Premises licence: transfer on application of person other than licence holder

(1) Section 34 (transfer on application of person other than licence holder) of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (3)—

(a) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (d) is repealed, and

(b) after that paragraph insert “, and

“(e) for any other reason, the business that was (prior to the event in question) carried on in the licensed premises to which the licence relates ceases to be carried on in those premises.”.

(3) In subsection (4), insert at the beginning “Subject to subsection (4A),”.

(4) After that subsection insert—

“(4A) In the case of an application made following the event specified in subsection (3)(e)—

(a) subsection (8) of section 33 applies as if, after the words “the Board must” there were inserted “, if satisfied in all the circumstances that it is reasonable to do so,”, and

(b) subsection (10)(b) of that section applies as if, after the words “if not so satisfied,” there were inserted “but otherwise satisfied that in all the circumstances it is reasonable to do so.”.

Kenny MacAskill

693 After section 132, insert—

Premises licences: connected persons and interested parties

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 40 insert—

“Connected persons and interested parties
40A Connected persons and interested parties: licence holder’s duty to notify changes

(1) A premises licence holder must, not later than one month after a person becomes or ceases to be—
   (a) a connected person in relation to the licence holder, or
   (b) an interested party in relation to the licensed premises, give the appropriate Licensing Board notice of that fact.

(2) A notice under subsection (1) that a person has become a connected person or an interested party must specify—
   (a) the name and address of the person, and
   (b) if the person is an individual, the person’s date of birth.

(3) Where a Licensing Board receives a notice under subsection (1), the Board must give a copy of the notice to the appropriate chief constable.

(4) A premises licence holder who fails, without reasonable excuse, to comply with subsection (1) commits an offence.

(5) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (4) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 2 on the standard scale.”.

(3) In section 48 (notification of change of name or address)—
   (a) in subsection (1)—
      (i) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and
      (ii) after paragraph (b) insert “, or
   (c) the name or address of any person who is—
      (i) a connected person in relation to the licence holder, or
      (ii) an interested party in relation to the licensed premises,”,
   (b) after subsection (2) insert—
      “(2A) Where a Licensing Board receives a notice under subsection (1), the Board must give a copy of the notice to the appropriate chief constable.”.

(4) In section 147 (interpretation), after subsection (4) insert—
      “(5) For the purposes of this Act, a person is an interested party in relation to licensed premises if the person is not the holder of the premises licence nor the premises manager in respect of the premises but—
      (a) has an interest in the premises as an owner or tenant, or
      (b) has management and control over the premises or the business carried on on the premises.”.

(5) In section 148 (index of defined expressions), in the table, insert at the appropriate place—
      “interested party section 147(5).”.

Robert Brown

543 After section 132, insert—
<Provisional premises licences>

(1) Section 45 (provisional premises licence) of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (6), for “2 years” substitute “5 years”.

(3) In subsection (8), paragraph (b) and the word “and” immediately preceding it are repealed.

(4) In subsection (10), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—

“(a) for subsection (2) there were substituted—

“(2) An application under subsection (1) must be accompanied by—

(a) a plan sufficient to identify the site of the subject premises and give a general indication of their size,

(b) a document giving a general indication of—

(i) the anticipated capacity of the premises,

(ii) the hours during which it is proposed to serve alcohol on the premises,

(iii) the extent to which it is proposed to allow children or young persons entry to the premises, and

(c) the certificate required by section 50(2).”, and

(b) subsections (4) and (5) were omitted.”.

(5) After subsection (10) insert—

“(10A) Sections 21 to 32 have effect in relation to any provisional premises licence application and to any provisional premises licence as if references to—

(a) the operating plan were read as references to the document required under section 20(2)(b) (as substituted by subsection (10)(a)), and

(b) the layout plan were read as references to the plan required under section 20(2)(a) (as so substituted).”.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence applications: food hygiene certificates>

(1) Section 50 of the 2005 Act (certificates as to planning, building standards and food hygiene) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (7), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may, by order, specify.”.

(3) After subsection (7), insert—

“(7A) An order under subsection (7) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.”.

(4) In subsection (8)(c), for “the 1990 Act” substitute “section 5 of the Food Safety Act 1990 (c.16)”.

Kenny MacAskill

176 After section 132, insert—
After section 133

Bill Aitken

548 After section 133, insert—

<Consumption of alcohol on licensed premises outwith licensed hours

In section 63(2) of the 2005 Act (exceptions to offence of allowing sale, consumption etc. of alcohol outwith licensed hours), after paragraph (f) insert—

“(g) allow alcohol to be consumed on licensed premises at any time within 45 minutes of the end of any period of licensed hours by—

(i) the premises licence holder,

(ii) the premises manager, or

(iii) any person aged 18 or over who, at the end of that period of licensed hours, was working on the premises.”.>

Section 134

Kenny MacAskill

539 In section 134, page 134, line 17, leave out from <after> to end of line 22 and insert <in sub-paragraph (4), after “Board” in the second place where it appears insert “or to a member of staff provided under paragraph 8(1)(b)”.

After section 134

Kenny MacAskill

449 After section 134, insert—

<Extended hours applications: notification period

(1) Section 69 of the 2005 Act (notification of extended hours application) is amended as follows.

(2) After subsection (3), add—

“(4) Subsections (5) and (6) apply where the Licensing Board is satisfied that the application requires to be dealt with quickly.

(5) Subsections (2) and (3) have effect in relation to the application as if the references to the period of 10 days were references to such shorter period of not less than 24 hours as the Board may determine.

(6) Subsection (3) has effect in relation to the application as if for the word “must” there were substituted “may”.”.>

Section 136

Kenny MacAskill

177 In section 136, page 135, line 3, at end insert—

<“(ba) the notice does not include a recommendation under section 73(4),>
In section 136, page 135, leave out lines 22 to 27 and insert—

(a) hold a hearing for the purposes of considering and determining the application, and
(b) after having regard to the circumstances in which the personal licence previously held expired or, as the case may be, was surrendered—
   (i) refuse the application, or
   (ii) grant the application.”.>

After section 137

After section 137, insert—

<Appeals

In section 131(2) of the 2005 Act (appeals), the words “by way of stated case, at the instance of the appellant,” are repealed.>

After section 137, insert—

<Liability for offences

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.
(2) In each of the following provisions, the word “knowingly” is repealed—
   (a) section 1(3)(b),
   (b) section 103(1),
   (c) section 106(2),
   (d) section 107(1),
   (e) section 118(1),
   (f) section 120(2) and (3),
   (g) section 121(1),
   (h) section 127(4), and
   (i) section 128(5).
(3) After section 141 (offences by bodies corporate etc.) insert—

“141A  Defence of due diligence for certain offences

(1) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence to which this section applies to prove that the person—
   (a) did not know that the offence was being committed, and
   (b) exercised all due diligence to prevent the offence being committed.
(2) This section applies to an offence under any of the following provisions of this Act—
section 1(3)(b),
section 103(1),
section 106(2),
section 107(1),
section 118(1),
section 120(2) or (3),
section 121(1),
section 127(4),
section 128(5).

