right to sell the land; any tenant of a tenancy of the land in respect of which the right to buy is to be exercised and any person entitled to any sporting interests on the land in respect of which the right to buy is to be exercised.

151. Section 47C(4) of the Bill amends section 73(11) of the 2003 Act. Ministers are required to give public notice, by advertisement, of an application by a crofting community body. The form of the advertisement is now to be set out in regulations made by Ministers.

Criteria for consent by Ministers

152. Section 47D of the Bill amends the criteria which must be satisfied in section 74(1) of the 2003 Act in order for Ministers to consent to a Part 3 application. The additional criteria in section 74(1) are that Ministers may only consent to an application if the persons listed in section 73(5ZA) are correctly identified in the application.

Ballot to indicate community approval of the application

153. Section 47E(2) of the Bill inserts additional subsections (4A) and (4B) after section 75(4) of the 2003 Act. Subsection (4A) allows Ministers to request additional information from the crofting community body in connection with the ballot, including any consultation with those eligible to vote in the ballot. Subsection (4B) confirms that the expense of conducting the ballot is to be met by the crofting community body.

154. Section 47E(3) of the Bill inserts additional subsections (6) and (7) into section 75 of the 2003 Act. Subsection (6) gives Ministers the power to make regulations to enable a crofting community body to seek to recover the expense of conducting the ballot from Ministers. Subsection (7) sets out the matters in relation to which such regulations can make provision, including the circumstances in which a crofting community body may make an application and the criteria to be applied by Ministers in deciding whether to reimburse the applicant.

Right to buy same croft land exercisable by only one crofting community body

155. Section 47F of the Bill amends section 76(4)(b)(i) of the 2003 Act to ensure that, when more than one crofting community body applies to purchase the same land, all parties who were invited to comment on the applications are notified when Ministers decide which application is to proceed and which application(s) are extinguished.

Reference to Land Court of questions on applications

156. Section 47G of the Bill amends section 81(1) of the 2003 Act to expand the list of persons who have a right to refer a question to the Land Court before Ministers reach a decision on an application. The list of persons now includes the owner of the land which is the subject of the application, the person entitled to any sporting interests which are the subject of the application and any tenant whose interest is the subject of the application.

Assessment of value of croft land

157. Section 47H of the Bill inserts new subsections (9A) and (9B) after section 88(9) of the 2003 Act. Subsection (9A) provides that, where representations on the value of the land are received from the owner of the land, the tenant or the person entitled to sporting interests, the valuer must invite the crofting community body to make counter-representations, and similarly the owner, tenant or person entitled to sporting interests must be invited to make counter-representations in response to representations made by the crofting community body.

158. Subsection (9B) requires the valuer to take account of any representations made under subsection (9A) when making a valuation of the land.

Compensation

159. Section 47I of the Bill amends section 89(4) of the 2003 Act which gives Ministers the power to set out the procedure under which claims for compensation payable in relation to an application to purchase land may be made. The amended section 89(4) gives Ministers the power to make an order to specify amounts payable in respect of loss or expense incurred by a landowner, person entitled to sporting interests or tenant as the case may be, amounts payable in respect of loss or expense incurred by other persons, who may be liable to pay those amounts and the procedure under which these claims for compensation are to be made.

(SP Bill 52A)

Appeals to Land Court : valuation

160. Section 47J of the Bill amends section 92(5) of the 2003 Act to provide that the Land Court is required to issue a written statement of reasons within 8 weeks of the hearing of the appeal. It also introduces a new subsection (5A) which provides that where the Land Court considers that it is not reasonable to issue a written statement within 8 weeks, it must notify the parties to the appeal of the date by which it will issue its written statement.

Meaning of creditor in standard security with right to sell

161. Section 47K of the Bill introduces a new subsection 97B to the 2003 Act, which provides a definition, for the purposes of Part 3 of the 2003 Act, of a creditor in a standard security with a right to sell land.

Part 4: Community right to buy land (section 48 – abandoned and neglected land)

Introduction

162. Section 48 of the Bill inserts a new Part 3A into the 2003 Act to give communities a right to buy land that is wholly or mainly abandoned or neglected, for the purposes of the sustainable development of that land, where there is no willing seller.

Meaning of land

163. The new section 97B of the 2003 Act provides that land for the purposes of Part 3A of the 2003 Act includes bridges and other structures built on or over land, inland waters, canals, and the foreshore (which is the land between the high and low water marks of ordinary spring tides).

Eligible land

164. The new section 97C of the 2003 Act defines land which is to be classed as eligible for the purposes of Part 3A of the 2003 Act. Subsection (1) provides that eligible land is land which is wholly or mainly abandoned or neglected in the opinion of Ministers.

165. Subsection (2) requires Ministers to make regulations setting out what factors they must have regard to when deciding whether land is, in their opinion, wholly or mainly neglected or abandoned.

166. Subsection (3) provides that eligible land does not include certain land. Land which is not eligible includes land on which there is an individual’s home; land pertaining to an individual’s home as may be set out in regulations, eligible croft land (as defined in section 68 of the 2003 Act) or croft land which is occupied or worked by its owner or members of their family; land which is owned by the Crown by virtue of it having vested as bona vacantia (because no owner exists or can be identified) or it having fallen to the Crown as ultimus haeres (because no heir to the previous owner exists or can be identified); and land of such other descriptions that Ministers may set out in regulations. Subsection (4) gives Ministers the power to set out in regulations what is, or is to be treated as, an individual’s home for the purposes of subsection (3).
Part 3A community bodies

167. The new section 97D of the 2003 Act outlines the requirements which must be met by a body so that it is eligible to purchase land under Part 3A of the 2003 Act.

168. Subsection (1) specifies that a Part 3A community body must be a company limited by guarantee, Scottish charitable incorporated organisation (SCIO) or community benefit society (BenCom), or any other type of body which Ministers specify in regulations. It also lists the requirements which must be included in the body’s articles of association, constitution or registered rules. If a body does not meet the conditions imposed by subsection (1), it will not be a Part 3A community body and so will not be eligible to purchase land under Part 3A of the 2003 Act.

169. Subsection (2) allows Ministers to disapply the requirement that the articles of association, constitution or registered rules of a Part 3A community body must require that the body must have a minimum of 10 members.

170. Subsection (3) defines a “company limited by guarantee” by reference to section 3(3) of the Companies Act 2006 as being a company having the liability of its members limited to such amount as the members undertake to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of it being wound up.

171. Subsection (4) provides that a Part 3A community body is not defined as such until Ministers give their written consent that they are satisfied that the body’s main purpose is consistent with furthering the achievement of sustainable development. Subsection (4A) gives Ministers a power to amend the criteria which a company limited by guarantee, SCIO or BenCom must meet in order to be a Part 3A community body.

172. Subsection (5)(a) sets out that the articles of association, constitution or registered rules of a Part 3A community body must define the community to which it relates by reference to a postcode unit (or units) or a type of area which Ministers set out in regulation. A community may also be defined with reference to both of these things. Subsection (5)(b) provides that the community includes people who are resident in that postcode unit or in one of the postcode units or other areas set out by Ministers in regulations. In addition to being resident, members of the community must also be entitled to vote at local government elections in a polling district that encompasses that postcode unit or postcode units or the alternative areas set out by Ministers in regulations.

173. Subsection (7) specifies that the articles of association of a Part 3A community body may provide that its property may, in circumstances outlined in subsection (1)(h), pass to another person only if that person is a charity. Subsection (8) defines a charity for the purposes of this section as a body which is entered in the Scottish Charity Register.

174. Subsection (8) provides definitions of a “charity”, “community benefit society”, “registered rules”, and “Scottish charitable incorporated organisation” for the purposes of this section.
Provisions supplementary to section 97D

175. The new section 97D of the 2003 Act sets out the constraints which apply to a Part 3A community body after it has acquired land under Part 3A of the 2003 Act.

176. Subsection (1) provides that a Part 3A community body cannot change its memorandum or articles of association without prior consent from Ministers in writing, while the land bought under Part 3A of the 2003 Act remains in its ownership.

177. Subsection (2) allows Ministers to acquire the land compulsorily if a Part 3A community body, which has bought land under Part 3A of the 2003 Act, would no longer be entitled to buy the land.

178. Subsection (3) provides that Ministers cannot exercise their powers under subsection (2) to acquire the land compulsorily if the land is no longer considered to be eligible. This means that Ministers will not be able to exercise their powers on the basis that a Part 3A community body has purchased the land and the land is no longer considered by Ministers to be wholly or mainly abandoned or neglected.

179. Subsection (4) provides that where Ministers exercise the power conferred by subsection (2), they may make an order in relation to acquiring the land. Subsection (4) sets out the scope of any such order.

Register of Community Interests in Abandoned or Neglected Land

180. The new section 97F of the 2003 Act provides for the creation of a Register of Community Interests in Abandoned or Neglected Land.

181. Subsection (1) requires the Keeper of the Registers of Scotland (“the Keeper”) to set up and maintain a Register of Community Interests in Abandoned or Neglected Land (“the Register”).

182. Subsection (2) specifies information and documents which must be kept in the Register and provides that these must be kept in a form convenient for public inspection.

183. Subsections (3) and (4) allow a Part 3A community body to require that information or documentation which relates to the raising or expenditure of money to allow land to which the application relates to be used should be withheld from public inspection. Such information or documentation will not be entered in the Register. However, in terms of subsection (5), Ministers cannot require a Part 3A community body to provide such information or documentation.

184. Subsection (6) confers powers on Ministers to make regulations to amend the information that is to be made publicly available in the Register, to amend the provision about the Part 3A community body requesting that certain information can be withheld from the Register and amending the type of information that may be withheld.
185. Subsection (7) sets out the duties which are imposed on the Keeper. The Keeper must make the Register available at all reasonable times for inspection free of charge, ensure that members of the public are able to request copies of the entries on payment of a charge as may be set out by Ministers in regulations, and that if anyone requests a true copy of the original document this will be supplied on payment of such a charge.

186. Subsection (9) provides that the Keeper means the Keeper of the Registers of Scotland or such person as Ministers appoint to carry out the Keeper’s functions under Part 3A of the 2003 Act (and under subsection (10) different persons may be appointed in place of the Keeper for different purposes under Part 3A of the 2003 Act).

Right to buy: application for consent

187. The new section 97G of the 2003 Act deals with the process of applying to exercise the right to buy land under Part 3A of the 2003 Act.

188. Subsection (1) provides that the right to buy abandoned or neglected land can only be exercised by a Part 3A community body. Subsection (2) specifies that the right can only be exercised with Ministers’ consent on the written application of the Part 3A community body.

189. Subsection (3) provides that a right to buy land can be exercised on multiple holdings, but separate applications must have been made for each holding of land. A holding of land is defined in subsection (4) as being a plot of land owned by one person or in common or joint ownership. Ministers may consider and make a decision on these applications separately from one another.

190. Subsection (5) specifies that an application must set out who the owner of the land is and any creditor in a standard security with a right to sell the land or any part of it. Ministers must set out the required form of the application in regulations. The application must also include or be accompanied by information of the kind specified by Ministers in regulations.

191. Subsection (6) lists the matters which the Part 3A community body must include in the application or which must accompany the application. These include why a Part 3A community body’s proposed purchase is in the public interest, how it is compatible with furthering the achievement of sustainable development, and the reasons why it considers the land to be wholly or mainly abandoned or neglected.

192. Subsection (7) specifies that at the same time as the Part 3A community body applies to Ministers, it must send a copy of its application form (including the associated material) to the owner of the land. It also requires the Part 3A community body to send a copy of the application to any known creditor in a standard security over the land with a right to sell and invite them to give notice, within 60 days, to the Part 3A community body and Ministers if the creditor has taken the steps mentioned in subsection (8) to enforce the security. If such notice is given, creditors must provide any views or comments they may have about the application to Ministers in writing within the 60-day period.
193. Subsection (9) provides that upon receiving the application under section 97G, Ministers must invite the owner of the land, any creditor in a standard security and any other person that may have an interest in the application to send back written comments on the application within 60 days of the Ministers’ invitation. Ministers must also take reasonable steps to invite comments from owners of land adjacent to the land to which the application relates. The community body must be sent copies of such invitations.

194. Subsection (10) specifies the additional matters which the invitation must invite the landowner to provide comment on.

195. Subsection (11) provides that Ministers must give public notice of receipt of the application as soon as practicably possible and invite views within 60 days of the publication of the notice. Subsection (12) confers a power on Ministers to make regulations to specify the form of the advertisement giving public notice of the application.

196. Subsection (13) provides that Ministers must pass all views received on to the Part 3A community body for further comment. The community body’s comments must be received within 60 days of Ministers sending the invitation to comment.

197. Subsection (14) provides that when considering whether or not to give consent to the application, Ministers must have regard to all views received with regard to the application.

198. Subsection (15) provides that Ministers must decline to consider an application that does not comply with the requirements of the new section 97G, is incomplete or where Ministers are otherwise bound to reject it. If such is the case, then Ministers are not bound to follow the steps laid out in subsection (9) to (14).

199. Subsection (16) sets constraints on the timing of the Ministers’ decision on an application. It provides that Ministers must not make any decision on the application before the end of the 60-day period within which a community may respond to a landowner’s comments, under subsection (13). Alternatively, if by the date of 60 days after the date on which the Part 3A community body may provide Ministers with a response to an invitation sent under subsection (13), the Lands Tribunal has not notified Ministers of any finding under new section 97X of the 2003 Act, Ministers must not make a decision until the date on which the Lands Tribunal provides Ministers with that finding.

Criteria for consent

200. The new section 97H of the 2003 Act sets out that Ministers must not consent to a Part 3A community right to buy unless they are satisfied about the matters listed in the section.

201. Paragraph (a) requires Ministers to be satisfied that the land a Part 3A community body is proposing to buy is land which is eligible under the new section 97C of the 2003 Act.
202. Paragraph (b) requires Ministers to be satisfied that the exercise of the right to buy by a Part 3A community body is in the public interest and its plans for the land are compatible with furthering the achievement of sustainable development.

203. Paragraph (c) requires Ministers to be satisfied that the achievement of sustainable development in relation to the land would be unlikely to be furthered by the owner of the land continuing to be its owner.

204. Paragraph (f) requires Ministers to be satisfied that the owner of the land is not prevented from selling the land or is not under an obligation to sell the land to someone other than the Part 3A community body (other than an obligation which is suspended by the regulations which are to be made by Ministers under the new section 97N(3)).

205. Paragraph (g) requires Ministers to be satisfied that a Part 3A community body meets the requirements in section 97D.

206. Paragraph (h) requires Ministers to be satisfied that a significant number of the members of the community which the Part 3A community body represents have a connection with the land or the land is sufficiently near to land to which those members of the community have a connection.

207. Paragraph (i) requires Ministers to be satisfied that the community which the Part 3A community body represents has approved the proposal to exercise the right to buy under Part 3A. The new section 97J of the 2003 Act provides that the community is taken as having approved the proposal if a ballot is conducted as set out in that section.

208. Paragraph (j) requires Ministers to be satisfied that the Part 3A community body has tried and failed to buy the land, other than by making an application under Part 3A.

Ballot to indicate approval for purposes of section 97H

209. The new section 97J of the 2003 Act sets out the requirements for a ballot to establish that a right to buy application by a Part 3A community body has the support of its community.

210. Subsection (1) provides that a proposal by a Part 3A community body to exercise a community right to buy will be deemed to have been approved by the relevant community, if, firstly, the ballot takes place within the six-month period immediately preceding the date of the right to buy application; secondly, that at least half of the community voted in the ballot or where fewer than half of the members of the community voted, the proportion that voted is sufficient to justify the community body proceeding to purchase the land; and finally, that the majority of the votes cast were in favour of making the application.

211. Subsection (2) provides that the ballot must be conducted as prescribed by Ministers in regulations. Subsection (3) sets out the matters which must be prescribed in those regulations.
212. Subsection (4) specifies that the Part 3A community body must notify Ministers of the result within 21 days of the ballot or, where the application is made before the expiry of that 21-day period, at the same time as the application is submitted. This subsection also sets out what information about the ballot the community body must provide to Ministers.

213. Subsection (5) provides that Ministers may require a Part 3A community body to provide further information about the ballot or any consultation that the community body may have held with the wider community about their application.

214. Subsection (6) provides that the Part 3A community body is responsible for the expense of conducting the ballot. Subsections (6A) and (6B) give Ministers regulation making powers which can be used to allow a Part 3A community body, in particular prescribed circumstances, to apply to Ministers to seek reimbursement of the cost of conducting the ballot.

215. Subsection (7) provides that where a ballot is not conducted in accordance with the regulations made by Ministers, the Part 3A community body’s right to buy will be extinguished.

Right to buy same land exercisable by only one Part 3A community body

216. The new section 97K of the 2003 Act deals with the situation where there is more than one Part 3A community body interested in buying the same land.

217. Subsection (1) provides that only one Part 3A community body may exercise the right to buy that land.

218. Subsection (2) provides where more than one Part 3A community body submits an application seeking to buy the same land, Ministers will decide which application should be allowed to proceed.

219. Subsection (3) provides that Ministers must not take any decision on any of the applications before they have considered all views and responses related to each application.

220. Subsection (4) provides that once Ministers have decided which Part 3A community body’s right to buy application shall be allowed to proceed, the other community body’s right to buy shall be extinguished. It also specifies who must be notified of Ministers’ decision.

Consent conditions

221. The new section 97L of the 2003 Act provides that Ministers may impose conditions to their consent to an application to exercise the Part 3A community right to buy. These conditions may, for example, require that certain actions or steps must be taken by the Part 3A community body.

Notification of Ministers’ decision on application

222. The new section 97M of the 2003 Act sets out how Ministers must notify the relevant parties of their decision to consent to or refuse an application.
223. Subsection (1) provides that Ministers must give notice in writing of their decision to consent to or refuse an application under section 97G to exercise the Part 3A community right to buy, and identifies the persons to whom such notice must be given. The form of the notice is to be set out in regulations.

224. Subsection (2) provides that regulations made by Ministers must require that the notice includes a full description of the land covered by the Ministers’ decision and, where consent is given, any conditions imposed by Ministers.

225. Subsection (3) specifies that the notice must contain information about the consequences of the decision and the rights of appeal against it and state the date on which the consent is given.

Effect of Ministers’ decision on right to buy

226. The new section 97N(1) of the 2003 Act gives Ministers powers to make regulations prohibiting certain persons from transferring or otherwise dealing with the land in respect of which an application under section 97G has been made.

227. Subsection (2) sets out matters that the regulations under subsection (1) may include.

228. Subsection (3) provides that Ministers may make regulations to suspend rights over land in respect of which a Part 3A application has been made. Subsection (4) sets out that these regulations may provide for rights which will not be suspended, as well as rights which will not be suspended in certain circumstances.

229. Subsection (5) provides that nothing in Part 3A of the 2003 Act prejudices the position of creditors seeking to prevent the disposal of heritable property by a debtor by means of inhibition, action of adjudication or any other diligence.

Confirmation of intention to proceed with purchase and withdrawal

230. The new section 97P of the 2003 Act sets out the procedure which follows Ministers consenting to the exercise of a right to buy by a Part 3A community body, depending on whether or not the community body wishes to proceed with the purchase.

231. Subsection (1) provides that a Part 3A community body may exercise its right to buy only if, within 21 days of the valuer notifying Ministers, the Part 3A community body and the owner of the assessed value of the land under 97S(10), the Part 3A community body sends written notice to Ministers and the owner confirming its intention to proceed to buy the land.

232. Subsection (2) provides that, by notice in writing to Ministers, the Part 3A community body may withdraw its right to buy application or its confirmation of its intention to proceed with the purchase at any time.

233. Subsection (3) specifies the action to be taken by Ministers on receipt of such notices.
Completion of purchase

234. The new section 97Q of the 2003 Act deals with conveyancing practicalities relevant to the transfer of land following Ministers giving consent to a Part 3A community right to buy application.

235. Subsection (1) provides that the Part 3A community body will be responsible for preparing the documents necessary to effect the conveyance of the land and for ensuring that the subjects to be conveyed are the same as those specified in the consent given by Ministers. It places an obligation on the Part 3A community body to ensure that in preparing the documents it takes account of all conditions imposed by Ministers.

236. Subsection (2) provides that where the Part 3A community body cannot comply with its duty regarding the property to be conveyed, due to the fact that all or part of the land covered by the consent to the Part 3A community right to buy is not owned by the person named as owner in the application, then it must refer this matter to Ministers.

237. Subsection (3) provides that where such a reference is made to Ministers under subsection (2) then Ministers must direct that the right to buy is extinguished.

238. Subsection (4) requires the owner of the land subject to the Part 3A right to buy to make title deeds and other documents available to and transfer title to the Part 3A community body.

239. Subsection (5) provides that if, within 6 weeks of Ministers consenting to the application to buy the land, the owner refuses or fails to make these deeds available, or if they cannot be found, the Part 3A community body can apply to the Lands Tribunal for an order requiring the production of those documents.

240. Subsection (6) provides that the Part 3A community body may apply to the Lands Tribunal to authorise its clerk to effect the transfer of title where the owner refuses, or for other reasons fails, to do so. Where the clerk to the Tribunal does so the effect will be the same as if it were done by the owner.

Completion of transfer

241. The new section 97R of the 2003 Act sets out the process for completing the transfer.

242. Subsection (1) provides that the consideration payable for the land in respect of which the Part 3A community right to buy is exercised shall be the value of that land as assessed under section 97S by the valuer appointed by Ministers.

243. Subsection (2) provides that, subject to subsections (3) and (4), the consideration should be paid not later than 6 months after the date on which Ministers consented to the right to buy application.
244. Subsection (3) specifies circumstances where either this payment deadline will not apply or where an alternative deadline will apply. In particular, it allows the landowner and the Part 3A community body to agree an alternative payment date and provides for deferral of payment when the valuation has not been completed or has been subject to an appeal.

245. Subsection (4) specifies that where the owner is unable to grant a good and marketable title to the Part 3A community body by the date of payment, then payment shall be made to and held by the Lands Tribunal pending either completion of the conveyance or notification to the Lands Tribunal by the Part 3A community body that it has decided not to complete the transaction.

246. Subsection (5) specifies that if the consideration is not paid by the Part 3A community body by the due date, the right to buy application will be deemed to have been withdrawn by the Part 3A community body (this subsection does not apply where subsection (4) applies).

247. Subsection (6) provides that when the Part 3A community body records or registers its title, the land acquired is disburdened of any heritable security.

248. Subsection (7) provides that a security that related to the land acquired through the Part 3A community right to buy and to other land continues to apply to that other land.

249. Subsection (8) provides that where land is disburdened of a heritable security on purchase, unless the creditors otherwise agree, the Part 3A community body must pay the creditors under that heritable security whatever sums are due to them.

250. Subsection (9) provides that the Part 3A community body must deduct any sums paid to a heritable creditor under the provisions of subsection (8) from the amount that the body is due to pay the owner for the land. In effect, the landowner will receive a sum for the land which will take account of the sum required to clear any securities.

Assessment of value of land etc.

251. The new section 97S of the 2003 Act sets out the procedure for valuation of the land in respect of which a Part 3A community body is exercising its right to buy.

252. Subsection (1) requires that Ministers, where they have consented to a Part 3A community right to buy application, must appoint a valuer to assess the value of that land within 7 days of that consent.

253. Subsection (2) provides that the validity of anything done under the new section 97S will not be affected by Ministers’ failure to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (1).

254. Subsection (3) sets out the role of the valuer.

255. Subsection (4) specifies that the value to be ascertained is the market value at the date Ministers consented to the application to exercise the right to buy.
256. Subsection (5) defines market value as the sum of the open market value if the sale were between a willing seller and willing buyer, compensation for any depreciation in the value of other land and interests belonging to the seller as a result of the forced sale, and compensation for any disturbance to the seller resulting from the forced sale.

257. Subsection (6) specifies that in arriving at the open market value for the purposes of subsection (5)(a), account may be taken of the known existence of a potential purchaser with a special interest in the property (other than the Part 3A community body). It also specifies that no account shall be taken of the fact that no time was allowed for marketing the property or of the depreciation of other land or disturbance (since compensation for these latter two items will be added to the open market value by virtue of subsection (5)(b) and (c)).

258. Subsection (7) states that Ministers shall pay for the valuation under this section.

259. Subsections (8), (8A) and (8B) require the valuer to ask both the owner and the Part 3A community body for their views in writing on the value of the land, and invite written counter-representations from each party on the other’s views, and to take these representations and counter-representations into account in arriving at the valuation.

260. Subsection (9) specifies that where the Part 3A community body and the owner have agreed the valuation, they must notify the valuer in writing of that valuation.

261. Subsections (10) and (11) require the appointed valuer to notify Ministers, the landowner and the Part 3A community body of the valuation. This must be done within 8 weeks of being appointed or within a longer period set by Ministers, as requested by the valuer.

262. Subsection (12) sets out that the validity of the transfer is not affected by a failure by the valuer to comply with the time limit.

Compensation

263. The new section 97T of the 2003 Act provides for payment of compensation in connection with an application to exercise the Part 3A community right to buy. It provides that the compensation will be payable by the Part 3A community body except where Ministers have refused the application, in which case the compensation due to the owner of the land will be paid by Ministers.

264. Subsection (1) specifies the circumstances in which eligibility for compensation will arise.

265. Subsection (2) provides that the Part 3A community body will not be liable to pay compensation when a Part 3A community right to buy application is made but is not approved by Ministers.

266. Subsection (3) specifies that, in the circumstances covered by subsection (2), compensation for certain losses and expenses can be recovered from Ministers.
267. Subsection (4) provides that Ministers may make an order specifying the amounts payable in respect of loss or expense, who is liable to pay those amounts, and how any compensation is to be claimed under the new section 97T.

268. Subsection (5) provides that if the parties cannot agree whether compensation is payable or the amount of such compensation within the timescale specified in the order, then either party may refer the matter to the Lands Tribunal.

Grants towards Part 3A community bodies’ liabilities to pay compensation

269. The new section 97U provides that Ministers may, in certain limited circumstances, pay a grant to a Part 3A community body to assist it in meeting the compensation it has to pay in connection with its exercise of a right to buy.

270. Subsection (2) specifies the circumstances in which payment of such a grant would be permitted and subsection (3) makes it clear that Ministers are not bound to pay a grant even when all the circumstances specified arise.

271. Subsection (4) provides that payment of a grant may be subject to conditions including conditions relating to repayment in the event of a breach.

272. Subsection (5) provides that a grant may be paid only if the Part 3A community body applies for it, and subsection (6) provides that the form of the application and the application procedure shall be as Ministers specify in regulations.

273. Subsection (7) provides that Ministers must issue their decision on an application for a grant in writing and, where that decision is to refuse to pay a grant, include the reasons for that refusal. Subsection (8) provides that Ministers’ decision on whether to pay a grant or not is final.

Appeals

275. Subsections (1), (4) and (5) provide that the landowner, a person who is a member of the community to which a Part 3A community body relates and a creditor in a standard security with a right to sell land to which an application relates may appeal against the Ministers’ decision to consent to the application, while subsection (2) allows the Part 3A community body to appeal against a decision to refuse an application. Where there is more than one Part 3A community body wishing to purchase the land, subsection (3) provides that Ministers’ decision on which community body’s application will proceed is final and cannot be appealed to the sheriff.

276. Subsection (6) specifies the timeframe within which an appeal may be made.

277. Subsection (7) specifies that the sheriff court with the jurisdiction to hear an appeal is the sheriff court where the land subject to an appeal is located.
278. Subsection (8) specifies who each appellant must inform when an appeal is made.

279. Subsection (9) provides that the sheriff’s decision is final and may require rectification of the Register of Community Interests in Abandoned or Neglected Land and may impose conditions on the appellant.

Appeals to Lands Tribunal: valuation

280. The new section 97W of the 2003 Act sets out the rights of appeal to the Lands Tribunal in connection with the valuation which is carried out under the new section 97S.

281. Subsection (1) provides that the owner of the land and the Part 3A community body exercising its right to buy may appeal the valuation to the Lands Tribunal.

282. Subsection (2) requires such an appeal to state the grounds of the appeal and that it be lodged within 21 days of valuation being notified under section 97S(10).

283. Subsection (3) provides that the Lands Tribunal may reassess the valuation of the land.

284. Subsection (4) provides that the valuer may be a witness in the appeal proceedings.

285. Subsection (5) requires the Lands Tribunal to give reasons in writing for its decision on an appeal within 8 weeks of the hearing of that appeal. Subsection (5A) provides that, where the Lands Tribunal considers that it is not reasonable to issue a written statement within 8 weeks, it must notify the parties to the appeal of the date by which it will issue its written statement.

286. Subsection (6) provides that Ministers are not competent parties to any appeal by reason only that they appointed the valuer.

287. Subsection (7) provides that Ministers’ powers under the Lands Tribunal Act 1949 to make rules are extended so that Ministers can make any rules necessary or expedient in connection with Part 3A.

Reference to Lands Tribunal of questions on applications

288. The new section 97X sets out rights of appeal to the Lands Tribunal on a question relating to the Part 3A application.

289. Subsection (1) provides that at any time before Ministers make a decision on an application, any question relating to the application may be referred to the Lands Tribunal by Ministers, the landowner, a person who is a member of the community to which the Part 3A community body relates, any person with an interest in the land giving rise to a legally enforceable right (e.g. a creditor in a standard security with the right to sell land) or any other such person invited to send views on a Part 3A application (under section 97G(9)(a)(iii)).
290. Subsection (2) provides that the Lands Tribunal may consider the views of the Part 3A community body, the owner of the land subject to the Part 3A application and any other person that the Lands Tribunal determines have an interest in the case.

291. Subsection (3) provides that the Lands Tribunal must inform Ministers of its findings on any of the questions referred to it and may, by order, provide for Ministers to consent to an application under the new section 97L only if they impose certain conditions, as directed by the Lands Tribunal.

292. Subsection (4) provides that if the Lands Tribunal finds that the question on the application is not relevant to the Ministers’ decision, the Lands Tribunal may decide not to consider the question further and find accordingly.

Agreement as to matters referred or appealed

293. The new section 97Y of the 2003 Act provides that parties to the Part 3A application are not prevented from settling or agreeing on the matter which is subject to an appeal under sections 97V or 97W between them.

Interpretation of Part 3A

294. The new section 97Z sets out some matters of interpretation.

295. Subsection (1) provides that any reference to a creditor in a standard security with a right to sell land is a reference to a creditor who has such rights under section 20(2) or 23(2) of the Conveyancing and Feudal Reform (Scotland) Act 1970, or a warrant granted under section 24(1) of that Act.

296. Subsections (2) and (3) provide that public or local holidays should not be taken into account when calculating time periods in Part 3A, except for the 6 month period of completion for the right to buy, the 28-day period for a right of appeal to the sheriff and the 21-day period for a right of appeal to the Lands Tribunal on the valuation.

Part 5: Asset transfer requests

297. This Part sets out how a “community transfer body” can request to buy, lease, manage, occupy or use land or buildings belonging to a “relevant authority”, how the authority is to decide whether to agree to or refuse the request, and the procedures to be followed if the request is agreed.

298. Throughout this Bill (except where it amends other legislation) “land” has the meaning set out in the Interpretation and Legislative Reform (Scotland) Act 2010, which is that “‘land’ includes buildings and other structures, land covered with water, and any right or interest in or over land”.

Community transfer body

299. Section 50 defines a “community transfer body”. This is either a community-controlled body, as defined in section 14, or a body designated as a community transfer body by the Scottish Ministers. The Scottish Ministers may designate individual bodies to be community transfer bodies or may designate a whole class of bodies, so that any body of that type will qualify as a community transfer body. Subsection (3) states that where a trust is designated, the designated body will be the trustees, since a trust is not incorporated.

Relevant authority

300. A “relevant authority” is defined by section 51. This may be a person (or organisation) listed in schedule 3, or one designated as a relevant authority by the Scottish Ministers. Schedule 3 includes local authorities, the Scottish Ministers, Health Boards, and certain other Scottish public bodies, which have been selected because they own significant amounts of land and buildings.

301. The remainder of section 51 gives the Scottish Ministers a power to remove or amend any entry on the list, or to make an order designating other bodies or classes of bodies as public service authorities. Subsection (4) provides that persons may only be designated if they fall into the following categories:

- part of the Scottish Administration, which has the meaning given in section 126(6) to (8) of the Scotland Act 1998;
- “Scottish public authorities with mixed functions or no reserved functions under the Scotland Act 1998” – this means that UK Government Departments and public bodies that deal with matters reserved to the UK Government cannot be included;
- companies wholly-owned by relevant authorities.

Asset transfer requests

302. Section 52 sets out how an asset transfer request can be made. It must relate to land (which includes buildings) owned or leased by a relevant authority. The community transfer body may ask to have ownership of the land transferred to it, if the land is owned by the relevant authority; it may ask to lease the land from the relevant authority; or to obtain other rights in respect of the land, for example to manage or use it for a specified purpose.

303. Subsection (4) sets out the information which must be included in the request. In addition to specifying the land (or building) to which the request relates, and whether the request is for ownership, lease or other rights, the community transfer body must describe the reasons for making the request and the benefits which it considers will arise if the request is agreed to. It must also state how much the body would be prepared to pay, either to buy the land or in rent, and any other terms and conditions that would apply to the request.

304. Section 52(3) provides that a request for transfer of ownership of land may only be made by a community transfer body which meets the criteria set out in section 53, in addition to being covered by section 50. This means it must be a company, a Scottish charitable incorporated organisation (SCIO), a community benefit society, or a body designated as a community transfer body under section 50, where the designation states that the body may make a request for transfer of ownership. Classes of bodies may also be designated as eligible to make a request for transfer of ownership.

305. If a company is to meet the criteria to request transfer of ownership, section 53(2) requires that it must have at least 20 members, and provision in its articles of association to ensure that, on winding up, any remaining property remains within either the community sector or the charitable sector. If the company has registered an interest in or has acquired land under the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, its winding up provisions will need to satisfy the requirements of that Act. Subsection (2)(b)(iii), (iv) and (v) replicate those requirements, so that a company can be both a community transfer body and a community body under Part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 or a crofting community body under Part 3 of that Act. If the company is registered as a Scottish charity, the requirements for registration mean that any surplus property must be applied for charitable purposes, as in subsection (2)(b)(ii), so a charitable company can also be a community transfer body. If the company does not need to meet either of those requirements, it may choose to use any of the options in paragraph (b).

306. In order to be registered as a SCIO, a body is required to have appropriate provision in its constitution for surplus property to be distributed for charitable purposes. Similarly, there are restrictions on how community benefit societies can use or deal with their assets, and assets can only be transferred to other community or charitable organisations. Therefore, the only additional requirement for a SCIO or a community benefit company to be able to make an asset transfer request for ownership of land is that it has at least 20 members, which is provided for in subsection (1)(b) and (ba) of section 53.

Regulations

307. A community transfer body may need more information about the property before determining the purchase price, level of rent or other terms and conditions to be proposed. The Scottish Ministers may make regulations under section 54 about asset transfer requests. These may include, under subsection (3), details of how a community transfer body can request such information and how a relevant authority is to respond. Regulations under subsection (2) may also specify how asset transfer requests are to be made, additional information to be included in them, and the procedure to be followed by a relevant authority in relation to requests. They may also include requirements to publish the fact that a request is being made, and to notify specified people about them.

Decisions

308. A relevant authority must decide whether to agree to or refuse an asset transfer request in accordance with section 55. It must compare the benefits that might arise if the request is agreed to with those that might arise from any other proposal for the land, whether made through another asset transfer request, by the authority, or by any other person (subsection (3)(e) and (6)). In doing so it must consider whether the proposals will promote or improve economic development, regeneration, public health, social wellbeing or environmental wellbeing or reduce inequalities of outcome which result from socio-economic disadvantage, and any other benefits that might arise, and the decision must be reached in a manner which encourages equal opportunities and the observance of the equal opportunity requirements. The relevant authority must also consider other matters it considers relevant, including the functions and purposes of the authority, and any obligations that may affect its ability to agree to the request. Subsection (5) requires that the authority must agree to the request unless there are reasonable grounds for refusing it.

309. Subsection (7) requires the relevant authority to give notice to the community transfer body of its decision, and the reasons for that decision, within a specified period, as described in subsection (8). Subsection (9) gives the Scottish Ministers power to make regulations about the information to be included in this decision notice and how it is to be given.

310. Section 56 sets out the procedure to be followed when an asset transfer request is agreed to. The decision notice given by the relevant authority must specify the terms and conditions on which the authority is prepared to carry out the transfer. These terms and conditions may or may not reflect those included in the asset transfer request. The community transfer body must in turn submit an offer, within a period specified in the decision notice, reflecting the terms and conditions set out in the decision notice, and any other terms and conditions needed to make sure the transfer can take place, and that it takes place within a reasonable time. After this the community transfer body and the relevant authority will make arrangements to conclude a contract, as would happen with any sale or lease of property. Subsections (5) to (9) set out a timescale for this.

311. The period for concluding a contract is normally a minimum of 6 months from the date of the offer. A longer period can be agreed between the relevant authority and the community transfer body. If the relevant authority does not agree to extend the period, the community transfer body may apply to the Scottish Ministers seeking a direction under subsection (7)(b)(ii) that the period should be extended. This can be done more than once. The Scottish Ministers may make regulations under subsection (10) about these directions and how to apply for them. Under subsection (6A), if the contract is not concluded within the required period, this is treated as a refusal of the request, and an appeal can be made under section 58.

312. When a relevant authority has agreed to transfer land in response to an asset transfer request, section 57 prevents the authority from disposing of that land to anyone other than the body that made the request. This applies from the day the decision notice is given to the day when the transfer process ends. The process ends when a contract is concluded (subsection (4)(a)), or when no offer has been made within the specified period (subsection (3)(a)), or when no contract has been concluded within the specified period (subsection (4)(b)). If the relevant authority enters into a contract with another person, during this period, to sell or lease the land to them, subsection (5) makes that contract unenforceable.

Appeals and reviews

313. Sections 58 to 59C set out arrangements for appeals and reviews in relation to asset transfer requests. A community transfer body can appeal or apply for a review if:

- the request has been refused;
- the request has been agreed but the relevant authority has required terms and conditions which are significantly different to those proposed in the request; or no decision has been made within the required period.

314. The arrangements depend on the relevant authority to which the asset transfer request was made, and therefore by which the original decision was made.

- Decisions made by a local authority are subject to review by the local authority, under section 59.
- Decisions made by a relevant authority specified by the Scottish Ministers in an order under section 58(2)(c) are subject to review by a local authority.
- Decisions made by the Scottish Ministers are subject to review by the Scottish Ministers under section 59A.
- Decisions made by any other relevant authority are subject to appeal to the Scottish Ministers under section 58.
- Decisions made by local authorities following a review under section 59 (or provided for by section 59C) are subject to appeal to the Scottish Ministers under section 59B, following the procedures set out in section 58.

315. For each type of appeal or review, the Scottish Ministers may make regulations about how they are to be carried out and the time limits for making the application. These regulations may allow the authority undertaking the process to determine how certain stages are carried out.

316. In the case of an appeal to the Scottish Ministers under section 58 or section 59B, the Scottish Ministers may allow the appeal or may dismiss it and may reverse or vary (change) any part of the decision of the relevant authority, including changing any terms and conditions that were imposed. The Scottish Ministers may reverse or vary part of the decision of the relevant authority even if the appeal does not relate to that part. If the Scottish Ministers decide the relevant authority must transfer ownership, lease or confer rights in relation to land, or agree to certain terms and conditions, they must issue a direction requiring the relevant authority to issue a new decision notice in line with the appeal decision. That notice will replace the original decision notice.

317. In a review carried out by a local authority, under section 59, subsection (8) means that the local authority must consider the same issues when reviewing a decision as it would in making an initial decision on an asset transfer request, and must agree to the request unless there are reasonable grounds for refusal. Subsection (10) displaces the general rule set out in section 56 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 (that a local authority may delegate any of its functions to any of its committees, sub-committees or officers or another local authority) to require that the review must be carried out by the authority or a committee or sub-committee of the authority, and may not be delegated to officers. Subsection (5) provides that, having carried out a review, the local authority may confirm or change its decision, including altering any terms and conditions set out in the original decision notice. It must then provide a new decision notice, providing the reasons for the decision made on review. This notice replaces the original decision notice, and must be issued within a period prescribed in regulations, or a longer period agreed between the local authority and the community transfer body.
318. A review of a decision made by the Scottish Ministers under section 59A follows much the same procedures as a local authority review. However, it allows for the Scottish Ministers to appoint persons in connection with carrying out the review. This might, for example, allow for an independent reporter or panel to scrutinise the original decision and make a report to Ministers. There is no time limit for the Scottish Ministers to issue their decision notice following the review.

319. Section 59C provides that decisions made by a relevant authority specified by the Scottish Ministers in an order under section 58(2)(c) are subject to review by a local authority. The local authority to which an application for review is to be made may be specified or determined by factors set out in an order under section 59C(4)(b). This allows for cases where it is more appropriate for the decision to be reviewed by a local authority than by the Scottish Ministers, for example where the relevant authority is a company wholly owned by one or more local authorities. The review procedures set out in section 59 will apply, subject to such modifications as the Scottish Ministers think appropriate.

320. When an appeal or review results in an asset transfer request being agreed (with or without amended terms or conditions), the process then continues under the provisions of section 56, with the community transfer body making an offer and the two parties proceeding to conclude a contract.

Land leased to a relevant authority

321. Section 60 applies where all the criteria set out in paragraphs (a) to (d) of subsection (1) are met. It deals with the situation where an asset transfer request is made to lease or otherwise occupy land (including a building) which is leased to a relevant authority by another relevant authority, or by a company wholly owned by another relevant authority. Subsections (2) and (3) mean that any conditions in that lease which restrict the relevant authority’s ability to sub-let or share occupancy of the land, or restrict how the land may be used, do not prevent the relevant authority agreeing to lease the land to the community transfer body or to allow the body to occupy the land.

322. This does not apply if any other person is entitled to occupy the land (subsection (1)(d)). Subsections (4) and (5) also provide that it does not affect any restrictions on the power of the relevant authority to assign or transfer rights and liabilities under the lease, and the relevant authority continues to be subject to any obligations under the lease, even if it leases the land to the community transfer body or allows the body to occupy it. For example, the relevant authority would still be responsible to the landlord for any maintenance requirements included in the lease between them.

Repeated requests

323. Section 61 is intended to help relevant authorities deal with repeated, vexatious requests. It means that if a second request relating to the same land or building is made within two years of a previous request, which was refused, the relevant authority may choose not to consider that second request. Subsections (4) and (5) provide that this only applies if the new request seeks the same type of transfer, but it does not matter whether the new request is made by the same body or a different one. For example, if one community transfer body requests to lease a particular building, and is refused, and another body requests to lease the same building within two years, the relevant authority may decline to consider that second request. On the other hand, if the second request was for transfer of ownership instead of a lease, the relevant authority would have to consider it. Declining to consider a request under these circumstances does not count as a refusal of the request and therefore is not eligible for appeal or review.

