

Hello,

I would like my concerns about the loss of wild salmon noted. At the age of 72, I can remember fisherman at the river Don, Parkhill beat lining the river bank all of whom were catching Salmon regularly. Now when I take a walk along the river occasionally you will see one angler. When asking if they have caught anything, I'm told there are no fish, he just comes here to go through the motions to get sme fresh air. I put this down to one thing, salmon farms. You can blame seals, goosanders, or whatever but there has always been wildlife that never upset the natural balance. Scotland should follow the Canadian example and bann salmon farms in sensitive areas.

Thank you,
Herbert Petrie