141B Vicarious liability of premises licence holders and interested parties

(1) Subsection (2) applies where, on or in relation to any licensed premises, a person commits an offence to which this section applies while acting as the employee or agent of—
   (a) the holder of the premises licence, or
   (b) an interested party.

(2) The holder of the premises licence or, as the case may be, the interested party is also guilty of the offence and liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(3) It is a defence for a holder of a premises licence or an interested party charged with an offence to which this section applies by virtue of subsection (2) to prove that the holder of the licence or, as the case may be, the interested party—
   (a) did not know that the offence was being committed by the employee or agent, and
   (b) exercised all due diligence to prevent the offence being committed.

(4) Proceedings may be taken against the holder of the premises licence or the interested party in respect of the offence whether or not proceedings are also taken against the employee or agent who committed the offence.

(5) This section applies to an offence under any of the following provisions of this Act—
   section 1(3),
   section 15(5),
   section 63(1),
   section 97(7),
   section 102(1),
   section 103(1),
   section 106(2),
   section 107(1),
   section 108(2) or (3),
section 113(1),
section 114,
section 115(2),
section 118(1),
section 119(1),
section 120(2),
section 121(1),
section 138(5).”>

Schedule 4

Kenny MacAskill
180 In schedule 4, page 149, line 11, leave out <22(2 or>

Kenny MacAskill
181 In schedule 4, page 150, leave out lines 18 to 21

Section 140

Kenny MacAskill
182 Leave out section 140

Section 142

Kenny MacAskill
183 Leave out section 142

Section 143

Kenny MacAskill
184 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section (Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions)(1).>

Kenny MacAskill
540 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section (Convictions by courts in other EU member States)(2).>

Kenny MacAskill
450 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—
<(  ) an order under section (European evidence warrants)(1).>

Kenny MacAskill

186 In section 143, page 138, leave out line 33

Kenny MacAskill

187 In section 143, page 138, line 33, at end insert—

<(  ) an order under section 146(1) containing provisions which modify any enactment (including this Act), or>

Kenny MacAskill

188 In section 143, page 138, line 34, leave out <146(1) or>

Robert Brown

392 In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

(  ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 17(1), (2) or (3),>

Robert Brown

549 In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

(  ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 38(1), (2), (3) or (4),>

Schedule 5

Kenny MacAskill

189 In schedule 5, page 151, line 35, at end insert—

<The Libel Act 1792 (c.60)

The Libel Act 1792 is repealed.
The Criminal Libel Act 1819 (c.8)

The Criminal Libel Act 1819 is repealed.
The Defamation Act 1952 (c.66)

In the Defamation Act 1952, section 17(2) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

451 In schedule 5, page 152, line 10, at end insert—

<The Law Officers Act 1944 (c.25)

In section 2(3) of the Law Officers Act 1944 (Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland), for the words from “three” to the end substitute “287 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46)”>
Kenny MacAskill

452 In schedule 5, page 152, line 12, leave out from <In> to <1974> and insert—

  ( ) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 is amended as follows.
  ( ) In section 1>

Kenny MacAskill

453 In schedule 5, page 152, line 15, at end insert—

  ( ) In section 6(6)(bb) (convictions in service disciplinary proceedings), for “the Schedule” substitute “Schedule 1”.
  ( ) The Schedule (service disciplinary proceedings) is renumbered as Schedule 1.>

Kenny MacAskill

190 In schedule 5, page 152, line 24, at end insert—

<The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 (c.36)

The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

191 In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, after <89> insert <, 111>

Kenny MacAskill

192 In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, at end insert—

<The Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (c.52)

In section 243(4)(b) of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992
(restriction of offence of conspiracy: Scotland), the words “or sedition” are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

193 In schedule 5, page 153, line 12, at end insert—

<The Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.40)

In Schedule 4 to the Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 44, sub-paragraph (2) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

386 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 11 (certain offences committed outside Scotland)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”,
(b) in subsection (4), for “dealt with, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.

Kenny MacAskill

454 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—
<In section 17A (right of person accused of sexual offence to be told about restriction on conduct of defence: arrest), in subsection (1)—

(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

512 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 18(8)(c) (power to take prints etc. under authority of a warrant unaffected by section), for “prints, impressions” substitute “relevant physical data”.

In section 19(1)(b) (samples etc. taken from person convicted of offence), the words “impression or”, in both places where they occur, are repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

513 In schedule 5, page 154, line 4, at end insert—

<Section 20 (use of prints, samples etc.) is repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

514 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 23A (bail and liberation where person already in custody)—

(a) in each of subsections (1) and (4), for “23 or 65(8C)” substitute “23, 65(8C) or 107A(2)(b)”, and

(b) in subsection (3), for “22A(3) or 23(7)” substitute “22A(3), 23(7) or 107A(2)(b)”.

Kenny MacAskill

455 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 35 (judicial examination), in subsection (4A)—

(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

456 In schedule 5, page 154, line 42, at end insert—

<In section 66 (service and lodging of indictment etc.), in subsection (6A)(a)—

(a) for sub-paragraphs (zi) and (i) substitute—
“(i) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer;,” and

(b) in sub-paragraph (iii), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

In section 71 (first diet)—

(a) in subsection (A1), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(b) in subsection (B1)(c), for the words “before the trial diet” substitute “in relation to any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(c) in subsection (1A)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(d) in subsection (1B)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(e) in subsection (5A)(b), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”, and

(f) after subsection (7), insert—

“(7A) In subsections (A1) and (5A)(b), “relevant hearing” means—

(a) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (a) of subsection (B1), any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence,

(b) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (b) of that subsection, a hearing referred to in section 288E(2A),

(c) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (c) of that subsection, a hearing in respect of which an order is made under section 288F.”.

Kenny MacAskill

457 In schedule 5, page 155, line 3, at end insert—

<In section 79 (preliminary pleas and preliminary issues), in subsection (2)(b)(ii), after “under section” insert “22ZB(3)(b),”.