Registers of relevant authorities’ land

324. Section 61A requires each relevant authority to establish, maintain and make available to the public a register of land which they own or lease (to the best of the authority’s knowledge and belief). There is a power for the Scottish Ministers to specify land that need not be included in the register, and relevant authorities must have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers in relation to these duties.

325. This provision is intended to assist community bodies in identifying property that may be available for asset transfer. However, the fact that a property is not on the register will not prevent an asset transfer request being made for it. It is expected that regulations will be used to exclude types of “land”, such as retaining walls and mineral rights, which are unlikely to be targets for asset transfer in themselves. Guidance will set out what information about the land is to be included, as well as issues such as how the register should be published and how often it must be updated.

Annual reports

326. Section 61B requires each relevant authority to publish an annual report on the number of asset transfer requests received and their outcomes, including the outcome of any appeal or review, and any action taken by the authority to promote the use of asset transfer requests and support community bodies to make them.

Part 5A: Delegation of Forestry Commissioners’ functions

327. Section 7B of the Forestry Act 1967 (“the 1967 Act”), inserted by the Public Services Reform (Scotland) Act 2010, allows the Forestry Commissioners to delegate their functions (to such extent and subject to such conditions as they think appropriate) to community bodies, in relation to land in Scotland which is let to the community body.

328. Section 7C of the 1967 Act sets out the requirements that a body must meet to be a community body under section 7B of the 1967 Act. It must be a company limited by guarantee, the articles of association of which include a definition of the community to which the company relates. The community must be defined by reference to postcode units. The company must also have no fewer than 20 members; the majority of the members of the company must consist of members of the community, and those members must have control of the company; and there must be provision for proper financial management of the company and the auditing of its accounts.

329. The Forestry Commissioners manage land which is owned by the Scottish Ministers and placed at their disposal for the exercise of their functions, under section 3 of the 1967 Act. Since the Scottish Ministers are listed in schedule 3 to the Bill as a relevant authority, a community transfer body may make an asset transfer request under Part 5 to lease such land, and may seek to have forestry functions delegated to it in relation to that land. Part 5A of the Bill amends section 7C of the 1967 Act, to make the requirements for a community body in that section closer, but not identical, to the requirements for a community controlled body under section 14 of the Bill, which may be a community transfer body under section 50.

330. Subsection (2)(a) of section 62A of the Bill removes the requirement for a community body to be a company limited by guarantee and allows it instead to be any form of body corporate, with a requirement that certain provisions are set out in a written constitution rather than having to be in articles of association. Subsection (2)(c) adds a requirement that membership of the body must be open to any member of its defined community, and that its aims and purposes must include the promotion of a benefit for that community. Subsection (2)(d) removes the requirement in relation to auditing of the accounts (although the requirement for ensuring proper arrangements of the financial management of the body remains), but adds a provision that any surplus funds or assets of the body must be applied for the benefit of the community. Subsection (4) removes the requirement for the community to be defined by postcode units, allowing for communities of interest to be included as well as those defined by geographical boundaries.

Part 5B: Supporters’ Trust’s Rights to Buy Scottish Professional Football League club

331. This Part sets out a mechanism for supporters’ trusts to have a right to buy Scottish Professional Football League clubs.

Meaning of “supporters’ trust”

332. Section 62B defines the meaning of “supporters’ trust”. Only a community benefit society can be a supporters’ trust, and it must relate to one club which is a member of the Scottish Professional Football League. In these notes and in the Bill provisions, the club in question is referred to as the “football club”.

Meaning of “Scottish Professional Football League club”

333. Subsection (1) of section 62C defines “Scottish Professional Football League club” as a football club which is a member of the Scottish Professional Football League (SPFL) or any successor body as recognised by the Scottish Football Association. Therefore this excludes other football clubs playing in other leagues (such as lowland league, highland league, junior football) or any club that has been relegated from the SPFL. Subsection (2) provides that the Scottish Ministers can modify the meaning of “football club” by regulations. Subsection (3) states that the Scottish Ministers must consult before making any regulations to modify the definition.

Supporters’ trust register

334. Section 62D requires the Keeper of the Registers of Scotland to create and maintain a public register of supporters’ trusts who have registered an interest in buying a football club.
This will be known as the “Supporters’ Trust Register”.

Meaning of “ownership”

335. Section 62E defines “ownership”, in relation to a football club, as having a controlling interest in the football club, which means shares carrying more than half of the voting rights. The controlling interest may be held by individuals, companies or a community benefit society, or any other body prescribed by the Scottish Ministers.

Supporters’ trust registration of interest in buying a football club

336. Section 62F sets out how an interest in buying a football club may be registered. An application must be made to the Scottish Ministers in a form and accompanied by information that may be prescribed. Each application may only relate to one football club, but more than one supporters’ trust may be registered in respect of a single football club.

337. Subsection (4) provides that, on receiving an application, the Scottish Ministers must inform the owner or operator of the club and invite them to respond. They must also send a notice prohibiting the owner or operator from transferring ownership of the football club, or taking any steps to transfer ownership, until the application is determined.

338. Under subsection (5), Ministers must be satisfied that a number of criteria are met to enable a football club to be registered, including:

- a significant number of the members of the trust have a substantial connection with the club.
- membership of the trust is open to all supporters of the club at an affordable rate.
- there is a level of support within the trust to justify a registration of interest
- it is in the public interest to register the interest.

339. If the Scottish Ministers decide that the interest is to be registered they must, under subsection (6), direct the Keeper to enter the interest into the Register.

Effect of registration

340. Section 62G sets out the effect of the registration of the supporters’ trust’s interest on the owner of the club. In effect they are prohibited from transferring ownership or taking other action such as putting it up for sale or entering into negotiations for transfer of ownership, including any such negotiations which started before the supporters’ trust interest was registered. If the owner sells sufficient shares to transfers the controlling interest in the club they must be offered for re-sale to the supporters’ trust. This section does not prevent the owner from winding the club up (filing for insolvency).

Procedure for late applications

341. Section 62H provides for late applications, i.e. an application received by the Scottish Ministers after the owner or operator of the football club has advertised the club for sale or started negotiations to transfer ownership, or has notified another supporters’ trust which has a registered interest that they intend to transfer the club to that trust. In order to allow a late application to be registered the Scottish Ministers must be satisfied that there were good reasons why the application was not submitted before the owner decided to transfer ownership, that the support within the trust is “significantly greater” than under normal registration procedures, and there are factors strongly indicative that it is the public interest.

342. Subsection (4) provides that section 62O, procedure for buying, does not apply where an interest has been registered following a late application and that notice under section 62O and the confirmation which the Scottish Ministers would have required to seek under section 62K(2)(a) is deemed to have been given (although section 62O does not refer to a notice as mentioned in this subsection).

343. Subsection (5) provides that where an application for registration is received after transfer of ownership of the football club has been concluded or an option to buy has been conferred, the Scottish Ministers must decline to consider it.

Activation of supporters’ trust right to buy and Supporters’ trust right to buy 344. Sections 62I and 62J provide for situations where the supporters’ trusts’ interest may be activated and exercised.

345. Section 62I sets out that the supporters’ trust’s interest may be exercised when the owner or operator has given notice of their intention to transfer ownership or that the club has entered into formal insolvency. The owner or operator must give such notice to the supporters’ trust or trusts which have a registered interest, and to the Scottish Ministers, in such form as may be prescribed.

346. Section 62J provides that the supporters’ trust right to buy may be exercised at any time after that interest has been entered into the register by the Keeper.

Procedure after activation of right to buy

347. Section 62K sets out the initial procedure after the activation of the supporters’ trust right to buy under section 62I. This includes the Scottish Ministers seeking confirmation that the trust will exercise its right to buy. The trust has 30 days to respond and if they do not the right to buy is extinguished. The Scottish Ministers must direct the Keeper to enter details of the notification given under section 62I into the register, and must send copies of the notice sent by them to the supporters’ trust and any response to the Keeper and the owner of the club.

Exercise of right to buy: approval of supporters’ trust and consent of the Scottish Ministers

348. Section 62L provides that the exercise of the right to buy can only proceed with the approval of the supporters’ trust and the consent of the Scottish Ministers.

349. Under subsection (2), the supporters’ trust has given its approval if at least half the members have voted in a ballot or, where less than half have voted, the proportion is still sufficient to justify buying the club. The majority of those voting must have voted in favour of the proposition. The vote must have taken place within the last 6 months.
350. The Scottish Ministers may not consent to the purchase unless the criteria set out in subsection (3) are met, including that the proposed purchase of the club is in the public interest and that nothing has changed since the interest was registered that would cause the application to be refused if it was made at this time.

351. The Scottish Ministers must send notice of their decision and their reasons to the supporters’ trust and the owner of the club within 21 days after receiving notification of the result of the supporters’ trust’s ballot (or the last of the ballots, if two or more trusts are involved), and must direct the Keeper to record the decision in the Register.

Declinature or extinction of right to buy

352. Section 62M provides that the supporters’ trust right to buy is extinguished if, after the right to buy has arisen, the supporters’ trust gives notice that it will not exercise its right to buy, or the owner or operator gives notice that they have decided not to proceed with the proposed transfer. These actions do not prevent the supporter’s trust from registering an interest in the club again, or the right to buy from arising again.

353. Section 62N provides that, where there is more than one supporters’ trust with a registered interest in the same club, only one may exercise the right to buy. It will be for the Scottish Ministers to decide which one is to proceed, and the other trust’s right to buy will be extinguished.

Procedure for buying

354. Section 62O sets out the procedure for buying the club. The supporter’s trust is to make an offer at a price agreed between the trust and the owner or, if no agreement is reached, at a value assessed by an appointed valuer or determined after an appeal of the assessed value. The price is to be paid and ownership transferred not later than 6 months from the date that the supporters’ trust confirmed its intention to exercise the right to buy. Later dates are provided for if an appeal over the assessed value has not been concluded within 4 months of the confirmation. If missives have not been concluded within the required period then the right to buy is extinguished, unless the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that the supporters’ trust has taken all reasonable steps to conclude the missives.

Application for funding

355. Section 62P allows the Scottish Ministers to make payments to fund the trust in order that the trust can make an offer to buy the club. Before they can apply for funding the trust must have obtained the approval of the trust and consent of the Scottish Ministers to proceed to buy the club.

Assessment of value of football club

356. Section 62Q provides that the Scottish Ministers must appoint a valuer within 7 days of receiving confirmation that a supporters’ trust will exercise its right to buy. The valuer must be... suitably qualified, independent and have knowledge and experience of valuing a club. The value to be assessed is the market value of the club at the date when the owner or operator notified their intention to transfer ownership, or the insolvency of the club, or in the case of a late application, at the date the application was received. The cost of the valuation is to be met by the Scottish Ministers.

Appeals

357. Section 62R provides for a range of circumstances in which an appeal may be made to the sheriff.

358. Subsection (1) provides for an owner or operator of a football club to appeal against:
- a decision by the Scottish Ministers that a trust interest is entered into the register
- a decision by the Scottish Ministers to give consent to the exercise by a trust of its right to buy
- a decision by the valuer on the valuation of the club.

359. Subsection (2) provides for a supporters’ trust to appeal against:
- a decision by the Scottish Ministers that a trust interest is not to be entered into the register
- a decision by the Scottish Ministers not to give consent to the exercise by a trust of its right to buy
- a decision by the valuer on the valuation of the club.

360. Subsection (3) provides for a person who is a member of a trust or who has any interest in the football club giving right to a legally enforceable right, to appeal against:
- a decision by the Scottish Ministers that a trust interest is to be entered into the register
- a decision by the Scottish Ministers to give a consent to the exercise by a trust of its right to buy.

Supporters’ trust right to buy shares in a football club

361. Section 62S gives a trust with a registered interest the right to buy a proportion of the shares in the club at any point when the right to buy has been activated. In exercising this right the trust may buy a controlling interest and must, if it chooses to buy shares, buy at least 5% of the shares in the club.

Part 6: Common good property

362. Common good property is property owned by local authorities for the common good of the inhabitants in their areas which has been passed down, through local government reorganisation, from the former burghs. Those burghs would have received it as a gift or purchased it. It includes land and buildings, moveable items such as furniture and art, and cash funds. It is sometimes difficult to know whether property is part of the common good, and there may be restrictions on how certain items of common good property are allowed to be used and whether the local authority can dispose of them. In some cases this has to be decided by the courts.

363. This Part of the Bill increases transparency about common good assets and community involvement in decisions taken about their identification, use and disposal. It does not define or redefine common good or remove or alter any restrictions on the use or disposal of common good property.

Common good registers

364. Section 63 requires each local authority to establish and maintain a register of its common good property. Before establishing this register it must publish a list of what it proposes to include, and notify any community councils and other community bodies in its area. In this Part, “community bodies” are defined as any group set up to promote or improve the interests of any communities which exist in the area. Community councils and community bodies must be invited to comment on the proposed register, and the local authority must take account of any comments made by those bodies or anyone else. This gives everyone the opportunity to say whether they think the local authority has missed any common good property from the list, or included anything which is not part of the common good.

365. Subsection (8) requires the local authority to make its completed common good register available for the public to inspect in person, and to make it available on a website or by other electronic means.

366. Section 64 requires local authorities to have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers about common good registers. Before issuing any guidance, the Scottish Ministers must consult local authorities, community councils, and appropriate community bodies.

Disposal and use of common good property

367. Section 65 ensures that communities are consulted before a local authority disposes of any common good property or changes its use. As with establishing the common good register, the local authority must publish its proposals, notify community councils and community bodies, and take account of any comments made by them or anyone else. In this case the local authority only needs to consult community bodies which it knows have an interest in that particular property. They must also, where the local authority is Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh or Glasgow City Council, consult any community council in the local authority area. Apart from Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh and Glasgow City Councils, many local authorities have one or more common good funds that are used for the benefit of different former burgh areas, and they are required to administer these funds with regard to the interests of the inhabitants of the relevant area. It would not be appropriate to consult community councils from other parts of the local authority area. Therefore section 65(5)(aa) provides that the local authority must notify and invite representations from community councils whose area covers or overlaps with the area to which the common good property related prior to the abolition of burgh councils in 1975.
368. Section 66 requires local authorities to have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers about disposal or change of use of common good property and about the management and use of common good property.

Part 7: Allotments

Meaning of “allotment”

369. Earlier legislation on allotments does not provide a clear definition of “allotment”. Section 68 of the Bill defines “allotment” for the purpose of this Part. Paragraph (a) provides that an allotment is land that is either owned or leased by a local authority. Privately leased or owned allotments are not covered by the Bill. Additional requirements for land being an allotment under Part 7 of the Bill are that the land is leased, or intended to be leased, by a person from the local authority and that the land is used wholly or mainly for the non-commercial cultivation of vegetables, fruit, herbs or flowers (subsection (1)). Additionally, an allotment is defined as a size of approximately 250 square metres or such size as has been requested by the person leasing or intending to lease it (subsection (2)) if the size is smaller than 250 square metres.

Meaning of “allotment site”

370. No specific definition of “allotment site” has been included in earlier allotment legislation. Section 69 defines “allotment site” for the purpose of Part 7 as an area of land consisting wholly or partly of “allotments”, as defined in section 68. An “allotment site” also includes other local authority land that allotment tenants use in connection with their allotments, such as communal buildings, and environmental areas.

Regulations as to size of allotments

371. Section 69A confers a duty on the Scottish Ministers to make further provision about the size of allotments in regulations. This section also requires the Scottish Ministers to consult with each local authority and any other persons that may be appropriate before bringing forward such regulations.

Request to lease allotment

372. Section 70 provides for requests to lease allotments from a local authority. Subsection (1) provides that any resident in a local authority area may request to lease an allotment from that local authority.

373. Subsection (2) provides that this request must be in writing and include the name and address of the applicant. Regulations may also set out further information that must be included in the request.

374. Subsection (3) makes provision for requests for allotments by disabled persons and allows details of any additional requirements regarding access to and adaptation of the allotment or site to be provided in the request. For example a need for adaptations such as raised beds and wider paths should be specified.
(SP Bill 52A)

375. Subsection (4) provides that a request for an allotment may be made even if the local authority does not currently provide allotments in their area. A joint request for an allotment may also be made by two or more persons, so long as the applicants are all resident in the relevant local authority area (subsection (5)).

376. Once a request is received, the local authority is under a duty to acknowledge the request in writing within 14 days (subsection (6)).

Duty to maintain list

377. Section 71 imposes an obligation on local authorities to establish and maintain a waiting list of residents who have requested an allotment.

378. Subsection (2) clarifies that there is no set format for such lists and local authorities may manage them as they see fit. They may, for example, wish to split the list into applicants’ preferred geographical areas. Subsection (3) provides that a person’s details must be removed from the list when they are offered an allotment or withdraw their request.

Duty to provide allotments

379. Section 72(1) imposes a duty on local authorities to take reasonable steps to provide sufficient allotments to keep the list referred to in section 71 at no more than half the authority’s current number of allotments, and to ensure that the number of persons who have been entered on the list for more than five years is zero.

380. Where a local authority does not on the date that section 72 comes into force own or lease allotments, subsection (2) sets out that this duty is triggered when there are 15 people on the local authority waiting list maintained under section 71(1). However, where a local authority already owns or leases allotments, subsection (3) sets out that the duty arises after only one person is on the waiting list.

381. Subsection (3A) requires local authorities, when taking reasonable steps to meet the duty in subsection (1), to take into account the need to provide allotments in reasonable proximity to the areas where people on the waiting list reside.

382. The Scottish Ministers may by order amend the number of people on the waiting list that triggers the requirement on the local authority to take reasonable steps to provide more allotments, or the proportion of current allotments below which the waiting list is to be kept (subsections (4) and (5)).

Access to allotment and allotment sites

383. Under section 72A where a local authority leases an allotment to a tenant the authority must provide reasonable access to the allotment and any allotment site. Where an authority leases an allotment site to a tenant the authority must provide reasonable access to the site and to allotments on it.
Allotment site regulations

384. An obligation is placed on each local authority under section 73(1) to make allotment site regulations for their area within two years of this section coming into force.

385. The matters set out in subsection (3) must be included in the regulations.

386. In addition to the mandatory requirements under subsection (3), subsection (4) sets out other matters local authorities may include in the regulations.

387. Local authorities are permitted to vary the regulations for different areas or different allotment sites in order to take account of local circumstances (subsection (5)).

Allotment site regulations: further provision

388. Section 74 sets out the process that local authorities must undertake to make allotment site regulations, or to vary or revoke them. Subsection (2) provides that local authorities must at least one month before making regulations advertise their intention to do so, the purpose of the regulations, where they may be inspected and details about making representations. They must also make copies of the proposed regulations available. A person who objects to the regulations may make representations to the local authority and must be allowed an opportunity to be heard and his or her representations taken account of before the local authority makes its final decision (subsections (3) and (4)). Where regulations contravene the local authority’s lease of the site, the provision in the lease is to prevail (subsection (11)).

Disposal etc. of allotments and allotment sites owned by local authority

389. Section 75 applies where an allotment site is owned by a local authority.

390. If a local authority wishes to change the use of or dispose of the whole or part of an allotment site it owns, before doing so it must obtain the consent of the Scottish Ministers (subsection (2)). Subsection (2A) requires the Scottish Ministers to consult both the local authority and other persons with an interest before granting consent. The Scottish Ministers may consent subject to conditions (subsection (3)), and in particular may only grant consent if they are satisfied that each of the allotment tenants from the site or the part of the site being disposed of is to be offered an alternative allotment within a reasonable distance, or that the provision of an alternative allotment is not necessary or reasonably practical in the circumstances (subsection (4)). Subsection (5) sets out that a purported transfer of ownership without the Scottish Ministers’ consent is of no effect.

Disposal etc. of allotments and allotment sites leased by local authority

391. Section 76 applies where a local authority leases the whole or part of an allotment site and sub-leases either the site (e.g. to an allotment association), or allotments within the site, to tenants.

392. Subsection (2) sets out that the local authority may not renounce (terminate voluntarily) the lease of an allotment site without the consent of the Scottish Ministers. In addition, even where a change of use is permitted by the head lease, the local authority may not change the use of the allotment site unless the Scottish Ministers consent (subsection (3)). Subsection (3A) requires the Scottish Ministers to consult both the local authority and other persons with an interest before granting consent.

393. As with section 75 above, the consent of the Scottish Ministers may be subject to conditions (subsection (4)), and the Scottish Ministers may not grant consent unless they are satisfied that the allotment tenants of the site or part of the site which is closing are to be offered a suitable alternative allotment within a reasonable distance of the allotment site which is closing, or that the provision of an alternative is unnecessary or not reasonably practical in the circumstances (subsection (5)). Subsection (6) sets out that a purported renunciation of a lease without the Scottish Ministers’ consent is of no effect.

Duty to prepare food-growing strategy

394. Section 77 places a duty on every local authority to prepare a food-growing strategy which must be published within two years of this section coming into force. Subsection (3) provides that the food-growing strategy must identify land in the local authority area which could be used by a community to grow vegetables, fruit, herbs or flowers, as well as land that could be used for allotments, and must describe how the authority intends to increase the provision of allotments or other land for community growing, should there be an identified need. Subsection (3A) requires a local authority, when detailing how it intends to increase the provision of allotment sites and community growing areas of land in its area, to describe whether and how this will apply to communities which experience socio-economic disadvantage. The Scottish Ministers may also prescribe other information to be included in a food growing strategy.

395. Once complete, the local authority must publish the food growing strategy on a website or by other electronic means (subsection (4)).

Duty to review food-growing strategy

396. Each local authority is under a duty to review its food-growing strategy, under section 78. This must be done 5 years after the date of initial publication and every 5 years thereafter (subsection (1)). Where the local authority makes changes to its food growing strategy following a review, the revised strategy must be published on a website or by other electronic means (subsection (2)).

Annual allotments report

397. Under section 79, every local authority is under a duty to prepare and publish an annual allotments report. This requires to be done as soon as is reasonably practicable after the end of each reporting year (as defined in subsection (4)). Publication must be on a website or by other electronic means (subsection (3)).

398. Subsection (2) sets out the matters which require to be detailed in the annual allotments report and allows other information to be required in the report by regulations made by the Scottish Ministers.
Power to remove unauthorised buildings from allotment sites

399. The regulations regarding allotment sites to be made under section 73 must include provision for buildings and structures that are permitted on allotments, including modifications that may be made and the materials that may or may not be used in connection with such structures. The regulations may also include provision for buildings or structures that are permitted on land mentioned in paragraph (b) of the definition of “allotment site”, being communal areas within the site, including permitted modifications and materials. If a building or structure is not permitted under regulations made under section 73(1), and at the time it was erected or modified, that erection or modification was prohibited by such regulations, section 80 gives a local authority the power to remove the building or other structure.

400. Subsection (2) provides that a local authority may:

- remove the building or other structure from the site;
- dispose of the materials that formed the building or other structure; and
- recover the cost of the removal and/or disposal of the materials from a “liable tenant”, being the tenant from whose allotment it is removed or, if on a part of the site that is not an allotment, from the tenant or tenants responsible for its erection (subsection (3)).

401. In cases where more than one tenant has consented to the erection of an unauthorised building or structure, each such tenant shall be jointly and severally liable for the recoverable costs (subsection (4)).

402. Prior to exercising this power to remove unauthorised buildings, a local authority must follow the procedure set down in subsection (5). Firstly, notice must be given to every tenant who may be affected by the removal of the building or structure. Secondly, the tenant(s) must be given the opportunity to make representations about the proposed action and there is a duty placed on the local authority to give appropriate consideration to these representations. Once a decision is reached, the local authority must notify this decision to the affected tenant(s) in writing, specifying the date on which the action is to take place, if applicable. Upon receipt of a notice under subsection (5)(d) a tenant has 21 days to appeal to a sheriff against the decision of the local authority.

403. A limitation placed on this power is that where a local authority leases an allotment site, it cannot remove buildings or other structures if this removal is in breach of a provision of the lease (subsection (8)).

404. Subsection (7) allows the Scottish Ministers to make regulations regarding the procedure to be followed in relation to the exercise of the power to remove buildings or structures, dispose of the materials and recover the costs of removal and disposal.

Delegation of management of allotment sites

405. Part 7 of the Bill imposes certain management functions on local authorities in relation to allotment sites. Section 81 allows a local authority to delegate certain functions to a person who represents the interests of all or the majority of the tenants of the allotments on a particular site. Usually, this “person” will be an allotment association.

406. Only the functions set out in subsection (2) may be delegated by the local authority.

407. In order for functions to be delegated, a written application must be made by the person wishing to take over the functions of the local authority. The application must include the name and address of the applicant, in addition to such information as the Scottish Ministers set out in regulations (subsection (3)).

408. Upon receipt of an application the local authority has 14 days in which to request from the applicant such further information as it requires in order to make a decision as to whether to agree or refuse the request. The applicant must provide this information within 14 days of it being requested (subsection (4)).

409. There are time limits by which the local authority must make and notify a decision on an application and these are set out in subsection (5). Where no further information has been requested from the applicant, the decision must be notified to the applicant within 28 days of receipt of the application. Where further information has been requested, this time limit is increased to 56 days.

410. If the request is refused, the local authority must send the applicant a decision notice which sets out the reasons for the refusal of the application (subsection (6)).

411. If the request is agreed, the local authority must decide which of its functions it is delegating to the applicant and when the delegation will be reviewed. Prior to the decision on which functions to delegate, the local authority is under an obligation to consult with the person who has made the request (subsection (8)).

412. In cases where the local authority considers that the person to whom they have delegated functions is not carrying out these functions satisfactorily, or where there is a disagreement between this person and the local authority, the local authority has the power to recall any of the functions it has delegated under this section (subsection (9)).

413. It is also set out in subsection (10) that where the local authority is leasing an allotment site from another person, any delegation of its functions must not contravene the head-lease.

Promotion and use of allotments: expenditure

414. Section 82(1) permits a local authority to incur expenditure for the purpose of promoting allotments in its area and providing training by or on behalf of the local authority to tenants and potential tenants about the use of allotments. Local authorities must take into account the desirability of exercising this power in relation to communities which experience socio-economic disadvantage (subsection (2)).
Use of local authority premises for meetings

415. Under section 82A a tenant of an allotment site or a person who represents the interest of all or the majority of tenants on an allotment site may make a request to the local authority to use, free of charge, a public or grant-aided school or other premises maintained by the authority in its area for holding a meeting about allotment site related business. This request must be made in writing at least one month before the date of the proposed meeting and include the name and address of the person making the request as well as information about the particulars of the meeting. The local authority must respond to the request within 14 days either granting or refusing the request or offering alternative arrangements for the meeting.

Termination of lease of allotment or allotment site

416. Section 83 confers a power on a local authority to terminate the lease of whole or part of an allotment or allotment site.

417. Where a tenant has been complying with allotment site regulations made under section 73, the minimum notice of termination the local authority is required to give is one year (subsection (2)). This applies where the Scottish Ministers have consented to disposal of the site, change of its use, or renunciation of the lease of the site under section 75 or 76. Where there has been a breach of allotment site regulations by a tenant, the notice period is reduced to 1 month (subsection (2)).

418. A local authority must write to any tenant to inform them of its intention to give notice to terminate a lease no later than one month in advance of serving such a notice (subsection (5)). The local authority is also required to allow the tenant any opportunity to make representations to the authority in relation to the proposed termination and must take account of such representations. After considering these representations the local authority must write to the tenant to inform them of their intention to no longer proceed or to give notice (subsection (5)(d)). A tenant who is aggrieved by a notice may appeal to the sheriff within 21 days of the date of the notice (subsection (6)). A notice served under this section does not take effect until the appeal period has expired or, where there is an appeal, the appeal has been withdrawn or finally determined (subsection (8)).

419. The written notice must specify the termination date of the lease (subsection (1)) If, however, the local authority has given notice under section 85 where its lease of the site has been terminated by its landlord, it does not require to also give notice under this section (subsection (11)).

Resumption of land by local authority

420. If allotment land is required by the local authority for building, mining or other industrial purpose (or for the construction, maintenance or repair of roads or sewers necessary in connection with these purposes), the local authority can, in certain circumstances, resume the whole or part of an allotment or allotment site, under section 84. This power can only be exercised with the consent of the Scottish Ministers and where the tenant has been given notice in accordance with subsection (3). The Scottish Ministers may grant consent subject to such conditions as they think fit (subsection (4)) and may only grant consent if they are satisfied that each of the allotment tenants from the site has been offered an alternative allotment within a reasonable distance, or that the provision of an alternative allotment is not necessary or reasonably practical in the circumstances (subsection (5)).

421. Subsection (3) provides that written notice of the resumption must be given to allotment tenants and this notice must specify the date on which the resumption is to take place. The minimum notice period is 3 months and the notice must therefore be served in accordance with this prescribed time limit.

Notice of termination: sublease

422. Where an allotment site is leased to a local authority and then the authority sub-leases either the site or particular allotments to tenants, it is possible that the local authority’s landlord may terminate the head-lease to the local authority, in whole or in part. Section 85 provides that the effect of this is that the sub-lease(s) granted by the local authority in relation to that site or part of site will come to an end on the date that the head-lease between the landlord and the local authority comes to an end.

423. Section 85(2) places an obligation on the local authority to send a copy of the notice of termination of the head-lease to each subtenant and inform them that the effect of the termination of the head-lease will be the termination of the sub-leases.

Notice of termination: sublease by allotment association

424. Where a person, such as an allotment association, leases an allotment site from a local authority and is given notice by the local authority in relation to the whole or part of that site, section 86 provides that that person must give notice to each subtenant of that whole or part site informing them that the effect of termination of the head-lease will be termination of the subleases on the same date.

Prohibition against assignation or subletting

425. Section 86A requires that a tenant of an allotment must not assign the lease of whole or part of the allotment without the consent of the local authority and must not sublet the whole or part of the lease. Should the tenant undertake either of these actions, the action is of no effect.

Sale of surplus produce

426. Section 87 sets out that, subject to any regulations made by local authorities under section 73(1), allotment tenants may sell produce grown on their allotments provided this is not with a view to making a profit (e.g. it may be sold for charity).

Removal of items from allotment by tenant

427. Section 88 provides that before the expiry or termination of a tenant’s allotment lease a tenant may remove certain items from their allotment. These items are any buildings or other structures erected by or on behalf of or acquired by the tenant, or any produce, trees or bushes acquired by the tenant or planted by or on behalf of the tenant.
Compensation for disturbance

428. Where an allotment lease is terminated, in whole or part, by way of one year’s notice, termination of the head lease of the site by the local authority’s landlord, or resumption, section 89 provides tenants with a right to be compensated by the local authority for damage caused by the disturbance of the enjoyment of the allotment (subsections (1) and (2)). A formula sets out how the minimum amount of compensation is to be calculated (subsection (3)). Subsections (4) and (5) require the Scottish Ministers to make further provision in regulations about the process involved in determining liability for, and the amount of, compensation. There is a right of appeal to the Sheriff against a local authority’s decision in respect of compensation (subsection (7)).

Compensation for deterioration of allotment

429. Under section 90, where a lease of an allotment from a local authority has ended and the allotment has deteriorated during the tenant’s tenancy due to the tenant’s fault or negligence, the sum required to remedy the deterioration is due in compensation from the tenant to the local authority. Subsections (4) and (5) require the Scottish Ministers to make further provision in regulations about the process involved in determining liability for, and the amount of, compensation. A tenant has a right of appeal to the sheriff against a decision of a local authority under this section (subsection (7)).

Compensation for loss of crops

430. Section 91 provides that where an allotment lease is terminated by way of resumption and the tenant loses crops due to the resumption, the local authority is liable to compensate the tenant for the loss of crops (subsections (1) and (2)). This compensation is only due to the tenant of an allotment; not to a tenant of an allotment site, such as an allotment association. The Scottish Ministers are required to make regulations about determining liability for, and the amount of, compensation (subsection (3) and (4)). A tenant has a right of appeal to the sheriff against a local authority decision under this section (subsection (6)).

Set-off compensation etc.

431. Where a lease is terminated, section 92(1) allows local authorities who are liable to compensate a tenant or subtenant for disturbance or loss of crops to deduct from the sum due any sum due by the tenant in connection with the lease.

432. Subsection (2) provides that where a tenant is liable to pay a sum to the local authority in connection with the lease, the tenant can deduct any sum due to them by the local authority by way of compensation for disturbance or loss of crops.

Part 7A: Participation in public decision making

Participation in decisions of certain persons exercising public functions

433. Section 93A provides a regulation-making power enabling the Scottish Ministers to require Scottish public authorities to promote and facilitate the participation of members of the public in the decisions and activities of the authority, including in the allocation of resources. Subsection (5) makes it clear that the regulations can confer functions on authorities, specify the activities to which the regulations can apply, and require the authorities to prepare and publish a report. The authorities must also have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.

Part 8: Non-domestic rates

Schemes for reduction and remission of rates

434. The Bill provides for reduction or remission of rates for non-domestic properties (usually referred to as “land and heritages”) in Scotland. It creates a power to allow rating authorities (which are the local authorities) to reduce or remit non-domestic rates (often referred to as business rates) within their areas, in any financial year from 2015-16 onwards. This power will allow any rating authority to create, if it wishes, local relief schemes for any lands and heritages from which it collects rates.

435. The power is created by an amendment to the Local Government (Financial Provisions etc.) (Scotland) Act 1962. Section 94(1) of the Bill inserts section 3A into that Act to provide the power. Section 3A(4) allows reliefs to apply in schemes defined by categories of property, areas, activities, or any other matter. Any relief awarded ceases to apply when there is a change in the occupation of the premises, under subsection (5) of section 3A. Subsection (6) requires the rating authority to have regard to the authority’s expenditure and income and the interests of people who pay council tax set by the authority before creating or amending a relief scheme. This is because any loss of income from non-domestic rates incurred by the scheme must be offset from other income raised by the local authority.

436. Section 94(2) amends Schedule 12 to the Local Government Finance Act 1992 (payments to local authorities) to ensure that the arrangements for pooling of income from non-domestic rates and funding of rating authorities will accommodate and remain unaffected by the power to create relief schemes. Subsections (3) and (4) make consequential amendments to allow these changes to take effect.

Part 9: General

437. Part 9 provides general information which relates to all Parts of the Bill.

438. Section 95 requires the Scottish Ministers to publish any guidance they issue under Part 2 or Part 6 of the Bill. (These are the only Parts that require people to have regard to guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.)

439. Section 96 regulates how the Scottish Ministers can make orders or regulations under the Bill, including the procedure (“affirmative” or “negative”) by which they are to be scrutinised by the Scottish Parliament.

440. Section 97 gives Ministers powers to make additional provision that is necessary or expedient to make sure the provisions of the Bill work properly. Section 96(2) provides that any order under section 97 which amends the text of an Act must be scrutinised in the Scottish Parliament by the stronger “affirmative” procedure.
441. Section 99 sets out when the provisions of the Bill come into force. Part 9 comes into force the day after the Bill receives Royal Assent. The rest of the Bill will come into force on dates decided by the Scottish Ministers, which will be set out in commencement orders. Different parts of the Bill may be brought into force at different times.
COMMUNITY EMPOWERMENT (SCOTLAND) BILL
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

SUPPLEMENTARY FINANCIAL MEMORANDUM

INTRODUCTION

1. As required under Rule 9.7.8B of the Parliament’s Standing Orders, this Supplementary Financial Memorandum is published to accompany the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill (introduced in the Scottish Parliament on 11 June 2014) as amended at Stage 2.

2. The Memorandum has been prepared by the Scottish Government. It does not form part of the Bill and has not been endorsed by the Parliament. It should be read in conjunction with the original Financial Memorandum published to accompany the Bill as introduced.

3. The purpose of this Supplementary Financial Memorandum is to set out the expected costs associated with the new and amended provisions included in the Bill following Stage 2 amendments. The majority of amendments do not significantly affect the assumptions in the original Financial Memorandum. This document addresses those amendments where additional costs are likely to be significant or where the future additional costs are uncertain as they are dependent on the level of demand but there is a potential for significant costs to be incurred.

PART 3: PARTICIPATION REQUESTS

4. Section 24A of the Bill was added by amendment at Stage 2. The amendment introduces a right of appeal to the Scottish Ministers in relation to participation requests. An appeal may be made when a public service authority refuses a participation request or when a community participation body has “significant concerns” about the provisions within a decision notice.

Costs on the Scottish Administration and public bodies (other than local authorities)

5. These provisions will apply in relation to public services provided by the listed public bodies. As indicated in the Financial Memorandum submitted with the Bill on introduction there are likely to be costs associated in responding to participation requests. However, it was noted that the total costs for each public body will depend on how often community participation bodies use the provisions in Part 3 and at this stage it is difficult to forecast use across Scotland.

6. Further information was provided to the Finance Committee on 3 October 2015 which provided an estimate of potential costs associated with an individual participation request:
http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_FinanceCommittee/General%20Documents/Correspondence_from_the_Scottish_Government_to_the_Public_Audit_Committee_dated_03_October_2014.pdf

7. The estimated cost of the majority of individual participation requests was between £1,000 and £7,500.

8. The proposals set out in section 24A would have resource implications for the Scottish Government. There would be a need for staff and administrative resources to be deployed in order to be able to exercise the additional function foreseen for the Government by the new section 24A. The impact cannot be estimated with any accuracy at this stage as it will be predicated on actions by community participation bodies that are not within the Government’s control and will be based on process and procedure to be set out in regulations. It may be that the additional function can be amalgamated within current structures. However to provide an indication of the average staff cost, a typical team of four comprising a member of staff at each of C1, B2, B1 and A3 grades would cost £157,962 per year.

9. The proposals set out in section 24A would also have resource implications for the listed public bodies (other than local authorities – see paragraph 10 below). There would be a need for additional staff, administrative and legal resources to respond to any appeal made by a community participation body in relation to a participation request that involves the public authority. As above these costs cannot be estimated with any accuracy at this stage as they will be predicated on actions by community participation bodies and will be based on process and procedure to be set out in regulations.

Costs on local authorities

10. The proposals set out in section 24A would have resource implications for local authorities. As for other public bodies above, there would be a need for additional administrative and legal resources to respond to any appeal made by a community participation body in relation to a participation request that involves the local authority. These costs cannot be estimated with any accuracy at this stage as they will be predicated on actions by community participation bodies and will be based on process and procedure to be set out in regulations.

PART 4: COMMUNITY RIGHT TO BUY LAND

11. Sections 47E (which amends section 75 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003) and section 48 (which inserts section 97J into the 2003 Act) of the Bill were amended at Stage 2. The purpose of these amendments is to allow community bodies, who are applying through either the crofting community right to buy (Part 3 of the 2003 Act) or the right to buy abandoned or neglected land (the new Part 3A of the 2003 Act as inserted by the Bill), to apply to the Scottish Ministers for the reimbursement of ballot costs.

Costs on the Scottish Administration

12. The amendments agreed in Committee at Stage 2 will have resource implications for the Scottish Government. Section 37 of the Bill as introduced, stated that a ballotter would be appointed by the Scottish Ministers, and the expenses of the ballot would be met, for any applications under Part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, by the Scottish Ministers.

13. There was no such provision in Part 3 or the new Part 3A of the 2003 Act. The processes for applications under Part 3 and Part 3A of the 2003 Act are different from those under Part 2. In the case of application under Part 3 or 3A of the 2003 Act, the ballot is held before the Scottish Ministers receive the application to buy land, and therefore is the first indication of community support for the application. For applications to register an interest in land under Part 2, community support is demonstrated via the likes of a petition and the ballot is only held once the community has confirmed that it wishes to proceed with the actual purchase.

14. For this reason, it was considered that a ballot under Part 3 or 3A of the 2003 Act should not be run, or the expenses met by, the Scottish Ministers with no information or indication of the level of community support. Stakeholder submissions to the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee indicated that this was an omission. During discussions with the Committee the Government recognised that there was an imbalance between applications under Part 2 on the one hand and under Parts 3 and 3A on the other hand in this respect. It was agreed that there would be circumstances under which the Scottish Ministers would be prepared to meet the expense of a ballot under Part 3 and 3A of the 2003 Act.

15. These circumstances will be set out in regulations. For example, it could be relevant that the ballot has shown significant community support for the application. This would be to prevent a ballot being used by a minority of a community, and the Scottish Ministers then having to meet the costs of each and every ballot. In the Financial Memorandum submitted with the Bill on introduction, it was estimated that the average cost of a ballot under Part 2 of the 2003 Act was between £1,040 and £5,353.

16. The additional costs of this provision in relation to Part 3 and Part 3A of the 2003 Act on the Scottish Ministers will depend on the number of applications made, the size of the community to be balloted in each case, and the approach adopted to the ballot. As the community right to buy is driven by the demand from communities any estimation of the number of ballots required will be difficult and subject to wide variation.

17. To date, there have only been two community bodies which have used the crofting community right to buy under Part 3 of the 2003 Act. We might expect that following the improvements made to the 2003 Act through the Bill there will be an increase in demand and a potential for ballots to be necessary. This demand is also likely to increase with the amendments to Part 3A. Should there be an additional 5-10 cases this would result in an additional cost to the Scottish Ministers of between £26,765 and £53,530 per annum (using the higher figure for the average estimated cost).

PART 5: ASSET TRANSFER REQUESTS

18. A series of amendments were agreed by the Local Government and Regeneration Committee which made a number of changes to the asset transfer request provisions. This included a change to the local authority review procedures (section 59B) and a new duty on the listed public authorities to establish and maintain a register of land (section 61A).
Local authority review procedures

19. Section 59B creates the right for a community transfer body to appeal to the Scottish Ministers in relation to decisions made by local authorities on asset transfer requests. They can do so if, following a review by the local authority, a local authority refuses the asset transfer request, or agrees it but sets out material terms and conditions which are significantly different from those included in the original request, or if no decision is reached within a prescribed period.

Register of land

20. Section 61A requires the listed public authorities to establish and maintain a register of land which to the best of their knowledge they own or lease and to make it available to the public to inspect in person and online. The new section will assist community bodies in identifying property that may be available for asset transfer.

21. The section gives powers to the Scottish Ministers to specify land that need not be included in the register and requires the relevant public authorities to have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers in relation to the section.

Costs on the Scottish Administration and public bodies (other than local authorities)

Local authority review procedures

22. The proposals set out in section 59B would have resource implications for the Scottish Government. There would be a need for staff and administrative resources to be deployed in order to be able to exercise the additional function foreseen for the Government by the new section 59A. The impact cannot be estimated with any accuracy at this stage as it will be predicated on actions by community transfer bodies and local authorities that are not within the Government’s control. It may be that the additional function can be amalgamated within current structures but as provided under paragraph 8 above additional staff resources may be required. As an indication, the average staff cost of a team of four comprising a C1, B2, B1 and an A3 would be £157,962 per year should the need for a new team arise.