Kenny MacAskill

458 In schedule 5, page 155, line 23, at end insert—

<In section 140 (citation), in subsection (2A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer;,” and
(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 144 (procedure at first diet), in subsection (3A)—
(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—
“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 146 (plea of not guilty), in subsection (3A)—
(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—
“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

414 In schedule 5, page 155, line 31, leave out paragraphs 35 to 39

Kenny MacAskill

515 In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—
<The Offensive Weapons Act 1996 (c.26)

In the Offensive Weapons Act 1996, section 5 is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

194 In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—
<The Defamation Act 1996 (c.31)

In the Defamation Act 1996, section 20(2) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

195 In schedule 5, page 157, line 10, leave out paragraph 44 and insert—
<(1) The Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 is amended as follows.
(2) In section 9 (power to specify hospital unit), in subsection (1)(a), for “insane” substitute “found not criminally responsible or unfit for trial”.
(3) In section 13 (increase in sentences available to sheriff and district courts), subsection (2) is repealed.
(4) In section 56 (powers of the court on remand or committal of children and young persons), subsection (3) is repealed.>

97
Kenny MacAskill

196 In schedule 5, page 157, line 28, at end insert—

<The Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (c.28)

Section 10 of the Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (exemption from liability: activities in relation to publications) is amended as follows—

(a) in subsection (1), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,
(b) in subsection (2)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,
(c) in subsection (3), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,
(d) in subsection (4)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,
(e) in subsection (6)(a), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed, and
(f) in subsection (8), the words “and criminal liability” are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

459 In schedule 5, page 157, line 36, at end insert—

<The Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 5)

In the Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 the following provisions are repealed—

(a) in section 4 (prohibition on accused conducting case in person in certain cases), subsection (4),
(b) section 17 (bail conditions: remote monitoring of restrictions on movements), and
(c) in the schedule (further modifications of the 1995 Act), paragraph 55.>

Kenny MacAskill

695 In schedule 5, page 158, line 32, at end insert—

<In section 74 (appointment of stipendiary magistrates), subsection (6) is repealed.

After section 74 insert—

“74A Exercise of functions by stipendiary magistrates

(1) A stipendiary magistrate may, by reason of holding that office—

(a) exercise the same judicial and signing functions as are exercisable by a JP,
(b) do so in the same manner as a JP (including by using the title of office of JP).

(2) For the purpose of subsection (1)—

(a) the acts of a stipendiary magistrate are valid as if the magistrate were a JP,
(b) it does not matter if an enactment from which a JP derives authority to act in a specific case does not bear to give equivalent authority to a stipendiary magistrate.
(3) However, subsections (1) and (2) are subject to any provision of an enactment which expressly excludes a stipendiary magistrate from acting in a specific case.

(4) This section does not limit any other functions of a stipendiary magistrate (in particular, those exercisable in that capacity only).”.

In section 76 (signing functions)—

(a) in subsection (2), for “signing functions in the same manner as” substitute “the same signing functions as are exercisable by”,

(b) subsection (4) is repealed.

Kenny MacAskill 197 In schedule 5, page 158, line 36, at end insert <and

(ii) sub-paragraph (b) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill 387 In schedule 5, page 159, line 12, at end insert—

<The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9)

In section 55(7) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (offences committed outside the United Kingdom), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.

Kenny MacAskill 198 In schedule 5, page 159, line 14, leave out <134> and insert <156>
5th Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- a list of any amendments already debated;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the fifth day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Children – age of criminal responsibility and minimum age of prosecution
379, 126, 127, 389, 549

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 379 pre-empts amendments 126 and 127

Offences – liability of partners
128, 129

Witness statements
130, 131

Victims’ representation at Parole Board hearings
403

Convictions in other UK or EU jurisdictions
518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 540

Power of sheriff or JP to grant warrants to police based outside sheriffdom 420

Bail conditions – remote monitoring requirements
132, 197

Prosecution on indictment – Scottish Law Officers
421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 451

Dockets and charges in sex cases
428
Remand and committal of children and young persons
541

Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused 429, 454, 455, 456, 458, 459

Crown appeals
462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 514

Retention of samples etc. – adults
478, 404, 405, 479, 406, 480, 407, 481, 482, 408, 494, 499, 502, 503, 504, 512, 513

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 478 pre-empts amendment 404

Retention of samples etc. – alternatives to prosecution
418, 419

Retention of samples etc. – children referred to children’s hearings
409, 410, 380, 483, 484, 545, 381, 485, 486, 411, 546, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 382, 493, 412

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 410 pre-empts amendments 380, 483, 484 and 545
Amendment 380 pre-empts amendments 483 and 484
Amendment 411 pre-empts amendments 546, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492 and 382
Amendment 492 pre-empts amendment 382
Amendment 493 pre-empts amendment 412

Use of samples etc.
495, 496, 497, 498, 500, 501, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510

Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission – grounds for appeal
133, 134, 135

Prior statements by witnesses – abolition of competence test
430

Witness statements – use during trial
383

Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences
384

Witness anonymity orders
431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441

European evidence warrants
442, 450
Jurors in criminal trials
443, 415, 416, 511, 417

Data matching for detection of fraud etc.
136, 137

Collection of information on criminal injuries
551

Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc. (minor corrections etc.)
138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 144, 198

Foreign travel orders – surrender of passports
444, 445, 446

Sex offender notification requirements
145

Risk of sexual harm orders – spent convictions
146

Police and SCDEA – authorisation of surveillance
523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528

Police and SCDEA – authorisation of interference with property
529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536

Enhanced criminal record certificates: disclosure of sex offender notification requirements
537, 538

Rehabilitation of offenders – spent alternatives to prosecution
447, 452, 453

Medical services in prisons
448

Assistance for victim support
413

Disclosure - meaning of “information”
696, 553, 697, 555, 556

Provision of information to prosecutor
557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 689
Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information
566, 567, 147, 148, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 149, 573, 574, 150, 575, 151, 576, 152, 577, 578, 579, 153, 580, 581, 154, 582, 155, 583, 156, 157, 606, 158, 607, 617, 159, 619, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 690, 166, 691

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 148 pre-empts amendments 568, 569, 570 and 571
Amendment 572 and amendment 149 are direct alternatives
Amendment 574 pre-empts amendment 150
Amendment 575 pre-empts amendment 151
Amendment 576 pre-empts amendment 152
Amendment 579 pre-empts amendment 153
Amendment 581 pre-empts amendment 154
Amendment 606 and amendment 158 are direct alternatives
Amendment 617 and amendment 159 are direct alternatives
Amendment 619 and amendment 160 are direct alternatives
Amendment 624 and amendment 162 are direct alternatives
Amendment 626 in group (Application to court – orders preventing or restricting disclosure) pre-empts amendment 163 in this group
Amendment 646 in group (Application to court – orders preventing or restricting disclosure) and amendment 164 in this group are direct alternatives
Amendment 667 in group (Appeals against disclosure orders etc.) pre-empts amendment 165 in this group
Amendment 690 pre-empts amendment 166
Amendment 166 pre-empts amendment 691

Defence statements
584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 611, 624

Court rulings on disclosure
603, 604, 605, 615, 616

Disclosure – application to appellate proceedings
608, 609, 610, 612, 613, 614

Means of disclosure
618

Confidentiality of disclosed information and disclosure to third party
620, 621, 622, 623, 692

Application to court – orders preventing or restricting disclosure

Orders preventing or restricting disclosure - applications by Secretary of State
653, 654, 655, 656, 679, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685
Disclosure – appointment of special counsel
657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 668, 672, 674

Appeals against disclosure orders etc.
662, 663, 664, 665, 667

Abolition of common law rules on disclosure
668

Mental disorder and unfitness for trial
24, 167, 195

Conditions to which licences under the 1982 Act are to be subject 168

Licensing – powers of entry etc. (definition of “authorised civilian employee”) 169