Register of land

23. The proposals set out in section 61A could have resource implications for the relevant public authorities (other than local authorities – see paragraph 25 below). It is not anticipated that the requirement will have significant additional cost implications as all public bodies are required to maintain proper accounts, and in order to do so they must know the value of the property they own or lease. To support this they should already have in place an effective property management system and register. However, the Bill will require the public body to ensure the register is available to the public and they may require to put some additional resource to establish and maintain an accessible register. The costs for each public authority will vary but in line with the creation and maintenance of the register of applications for community right to buy, as referenced in the Financial Memorandum submitted with the Bill on introduction (paragraph 56), we might expect that the creation of an accessible register could cost up to £10,000 in staff time and administrative resource. Thereafter, there will be on-going site maintenance and update costs anticipated to be up to £10,000 per year.
Costs on local authorities

Local authority review procedures

24. The proposals set out in section 59B would have resource implications for local authorities. There would be a need for additional administrative and legal resources to respond to any appeal made to the Scottish Ministers by a community transfer body in relation to an asset transfer request that involves the local authority. It is anticipated that the appeal process would only be used in a limited number of cases and any additional costs are unlikely to be significant however the costs cannot be estimated with any accuracy at this stage as they will be predicated on actions by community transfer bodies.

Register of land

25. As above for public bodies the proposals set out in section 61A could have resource implications for the listed local authorities. It is not anticipated that the requirement will have significant additional cost implications as all local authorities are required to maintain proper accounts, and in order to do so they must know the value of the property they own or lease. To support this they should already have in place an effective property management system and register. However, the Bill will require the public body to ensure the new register of land is available to the public and they may require to put some additional resource to establish and maintain the register. As for other public bodies outlined in paragraph 23 above and in line with the creation and maintenance of the register of applications for community right to buy we might expect that the creation of an accessible register could cost up to £10,000 in staff time and administrative resource. Thereafter, there will be on-going site maintenance and update costs are anticipated to be up to £10,000 per year.

PART 5B: SUPPORTERS’ TRUST’S RIGHT TO BUY SCOTTISH PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE CLUBS

26. Part 5B of the Bill was added by amendment at Stage 2 and aims to provide a legal framework for supporters’ trusts to have a right to buy their football club.

Costs on the Scottish Administration

27. The proposals as set out would have resource implications for the Scottish Government. There would be a need for staff and administrative resources to be deployed in order to be able to exercise the additional functions foreseen for Government. The impact cannot be estimated with any accuracy at this stage as they will be predicated on actions by community bodies outwith Government’s control. In order to provide an average staff cost, however, an estimated figure of £140,888 per year can be provided based on the structure of the Government’s “Community Right to Buy Branch” – i.e. a team of four, comprising a member of staff at each of B3, B2, B1 and A3 grades. It should be noted, however, that with 42 clubs in Scotland, the rights put forward by the proposed amendments are likely to be exercised less often that in relation to the Community Right to Buy, potentially resulting in a lower staff cost. Again, it is difficult to quantify the exact difference at this stage.
Valuation

28. Section 62Q requires the Scottish Ministers to pay for an independently conducted valuation once the right to buy is triggered. Unlike Community Right to Buy, which is focused on the valuation of a specific piece of land, the value of a football club will be dependent on a range of factors including ownership structures, shares, land, moveable property, liabilities and intellectual property rights. It may also be necessary to consider the rights of employees (particularly players), creditors, minority shareholders and other interested persons depending on the situation. Supporters Direct Scotland provide a service including financial assessment and due diligence which will contribute to any assessment of valuation and this can cost in the region of £20,000 per case. The costs of valuation will vary according to the complexity of each case.

Supporters trust register

29. Section 62D requires the Keeper of the Registers of Scotland to create and maintain a public register of supporters’ trusts who have registered an interest in buying a football club. As referenced in the Financial Memorandum submitted with the Bill on introduction on community right to buy (paragraph 56), it is expected that an accessible register will cost £10,000 to set up, similar to costs associated with setting up the Register of Community Interests of Land for Part 2 of the 2003 Act. Thereafter, there will be on-going site maintenance and update costs, anticipated to be up to £10,000 per year. This figure is based on current Registers of Scotland invoicing to the Scottish Ministers.

Costs arising from appeals

30. Section 62R provides that an owner or operator of a football club or a supporters’ trust may in a number of situations appeal to a sheriff against decisions of the Scottish Ministers or the valuation of the football club.

31. At this stage it is difficult to estimate how many appeals may be made against the decisions of the Scottish Ministers or the valuation of the football club. It may be worth noting that, as indicated in the Financial Memorandum submitted with the Bill on introduction on community right to buy, there have been six cases since 2004 brought against decisions by the Scottish Ministers pertaining to various things in the application process (paragraph 42). This would suggest that there is not likely to be a large number of appeals. The costs of the appeal were entirely dependent on level of legal representation required and a cases complexity and have varied between £3,000 and £20,000.

Costs on other bodies, individuals and businesses

32. The provisions on a supporters’ trust’s right to buy Scottish Professional League Football clubs will lead to an increase in costs on other bodies, individuals and businesses. However, there is a large degree of uncertainty on the level of costs that may be incurred as it will be up to the individual supporters’ trusts and club owners in how to use and respond to the provisions, including the need for appropriate legal advice.

33. For example, club owners could incur costs in relation to seeking professional advice during any sale period, i.e. solicitors’ and estate agents’ fees, as well as court fees. When activating their right to buy, communities may also incur the cost of hiring expert advice, purchase costs and any appeal and court fees that will arise due to the process.

34. Supporters Direct Scotland (SDS) provide services to clubs and fan groups during periods of uncertainty as to a club’s on-going viability, facilitating structural changes which could lead to full or part-owned community clubs. Whilst costs vary considerably from case-to-case, depending on the size and complexity of the club concerned, SDS can incur costs in the region of £20,000 throughout the conversion process to community-ownership. This includes services relating to consultation, financial assessment, negotiation, due diligence, taxation, governance, community share offers, football authority membership and constitutional arrangements. As the size and complexity increases, SDS would incur additional costs brought about by the need to procure additional specialist services.

35. A club at the point of insolvency and awaiting mobilisation of a supporters group may experience loss of players, with 3rd parties unable to become involved in bidding. This may result in more clubs going into liquidation than at present.

PART 7: ALLOTMENTS

36. Section 72 of the Bill was amended at Stage 2 and brings forward provisions that require local authorities to take reasonable steps to ensure that residents do not wait for more than 5 years for an allotment.

Costs on local authorities

37. There is no legal requirement to keep a list at present and it is difficult to forecast future demand. However, the majority of the 15 local authorities that provided financial information already directly maintained lists. More than half of these authorities would be required to take reasonable steps to provide allotments on commencement of the Act to meet the new duty. We estimate that this would require reasonable steps to be taken to create 1,010 new allotments (based on currently available information on waiting lists and number of allotments) on commencement (based on the estimated costs per plot). This means that, if in every individual case creating a new allotment was deemed to be a reasonable step, the maximum total cost for these local authorities would range from £1,919,000 to £6,312,500; with the greatest demand being in areas of high population density. There is a lack however, of information to confirm the length of time that individuals have been waiting for an allotment on current lists and as such the costs may differ.

38. Additionally, depending on the reasonable steps an authority takes to ensure that the duty relating to the time on the list is met they may purchase additional land. The price of land varies between different areas and over time resulting in the costs being difficult to estimate.

39. The Bill, as amended, also defines an allotment in terms of: it being owned or leased by a local authority; its intended use; and its size with the latter requiring that an allotment is approximately 250 square metres or of such as size as requested should this area be less than 250 square metres (section 68).
40. A number of local authorities may need to buy land to meet the duty to take reasonable steps to provide allotments. Additionally, should residents on the list all require allotments of 250 square metres there is a strong likelihood that more allotments will be needed to meet demand (this is dependent on an authorities approach to taking reasonable steps). Given that it is difficult to estimate demand for different sized allotments and that land prices vary between different areas and over time it is difficult to estimate the capital costs associated with the purchase of any new land to meet the duty to provide allotments.
COMMUNITY EMPOWERMENT (SCOTLAND) BILL
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

SUPPLEMENTARY DELEGATED POWERS MEMORANDUM

INTRODUCTION
1. This Memorandum has been prepared by the Scottish Government to assist the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee in its consideration of the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill. This Memorandum describes provisions in the Bill conferring power to make subordinate legislation which were amended or inserted at Stage 2. The Memorandum supplements the Delegated Powers Memorandum on the Bill as introduced.

PROVISIONS CONFERRING POWER TO MAKE SUBORDINATE LEGISLATION AMENDED AT STAGE 2
2. The amended or new delegated powers provisions in the Bill are listed below, with a short explanation of what each power allows, why the power has been taken in the Bill and why the selected form of Parliamentary procedure has been considered appropriate.

DELEGATED POWERS

PART 1: NATIONAL OUTCOMES

Section 1(1) – Power to prescribe national outcomes

Power conferred on:  the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by:  Regulations
Revised or new power:  New Parliamentary procedure:  A form of “super-affirmative” procedure

Provision
3. Section 1(1) provides that the Scottish Ministers must by regulations prescribe outcomes (“national outcomes”) for Scotland. Amendments at Stage 2 altered section 1 to provide that the outcomes must be prescribed by regulations rather than determined by the Scottish Ministers.

Reason for taking power
4. The power to set national outcomes requires to be exercised from time to time to update the outcomes for Scotland. During discussions on the amendment in the Local Government and Regeneration Committee it was suggested that there should be a parliamentary mechanism for scrutiny regarding the national outcomes. The Bill also provides for consultation with the Scottish Parliament under Rule 17.5 of the Standing orders.
Choice of procedure

5. The Local Government and Regeneration Committee agreed both Government and non-Government amendments in relation to the procedure to be used. Consequently, the Bill now contains two separate procedures for setting and reviewing the national outcomes.

6. Section 1(2)(c) provides for the Scottish Parliament to be consulted (in accordance with rule 17.5 of the Standing Orders of the Parliament) on draft national outcomes for a 40 day period. New section 1A and section 96(5)(za) as inserted at Stage 2 provide additional procedure by applying a form of enhanced or “super-affirmative” procedure to the regulations which prescribe the national outcomes. The Scottish Government considers such duplication may be impractical. The Scottish Government’s preferred approach is to propose amendments to the procedure set out in Part 1 of the Bill at Stage 3 to provide for the national outcomes to be determined by the Scottish Ministers following consultation with appropriate persons including those representing the interests of communities and the Scottish Parliament.

PART 2 - COMMUNITY PLANNING

Section 4(6) power to modify schedule 1 community planning partners

Provision

7. Section 4 defines “community planning”, “community planning partners” and “community planning partnerships”. Community planning is planning that is carried out in the area of a local authority so that public services improve the achievement of local outcomes. Schedule 1 lists the bodies who are community planning partners.

8. Subsection (6) enables the Scottish Ministers to amend the list of community planning partners in Schedule 1 by regulation. Subsection (7) further states that the regulations may provide that a community planning partner may participate in community planning for a specific purpose, where participation is required in relation to some of that partner’s responsibilities but not others.

Reason for taking power

9. Schedule 1 contains a list of bodies who are partners in the community planning partnership and includes a wide range of public bodies that may have a role in influencing local outcomes. The power in subsection (6) is to provide flexibility in future should changes be required to the list of bodies in Schedule 1. As the bodies listed in Schedule 1 have a range of functions and duties it may be necessary to be more specific about the purpose for which a community planning partner is to be involved in community planning so as to provide any necessary clarity as to their role, which is the reason for subsection (7).
Reason for choice of procedure

10. In the Bill as introduced, section 96 provided that regulations under section 4(6) were subject to negative procedure. Following recommendations from the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee, section 96 was amended at Stage 2 to provide that they should be subject to affirmative procedure. The Scottish Government recognises that changes to the list of bodies in Schedule 1 could have a significant impact on the application of the provisions of the Bill, and therefore affirmative procedure is more appropriate in this case.

Section 8(3) – Power to modify list of Community Planning Partners with a governance role

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: Revised
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provision

11. Section 8 places governance responsibilities on specified community planning partners for the purpose of achieving effective community planning. The partners specified in subsection (2) must facilitate community planning and take reasonable steps to ensure that the partnership operates efficiently and effectively.

12. Subsection (3) enables the Scottish Ministers to modify by regulations the list of community planning partners set out in subsection (2) to whom the governance duties apply, either by adding a new partner, removing a partner or amending an entry.

Reason for taking power

13. The community planning partners set out in subsection (2) are those most directly involved in community planning, and who therefore have a critical role to play in ensuring that the process runs as efficiently and effectively as possible. The power in subsection (3) is to provide flexibility in future should changes be required to the list of bodies in subsection (2).

Reason for choice of procedure

14. In the Bill as introduced, section 96 provided that regulations under section 8(3) were subject to negative procedure. Following recommendations from the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee, section 96 was amended at Stage 2 to provide that they should be subject to affirmative procedure. The Scottish Government recognises that changes to the list of bodies in section 8(2) could have a significant impact on the application of the provisions of the Bill, and therefore affirmative procedure is more appropriate in this case.
PART 3 – PARTICIPATION REQUESTS

Section 16(2) – Power to modify schedule 2 public service authorities
Section 16(3)(a) – Power to designate a public service authority
Section 16(3)(b) – Power to designate a class of public service authorities

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order
Revised or new power: Revised
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provisions

15. Schedule 2, introduced by section 16, lists public service authorities to which a participation request can be made. This includes local authorities, Health Boards, and other Scottish public bodies. The public bodies selected are involved in providing or supporting local services.

16. Subsection (2) of section 16 enables the Scottish Ministers to remove or amend an entry on the list of public service authorities in schedule 2 by order.

17. In addition to the bodies listed in schedule 2, participation requests can also be made to a person that is designated as a public service authority or that falls within a class of persons designated as public service authorities.

18. Subsection (3)(a) of section 16 allows the Scottish Ministers to designate a public service authority by order. Subsection (3)(b) provides that the Scottish Ministers may by order designate a class of persons so that any person of that class will qualify as a public service authority. Subsections (4) to (9) provide more detail on who may be designated as a public service authority and also provide that in making an order the Scottish Ministers may exclude some services from being subject to participation requests.

Reason for taking power

19. Schedule 2 provides a list of public bodies to which a participation request can be made. The bodies listed in schedule 2 may change over time and the power in subsection (2) is to provide flexibility in future should changes be required, either by removing the body from the list or making any necessary amendments to an entry.

20. Once participation requests are in operation and their use and impact have been determined, it may also be appropriate to designate other public bodies that provide or support local services as public service authorities. Further, should new public bodies that provide or support local services be created in future, it may be considered appropriate to designate the public body as a public service authority. In addition, it may be that a person of a class of body should be treated as a public service authority, and section 16(3)(b) will allow the Scottish Ministers to designate that class of persons for this purpose.
Choice of procedure

21. In the Bill as introduced, these powers were subject to negative procedure. Following recommendations from the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee, section 96(2)(a) was amended at Stage 2 to provide that they should be subject to affirmative procedure. The Scottish Government recognises that changes to bodies included on the list in Schedule 2 could have a significant impact on the application of the provisions of the Bill, and therefore affirmative procedure is more appropriate in this case.

Section 18(1) – Power to make further provision regarding participation requests

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: Revised
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

22. Section 18(1) gives the Scottish Ministers a power to make regulations with provision about participation requests in addition to that contained in section 17. Subsection (2) provides that the regulations can, in particular, cover how requests are to be made, how public service authorities should deal with them, and which information is to be provided in connection with requests (in addition to the information required under section 17(2)).

23. Subsection (2) was amended at Stage 2 to add further examples of matters that the regulations may make provision for. These are ways in which public service authorities are to promote the use of participation requests, support that they are to make available to enable community participation bodies to make participation requests and participate in outcome improvement processes, and types of communities that may need additional support. In addition, provision was added to section 17 to allow a community participation body to request that one or more public service authorities other than the one to which the request is made should also participate in the outcome improvement process. Subsection (2)(ba) of section 18 was inserted to ensure that regulations may make provision for the procedure to be followed in such cases.

Reason for taking power

24. Under section 17(1) participation requests allow a community participation body to make a request to a public service authority to permit the body to participate in an outcome improvement process, which is a process established by the authority with a view to improving an outcome that results from, or is contributed to by virtue of, the provision of a public service. Section 17(2) describes the information which must accompany the request.

25. The reason for taking the power, as introduced, was to enable further information to be required in a request, and to make provision on the procedure for making requests and for handling them. Section 18(2), as amended at Stage 2, ensures that those provisions may include procedures for requests made under section 17(3A), and will allow the regulations also to require public service authorities to promote participation requests and to provide support to community participation bodies in making requests and participating in the outcome improvement process, including identifying types of communities that may particularly need support. This links with the concerns expressed during Stage 1 that communities may need support to be able to take advantage of the provisions of the Bill.

Reason for choice of procedure

26. The choice of procedure is unchanged. The regulations will be subject to negative procedure, for the reasons given in the original Delegated Powers Memorandum.

Section 24A(3) – Power to prescribe participation request appeal procedure, time limits and the manner in which appeals are to be conducted

</tr>
<tr>

</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Provision

27. Section 24A was inserted at Stage 2 and sets out the circumstances when a community participation body can appeal to the Scottish Ministers in relation to a participation request.

28. Subsection (3) enables the Scottish Ministers by regulations to prescribe the appeal procedure, the manner in which appeals are to be conducted and the time limits within which appeals must be brought.

Reason for taking power

29. The power is parallel to that relating to asset transfer requests in section 58. It allows for transparent, effective and efficient appeals procedures to be developed and set out in detail, and to be amended from time to time in the light of practical experience.

Reason for choice of procedure

30. The power is subject to negative procedure. The appeal process and procedure are administrative matters, and may change from time to time. It is therefore considered appropriate that the negative procedure is used so as to achieve the best balance of Parliamentary time and resource on the one hand and the nature of the content of the regulations on the other.
PART 4 – COMMUNITY RIGHT TO BUY LAND

TYPES OF PUBLIC NOTICE FOR APPLICATIONS TO REGISTER AN INTEREST IN SALMON FISHINGS AND CERTAIN MINERAL RIGHTS

Section 29A(b) – inserted section 37(4A) of the 2003 Act - Public Notice of Certain Applications

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

31. Section 29A inserts new subsection (4A) into section 37 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. Subsection (4A) confers a power on the Scottish Ministers to make regulations setting out how an application to register an interest under Part 2 of that Act is to be given by public notice where that interest is in salmon fishings or mineral rights which are owned separately from the land in respect of which they are eligible.

Reason for taking power

32. Currently, section 37(3) of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 requires that in cases where the owner or creditor is unknown or cannot be found, the Scottish Ministers are relieved of their duties under subsections (5) to (10), and paragraphs (b) and (c) of subsection (17), of section 37. However, section 37(4) provides that they cannot be satisfied that the owner or creditor is unknown or cannot found unless the community body has placed an advertisement in a local newspaper in two consecutive weeks and affixed a conspicuous notice, in a form as prescribed by the Scottish Ministers, to a part of the land.

33. The Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee questioned in their Stage 1 Report (paragraph 188 of Annexe A, page 132) whether this requirement should be relaxed for cases where the right to buy was being exercised in relation to separate tenements. The relevant separate tenements in this case are salmon fishings and mineral rights (except rights to oil, coal, gas, gold or silver). In practical terms, it is simply not possible to affix a physical notice to a salmon fishing or mineral right.

34. However, it is still desirable that the owner or creditor, who is unknown at this point in time, should have an opportunity to see some sort of notice of the community right to buy application, and make themselves known to that community body.

35. It was considered that the best way to address this was to widen the options for such a notice to be placed in a manner which would give the best opportunity for it to be seen, which would vary depending on the separate tenement in question.
Choice of procedure

36. The setting out of how a public notice is to be given is an administrative matter. It is considered that the negative procedure will achieve the best balance between use of Parliamentary time and resource on the one hand and the purpose of the regulations on the other.

COMMUNITY APPROVAL OF APPLICATION TO REGISTER AN INTEREST IN LAND

Section 30(b) – inserted section 38(2B) of the 2003 Act – Period for Indicating Approval under section 38 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provision

37. The Bill as introduced included a requirement that a community body must indicate that it has the approval of the community when making an application to register an interest in land under Part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, and that such approval must be within 6 months of the application being made. This requirement is set out in section 38(2A) of the Act.

38. Section 30(b) of the Bill inserts subsection (2B) into section 38 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. This subsection gives the Scottish Ministers a power to make regulations to substitute the time limit in section 38(2A) with a different period of time. This would apply for all cases and not on a case by case basis.

Reason for taking power

39. In its Stage 1 report the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee commented at paragraph 140 of Annexe A that there may be “practical issues for communities in considering an interest in land and agrees that the Scottish Ministers should not be artificially restricted by a six-month time limit in considering any relevant material”.

40. Whilst the Scottish Government were not aware of any situations where a community body has been unable to demonstrate support within the previous 6 months of an application, that did not mean that there would not be an issue in the future, given that the right to buy is being extended into urban areas, which could have more complex and fluid communities.

41. As a result, it was believed that giving the Scottish Ministers the option to review and amend this time limit as the body of new casework develops, would be prudent.

Choice of procedure

42. Section 98(5) of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 is amended by paragraph 2(5) of schedule 4 to the Bill so as to make the regulations under section 38(2B) subject to the affirmative procedure. It is appropriate that this power is subject to the affirmative procedure because it amends primary legislation.

BODIES THAT MAY COM普RISE A “CROFTING COMMUNITY BODY” FOR THE PURPOSES OF THE CROFTING COMMUNITY RIGHT TO BUY

Section 47A(2) – inserted section 71(A1)(b) of the 2003 Act – power to prescribe bodies that are “crofting community bodies” and prescribed requirements

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provision

43. Section 47A includes a number of provisions relating to the type of body that can be a crofting community body for the purposes of the crofting community right to buy in Part 3 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. The existing provisions of section 71 of the Act state that a crofting community body must be a company limited by guarantee. Section 47A(4) of the Bill inserts subsections (1A) and (1B) into section 71 of the Act, extending the types of body that can be crofting community bodies (provided they fulfil the criteria set out in those subsections) to Scottish Charitable Incorporate Organisations (SCIOs) and Community Benefit Societies (BenComs).

44. Section 47A(2) inserts subsection (A1)(b) into section 71 of the Act which gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make regulations which add to the types of body that can be a crofting community body for the purposes of exercising the crofting community right to buy. It also gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make regulations setting out the requirements that such a body must satisfy in order to be a crofting community body.

45. At Stage 2 of the Bill amendments were made to Part 3 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, which provides for the Crofting Community Right to Buy. The amendments made by section 47A reflect similar changes in relation to Part 2 of the 2003 Act, and the powers inserted by section 47A(2) ensure consistency with the community right to buy for neglected and abandoned land.

46. Since the 2003 Act came into operation, new legal structures have been developed which enable communities to undertake a range of activities for their community, including owning land. The Scottish Government anticipates that further legal bodies could emerge that would be suitable crofting community bodies for the purpose of Part 3 of the 2003 Act. Being able to make regulations providing for such bodies to be crofting community bodies would allow Ministers to be able to respond quickly to such developments.
Choice of procedure

47. It is considered appropriate to allow the Scottish Parliament to give a high level of scrutiny to such provision. Only specific types of legal entities are able to be crofting community bodies for the purposes of the 2003 Act. Any extension to the types of bodies that be a crofting community body may have a significant impact on who can make use of the crofting community right to buy in Part 3 of the 2003 Act. Use of this power could have a significant impact on the scope of the legislation and so the affirmative procedure is appropriate.

REQUIREMENTS OF A CROFTING COMMUNITY BODY

Section 47A(6) – inserted sections 71(4A) and (4B) of the 2003 Act – power to make regulations to amend the requirements for a body to be a crofting community body.

<td>Revised or new power:</td>
<td>New</td>
</tr>
<tr>

</tbody>
</table>

Provision

48. Section 47A(6) of the Bill inserts subsection (4A) into section 71 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 (“2003 Act”) which gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make regulations modifying the criteria which must be met by companies limited by guarantee, SCIOs and BenComs to be crofting community bodies under Part 3 of the Act.

49. Section 47A(6) also inserts subsection (4B) into section 71 of the 2003 Act which provides that if the Scottish Ministers make regulations under section 71(A1)(b) they can also make regulations to amend section 72(1). Section 72(1) is the provision which (as amended by the Bill at Stage 2) prohibits crofting community bodies that have bought land under Part 3 from making changes to their memorandum, articles of association, constitution or registered rules without the Scottish Ministers’ consent in writing.

Reason for taking power

50. At Stage 2, amendments were made to Part 3 of 2003 Act, including new legal structures which a community body may use when forming a crofting community body. The power will allow the Scottish Ministers to amend what kind of legal entity can be used to form a crofting community body. This will enable the Scottish Ministers to respond quickly if it should become apparent that other types of bodies are suitable for use by communities for the purposes of Part 3 of the 2003 Act. The power will also allow the Scottish Ministers to amend section 72(1) of the 2003 Act so that it refers to all relevant types of constitutional documents of any legal entity that is added to the list of entities that a crofting community body can be composed of.

Choice of procedure

51. It is considered appropriate to allow the Scottish Parliament a high level of scrutiny to the detail of any changes to primary legislation. Regulations made under sections 71(4A) and (4B) of the 2003 Act will amend primary legislation and therefore the affirmative procedure is appropriate.

DEFINITION OF “CROFTING COMMUNITY”

Section 47A(7)(b)(ii) – inserted section 71(5)(a)(iv) of the 2003 Act – definition of crofting community

<table>

<td>Regulations</td>
</tr>

</tr>
<tr>

<td>Negative procedure</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Provision

52. Section 47A(7)(b)(ii) of the Bill inserts section 71(5)(a)(iv) into the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 which gives the Scottish Ministers the power to specify what other persons or classes of persons will be included within the definition of a crofting community.

Reason for taking power

53. At Stage 2 amendments were made to the Bill to amend the definition of a crofting community. The additional power will enable the Scottish Ministers to extend the definition of a crofting community at a later date. This power could be used to include owner-occupiers who are registered in the Register of Crofts, but this could not be done until legislative changes are made to the requirements of the Crofting Commission in relation to including owner-occupiers on that Register.

Choice of procedure

54. It is considered that use of this power can be left to the level of Parliamentary scrutiny attached to the negative procedure. The power does not define what amounts to a community in any particular case, and has been included as a means to allow Ministers to broaden the definition of community and make it more inclusive following any future amendments of other, related legislation.
POWERS OF COMPULSORY PURCHASE WHERE CROFTING COMMUNITY BODY HAS MODIFIED CONSTITUTIONAL DOCUMENTS

Section 47B – inserted section 72(4) of the 2003 Act- Modification of Memorandum, Articles of Association, Constitution or Registered Rules

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provision

55. Section 72(2) allows the Scottish Ministers to acquire land owned by a crofting community body compulsorily if they are satisfied that the crofting community body which has bought the land, if it had not done so, would no longer be entitled to do so. Section 72(4) as inserted by the Bill at Stage 2 gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make an order relating to, or to matters connected with, the purchase of land under section 72(2). Section 72(5) states that such an order may (a) apply, modify or exclude any enactment which relates to any matter as to which an order could be made and (b) make such modifications or enactments as appear necessary or expedient in consequence of any provision of such an order or otherwise in connection with the order.

Reason for taking power

56. There may be cases where the Scottish Ministers consider it appropriate to exercise their power to compulsorily acquire land under section 72(4) and further provision would be of assistance in setting out how this is to operate, by way of an order. This order making power is similar to the power in section 97E(4) of the 2003 Act (relating to the right to buy abandoned and neglected land) which was inserted into the 2003 Act by the Bill at introduction.

Choice of procedure

57. Orders made under section 72(4) of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 will be able to modify primary legislation. Such orders will therefore be subject to the affirmative procedure to allow the Scottish Parliament to give them a high level of scrutiny.
APPLICATION FORM – RIGHTS AND INTERESTS IN LAND

Section 47C(2) – amended section 73(5) of the 2003 Act - change to powers of Ministers to prescribe application form

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: Revised
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

58. Section 73(5) of the 2003 Act gives the Scottish Ministers the power to set out in regulations the form of the application and what kind of information must be contained within applications to exercise the crofting community right to buy. Section 47C of the Bill amends section 73 of the 2003 Act by inserting new subsection (5ZA) which specifies the persons who must be identified in the crofting community body’s application. Those persons are the owner of the land, any creditor in a standard security with a right to sell the land, the tenant of the land, and the person entitled to any sporting interests.

59. Section 47C also amends section 73(5)(b) so that crofting community bodies, as a minimum, must include information in the application form of all rights and interests in the land known to them.

Reason for taking power

60. The amendment to the minimum type of information that must be included in the application form as set out in regulations by the Scottish Ministers will ensure that Ministers have all available information with which to make a decision on the application.

Choice of procedure

61. Regulations made under section 47C(2) are subject to the negative procedure as this will achieve the best balance between use of Parliamentary time and resource on the one hand and the purpose of the regulations, which is to simplify and clarify the application process, and will be mostly administrative and subject to amendment from time to time, on the other.
PUBLIC NOTICE OF APPLICATIONS MADE UNDER THE CROFTING COMMUNITY RIGHT TO BUY

Section 47C(4) – amended section 73(11) of the 2003 Act – Application: Information about Rights and Interest in Land

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

62. At Stage 2, an amendment was made to the Bill which removes the requirement that the Scottish Ministers should give public notice of an application under Part 3 of the 2003 Act by either a newspaper circulating in the area where the subjects of the application are situated as Ministers think appropriate or in the Edinburgh Gazette and replaces it with a power for the Scottish Ministers to make regulations setting out the manner of giving public notice.

Reason for taking power

63. During stakeholder evidence sessions, it became clear that, particularly in more rural areas, which most of the crofting areas are, the Edinburgh Gazette is largely unheard of. In addition, the circulation of newspapers is not a reliable method of ensuring that notices of this type are widely available.

64. It was believed that additional methods of ensuring that as many people as possible are able to read these public notices, would be the best way to deal with these issues, and that those methods may vary quite widely according to area.

65. As such, giving the Scottish Ministers the ability to amend these more readily was considered to be an appropriate solution. The power will allow the Scottish Ministers to ensure that the procedure under Part 3 of the 2003 Act can be quickly updated to allow crofting community bodies to use the most effective and up-to-date methods of advertising their application to the public, and to ensure that the most effective communication methods are available to crofting communities.

Choice of procedure

66. Using the negative procedure will achieve the best balance between use of Parliamentary time and resource on the one hand and the purpose of the regulations, as these will be mostly administrative, on the other.
RECOVERY OF BALLOT EXPENSES BY A CROFTING COMMUNITY BODY

Section 47E – inserted section 75(6) of the 2003 Act - Ballot: Information and Expenses

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

67. Section 47E(3) inserts sections 75(6) and (7) into the 2003 Act. Section 75(6) gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make regulations which make provision for or in connection with enabling a crofting community body, in such circumstances as may be specified in the regulations, to apply to the Scottish Ministers to seek reimbursement of the expense of conducting a ballot under section 75. Section 75(7) sets out particular things which the regulations can cover, being (a) the circumstances under which a community body may apply, (b) the method used to calculate any such expenses, (c) the criteria used to determine whether an application for expenses is successful, (d) the procedure for both an application and an appeal to the Scottish Ministers in relation to the ballot costs, (e) the persons who would consider such an appeal and (f) the powers of such persons.

Reason for taking power

68. Section 37 of the Bill provides that a ballotter would be appointed by the Scottish Ministers, and the expenses of the ballot would be met, for any applications under Part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003.

69. There was no such element for Part 3 of the 2003 Act and stakeholder submissions to the RACCE committee considered that this was an omission.

70. The process for applications for the crofting community right to buy under Part 3 of the 2003 Act is different from the process for applications under Part 2. In a Part 3 application, the ballot is held before the Scottish Ministers receive the application, and therefore, is the first indication of community support for the application. In an application to register an interest under Part 2, on the other hand, community support is demonstrated via the likes of a petition, and the ballot is only held once the community had confirmed that it wishes to proceed with the actual purchase.

71. For this reason, it was believed a ballot under Part 3 of the 2003 Act should not be run, or the expenses met, by the Scottish Ministers with no information about or indication of community support.

72. However, it was recognised that there was an imbalance between applications in Parts 2 and 3 in this respect and it was agreed that there would be circumstances under which the Scottish Ministers would be prepared to meet the expense of a ballot under Part 3 of the 2003 Act.
73. These powers are added to allow the Scottish Ministers to make regulations setting out those circumstances and the process which crofting community bodies will use to apply for those expenses. As this is a new area of policy we have not yet consulted with stakeholders on what would be the appropriate circumstances in which a community body might seek reimbursement of ballot expenses so it sits best in regulations rather than on the face of the Bill.

Choice of procedure

74. Regulations made under the new section 75(6) are likely to be administrative in nature and may require to be amended periodically so it is thought that the negative procedure will achieve the best balance between use of Parliamentary time and resource on the one hand and the purpose of the regulations on the other.

COMPENSATION PROCEDURE UNDER CROFTING COMMUNITY RIGHT TO BUY

Section 47I – inserted section 89(4) of the 2003 Act - Compensation

Provision

75. Section 47I inserts section 89(4) into the Land Reform (Scotland) 2003 Act, giving the Scottish Ministers the power to, by order, make provision for or in connection with specifying the amounts payable in respect of loss or expense incurred as mentioned in section 89(1) of the 2003 Act.

76. It also gives the Scottish Ministers the power to, by order, make provision for or in connection with specifying the amounts payable in respect of loss or expense incurred by virtue of Part 3 by a person of such other description as may be specified.

77. It will allow the Scottish Ministers to make provision for specifying the person liable to pay those amounts and the procedure under which claims for compensation under this section can be made.

78. These powers are in line with those in section 97T(4) of the 2003 as inserted by section 48 of the Bill.

Reason for taking power

79. These powers bring Part 3 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 into line with the new Part 3A of the 2003 Act (inserted by section 48 of the Bill), which was added through section 48 of the Bill as introduced, and will ensure that the procedure and circumstances of any claims for compensation are transparent and fair to all parties.
Choice of procedure

80. Matters relating to the entitlement of compensation are likely to be detailed and administrative in nature and may require to be amended periodically. It is therefore considered appropriate that the negative procedure is used so as to achieve the best balance of parliamentary time on the one hand and the nature of the content of the order on the other.

ELIGIBLE LAND - HOMES

Provision

81. Section 97C(3)(a) of the Bill as introduced, gave the Scottish Ministers the power to prescribe classes of buildings or structures which were to be excluded from those that were an individual’s home under section 97C(3)(a).

82. Section 97C(4) allowed the Scottish Ministers the power to prescribe classes of building or structure that are to be treated as an individual’s home for the purposes of section 97C(3)(a).

83. The Bill as amended at Stage 2 now no longer includes the power to prescribe the classes of buildings or structures which were to be excluded from those that were an individual’s home under section 97C(3)(a).

84. Instead, there is an amendment to section 97C(4) which allows the Scottish Ministers to make regulations setting out what description or classes of building or structure are to be an individual’s home for the purposes of section 97C(3)(a), as well as those that are to be treated as an individual’s home even if they are not.

Reason for taking power

85. The Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee, in their evidence session last September, and also in paragraph 66 of their report, queried the requirement for the power to exclude classes of buildings from the exclusion from the definition “eligible land” of an individual’s home. It is considered more appropriate for the Scottish Ministers to set out in regulations what types of buildings or structures are an individual’s home for the purposes of the exclusion in section 97C(3)(a). This will provide clarity about which land is excluded from the right to buy under Part 3A.

Choice of procedure

86. Regulations made under section 97C(4) are subject to the affirmative procedure as they will directly affect the land which is excluded from eligible land under the new Part 3A of the 2003 Act which gives communities a right to buy neglected or abandoned land. As such, they should be subject to the affirmative procedure.

The provisions of section 97D as introduced stated that a Part 3A community body must be a company limited by guarantee. Being able to make regulations providing for such bodies to be crofting community bodies would allow Ministers to be able to respond quickly to such developments.</td>

| 91. Currently, this power is subject to the negative procedure. However, equivalent provisions in Parts 2 and 3 of the 2003 Act are subject to the affirmative procedure. The particular provisions are sections 34(A1)(b) and 71(A1)(b) of the 2003 Act, inserted respectively by sections 28(2) and 47A(2) of the Bill. There will, therefore, be consideration given to amending the Bill at Stage 3 to make this power subject to the affirmative procedure in alignment with Parts 2 and 3.

REQUIREMENTS FOR A PART 3A COMMUNITY BODY

Section 48 – inserted sections 97D(4A) and (4B) of the 2003 Act – power to make regulations to amend the requirements for a body to be a Part 3A community body.

- Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
- Power exercisable by: Regulations
- Revised or new power: New
- Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provision

92. Section 48 of the Bill inserts section 97D of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. Subsection (4A) of section 97D gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make regulations modifying the criteria which must be met by companies limited by guarantee, SCIOs and BenComs to be Part 3A community bodies under Part 3A of the Act.

93. Subsection (4B) of section 97D provides that if the Scottish Ministers make regulations under section 97D(1)(b) they can also make regulations to amend section 97E(1) as they consider necessary or expedient. Section 97E(1) is the provision which prohibits Part 3A community bodies that have bought land under Part 3A from making changes to their memorandum, articles of association, constitution or registered rules without the Scottish Ministers’ consent in writing.

Reason for taking power

94. The power will allow the Scottish Ministers to amend what kind of legal entity can be used to form a Part 3A community body, and will enable Ministers to respond quickly if it should become apparent that other types of bodies are suitable for use by communities for the purposes of part 3A of the 2003 Act. For example, Community Benefit Companies (BenComs), have only recently been introduced in the Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies Act 2014. It could well be the case that others will follow. The power will also allow the Scottish Ministers to amend the provision to refer to the constitutional documents of any legal entity that is added to the list of entities that a Part 3A community body can be.

Choice of procedure

95. It is considered appropriate to allow the Scottish Parliament a high level of scrutiny to the detail of any changes to primary legislation. Regulations made under sections 97D(4A) and (4B) of the 2003 Act will amend primary legislation and therefore the affirmative procedure is appropriate.
APPLICATION FORM – RIGHTS AND INTERESTS KNOWN TO THE PART 3A COMMUNITY BODY

Section 48 – amended section 97G(5) of the 2003 Act – application form to include rights and interests known to the Part 3A community body

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: Revised
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

96. Section 97G(5) of the 2003 Act, as inserted by the Bill, gives the Scottish Ministers the power to set out in regulations the form that an application must take and what kind or information must be contained within the application to exercise the community right to buy. Section 97G(6) sets out the types of information which must be included in that application form. Section 97G(6) of the 2003 Act, as inserted by the Bill as introduced, provided that the information on application forms must include all rights and interests in the land, and sewers, pipes, lines, watercourses or other conduits and fences, dykes, ditches or other boundaries in or on the land known to the community body or the existence of which it is, on reasonably diligent inquiry, capable of ascertaining. This has been amended at Stage 2 of the Bill, so that the application form as prescribed by the Scottish Ministers must include as a minimum all rights and interests in the land known to the community body.

Reason for taking power

97. Over the previous 10 years of the Act, there had been numerous stakeholder comments to the effect that the mapping requirements were far too complex and excessive. The amendment to the minimum types of information that must be included in the application form as set out in regulations by the Scottish Ministers will ensure that Ministers have all available information with which to make a decision on the application while balancing the need to ensure that community bodies are not subject to overly onerous requirements.

Choice of procedure

98. Regulations made under section 97G(5) are subject to the negative procedure as they are seen as largely administrative and could be subject to periodic changes which reflect stakeholder experiences, this will achieve the best balance between use of Parliamentary time and resource on the one hand and the purpose of the regulations on the other.
RECOVERY OF BALLOT EXPENSES BY A PART 3A COMMUNITY BODY

Section 48 – inserted section 97J of the 2003 Act – Ballot to indicate approval for the purposes of section 97H

Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

99. Section 48 inserts section 97J(6A) which gives the Scottish Ministers the power to make regulations which make provision for or in connection with enabling a Part 3A community body, in such circumstances as may be specified in the regulations, to apply to the Scottish Ministers to seek reimbursement of the expense of conducting a ballot under section 97J.

100. Inserted section 97J(6B) sets out particular things which the regulations can cover, being (a) the circumstances under which a Part 3A community body may apply, (b) the method used to calculate any such expenses, (c) the criteria used to determine whether an application for expenses is successful, (d) the procedure for both an application and an appeal to the Scottish Ministers in relation to the ballot costs, (e) the persons who would consider such an appeal and (f) the powers of such persons.

Reason for taking power

101. Section 37 of the Bill as introduced states that a ballotter would be appointed by the Scottish Ministers, and the expenses of the ballot would be met, for any applications under Part 2 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003.

102. There was no such element for Part 3A of the 2003 Act and stakeholder submissions to the RACCE committee considered that this was an omission.

103. The process for applications under Part 3A of the 2003 Act are different from those under Part 2. In a Part 3A application, the ballot is held before the Scottish Ministers receive the application and therefore it is the first indication of community support for the application. In an application to register an interest under Part 2, however, this support is demonstrated via the likes of a petition and the ballot is only held once the community had confirmed that it wishes to proceed with the actual purchase.

104. For this reason, it was believed that a ballot under Part 3A of the 2003 Act should not be run, or the expenses met, by the Scottish Ministers with no information or indication of community support.

105. However, it was recognised that there was an imbalance between applications in Parts 2 and 3A in this respect and it was agreed that there would be circumstances under which the Scottish Ministers would be prepared to meet the expense of a ballot under Part 3A of the 2003 Act.
106. These powers are added to allow the Scottish Ministers to lay out those circumstances and the process which community bodies may apply for those expenses.

Choice of procedure

107. Regulations made under section 97J(6A) are subject to the negative procedure as they are seen as largely administrative and subject to amendments as new circumstances arise through an increased use of the provisions, and it is considered that this will achieve the best balance between use of Parliamentary time and resource on the one hand and the purpose of the regulations on the other.

EFFECT OF AN APPLICATION TO EXERCISE THE RIGHT TO BUY ON TRANSFERS OR DEALINGS OVER LAND

Section 48 – amended section 97N(1) of the 2003 Act – effect of the Ministers’ decision on rights to buy land

- Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
- Power exercisable by: Regulations
- Revised or new power: New
- Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provision

108. Section 97N enables the Scottish Ministers to make regulations setting out persons who are prohibited from undertaking certain transfers or dealings in respect of land which a Part 3A community body has made an application to buy under Part 3A.

109. The regulations may include provisions as to the types of transfers or dealings which are not permitted, the persons who are not permitted to undertake these transfers or dealings and the period for which these transfers or dealings may not be undertaken.