Licensing of metal dealers
385

Licensing of street trading – food hygiene certificates
170

Licensing of market operators
171, 172, 2, 3, 4

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 172 pre-empts amendments 2 and 3

Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues
516

Applications for licences
173

Provisions to be considered as part of the Alcohol (Scotland) Bill
174, 182, 186

Premises licence applications
460, 542, 176, 180

Reviews of premises licences – notification of determinations
175

Premises licence – minor variations
547

Premises licence – transfer
550
Premises licences – connected persons and interested parties
693

Provisional premises licences
543

Consumption of alcohol on licensed premises outwith licensed hours
548

Occasional licences
539

Extended hours applications – notification period
449

Personal licence applications
177, 178, 181

Appeals against decisions of licensing board
179

Liability for offences under 2005 Act
694 Corruption in public bodies

183

Orders and regulations – circumstances in which affirmative procedure required
187, 188

Incest and related offences
190

Criminal law – revision
191, 193

Breach of undertakings – consequential modification
457

Exercise of functions by stipendiary magistrates 695

Amendments already debated

Community payback orders – consequential modifications
With 342 – 414

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour
With 112 – 143
Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions
With 105 – 184

Presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention
With 100 – 392, 393

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
With 114 – 189, 192, 194, 196

People trafficking (and consequential provision)
With 371 – 386, 387

Clarification of existing offence prohibiting the carrying of offensive weapons
With 109 – 515
PRESENT:

Bill Aitken (Convener)  Robert Brown
Bill Butler (Deputy Convener)  Angela Constance
Cathie Craigie  Nigel Don
James Kelly  Stewart Maxwell

Also present: Richard Baker, Margaret Curran and David McLetchie.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE AND LICENCING (SCOTLAND) BILL: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 5).

The following amendments were agreed to (by division):

- 132 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
- 478 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
- 482 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
- 485 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
- 486 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
- 492 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
- 493 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
- 415 (For 6, Against 1, Abstentions 1)
- 416 (For 6, Against 1, Abstentions 1)
- 417 (For 7, Against 0, Abstentions 1).

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division):

- 379 (For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
- 126 (For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
- 403 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
- 405 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
- 406 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
- 407 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
- 408 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
- 410 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
- 380 (For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
411 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
546 (For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were moved and, with the agreement of the Committee, withdrawn: 541, 409 and 383.

Amendments 404, 382 and 412 were pre-empted.

The following amendments were not moved: 127, 389, 131, 545 and 381.

Sections 38, 42, 43, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 56, 62, 63, 64, 65 and 67 were agreed to without amendment.

Sections 39, 40, 41, 44, 52, 54, 55, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61 and 66, schedule 3, and sections 68 and 69 were agreed to as amended.

The Committee ended consideration of the Bill for the day, section 69 having been agreed to.
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

10:05

The Convener: Agenda item 2 is the principal business of the day—the fifth day of stage 2 proceedings on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. The committee will not proceed beyond the end of part 5 today. I welcome the Minister for Community Safety, Fergus Ewing MSP, who is accompanied by some familiar faces among the Scottish Government officials. Members should have their copies of the bill, the fifth marshalled list and the fifth list of groupings of amendments.

Section 38—Prosecution of children

The Convener: Amendment 379, in the name of Robert Brown, is grouped with amendments 126, 127, 389 and 549. If amendment 379 is agreed to, amendments 126 and 127 will be pre-empted.

Robert Brown (Glasgow) (LD): Scotland has—notoriously—the lowest age of criminal responsibility in Europe. The idea of prosecuting a child of eight—or, indeed, of 11—is abhorrent and ridiculous. Of course, the possibility of such prosecution will cease even if section 38 is unamended.

It might be said that the difference between raising the age of criminal responsibility and raising the minimum age at which a child can be prosecuted is technical. It is true that, either way, a small number of children will be affected. Few prosecutions take place of young people who are aged between 12 and 14; the graph of prosecutions for offences shows a sharp rise only from the age of 15.

In the background is the welfare-based children’s hearings system, which focuses on meeting a child’s needs and which all parties broadly support. One stimulus for reform was the criticism from the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child in its concluding observations on the three most recent United Kingdom state party reports. Section 38 as it stands does not meet Scotland’s obligation under the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. Children who are aged between eight and 11 will continue to be referred to a children’s panel on offence grounds, and in practice, if not in theory, the result will be to all intents and purposes a criminal record. Such information can be routinely disclosed through Disclosure Scotland checks, regardless of the gravity of the offending.
There is persuasive evidence that criminalising children in that way is damaging. As Dr Jonathan Sher of Children in Scotland said:

“If we call them criminals, we can pretty much count on their adopting that identity and living down to it.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 26 May 2009; c 1948.]

Children in Scotland’s letter says:

“overwhelming international evidence”

exists

“that labelling and punishing children as criminals does not improve their behaviour” or

“keep communities safer, but does increase the likelihood of these children becoming ... career criminals.”

The Lord Advocate said:

“As the prosecutor, I consider the age of criminal competence of eight in Scotland to be extremely low.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 25 November 2008; c 1427.]

In general, the reform in the bill is worth while, but it is arguable that it is the minimum that is appropriate and that we should do the task properly by raising the age of criminal responsibility. Nobody suggests that that means a reign of terror by lawless children. It is appropriate for the system to have powers to tackle, detain if necessary and deal with children who cause trouble. Most such children can be dealt with on other welfare grounds, but the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill should provide for a non-criminal offence ground for referring children to a hearing, to protect the public and in children’s interests. Amendment 549 in my name would ensure that section 38—as amended, I hope—was brought into effect only after the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill had provided for such a situation.

I am not very keen on the convener’s amendments 126 and 127—in fact, I am not keen on them at all. They seem to be designed to restore the status quo, which is undesirable.

If it is thought that there is some deficiency in the powers of hearings to tackle lawless children under 12, by all means let us look at the issue, but let us do so in the context that hearings are the appropriate forum in which to deal with it.

Amendment 389, in the name of Richard Baker, is the sort of amendment that I have proposed in some circumstances, but in this instance it seems to be overkill and unnecessary. Children under 12 who are currently prosecuted can be numbered on the fingers of two hands; we do not need a formal reporting mechanism to do that.

I may have slightly understated matters. In the last year for which statistics are available—2007-08—the figures were nothing at the ages of nine, 10 and 11; five at the age of 12; five at the age of 13; 21 at the age of 14; and 157 at the age of 15. That provides some context to the issue.

I move amendment 379.

The Convener: I concede that this is a complex and difficult matter. All the amendments in the group deal with the age of criminal responsibility or the age at which children may be prosecuted. I have some difficulties on the issue, especially with amendment 379. Robert Brown is right to argue that Scotland seems to be out of sync with most other jurisdictions, but I am not relaxed about changing the law radically in this respect.

The matter first came to the committee’s attention when the Lord Advocate, in giving evidence on a somewhat unrelated matter, raised the issue of child prosecutions. I must confess that I was a little perplexed by her intervention under that heading, but it was worthy of note. Her evidence related to the fact that only a handful of children between the ages of eight and 12 have been prosecuted in recent years. It seems that the Crown Office is adopting a sensitive approach to the matter. That being the case, I am not persuaded that it is appropriate for us to agree that there should be no prosecutions until the age of 12, as Robert Brown proposes in amendment 379.

My submission in amendments 126 and 127 is that children under the age of 12 should not normally be prosecuted. Basically, the amendments would put down in statute the reality of the situation. As we stated in our stage 1 report, sometimes children of quite tender years can do terrible things. I do not want us to be in the position of not having an appropriate sanction in place to deal with the case of an 11-year-old who stabs two children in a school playground, for example. It is common knowledge that, when children of that age commit acts of serious criminality, the victims are usually other young children. We must be sensitive in that respect.

I do not suggest for one moment that such cases are everyday occurrences—they are not. Recently, the Bulger case was revisited in somewhat odd circumstances, but there was also the case of the two young boys in Doncaster who committed quite horrendous acts of violence. There are exceptions with which the law must be equipped to deal. I am not content that the law will be so equipped if amendment 379 is agreed to.

Amendment 389, in the name of Richard Baker, has some merit, in that he seeks a report back from the Scottish Government. I would be minded to support the amendment but for the fact that it seems to accept an increase to 12 in the age of prosecution. This is a difficult and sensitive matter. I agree that there are dangers in dealing with it through prosecutions, but there are also real dangers in dealing with it through a blanket prohibition of prosecutions. On balance, that is even more dangerous.

Richard Baker (North East Scotland) (Lab): As this is my final amendment at stage 2, I thank the clerks for all their assistance during the process.

The convener has alluded to the fact that the issues around the age of prosecution and the age of criminal responsibility are sensitive and difficult. We know that, unfortunately, even children can commit terrible offences. The question is, how can our justice system and our children’s hearings system deal most effectively with those situations? I do not demur for a second from Robert Brown’s point that such situations are highly unusual.

The argument has been well established that nothing can be gained from having children as young as eight tried in adult courts and that that is inappropriate. However, there may be some concern that changing the age of prosecution to 12 means that it will not be possible to deal effectively with the cases—however rare—of children who commit very serious offences. As a result, there may be concerns about public safety. We should be able to be confident that, regardless of whether those children are dealt with by the court or by the children’s hearings system, the outcome is likely to be the same or very similar, rendering a trial in an adult court unnecessary.

10:15

Given that that means that we may hand more serious cases to the children’s hearings system and that Parliament is yet to consider the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill, I have lodged amendment 389, which seeks to establish how cases that would otherwise have been prosecuted have been disposed of through the children’s hearings system, and the costs and resources involved. That would be done through a report, published annually, for three years.

The purpose of the measure is to establish that cases that would previously have been prosecuted can be dealt with effectively through the children’s hearings system, that the system has access to appropriate disposals, after the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill has been passed, and that panels are adequately resourced to deal with the most serious cases. I understand that that will create some work, but I have changed my amendment from the original proposal so that it involves only those cases that would otherwise have been prosecuted. As Robert Brown said, we know that very few cases should be involved. For that reason, I hope that the measure is eminently achievable.

When deciding whether to move the amendment, I will listen to the debate, but it is vital that the Scottish Government is ready to provide such information to Parliament and the committee, if the change is to go ahead. I seek the minister’s view on what the Scottish Government will be prepared to do in that regard.

I have sympathy for amendments 126 and 127, in the name of Bill Aitken, because of the unusual nature of cases in which serious offences are committed. I considered lodging an amendment in those terms, but I was persuaded that that would result, in effect, in the law not being changed at all. As the convener said, amendments 126 and 127 place the current situation in statute. Like other colleagues, I have accepted that there should be change in the area.

I also have sympathy for amendment 379, in the name of Robert Brown. When the bill was introduced, it might have been better for it to have included a proposal on the age of criminal responsibility, so that that could be properly debated. However, the committee did not discuss such a proposal, although it was referred to in the debate on the age of prosecution.

I know from amendment 549 that Robert Brown is enabling the change in the age of criminal responsibility from eight to be delayed until appropriate measures to accommodate that can be taken, but at this stage that is putting the cart before the horse. A note from the Scottish Parliament information centre points out that one consequence of changing the age of criminal responsibility to 12 would be that children under the age of 12 could not be referred to children’s hearings on offence grounds. The committee referred to the suggestion of creating a new non-offence ground, covering situations in which a child has behaved in a way that could be treated as criminal, if they were older. Such a proposal is not before us today.

Given where we are, we should not support a change in the age of criminal responsibility now, but we should change the age of prosecution to 12. That is the crucial issue now and the right way forward. I accept that there should be further consideration of the age of criminal responsibility. I do not believe that Parliament should wait too long to engage in such consideration, which should lead to change, but I am inclined to believe that that requires new, detailed proposals and fuller debate.

Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): I will start where Richard Baker left off. I agree with his closing comments, in which he made some valid points about the age of criminal responsibility. All of us have struggled with the issue. Through the evidence and our stage 1 report, we struggled to strike the appropriate balance when dealing with the very rare cases in which young children have taken another’s life.
Great moral difficulties are associated with changing the law in that area.

At the same time, great moral difficulties are associated with not changing the law in the area. As other members have said, the ages of criminal responsibility and criminal prosecution in Scotland are among the lowest—if not actually the lowest—in the developed world. That weighs heavily on a number of us.

I understand the process that Richard Baker is trying to put in place in amendment 389 and the reasons for that, but I agree with Robert Brown that it is overly onerous, given the exceptionally small number of cases to which it relates. Robert Brown noted that the number of children under 12 who are prosecuted is zero.

I do not think that Richard Baker’s proposal adds anything except a rather bureaucratic and unnecessary process. Given the number of children, small though it is, who are already going through the children’s hearings system at that age, for those odd cases that might have been prosecuted—we can never say whether a case would or would not have been prosecuted, which is a difficulty with the amendment—but which go to the children’s hearings system in the future, I think that the children’s hearings system is well placed to ensure that it does its job appropriately. Therefore, I do not think that there is a problem in that respect.

I agree that the age of prosecution in this country is too low. It should be raised to 12; therefore, I support the current provisions in the bill. However, I also support the idea that the age of criminal responsibility should remain what it is, although it may seem strange to keep those things separate. Valid arguments have been made that many children over the age of eight can understand the difference between right and wrong and can be seen to be responsible for their actions. At the same time, there is no doubt that children aged nine, 10 and 11 who commit criminal acts—heinous criminal acts, in some cases—are the responsibility of the adults who have failed to care for them and raise them properly, and I honestly think that the acts that those children have committed are more a welfare issue than a case for criminal sanction. Although I accept that the age of prosecution should be raised because of that argument, I think that there is an issue about responsibility for their actions. Therefore, I do not accept Robert Brown’s amendments, nor do I support the convener’s amendments.