110. Section 48 of the Bill was amended at Stage 2 to amend the wording of the regulation-making powers in section 97N(1), which gives the Scottish Ministers a power to specify the persons, and specify the period of time for which those persons would be prohibited from transferring or otherwise dealing with land which is the subject of a Part 3A application.

111. The amendments made to section 97N(1) address the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee’s concerns regarding the wording of the provisions in section 97N, and the over-use of “prescribed” and its meaning, and seek to clarify the nature of the regulation-making powers set out in that section.

Choice of procedure

112. It is considered appropriate to allow the Scottish Parliament to give a high level of scrutiny to the detail of such a prohibition given that this will impact on how a land owner can deal with their land.
EFFECT OF AN APPLICATION EXERCISING THE RIGHT TO BUY ON RIGHTS IN OR OVER LAND

Section 48 – amended section 97N(3) of the 2003 Act – Effect of Ministers’ decision on right to buy land

Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provision

113. Section 97N(3) allows the Scottish Ministers to make regulations suspending rights over land where a Part 3A community body has applied to exercise the right buy in respect of that land. The regulations may set out the rights which are to be suspended and the period for which the rights are to be suspended.

114. Section 48 of the Bill was amended at Stage 2 to amend the wording of the regulation-making powers in section 97N(3), which gives the Scottish Ministers a power to specify in regulations the period of time for which a person’s rights in or over land which is the subject of a Part 3A application are suspended.

Reason for taking power

115. The reason for this amendment to section 97N(3) is to address the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee’s concerns regarding the wording of the provisions in section 97N, and the over-use of “prescribed” and its meaning, and seeks to clarify the nature of the regulation-making powers set out in that section.

Choice of procedure

116. It is considered appropriate to allow the Scottish Parliament to give a high level of scrutiny to the detail of such a prohibition given that this will impact on how a land owner can deal with their land.

Schedule 4 – amended section 98(5) - section 34(4B) subject to the affirmative procedure

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: Revised
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provision

117. Section 34(A1)(b) of the 2003 Act gives the Scottish Ministers the power to prescribe by regulations other types of bodies which a community may use when forming a community body. Sections 35(A1) and (1) provide that a community body will not be permitted to modify its memorandum, articles of association, constitution or registered rules without the Scottish Ministers’ consent in writing for as long as its interest remains registered or land which it has bought under Part 2 remains in its ownership.

118. Section 34(4B) of the 2003 Act gives the Scottish Ministers the power by regulations to amend section 35(A1) and (1) to specify the constitutional documents that must not be amended by a community body without Ministers’ consent in writing, should the Scottish Ministers use the power in section 34(A1)(b) to prescribe other types of bodies that communities can use for the purposes of Part 2 of the 2003 Act.

119. The Bill as introduced did not include reference to section 34(4B) in the amendments to section 98(5) of the 2003 Act, which is the section that sets out which instruments made under Ministerial powers are to be subject to the affirmative procedure. The Bill was amended at Stage 2 to change this, and now the power in section 34(4B) is to be subject to the affirmative procedure.

Reason for taking power

120. This power will ensure that the legislation prohibits the amendment of constitutional documents of community bodies without the consent of the Scottish Ministers for as long as the interest remains registered or, as the case may be, land which it has purchased under Part 2 remains in its ownership. This power is subject to the affirmative procedure to allow the Scottish Parliament to give the power a high level of scrutiny.

Choice of procedure

121. Regulations made under section 34(4B) of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 will be modifying primary legislation. Such regulations will therefore be subject to the affirmative procedure to allow the Scottish Parliament to give them a high level of scrutiny.

PART 5 – ASSET TRANSFER REQUESTS

Section 51(2) – Power to modify schedule 3 - relevant authorities
Section 51(3)(a) – Power to designate a relevant authority
Section 51(3)(b) – Power to designate a class of relevant authorities

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order
Revised or new power: Revised
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provisions

122. Schedule 3, introduced by section 51, lists relevant authorities to which an asset transfer request can be made. Schedule 3 includes local authorities, the Scottish Ministers, Health Boards and other Scottish public bodies, which have been selected because they own significant amounts of land and buildings.
123. Subsection (2) of section 51 enables the Scottish Ministers to remove or amend an entry on the list of relevant authorities in schedule 3 by order.

124. In addition to the bodies listed in schedule 3, asset transfer requests can also be made to a person that is designated as a relevant authority or that falls within a class of persons designated as relevant authorities.

125. Subsection (3)(a) allows the Scottish Ministers to designate a relevant authority by order. Subsection (3)(b) provides that the Scottish Ministers may by order designate a class of persons so that any person of that class will qualify as a relevant authority. Subsections (4) to (7) provide more detail on who may be designated as a relevant authority.

Reason for taking power

126. Schedule 3 provides a list of public bodies to which an asset transfer request can be made. The bodies listed in schedule 3 may change over time and the power in subsection (2) is to provide flexibility in future should changes be required, either by removing the body from the list or making any necessary amendments to an entry.

127. As stated above, the public bodies listed in schedule 3 have been selected because they own significant amounts of land and buildings. It may be appropriate to designate other public bodies that own land and buildings in future. Further, should new public bodies be created in future that own significant amounts of land and buildings, it may be considered appropriate to designate the public body as a relevant authority. In addition, it may be that a person of a class of body should be treated as a relevant authority, and section 51(3)(b) will allow the Scottish Ministers to designate that class of persons for this purpose.

Choice of procedure

128. In the Bill as introduced, these powers were subject to negative procedure. Following recommendations from the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee, section 96(2)(a) was amended at Stage 2 to provide that they should be subject to affirmative procedure. The Scottish Government recognises that changes to the list of bodies included on the list in Schedule 3 to which the provisions apply could have a significant impact on the application of the provisions of the Bill.

Section 58(2)(c) – Power to specify a person or a class of persons for the purposes of appeals

- Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
- Power exercisable by: Order
- Revised or new power: New
- Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative procedure

Provision

129. Section 58 sets out the circumstances when a community transfer body can appeal in relation to an asset transfer request. Under subsection (2) as introduced, the community transfer body can appeal to the Scottish Ministers, unless the relevant authority is the Scottish Ministers or a local authority.
This document relates to the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2
(SP Bill 52A - Revised)

130. Paragraph (c) of subsection (2) was inserted at Stage 2. It provides that the Scottish Ministers may in addition specify persons, or persons falling within specified classes, as relevant authorities, with the effect that their decisions are excluded from appeal to the Scottish Ministers.

Reason for taking power

131. The default position in the Bill is that decisions on asset transfer requests are subject to an appeal to the Scottish Ministers. This would mean that decisions made by any relevant authority designated by an order under section 51(3) would be subject to Ministerial appeal. There may be cases in which it is more appropriate for decisions to be subject to review by a local authority under section 59; for example, where the relevant authority is a company wholly owned by one or more local authorities. This power allows for the Scottish Ministers to specify relevant authorities to which this will apply, either individually or as a class.

Reason for choice of procedure

132. The availability of routes of appeal or review has been raised as a matter of concern to many community bodies. Since this provision allows the Scottish Ministers to remove the option of a direct appeal to them, it is appropriate that it should be subject to affirmative procedure.

Section 59(7)(b) – Power to prescribe a time for a decision notice to be given following a review

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

133. Section 59 provides for circumstances in which a local authority must carry out a review of an asset transfer request, on an application made by the community transfer body, and for the procedures to be followed. Subsection (6) requires that, following a review, the local authority must issue a decision notice in respect of the asset transfer request to which the review relates. Paragraph (b) of subsection (7) was inserted at Stage 2, and provides that the decision notice must be issued within a period prescribed in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers, or such longer period as may be agreed between the local authority and the community transfer body.

Reason for taking power

134. This amendment is related to the insertion of section 59B, which allows a community transfer body to appeal to the Scottish Ministers following a review by a local authority. By providing for a period to be prescribed within which a decision notice must be issued, it allows for an appeal to be brought if no decision notice is issued within that time, and will help to ensure that reviews are carried out promptly.
Reason for choice of procedure

135. The period of time for a relevant authority to issue a decision notice is an administrative matter and will be informed by a short and focussed consultation. The negative procedure is therefore considered appropriate, in line with similar powers elsewhere in Part 5.

Section 59A(3) – Power to prescribe procedure, time limits and the manner in which Ministerial reviews of asset transfer requests are to be conducted

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

136. Under section 59A(2), if a community transfer body has made an asset transfer request to the Scottish Ministers and they have refused the request, agreed to it but attached material terms and conditions different to those in the request or have not given a decision notice timeously, the Scottish Ministers must carry out a review of the case if the community transfer body applies to them to do so.

137. Subsection (3) enables the Scottish Ministers by regulations to prescribe the procedure to be followed in connection with reviews, the manner in which such reviews are to be carried out and the time limits within which applications for review must be made. They may also make provision in relation to the appointment of persons for purposes connected with carrying out reviews, and the functions of those persons. Under subsection (4) the regulations may also provide that the manner in which a person appointed in connection with reviews carries out their functions is at their discretion, and that the manner in which a review, or any stage of a review, is to be carried out is at the discretion of the Scottish Ministers.

Reason for taking power

138. The power is to enable the development of the process and procedure for Scottish Ministers’ reviews of asset transfer requests. It will be important that the process and procedure for reviews is transparent, effective and efficient. Further, from time to time and in the light of practical experience, the Scottish Ministers may wish to make changes to the procedure for reviews. The provision for the appointment of persons in connection with reviews is to allow for a degree of external scrutiny; for example, an independent panel may be appointed to make recommendations to the Scottish Ministers about reviews. The arrangements for the appointment of persons may in particular change over time, as the land reform agenda develops, and a regulation-making power allows for this flexibility.

Reason for choice of procedure

139. The process and procedure for asset transfer reviews by the Scottish Ministers are administrative matters, and may change from time to time. It is therefore considered appropriate that the negative procedure be used so as to achieve the best balance of Parliamentary time and resource on the one hand and the nature of the content of the regulations on the other.
Section 59C(4)(a) – Power to make provision for section 59 (review of asset transfer decisions by local authorities) to apply subject to modifications.

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

140. Section 59C applies to asset transfer requests made to a relevant authority specified in an order under section 58(2)(c). It provides that where the relevant authority refuses the request, agrees to it but specifies terms and conditions which differ significantly from those specified in the request, or does not give a decision notice within the required period, subsections (2) to (9) of section 59 apply. This means that the community transfer body can apply to a local authority for a review of the case. The power in subsection (4)(a) allows the Scottish Ministers to make provision for the arrangements for local authority review of their own decisions to apply with modifications to review of decisions by another relevant authority.

Reason for taking power

141. Subsections (2) to (9) of section 59 set out arrangements and requirements for local authorities’ review of asset transfer requests made to them. Similar arrangements will apply where a local authority carries out a review of a request made to another relevant authority, but some adjustments are likely to be needed in light of the fact that separate organisations are involved. The power will allow the Scottish Ministers to make those adjustments as necessary.

Reason for choice of procedure

142. The process and procedure for asset transfer reviews by local authorities are administrative matters, and the adjustments required to make them appropriate to review of other relevant authorities’ decisions are likely to be minor. It is therefore appropriate that this power is subject to negative procedure.

Section 59C(4)(b) – Power to specify the local authority, or factors determining the local authority, to which an application for review is to be made.

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

143. Section 58(2)(c) allows for the Scottish Ministers to specify a relevant authority, or a class of relevant authorities, whose decisions are excluded from appeal to the Scottish Ministers. Section 59C provides that, where an asset transfer request is made to such a relevant authority, the community transfer body can, in appropriate circumstances, apply to a local authority to review the case. Subsection (4)(b) provides the Scottish Ministers with a power to specify the local authority to which the application is to be made in such cases, or factors determining the local authority to which the application is to be made.

Reason for taking power

144. The arrangements set out by section 58(2)(c) and 59C are intended to apply where it is more appropriate for a local authority to undertake the initial review of a decision, rather than the Scottish Ministers. Since the relevant authorities to which this will apply are to be specified by order, it is not possible to determine in advance which local authority should carry out reviews for each relevant authority, and a power is therefore needed to do this by order. Local authorities may be specified individually; for example, the local authority which wholly owns the relevant authority dealing with the request, or they may be identified by factors such as the local authority area in which the land to which the request relates is located.

Reason for choice of procedure

145. The power is to ensure that provisions equivalent to that in section 59 will work in a different context, so the local authority which may carry out a review is readily identifiable. This is an administrative and technical issue, and it is therefore appropriate that this power is subject to negative procedure.

Section 61A(4) – Power to specify land, or descriptions of land, that a relevant authority need not include in its register of land.

Provision

146. Section 61A places a duty on each relevant authority to establish and maintain a register of land which, to the best of the authority’s knowledge and belief, is owned or leased by the authority, and to make this register available for inspection by the public. Subsection (4) provides that the Scottish Ministers may by regulations specify land, or descriptions of land, that need not be included in this register.

Reason for taking power

147. The requirement to publish a register of land will help community bodies to be aware of property that may be available for asset transfer, so that they can identify which is most suitable for their needs. However, the legal definition of “land” is very wide and includes rights and interests in land, such as ground rents and access rights, which are unlikely to be targets for asset transfer in themselves. The ability to exclude such categories will help to focus the register on properties that are likely to be of interest. This is a detailed and technical area which is more appropriate to address through secondary legislation. It may also be the case that the exclusions will need to be adjusted over time, as new ideas are developed by community bodies.
Reason for choice of procedure

148. The details of land that need not be included in the register is considered sufficiently significant that it will be set out in secondary legislation, rather than guidance. However, the exclusions will be of a detailed technical nature, and therefore negative procedure is considered to be most appropriate.

PART 5B – SUPPORTERS’ TRUST’S RIGHT TO BUY SCOTTISH PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL LEAGUE CLUBS.

Section 62C – Power to change the meaning of a football club

Power Conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary Procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

149. Section 62C was inserted at Stage 2 and provides for a definition of a “Scottish Professional Football League club” as a football club which is a member of the Scottish Professional Football League or any successor body as recognised by the Scottish Football Association. Subsection (2) provides that the Scottish Ministers can change the meaning of “football club” by regulation. Subsection (3) states that the Scottish Ministers must consult before making any regulations to modify the definition.

Reason for taking the power

150. This provision will allow the Scottish Ministers flexibility in the future to modify the meaning of football club should changes be required.

Reason for choice of procedure

151. Regulations made under section 62C are subject to the negative procedure and will be informed by consultation as set out in subsection (3). This will achieve the best balance between use of Parliamentary time and resource on the one hand and the purpose of the regulations on the other.
Section 62F(1) – Power to prescribe information to be provided to the Scottish Ministers by a supporters’ trust

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary Procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

152. Section 62F sets out how an interest in buying a football club may be registered on an application by a supporters’ trust to the Scottish Ministers and the procedure to be followed. The Scottish Ministers are to make regulations setting out the specific information required in the application and the form in which this information should be provided.

Reason for taking the power

153. It is important that the Scottish Ministers are provided with the appropriate information by the supporters’ trust. This level of procedural detail is usually left to regulations.

Reason for choice of procedure

154. The matters to be detailed in regulations are details of procedure and accordingly it is appropriate that this power is subject to the negative procedure.

Section 62I(3) – Power to prescribe information to the Scottish Ministers on activation of supporters’ trust right to buy

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary Procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

155. Section 62I sets out that the supporters’ trust’s interest may be exercised when the owner or operator is deemed to have given notice of their intention to transfer ownership or that the club has entered into formal insolvency. The owner or operator must give such notice to the supporters’ trust or trusts which have a registered interest, and to the Scottish Ministers, in such form and in accordance with such provisions as may be prescribed.

Reason for taking power

156. It is important that the Scottish Ministers and the supporters’ trust, or trusts, are provided with the appropriate information by the owner or operator. This level of procedural detail is usually left to regulations.
Reason for choice of procedure

157. The matters to be detailed in regulations are details of procedure. This is an administrative issue and accordingly it is appropriate that this power is subject to the negative procedure.

Section 62K(2)(a) and (b) – Power to prescribe the form notifying supporters’ trusts and the owner or operator of a football club following the activation of right to buy

</tbody>

Provision

158. Section 62K sets out the initial procedure after the activation of the supporters’ trust right to buy. This includes the Scottish Ministers seeking confirmation that the trust will exercise its right to buy. The trust has 30 days to respond and if they do not the right to buy is extinguished. The Scottish Ministers must direct the Keeper to enter details of the notification given under section 62I into the register, and must send copies of the notice sent by them to the supporters’ trust and any response to the Keeper and the owner of the club.

159. Under subsections (2)(a) and (2)(b) the Scottish Ministers must send a notice to the supporters’ trust or trusts in the prescribed form seeking their confirmation that the trust(s) will exercise its right to buy and must also send a notice to the owner or operator of the football club in a prescribed form that they have sought the confirmation of the trust(s).

Reason for taking these powers

160. It is important that the supporters’ trust, or trusts, and the owner or operator of the football club are provided with the appropriate notification by the Scottish Ministers. This level of procedural detail is usually left to regulations.

Reason for choice of procedure

161. The matters to be detailed in regulations are details of procedure. This is an administrative issue and accordingly it is appropriate that this power is subject to the negative procedure.
Section 62O(7) – Power to make provision about when ownership is to be treated as transferred

Power conferred to:  the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: New
Parliamentary Procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

162. Section 62O sets out the procedure for buying the football club. The supporter’s trust is to make an offer at a price agreed between the trust and the owner or, if no agreement is reached, at a value assessed by an appointed valuer or determined after an appeal of the assessed value. The price is to be paid and ownership transferred not later than 6 months from the date that the supporters’ trust confirmed its intention to exercise the right to buy. Later dates are provided for if an appeal over the assessed value has not been concluded within 4 months of the confirmation. If missives have not been concluded within the required period then the right to buy is extinguished, unless the Scottish Ministers are satisfied that the supporters’ trust has taken all reasonable steps to conclude the missives.

Reason for taking these powers

163. The provision provides the Scottish Ministers the ability to set out in more detail when ownership is to be treated as transferred.

Reason for choice of procedure

164. Matters relating to the transfer of ownership are likely to be detailed and administrative in nature and may require to be amended periodically. It is therefore considered appropriate that the negative procedure is used so as to achieve the best balance of parliamentary time on the one hand and the nature of the content of the order on the other.

PART 7 – ALLOTMENTS

Section 69A – Regulations as to size of allotments

Power conferred on:  the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Revised or new power: Revised
Parliamentary procedure: Negative procedure

Provision

165. Section 68 defines, “allotment” for the purpose of Part 7 of the Bill. The definition was amended at Stage 2 to remove the delegated power in section 68(d), (paragraphs 202-204 of the Delegated Powers Memorandum on the Bill as introduced) that allowed the Scottish Ministers to make regulations setting out the size of land that was to constitute an allotment. The amended definition of allotment at section 68(1)(d) includes a requirement for the size of an allotment to be “approximately 250 square metres”. The revised definition also allows an allotment to be smaller than this size should it be requested by the person leasing or intending to lease it (section 68(3)).

166. Section 69A relates to the delegated power that was included in the Bill as introduced (in section 68(d)) and requires the Scottish Ministers to make provision on size or sizes of allotments, but without affecting the revised requirements in section 68(1)(d) (section 68(d) on introduction). Before any regulations are brought forward under this provision the Scottish Ministers must consult each local authority and any other appropriate person.

Reason for taking power

167. This power was taken to require the Scottish Ministers to make provision on the specific size or sizes of allotments for the purposes of Part 7. The Scottish Government, however, considers that the requirement may be impracticable in light of the amendments to section 68(1)(d) made at Stage 2, as described above. The Scottish Government’s preferred approach would be to bring forward further amendments at Stage 3.

Reason for choice of procedure

168. It is not considered that detailed Parliamentary scrutiny is required for this provision since it will further define the size of an allotment. It is therefore considered appropriate that these regulations should be subject to negative procedure. This will achieve the best balance between use of Parliamentary time and resource on the one hand and the purpose of the regulations on the other hand.

Section 73 – Allotment site regulations

- Power conferred on: Local Authorities
- Power exercisable by: Regulations
- Revised or new power: Revised
- Parliamentary procedure: None

Provision

169. Local authorities must make regulations about allotment sites in their area and these must be made before the expiry of the period of two years beginning with the date on which section 73 comes into force.

170. Section 73(3) sets out the matters on which regulations must in particular be made. These include rent (section 73(3)(b)). This was expanded upon at stage 2 to include a requirement for regulations to provide a method of determining fair rent, taking into account the factors at section 73(3)(b)(i),(ii) and (iii). Section 73(4) sets out matters on which regulations may in particular be made. These matters were amended at stage 2. Section 73(4)(a) as introduced was removed to avoid duplication with section 73(4)(b). Section 73(4)(f) as introduced provided that regulations may be made for and in connection with the sale of surplus produce (in addition to the provisions of any regulations made under section 87(1)). The words in parenthesis were removed at Stage 2 as a consequence of removal of the delegated power in section 87(1). The power at section 73(1) in the Bill as introduced allowed for different provisions for different areas or types of allotment sites (section 73(5)). The power was amended at Stage 2 to allow for different provision for different areas or different allotment sites.

Reason for taking power

171. It is considered to be appropriate for local authorities to have the power to make regulations for the allotment sites in their areas. This will give local authorities flexibility to manage allotment sites as they consider fit. The Stage 2 amendment to the requirement on rent (section 73(3)(b)) was made to ensure that within this flexibility, local authorities must nonetheless have a method to ensure that the rent they charge for allotments is fair. Section 87(1) as introduced permitted the sale of surplus produce only if it fell within a prescribed description. The delegated power was removed at Stage 2 as it was considered unnecessary to restrict the types of produce that may be sold. Consequently, the reference in section 73(4)(f) to provisions of regulations made under section 87(1) was no longer required. There is a wide variety of allotment site-types with respect to their layout and management. This power enables local authorities to make regulations that are tailor-made to each individual allotment site should this be necessary.

Reason for choice of procedure

172. Since this provision is delegating powers to local authorities to regulate allotment sites in their local area it was viewed that Parliamentary scrutiny was inappropriate. Before making regulations a local authority must consult those people who appear to the local authority to have an interest and follow the procedure set out in section 74.

PART 7A – PARTICIPATION IN PUBLIC DECISION-MAKING

Section 93A – Participation in decisions of certain persons exercising public functions

</tbody>
</table>

Provision

173. Section 93A provides a regulation-making power enabling the Scottish Ministers to require Scottish public authorities to promote and facilitate the participation of members of the public in the decisions and activities of the authority, including in the allocation of resources. Subsection (5) makes it clear that the regulations can confer functions on persons, specify the activities to which the regulations can apply, and require the persons to prepare and publish a report. The persons must also have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.

Reason for taking power

174. Involving people and communities in making decisions helps to build community capacity and can also help the public sector identify local needs and priorities and target budgets more effectively. As the Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment outlined during discussions on the amendment with the Local Government and Regeneration Committee:
“The intention is that the new power will ensure that participatory activity takes place and that the associated guidance will drive the quality and depth of that participatory activity over time. I wanted any legislative solution to have the flexibility to build up, change and develop over time. Given the different functions, budgets and structures of public authorities, I knew that having a single approach would not work.”

Reason for choice of procedure

175. The details to be included in the regulations is considered sufficiently significant that the affirmative procedure is considered to be most appropriate.

Recommendations

7. The Committee’s comments and, where appropriate, recommendations on the remaining substantially altered delegated powers in the Bill as amended are detailed below.

Section 48 inserting new section 97D(1)(b) into the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 – Part 3A Community bodies (Part 4)

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: regulations
Parliamentary procedure: negative

Provision
8. New section 97D of the 2003 Act, as inserted by section 48 of the Bill, sets out the types of legal entity that may be a “Part 3A community body” and therefore eligible to make an application to buy abandoned or neglected land under the new Part 3A of the 2003 Act. This section has been amended at Stage 2, and a power conferred upon the Scottish Ministers to specify additional types of entity which may be a Part 3A community body in regulations.

9. When the Bill was introduced, a Part 3A community body was required to be constituted as a company limited by guarantee. As amended, such a body may also be a Scottish Charitable Incorporated Organisation (“SCIO”), a Community Benefit Society or such other body as may be prescribed in regulations and which meets prescribed requirements.

Comment
10. The SDPM explains that the changes to section 97D of the 2003 Act are intended to reflect changes made to the other rights to buy contained in Parts 2 and 3 of the 2003 Act so as to achieve consistency across the three different parts and the three different rights to buy. SCIOs and Community Benefit Societies are considered by Ministers to be bodies suitable to exercise the right to buy abandoned or neglected land, and Ministers also consider it prudent to take a power to add new types of entity which may be created in the future, should those entities also be considered suitable to exercise the right.

11. Parts 2 and 3 of the 2003 Act contain similar powers to the power inserted in the new section 97D(1)(b). Those powers are subject to the affirmative procedure. This power is, however, subject to the negative procedure. The SDPM states that the Scottish Government will give consideration to amending the Bill at Stage 3 to make this power subject to the affirmative procedure for the purposes of consistency. The Committee wishes to encourage the Scottish Government to amend the power at Stage 3 so that it is subject to the affirmative procedure.

12. The Committee calls on the Scottish Government to amend the Bill at Stage 3 so that the power in the new section 97D(1)(b) of the 2003 Act is subject to the affirmative procedure.
Section 62C(2) – Meaning of “Scottish Professional Football League Club” (Part 5B)

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: regulations
Parliamentary procedure: negative

Provision
13. New section 62C of the Bill provides that for the purposes of the new Part 5B, and the right to buy conferred on supporters’ trusts, a “Scottish Professional Football League Club” means a football club which is for the time being a member of the Scottish Professional Football League or any successor body recognised as the senior competitive league by the Scottish Football Association. Section 62C(2) provides that the Scottish Ministers may by regulations modify the meaning of a football club in subsection (1). Before making such regulations, the Scottish Ministers are required to consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

Comment
14. This power is subject to the negative procedure. The SDPM states that this will achieve the best balance between use of Parliamentary time and resource on one hand and the purpose of the regulations on the other.

15. In the Committee’s view, the power to modify the meaning of Scottish Professional Football League Club is a significant power which, on its face, appears to merit the higher level of Parliamentary scrutiny afforded by the affirmative procedure. The power appears to be capable of having a significant effect on the scope and application of the new Part 5B of the Bill. The fact that the Bill specifies on its face that the power may not be exercised without prior consultation provides, in our view, an indication of its significance.

16. The Committee considers that the SDPM does not provide sufficient justification for the choice of negative procedure for this power, other than to say that in the Scottish Government’s view, the negative procedure represents the best balance between use of Parliamentary time and resource on one hand, and the purpose of the regulations on the other. In the absence of more substantive explanation as to why a power of this nature is properly subject to the negative procedure, and given the apparent significance of the power, the Committee calls on the Scottish Government to amend the Bill at Stage 3 so as to make the power in section 62C(2) of the Bill subject to the affirmative procedure.

17. The Committee calls on the Scottish Government to amend the power in section 62C(2) of the Bill at Stage 3 so that it is subject to the affirmative procedure.
Sections 62E, 62F, 62I, 62K, 62P – provisions regarding a supporters’ trust’s right to buy a Scottish Professional Football League Club (Part 5B)

Provisions
18. New section 62E permits the Scottish Ministers to prescribe additional bodies that may hold a controlling interest in a football club for the purposes of the definition of ‘ownership’. Section 62F provides that a supporters’ trust’s interest in buying a football club may be registered only upon an application being made to the Scottish Ministers in the prescribed form and accompanied by information of the prescribed kind.

19. Section 62I provides that a notification of an intention to transfer ownership of a football club or that the club has entered insolvency, for the purposes of activating a supporters’ trust’s right to buy, is to be given in such form and otherwise in accordance with such provisions as are prescribed. Section 62K provides that Scottish Ministers must send a notice in the prescribed form to a supporter’s trust, seeking confirmation that the trust will exercise its right to buy, and to the owner of the football club concerned, indicating Ministers’ compliance with that requirement. Section 62P provides that the Scottish Ministers may prescribe additional conditions to be met by a supporter’s trust which applies to them for funding to enable it to make an offer to buy a football club.

Comment
20. The word ‘prescribed’ is commonly used in legislation in order to confer a delegated power however it is usually accompanied by an interpretative provision defining the word in such manner so as to specify who is to prescribe the matters referred to and how they are to do so. For example, ‘prescribed’ can be defined to mean “prescribed in regulations made by the Scottish Ministers”. Such a definition appears in section 98 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, and has been relied upon for many of the powers in this Bill that insert new provision into that Act.

21. Use of the words ‘prescribe’ or ‘prescribed’ alone is insufficient to confer a delegated power, as they do not specify who the power is to be conferred upon, or how it is to be exercised (e.g. by regulations, order etc.). It appears that the intention in respect of these provisions of the new Part 5B of the Bill is to confer a number of delegated powers. It appears therefore that a definition of the term ‘prescribed’ is required in order to provide clarity as to whom the powers in these sections are conferred upon (e.g. the Scottish Ministers) and how they are intended to be exercised (e.g. by regulations). While sections 62E and 62P refer to the Scottish Ministers prescribing the matters specified therein, they do not indicate the form of exercise of the powers. Sections 62F, 62I and 62K make no reference to the Scottish Ministers as the body upon which the powers are conferred or to the manner in which they are to be exercised. The Committee considers that the SDPM, which addresses only sections 62F, 62I and 62K, does not clarify the point.

22. The Committee is content in principle with the substance of the powers in sections 62E, F, I, K and P. Further, given that the powers deal with largely administrative matters such as the specification of forms of notice, the Committee considers that it would be appropriate for each of the powers to be subject to the negative procedure. The Committee, however, calls on the Scottish Government to clarify the Bill at Stage 3 and, if it is intended that sections 62E, F, I, K and P confer delegated powers to make regulations upon the Scottish Ministers, to insert an appropriate definition of the terms ‘prescribe’ and ‘prescribed’ so that those powers are properly constituted on the face of the legislation.

23. The Committee calls on the Scottish Government to amend the Bill at Stage 3 in order that the powers in sections 62E, F, I, K and P are fully cast as powers to make subordinate legislation subject to the negative procedure and to clarify – through defining the terms ‘prescribe’ and ‘prescribed’, or by such other means as they consider appropriate - whom the powers are conferred upon, and what form the subordinate legislation made in their exercise is intended to take. In the event that the Government’s Stage 3 amendments do not cover this recommendation, the Committee authorises the Convener and Deputy Convener to table suitable amendments.

Provision

24. New section 69A of the Bill requires the Scottish Ministers to make regulations for or in connection with the size or sizes of an allotment, but without affecting section 68(1)(d). Section 68(1)(d) defines “allotment” for the purposes of Part 7 as, among other things, land that meets one of the requirements as to size set out in sections 68(2) and (3). The power to make regulations as to the size of allotments in section 69A cannot be exercised unless Ministers have consulted with each local authority and such other persons as they consider appropriate.

Comment

25. The SDPM states that this power was taken to require the Scottish Ministers to make provision about the size or sizes of allotments for the purposes of Part 7. It further provides, however, that the Scottish Government considers that the requirement may be impractical in the light of amendments made to section 68(1)(d) at Stage 2.

26. Section 68(1)(d) provides that an “allotment” means, among other things, land that meets one of the requirements as to size set out in sections 68(2) and (3). Section 68(2) sets a requirement to the effect that the land is of a size approximately 250 square metres. Section 68(3) provides that the land is of such size (being a size smaller than that set out in section 68(2)) as has been requested by the person leasing or intending to lease the land from the authority.

27. Section 69A confers power on the Scottish Ministers to make regulations for or in connection with the size of an allotment, without affecting section 68(1)(d). In our view, it is not clear what provision those regulations are intended to make or how any such regulations could make provision about the size of allotments without affecting the requirements as to size of an allotment that are specifically set out on the face of the Bill. Given the Scottish Government’s stated intention to bring forward further amendments at Stage 3, the Committee wishes to encourage the Scottish Government to do so in order to clarify how the provisions on allotment size are intended to operate.
28. The Committee calls on the Scottish Government to amend the Bill at Stage 3 so as to clarify the manner in which the power in section 69A regarding allotment size is intended to operate.

<2) Subsection (1) is subject to subsections (3) to (7).

(3) Subsections (4) to (7) apply in relation to an application made under section 97G that relates to land the use or management of which is such that it results in or causes harm to the environmental wellbeing of a relevant community (as defined in section 97C(1A)).

(4) In deciding whether to consent to the application, Ministers are not required to be satisfied as to the matter mentioned in subsection (1)(c) in relation to the land.

(5) Ministers must not consent to the application unless they are satisfied (in addition to the matters specified in subsection (1) as read with subsection (4))—
(a) that the exercise by the Part 3A community body of the right to buy under this Part is compatible with removing, or substantially removing, the harm to the environmental wellbeing of the relevant community,

(b) that the Part 3A community body has, before the application is submitted, made a request to—
   (i) a relevant regulator (if any), or
   (ii) where there is more than one relevant regulator, to all such regulators, to take action in relation to the land in exercise of its (or their) relevant regulatory functions that could, or might reasonably be expected to, remedy or mitigate the harm, and

(6) For the purposes of subsection (5)—

(a) “regulator” means—
   (i) such person, body or office-holder as may be prescribed, or
   (ii) a person, body or office-holder of such description as may be prescribed,

(b) a regulator is “relevant” if, in the opinion of Ministers, the regulator is relevant having regard to the harm to the environmental wellbeing of the relevant community,

(c) action taken by a relevant regulator in exercise of its relevant functions includes action to secure compliance with or enforce a regulatory requirement,

(d) “regulatory functions” has the meaning given by section 1(5) (as read with section 1(6)) of the Regulatory Reform (Scotland) Act 2014, but as if the words “but does not include any such functions exercisable by a planning authority” in section 1(5) were omitted,

(e) a regulatory function is “relevant” if, in the opinion of Ministers, the function is relevant having regard to the harm to the environmental wellbeing of the relevant community.

(7) In subsection (6)(e), “regulatory requirement” has the meaning given by section 1(5) of the Regulatory Reform (Scotland) Act 2014, but as if the references to “regulator” and “regulatory functions” in paragraph (b) of that definition were references respectively to “regulator” and “regulatory functions” within the meaning given by subsection (6) of this section.

Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill - Stage 3: The Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment (Marco Biagi) moved S4M-13523—That the Parliament agrees that the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill be passed.

After debate, the motion was agreed to ((DT) by division: For 101, Against 0, Abstentions 15).
Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill: Stage 3

14:40

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Elaine Smith): The next item of business is stage 3 proceedings on the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill. In dealing with the amendments, members should have the bill as amended at stage 2, that is SP Bill 52A (Revised); the marshalled list, that is SP Bill 52A-ML, and the correction slip to the marshalled list that was issued yesterday; and the groupings, that is SP Bill 52A-G.

The division bell will sound and proceedings will be suspended for five minutes for the first division of the afternoon. The period of voting for the first division will be 30 seconds. Thereafter, I will allow a voting period of one minute for the first division after a debate. Members who wish to speak in the debate on any group of amendments should press their request-to-speak buttons as soon as possible after I call the group.

Section 1—National outcomes

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 1 is on “Setting of national outcomes—procedure, consultation etc”. Amendment 27, in the name of the Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment, is grouped with amendments 28, 147, 29 to 33, 148, 34 to 40, 149, 150, 41 and 133.

Because of pre-emption, if amendment 147 is agreed to, I cannot call amendments 29 and 30, and if amendment 40 is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 149.

The Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment (Marco Biagi): I am glad to be starting proceedings this afternoon.

Part 1 of the bill places a duty on the Scottish ministers to prepare a set of national outcomes that describe the kind of Scotland that we all want to live in, and to regularly and publicly measure progress towards them. At stage 2, we agreed on the importance of the Scottish Parliament’s scrutiny role and of strengthening public consultation and they are retained at the heart of my amendments. However, the bill requires two separate processes to be undertaken in the setting and reviewing of national outcomes. That would be convoluted, repetitive and unclear, and would involve a considerable amount of double consultation of communities and Parliament.

My amendments seek to provide for a single process. They also balance the valuable scrutiny role of Parliament against the Government’s responsibilities for the Scottish public sector, and they strengthen the public consultation process.

In consulting the Scottish Parliament, we must reflect the separation of powers between a Government that is responsible for setting its strategic direction, and a Parliament that is responsible for holding that Government to account for its progress. That is why we consider that the provision in the bill of a 40-day period for the Parliament to be consulted on the draft national outcomes provides an appropriate level of parliamentary scrutiny. It is the same period of time that would be afforded by the affirmative procedure for secondary legislation, for example.

Amendments 27 and 34 will restore provision for the national outcomes to be determined by Scottish ministers, rather than by regulations that are subject to the so-called superaffirmative procedure. I agreed with the point that Alex Rowley made at stage 2 that we must involve all communities across Scotland in setting the national outcomes. Amendments 29 and 35 therefore strengthen the consultation process by requiring Scottish ministers to consult persons who represent communities when determining and reviewing the national outcomes.

“Community” is defined by amendments 33 and 37 as including communities based on common interest, identity or geography, to ensure an inclusive consultation. Alex Rowley’s amendment 150 seeks to improve the definition of the word “community”. However, linking the definition to postcode could impact negatively on certain communities such as Gypsy Travellers, communities of interest or communities that are based on social or cultural identities. It also excludes those who only work in an area.

Singling out individuals or groups when it comes to the national outcomes, however important they are, or inadvertently excluding others, is at odds with the principle of participatory democracy. Each person or community has as much right as the next to take part in debating and shaping the Scotland that we live in, and my amendments will ensure that is the case.

Amendments 30 and 36 reflect the discussions at stage 2 and require Scottish ministers to lay an explanatory document containing details of the public consultation when determining and reviewing the national outcomes.

Amendments 41 and 133 make minor consequential amendments.

As the bill stands, Scottish ministers must publish a report every two years, and I believe that that is a retrograde step. One of the strengths of the current reporting system is that the Scotland performs website provides an up-to-the-minute picture of progress. The statistics are published there as and when they become available. We have also responded to the needs of this Parliament by publishing the “Scotland Performs Update” as part of the draft budget process. In the future, the Parliament might find that information more useful at times other than those that are specified in the amendments. Amendments 38 and 39 reinstate provision for Scottish ministers to prepare and publish reports at such times as they consider appropriate.

Amendment 40 removes the requirement to consult on the reports, as any report on progress would be a factual statement, based on evidence.

Amendments 28, 31 and 32 respond to a point that Stewart Stevenson made in his own inimitable style at stage 2. They make it clear that, although the Scottish Parliament and its corporate body are excluded from the duty to have regard to the national outcomes when carrying out their functions, the effect of their functions is not excluded from the determination of the national outcomes.

I ask Alex Rowley not to move the amendments in his name. I move amendment 27.

Alex Rowley (Cowdenbeath) (Lab): I acknowledge the role that Marco Biagi has played in the course of the bill since he became minister. He has demonstrated a willingness to work with others across the chamber, which has resulted in a better bill.

My amendments provide for greater scrutiny and consideration of the national outcomes by this Parliament. My proposals require Scottish ministers to publish national outcomes and lay them with the Parliament for 60 days. During that period, Scottish ministers must consult the public, including specified individuals and groups, and the draft national outcomes cannot be laid for approval until Scottish ministers also lay an explanation of that consultation, any representations that are received and changes that are made to the regulations. Parliament must then approve the national outcomes.

I believe that that approach will engage the public much more in the national outcomes. It is important that the Parliament is able to scrutinise national outcomes and the progress in that regard. It is also crucial that national outcomes are linked to the budget, which has not happened in the past. It is important that we are able to see where this Government’s finances are being spent in order to deliver the national outcomes.

With regard to the minister’s concerns about references to individuals who are eligible to vote in elections, I am talking about individuals who are normal resident in a local authority area. That seeks to address any concerns about the potential exclusion of prisoners, refugees, asylum seekers and the homeless. The minister also expressed concern about children and young people, and organisations that work for them, being singled out. That is deliberate—they are below voting age and are therefore often overlooked—and has not been done for reasons of specific interest. Indeed, the groups that are listed in section 1 are intended to represent as wide as possible a cross-section of people who live and work in Scotland.

I intend to move my amendments, but I acknowledge that the bill has made great progress. That is down to the minister's willingness to work with others in moving the bill forward.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: More members than I anticipated wish to contribute to the debate. I am not sure whether I can call everyone, but I ask members to keep their remarks short.

Cameron Buchanan (Lothian) (Con): We have concerns about amendments 27, 34 and 133. Allowing Scottish ministers to determine the national outcomes would remove a crucial element of scrutiny, participation and collaboration. A bill that is entitled the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill should place more power in communities' hands, rather than allow Scottish ministers to determine independently what the nation's priorities should be. If we are genuinely to empower communities, they should be as involved as possible in determining the national outcomes. However, amendments 27, 34 and 133 would centralise power in ministers' hands by removing the need for the Scottish Parliament's approval as well as a stage of public consultation.

On a similar note, it is apparent that amendments 38 to 40 advance centralisation. To ensure that the Government is held to account for its actions, its progress towards national outcomes should be scrutinised on a regular basis. However, amendments 38 to 40 would allow the Scottish Government to publish reports on its progress only when it saw fit, without the need for any public consultation. Removing the regular involvement of the Parliament and the public in assessing progress towards national outcomes would shield the central Government from public scrutiny, which is fundamentally contradictory to the principle of community empowerment.

Alex Rowley's amendment 147, which would remove the provisions that require consultation before determination of the national outcomes, raises particular concerns about public participation. Community empowerment should allow public participation on a wide scale, and amendment 147 would threaten that.

Mark McDonald (Aberdeen Donside) (SNP): I feel that Cameron Buchanan may have misinterpreted the amendments that the Scottish Government has lodged. His remarks imply that ministers will somehow decide what the national outcomes shall be and that that shall be the case.

The amendments that the minister has lodged are entirely about the consultation process that will take place on the national outcomes. A consultation will take place, the results of which will assist ministers in determining what the national outcomes should be. Amendment 30 specifically says "In consulting the Scottish Parliament", so there will be consultation not just with the public but with the Parliament on what the national outcomes shall be. I hope that that gives Cameron Buchanan some pause, and might make him more likely to support those amendments when they come to the vote.

I turn to the thrust of what the minister is putting forward. It is entirely correct that we should avoid creating the impression that certain groups and their views would not be considered in consultations because they do not feature in the text of the bill. I know that Alex Rowley is saying that the list as defined in the bill would provide as wide a scope as possible, but there may still be groups in society that could look at every category in the bill and not see themselves defined there. Removing the opportunity for people to feel that they have not been prioritised within the legislation is a fair way to proceed.

I hope that members will back the minister's amendments, and I hope that Alex Rowley will reconsider his intention to move his.

Ken Macintosh (Eastwood) (Lab): I speak in favour of my colleague Alex Rowley's amendments, and urge the Parliament not to remove the amendments that were agreed by the committee at stage 2. I echo my colleague's comment that the bill process has been very consensual and that the bill has been improved as a result. I am sure that members will be relieved to hear that there are only a few areas of disagreement this afternoon, which makes it a bit more disappointing that the Government should use its majority to overturn the work of the committee in this section.