Angela Constance (Livingston) (SNP): It will come as no surprise to anybody on the committee that I have considerable sympathy for Robert Brown’s amendment 379. Although the children’s hearings system is not perfect in today’s world, it is nonetheless an exemplar. Like Stewart Maxwell, I make the point that, when children commit extreme acts of desperate violence against other children, they are themselves the victims of heinous violence, abuse and neglect by their parents and by the wider systems in society that are meant to look after children who are vulnerable and who do not have parents who will give them the best start in life.

My fundamental instinct is that children who offend should go through the children’s hearings system, which should be equipped, in terms of resources and disposals, to deal with children who offend. Nonetheless, I will listen to what the minister says with interest. In the Government’s defence, I accept that what the bill proposes is a prudent step forward, although instinctively I would rather that it were a bigger step forward. I wonder whether we should have considered the issue as part of the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill. The Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill is a huge bill, and I would have preferred a far more dedicated focus on children who are in need and who offend. Perhaps, following the committee’s scrutiny of the issue, the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill will be able to take things further.

The Convener: There being no further comments from members, I ask the minister to defend himself to Ms Constance.

The Minister for Community Safety (Fergus Ewing): I am happy to take up that kind invitation, convener. I welcome all members’ contributions to the debate. This is a difficult and sensitive issue, as members have said. Before I proceed to the scripted remarks that I want to place on record, I will respond to some of the points that have been made.

In its stage 1 report, the committee opined:

“We recognise that children under 12 can sometimes do terrible things, and if there is to be a statutory ban on criminal prosecution in all such cases, it would be useful to have an assurance from the Cabinet Secretary that there is a sufficient range of disposals available within the children’s hearings system.”

In his response, the cabinet secretary rightly referred to the disposals that are available to the children’s hearings system. It will come as no surprise to committee members that those include “placing children in secure care up to their 18th birthday if that is required.”

The response continues:

“A Panel can also place a child on intensive support which can include an electronic tag. The Panel decides on the most appropriate intervention based on the needs of the child, the support required to change their behaviour and the measures needed to protect the public.”

I thought it important to mention that, as Richard Baker rightly sought an assurance about the sufficiency of the disposals that are available to the children’s hearings system. Angela Constance also referred to the fact that we are seeking to legislate on and improve further the excellent system of which we are rightly proud in Scotland. That will take place shortly, under a different bill.

We all have confidence in the good work that is done, particularly in the secure estate. It is a serious step to place a child into the secure estate, and those of us who have visited secure accommodation throughout Scotland will know that it is not a soft option for those children but a severe measure that effectively deprives them of their liberty. The ultimate disposals are available to the children’s hearings system. I thought it prudent to start by emphasising the fact that the sanctions are serious, irrespective of the age that is set for consent and prosecution. That said, it should be remembered that only one child under the age of 12 has been prosecuted in the past six years. I will come to that later.

The changes that are in section 38 will lead to the following system operating. First, children under the age of eight will continue to be conclusively presumed to be not guilty of an offence. Secondly, children under the age of 12 but aged eight or over who offend will be dealt with only through the children’s hearings system. Thirdly, children under 16 who are aged 12 or over will be prosecuted if the offence is sufficiently serious to be dealt with on indictment; otherwise, they will be dealt with by the children’s hearings system. Finally, children aged 16 or 17 who remain on supervision through the children’s hearings system will either continue to be managed in that system or be prosecuted. Raising the minimum age of prosecution from eight to 12 is an important move that will—as has been said, initially by Robert Brown—bring us into line with most of mainland Europe and strengthen our commitment to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. I make it clear from the outset that we believe that our approach strikes the right balance between protecting the public and protecting the rights of children.

I fully understand the intention behind amendments 126 and 127. However, given the fact that only one child under the age of 12 has been prosecuted in the past six years, the normal situation is for there to be no prosecutions. That is what we are seeking to establish as the legal situation—the de facto situation is that prosecutions are so rare that they hardly ever occur. Amendments 126 and 127 would have the effect of neutralising section 38. They would create uncertainty as to the circumstances in which prosecution of a child under the age of 12 was either possible or appropriate. For those reasons, I would not recommend support for amendments 126 and 127.

I turn to amendment 379. Raising the age of criminal responsibility, as set out in section 41 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, was an option that the Scottish Law Commission considered carefully when it looked at the issue in 2002. In relation to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, the view of the Scottish Law Commission was that “the Convention’s purposes are secured as much, if not more, by the provisions relating to immunity from criminal prosecution and punishment as by provisions on criminal capacity”.

Accordingly, the commission recommended that there should be an amendment to the 1995 act by providing that a child under 12 years of age cannot be prosecuted. That is what is contained in section 38 of the bill.

10:30

The Scottish Government is committed to supporting children’s rights as a key strand that underpins our activity to improve outcomes for all Scotland’s children and young people. We believe that section 38 of the bill, as it stands, achieves that objective and is in line with Scotland’s commitments under the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

We have addressed key concerns about the very young age at which children in Scotland can end up in the criminal justice system, ensuring that the principle is set that the children’s hearings system is the most appropriate forum for a child’s broader needs and welfare to be addressed alongside their behaviour.

It is important that we can support young people who continue to pose a high risk when they leave the children’s hearings system. Although the overwhelming majority of children and young people are well behaved and contribute positively to their communities, there is a small number in relation to whom safeguards are necessary. As I said earlier, we seek to strike the right balance between protecting the public and protecting the rights of children. Furthermore, although children under 12 can still be referred to the reporter on offence grounds for minor offences, our Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill, which was recently introduced to Parliament, will introduce a new ground of referral in situations in which a child’s conduct has had, or is likely to have, a serious effect on the health, safety or development of the child or another person. That includes behaviour that could be considered criminal. Our expectation is that new ground, rather than the existing offence ground, will be used for more minor offending behaviour. For those reasons, amendment 379 is unnecessary.
We appreciate the reasons behind amendment 389. It would require Scottish ministers to report annually on the disposal of cases involving children who, but for the new prohibition of under-12s, would have been prosecuted. The Lord Advocate’s guidelines set out when a child can be prosecuted for an offence. However, there are no set criteria or offences that lead to prosecution. Currently, there is discretion within the guidelines, and it is the responsibility of the procurator fiscal to decide whether it is in the public interest to prosecute. When section 38 is implemented, all cases will be referred to the reporter and, therefore, no mechanism will exist to consider whether a case meets the public interest test. As I said, it should be remembered that only one child aged under the age of 12 has been prosecuted in the past six years, so there appears to be little merit in the reporting that Mr Baker calls for, as was pointed out by Mr Maxwell. For that reason, amendment 389 is undesirable. I state again, however, that I understand the policy intent that Richard Baker has clearly explained.

Amendment 549 would require the order commencing section 38 to be made by affirmative procedure. That would be a unique requirement. As members will be aware, commencement orders are invariably subject to no parliamentary procedure, and there is good reason for that. If the Parliament agrees to section 38, what would be the point of another debate and vote at the point of commencement? Furthermore, in the children’s hearings system, we already have a robust process in place to deal with those young people. Although the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill might introduce improvements to the process, there is no reason for any delay.