At stage 1, the committee agreed unanimously that engagement and consultation on the national outcomes should be enshrined in legislation. At stage 2, my colleague Alex Rowley's amendments did exactly that, by ensuring that national outcomes would be laid before the Parliament for 60 days.
The minister said that the amendments could—he used the word “could”—exclude Gypsy Travellers and other groups from being involved, but they do not. They might do if the Government allowed them to, but they do not. It is a baseline—a floor rather than a ceiling—and I urge the minister to think again about his approach.

There was potential for one group—“individuals eligible to vote”—to be restrictive and, because of that, Alex Rowley has lodged an amendment to change that to individuals “normally resident in the local authority area”.

That would avoid unintentionally restricting those who would be consulted.

It strikes me that the committee’s intention at stage 1 was captured by Alex Rowley’s amendments at stage 2. The committee agreed to those amendments. I do not think that there is much disagreement with the minister. If we cannot agree on Alex Rowley’s amendments, Labour will support the Government’s amendment 30, which is a watered-down version. However, I urge the minister to think again about removing all the agreement at this stage. I emphasise that that approach was agreed by Oxfam, Barnardo’s, the Poverty Alliance and many others in the voluntary sector. I urge members to support Alex Rowley’s amendments.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I can call Alex Fergusson and Malcolm Chisholm, as long as both are brief.

Alex Fergusson (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con): Thank you, Presiding Officer; I will be brief.

In summing up, will the minister allay my fears on two counts? Can he confirm that amendment 28, if it is agreed to, would allow the Scottish Parliament to operate entirely independently of national outcomes? On amendment 33, on what grounds does the minister wish to define community to include common interest, identity or geography in this part of the bill, although that is not the definition that is used in other parts of the bill?

Malcolm Chisholm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab): The minister gave an explanation for amendment 32, but it still reads rather strangely. I think that it would probably merit further explanation, because anyone outside the Parliament who read it would think that we were setting ourselves above the national outcomes. I am sure that that is not the intention, but I am slightly concerned about what may be read into amendment 32.

Marco Biagi: Let me begin almost at the end and work back. Amendments 32 and 28, which refer to the Scottish Parliament, make it clear that although the Scottish Parliament and its corporate body are excluded from the duty to have regard to the national outcomes, their functions are not excluded from the determination of the national outcomes themselves. I agree that that is a difficult distinction and perhaps not one that immediately jumps out, but the idea was to avoid accidentally bringing the Scottish Parliament—in its scrutiny functions and other functions that should be protected from Government decisions—into the bill unnecessarily.

Alex Fergusson asked about amendment 33. Communities have been defined differently in different parts of the bill. The member sits on the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee, which scrutinised the part of the bill that focuses on land reform, in which community is generally defined in a geographical way. However, other parts of the bill—on asset transfer and participation requests—have had a distinct definition of community within them to capture different things in different contexts, including communities of interest.

In working out the views of people in Scotland—taking the temperature and understanding people’s interests—we feel that it is reasonable to include communities of interest. That is different from the rather legalistic mechanism of compulsory purchase and community takeover that is included in the part of the bill on land reform.

The issue that I have with Ken Macintosh is that I do not have many issues. We are largely on the same page. The committee recommended that a parliamentary process should be enshrined in legislation and that is what we are both trying to do. The Government’s proposal and the proposal from Alex Rowley would both require 40 days of formal consideration by the Parliament; Alex Rowley’s position would require that period of consideration to extend to 60 days.

However, it is standard for any Scottish Government consultation—well, it would typically be expected—that there would be 90 days for public scrutiny. In that period, there would be nothing to prevent parliamentary committees from considering the issues or to prevent business managers from scheduling debates. Those options are all open. In fact, under the Government’s approach, the longer period of consultation would offer a wider opportunity for the Parliament to consult during that time. It has been highlighted that an explanation is needed, and amendment 36 deals with that issue. Perhaps Cameron Buchanan and I simply differ on the question of whether determining outcomes should be an executive or legislative function.
Reporting happens at present whenever the statistics are available. If there are determined outcomes, statistics are published almost weekly. There were statistics out today—there is day-by-day reporting against the outcomes that have been set. If outcomes have been set in one context and there are statistics coming out, that produces a real-time response, so to restrict reporting purely to timescales that are set out in legislation would be counterproductive to the desire to maintain the report on outcomes as a living document that is continually updated.

In conclusion, I think that I and other members are very close to one another in terms of where we want to be. We want a parliamentary process, and we have one. We also want a participative process out in the country so that everybody can take part in determining the national outcomes. I hope that members in the Parliament will support the amendments in my name.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We are already way over time and we are only on the first group, so that will have implications for the rest of the afternoon. I ask for brevity from all members for the rest of the day.

The question is, that amendment 27 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division. Prior to that, there will be a five-minute suspension because it is the first division at stage 3.

15:02

Meeting suspended.

15:07

On resuming—

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We move to the division on amendment 27.

Amendment 41 agreed to.

After section 3A

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We come to group 2, on the European Charter of Local Self-Government. Amendment 151, in the name of Tavish Scott, is the only amendment in the group.

Tavish Scott (Shetland Islands) (LD): In a stimulating afternoon of voting, I thought that we should debate Europe. Instead of the aspects of Europe that other places have been debating, this debate is on the European Charter of Local Self-Government.

I was very encouraged by the minister’s response on the matter when it was raised in the earlier stages of the bill’s proceedings. In his remarks at, I think, stage 2, he mentioned that the European Charter of Local Self-Government may well be an appropriate focus for debate and for an amendment to the bill. Here we have a chance to give effect to a very sensible ministerial observation.

As the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities briefing to colleagues across the Parliament says, the purpose of the proposal is simply to ensure that the Government recognises in its duties and responsibilities the objectives of local government.

There seem to me to be three strong points that local government is making to the Parliament on this matter. The first is that the charter was specifically drafted to protect communities and citizens from centralisation, which would reduce their rights to local self-government and active subsidiary arrangements. I ask members to forgive the European jargon.
The second point is that amendment 151 places a duty on ministers of this Government—and, indeed, of every Government—to "observe and promote" the EU charter while carrying out their functions. That is not exactly a hardship, I suggest, but it is an important measure of the Government's intent towards local government.

The third point is that, in noting that the proposed duty is a pretty modest step, COSLA observes that it would consolidate the right of local people to a greater influence in the way that our communities manage their own affairs. That is very much in keeping with and in the spirit of the minister's remarks this afternoon and in committee during stage 2 consideration of amendments to the bill.

The other aspect that is worthy of consideration is the money that underpins the effectiveness of local government. It is up to local government to decide how to give effect to the choices of the Parliament and the Government around, for example, the council tax freeze, but it is a fact that, by 2020, the Parliament will be spending £910 million a year on the council tax freeze and will have spent £6.3 billion since the policy was introduced. If the Parliament chooses to do that and supports the policy, so be it, but we should at least have a debate in this country about the alternatives that local government could give effect to were it to have much more flexibility with regard to how it resolves to spend its money and therefore serve local people.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Mr Scott, I am afraid that your time is up. Could you start to conclude?

Tavish Scott: Let me finish with the observations that the COSLA spokesman in this area made to the minister. He observed that it is important to—

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I am afraid that you really must hurry up.

Tavish Scott: I am doing my best, Presiding Officer.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Otherwise, I will have to cut you off. I cannot call anyone else to speak on the group, so—

Tavish Scott: Can I finish the sentence?

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Please hurry.

Tavish Scott: I will just move the amendment and ask the Parliament to support it.

I move amendment 151.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Thank you. I should have said that before I called Tavish Scott. I cannot call anyone else who wishes to speak. I now call the minister.

Marco Biagi: Thank you, Presiding Officer.

As a Government, we believe that the people who live and work in Scotland are best placed to make decisions about our future. That is the essence of self-determination, and accordingly we, too, are committed to subsidiarity and local decision making in public life.

The Scottish Government works very much in partnership with local government and we share a vision of strengthened community planning, involvement and empowerment. Indeed, the success of our joint working was highlighted by the Council of Europe last year. Our commitment to local autonomy, self-determination and governance is not only central to our proposals in the bill but fundamental to our wider approach to public service reform and local government.

The European Charter of Local Self-Government is a widely recognised articulation of the principles of local autonomy to which we are bound, as an international treaty obligation, by ratification in 1998 at the Council of Europe. Our actions are therefore already guided by the provisions of the charter. It commits us to applying basic rules guaranteeing the political, administrative and financial independence of local authorities. Crucially, it provides that the principle of local self-government will be recognised in domestic legislation and, where practicable, in the constitution. The explanatory notes to the charter already recognise that states that do not have a written constitution, such as the UK, will be unable to give that constitutional protection.

This Government believes in a written constitution and would wish to see local government covered by it. A mention only in legislation does not carry the same force or have the same effect and could be annulled by future Governments rather more easily.

15:30

Legislation enacting the principles of the charter already exists in the form of the local government acts that set out the powers and responsibilities of our councils. We believe that those acts are in accordance with all the provisions that the charter requires. We have repeatedly said to local government partners that if they think that we are not in compliance with any parts of the charter they should show us examples so that we can rectify the situation.

Since the concordat, the Scottish Government and local government have worked constructively in partnership across a range of issues. Of course there have been disagreements, but the strength of any relationship is in how the parties work through disagreements. That collective working together and decision making has been demonstrated through examples such as the large-scale reduction in budget ring fencing, the work that we are taking forward with the islands areas ministerial working group, our collaborative working with COSLA to strengthen community planning and, of course, the bill itself.

I acknowledge COSLA’s work in bringing the issue to the fore; indeed, I discussed it personally with Councillor McGuigan earlier this week. Although we might disagree on the issue of the charter, we are united in recognising that local councils are an integral and essential element of overall good governance in Scotland. We remain of the view that the only way in which to go beyond legislation on the issue would be to institute a constitutional protection, which would further safeguard the charter’s provisions.

I ask Mr Scott to withdraw amendment 151.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I ask Tavish Scott to wind up.

Ken Macintosh: On a point of order, Presiding Officer. I appreciate that there is an awful lot of business to get through today, but my understanding is that there are only two or three areas of contention. It would be unfortunate if, for example, Labour colleagues were unable to explain why we support the Liberals on amendment 151 and why we disagree with the minister’s view that what amendment 151 seeks is not necessary. Would it be possible for you to think about the time that is available to discuss the areas of contention? That would allow, for example, Mr Scott to get the chance to fully develop his argument and others to be able to express themselves and to say what we agree on, because there are huge areas of the bill on which we agree.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I take your point, Mr Macintosh, and I think that it is regrettable that we are so far behind at this stage. That is a problem because of how the timings have been worked out and how time has been allocated this afternoon. Unfortunately, my hands are tied because of the earlier motion. However, I can invite a member to move a motion to extend the time for this debate by 10 minutes.

Motion moved,

That, under Rule 9.8.5A, the debate be extended by 10 minutes.—[Joe FitzPatrick]

Motion agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I now call Tavish Scott to wind up and indicate whether—sorry, I call Ken Macintosh for a brief speech.

[Applause.] Order, please, or we will immediately need to further extend the debate.

Ken Macintosh: Presiding Officer, you will be relieved to hear that I have only a brief contribution.

I want simply to say that the European Charter of Local Self-Government guarantees the political, administrative and financial independence of local authorities. I believe that it is the first European law that encapsulates in legislation the principle of subsidiarity. I would have thought—in fact, I would have hoped—that an Administration that is occasionally subject to criticism for its overcentralising tendencies would have embraced the opportunity to prove that its position is otherwise. It is worth noting that before the general election not just COSLA but every local administration across England, Northern Ireland and Wales called for any future Administration to embrace the charter and put it into any constitutional settlement.

I am slightly disappointed by the Government’s view on the charter, but we commend Tavish Scott for lodging his amendment.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Clare Adamson, too, for a brief contribution.

Clare Adamson (Central Scotland) (SNP): Tavish Scott and Ken Macintosh have brought to light the importance of the charter. It is a timely reminder of how important European Union membership is to Scotland’s future. The European Charter of Local Self-Government was signed by the UK Government in 1997, formally binding the UK Government and successive Governments, and their devolved Assemblies and devolved Administrations, to respect its terms and implement its requirements.

Some of the requirements are specific to a written constitution. However, in its explanatory report, the charter recognises the UK’s constitutional arrangement and suggests that no legislation is needed. On article 2, the explanatory report says that the “article provides that the principle of local self-government should be enshrined in written law.”

It goes on to say:

“It was also recognised that countries not having a written constitution but a constitution to be found in various documents and sources might encounter specific difficulties or even be unable to make that commitment.”

Given Scottish law as it stands, I do not think that amendment 151 would give any of the protections that Tavish Scott seeks. On that basis, we should reject the amendment, as we already have protection in Scottish law.
The Deputy Presiding Officer: Finally, I call Tavish Scott to wind up and indicate whether he wishes to press or withdraw the amendment.

Tavish Scott: I am grateful to Ken Macintosh for the opportunity to thank you, Presiding Officer, for allowing further debate on the matter.

I take the minister’s points about the constitutional aspects. There is a perfectly fair argument about that, but the point is that for many of us—including, privately, the minister, I suspect—and particularly for local government, the amendment represents a step forward and we should take the opportunity to take that step in Parliament and in law, as it strengthens the very arguments that the minister made.

I cannot take the minister’s arguments on centralisation too seriously. After all, the Government has replaced ring fencing with the straitjacket of the council tax freeze—whether members consider that good, bad or indifferent, local government sees it as a straitjacket on what it can do, and it is ridiculous to suggest otherwise.

I am grateful to the minister for mentioning the concordat. We have not heard tell of that for about four years; it used to be mentioned every week at First Minister’s questions, but no longer. The concordat is not just historic, but is a point of history. [Interruption.]

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Order. Mr Scott has little time to make his point and we must hear him.

Tavish Scott: I will stop there, but I wish to press the amendment.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 151 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 52, Against 68, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 151 disagreed to.

Section 5—Local outcomes improvement plan

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 3 is on “Community planning—locality plans etc.” Amendment 1, in the name of the Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment, is grouped with amendments 2 to 8.

Marco Biagi: During stage 2 consideration of provisions on community planning, the Local Government and Regeneration Committee and I discussed duties that should be imposed on community planning partnerships to undertake locality planning. Such duties include working with communities to prepare, publish and deliver plans that are aimed at improving outcomes for local communities on a smaller level than a whole CPP area. Although I could not agree to the amendments that Alex Rowley lodged, I undertook to work with Labour members of that committee to introduce community planning at a more neighbourhood level. I have appreciated the constructive involvement of those members and the discussions that I have had with them.

Amendment 1 requires CPPs to include a description of the needs and circumstances of persons in their CPP areas in their local outcomes improvement plans.

Amendments 2 and 3 are minor amendments in consequence of amendments 4 to 7, which introduce locality planning and locality plan improvement reports.

Amendment 4 imposes duties on each CPP to identify each geographic locality in their area where persons experience significantly poorer outcomes than are experienced by persons who reside in other localities in that area or significantly poorer outcomes than are experienced generally by persons who reside in Scotland.

Amendment 5 imposes duties on each CPP to prepare and publish a locality plan for each locality that it has identified as experiencing the significantly poorer outcomes referred to in amendment 4. To further encourage locality planning, the amendment makes it clear that CPPs may also prepare and publish locality plans for other areas. I encourage them all to consider doing that.

Amendment 6 imposes a duty on each CPP to keep under review the question whether it is making progress in improving the achievement of each local outcome that the locality plan refers to. CPPs must also review the locality plan, and they may revise it.

Amendment 7 imposes a duty on each CPP to prepare and publish a locality plan progress report for each locality plan that it publishes for each reporting year.

The provisions in amendments 5 to 7 for locality plans broadly echo the corresponding duties on CPPs around their local outcomes improvement plans under sections 5 to 7. That is part of our wider programme of community empowerment. On that basis, I hope that the amendments will be supported.

Amendment 8 adds a definition of locality to the interpretation section for part 2, in consequence of amendment 4.

I hope that those amendments, which began with the Opposition and have been taken on by the Government, will command wide support around the chamber.

I move amendment 1.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Four members wish to speak. If they all take a minute, I should be able to fit everyone in.

Ken Macintosh: I do not wish to add anything to the substantive arguments that the minister made. I mention in the interests of transparency that a number of outstanding issues were left hanging from stage 2. I acknowledge that the minister consulted Labour members—Alex Rowley, Cara Hilton, me and others. I thank him for those efforts and offer our support for the amendments.

Cameron Buchanan: We quite agree with amendments 1 to 3, but amendments 4 to 8 raise concerns not because of their practical content but because of the principle that they threaten. A bill about empowering communities should do just that. Communities should be able to set their own priorities and aims for improvement, including where they apply. If a community planning partnership is to be empowered, it should not be told which studies to do and which areas to focus on; community planning partnerships should be able to decide that for themselves. The point is not that improving outcomes for disadvantaged communities is the wrong aim but that communities should be left to set their own priorities and be free to use their resources as they see fit.

Kevin Stewart (Aberdeen Central) (SNP): I welcome the constructive discussions that took place to get us to the amendments.

Cameron Buchanan has got the wrong end of the stick entirely. The amendments will ensure that communities at a very low level—at a very local or neighbourhood level—have a say instead of being dictated to completely and utterly by a community planning partnership that many folk will think is distant. I urge him to rethink what he just said and to back the amendments, which will do much to empower communities—particularly those that are disadvantaged.

Malcolm Chisholm: I welcome the amendments. It is good that the top-down process of community planning will become far more localised because of the proposals. Credit goes to the minister and Alex Rowley, who pressed those issues strongly in committee.

I have only one question to the minister. We have a detailed process for the integration of health and social care, in which there have to be locality plans. Many people are asking what the relationship will be between the locality plans of the integration authorities and the locality plans in question. If the minister could shed any light on that, that would be helpful.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I said that four members wished to speak, but John Wilson has also made a request to speak.

John Wilson (Central Scotland) (Ind): I seek clarification from the minister on amendment 5, which will insert a section on locality plans after section 7. Subsection (4) in amendment 5 says:

“In preparing a locality plan, a community planning partnership must consult—

(a) such community bodies as it considers appropriate”.

Will community planning partnerships be expected to extend the consultation as widely as possible and not to exclude groups that they might feel that they could exclude?

15:45

Marco Biagi: I am happy to address all the concerns that have been expressed and to answer the specific questions that have been raised.

On the point made by John Wilson, it is clear that, as a result of the bill, there will be a lot of duties on CPPs to foster participation, particularly by underrepresented socioeconomic groups. That, too, will come under the ambit of locality planning.

I have to disagree with Cameron Buchanan’s take on the matter; indeed, I wonder whether there might be a misunderstanding or a difference of interpretation. CPPs are valuable because they bring to the table not just the council but all the public, third sector and private partners in an area and do so at the level of a local authority area. I hope that we share the aim of replicating some of that work at a more local level, and the amendments in the group will give flexibility in dividing up an area.

The initial proposal was based on community council units, but the amendments in the group will make things flexible by allowing the CPP to base its approach on whatever division of the local authority area it thinks is sensible or worth while. Some might find interaction with health and social care localities to be a sensible approach, while others might choose not to align things in that way—that will be down to local decision making.

Nevertheless, it is important that all CPPs recognise that, as part of our thrust in the bill to target areas of socioeconomic disadvantage, locality plans must at a minimum be delivered to areas that are suffering particular disadvantage relative to the rest of the local authority area in question or relative to Scotland. They must also recognise that work must be undertaken in those areas to recognise their particular problems at neighbourhood level. There is nothing to stop a CPP producing locality plans for its entire area, but the areas that I just referred to must be targeted.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 1 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: Yes.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Are we agreed?

Members: Yes.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Can I ask members not to say yes if they agree and to shout no if they disagree? I will put the question again, because I thought that I heard a no, and I want to be clear. Are we agreed?
Members: Yes.

Amendment 1 agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Do members object to a single question being put on amendments 2 to 8?

Members: Yes.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: In that case, I will put the question on each amendment individually.

Section 7—Local outcomes improvement plan: progress report

Amendments 2 and 3 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

After section 7

Amendment 4 moved—[Marco Biagi].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 4 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

Section 15—Meaning of “community participation body”

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 4 is on types of group entitled to make participation requests. Amendment 9, in the name of the Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment, is grouped with amendments 10 and 11.

Marco Biagi: These amendments respond to another commitment that I made at stage 2. The Local Government and Regeneration Committee expressed concern about the need for a group to have a written constitution before being able to make a participation request. Although I did not agree with the amendments that were lodged at stage 2, which would have allowed individuals to make such requests, I recognise the need to allow groups that are less formally organised to come together and contribute their ideas for improving their communities. Those could include groups that are so informal that they do not wish to codify, or those in the early stages of establishment that already have ideas to offer.

Section 14 sets out the criteria that a group is required to meet to be a community controlled body. They include requirements for the group to define the community that it represents, to be open to all members of that community and to be controlled by members of it. Each of those is important—it is not about others telling the community what is good for them. Although partnerships may be welcome, organisations such as citizens advice bureaux may be consulted to provide support to participation requests. However, this is about community empowerment.

We must retain those key features of a community body, even if they are not set out in a formal constitution. Therefore, amendments 9 and 10 provide for another type of community participation body, set out in section 15, which does not have a written constitution but which has all the same features of having a community basis, of being open to and representative of that community, and of being not for profit. In the absence of a constitution establishing and codifying that, there must be a test whether a group meets the criteria. Amendment 11 provides that it will be for the public service authority to determine that. The group must provide such information as the authority needs to be satisfied of that. The information need not be produced in formal documents; it might come from leaflets or newsletters, or just through conversations with the group about who they are and how they decide what the group should do.

The amendments will open up participation requests to less formal groups, which, nonetheless, have something to offer their community, while ensuring that they are being used only by groups that are open, not for profit and representative.

I move amendment 9.

Amendment 9 agreed to.

Amendment 10 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

Section 17—Participation requests

Amendment 11 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I let Parliament know that, as we are nearing the agreed time limit under rule 9.8.4.A, I consider it necessary to allow the debate on groups 3 to 6 to continue beyond the limit.

After section 24

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 5 is on participation requests, appeals and reviews. Amendment 42, in the name of the Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment, is grouped with amendment 43.

Marco Biagi: Everything in the bill is about empowering communities. The bill does that by conferring new rights and by signalling that the approach across the public sector must be one of welcoming and facilitating communities in decision making.

Participation requests are a way of generating that partnership. They are the embodiment of the new culture that we want to see in the public sector, in which community participation in decision making is the norm, and in which we create positive relationships and make the most of all the knowledge and ideas that communities have to offer. That depends on mutual respect. Indeed, a minister can make provision for many things, but we cannot, by legislation, order or instruction create that respect. Although we could force people to come to any table, it is unlikely that anything positive would come out of dialogue held in such adversarial circumstances.

We believe that community bodies have the right to participate. Through participation requests, the legislation sets out a process to allow them to do so. Helpful stage 2 amendments mean that the bill will ensure that public authorities must be transparent about how they deal with requests, with clear, regular reporting. Ministers will take note of the performance of bodies reporting to us and I expect that councillors will do so, too, in their local authorities. However, we must be clear that being able to appeal any participation request, as the bill currently allows, would, I expect, see a sweeping range of requests coming to minister centrally for their decision making.

Participation requests can range from an informal group with some suggestions to make as a very junior partner in a community action plan to a community organisation seeking to take over delivery of a service. In the latter case, on consideration, there may be a stronger case for appeals to ministers. There is an important distinction, because there may be significant interaction with other important areas of law, so it would be vital to get the detail right.

We are proposing to make provision for appeals to be introduced on participation requests, if experience shows that they are needed. Amendment 42 gives ministers the power to make regulations about appeals or reviews of decisions relating to participation requests. That also allows for the appeals or reviews to be carried out by persons other than the Scottish ministers. I am sure that appeals or reviews will be needed only in exceptional cases, and we need to make sure that the system is proportionate.

I have also lodged an amendment, which we will come to in the next group, to require ministers to prepare a report on the operation of participation requests across the country. That will ensure that the system is reviewed within three years of coming into effect, although the regulation-making power is independent of that timescale. I hope that members will agree that making provision for appeals in that way is a more appropriate method of dealing with participation requests, and of ensuring that, if appeals are found to be needed, a system can be set up that is tailored to the situation, which can be updated as needed and which, when used, makes things better rather than worse.

I move amendment 42.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Once again, under rule 9.8.5A, I am minded to accept a motion without notice, to extend the time limit for group 5 by 10 minutes.

Motion moved,

That, under Rule 9.8.5A, the time limit for group 5 be extended by 10 minutes.—[Joe FitzPatrick.]

Motion agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: That allows me to call two members who want to contribute to the group, but their contributions should be brief.

Ken Macintosh: I fully agree with the minister that the bill is all about improving the involvement and participation of communities. The minister seems to suggest that it will be rare for communities to seek to participate and to have their participation request turned down by a public body. That is true, but the right to appeal such a decision should be enshrined in our legislation.

In support of that argument, I will quote no less an authority than Michael Russell MSP, who argued at stage 2 on appeals on asset transfers that "there is no doubt that, in a very few exceptional cases, giving community bodies a route of appeal to Scottish ministers could be beneficial because it would strengthen part of the bill's focus on openness, transparency and consistency. It may well be a proportionate measure."—[Official Report, Local Government and Regeneration Committee, 11 March 2015; c 43.]

I could not have put it better myself. That is why the committee agreed to the amendment at stage 2. Rather than taking that amendment out and replacing it with a Government power to regulate, I ask the minister to rethink his approach. We are talking about shifting the balance of power so that public bodies know that any decisions that they take might be challenged because there is an appeals mechanism. It is important that we give the communities the power, not the public body. I urge the minister to withdraw the amendment.

Stuart McMillan (West Scotland) (SNP): I listened to what Ken Macintosh had to say and I have read the Official Report of stage 2. Although I genuinely appreciate what Alex Rowley was trying to do at stage 2—and I am sure that he will understand my position on community empowerment, because I am a former member of the committee—what the bill says at the moment will prove to be unworkable in many cases. As it stands, the bill could allow a confrontational approach to be taken. I know that that is not what the section intends, but I fear that that is what would happen. If an individual gets to the point of making an appeal on an issue, clearly and understandably their feelings will be running high.

Amendment 42 will assist with such situations by providing for a power to make regulations on appeals and reviews. That will not preclude an appeal and a review system if that is found to be required. Amendment 44, which is to be discussed shortly, calls on ministers to review the operation of participation requests within three years of their coming into operation. I therefore support amendments 42 and 43.

Marco Biagi: As I have said, we have taken on board the case that is being made. There is provision in the bill. The contrast between what Michael Russell said and the section that we are discussing is that, with asset transfers, there is a tangible, physical asset, and the difference between that and a constructive relationship and dialogue could not be bigger. That is why it might be valid to make a distinction for the takeover of services.

I have one example. If a council tenants association wants to discuss how a concierge area should be decorated, makes a participation request to the council and gets knocked back, under the bill as it stands, without amendments 42 and 43, that decision could be appealed straight to ministers. If people believe that is the right way for things to be decided, they are welcome to vote for that. However, if they do, please let them never again come to the chamber and accuse the Government of centralisation.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 42 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a one-minute division.

Section 25A—Annual reports

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Before I call group 6—after which my colleague John Scott will take the chair—I say to the chamber that the anticipated timings for this stage 3 are very far from the reality. I will now go and look carefully at the timings for the rest of this afternoon and this evening.

Group 6 is on participation request and asset transfer request reports. Amendment 12, in the name of the Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment, is grouped with amendments 44 and 19.

Marco Biagi: At stage 2, following the committee’s recommendation, I brought forward provisions to require relevant authorities to publish annual reports on asset transfer requests and participation requests. Those reports will set out the number of requests received and their results, as well as how the authority is promoting and supporting the use of the requests.

John Wilson proposed that a deadline should be set for the reports to be produced. We have sought the views of some of our key stakeholders in the public sector and the third sector, including the Development Trusts Association Scotland, the Scottish Community Development Centre, the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations, Barnardo’s, Oxfam and the Poverty Alliance, and the majority view is that 30 June would be an appropriate date for the annual reports to be published. That is what amendments 12 and 19 put in place for participation requests and asset transfer requests respectively.

Amendment 44 is the amendment that I spoke about a minute ago in relation to appeals. It requires ministers to prepare a report on the operation of participation requests within three years of them coming into force, and to lay it before Parliament.

I move amendment 12.

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): Before I call other speakers, I want to let Parliament know that, as we have passed the agreed time limit, under rule 9.8.4.A(a) I consider it necessary to allow the debate to continue beyond the limit in order to allow those with a right to speak on amendments in the group to do so.

I offer the minister the opportunity to wind up.

Marco Biagi: I will waive that opportunity.

Amendment 12 agreed to.

Section 28—Meaning of “community”

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 7 is on changes related to the type of body that a community body, cropping community body or part 3A community body is and duties on such bodies. Amendment 45, in the name of the Minister for the Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform, is grouped with amendments 47 to 49, 62, 70, 72, 74 to 76, 78, 82 to 85 and 87.

The Minister for Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform (Aileen McLeod): The purpose of amendment 45 is to extend the ability of a community body to define its community by reference to postcode unit or postcode units to both Scottish charitable incorporated organisations—SCIOs—and community benefit societies—bencoms.

The purpose of amendments 48, 49, 82 to 85 and 87 is to update the provisions in part 2 and the new part 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, which set out what type of connection a community is required to have with the land that is the subject of an application under part 2 to register an interest in land or under part 3A to apply to exercise the right to buy.

Amendment 48 ensures that the acquisition of the land by the community body has to be compatible with furthering the achievement of sustainable development of the land and is applicable to all subparagraphs of section 38(1)(b) of the 2003 act. It also makes some technical changes to the definition of a community to align with the extension in the types of community bodies that can make an application to include bencoms, SCIOs and other types of bodies as prescribed in regulations by ministers.

Amendment 48 repeals the reference to the definition of community within section 38(1)(b)(i), because it is already being set out in section 38(3). Amendment 48 also amends section 38(1)(b) by inserting two additional options for fulfilling the requirement to demonstrate a connection with the land: where the community body is a company limited by guarantee, a bencom or a SCIO, the land is in or sufficiently near to the area of the community as set out in their articles of association, constitution or registered rules; and, where the community body is a body as prescribed by ministers, the land is in or sufficiently near to the area of the community to which that body relates.
Amendment 49 makes technical changes to section 38(3) of part 2 of the 2003 act to take account of the fact that community bodies can now take the form of SCIOs, bencoms and other forms of body as prescribed in regulations by ministers.

Amendments 70 and 72 move the definition of a company limited by guarantee, so that the definition is grouped within the subsection that defines the other types of body that can constitute a community body.

Amendment 82 repeals the reference to the definition of community in the new section 97H(h), because it is superseded by the new provisions inserted by amendment 87. Amendment 83 is a minor wording change in section 97H(h)(ii). Amendment 83 is consequential to amendment 87.

Amendment 84 amends the new section 97H(h) and the connection between the community and the land, in the same way that amendment 48 does. Amendment 85 repeals the words “so defined” in section 97H(i). This amendment is consequential to the change to the definition of community introduced by amendment 87.

Amendment 87 provides that, for the purposes of section 97H in part 3A of the 2003 act, references to a community are references to the community as defined in the community body’s application.

Amendments 47, 62, 74 to 76 and 78 relate to the details of community bodies, crofting community bodies and part 3A community bodies that have to be included on the various registers that relate to the rights to buy in part 2, part 3 and the new part 3A of the 2003 act, as there is another section 97B of the 2003 act to be inserted by section 48 of the bill. Amendment 84 renumbers that section as section 97ZA of the 2003 act.

Amendment 82 repeals the reference to the definition of community in the new section 97H(h), because it is superseded by the new provisions inserted by amendment 87. Amendment 83 is a minor wording change in section 97H(h)(ii). Amendment 83 is consequential to amendment 87.

Amendment 84 amends the new section 97H(h) and the connection between the community and the land, in the same way that amendment 48 does. Amendment 85 repeals the words “so defined” in section 97H(i). This amendment is consequential to the change to the definition of community introduced by amendment 87.

Amendment 87 provides that, for the purposes of section 97H in part 3A of the 2003 act, references to a community are references to the community as defined in the community body’s application.

Amendments 47, 62, 74 to 76 and 78 relate to the details of community bodies, crofting community bodies and part 3A community bodies that have to be included on the various registers that relate to the rights to buy in part 2, part 3 and the new part 3A of the 2003 act, as there is another section 97B of the 2003 act to be inserted by section 48 of the bill. Amendment 84 renumbers that section as section 97ZA of the 2003 act.

Amendment 71 adjusts a cross-reference in section 97D(7) of the 2003 act that relates to part 3A community bodies.

Amendment 77 provides that the person who provides a document or other information, or makes a decision, a copy of which is to be registered in the part 3A register, must give a copy to the keeper of the registers of Scotland as soon as reasonably practicable.

Amendment 88 alters the paragraphing of section 97J(3) to clarify that regulations made by ministers about how the ballot is to be conducted make provision for the ascertainment and publication of: the number of persons eligible to vote in the ballot; the number who did vote; and the number of valid votes respectively cast for and against. The regulations must also make provision for the form and manner in which the result of the ballot is to be published.

Amendment 89 leaves out the unnecessary words “of the Registers of Scotland” because a definition of the keeper of the registers of Scotland as “the Keeper” is provided in section 97F(9) of the 2003 act.

The purpose of amendment 137 is that the power inserted by section 97D(1)(b) into the 2003 act is subject to the affirmative procedure. That power allows ministers to make regulations setting out an additional description of a body in addition to a body falling within subsection (1A), (1B) or (1C) of section 97D of the 2003 act that may be part 3A community bodies and to set out any requirements that those bodies must comply with.

Amendments 139 to 142 relate to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. They amend the provisions that were inserted by Michael Russell’s stage 2 amendment. The effect of the amendments is that ministers, when making certain decisions on a right-to-buy application made under parts 2, 3 or 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003, must have regard to that international covenant.

Amendments 140 and 141 are minor drafting amendments. Amendment 142 adds two qualifications of the reference to the covenant. The references to the covenant are qualified by:

“any amendments in force in relation to the United Kingdom for the time being, and ... any reservations, objections or interpretative declarations by the United Kingdom for the time being in force”.

I move amendment 46.

Claudia Beamish: I welcome Michael Russell’s stage 2 amendment on human resources issues and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and I acknowledge that the minister’s amendments 139 to 142 complete the tidying process in that respect.

I move amendment 154.

Alex Fergusson: I have no doubt that Claudia Beamish’s amendments are well intentioned, but I find them to be unnecessary, given that the bill will already give ministers the ability to substitute a different period of time if they see a need to do so. I think that six months is an appropriate period—bearing in mind the ability of ministers to alter it—in this instance, in particular. Shorter periods of time keep minds focused and probably keep up momentum. I think that both those abilities would be diminished by extending to 12 months the period for approval.

For those reasons, Conservative members will not support the amendments in group 9.

Aileen McLeod: The bill will insert in the 2003 act proposed new section 38(2A), which states that, in considering an application for registration of an interest in land, “Ministers may not take into account ... the approval of a member of the community if it was indicated earlier than 6 months before the date” on which the part 2 application was made.

Amendment 154 would increase the period of time for approval from six months to 12 months to give ministers more flexibility to consider community support. I believe, however, that it is important for such approval to be current. If the approval was given 12 months prior to the date of application, the community’s plans or the community itself may have changed in the intervening time.

The bill will also insert in the 2003 act proposed new section 38(2B), which will give ministers the power to amend the time limit if they consider that to be desirable. I hope that that gives Claudia Beamish some reassurance, so I urge her to seek to withdraw amendment 154.

Amendment 155 would mean that ministers, when using the new power in proposed new section 38(2B) of the 2003 act to amend the six-month time limit, could not change it to a period of less than six months. I support amendment 155.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Claudia Beamish to press or to seek to withdraw amendment 154.

Claudia Beamish: I press amendment 154.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 154 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Section 31—Procedure for late applications

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 10 is on the time period for representations and provision of information under 2003 act. Amendment 50, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 52, 57, 58 and 144.

Aileen McLeod: Amendments 50, 52, 57, 58 and 144 were lodged in response to Claudia Beamish’s stage 2 amendment 57, which sought to provide flexibility in the timescales for providing information in connection with an application that is made under part 2 or part 3A of the 2003 act. During stage 2, I committed to lodging amendments on the matter. The best approach is to increase the period at key points in the process. I have identified four areas where an extension from seven days to 14 days in which to provide information would be beneficial to the party concerned.

Amendment 50 will change from seven days to 14 days the time within which the relevant party must provide to ministers additional information in connection with a late application.

Amendment 52 will change from seven days to 14 days the time within which persons must provide ministers with further information in connection with an application.

Amendment 57 will change from seven days to 14 days the time within which the community body must provide to ministers additional information in connection with an application.

Amendment 58 will change from seven days to 14 days the time within which the community body may provide additional information in connection with circumstances that affected the ballot.

Amendment 144 will remove paragraph 2(6) from schedule 4, which is the current provision for extending seven-day time limits.

I move amendment 50.

Claudia Beamish: I support the minister’s amendments, which rationalise my stage 2 amendment to extend waiting periods in late applications.

Aileen McLeod: I thank Claudia Beamish for her amendment at stage 2.

Amendment 50 agreed to.

16:30

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 11 is on late applications under part 2 of 2003 act. Amendment 51, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 53.

Aileen McLeod: Amendments 51 and 53 have been lodged as a result of the withdrawal at stage 2 of amendment 49, which was lodged by Alex Fergusson. At stage 2 I committed to lodging a stage 3 amendment because amendment 49 did not take account of such factors as the terms on which the land was offered to the community body and the reasons why the community body rejected or did not complete the purchase.

Amendment 51 relates to the late application process in part 2 of the 2003 act. It will insert new criteria, about which ministers must be satisfied before consenting to a late application. The amendment’s purpose is to prevent a late application from being accepted if the land was offered to the same or a “similar community body” within the previous 12 months, unless, in ministers’ opinion, there are good reasons why the body did not purchase the land. Examples of things that might be considered good reasons include conditions’ being attached to the sale of the land, or the area of land being offered not meeting the community’s needs at the time.

Amendment 51 specifies that it is for ministers to decide whether a community body is a “similar community body” for the purposes of provisions in amendment 51. When considering whether a community body is “similar”, ministers will have to have regard to matters that will be set out in regulations, including how many of the named directors, other officers or named members of the two community bodies are the same.

I move amendment 51.
Alex Fergusson: I am grateful to the minister for lodging amendments 51 and 53. As she acknowledged, they stem from an amendment that I lodged at stage 2 and then withdrew, given the Government’s undertaking to look at the issue that I raised and to lodge its own amendment. The issue was simply that I wished to provide a bit of protection in the circumstances that the minister has described. Amendment 51 provides a better balance in the process and amendment 53 very sensibly allows a bit of flexibility in the definitions of any offer that is made, the land in question and the make-up of the community body. I am very happy to support the amendments.

Amendment 51 agreed to.

Amendments 52 and 53 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 32—Evidence and notification of concluded missives or option agreements

Amendments 54 and 55 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

After section 33

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We move to group 12, on expiry of registration under part 2 of 2003 act. Amendment 56, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 156. I call the minister to move amendment 56 and to speak to both amendments in the group.

Aileen McLeod: Amendment 56 relates to part 2 of the 2003 act and has been lodged as a result of the withdrawal at stage 2 of amendment 52, which was lodged by Dave Thompson. Amendment 52 would have required the keeper of the registers of Scotland to notify the community body of the expiry of a registered interest. I believe that it is more appropriate for ministers to notify the community body of the expiry.

Amendment 56 will require ministers to notify a community body that its registered interest in land is due to expire, no earlier than 12 months before the registered interest is due to expire. Ministers will have a period of 28 days from that date in which to send the notification to the community body in order to give the community body sufficient time to prepare its reregistration.

I turn to amendment 156. Under the existing provisions of part 2 of the 2003 act, a community is required to reregister its interest every 5 years. The reregistration period is designed to ensure that community support for the acquisition remains current, and that other vital aspects have not changed. Amendment 156 seeks to extend from five years to seven years the period for which a registration of interest lasts. However, that would no longer provide an indication of the community’s current support for the acquisition, or identify other important changes to the circumstances that justified the original registration of interest.

I intend to introduce, under sections 37(1) and 98(3) of the 2003 act, a more streamlined form to be used by community bodies for reregistration, which will make the five-yearly reregistration process less onerous while ensuring that community support for the acquisition remains current. We therefore propose to retain the current five-year period, so I ask that Claudia Beamish not move amendment 156.

I move amendment 56.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I invite Claudia Beamish to speak to amendment 156 and other amendments in the group.

Claudia Beamish: Although I have listened carefully to what the minister has said, I would like to reiterate some points relating to amendment 156 for Parliament to consider.

A version of amendment 156 was initially lodged at stage 2 by Dave Thompson, following discussion with Community Land Scotland. We supported that amendment at the time. It sought to extend the period for which a registration of interest lasts, from the current five years under section 44 of the 2003 act, to 10 years, which was a recommendation from the land reform review group. At the time, the minister argued that after 10 years there would no longer be an indication of the community’s support for the acquisition, and she has highlighted that point again today. There would also be a risk that ministers would be unaware of important changes in circumstances.

Stage 2 amendment 44 was withdrawn, but Michael Russell, who spoke to the amendment in Dave Thompson’s absence, asked the minister to "consider ... whether that advice from the land reform review group requires further thought."—[Official Report, Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee, 4 March 2015; c 44.]

The minister said that she would happily look again at the amendment, but as I understand it she decided against pursuing the issue through a Government amendment.

As a compromise, and based on the minister’s comments, my amendment 156 seeks to increase the duration of the registration period to seven years. That would simplify the process for community groups. It would be a step in the direction of the land reform review group’s recommendation and it would reduce the burden that community bodies face with reregistration, notwithstanding the fact that the minister has highlighted the streamlining of the reregistration process.

Alex Fergusson: I am afraid that we cannot agree with Claudia Beamish’s amendment 156.
Five-year intervals are generally accepted as a standard period—for instance, in the planning process. It seems to me that five years is the right period before reregistration would be required, especially because the process of reregistration is to be considerably simplified as a result of the bill and the regulations that are to come.

Aileen McLeod: On amendment 156, I concur with Alex Ferguson. I consider five years to be a decent period of time within which community support can be demonstrated. Amendment 56 will ensure that community bodies have adequate time to carry out reregistration as smoothly as possible. On that basis, I urge members to support amendment 56.

Amendment 56 agreed to.

Amendment 156 moved—[Claudia Beamish].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 156 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 39, Against 78, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 156 disagreed to.

Section 38 — Consent under section 51 of 2003 Act: prescribed information

Amendment 57 moved — [Aileen McLeod] — and agreed to.

Section 39 — Representations etc regarding circumstances affecting ballot result

Amendment 58 moved — [Aileen McLeod] — and agreed to.

After section 42

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 13 is on notifications relating to applications, appeals etc cetera under 2003 act. Amendment 59, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 60, 61, 91, 93 and 94.

Aileen McLeod: Amendments 59 to 61 and 91, 93 and 94 will require the party who is lodging an appeal, referring a question or making an application to the Lands Tribunal for Scotland or the Scottish Land Court to notify the Scottish ministers within seven days of the appeal being lodged, question being referred or application being made. The amendments will also require the Lands Tribunal or Land Court to send a copy of its written decision to ministers — where that is not already done — to ensure that ministers are kept up to date with progress on an application and that any errors in processing an application are avoided.

Amendment 59 relates to an application to the Lands Tribunal in connection with the valuation of the land for a part 3A application. Finally, amendment 94 relates to questions to the Lands Tribunal in connection with a part 3A application.

I move amendment 59.

Amendment 59 agreed to.

Section 45A — Appeals to Lands Tribunal as respects valuations of land

Amendment 60 moved — [Aileen McLeod] — and agreed to.

Section 47C — Application: information about rights and interest in land

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 14 is on power to modify information required in application for consent under part 3 of 2003 act. Amendment 157, in the name of Sarah Boyack, is the only amendment in the group.

Sarah Boyack (Lothian) (Lab): My amendment 157 follows discussion with Community Land Scotland. Section 73 of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 deals with the process of applying to exercise the crofting community right to buy. Section 73(5) specifies certain information that should be included in the application, with reference to maps, where appropriate. Community Land Scotland has highlighted that those requirements remain potentially onerous for a crofting community body.

Amendment 157 would insert a new subsection giving ministers the option to modify the paragraphs in section 73(5) of the 2003 act, should the need arise, in order to address such concerns in regulations. Those regulations could also provide for specific paragraphs in section 73(5) not to apply in such circumstances as ministers may specify.

The proposed provisions give ministers flexibility to act where appropriate. I hope that colleagues will support amendment 157, which I believe is a good and proportionate addition to the bill.

I move amendment 157.

Aileen McLeod: Section 73(5) of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 requires a crofting community body, as part of its crofting community right-to-buy application, to provide certain information about the land that is the subject of its application. Those requirements were amended at stage 2 of the bill to make them less onerous.

Ministers currently have a power to set out in regulations the kind of information that must be included in or accompany an application, but that power is subject to the minimum requirements set out in section 73(5). If agreed to, amendment 157 will add a provision that will give ministers a regulation-making power, allowing them to amend or repeal the minimum requirements for information that must be included in or accompany the application. That would allow ministers to change or remove the requirements in section 73(5), should it be identified in the future that those requirements are still considered to be too onerous for a crofting community body to comply with.

I support amendment 157.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Breaking with convention, I will allow Mike Russell to speak.

Michael Russell (Argyll and Bute) (SNP): Not everybody will be grateful for that, Presiding Officer.

I will make two points, to which amendment 157 draws attention. The first one is the need for flexibility, in all arrangements to do with community purchase, in taking down the barriers to community purchase that exist. I commend the minister for her very practical approach throughout our consideration of the bill. The amendment very sensibly removes barriers that would otherwise deter some communities.

The second point is about the important role that Community Land Scotland and other organisations have played in helping the committee that examined this part of the bill and in helping the Government—having worked closely with it—to understand how important it is that community purchase is encouraged and enabled and that any difficulties that exist in legislation are minimised to the maximum degree.

I am grateful to the minister and to Sarah Boyack for their participation in considering the matter, and I am particularly grateful to Community Land Scotland.

Sarah Boyack: I will press amendment 157. I thank the minister for her helpful approach, and I thank Mike Russell for his support. I hope that all colleagues will feel able to support this useful, if minor, amendment.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We shall see.

Amendment 157 agreed to.

Section 47J—Land Court: reasons for decision under section 92

Amendment 61 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 47K—Meaning of creditor in standard security with right to sell

Amendments 63 and 64 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 48—Abandoned and neglected land

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 15 is on “Eligible land under Part 3A of 2003 Act etc.—general”. Amendment 65, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 158, 68, 159, 69, 161, 164 and 135. I draw members’ attention to the fact that, if amendment 160, which is in group 17, is agreed to, we will be unable to call amendment 161 because of pre-emption.

Aileen McLeod: Amendment 65 provides a definition of “inland waters” for the purposes of part 3A of the 2003 act.

Amendment 158 provides that a draft statutory instrument containing regulations that set out what land will be treated as eligible land for the purposes of part 3A of the 2003 act must be laid before the Scottish Parliament within 18 months of the bill receiving royal assent. I ask Sarah Boyack not to move amendment 158 because it is intended that consultation will begin with stakeholders on the content of such regulations shortly after completion of the bill’s passage through the Scottish Parliament. Stakeholder engagement is an essential part of that process.

Amendment 68 provides that land on which there is a building or other structure that is a home will no longer be excluded from the right to buy when that home is occupied by a person as a tenant.

I turn to amendment 159. Currently, land that is classed as bona vacantia—that is, ownerless property—and land that falls to the Crown as ultimus haeres, which happens when no living relative can be found to inherit land that belonged to a deceased person, is excluded from the definition of “eligible land”. Such land falls to the Crown through the Queen’s and Lord Treasurer’s Remembrancer. Amendment 159 removes bona vacantia land and land that falls to the Crown as ultimus haeres from the list of excluded land and thereby allows it to be subject to part 3A application.

There are good reasons why bona vacantia and ultimus haeres land is excluded from the definition of “eligible land”. The remembrancer does not to seek to retain land, so she may be unwilling to retain land for a sufficient length of time to allow a part 3A acquisition to be completed. The remembrancer’s overall function is to dispose of such land for the benefit of the public purse. It is not in the remembrancer’s interest to retain land because no disposal income would be generated and she is not resourced to manage such land on an on-going or long-term basis. The remembrancer also seeks to avoid retaining land because of the risks of liabilities arising in relation to it. Given the sources of land that falls to the Crown as bona vacantia, it follows that it can often be in a poor condition and brings with it the risk of future problems, liabilities and expense if the Crown interest in it is not resolved.

In circumstances where land has fallen to the Crown as bona vacantia or ultimus haeres, the community body has the option of contacting the remembrancer with a view to acquiring the land. In such circumstances, there would be no need to rely on the part 3A process. For those reasons, I ask Claudia Beamish not to move amendment 159.

Amendment 69, which is linked to amendment 68, provides ministers with a regulation-making power to set out “descriptions or classes of occupancy or possession which are, or are to be treated as, a tenancy” and which will be excluded from the right to buy abandoned, neglected or detrimental land.

Amendment 161 adds any tenant of the land to the list of parties who must be identified in a part 3A application. Tenancies cannot be bought separately from the land under part 3A of the 2003 act. Placing a requirement on the part 3A community body to identify all tenants on the land will ensure that they are fully involved in the community right-to-buy process and gives them the opportunity to contribute to that process, not only as members of the community but as individuals who could be directly impacted by any transfer of ownership. I support amendment 161.

Amendment 164 adds any tenant of the land to the list of parties who must be invited by the Scottish ministers to comment on a part 3A application. That will require the Scottish ministers to invite written comments on the application from tenants on the land, amendment 164 will introduce a specific obligation to do so. I support amendment 164.

Amendment 135 updates the definition of “inland waters” in part 3 of the 2003 act.

I move amendment 65.

Sarah Boyack: Under new section 97C of the 2003 act, ministers will be required to make regulations setting out what factors they must have regard to when deciding whether, in their opinion, land is eligible under part 3A of that act. The definition of “eligible land” was a key aspect of the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee’s consideration of the bill, and there are a number of amendments still to come on that subject. However, getting the detail of how the eligibility of land is to be judged will be crucial.

I lodged amendments at stage 2 that would have required ministers to consult on the required regulations within a year of royal assent. At the time, I listened to the minister’s assurances that consultation forms a key part of the regulation-making process, which I welcome. However, I am very keen to ensure that questions around how the eligibility of land is to be judged are settled at the earliest opportunity. I am concerned that, with the proposed land reform bill following so closely on the heels of the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill, there is a risk that regulations arising from both bills will be bundled together and delayed further down the line.

My amendment 158 would require a draft statutory instrument containing the regulations to be laid before Parliament within 18 months of royal assent. The minister committed in her opening remarks to consultation immediately after the bill is passed. However, can she clarify when she expects the statutory instruments to come into force? It is important that she clarifies that.

I will comment briefly on Alex Fergusson’s amendments 161 and 164. I think that the principle behind the amendments is reasonable, because it is about ensuring that tenants, as well as owners, have a right to comment. However, I would like the minister to clarify what would happen if a community, despite its best endeavours, cannot identify the tenants. Would that potentially knock out or invalidate the community’s application? I am very keen for the minister to clarify in her closing remarks what would happen in that situation.

Claudia Beamish: An amendment similar to amendment 159 was lodged at stage 2 by Sarah Boyack. Amendment 159 concerns the exemption from part 3A of land that is owned or occupied by the Crown by virtue of its having been vested in the Crown as bona vacantia, or of its having fallen to the Crown as ultimus haeres. I do not intend to go into the definitions of those terms, as the minister highlighted them earlier. However, clarification was sought at stage 2 on the need for the exemption when other Crown land is included by virtue of section 100(2) of the 2003 act. There is no similar exemption from the definition of “eligible crofting land” in part 3 of the 2003 act. I hope that the minister will be able to comment on that in her closing remarks.

In her remarks to the committee at stage 2 and again today, the minister provided background on the process for land that is classed as bona vacantia and ultimus haeres. Such land is claimed... by the Crown through the Queen’s and Lord Treasurer’s Remembrancer, whose purpose is to seek to realise the value of any land through disposal or disclaimer. The minister has already highlighted that the remembrancer does not seek to retain land and is not resourced to manage land on an on-going basis.

The minister said that in circumstances where land is classified as bona vacantia or ultimus haeres, a community body has the option of contacting the remembrancer with a view to acquiring the land. My concern would be that by specifically excluding such land, community bodies might be put off from showing their potential interest in it. At the same time, including the land as eligible would not prevent the remembrancer from disposing of land as usual unless there was community interest, in which case the benefit to the community must surely carry some weight.

Alex Fergusson: I lodged amendments 161 and 164 to try to ensure that any tenant of a building or structure on land that is subject to a community purchase has the opportunity to give their views formally, having been duly identified in the process. I cannot help but believe that tenants are being discriminated against by the Government in amendments 68 and 69, which appear to create two separate types of homemakers: those who own their homes and those who rent them. If someone owns their home they will not be impacted by a community right to buy, but if they rent their home, they will be—and possibly quite heavily.

There seems to be an unwritten principle in the Government’s amendments 68 and 69 that a community will, per se and of necessity, be a more benevolent landlord than any individual or company. I do not accept that that would always be the case. Amendments 161 and 164 seek to redress some of the imbalance in favour of the tenant. I hope that the Parliament will note that it is the Scottish Conservatives who are standing up for the interests of tenants in relation to the bill.

Aileen McLeod: I will try to take on board some of the points that have been raised. Amendments 68 and 69 ensure that communities are able to fully utilise the right to buy without the risk that land is ineligible due to the fact that it contains areas of land that are occupied by tenants as a home. I clarify that the amendments confer the power to set out the classes of occupancy et cetera that are included in part 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003.

On the points raised by Claudia Beamish and Sarah Boyack, if a community body did not identify a tenant, the application would not be compliant. However, we will ensure that guidance is available to limit the risk of that happening.

On amendment 158, we intend to begin consultation with stakeholders on the proposed content of the instrument shortly after the completion of the bill’s passage through the Scottish Parliament. As I said in my opening remarks, stakeholder engagement is an essential part and parcel of the community right-to-buy process. The draft instrument will be laid before the Scottish Parliament as the parliamentary timetable permits.

Amendment 65 agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 16 is on eligible land under part 3A of the 2003 act—the use or management of land causing harm. Amendment 66, in the name of the Minister for Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform, is grouped with amendments 67, 67A, 67B, 73, 79 to 81, 86, 86A to 86D, 90, 92, 138 and 146.

Aileen McLeod: The bill, if it is passed, will introduce a new part 3A into the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 that will give communities a right to buy land that is, in the Scottish ministers’ opinion, wholly or mainly abandoned or neglected. Mr Russell lodged an amendment at stage 2 that sought to expand that description to include land that is “in substantial need of sustainable development”.

Amendments 66 and 67 add provisions to widen the definition of eligible land to include land whose use or management results in or causes harm, which is not negligible harm, to the environmental wellbeing of a relevant community.

Environmental wellbeing is not being defined in the bill as I want it to have a broad meaning for the purposes of part 3A of the 2003 act and not to be restricted to harm that is caused to just the physical condition of the community. Harm to the community’s environmental wellbeing, for example, may affect the amenity of the community. That may include cases where the use or management of the land causes or results in harm to the community such as the detrimental impact that a group of boarded-up shops, unoccupied housing or algae-filled ponds that are becoming health hazards might have on the community’s environmental wellbeing.

Amendments 73, 90 and 92 change the title of the register that is to be set up by the Keeper of the Registers of Scotland to the “Register of Community Interests in Abandoned, Neglected or Detrimental Land”.

Amendment 79 requires the community body to set out in its application why it considers that the land is being used or managed in such a way as to result in or cause harm to the community’s environmental wellbeing, if that is the basis for the application. Amendment 80 adds a provision to require a community body to include details of any requests that have been made to regulators to take action that could remedy or mitigate the harm. Amendment 81 provides that, where relevant, landowners are invited to give information about whether they consider that the use or management of their land is causing or resulting in harm to the community’s environmental wellbeing.

Amendment 86 provides that, in order to consent to an application, the Scottish ministers must be satisfied, in addition to the existing criteria in section 97H of the 2003 act, that the harm is unlikely to be removed by the current owner if they continue to be the owner of the land. Ministers must also be satisfied that the community body has made a request to any relevant regulators to take action to remedy or mitigate the harm to the community’s environmental wellbeing and that the body’s ownership of the land will be consistent with reducing the harm. Ministers will have the power to set out who the relevant regulators are.

Amendments 67A and 67B would give a community the right to apply to purchase land when the use or management of the land was resulting in or causing harm to the community’s environmental and social wellbeing. That would introduce a double test in which both conditions had to be met, so it would be more difficult for community bodies to satisfy the test.

Social wellbeing is a broad concept. Defining it separately from environmental wellbeing makes it a distinct consideration. There was not time between stages 2 and 3 to consult fully on whether there is evidence of harm being caused to the social wellbeing of communities as a result of the use or management of land and, if so, what the extent of that is. It would be important to do that before asking the Parliament to confer powers that authorise the compulsory acquisition of land. Therefore, the bill as it is proposed to be amended by the Scottish Government takes matters as far as I consider appropriate at this time.

Amendment 86A would change the criteria that must be satisfied before ministers can consent to an application that relates to the use or management of land that is resulting in or causing harm to a relevant community’s environmental wellbeing so that those criteria applied if the part 3A community body was making an application on the basis that harm was being caused to the relevant community’s environmental and social wellbeing.

Amendment 86B would require that, in order to consent to an application, ministers would have to be satisfied that the exercise of the right to buy by the part 3A community body was compatible with removing or substantially removing the harm to the relevant community’s environmental and social wellbeing. Amendment 86C would amend the definition of a relevant regulator so that a regulator was relevant if it could be considered to be so after having regard to the harm to the relevant community’s environmental and social wellbeing. Amendment 86D would amend the definition of a regulatory function so that a regulatory function was relevant if it could be considered to be so after having regard to the harm to the relevant community’s environmental and social wellbeing.

I appreciate the helpful intention of Sarah Boyack’s amendments, given how hard everyone has worked on the issue to find the right way forward, I am certain that we are all trying to get to the same place, but the question is how we do that in the most effective way. Adding the social wellbeing dimension to the definition narrows the test for what constitutes eligible land from what it would be if amendment 67 were agreed to unamended, because the harm that is caused has to be not only environmental but social. If the harm that is caused is environmental but not social, land will not meet the test, as it would not meet both elements.

Although I am absolutely sure that the intention was not to introduce an additional test for community bodies and that that was not the proposal’s purpose, I ask Sarah Boyack not to press amendments 67A, 67B, 86A and 86B and the consequential amendments 86C and 86D, to ensure that such a test is not introduced. It is also the Scottish Government’s view that those amendments are outwith the Scottish Parliament’s legislative competence, on the basis that they do not provide sufficient foreseeability for landowners.

I reassure members that the definition of environmental wellbeing has a wide meaning and encompasses some social considerations. As I said earlier, we were not able to consult fully on extending the right to buy beyond what I have proposed in the Government amendments in the group. If Parliament were to widen the circumstances in which communities can acquire ownership of land through compulsory purchase, we would want to be clear about the evidence of the harm that the proposals would address and to consult on that to find a proportionate solution.

I give my firm commitment to work with Sarah Boyack and other members of the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee to look at any evidence that the use or management of land results in harm to the social wellbeing of communities, and I will seek to do so at the earliest opportunity.
Amendment 138 provides that the ministerial power that is introduced via amendment 86 will be subject to the affirmative procedure.

Amendment 146 amends the long title of the bill to include abandoned, neglected or detrimental land because of the widening of the definition of eligible land for the purposes of part 3A of the 2003 act.

I move amendment 66.

Sarah Boyack: At stage 2, the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee spent a considerable amount of time debating the definition of abandoned and neglected land for the purposes of part 3A of the 2003 act. Across the committee, there was concern that the terms “abandoned” and “neglected” might be seen as too narrow and might ignore the social, economic and environmental impact on communities. At stage 2, Michael Russell lodged amendments that sought to embed the concept of sustainable development in part 3A.

I still do not fully accept the Scottish Government’s amendment 67 is helpful, and I am grateful to the minister for engaging in discussions with the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee since stage 2. We have had the opportunity to press the Scottish Government on the matter and to ask questions of the minister and her officials. As a result, I understand that the Scottish Government’s preferred approach is to use the term “environmental wellbeing”.

Given that a key purpose of lodging my amendments was to probe what that term means in practice, I listened carefully to the minister’s comments. The wider definition that she has put on the record this afternoon is helpful in making it clear that the term includes social wellbeing. It is important to have it on record that environmental wellbeing is seen in a broader context, that it is not just about physical conditions, that it is important to urban and rural communities and that it is all about the use and management of the land. Crucially, the minister referred to boarded-up shops—which could, of course, mean other boarded-up buildings that have been left vacant for some time—or ponds that are causing harm. It is useful to have those comments on the record. The fact that the term “environmental wellbeing” is seen as covering impacts on human health and social wellbeing is helpful to us in moving forward.

As I have said, my amendments were intended to be probing and, as far as what can be done at stage 3 is concerned, I think that I have received the exact result that I was after. I welcome the minister’s comments, and I will not move my amendments in the group.

Rob Gibson (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP): When I looked on Google for definitions of the word “environment”, I found two related ones:

“the surroundings or conditions in which a person, animal, or plant lives or operates”

and

“the natural world, as a whole or in a particular geographical area, especially as affected by human activity”.

It is therefore entirely possible for the term “environmental” to encapsulate human communities and individuals. As far as I can see, “environmental wellbeing” as proposed by the minister fits that bill; after all, environmental harm can include harm to all of those mentioned in the definitions to which I referred. Given that the social aspect is included in the term “environmental”, there is no need to delineate it, as has been argued.

Landlords across Scotland behave in ways that advantage or disadvantage the environment and communities, and communities deserve the right to access parcels of land in order to give their future a fair chance. The use of the term “environmental” in this sense provides a circular context in which the social aspect includes us and the land, which I find very satisfactory. However, although I am glad to hear that the minister accepts that approach, I wonder whether the courts will accept that definition of “environmental”. We await an answer to that question once the bill, if it is passed, is tested in the courts, as it will be.

Alex Fergusson: Our stated public position on the right to buy has always been that we would not support such a concept in the absence of a willing seller. However, as a result of a combination of constituency experience and evidence to the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee, we accept that there are situations where in extremis such a right would be merited. I hope that that shift in position is recognised for what it is.

However, I also have great sympathy with the Law Society’s view that an urban/rural split would have been welcome in relation to section 48. We would have supported the measure had it applied only to wholly abandoned or neglected land; I believe that such a definition would have been clear in law and would have been seen as a black and white issue in the event of the bill coming into force.
I commend the minister for her efforts to secure agreement from the members of the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee, but I am sorry to say that we cannot support the measure, for the simple reason that we believe that her expanded definition of eligible land does not make things black and white.

Michael Russell: The measure lies at the heart of the community right to buy part of the bill. It is about public benefit, not just private ownership and, as Sarah Boyack knows, I have the greatest sympathy with her approach. That sympathy is almost unanimous across the committee, although clearly not entirely, given what Alex Fergusson said. There was a view that the measure as originally drafted was not adequate to meet the tests that would—and indeed will—be laid on it by the courts.

The issue of abandoned and neglected land goes to the heart of what we are trying to change in Scotland, and it may certainly bridge the rural and the urban. There are many places where abandoned and neglected buildings in cities and towns would be ripe for community ownership and being properly used by communities, just as abandoned and neglected areas of land throughout rural Scotland need to be used productively. How land is used as a common asset should be the issue that drives us forward. That is about opportunity and aspiration.

It has been difficult to find the right way to define the issue. It should be easy to define sustainable development legally. The term has been used in legal judgments, yet there is a reluctance to believe that it has a meaning and a strength that could carry it forward in every court case, particularly in issues of European competence.

Something had to be found, and I commend the minister for the work that she and her officials have done to try to find a proper meaning. The issues of environmental wellbeing and environmental harm at least start us on the road of placing in legislation, as well as in legal and public understanding, the fact that land can be left in a bad condition under private and public ownership—this is not just about private ownership—and dealing with how communities can be empowered to move forward.

I am glad that the minister has shown herself to be flexible, and I am grateful to Sarah Boyack for acknowledging that. Now we must see the provisions tested in the aspirations of communities. If the bill withstands those tests as a result of the amendments, we will have done a good thing for communities. If it does not withstand those tests, we must return to the issue to strengthen the opportunity for Scotland’s communities to use the asset that is all around them but to which they sometimes cannot even get close.

Aileen McLeod: I am very conscious of the time, so I will keep my response as short as I can.

I appreciate the comments from across the chamber. I firmly believe that amendments 67 and 86 are an important step in the right direction for increasing community ownership, and I ask all members to support them.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Many thanks—that was brief.

The question is, that amendment 66 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

Amendment 159 not agreed to.

Amendments 69 to 78 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 17 is on application for consent under part 3A of 2003 act—identification of owner of land. Amendment 160, in the name of Sarah Boyack, is grouped with amendments 162, 163 and 166. If amendment 160 is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 161, which was debated in group 15.

Sarah Boyack: Under the provisions in part 3, ministers must refuse consent unless they are satisfied that the owner of the land is accurately identified in the application. When we discussed the matter with Community Land Scotland, concern was highlighted that that sets a high bar for community bodies, given the complex process of determining ownership.

At stage 2, I lodged amendments that would give ministers flexibility when a community body could demonstrate that it had exercised all reasonable diligence in seeking to identify the owner. I listened carefully to the minister’s concerns that to allow a sale without an identified owner would deny that owner the right to respond to the application. I understand that the Scottish Government would prefer to complete the land register to make it easier for owners to be identified, but I am conscious that that is a long-term ambition, so my amendment 160 seeks to return to the subject.

In light of the minister’s comments at stage 2, amendment 160 focuses on the application stage rather than on ministerial consent. It would allow a community body in applying for consent to either specify the owner or provide details of the steps that it had taken to identify the owner. When an owner cannot be identified, the community body could ask ministers to undertake the task on its behalf.

Amendments 162 and 163 are consequential and reflect the change made by amendment 161 in relation to the requirement for a community body to send a copy of the application to the owner and for ministers to invite comments from the owner.

Amendment 166, which is also consequential, returns to the criteria for consent in relation to the identification of the owner. When the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee was in Orkney at the weekend, a member of the public raised the problem of identifying the owner of land, so it is a real issue for people. Until we have a complete register, there will be cases in which it is difficult to identify the owner. My amendments aim to address that problem, and I hope that they will be supported.

I move amendment 160.

Aileen McLeod: I will keep this short. I firmly believe that amendment 160 should be withdrawn. It is the responsibility of the part 3A community body that wishes to purchase the land to take steps to identify the correct landowner. Community bodies can be reassured that guidance will be provided, suggesting steps that the community bodies should take, if appropriate, when identifying the owner of the land.
Amendment 160 does not provide that there will be prescribed steps that the part 3A community body must take to trace the landowner. Without minimum requirements, it could place a considerable burden on ministers to take action to identify landowners on behalf of part 3A community bodies. I understand and appreciate the need to ensure that there is transparency, and we are committed to improving the transparency of land ownership in Scotland by working towards a target to complete the land register for the whole of Scotland within 10 years, with registration of all public sector land within five years. I therefore urge Sarah Boyack to withdraw amendment 160, and ask her not to move amendments 162, 163 and 166.

Sarah Boyack: Ten years is a long time if we want to get going with opening up opportunities. There are still places in Scotland where ownership is not clear, where it is hidden and where people avoid saying who owns land or property. The issue is important and I press my amendment.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 160 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

Amendment 164 moved—[Alex Fergusson]—and agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 18 is on power to prescribe how proposal for land or previous attempts to buy must be demonstrated. Amendment 165, in the name of Claudia Beamish, is grouped with amendment 167.

I can advise the Parliament that we have now caught up with our time and would not wish to curtail debate.

Claudia Beamish: Good news for all, no doubt.

Amendment 165 concerns the new section 97G and deals with the process of applying to exercise the right to buy land under part 3A of the 2003 act. Subsection (10)(d) of section 97G requires ministers to invite views from the landowner, creditors and others about any proposals that the owner has for the land. My amendment seeks to relieve concerns that, in order to avoid a community right to buy, an owner could create spurious proposals for the development of land.

Amendment 165 would give ministers the option of prescribing what would constitute a proposal for land, what evidence would need to be provided to demonstrate that a proposal exists and other information that ministers deem appropriate. Such an approach would give guidance to owners and clarity to communities.

I move amendment 165.

Sarah Boyack: Amendment 167 concerns new section 97H, which sets out the matters in relation to which ministers must be satisfied before consenting to a part 3A community right to buy. Subsection 1(j) of that section requires ministers to be satisfied that the community body has tried and failed to buy the land by means other than a right to buy. That is in recognition of the policy intention that was indicated by the minister at stage 2 that the part 3A right to buy should be used only as a last resort.

Amendment 167 seeks to provide clarity to community bodies to help them to understand what would constitute trying and failing to buy the land. They would be considered to have satisfied the requirement if they provided ministers with evidence in a prescribed form to demonstrate that they had taken certain actions to try to buy the land.

Alex Fergusson: Again, I am afraid that we cannot support the amendments on the grounds that we are concerned that they would give even more powers to ministers through conferring on them an ability that is overly prescriptive to decree what constitutes an effort to buy or sell land, or indeed to decree what constitutes a proposal for the land in question. If there are genuine concerns about those issues, it is not Scottish ministers who should determine them but some other organisation.

Aileen McLeod: With regard to amendments 165 and 167, I do not consider it necessary or desirable to provide in regulations what information a landowner should provide in connection with any proposals that he may have for the land, or what steps a community body should take or what evidence it should provide when it tries to buy the land. Prescribed actions may not be relevant and prescribed steps may not be possible in all circumstances. They could cause difficulties to community bodies or landowners if they are unable to comply with certain prescribed requirements.

A community body would be expected to provide all information and evidence that it considers is necessary, appropriate or relevant to attempts that it made to buy the land. It would then be for ministers to be satisfied that the community body had provided sufficient information to demonstrate that it had tried and failed to buy the land. Similarly, a landowner would be expected to provide all information and evidence that they consider is necessary, appropriate or relevant in relation to proposals that they have for the land.

For those reasons, I urge Claudia Beamish to withdraw amendment 165 and Sarah Boyack not to move amendment 167.

Claudia Beamish: I am not convinced by the minister’s arguments in this particular case. I press amendment 165.

Amendment 167 disagreed to.

Amendments 88 to 94 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

After section 48

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 19 is on mediation in relation to rights under parts 2, 3 and 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003. Amendment 95, in the name of the Minister for Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform, is grouped with amendment 143.
Aileen McLeod: Amendment 95 is introduced following the lodging of an amendment by Graeme Dey at stage 2, which was agreed to. The amendment inserted provisions relating to ministers’ facilitation of mediation in relation to parts 2, 3 and new part 3A of the 2003 act.

Amendment 95 replaces those provisions with new mediation provisions that achieve the same policy intention. The new powers are for ministers, upon a request by certain persons—including owners of land and community bodies—to take such steps as they consider appropriate for the purposes of arranging, or facilitating the arrangement of, mediation in relation to a proposed registration of an interest in land under part 2 or exercise of the right to buy under parts 2, 3 and new 3A.

The new provisions clarify that the power of ministers to facilitate mediation includes the power to appoint a mediator and to make payments to mediators either for payment of services or for reimbursement of expenses.

Amendment 143 removes paragraph 2(5)(aa) of schedule 4 to the bill, which amendment 95 replaces.

I move amendment 95.

Claudia Beamish: I support amendment 95 and stress the importance from my party’s perspective of the mediation and payment arrangements.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I just want to check whether I saw Graeme Dey indicating that he wished to contribute.

Graeme Dey (Angus South) (SNP): No.

Aileen McLeod: I thank Graeme Dey for lodging amendments on mediation at stage 2. The amendments ensure that mediation can be used by all parties at all relevant steps in the right-to-buy process. I ask that members support the amendments. I also thank Claudia Beamish for the support that she expressed.

Amendment 95 agreed to.

Section 56—Agreement to asset transfer request

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 20 is on asset transfer requests—appeals, reviews and prohibition on disposal of land. Amendment 96, in the name of the Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment, is grouped with amendments 97 to 99, 13 to 15, 100, 16, 172, 17, 18 and 20.

Marco Biagi: It is good to be back.

The Government amendments in group 20 fall into four sets. Amendments 96 and 100 provide for a community transfer body to appeal to the Scottish ministers if it has been unable to conclude a contract with the relevant authority within a specified period after an asset transfer request has been agreed. At stage 2 the committee agreed to an amendment from Cameron Buchanan, which I also supported, to introduce an appeal in such circumstances. These amendments seek to implement that intention more effectively. Rather than relying on the existing appeal process, which would return the process to an earlier stage, they set out a new appeal specifically for that purpose.

Amendments 97 to 99 will ensure that a relevant authority cannot sell or lease a property to someone else while an asset transfer request is in progress.

Amendment 16 will ensure that a community transfer body cannot make an offer in relation to an asset transfer request and at the same time appeal or seek a review in relation to a decision about a request.

Amendments 13 to 15, 17, 18 and 20 are technical amendments that clarify references to certain sections where they are applied and modified by other sections.

Amendment 172, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, would mean that, if a relevant authority declines to consider a repeated request, as it is entitled to do under section 61, that request would become subject to appeal or review. That would make a nonsense of the whole section, which is important in order to give relevant authorities the scope to decline repeated or vexatious requests in limited circumstances without the risk of further appeal. I ask Cameron Buchanan not to move amendment 172.

I move amendment 96.

Cameron Buchanan: I agree with all the other amendments in the group.

Amendment 172 seeks to remove the word “not” from section 61(3) so that a refusal of an asset transfer request due to there having been a similar previous request can be reviewed or appealed. Without a right of appeal or review, community transfer bodies could be excluded from participation unfairly.

I make it clear that I am not making any assumptions—I am interested only in ensuring that communities are protected from unfair exclusion. The ability to instantly refuse participation should therefore not be used unless it is very clear that it is a repeated request; a right of appeal or review will ensure that the relevant authorities adhere to that.

On that basis, we also consider that amendments 17 and 18 raise concerns because they extend the Government’s position that the refusal of an asset transfer request due to there having been a similar previous request may not be appealed or reviewed. We think that a community transfer body should have a right of appeal under section 58 or a review under section 59 as that would ensure fair participation without allowing repeated challenges to an authority’s decision.

Malcolm Chisholm: I welcome the amendments. As the minister knows, there is great interest in my constituency in the transfer of land. However, I still cannot see any reference to ALEOs in the bill, so perhaps the minister can confirm that all the provisions will apply to ALEOs as well as to local authorities.

Notwithstanding the progress that has been made and the right of appeal, there is concern that amendment 99 suggests that, if the land has been advertised as being for sale before the application has been made, it can still be disposed of. Therefore, I have some concerns about that amendment, although I might not have totally understood it. However, in general, I welcome the amendments in the group.

Marco Biagi: To respond to Cameron Buchanan’s point, which is the crux of the matter, it is important that there is an appeals process, but any transfer request that has been made in the past two years could have been subject to that process the first time round. The amendments are intended to prevent a body that has made an asset transfer request, been refused, appealed and been refused on appeal from coming back and triggering the appeals process for a second time. If a request has been through the process already, it is important to have a cooling-off period of two years that enables persistent and repeated requests that might already have been through the appeals process to be declined. I hope that Cameron Buchanan will not move his amendment.

and, more importantly, their potential for amendments in terms of how they could operate has a number of concerns about those amendments. However, the Scottish Government's support for greater supporter involvement: we are very supportive of the Government's support for greater supporter involvement in football clubs. They should have a greater role in the life of their club.

is why the Scottish Government believes that is at the centre of each club’s decision making, so it is important that long-term sustainability is not the disproportionate impact if a club has to be wound up, so it is important that long-term sustainability is at the centre of each club’s decision making. That in itself is not unusual for a huge part in the lives of thousands of people across every community in Scotland and it is good to have this debate.

Scottish football has experienced more than its fair share of challenges, with many high-profile clubs changing owners and experiencing financial difficulties. That in itself is not unusual for a commercial organisation. However, given that so many clubs are firmly embedded in their local community and given the emotional investment that supporters have in their clubs, there can be a disproportionate impact if a club has to be wound up, so it is important that long-term sustainability is at the centre of each club’s decision making. That is why the Scottish Government believes that supporters should have a greater role in the life of their club.

The amendments made to the bill at stage 2 would see significant changes to how clubs would be required to operate in Scotland. I have set out the Government’s support for greater supporter involvement: we are very supportive of the sentiment behind Alison Johnstone’s stage 2 amendments. However, the Scottish Government has a number of concerns about those amendments in terms of how they could operate and, more importantly, their potential for... unintended consequences. I am also concerned that there has not been an extensive consultation on the proposals to capture the full range of views on the issue.

Therefore, I have been in active discussions with all Opposition spokespersons on the issue to explain my reservations and concerns but also—and more importantly—to explore how best we can move forward. I place on record my thanks to them, particularly Alison Johnstone, who lodged the amendments at stage 2.

Although I believe that there is broad agreement here that we need to do more, it would be wrong to claim that we have the answer without first consulting fully. That is why I intend to launch a comprehensive consultation on this issue and why I shared a draft of the consultation document with Opposition spokespersons last week, lodged a copy in the Scottish Parliament information centre yesterday, and brought the consultation to the attention of all members through the office of the Minister for Parliamentary Business. I thank Opposition spokespersons for their time in helping me formulate the draft consultation, as well as the supporters organisations that my officials contacted to discuss the matter with.

I trust that the draft consultation demonstrates that the Government is open to the principle of bringing forward regulations that will protect supporters’ rights. I hope that sharing an early draft of the consultation has helped members to understand the context of the Scottish Government amendments, which will provide for a framework for the introduction of the full range of options that are being consulted on—namely, a right to buy, a right to bid, a right to govern or a right to be involved.

Alison Johnstone has lodged a number of amendments to the Government amendments. In summary, although it might be felt that they are reasonable for the specific system that we might create through the power, I believe that they preclude the consultation, which is why we will not support them. However, I can confirm that the specific provisions in Alison Johnstone’s amendments have influenced the draft consultation. As I referred to, we will seek views on those areas to inform our regulations. I genuinely believe that it is important to have the consultation first before determining the specifics of the regulations. On that basis, I urge Alison Johnstone not to move her amendments.

As I hope members will be aware, our approach to developing the amendments and the consultation has been guided by helpful cross-party engagement and our aim not to pre-empt the consultation. The Parliament has my commitment that I intend to continue to work with all members who might be interested in the issue. I look to their support in ensuring that, whatever legislative solution is developed, it protects the rights of fans, is workable and is not detrimental to Scottish football.

I move amendment 174.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Alison Johnstone to move amendment 174A and to speak to all the amendments in the group.

Alison Johnstone (Lothian) (Green): The bill that Parliament is considering is designed to give power to communities across Scotland. It is not the first word on that and nor will it be the final word, but it is an important step on the journey.

As members will know, since the proposals for the bill were published, I have sought to have football fans recognised as important communities and to have football clubs recognised as important community assets. I am therefore pleased to have persuaded the Scottish Government to include in its amendments the powers to bring in a fans’ right to buy their clubs. In a spirit of consensus, I will support those amendments today, even though they will also delete my more detailed right-to-buy proposals that the Local Government and Regeneration Committee approved unanimously at stage 2.

We know that a fans’ right to buy is popular. It was backed by more than 80 per cent of the Scottish fans and members of Scottish organisations who responded to our consultation earlier this year, and more than 75 per cent of the Scottish public backed the idea when we polled last year. Of course, some owners are against it, just as some landowners oppose land reform, but other owners want a flexible and sustainable exit strategy, and the measures give them the reassurance that they need that their clubs will not fall into the hands of irresponsible owners in future.

I support the Scottish ministers’ proposal to conduct a further round of consultation on the issue, although I should say that the draft text of the consultation as circulated by ministers could be paraphrased as, “Here’s a terrible idea, don’t you think?” I urge ministers to produce a more neutral and informative final document.

With regard to the four amendments that I have lodged today, I apologise to Parliament that they had to be lodged in extra time—sorry—but the timing of the Government’s amendments left me no choice. They may seem modest refinements of the ministers’ proposals, but they cover four important issues that the Scottish Government’s approach does not resolve.

My amendments 174B and 176A would provide important protections for fans and owners. Amendment 174B would ensure that any fans group wishing to exercise a right to buy would have to be open to all supporters, affordable and democratic. Such protections can likely be introduced in regulations, but my amendment would put the protection in the bill. Amendment 176A would explicitly require any fans’ right to buy to be offset by an owners’ right of appeal. That is an important safeguard for owners without which a right to buy would be open to challenge under the European convention on human rights. Again, that protection for current owners can be brought in under regulations, but in my view it is important enough to be in the bill.

Amendment 174A concerns funding for fan buyouts. There is no provision in the Scottish Government’s amendments that would permit grants or loans to support buyouts. We know from trusts across the country, large and small, that that is frequently the hurdle to a fan buyout, just as it has been with land reform. The Foundation of Hearts fan bid would have gone nowhere without a loan from Ann Budge. Amendment 174A would allow ministers to play the same role, if they were satisfied that there was a good business model and a public interest in supporting it. A few tens of thousands of pounds might make the difference between a wee club surviving and folding—with all the economic and social impacts that that has on a community.

Amendment 174C sets a timescale for making regulations. I would be grateful if the minister could say when he will decide whether he plans to use the powers that Parliament is likely to give the Government today. This is not a request to prejudge the consultation. Ministers will be free at the end of the process to retain what is in my view a failing status quo, but those who fill in the consultation over the summer should know when they can expect to hear back from the Government. With a clear commitment of that sort from the minister, I will not move amendment 174C.

I urge members to vote for all the substantive amendments on this issue, both those in my name and those in the name of the minister.

I move amendment 174A.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I invite Nigel Don, on behalf of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee, to speak to amendment 180 and other amendments in the group.

Nigel Don (Angus North and Mearns) (SNP): At its meeting of 9 June, the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee considered the bill as amended at stage 2. It agreed to call on the Scottish Government to amend the bill at stage 3 in order to ensure that the powers in sections 62E, 62F, 62I, 62K and 62P were fully cast as powers to make subordinate legislation subject to the negative procedure and to clarify, by defining the terms “prescribe” and “prescribed” or by such other means as it considered appropriate, whom the powers were conferred upon and what form the subordinate legislation made in their exercise was intended to take.

In the event that the Government’s stage 3 amendments did not cover that recommendation, the committee authorised the deputy convener and me to lodge suitable amendments. As the Government did not lodge such amendments, I have, on behalf of the committee, lodged amendments 180, 182, 186, 189 and 195 in order to give effect to the committee’s recommendations.

I appreciate that the Scottish Government has lodged amendments that remove the sections to which my amendments relate and that it has provided for a new approach to the issue of supporter ownership and supporter involvement in football clubs. I further appreciate from what we have heard so far that it seems likely that that new approach will prevail and that, therefore, the issue to which the amendments respond will no longer be relevant. With that in mind, I should say that I do not expect to move the amendments when I am invited to do so.

Nonetheless, it is the role of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee to provide a check on the delegated powers in the bill as amended at stage 2, not to pre-suppose what might happen at stage 3. It is with that principle in mind that the committee agreed to lodge the amendments, and it is with that principle in mind that we will continue to apply close scrutiny to delegated powers in bills as amended, ensuring that those powers are appropriately drawn, justified and subject to sufficient levels of scrutiny.

Ken Macintosh: One of the most encouraging developments at stage 2 was the opportunity that Alison Johnstone spotted to introduce her proposals on the right of football supporters to buy their local club. That has been Labour Party policy for many years—

Members: Ah!

Ken Macintosh: Oh, yes. I was absolutely delighted that the committee unanimously supported—[Interruption.]

The Minister for Transport and Islands (Derek Mackay): They are catching up.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Order.

Ken Macintosh: I think it was also Scottish National Party policy.
I was absolutely delighted that the committee unanimously supported the stage 2 amendments on this matter, despite the minister’s obvious misgivings about them. Since that stage, the Government has made it clear that, although it accepted the principle of the right to buy, it wished to go down a different route and to consult first with the football community before publishing secondary legislation.

It has only been with some reluctance, and solely in the interests of achieving consensual cross-party agreement, that my Labour colleagues and I, along with the Greens and the other parties, have accepted the position, but we will absolutely be supporting the Government’s amendments in this group.

The Government amendments were lodged quite late, however, hence the subsequent amendments from Alison Johnstone. I do not believe that there is anything in the four amendments that Alison Johnstone has lodged that anyone could object to—certainly not insisting on a right of appeal for owners, nor, I suggest, ensuring that supporters organisations should be open and democratic.

On the matter of timing, I think that we are all looking for some indication from the minister as to when the replacement regulations will be made. On funding, the proposed measures are not a request for public money to support professional football. We would not support such a request. They are simply asking for the power for ministers to award grants—in fact, it is so that they may consult on the power to award grants—just as they might often exercise the power to award small grants to any local organisation so as to improve its capacity to make a difference in its community.