I urge the committee to resist amendment 549 and all the amendments in the group.

Finally, I would like to address the issue of the retention and disclosure of records, which Robert Brown raised, as I thought that he might. I am aware of the issue around the retention and disclosure of information about children and young people who are referred to a hearing on offence grounds. In the interests of public safety, we believe that there is still a strong case for recording certain information. However, we recognise that the information that is made available under disclosure checks needs to be proportionate, and we are, therefore, seeking to include provisions in the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill that will ensure that information about children and young people who are referred to a hearing on offence grounds is retained and disclosed only where necessary. I wanted to put that on the record to provide some assurance to Mr Brown and other members.

Robert Brown: I am particularly reassured by the minister’s final comment.

We are, perhaps, all left a little bit perplexed about the difference between raising the age of criminal prosecution and raising the age of criminal responsibility. We seem to be heading towards a sort of mish-mash situation with three different levels: up to the age of eight, there is no criminal responsibility; from eight to 12, there is a kind of in-between situation; and over the age of 12, there is a slightly different ball game again. That seems to me to be a bit unsatisfactory, in principle, and I am unpersuaded about the reasons why the Government and the Law Commission have gone down that route.

A number of people, including Richard Baker and the convener, touched on the fact that children can do terrible things—indeed, I touched on that myself. However, I was not entirely sure about the implications that we should take from that. We seem to be talking purely about the procedures that apply to the children in that context rather than what is done with them after that. The minister gave us some reassurance about the powers that exist in the children’s hearings system to deal with children, from relatively low down the offending level right to the top. If that is accepted, the argument comes down to whether, as the convener suggests, cases should go before the court in certain limited instances, or whether they should all be dealt with by the children’s hearings system. I did not hear any convincing arguments for the merits of putting children of nine, 10 or 11 years of age before the court.

Three cases involving children have been prosecuted since the Scottish Parliament was established. One, involving a child of 11, was listed as a crime of dishonesty; one, again involving a child of 11, was listed under “miscellaneous offences”; and one, involving a child of nine, was listed under “motor vehicle offences”. In none of those cases can I see any obvious or overwhelming reason why there should have been a prosecution.

I was attracted by Angela Constance’s suggestion that the matter could be considered afresh in the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill, and the minister made the point that the grounds are being tweaked somewhat to allow wider welfare issues to be considered, along with minor offending issues. That is probably a useful context in which to consider the matter. I hope that the minister will consider that suggestion, regardless of the outcome of today’s debate, as I think that we have been left with a slightly mismatched position.

Stewart Maxwell said that children over eight can understand the difference between right and wrong. That might be the case, but—with great respect—I found his arguments a little confusing. I was not sure where he took that argument, because he seemed to relate it to the responsibility of the parents, which is off to side wicket, as it were. None of that indicates that there should not be a raising of the age of criminal responsibility to 12. Let us do the thing properly.

I will press amendment 379. I continue to oppose the convener’s amendments—I do not think that there is much support in the committee for them. I hope that Richard Baker will not move his amendment, in the context of the number of cases involved. Are we to have a report on an issue that has arisen three times in the past 10 years? Notwithstanding the reasons that he set out, that seems a bit of an overkill.

My amendment 549 is designed to link the changes in the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill to the issue that we are discussing. Having made the point in that regard, I think that I will probably not move that amendment.

Convener, thank you for allowing me quite a bit of time to respond.

The Convener: It is an important issue and it is appropriate that it be debated as thoroughly as possible.

The question is, that amendment 379 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 379 disagreed to.

Amendment 126 moved—[Bill Aitken].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 126 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Crown is able to proceed. Amendments 128 and 129 are therefore worthy of support.

Amendment 128 agreed to.

Amendment 129 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 39, as amended, agreed to.

Section 40—Witness statements

The Convener: Amendment 130, in the name of Kenny MacAskill, is grouped with amendment 131.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 130 is a minor technical amendment, the purpose of which is to change the current reference to “all reasonable hours” in section 40(2)(b) to “a reasonable time and in a reasonable place”, to ensure consistency with section 97(3).

Amendment 131 seeks to remove section 40 from the bill. We are aware of the concerns that were expressed during stage 1 about the provisions on witness statements, which may have given rise to amendment 131. It is useful to have a debate on those issues.

We understand the desire that has been expressed to preserve the tradition of oral evidence in Scotland. The provisions on witness statements will not put an end to that. Witnesses will still appear in court, give evidence from the witness box and be examined and cross-examined. That is not changing. It is important that the accused has a proper opportunity to test that oral evidence. The provisions on witness statements will not lead to a move towards trial by statement.

We respectfully remind the committee that Lord Coulsfield considered that provision was necessary after his thorough and detailed consideration of the law in this area as a whole. Members will remember that when the Solicitor General for Scotland spoke in support of the provisions during his evidence at stage 1, he said:

“Many trials are really a memory test for witnesses. For example, in a cold case, witnesses who gave evidence in 1981 might be called to give evidence in 2009 and be questioned on the detail of their statement. If they cannot remember precisely what they said or if they say something slightly different, they will be accused of being inconsistent. It seems unfair that the only person in a prosecution who cannot see the statement before the trial is the witness who gave the statement in the first place.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 9 June 2009; c 2070.]

Concern about the accuracy of statements appears to lie at the heart of the issue. We acknowledge the concerns of defence practitioners about the quality of statements but, like Lord Coulsfield, we believe that rigour in the way that statements are taken, which he recommended, should reduce the risk of problems arising. It should be remembered that Lord Coulsfield pointed to the fact that elsewhere in the United Kingdom, the practice of giving witnesses copies of their statement is accepted and uncontroversial.

10:45

Section 40 will help to ensure greater accuracy by allowing witnesses to review and identify any inaccuracies in their statement before trial. Removing section 40 from the bill would lead to the anomaly that witnesses would not be able to see their statement in advance of giving evidence, yet under section 62 they would be able to refer to their statement at trial. That could mean that the first time that any inaccuracies came to light would be during the trial.

As the Solicitor General said when he gave evidence to the committee at stage 1:

“In my view, the proposed change will improve the accuracy of statements. If witnesses can see their statement in advance of giving evidence, they will be able to see whether it contains any inaccuracies that should be drawn to the attention of those involved in the case. The proposal is a further measure that will save time and improve criminal justice for witnesses. After all, we rely on witnesses to prove cases so we need to treat them with respect.”

He went on to say:

“I mentioned the accuracy of statements, which we hope the proposed change will help to improve. I see no problem with the proposals.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 9 June 2009; c 2071.]