We urge ministers and all members to vote for all the amendments in this group.

Liz Smith (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con): I thank the Minister for Sport, Health Improvement and Mental Health, Jamie Hepburn, and Alison Johnstone for their helpful engagement before today’s stage 3 on what is a complex part of the bill.

I think that the vast majority of people recognise Alison Johnstone’s good intentions and her attempts to provide a community-based approach to football. In particular, her attempt to provide football fans with transparent, democratic and accountable processes to underpin the organisation of football in this country are laudable, as is the attempt to ensure that there is much better communication between football supporters and club management.

Let us be honest: football has not been in a good place in recent years, with many supporters being disillusioned and angry about the complete disconnect in many clubs between supporters, players and management in its various guises. That is not good for the game, so it is absolutely right to address the concerns.

That said, there are considerable complexities in part 5B of the bill, several of them in a legal context, and the Scottish Conservatives’ view is that Alison Johnstone’s amendments 174A, 174B, 174C and 176A could have some unintended consequences that could have a serious effect on the long-term sustainability of some clubs. Specifically, there remain some technical difficulties when it comes to defining “football supporters” and “football clubs”, and the latter clearly has legal implications, mainly because it is difficult to define specific assets and liabilities.

The Scottish Government’s deliberations over the right to influence, to govern and to bid and the right to buy make clear the complexities and the need for further consultation on the likely legal implications. They also make clear the concerns about finance, particularly at a time of considerable volatility within financial markets. The Morrow working group was specific in advising that it is not the Scottish Government’s responsibility to provide financial support, and clubs are rightly questioning where they might turn to for that support in future.

It is fair to say that few supporters want control over the day-to-day running of their club. What supporters want is better communication, greater transparency and more accountability when it comes to decision making, but that has to be in a context where we are 100 per cent sure of the legal implications. That is why we will support the Scottish Government’s amendments in the group and reject those that have been lodged by Alison Johnstone.

Jamie Hepburn: I thank Nigel Don for his amendments and his remarks. I think that he covered this, but he will appreciate why the Government did not lodge the amendments that his committee called for. We have taken a different approach.

I hope that I can provide Alison Johnstone with a degree of reassurance. The Government is committed to bringing forward legislation, using regulations, on this important issue. However, it is important that we consult fully on the issue before we do that. As Liz Smith rightly said, there has been talk about unintended consequences, and we want to make sure that there are none. That is why we want to have a full consultation.

As I said earlier, I have provided the draft consultation document to all members. It was issued to the Opposition spokespersons last week. I encourage all members to feed in their views before it is launched imminently. We want to undertake the exercise as soon as possible, but there is still time for members to feed into the process.

In that regard, I say to Alison Johnstone that it is certainly not the Government’s intention to suggest that we are against the principles in the consultation or to guide the outcome. If she has specific concerns, I remain happy to speak to her about the issue.

I do not object in any way to the broad thrust of the principles of Alison Johnstone’s amendments. I just genuinely believe that it is important that we have a full consultation first, before we determine the specifics of any mechanism that we might bring forward. In that regard, notwithstanding the concerns that have been expressed about the consultation, there are a number of questions that relate directly to Alison Johnstone’s amendments. Question 5 is about the definition of “assets” in the context of a football club; question 6 is about how to define “football supporters” and “supporter groups”; question 8 is about raising the necessary funds; and question 10 asks for views on rights of appeal. We will therefore take further evidence on the specifics of the amendments before determining the most appropriate way forward.

I appreciate the calls for a timeline for using the amendments’ proposed powers, but it is important that we take the time necessary to ensure that any regulations are effective and do not have unintended consequences. It is important that we do not come up with a substandard mechanism, so the process might take a little time.

I understand the desire for the Scottish Government to be clear on its use of the powers. We have set out our intention to consult and we are serious, as I said at the outset, about our use of the powers, but it is not clear yet how we will use them. The consultation will address that, and options that arise from the consultation might take longer than others to act on. However, depending on the complexity of the option identified through the consultation, we would intend to bring forward the regulations in two or three years’ time—

Alison Johnstone: Will the minister give way?

Jamie Hepburn: Of course.

Alison Johnstone: I whole-heartedly appreciate the minister’s comments, particularly on the need to ensure that the consultation is thorough and appropriate. He said that that may take a little time, but could he be a little more specific?

Jamie Hepburn: I am sorry, but the member intervened at the wrong time because I was literally just saying that our intention is that it will take two to three years, depending on the complexity of the regulations that we bring forward. We want to bring them forward as quickly as possible, but we intend to operate on that broad timescale. On that basis, I hope that members can support our approach, which is one that we think is open and participative, and which will allow us—we hope—the best-informed regulations at the end of the day.

I thank Alison Johnstone for raising the issue and working with me on it. I urge members to support our amendments.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I ask Alison Johnstone to wind up on amendment 174A and to indicate whether she intends to press or withdraw it.

Alison Johnstone: This has been a useful debate. I thank in particular Ken Macintosh and Tavish Scott for their support throughout the process. I also welcome the minister’s decision to accept that powers to introduce a fans’ right to buy should go into the bill.

There has been wide-ranging support for the principle. Liz Smith might be interested to know that even David Cameron noted, in response to a colleague at Westminster, that football clubs do sometimes find themselves in financial difficulty and that fan ownership would be a very positive move. There is growing support for the principle.

Fan ownership is a landmark proposal for Scottish football, which has seen club after club fall into administration or even disappear altogether. Fan ownership will not be for every club; we are talking about a mixed model, with potential flexibility. [Interruption.]

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Order, please. There are members in the chamber who wish to hear this speech.

Alison Johnstone: However, during our consultation we were told that even those fans who are happy with how their clubs are run now want to know that the right to fan ownership is there for the future, just in case.

The existing culture of football, where a small group of rich men can simply exclude all fans from decisions affecting their clubs, has to end. For too long, fans have stood on the touchline, or perhaps have even been sent to the stands, while their club is sent to the wall. It is also not enough for fans to be brought in just to pick up the pieces after a Romanov or similar. Football is our national game, and football supporters, whether they want to buy their clubs or not, are its best custodians. It is time to put the fans first.

I therefore encourage all members to vote for all amendments in this group—both those in my name and those in the name of the minister—and I am therefore pressing amendment 174A.
The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 174A be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

Section 68—Meaning of “allotment”

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 22 is on size of, and requests for particular sizes of, allotments et cetera. Amendment 101, in the name of the Minister for Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform, is grouped with amendments 102, 103, 105, 107, 111, 112 and 122.

Aileen McLeod: The amendments in group 22 will amend the provisions on the size of an allotment. That is of particular importance to a number of stakeholders and has been debated at length. It might therefore be helpful if, before addressing each amendment in the group, I briefly set the context.

People in Scotland are able to grow their own food in a number of ways, including community growing places and allotments. It is important to distinguish carefully between the two. The most important distinction lies in the scale of operation, with allotments generally being of considerably greater size than community plots. The approach in the bill, as it will be amended, will reflect that consideration. Although there will be a large variety of sizes for allotments—reflecting, quite properly, the different wishes of allotment holders and different practical considerations in each locality—the bill’s objective is that allotments should be of about 250m² unless another size is agreed, on a case-by-case basis, between local authorities and individuals who are requesting allotments.

Amendment 105 provides that when a person requests to lease an allotment, if the size of the allotment that is being sought is smaller than 250m², they must specify that smaller size in the request. Amendment 107 will entitle a person to wait for an allotment of approximately 250m² until one of that size is offered. It also provides local authorities with the flexibility to provide different sizes of allotments to meet the differing needs and wishes of their residents.

Amendment 102 will delete amendments on the size of allotments that were agreed to at stage 2, and amendment 101 is a drafting change that is consequential on amendment 102.

Amendment 103 will remove the requirement for Scottish ministers to make regulations on the size or sizes of allotments, which is unnecessary given the amendments that are being brought forward on the size of allotments. I am conscious that the provisions may appear to be complex, and for that reason we will pay particular attention to the guidance that is to be developed in that area. We look forward to working closely with stakeholders.

Amendments 111 and 112 will ensure that when ministers decide whether to allow local authorities to dispose of an allotment site or to renounce its lease, they must be satisfied not only that tenants will be offered new allotments, but that they will be of the same or similar size. Amendment 122 will allow Scottish ministers to consent to a local authority’s resuming an allotment site, or part of that site, if the local authority has offered an affected tenant an allotment of the same or similar area.

The debate on allotment size has been long and, at times, difficult, so I am delighted that we have reached consensus with stakeholders on the way forward. I pay tribute to the collaborative work in recent weeks between the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society, local authorities and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to achieve provisions that go as far as we can to meet the needs of all. In the light of the consensus that is now secured on the amendments, I urge members to support them.

I move amendment 101.

Ken Macintosh: It is fair to say that it has taken some time and much effort from the minister, members of the committee, and especially the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society to reach today’s consensual position, so we will support the Government amendments in group 22.

However, I would welcome clarification on two points. We would have preferred to keep the definition of the plot size of an allotment in the bill—section 70 still contains a reference to 250m². Will the minister confirm that despite the removal of previous amendments, it is still the Scottish Government’s intention that the default size for allotments in the future will be 250m², unless someone wants a smaller plot?

The introduction of the trigger point for waiting lists is to be deferred for three years to give local authorities time to gear up and plan for increasing provision. Will the minister confirm that people who are already on a local authority waiting list will have the length of time that they have already waited taken into account? Will she also confirm that it will not be acceptable for local authorities simply to sit around and do nothing about waiting lists for three years, and that they will be expected to start preparing the ground for increased provision from the day of enactment?

Cameron Buchanan: I agree with amendments 101 to 103, 105 and 107.

Amendments 111, 112 and 122 would instruct that Scottish Ministers may not consent to change of use of an allotment site unless each tenant is offered a nearby allotment of the same or similar size.

I understand the motivation to protect allotment holders, but I am concerned that the amendments would overly restrict local autonomy and be to the detriment of aspiring allotment holders in the long term. If power is truly to be devolved from the centre, local authorities should be able to decide whether changing the use of an allotment site is in the local interest, subject to protections for allotment holders. The existing provision that tenants should be offered another nearby allotment offers protection, while retaining the ability for local authorities to offer replacement allotments where they see fit.

I rather fear that amendments 111, 112 and 122 would push the balance too far against autonomy, so that local authorities would find it very difficult to change the use of an allotment site, even if they considered it to be in the local interest. Furthermore, the amendments may be detrimental to allotment holders in the long term, because local authorities may be more reluctant to create new allotment sites in the knowledge that they might find it very difficult to change their use in the future. That unfortunate consequence would result in fewer allotment sites being created in the first place, and longer waiting lists for aspiring allotment holders.
The Deputy Presiding Officer: I invite the minister to wind up.

Aileen McLeod: I will deal with some of Ken Macintosh’s points. If a person requests a particular size of allotment that is smaller than 250m² and is offered an allotment of that size, then the request will be treated as having been agreed, and the person’s name will be removed from the waiting list. If that person is offered and accepts an alternative size, then the request is agreed, and the person will be taken off the waiting list. However, if that person does not take up the offer of the alternative size of plot, the request is not agreed and the person will be entitled to remain on the waiting list until the particular size that they have requested is offered.

If a person wants an allotment of 250m² and has not requested a smaller size, the request is treated as having been agreed when an allotment of about 250m² is offered, and the person will be removed from the waiting list.

If a person has not requested an allotment smaller than 250m², and the person is offered and accepts an allotment other than one of about 250m², then the request is agreed, and the person will be taken off the waiting list. However, should such a person be offered an allotment that is not about 250m², and does not take up the offer, the request is not agreed to and the person will remain on the waiting list.

I hope that that gives Ken Macintosh the clarification that he was looking for.

Amendment 101 agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 23 is on sale of allotment produce. Amendment 200, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendments 202, 203 and 213.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendments 200, 203 and 213 would make it clear that surplus produce from allotments may be sold to make a profit. It is unclear why allotment users should be prevented from doing so. There would be an issue if large retailers were taking up allotments to supply their stores or local supermarkets, but I do not think that that is what we are talking about. Small sales for relatively small amounts of money are not a cog in the corporate supply chain; rather, they are a chance for waste to be avoided and for compensation for hard work to be obtained where it is deserved.

We are talking about members of the public who want to enjoy the use of an allotment space and cultivate vegetables, fruit, herbs or flowers. If they happen to have excess produce and want to sell it, who are we to forbid that?

In any case, how could we define “profit”? Allotment users can take a certain pride in selling the produce that they have worked hard to cultivate. Any “profit” gained from such sales are not intended for a company’s balance sheet; rather, they are a small reward for hours of work put in that have resulted in surplus produce.

Furthermore, a provision that allows sale of surplus produce “other than with a view to making a profit” brings questions of definition and enforceability. How are the police meant to check whether the proceeds of each allotment sale are not for profit?

I lodged amendment 202 to clarify that allotment land is not to be considered agricultural solely because someone makes a profit from selling surplus produce, in order to alleviate potential concerns in that area.

I move amendment 200.

Ken Macintosh: I suggest that Cameron Buchanan might have misunderstood what the committee discussed and agreed at stage 2. As it stands, the bill disqualifies commercial exploitation of allotments but it does not disallow small-scale remuneration if people have an extra bag of potatoes or if they want to cover the costs of their heating. His amendments are entirely unnecessary and miss the point of what the committee has already agreed.

Aileen McLeod: Amendments 200, 202, 203 and 213 would allow surplus produce from allotments to be sold for profit. Additionally, they would remove local authorities’ ability to include provisions prohibiting the sale of surplus produce in regulations about allotments. That could prevent local authorities from taking account of local factors in determining how surplus produce from allotments in their areas may be sold.

The Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society has argued strongly that the purpose of an allotment is to support self-sufficiency in good food rather than being a means of providing allotment tenants with additional income. The society considers that any proceeds from the sale of produce should go back to the allotment association to be reinvested in the community of allotment holders.

I recognise Mr Buchanan’s desire to include allotment produce as part of the wider food economy, but that goes against the whole ethos of allotments, which is to ensure that a family is self-sufficient in good food. As such, I ask Mr Buchanan to withdraw amendment 200 and not move his other amendments in the group.

Cameron Buchanan: I intend to press amendment 200. There must be a definition of profit. I am not really talking about commercial profit but about people being prevented from selling their produce outside the allotment area, at a car boot sale or somewhere else. That should not be restricted.

Amendment 202 says that allotment land should be not considered as being used for agriculture solely because someone makes a profit from selling surplus produce. The point needs to be clarified.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 200 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 15, Against 103, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 202 disagreed to.

Section 69A—Regulations as to size of allotments
Amendment 103 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 70—Request to lease allotment
The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 24 is on minor amendments regarding allotments. Amendment 104, in the name of Minister for Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform, is grouped with amendments 106, 108 to 110, 113 to 121, 123 to 130, 132, 134 and 145.

Aileen McLeod: This is a group of minor amendments. Amendment 104 provides that a person may also make a request to sublease an allotment from a tenant of the authority in circumstances where the authority has leased the allotment site.

Amendments 106, 126, 129 and 130 are intended to ensure that the consultation requirements in relation to local authorities in part 7 are consistent with those applying elsewhere in the bill.

Amendment 108 adjusts the drafting and in particular introduces the words “continuous period” into the provision. That confirms the intention that a local authority is required to take reasonable steps to ensure that a person on the waiting list does not remain on the list for a continuous period of more than five years, rather than a cumulative period of five years, where the individual may come off and then go back on the waiting list for various reasons. We have worked closely with the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society, local authorities and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities in reviewing the provision, and it has been collectively agreed that this particular provision will be commenced so that it takes effect three years after the rest of part 7, in order to allow local authorities greater time to prepare for the provision.

Amendment 109 replaces section 72(3A), which currently requires local authorities, when taking reasonable steps to provide allotments, to have regard to the need to make them available reasonably close to the residence of persons on the waiting list. The requirement was introduced by Alex Rowley’s amendment at stage 2. Amendment 109 adjusts the drafting and in particular replaces the reference to “need” with “desirability”. That ensures that the spirit of the provision is maintained while the amendment provides local authorities with some flexibility in meeting the requirement.

Amendment 110 will provide that, if a local authority asks the tenant of an allotment site to grant a sublease of an unoccupied allotment on the allotment site to a person who has requested an allotment, the tenant must grant that sublease.

Subsection (3A) of section 77 was added to the bill at stage 2. It requires a local authority, when detailing how it intends to increase the provision of allotment sites and community growing areas of land in its area, to describe whether and how that will apply to communities that experience socioeconomic disadvantage. Amendments 113 and 114 are minor and technical amendments that are intended to ensure that the provision achieves the intended effect.

Following our commitment at stage 2 to consider requiring local authorities to publish a statement about fair rent in relation to allotments, amendment 115 will require local authorities to include in their annual allotments report details of the rent payable in respect of allotments in their area and details of how those rents are determined by reference to the requirement for local authority regulations to include a method of determining fair rent.

Section 82(1) permits a local authority to incur expenditure for the purpose of promoting allotments in its area and providing training by or on behalf of the local authority to tenants and potential tenants about the use of allotments. Subsection (2) was added to the bill at stage 2 and requires local authorities to take into account the desirability of exercising that power in relation to communities that experience socioeconomic disadvantage. Amendments 116 and 117 are technical amendments to subsection (2) and are designed to ensure that the provision achieves its intended effect.

During the stage 2 debate, it was mentioned that in some areas the use of school buildings and the operation of other community buildings have been transferred to arm’s-length external organisations or other bodies. We have looked into that situation and amendment 118 expands the provision to include not only premises that are maintained directly by the local authority but premises that are maintained and used in connection with services delegated by the local authority or that are maintained and whose use is managed by another person in accordance with arrangements between that person and the local authority.
I am confident that those descriptions cover the types of arrangements in place for schools and community buildings and that they will ensure that allotment associations can find suitable places to meet.

Amendments 119 to 123 make minor amendments to section 84.

Amendment 124 makes it clear that, where a local authority grants the lease of an allotment site and the tenant of an allotment subleases an allotment from the local authority’s tenant—such as an allotment association—the tenant of the allotment must not assign the lease of the allotment unless the local authority that granted the lease of the allotment site agrees to the assignation.

Amendment 125 is a minor drafting amendment to section 89.

Amendments 127 and 128 make minor amendments to section 90, which makes provision for compensation for deterioration in allotments caused by tenants.

Amendment 132 is a minor drafting change to achieve greater consistency with the language of the Equality Act 2010.

Amendments 134 and 145 are consequential amendments to ensure consistency between the provisions of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 and the provisions of the bill.

I move amendment 104.

Cameron Buchanan: Regarding amendments 106, 126, 129 and 130, could the minister confirm that the intention remains that the Scottish ministers allow each willing local authority to contribute to the relevant consultation?

Aileen McLeod: On the point that Cameron Buchanan raised, amendments 106, 126, 129 and 130 are minor amendments that ensure that the consultation requirements in relation to local authorities in part 7 of the bill are consistent with those that apply elsewhere in the bill.

Amendment 106 relates to the consultation that is carried out before regulations are made about the information that must be included in a request to lease an allotment.

Amendment 126 relates to the consultation requirements before making regulations on compensation for disturbance.

Amendment 129 relates to the consultation requirements before making regulations on compensation for deterioration of allotments.

Amendment 130 relates to the consultation requirements before making regulations in connection with the compensation that is payable to a tenant who suffers the loss of any crop as a result of an allotment being—

Cameron Buchanan: Will the member take an intervention?

Aileen McLeod: Yes.

Cameron Buchanan: My question was whether that applies to each local authority. The amendments do not specify how many local authorities have to be consulted. Does that mean that every local authority has to be consulted before a decision can be made?

Aileen McLeod: Each local authority will be consulted.

Amendment 104 agreed to.

Amendments 105 and 106 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Amendments 111 to 124 are all in the name of the Minister for Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform and have all been previously debated. Does any member object to a single question being put on them?

Members: Yes.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Members object, so I will put the question on each amendment individually. [Interruption.] Order, please.

Amendment 111 moved—[Aileen McLeod].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 111 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

Section 90—Compensation for deterioration of allotment
Amendments 127 to 129 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 91—Compensation for loss of crops
Amendment 130 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

After section 92

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 25 is on guidance. Amendment 131, in the name of the Minister for Environment, Climate Change and Land Reform, is grouped with amendment 22.

Aileen McLeod: Amendment 131 will insert a new section into part 7 of the bill. First, the new section will require local authorities to have regard to any guidance that is issued by the Scottish ministers on the carrying out of functions by local authorities under part 7 of the bill. Secondly, the new section will require the Scottish ministers, before issuing the guidance, to consult local authorities and any other persons who appear to them to have an interest.

Those measures will help to ensure continued good partnership working on allotments between ministers, local authorities and stakeholders. The guidance will aid the implementation of those sections of part 7 that may be technical in nature, which we know will be welcomed by the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society as well as by local authorities.

Section 95 of the bill currently requires that the Scottish ministers must publish any guidance that they issue in relation to part 2 or part 6 of the bill.

Requirements for public authorities to have regard to guidance that is issued by the Scottish ministers were added to parts 3, 5 and 7A of the bill at stage 2. In addition, amendment 131 will require local authorities to have regard to guidance that is issued by the Scottish ministers on their functions under part 7 of the bill.

Amendment 22 will provide that the Scottish ministers must also publish any guidance that they issue relating to parts 3, 5, 7 and 7A of the bill.

I move amendment 131.

Amendment 131 agreed to.

Section 93—Interpretation of Part 7
Amendment 132 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Section 94—Schemes for reduction and remission of non-domestic rates

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 26 is on schemes for reduction and remission of rates. Amendment 21, in the name of the Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment, is the only amendment in the group.

Marco Biagi: The bill provides for a new power to allow councils to offer additional rates relief within their area. Amendment 21 will clarify wording that was agreed following an amendment at stage 2—by a member who shall remain nameless—to replace a potentially dubious comma after “expenditure” with “and” so that it is clear beyond doubt that the “income” referred to is the authority’s income.

I move amendment 21.

Amendment 21 agreed to.

Section 95—Guidance under Parts 2 and 6: publication

Amendment 22 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.
Section 96—Subordinate legislation
Amendments 215 and 133 moved—[Marco Biagi]—and agreed to.

Schedule 3—Relevant authorities

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 27 is on minor amendments—community planning, asset transfer requests and long title. Amendment 23, in the name of the Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment, is grouped with amendments 24 to 26.

Marco Biagi: The Scottish Court Service is listed as a relevant authority under the bill. The service has now changed its name to become the Scottish Courts and Tribunals Service, and amendment 23 reflects that change.

Amendment 24 makes two consequential changes in relation to community planning. The first change deals with consultation by an education authority before making certain changes to education provision in its area, and requires it to include the local community planning partnership and any other CPPs that it considers to be relevant.

The second change relates to the joint inspection of children’s services. Those services are currently defined with reference to the Local Government in Scotland Act 2003. In future, they will be defined with reference to the Children and Young People (Scotland) Act 2014.

Amendments 25 and 26 alter the long title of the bill to include reference to provisions that were added at stage 2.

I move amendment 23.

Amendment 23 agreed to.

Schedule 4—Minor and consequential amendments

Amendments 134 to 144 and 24 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Schedule 5—Repeals

Amendment 145 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

Long title

Amendments 146, 25, 217 and 26 moved—[Aileen McLeod]—and agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: That ends consideration of amendments. I will allow members to move places. I ask members who are leaving the chamber to do so quietly because we are still in session.

Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Elaine Smith): The next item of business is a debate on motion S4M-13523, in the name of Marco Biagi, on the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill. Before I invite the minister to open the debate, I call on the Cabinet Secretary for Social Justice, Communities and Pensioners’ Rights to signify Crown consent to the bill.

The Cabinet Secretary for Social Justice, Communities and Pensioners’ Rights (Alex Neil): For the purposes of rule 9.11 of the standing orders, I advise Parliament that Her Majesty, having been informed of the purport of the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill, has consented to place her prerogative and interest, in so far as they are affected by the bill, at the disposal of Parliament for the purposes of the bill.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Many thanks. We can now begin the debate.

The Minister for Local Government and Community Empowerment (Marco Biagi): I have not emptied a room this quickly since I got up to do karaoke at the party conference.

I thank the members of all parties who have contributed today and who are still here. I also thank the huge number of people who, throughout the past three years, have contributed to making the bill what it is today. It has been a collective effort between Government, Parliament and the grass roots, as befits a bill that is all about community empowerment. The bill is all the better for their participation and the challenge and input that they provided.

On behalf of my colleagues, I thank Rob Gibson and the members of the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee for their incredibly detailed scrutiny of the community right to buy. I also thank Kevin Stewart and the members of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee for their thorough scrutiny of the bill during stages 1 and 2, including some interesting meetings that I was present at, enjoying the hospitality and debate. Both committees must be applauded for taking evidence from such a wide range of organisations and individuals. That really careful, balanced consideration of the proposals led to an improved bill that will make a significant difference to communities throughout Scotland for years to come.

At stage 2, I accepted amendments from all sides, which shows that, when good ideas are proposed to the Government, it will listen to them wherever they come from. That has continued today in discussions that have often been more about detail than fundamental disagreements on principle.

From the national outcomes to participation requests, from football to allotments, I am pleased that we have that shared vision and desire for more empowerment of and participation from communities of all types across Scotland. The focus has been on ensuring that we have legislation that will lift up and free the voices of people across Scotland who want to take part. We want to let them set local agendas in line with their wishes and concerns.

If I were to sum up the headings of the bill, there would be a series of them. The first would be participation. In the bill, participation requests provide a mechanism for communities to gain a proactive role in how local services are planned and delivered, so that they can take part. Community bodies will be able to use the bill to discuss with service providers how they could better meet their users’ needs, and they will be able to offer volunteers to support a service or even propose to take over the delivery of the service. Participation requests will be a powerful tool that will enable communities to take action on their terms. I want that to spread and take root, so that there is a go-to point for those communities that wish to realise their ambitions. People will be able to highlight where improvements can be made and suggest solutions as to how things can be taken forward and be delivered together.

Michael Russell (Argyll and Bute) (SNP): I thank the minister for allowing that to happen for one particular community in my constituency: the community of south Cowal. The minister was very helpful in ensuring that the relevant amendments were drafted and accepted by the committee and by Parliament, and they will give new hope to a community that desperately wants to purchase Castle Toward but is being prevented from doing so by Parliament, and they will give new hope to a community of south Cowal. The minister was very happy to put on record my support for communities that wish to take up the opportunities to participate that the bill presents.

Marco Biagi: Michael Russell will be very glad to have put that on the record, and I am certainly happy to put on record my support for communities that wish to take up the opportunities to participate that the bill presents.

Malcolm Chisholm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab): Will the minister give way?

Marco Biagi: In a moment.

To help with our move towards participation and empowerment, at stage 2 we put a new power in the bill that will require all public bodies to promote and facilitate the participation of people and communities in their decisions and activities. That is a challenge, but it is one that is worth accepting. We know that already there are people out there who are pioneering techniques such as participatory budgeting, which Malcolm Chisholm will know very well from the Leith decides initiative in his constituency.

Malcolm Chisholm: During consideration of amendments I raised a point about arm’s-length external organisations, which I believe are not mentioned in the bill. Will the minister confirm that they will definitely be included in regulations?

Marco Biagi: Yes. I noticed the omission and I was going to come back to it in my closing remarks. I am happy to answer that question right now. ALEOs are not listed in schedule 3 and are not public authorities, but the Scottish Government has the ability to designate by order additional organisations under certain circumstances, provided they meet certain qualifications. There is a blurred boundary between what is a public body and what is an entirely private body, and we must be aware of competence, but the bill has that provision and—as we did with allotments, following a particular concern about them—we will seek to ensure that ALEOs fall within the spirit of the bill, in so far as they are bodies that deliver on behalf of the public sector.

Alex Salmond (Aberdeenshire East) (SNP): The community right-to-buy process has evolved over the past few years and the bill takes it much further than it has been before. However, there is nothing to stop it evolving further. For example, in the future a community of anglers might have the right to buy out the netting rights of one of Scotland’s great fishing rivers. That sort of thing could be given active consideration as the process moves forward.

Marco Biagi: Yes. That takes me back to the discussion that I had with Alex Fergusson on amendments regarding communities of interest. In this bill we are allowing the transfer of public assets and we very consciously identified communities of interest—people who share an interest, a background or an activity—as groups that could take on ownership of assets. There are many kinds of community—not just localities, although they are important, but people who share characteristics or activities and wish to work together on them.

I strongly argue that when a group of people do not simply share a locality or an idea but can bring that together in the ownership of an asset, that ownership results in more confidence, capacity and cohesion. It gives a flag to rally round and a sense of ownership, because it is based on what in many cases is actual ownership. Whether we are talking about reviving a local shop, renovating a derelict site or providing a hub for community activities, control of assets can be a key factor in making a community a more attractive place to live and supporting its economic regeneration.

My colleague Dr McLeod has deftly steered the community right to buy through the Parliament—I am not just saying that because she is sitting next to me. We have a comprehensive set of improvements and a fundamental shift in the way in which communities can use the community right to buy. It will now be available in urban and rural contexts, and the new part 3A of the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 will be instrumental in helping communities to deal with problem land.

No single bill or action that any Government takes will change the pattern overnight. As the land reform review group report emphasised, land reform is a long-term process. However, we firmly believe that the measures will help to lay the foundation for future action on land reform and our vital next steps.

Participation and assets are two key aspects of the bill, and another strand is inequalities. We recognise that inequalities might impact on communities’ ability to use the bill. That has been a focus of concern for the Local Government and Regeneration Committee, and we have been working together on the issue to ensure that we empower the disempowered. We have introduced amendments requiring public bodies to consider inequality and we are targeting locality planning so that all community planning partners can bring their resources to bear on the most disadvantaged neighbourhoods.

We should be proud that we are putting a significant amount of investment through the programme directly into communities. We are putting an extra £5.6 million in the people and communities fund, which will be part of the overall empowering communities pot, which now stands at £19.4 million of support.

We have listened to everything that has been said. The collaborative approach has allowed the bill to evolve into what will be an extraordinary piece of legislation that touches on practically all aspects of human activity. It will also ensure that our public services are focused on improving what our communities care about and putting them in the driving seat. The broad consensus in favour reflects our shared commitment to working with everyone. Following the enactment of the bill, we will continue that dialogue as we develop draft guidance and proceed with implementation.

I again thank all those who contributed and who will continue to contribute. It gives me enormous pleasure to move the motion.

I move,
Support from the Scottish Government in terms of advice and finance will be critical if communities are to be able to make best use of the legislation. We need to have detailed implementation, and the regulations need to be put in place as swiftly as possible.

I welcome the extension of the option of the right to buy to urban communities, although there will be challenges. I particularly thank the community members and councillors from the Calton in Glasgow for their ideas on how we make the bill as effective as it can be. I am also conscious of the needs and aspirations of communities in Edinburgh and the Lothians. As the Law Society points out, we need to ensure that the potential higher cost of land does not frustrate the ambitions of the bill. There are lots of implementation issues for us to think about.

One of the key issues that we have discussed throughout consideration of the bill has been the need for clarity surrounding the provisions on neglected and abandoned land. The debate that we had on that at stage 2 was important in understanding how the Scottish Government will approach the detail.

Today we have also debated amendments on sustainable development and on adding environmental wellbeing criteria. I very much welcome the clarification from the minister about how she sees the legislation being implemented. What is said on the record today and the overwhelming support that there has been for these new key principles will be looked at in the future. That will be important for future decisions by ministers and courts—hopefully more by ministers and less by courts. I was very keen that we tease out those issues today.

In my area, the Lothians, I know of a cinema that has been empty for a decade. Marco Biagi will know the place that I am talking about: the former Odeon cinema. It is a classic example of a building that has become an eyesore on a shopping parade—although it has huge potential—and which will have deteriorated over the years. It was really good to hear from the minister today about the idea concerning buildings in a shopping parade—the idea that a community’s social wellbeing is part of its environmental wellbeing. I very much welcome the commitment that was given this afternoon. I hope that, up and down the country, communities and owners will be thinking about that in more depth. I hope that it will concentrate minds; we need buildings and land to be used to the best benefit of the community as a whole.

New options are being provided today by the passage of the bill, and we should all celebrate that. That is part of the reason why people have been keen to work together. I welcome the collegiate approach that has been taken, both in the committees and from the ministers today. I hope that a more constructive and positive set of relationships between landowners and communities will flow from the legislation. Its very existence will be good across the country, and it will raise people’s aspirations. That is a good thing.

I welcome the possibility for mediation, initiated by ministers, between communities and landowners when that is appropriate, rather than having ranks of lawyers sitting in a room debating the fine detail. Let us get the people to come up with good solutions that will benefit local communities and those who are the stewards of our land and buildings.

I started my speech by welcoming the fact that we have been addressing unfinished business from the 2003 act. Today, the bill itself leaves new unfinished business. Important issues were raised by the land reform review group, including those around compulsory purchase orders and compulsory sale orders, which will now be considered by the Scottish Law Commission.

More work will need to be done. Crucially, we need to build capacity and support in our communities to ensure that we deliver the social justice and regeneration of communities that are at the heart of the bill. We have been doing important work over the past few months, and today has been good.

The new provisions on allotments have been supported by the expert lobbying of the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society, an organisation that does not miss the target when it gets going. The opportunities for sustainable development, community growing and community health and wellbeing that come from gardening and allotments are really important and we need to capture them. New opportunities will also come on the right to buy for football, and we will be able to come back to that.

The bill is about empowerment and opening up new opportunities for our communities, particularly those that are disadvantaged. The bill will create new opportunities, and as MSPs we need to ensure that our local communities will benefit from the changes. Let us pass the bill, move forward together and look forward to the next bit of land reform, which I understand will be coming at us at a rate of knots.

The bill is better than it was when it was introduced. It is stronger for the debate and discussion that we have had. Communities and organisations have helped us to get it together, and I hope that it will be passed at stage 3 tonight.

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): Before I call Cameron Buchanan, I make the Parliament aware that the Presiding Officer has determined that decision time will take place at 8.15 tonight. That will allow every member who wishes to speak in the debate the opportunity to do so.

19:21

Cameron Buchanan (Lothian) (Con): The Parliament’s consideration of the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill has been a long and detailed process and many important points have been raised. I, too, thank the clerks and everybody else who has been involved with it, and the committees.

I have always agreed with the principle of enabling communities to have a greater say in local matters and I welcome provisions to facilitate that. However, I am concerned that there are a number of areas in which the bill may still allow central decisions to take precedence over local priorities, and those worries cannot be passed over. Members will be more than aware that many amendments have been considered. I will not have time to analyse each of them, but I think that it is worth touching on some of the most prescient points that have been raised.

Our central aim has always been to ensure that the bill will genuinely delegate decision making so that members of the public can benefit from local flexibility and autonomy and will not be subject to the whims of the Scottish Government. The extent to which that aim will be realised will come down to two factors. The first is the breadth and strength of directions that are imposed on communities and local authorities from central Government, and the second is the extent to which the procedures contain the necessary safeguards to ensure that any community that wishes to become involved in local decision making has a reasonable chance of doing so.

As a case in point, the interaction between part 1 of the bill, on national outcomes, and part 2, on community planning, raises concerns that local priorities may be overshadowed by national decisions. That is particularly true as each community planning partnership must have regard to guidance that is issued by Scottish ministers. I agree with efforts to encourage community participation in the development of local outcomes improvement plans, but I still think that the Parliament and public officials across Scotland would do well to ensure that local priorities are the driving force.

On a similar note, I wish to focus on the bill’s provisions on allotments, because they have raised concerns about local autonomy. In particular, the provisions that require the Scottish Government’s consent for a local authority to change the use of an allotment site could, if they are used in a certain way, obstruct local decision making for national reasons. That is plainly contrary to the principle of facilitating local empowerment. If power is truly to be devolved from the centre, local authorities should be able to decide for themselves whether changing the use of an allotment site is in the local interest, subject of course to reasonable protections.

John Wilson (Central Scotland) (Ind): Will the member clarify the position with regard to local authority decision making about the closure of allotment sites and input by the community and allotment holders into that decision? The bill aims to give more power to communities. Surely allotment holders should have the power to influence the council’s decisions rather than the council making decisions on a whim.

Cameron Buchanan: I do not think that it is clear in the bill that that is the case. That is my concern. It has not been specified.

Unfortunately, I think that amendments that were agreed to at stage 3 this evening will restrict local authorities’ freedom to decide which allotments will be offered to tenants. I would be grateful for the minister’s assurance that local agreements are intended to take precedence.

Having said that, I welcome the change in the bill’s provisions regarding the size of allotments. The changes will keep a reference in writing to a standard 250m² size, as many allotment holders desire, but also recognise the need for local flexibility. The provisions therefore recognise allotment holders’ rights but also allow for flexibility when local authorities and allotment holders can agree, which is the kind of move away from central direction towards local decision making that the bill would have done well to have more of.

Of course, a central part of the debate is ensuring that the bill does what it says and empowers local communities to take part in decision making. We agree with the principle that community bodies should be able to request to participate in local outcomes improvement programmes or make asset transfer requests, but that must be reinforced by proper protections. I stress that I am not making any assumptions, but it is important that communities are protected through a right of review or appeal from being shut out of local decision making for inappropriate reasons.

I note that the Scottish Government responded to my points about allowing a review or appeal when an asset transfer request is agreed but contract negotiations have been broken, by setting up an appeals process where no contract is concluded between a relevant authority and a community transfer body. That, again, is a welcome change in favour of community bodies’ involvement that the Scottish Government would have done well to replicate throughout the bill. However, I expect the Scottish Government to share my commitment to monitor annual reports in the interests of ensuring that all applications are treated appropriately.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: You should draw to a close, please.

Cameron Buchanan: I hope that members across the chamber will join us in committing to uphold the principles of community empowerment.

Clare Adamson (Central Scotland) (SNP): It has been a very interesting afternoon in the chamber, with lots of topics being raised regarding the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill. I absolutely believe that this is about community and the communities in which we live.

I had a poignant experience before coming to the chamber this afternoon when I attended the unveiling of the Scottish steelworkers memorial on the Ravenscraig site in North Lanarkshire. I was struck by the fact that it was a community project that brought together the communities of North Lanarkshire on the industrial heritage side and also brought together local schools and the local council, which supported the fundraising for the memorial.

The unveiling was poignant because of where the memorial sits in our community—at the former site of the Ravenscraig steelworks. When I was a schoolchild in that area of North Lanarkshire, I would never have imagined that an Andy Scott sculpture, which will form part of our heritage in the future, would be on that site—indeed, I do not think that Andy Scott would have envisaged any of his sculptures at that time.

To have the memorial on what was the site of the steelworks and beside the regional sports centre, in the heart of what will be a changing and developing community, brought home to me how important it is to bring all our communities together in looking forward to the future. It also brought together for me some of the themes that have come out this afternoon, such as the view that everything changes and nothing is static. The bill is a framework that should take us forward to the as yet unenvisioned community empowerment projects that may come our way.

I was glad that the minister paid tribute to the work of the committees. I joined the Local Government and Regeneration Committee only in November last year, and I have to admit that the bulk of the work on the bill had already been done by that point and a lot of the evidence had already been taken.

Marco Biagi: I just want to say that I know how the member feels.

Clare Adamson: We had a wide-ranging debate this afternoon that went from the minutiae of allotment sizes to a philosophical conundrum from my colleague Rob Gibson, who asked what the definition of “environment” is. We have to look to the big scale and blue-sky thinking on the issue as well as at the minutiae of the process. The bill will empower communities through the ownership of land and buildings, strengthen their voices on the decisions that matter to them and put them at the heart of the process.

The extension of the community right to buy across Scotland will help to deliver the Government’s ambitious target of 1 million acres of land being in community ownership by 2020, and the bill will improve the outcomes for communities by involving them in the community planning process and by strengthening partnership working in our local authorities and community environments. I am glad that the Scottish Government is supporting that process with an additional £10 million, which will be provided through the new empowering communities fund, to ensure that people can be more involved in the decisions that affect their lives.

There is much to be commended in the bill, a lot of which has already been debated. The ownership of land and buildings and the strengthening of voices in the decisions that matter to communities are at the heart of what we are doing.

It has been a long afternoon, so I will leave it there. I look forward to the bill being passed later.

Claudia Beamish (South Scotland) (Lab): Land reform is, of course, a continuum. Scottish Labour has contributed robustly to that process and will continue to do so beyond today.

The Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill—which, together, we hope will be passed—is an essential part of that process. At stage 1, I spoke of the keen interest in community ownership from a South Scotland perspective. Communities need and have a right to the levels of support that have been on offer over the years in the Highlands and Islands. Scottish Enterprise should be tasked with a new remit, and the focus of the proposed bodies in relation to wider land reform issues must offer support evenly throughout Scotland. I seek reassurance on that issue from the minister in his closing remarks.
The human rights aspect of the bill and the amendments are significant. In its stage 3 briefing, Community Land Scotland stated:

“Ministers will need to have regard to the Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights when making certain decisions about community ownership.”

As a member of the Scottish Co-operative Party parliamentary group, I am delighted that the Scottish Government has taken forward the possibilities of the community benefit society co-operative model. What is the minister able to do through Co-operative Development Scotland to support that option?

It should be recognised that urban and rural regeneration is not all about ownership; it can be about good partnership with private landowners and a range of public bodies. I am relieved that the central thrust of the changes that are needed for allotment holding have been accepted. The frustration that is experienced by many who want to grow food but have no access to any land has built up for far too long. Constituents who have approached me after years on council waiting lists and who have seen unused patches of land literally going to waste will have a sense of comfort and draw some optimism from today.

That will also create an opportunity for young people who have been involved in growing food through eco-schools. I am relieved that allotment societies across Scotland will see the passing of the bill as a fresh opportunity to connect with young people and provide the chance for them to get growing through starter spaces. Some of us saw those at the Inverleith allotments. I wish all allotment holders and those with allotment aspirations well.

Yesterday, I attended a strategic discussion about the development of community responsibility for Carluke high mill in my South Scotland region. After complex discussions with the landowner, the steering group, which includes Carluke Development Trust and other groups, says that it will “secure the long term future of The High Mill by returning it to a working state.”

The aim is that the mill will become “a key centre of cultural, economic and educational activity”, and the group will ensure that “it is supported by a sustainable business model”.

That creates opportunities for allotments, local food production and a community cafe around the mill hub.

That is about leasing, not ownership. However, opportunities for ownership are fundamental to the way forward in Scotland. At its Orkney meeting, the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee—with the help of Dave Thompson, Sarah Boyack and others—dispelled the myths about the development of land reform. Good landowners have nothing to fear as they develop alongside communities. However, the distribution of land ownership in Scotland is not just and can indisputably hamper community opportunities for job creation and good housing and community vision more broadly.

The passing of the bill will go some way towards correcting some of those distortions. Scottish Labour also eagerly awaits the publication of the land reform bill next week and will make a strong contribution to its progress.

Rob Gibson (Caithness, Sutherland and Ross) (SNP): It is a pleasure to reach this stage in the passage of the bill, given the huge amount of ground that Kevin Stewart’s committee and my committee have covered. I know that the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee came into the process somewhat later to deal with part 4 and the land reform aspects, but I will also comment on one or two other matters.

A really important point is that when people saw the bill they thought that great difficulties would be put in the way of simplifying, say, the crofting community right to buy. However, we found that by bringing the issues up at stage 2 it was possible to have the debate, take the evidence and reach a consensus on simplifying the process and thereby making things much easier for crofting communities.

The simplification of the registration processes for communities, crofting or otherwise, is one of the things that I am most proud of; after all, it is daunting for people to have thrust on them over a few weeks the necessity of creating a business plan and registering their right to buy. The process of registration—and re-registration within five years—has now been simplified considerably.

Although extending the right to buy across Scotland is a major aim now, we should recognise that that will throw up many problems, and we should never underestimate the obstacles to achieving a step change in development in so many communities across the country. However, we have laid the groundwork.

I am delighted that, as has been pointed out, we have been able to extend the forms of community bodies to Scottish charitable incorporated organisations and bencoms. That is important because it will allow people to choose a form of body that is suitable to their area.
Having listened to the discussions about community planning partnerships having much more local plans, I have to say that I like the idea of locality plans, which the Local Government and Regeneration Committee dealt with. As a result of that measure, small parts of council areas will be able to focus on matters; I know that Cullrain in my constituency would have loved to do that at an earlier stage. Such a move will prepare people for taking action, because they will have thought beforehand about, say, the resources that they will need.

The Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee took some time examining the fact that local authorities can act as quite a constraint on the transfer of land to communities, and we found that authorities around the country had varied views about how much they were prepared to do that. Moreover, I note that John Mundell, chief executive of Inverclyde Council, said:

“If we are disposing of assets, we are always required to obtain best value, and that normally means market value, whether we use the district valuer or another mechanism to value assets.” — [Official Report, Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee, 3 December 2014; c 50.]

We want to change what best value means for communities, because it cannot always mean market value. That is one of the pieces of work that we need to take forward from the bill, but at least the bill has opened the door.

The thing that has cheered me most about the whole process has been how the arguments about human rights have been developed and, in particular, how the Government has embraced the United Nations International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which guarantees certain rights, such as those to sanitation, food and housing. Applying that covenant to our circumstances could aid many communities in our urban areas, as well as people abroad. After all, the UK signed up to it in 1976, and it is generally accepted as a gold standard. As we have so often found, the European convention on human rights relates to property, but the covenant relates to people.

I have great pleasure in supporting the way in which the bill has been taken forward. I hope that we can get the secondary legislation passed as a priority.

Tavish Scott (Shetland Islands) (LD): Let me start with Rob Gibson’s point about best value. The usual question that is asked about any legislation is whether it makes a difference and is seen to do so. There is a redundant school in Shetland that has not been used as a school for a long time. The council in my area sold it to the largest developer—or the one that paid the highest fee—instead of letting a voluntary group use one of the school buildings. It was a canteen, but I will not bore the chamber with what it was all about. If this legislation can enable that community group to buy that asset and use it for their activities, it will have achieved something purposeful and be well worth passing.

I cannot, and neither will I attempt to, go through the legislation in the way the minister did in his opening remarks, but I agree with the tenor of his observations. He described the legislation as “extraordinary”, and the one parliamentary observation that I will make is about when we pass enormously wide catch-all legislation; we used to criticise Westminster Governments of all persuasions for passing the annual “Miscellaneous Scotland Bill”. This bill strikes me not as being miscellaneous, but as being detailed and complex but nonetheless wide-reaching, and I am sure that the Government will want to reflect on the process that allowed it to be that.

My highlight of the day was the allotments debate. It is just as well that Rab McNeil is not still the parliamentary sketch writer for The Scotsman—Alex Fergusson and Sarah Boyack will remember those halcyon days when Rab used to look down on our seats when the Parliament chamber was up the road. I do not think that Cameron Buchanan would have survived his sketch tomorrow morning. Sadly for the minister, the bill would no longer have been the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill; it would have been the “Allotments Bill”, the “Swede Bill” or something like that.

The ministers have made a lot of progress—in my day just one minister would have dealt with a bill such as this. One irony was our getting a briefing last night from Peter Peacock, who used to grace the front bench in past Governments. Peter used to handle such bills—the whole bill, with goodness knows how many sections and paragraphs and so on. He used to provide briefings to the rest of us who subsequently took bills through Parliament. He did that because he paid huge attention to detail and could hold the attention of parties across the chamber. If Marco Biagi follows that approach, he will do well as a minister. The effectiveness of Peter Peacock was down to his ability to produce detailed legislation and make it understandable to us all. His briefing was a masterwork of its kind. One Peter Peacock piece commended the support of all parties for the Government’s amendments at stage 3, subject to “the following comments”: then there were two pages of comments. That was very Peter Peacock, I thought.
I recognise that ministers accepted amendments from across the chamber when considering how best to improve the bill. Hitherto, I had thought that the best example of that, going back through Parliament, was the first cut at land reform legislation, which some—dare I say it?—older colleagues will recall. That bill became very different from the original that was proposed to Parliament. Again, that was because of a point that the minister rightly made: so many groups and interested parties made observations to say, “That isn’t good enough” or “That needs to be altered”. That is seen in how ministers have reflected on the observations. To some extent that was also the case with the amendments on fans that Alison Johnstone persuasively supported in committee and this afternoon.

Alex Fergusson made a point about clarity. I did not necessarily agree with the specific arguments that he pursued, but—Michael Russell is no longer with us, but I think Rob Gibson made the same point—when colleagues from the Government seats are saying that some of the provisions may end up in court, we must be careful that we have got it right, because that is not a good sign for any legislation. I appreciate that it is a small part of the bill, and I am sure that the minister will reflect on that with his good legal counsel, the Lord Advocate and all. It is important that we avoid situations in which we must say, “Good gosh! We’re going to end up testing that in the court.” I am sure that that is not the minister’s intention, and that he will do his best to avoid it. That must be a lesson for drafting any such legislation.

John Wilson (Central Scotland) (Ind): I draw attention to my entry in the register of interests because I have had a particular interest in community empowerment for a number of years. I was reminded by the person sitting behind me that we had debated this issue in 1988 with reference to a particular community on the south side of Glasgow.

I thank all those who gave evidence to the committee, including the community groups, which told us, not only in formal meetings but in the informal meetings that we had throughout Scotland, about their expectations for community empowerment and their roles in their communities.

I challenge Cameron Buchanan’s comments on decision making; it was not always just about what the Scottish Government was doing, but about what local authorities were doing to many communities. Communities felt disempowered in terms of engagement when local authorities were making decisions. I hope that the bill will take forward rights for communities, so that they are properly consulted, engaged and truly empowered in terms of the decisions that are made in their areas.

I also thank the ministers for their willingness to accept comments that members and others made at stage 2, and in the lead up to stage 3, on what we wanted to see in the bill. In particular, I thank them for their willingness to take on board and to progress suggestions that were made.

The test of any legislation that is passed by Parliament is the impact that it has on communities throughout Scotland. There is an expectation that, once enacted, the bill will empower communities that have so far failed in their attempts to engage meaningfully in shaping the delivery of services that they themselves have identified.

One such area is the asset transfer debate—I am directly involved in community asset transfer negotiations with a local authority. When working with local authorities and other public agencies, we must ask them to consider what they mean by community asset transfers. I think that it was Rob Gibson who mentioned best value. I do not look at best value in economic terms; I look at what best value is for communities and what asset transfers can deliver in terms of economic and social impacts. Many communities have good ideas and visions for what they can deliver. Unfortunately, as Rob Gibson highlighted, many public sector agencies and local authorities see asset transfer as having only monetary value. We must shape and change the attitude that best value is about money; rather, it is about what can be delivered, how it is delivered and who is delivering it.

It is clear that many communities throughout Scotland want to engage in the asset transfer process, take forward their own projects and deliver services in those communities. However, at present, many of them are being held back by the view of local authorities that they know what is best for those areas.

The bill is about changing society. I hope that, after almost 40 years of talking about community engagement, with this legislation we will see genuine community empowerment to allow people to take forward their ideas and to engage meaningfully in shaping their future.

Kevin Stewart (Aberdeen Central) (SNP): When we debated the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill at stage 1 on 3 February this year, I pointed out that the unifying theme in legislation is trust: trust that communities all over Scotland know what is best for themselves and have the desire and ability to make their ambitions reality; trust that the bill will give them a range of tools to make their desires reality; and trust that our public services will rise to meet the opportunities that the bill presents them with to empower the communities that they serve. The levels of input and engagement that we, as parliamentarians, have received from communities across Scotland as we have considered and amended the bill vindicates that view.

The 16th century philosopher and statesman, Sir Francis Bacon, is reputed to have coined that well-known expression, “Knowledge is power.” In this case, knowledge is empowerment. Therefore, a special duty falls on the Scottish Government, local government, and other public bodies to empower communities across Scotland by informing them about the legislation and the powers that it provides. Whether it is about the ability to assume control of local community assets, such as community halls or leisure venues, or about requests from local groups to participate in delivery of public services in order to achieve an outcome, communities across Scotland can only take full advantage of the new powers if they know about them and have the necessary support to use them effectively. I call on all members to promote the value of the legislation to our constituents, and to encourage them to be active in community-based organisations so that they can empower themselves and their communities.

As the convener of the committee that scrutinised the lion’s share of the bill at stage 1, I know well the appetite that exists in communities across Scotland to be empowered with the tools that allow them to help themselves. The Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill, which we have finalised this evening, will provide the foundations for a new framework of empowerment across Scotland. Crucially, it will be a framework of empowerment that will be designed and delivered by ordinary folk who live and work in their communities. It will help to free their ambitions from the often well-intentioned but stiflingly dead hand of officialdom and bureaucracy.

Since the bill was introduced in Parliament in June 2014, Scotland has undertaken a remarkable journey of civic and community empowerment. The extraordinary level of public engagement and participation in the independence referendum, which carried through to the recent UK general election, provided the perfect platform from which to launch the bill. However, as with so many things in this life, the bill is not the end of a process, nor is it a means to an end. We should rather see it for what it is: a new staging post on the journey of empowerment that so many communities across Scotland are already embarked on.

If used to their fullest, the powers in the bill can provide the confidence and impetus that our communities need to be able to take their future wellbeing into their own hands. That does not necessarily mean that the task will always be easy—most worth-while pursuits in life are not—but I trust that it is a challenge that folk all across Scotland are more than ready to meet.

I thank again the thousands of ordinary people from across the length and breadth of Scotland who engaged with the Local Government and Regeneration Committee on the bill. Their vital contribution has helped to shape the bill in ways that will benefit generations of Scots far into the future.

I truly believe that the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill will shift the balance of empowerment away from the agencies of the state towards ordinary people and the communities in which they live. Communities across Scotland need to feel as though they are in a partnership of equals with the agencies that provide them with the services that they need. Too often in the past, that has not been the case. The bill will go far towards redressing the balance. For that reason, I look forward to our voting the bill into law at decision time this evening.

Alex Rowley (Cowdenbeath) (Lab): First, I congratulate and say well done to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee. I absolutely associate myself with all John Wilson’s comments. I would have liked what he said to have been one bit of my speech.

I want to focus on something a bit different. We need to move forward with the co-operation that we have seen in the passing of the bill. The bill will be no panacea for the unnecessary austerity that is now being imposed on public services across Scotland. We need to address that, but that is for another day.

I want to talk about how we will address local government finance in future. I welcomed it when the minister set up the commission on local tax reform. I sat on the commission for a period of time and I look forward to its conclusions. All political parties, including mine and that of the Government, need to give an absolute commitment that we will put party politics to one side so that we can find a solution to the problem of local government finance. If we try to outbid each other using council tax freezes, we will doom local government to another five-year freeze that will have a negative impact on the ability of local authorities to achieve sustainable long-term finance, especially if one party is frightened to move because the other one will make major political capital out of it or make it into an election issue. We have seen co-operation in the making of the bill and the parties need to give the same commitment to working together in the chamber to find a long-term and sustainable approach to local government finance.

On community planning, regardless of whether we are able to find a long-term sustainable approach to local government finance, the Christie report has highlighted the fact that we cannot continue to do things the way we did them in the past. We need to find new ways of working and think about a more preventative agenda. I believe that the bill and the moves that have been made within it to ensure that community planning is able to genuinely involve and engage with local communities will move that agenda forward.

We need to look at structures. For example, I absolutely support the health and social care partnerships. Only time will tell whether that is the end of the road or whether we want to bring the organisations together and govern them differently, but I believe that this bill is the next step with regard to community planning partners—the health service, local authorities and the voluntary sector. There must be a greater role for the third sector. I am a believer that community planning is absolutely the correct way to go forward. It is also right that people and communities are able to determine their local priorities and where local resources should be spent. The bill takes us in that direction.

I hope that, across Scotland, political parties and local government will see this bill as an opportunity to begin to work together in the interests of our communities and that parties in this Parliament can come together successfully to work together to tackle the difficult issues such as the future of local government funding.

Alex Fergusson (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con): We are almost at the culmination of a long process that, as we heard, has involved several parliamentary committees and a vast array of witnesses, stakeholders, civil servants, parliamentary staff and others. Whatever our overall views on this heavy piece of legislation, they should all be warmly thanked, and I am delighted to do so from these benches.

As the minister said in opening this debate, there are not many differences across the chamber on the overall aspirations of the bill, but there are differences on matters of detail. We cannot pretend that they do not exist, despite the excellent spirit and, sometimes, humour that have marked today’s stage 3 process.

I dearly wish that the Government had differentiated between the right to buy in urban Scotland and in rural Scotland because, although I can see situations in an urban context that would absolutely justify the right to buy without a willing seller, I can also see that that could have significant unintended consequences when translated into a rural context. Several witnesses at the Rural Affairs, Climate Change and Environment Committee echoed the desirability of making that differentiation, as did the Law Society of Scotland, and I think that the bill is poorer for its absence.

Marco Biagi also said during the discussion of amendments that everything in the bill is about empowering communities, and so it should be. However, as members will have picked up from this afternoon’s debate, we on these benches believe that, in seeking to empower communities, ministers are taking too much power to themselves. We do not agree that outcomes should be determined rather than prescribed by regulation; we do not agree that the identifying of local priorities by community planning partnerships should be decreed by ministers; and we do not agree that extending the definition of land that is eligible for a compulsory right to buy by a community in any way helpful in delivering a clear, concise and easily understood way forward. This party is not against community ownership—far from it. However, the land that is eligible for takeover by any community under any circumstances should surely be clearly defined in law and not subject to the opinion of any individual, agency or—dare I say it—politician.

I genuinely believe that the Scottish Government is genuine in its belief that it is going about the business of community empowerment in the right way with this bill, and there is much that is entirely commendable in it. I really—and equally genuinely—wish that we could give it our whole-hearted support. However, Tavish Scott made valid points about the breadth of the bill and its clarity in some aspects, and those two issues are at the very core of the reservations that we hold.

Not for the first time in this Parliament I hope that our reservations may prove to be unfounded, but I fear that they will not be. For the reasons that I have tried to outline in the brief space of time that is available to me, and despite the many positive aspects of the bill, we will abstain tonight at decision time.

20:00

Ken Macintosh (Eastwood) (Lab): It has been a long day and a tiring day but, I hope, a very worthwhile one. For those of us who believe whole-heartedly in devolution and in the principles of subsidiarity and sharing power, the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill is a very significant step indeed. I add my voice to those of the many members this evening who have thanked all the contributors who helped us reach this point.

To my mind, the most important issue that was flagged up in evidence to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee from the outset, and which was unanimously reflected in the committee’s deliberations, was the argument that the bill should not only seek to increase participation from the community in decision making but, perhaps more important, it should redistribute influence on decision making more equally across diverse communities. That argument was put most forcefully by contributors from the voluntary sector, including Oxfam, the Poverty Alliance, Barnardo’s and many more such organisations, and I thank each of them for their persuasive input into this piece of legislation.

The worry was expressed that the passing of the bill would simply cede more power to those who are already accustomed to participating in local decision making. One of the most important amendments agreed to, therefore, was on legislative recognition that, when the national outcomes framework is being laid down, socioeconomic levels within individual communities will be taken into account.

The Coalition for Racial Equality and Rights—CRER—is one of the many aforementioned organisations that welcomed the bill’s ambition to reduce inequalities of outcome arising from socioeconomic disadvantage. However, it felt strongly that there should also be a focus on reducing inequalities of outcome that arise from race discrimination. I did not wish to introduce new material at stage 3, particularly on such a consensual bill—I am sure that everyone is relieved to hear that there was not an extra amendment this afternoon—so I did not lodge that amendment.

However, I would welcome, even at this late stage, any reassurance that the minister can offer in winding up that he recognises that black and minority ethnic communities may not be in the best position to take advantage of the provisions in the bill and that the Scottish Government will take steps to address those barriers to community participation that are created by prejudice and discrimination.

I will pick out just a couple of the many important subjects in the bill that were covered today. Empowering communities means, in essence, that we are giving citizens the opportunity to influence decisions that matter to them. That is why we were happy to back the football supporters’ right-to-buy amendment, proposed by Alison Johnstone. We are all very aware of the parlous state of many Scottish football clubs and of the less than altruistic intentions of some owners. Sports clubs in general play a crucial role in communities all over Scotland. Allowing those who care the most about the clubs to make decisions on the clubs’ future will only further enrich that important aspect of society. We were particularly pleased to see those amendments agreed to without division at stage 2. Having now conceded that the minister would prefer to consult further and bring back those proposals by regulation or subordinate legislation, I hope that the ministers will appreciate our ongoing anxiety that the Government fulfils that commitment in the shortest timescale possible.

I turn to the subject of allotments—Rab McNeil notwithstanding. Despite the minister’s good intentions, there was a danger at one point that, instead of improving prospects for Scotland’s many allotment holders and giving them some sort of statutory protection, we would vote down the entire section. It is to the credit of the minister, of the committee and, in particular, of the members of the Scottish Allotments and Gardens Society that the bill has now been amended to address the real demand for access to small plots of land that clearly exists across Scotland.

As with many aspects of the bill, the real test now lies ahead, when we put the law into practice. Allotments do not just offer an opportunity for those who wish to enjoy the benefits of gardening or working outdoors. They contribute to public policy on food, social justice, health and wellbeing, reducing carbon emissions and enhancing the natural environment. For example, will the bill deliver more allotments, with fewer people waiting and more people with a plot of their own? That is when we will really see the extent to which we have empowered our communities.

I have one final point. This has been a collaborative and consensual process, as many members have remarked in their closing speeches, and I believe that the bill is all the better for that. I thank the ministers for their role in such a co-operative and constructive operation, but I particularly want to thank the members of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee. It is interesting that there is no Government majority on the committee and the result has not been opportunism or oppositional politics from the non-governmental majority, but mature, respectful and rational discussion. All members have sought to reach agreement rather than force their views on others. For those who recollect Parliament before 2011, it was a reminder of how we used to achieve a balance between the power of the Executive and the legislature.

There have been occasional disappointments. We did not pass the European Charter of Local Self-Government, despite the opportunity that it offered to display our commitment to subsidiarity. I think that many of us welcomed the reminder during the discussion around that that the concordat is now dead and buried. It was slightly worrying that, in a choice between the council tax freeze and subsidiarity, the freeze seems to have won. I echo the point that was raised by my colleague Alex Rowley that, if we are going to take a consensual approach, local government finance offers an opportunity to us all.

The Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill is a very consensual, well-intentioned and empowering bill. It is now up to all of us to put those powers into action—let us practise the devolution that we preach.

Marco Biagi: I want to identify a problem with the bill. I know that this is a pretty late stage to do that, given that this is the winding-up speech at stage 3, but the problem is that if somebody comes to us, as people have been doing for some time, and asks us to sum up the bill in a sentence, it is pretty hard to do. This is a bill that has—as has been identified—a common thread of empowering communities through giving them a greater say in decision-making and in forms of direct ownership, but it is very hard to simply summarise the broad range of ways that it seeks to embody that principle.

The bill is really important because communities have different priorities. There is no one solution, there is no catch-all and there is no magic wand. In touring Scotland since I became the minister responsible for local government, I have seen examples of communities doing very different things. In some cases, they identify childcare as the issue and create a nursery—for example, at the Cassiltoun Stables nursery in Castlemilk. There is regeneration in Govanhill and Craigfillier and there are arts facilities in Kilmarnock, Elgin, and Galashiels, where the communities are working through such activities not just for the sake of the arts but because they provide opportunities for young people to gain skills and confidence. There is the community centre in Merkinch and others in Irvine and Alloa that offer everything, including a reptile fanciers club that I had the great pleasure of visiting during my last visit. There is the Comas shop in Dumbiedykes and the Crags community sports centre, and I have high hopes that our neighbourhood here around the Parliament will see some progress for the building that Sarah Boyack mentioned.

In a couple of months, I am going to Campbeltown to see its community-owned cinema and airport. An airport! Is that not proof that if communities have ambition, the sky is literally the limit?

Members: Oh!

Marco Biagi: I could not let Alison Johnstone be the only member to deliver a pun today, could I? I can actually speak now, which is an improvement.

In touring Scotland, I have seen a few groups that have imparted to me the importance of some of the points that have been made here—what Rob Gibson identified as that first step, when people go from being a group of volunteers or a group of people with an interest and an idea and take it to the next level. That really is an important step and one that we have to make sure is properly supported as we implement the legislation.

The bill, as has been highlighted, took no fewer than three ministers to bring home. There are now 11 parts to the bill, and looking at the football team’s-worth of substantive parts—I promise that there will be no more puns after this—in this debate, three of them seemed to stay on the bench.

We had no conversations in great detail about forestry, the common good or local non-domestic rates, which are all areas in which the bill includes important provisions to further community empowerment—[Interruption.]

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): One moment, minister. I ask members who are coming into the chamber to do so quietly and to stop talking, please, and to let the minister get on with his speech.

Kevin Stewart: Will the minister give way at this point?

The Presiding Officer: Minister, will you give way?

Marco Biagi: To Mr Stewart? Always.

Kevin Stewart: Will the minister agree that a number of the areas that he mentioned have not come up today because we dealt with them at earlier stages? For example, on forestry, concerns from the Scottish Woodlot Association were dealt with very early. Again, that comes back to the consensus that existed across the Local Government and Regeneration Committee and the other committees.

Marco Biagi: Indeed—I was just about to come on to that point in responding to the question that Tavish Scott raised about scrutiny. We have heard from other front-bench members that the bill is a shining example of how the Parliament’s committees looked in great detail at a wide range of issues and produced positive recommendations that the Government was happy to take on board.

There is a wide range of issues running through the bill, and I will respond to some of the areas that have been highlighted. On land reform,
Claudia Beamish raised the issue of support. As with all sections of the bill, the need to ensure that people have the means to come forward and take advantage of the provisions is critical.

Asset transfer and its interaction with best value came up on several occasions in the debate. We must recognise that best value was conceived as something that is about more than just market value, so it is important that everybody takes that on board.

Cameron Buchanan made a point about allotments and ministerial control. The ministerial consent for change of use for allotments has existed since the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973, so it has a pedigree. Members will pardon me for being a younger member, but I believe that there was a Conservative Government at that time, although I note that Mr Buchanan is perhaps more of a Thatcher man than a Heath man with regard to the past records of those Governments. The provision is a long-established one that we were asked by stakeholders to include.

We have touched on the extent to which we took on board ideas from across Parliament. The bill includes provisions on locality planning; on assistance with participation, which Alex Rowley raised; on allotments, which Ken Macintosh highlighted; and on participation requests for joint authorities, which Tavish Scott raised with us.

From Cameron Buchanan—despite my little disagreement with him on CPPs—we have taken on board issues to do with appeals. From John Wilson we have taken on board issues relating to reporting deadlines and ALEOs, and to unconstituted but still representative groups. From Michael Russell, we have taken suggestions regarding appeals on asset transfer; from Alison Johnstone, suggestions on football; and on land reform, we have taken on board suggestions from Sarah Boyack, Claudia Beamish and Alex Fergusson.

The Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill is one that every member of the Parliament can feel part of, and that many MSPs can look at it and say, “I made this.”

We also learned during the debate that Alison Johnstone’s football puns are terrible—her scriptwriter should get a red card, as should mine. We have learned that Alex Fergusson can sometimes—believe it or not—stand up for tenants, which he happily portrayed as being the result of a change of heart.

We learned during the passage of the sections on allotments that just about everybody—the Opposition spokespeople, the official in charge and the people coming before the committees—seems to be an allotment holder. Crazes have clearly moved on from Cabbage Patch Kids to cabbage patches for real.

Members: Oh!

Marco Biagi: I am not going to do any more puns. [Applause.] The priority and need of this community here is, first, for me to stop telling bad jokes and, secondly, for me to wind up the debate.

If there is a conclusion to the debate, it is that much of what we are trying to codify in the bill is already happening. There are trailblazers who are making superhuman efforts to achieve stronger and more empowered communities. However, it should not require someone to be superhuman to achieve that, which is why we want to make it just a little bit easier in a wide range of areas for people to be that active community and to step forward, recognising that regeneration is done by communities and not to communities. We want to ensure that we empower the disempowered people across this country and create the healthy and vibrant democracy and society that all of us in Parliament want.

The Presiding Officer: That concludes the debate and the puns on the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill.

PART 1
NATIONAL OUTCOMES

1 National outcomes

(1) The Scottish Ministers must determine outcomes for Scotland (referred to in this Part as “the national outcomes”) that result from, or are contributed to by, the carrying out, by the persons mentioned in subsection (1A), of the functions mentioned in subsection (1B).

(1A) The persons are—
(a) a cross-border public authority,
(b) any other Scottish public authority,
(c) any other person carrying out functions of a public nature.

(1B) The functions are—
(a) in the case of a cross-border public authority, any function that is exercisable in or as regards Scotland and does not relate to reserved matters,
(b) in the case of any other Scottish public authority, any function that does not relate to reserved matters,
(c) in the case of any other person carrying out functions of a public nature, any such function that is exercisable in or as regards Scotland and does not relate to reserved matters.
(1D) In determining the national outcomes, the Scottish Ministers must have regard to the reduction of inequalities of outcome which result from socio-economic disadvantage.

(2) Before determining the national outcomes, the Scottish Ministers must—

   (a) consult—

   (i) such persons who appear to them to represent the interests of communities in Scotland, and

   (ii) such other persons as they consider appropriate,

   (b) having consulted the persons mentioned in paragraph (a), prepare draft national outcomes, and

   (c) consult the Scottish Parliament on the draft national outcomes during the consultation period.

(2A) In consulting the Scottish Parliament under paragraph (c) of subsection (2), the Scottish Ministers must also lay before the Parliament a document describing—

   (a) the consultation carried out under paragraph (a) of that subsection,

   (b) any representations received in response to that consultation, and

   (c) whether and if so how those representations have been taken account of in preparing the draft national outcomes.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must, no earlier than the expiry of the consultation period, publish the national outcomes.

(3A) In subsections (2) and (3), “consultation period” means the period of 40 days beginning with the day on which the consultation mentioned in subsection (2)(c) commences; and in calculating the period of 40 days, no account is to be taken of any time during which the Scottish Parliament is dissolved or in recess for more than 4 days.

(4) The persons mentioned in subsection (1A) must have regard to the national outcomes in carrying out the functions mentioned in subsection (1B).

(4A) Nothing in subsection (4) requires the Scottish Parliament or the Scottish Parliamentary Corporate Body to have regard to the national outcomes in carrying out any of their functions.

(7) In this section—

   “community” includes any community based on common interest, identity or geography,

   “cross-border public authority” has the meaning given by section 88(5) of the Scotland Act 1998, “reserved matters” is to be construed in accordance with that Act.

2 Review of national outcomes

(1) The Scottish Ministers may review the national outcomes at any time (but subject to subsections (2) and (3)).

(2) The Scottish Ministers must begin a review of the national outcomes before the expiry of the period of 5 years beginning with the date on which the national outcomes were published under section 1(3).
(3) The Scottish Ministers must begin further reviews of the national outcomes before the expiry of each 5 year period.

(3A) In carrying out a review of the national outcomes under subsection (1), (2) or (3), the Scottish Ministers must consult—
	(a) such persons who appear to them to represent the interests of communities in Scotland, and
	(b) such other persons as they consider appropriate.

(4) Following a review, the Scottish Ministers—
	(za) may propose revisions to the national outcomes,
	(zb) must—
	(i) where they propose to make revisions to the national outcomes, consult the Scottish Parliament on the proposed revisions during the consultation period,
	(ii) where they do not propose to make revisions to the national outcomes, consult the Scottish Parliament during the consultation period on the national outcomes as most recently published under section 1(3) or paragraph (b)(i) or republished under paragraph (b)(ii),

(a) may revise the national outcomes after the expiry of the consultation period, and
(b) must—
	(i) where the national outcomes are revised, publish the outcomes as revised,
	(ii) where the national outcomes are not revised, republish the outcomes after the expiry of the consultation period.

(4A) In consulting the Scottish Parliament under subsection (4)(zb), the Scottish Ministers must also lay before the Parliament a document describing—
	(a) the consultation carried out under subsection (3A),
	(b) any representations received in response to that consultation, and
	(c) where they propose to make revisions to the national outcomes, whether and if so how those representations have been taken account of in preparing the proposed revisions.

(6) References to the national outcomes in section 1(4) and in section 3 include references to the national outcomes revised under subsection (4)(a) of this section.

(7) In subsection (3), “5 year period” means the period of 5 years beginning with the date on which the national outcomes were published under sub-paragraph (i) of paragraph (b) of subsection (4) or, as the case may be, republished under sub-paragraph (ii) of that paragraph.

(7A) In subsection (3A), “community” includes any community based on common interest, identity or geography.

(8) In subsection (4), “consultation period” means the period of 40 days beginning with the day on which the consultation mentioned in subsection (4)(zb)(i) or (ii) commences; and in calculating the period of 40 days, no account is to be taken of any time during which the Scottish Parliament is dissolved or in recess for more than 4 days.
3 Reports

(1) The Scottish Ministers must prepare and publish reports about the extent to which the national outcomes have been achieved.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must include in reports published under subsection (1) information about any change in the extent to which the national outcomes have been achieved since the publication of the previous report under that subsection.

(3) Reports must be prepared and published at such times as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.

PART 2

COMMUNITY PLANNING

4 Community planning

(1) Each local authority and the persons listed in schedule 1 must carry out planning for the area of the local authority for the purpose mentioned in subsection (2) (“community planning”).

(2) The purpose is improvement in the achievement of outcomes resulting from, or contributed to by, the provision of services delivered by or on behalf of the local authority or the persons listed in schedule 1.

(2A) In carrying out community planning, the local authority and the persons listed in schedule 1 must—

(a) participate with each other, and

(b) participate with any community body (as mentioned in paragraph (c) of subsection (5)) in such a way as to enable that body to participate in community planning to the extent mentioned in that paragraph.

(3) Outcomes of the type mentioned in subsection (2) (“local outcomes”) must be consistent with the national outcomes determined under section 1(1) or revised under section 2(4)(a).

(4) In carrying out the functions conferred on them by this Part in relation to the area of a local authority—

(a) the local authority for the area and the persons listed in schedule 1 are collectively referred to in this Part as a “community planning partnership”, and

(b) the authority and each such person is referred to in this Part as a “community planning partner”.

(5) Each community planning partnership must—

(a) consider which community bodies are likely to be able to contribute to community planning having regard in particular to which of those bodies represent the interests of persons who experience inequalities of outcome which result from socio-economic disadvantage,

(b) make all reasonable efforts to secure the participation of those community bodies in community planning, and
(c) to the extent (if any) that those community bodies wish to participate in community planning, take such steps as are reasonable to enable the community bodies to participate in community planning to that extent.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations modify schedule 1 so as to—

(a) add a person or a description of person,
(b) remove an entry listed in it,
(c) amend an entry listed in it.

(7) Regulations under subsection (6) may provide that a person or a description of person listed in schedule 1 is to participate in community planning for a specific purpose.

(8) In this section, “community bodies”, in relation to a community planning partnership, means bodies, whether or not formally constituted, established for purposes which consist of or include that of promoting or improving the interests of any communities (however described) resident or otherwise present in the area of the local authority for which the community planning partnership is carrying out community planning.

4A Socio-economic inequalities

In carrying out functions conferred by this Part, a community planning partnership must act with a view to reducing inequalities of outcome which result from socio-economic disadvantage unless the partnership considers that it would be inappropriate to do so.

5 Local outcomes improvement plan

(1) Each community planning partnership must prepare and publish a local outcomes improvement plan.

(2) A local outcomes improvement plan is a plan setting out—

(a) local outcomes to which priority is to be given by the community planning partnership with a view to improving the achievement of the outcomes,
(b) a description of the proposed improvement in the achievement of the outcomes,
(c) the period within which the proposed improvement is to be achieved, and
(d) a description of the needs and circumstances of persons residing in the area of the local authority to which the plan relates.

(3) In preparing a local outcomes improvement plan, a community planning partnership must consult—

(a) such community bodies as it considers appropriate, and
(b) such other persons as it considers appropriate.

(4) Before publishing a local outcomes improvement plan, the community planning partnership must take account of —

(a) any representations received by it by virtue of subsection (3), and
(b) the needs and circumstances of persons residing in the area of the local authority to which the plan relates.
6 Local outcomes improvement plan: review

(1) Each community planning partnership must keep under review the question of whether it is making progress in improving the achievement of each local outcome referred to in section 5(2)(a).

(2) Each community planning partnership—

(a) must from time to time review the local outcomes improvement plan published by it under section 5, and

(b) may, following such a review, revise the plan.

(3) Subsections (3) and (4) of section 5 apply in relation to a local outcomes improvement plan revised under subsection (2)(b) as they apply in relation to a local outcomes improvement plan prepared and published under subsection (1) of that section (but subject to the modification in subsection (4)).

(4) The modification is that the reference in subsection (4)(a) of section 5 to representations received by virtue of subsection (3) of that section is to be read as if it were a reference to representations received by virtue of that subsection as applied by subsection (3) of this section.

(5) Where a community planning partnership revises a local outcomes improvement plan under subsection (2)(b), it must publish a revised plan.

(6) Subsection (2) applies in relation to a revised local outcomes improvement plan published under subsection (5) as it applies in relation to a local outcomes improvement plan published under section 5; and the duty in subsection (5) applies accordingly.

7 Local outcomes improvement plan: progress report

(1) Each community planning partnership must prepare and publish a local outcomes improvement plan progress report for each reporting year.

(2) A local outcomes improvement plan progress report is a report setting out—

(a) the community planning partnership’s assessment of whether there has been any improvement in the achievement of each local outcome referred to in section 5(2)(a) during the reporting year, and

(b) the extent to which—

(i) the community planning partnership has participated with community bodies in carrying out its functions under this Part during the reporting year, and

(ii) that participation has been effective in enabling community bodies to contribute to community planning.

(3) In this section, “reporting year” means—

(a) a period of one year beginning on 1 April, or

(b) in relation to a particular community planning partnership, a period of one year beginning on such other date as may be specified in a direction given by the Scottish Ministers to the community planning partnership.
7A Localities: comparison of outcomes

(1) Each community planning partnership must, for the purposes of this Part, divide the area of the local authority into smaller areas.

(2) The smaller areas mentioned in subsection (1) (“localities”) must be of such type or description as may be specified by the Scottish Ministers by regulations.

(b) the owner of the land.

(2) A Part 3A community body may, at any time after—

(2) Where the Part 3A community body is unable to fulfil the duty imposed by subsection (1)(b) because the land or part of the land in respect of which Ministers’ consent was given is not owned by the person named as its owner in the application made under section 97G, it must refer that matter to Ministers.

(3) On a reference under subsection (2), Ministers must direct that the Part 3A community body’s right to buy the land is, so far as proceeding on that application, extinguished.

(4) The owner of the land being bought is obliged—

(a) to make available to the Part 3A community body such deeds and other documents as are sufficient to enable the body to proceed to complete its title to the land, and

(b) to transfer title accordingly.

(5) If, within 6 weeks of the date on which Ministers consent to an application to buy land, the owner of the land refuses or fails to make those deeds and other documents available, or they cannot be found, the Lands Tribunal may, on the application of the Part 3A community body, order the owner or any other person appearing to the Lands Tribunal to have those deeds and documents to produce them.

(6) If the owner of the land refuses or fails to effect such sufficient transfer as is mentioned in subsection (4), the Lands Tribunal may, on the application of the Part 3A community body, authorise its clerk to adjust, execute and deliver such deeds or other documents as will complete such transfer to the like force and effect as if done by the owner or person entitled.

(1) The consideration for the transfer of the land is its value as assessed under section 97S.

(2) Subject to subsections (3) and (4), that consideration must be paid not later than the “final settlement date”, being the date on which expires a 6 month period beginning with the date (the “consent date”) when Ministers consented to the application made under section 97G to buy the land.

(3) Where—

(a) the Part 3A community body and the owner so agree, the consideration may be paid on a date later than the final settlement date,

(c) that valuation is the subject of an appeal which has not been determined within 4 months of the consent date, the consideration must be paid not later than 2 months after the date of that determination.

(4) If, on the date the consideration is to be paid, the owner is not able to effect the grant of a good and marketable title to the Part 3A community body—

(a) the consideration, or

must be consigned into the Lands Tribunal until that title is granted or the Part 3A community body gives notice to the Tribunal of its decision not to proceed to complete the transaction.

(5) Except where subsection (4) applies, if the consideration remains unpaid after the date not later than which it is to be paid, the Part 3A community body’s application made under section 97G in relation to the land is to be treated as withdrawn.

(6) Any heritable security which burdened the land immediately before title is granted to the Part 3A community body in pursuance of this section ceases to do so on the recording of that title in the Register of Sasines or registration in the Land Register of Scotland of the body’s interest in the land.

(7) Where such a security also burdens land other than the land in respect of which title is granted to the Part 3A community body, the security does not, by virtue of subsection (6), cease to burden that other land.

(8) Unless the creditors in right of any such security otherwise agree, the Part 3A community body must pay to them according to their respective rights and preferences any sum which would, but for this subsection, be paid to the owner by the Part 3A community body as consideration for the land.

(9) Any sum paid by a Part 3A community body under subsection (8) must be deducted from the sum which the body is to pay to the owner as consideration for the land.

97S Assessment of value of land etc.

(1) Where Ministers consent to an application made under section 97G, they must, subject to subsection (2), within 7 days of doing so appoint a valuer, being a person who appears to Ministers to be suitably qualified, independent and to have knowledge and experience of valuing land of a kind which is similar to the land being bought, to assess the value of the land to which the application relates.

(2) The validity of anything done under this section is not affected by any failure by Ministers to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (1).

(3) In assessing the value of land in pursuance of an appointment under subsection (1), a valuer—

(a) does not act on behalf of the owner of the land or of the Part 3A community body which is exercising its right to buy the land under this Part, and
(b) is to act as an expert and not as an arbiter.

(4) The value to be assessed is the market value of the land as at the date when Ministers consented to the application made under section 97G relating to the land.

(5) The “market value” of land is the aggregate of—

(a) the value it would have on the open market as between a seller and a buyer both of whom are, as respects the transaction, willing,

(b) any depreciation in the value of other land or interests belonging to the seller which may result from the transfer of land, including depreciation caused by division of the land by the transfer of land to the Part 3A community body, and

(c) the amount attributable to any disturbance to the seller which may arise in connection with the transfer of the land to the Part 3A community body.

(6) In arriving, for the purposes of this section, at the value which land would have on the open market in the circumstances mentioned in subsection (5)(a)—

(a) account may be taken, in so far as a seller and buyer such as are mentioned in subsection (5) would do so, of any factor attributable to the known existence of a person who (not being the Part 3A community body which is exercising its right to buy the land) would be willing to buy the land at a price higher than others would because of a characteristic of the land which relates peculiarly to that person’s interest in buying it,

(b) no account is to be taken of—

(i) any depreciation of the type mentioned in subsection (5)(b),

(ii) any disturbance of the type mentioned in subsection (5)(c),

(iii) the absence of the period of time during which the land would, on the open market, be likely to be advertised and exposed for sale.

(7) The expense of a valuation under this section is to be met by Ministers.

(8) In carrying out a valuation under this section, the valuer must—

(a) invite—

(i) the owner of the land, and

(ii) the Part 3A community body which is exercising its right to buy the land,

(b) consider any representations made accordingly.

(8A) Where written representations under subsection (8) are received—

(a) from the owner of the land, the valuer must invite the Part 3A community body which is exercising its right to buy the land to send its views on the representations in writing,
(b) from the Part 3A community body which is exercising its right to buy the land, the valuer must invite the owner of the land to send the owner’s views on the representations in writing.

(8B) In carrying out a valuation under this section, the valuer must consider any views sent under subsection (8A).

(9) Where the Part 3A community body and the owner of the land have agreed the valuation of the land they must notify the valuer in writing of that valuation.

(10) The valuer must, within the period set out in subsection (11), notify Ministers, the Part 3A community body and the owner of the land of the assessed value of the land.

(11) The period referred to in subsection (10) is the period of 8 weeks beginning with the date of appointment of the valuer or such longer period as Ministers may, on an application by the valuer, fix.

(12) The validity of anything done under this Part is not affected by any failure by a valuer to comply with the time limit specified in subsection (11).

97T Compensation

(1) Any person, including an owner or former owner of land, who has incurred loss or expense—

(a) in complying with the requirements of this Part following the making of an application under section 97G by a Part 3A community body,

(b) as a result of the withdrawal by the Part 3A community body of its confirmation under section 97P or its failure otherwise to complete the purchase after having so confirmed its intention under that section, or

(c) as a result of the failure of the Part 3A community body which made that application to complete the purchase, is entitled to recover the amount of that loss or expense from the Part 3A community body.

(2) There is no such entitlement where the application made under section 97G is refused.

(6) Where either of the parties refers a question to the Lands Tribunal as mentioned in subsection (5), the party so referring the question must, within 7 days of the date of referring it, notify Ministers in writing of—

(b) that the Part 3A community body has taken all reasonable steps to obtain money in order to pay, or to pay in full, that amount (other than applying for a grant under this section) but has been unable to obtain the money, and

(c) that it is in the public interest that Ministers pay the grant.

(3) The fact that all the circumstances set out in subsection (2) are applicable in a particular case does not prevent Ministers from refusing to pay a grant in that case.

(4) A grant under this section may be made subject to conditions which may stipulate repayment in the event of breach.

(5) Ministers may pay a grant under this section only on the application of a Part 3A community body.

(6) An application for such a grant must be made in such form and in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed.