The Law Society of Scotland and the judiciary expressed concern about the accuracy of witness statements and therefore the dangers of relying on them. Indeed, much of the debate thus far has focused on the dangers of relying on statements that may not have been noted in the witness’s own words. I have a tremendous amount of sympathy with that concern. I understand that it has not been uncommon—perhaps because of the circumstances in which statements are obtained—for the person who notes the statement to take notes that summarise the witness’s position and to note a full statement thereafter. Against that background, it is not surprising that concerns have been expressed about the accuracy of statements and whether they are noted in the witness’s own words.

In future, I understand that that is to be addressed by a change in procedure that is to be set out in the code of practice. The police officer will note a full statement from the witness in the witness’s own words. The normal practice will be for the witness to be given the opportunity to sign it. If circumstances prevent a full statement being taken at the time, notes will be taken, which will remain as notes, without being expanded on by the officer. Again, the witness will have the opportunity to sign them. It is vital that statements are accurately noted, as far as possible, in the witness’s own words and that they are signed by the witness. That is what Lord Coulsfield recommended, which I support.

I understand that the Lord Advocate intends to address the issue in the code of practice on disclosure, to ensure that information is accurately recorded and, in particular, that any witness statement that is obtained or generated during an investigation accurately and comprehensively reflects the evidence that is provided by the witness. I understand that it is also intended that the code of practice will provide, as far as possible, that the witness statement must contain the witness’s actual words, and that the witness must be given an opportunity to sign it and to make any amendments that he wishes to make. That is to be supplemented by guidance and training for police officers, which is already under way and is due to finish at the end of May.

I remind members that under section 114 of the bill, the police, other investigating agencies and prosecutors are bound to have regard to the terms of the code of practice.

The Sheriffs Association indicated that if the law is to be changed, that should be done in primary legislation. Lord Coulsfield’s recommendation is that witness statements be signed by witnesses. I respectfully suggest that that is a procedural step. We do not agree that the bill is the place for such procedural matters to be dealt with. We think that it is entirely appropriate for such a matter of practice and procedure to be dealt with in the code of practice. That is what the Lord Advocate intends to do.

The issue is one of fairness to witnesses, who could be presented with their statement for the first time in court, which could inadvertently have a detrimental effect on their ability to give evidence. In addition, witnesses are now commonly the only participants in a trial who have not seen their statement prior to trial, and we do not think that that is appropriate.

We absolutely accept that proper testing of witnesses is valid and important, but a witness’s evidence should not be reduced to a one-sided memory test, in which every minor discrepancy is put under the microscope. Section 40 is designed to help to reduce the amount of time that is spent examining irrelevant minutiae and thereby allow the court to focus on the real issues at trial.

Without section 40, witnesses would still be able to refer to their statements during a trial, under section 62, without inaccuracies being addressed in advance. That would risk delay and disruption to proceedings, and it could sometimes appear as though it was the witness, rather than the accused, who was on trial. We believe that it is unreasonable to expect witnesses to recall every detail of events from many months or even years prior to their giving evidence. It is fairer to everyone, including the accused, if witnesses are allowed to refresh their memories and if decisions are reached on the best evidence that is available.

We do not share the concerns that were expressed by the Faculty of Advocates in its stage 1 evidence. It is not clear to us why the provision would exacerbate a difference of treatment between prosecution and defence witness statements. Section 40 applies to all witnesses who have given a statement, whether they are witnesses for the defence or for the prosecution. Indeed, in many cases, at the point at which the statement is noted, it might not be clear for whom the witness will give evidence. We trust Scotland’s judges to manage such situations appropriately and to exercise their discretion in a way that enables the giving of good, clear, accurate evidence without risk to the tradition of oral evidence. I remind members that the judges of the High Court of Justiciary themselves said in evidence at stage 1:

“We recognise that there may be value in allowing a witness to read a prior statement before giving evidence in court.”

I have gone on at some length out of respect for those who have made strong submissions on these matters and I have sought to respond explicitly, at greater length than I would normally, to those august bodies and persons who have given evidence.

We will resist amendment 131. I move amendment 130.

The Convener: The purpose of amendment 131 was to probe exactly how this was going to pan out at the end of the day. I was seeking to avoid evidence in court being valued on the basis of who had rehearsed it best. I am not entirely satisfied on that point as yet, but I have listened with considerable interest to what Mr Ewing has said about the way in which statements will be formulated in the future. From painful experience, I can tell members that there are occasions on which, under examination by the fiscal or the defence, a witness is perplexed, has little recollection of what was said at the time and is of the view that they did not make a statement along the lines that the prosecutor suggests. However, on the basis of what Mr Ewing has said about the improved procedures that are likely to be in place, I am minded not to move amendment 131.

Robert Brown: This is a difficult area—there are no two ways about it. One must be cautious about making significant changes in procedures that have applied for a long time, with all the usual arguments about them. A trial is a search for truth and it broadly fulfils that purpose reasonably well. My view is that the basic evidence should be that of the witness—how he or she remembers things—with all its limitations. Oddities will often emerge from that, but they can be explained away without any particular damage being done. That is and ought to be the core evidence.

There is an exception for police witnesses, who can be allowed to refer to their notebooks and notes that they made at the time. I think that I am right in saying that that rule applies to other witnesses, although most of us are not organised enough to take notes at the time. Nevertheless, the so-called level playing field argument is spurious in some respects. While the police witness is giving their own statement in their own way, the so-called statements that are given by other witnesses are not statements but precognitions that are taken by somebody else. Although it is reassuring to hear of the changes that are being made to improve the accuracy of such statements, these things always fall down at the level of the weakest, not at the level of the strongest, and there will always be situations in which the procedure, however well intentioned, is not carried through to what goes on at the bottom.

We should be cautious about disrupting procedures that have been established for some time. There is a risk that doing so would divert the trial away from a search after truth and into a rather sterile dispute about whether the written precognition was what the witness said in the first place. The minister referred to best evidence. The real issue is what the best evidence is in this context. Is it rehearsed evidence or is it evidence that comes out at the time—with all its limitations—and has to be gone through in further detail?

I am a little concerned about the suggestion that inaccuracies can be addressed in advance of the trial, which has a sort of sanitised feel about it. The place to address such oddities is at the trial, when the evidence can be taken in all its glory, one way or the other. There are difficulties with the provisions, but like the convener I am not prepared to push my view against that of the minister, with his officials and his greater resource for considering the issue. However, I remain concerned about some aspects of the matter and hope that it will be kept under close scrutiny as the bill progresses, and as the matter is put into practice in due course.

James Kelly (Glasgow Rucherglen) (Lab): I support the amendment in the name of the Cabinet Secretary for Justice and the sentiments that the minister expressed in his contribution. Being required to give evidence in a trial can be quite an intimidating experience for witnesses. For many of them, it can be their first experience of appearing before a court. To stand there and be questioned by prosecution and defence can be difficult, and to try to recall events that may have taken place months or years previously can be challenging, to say the least.

In implementing justice and in prosecuting cases we want to ensure that we have an accurate record of what happened. From that point of view, it is right to allow witnesses access to their statements so that they can correct any inaccuracies. It means that witnesses can stand up in court and submit accurate evidence. Section 40 would also correct an imbalance, in that, at present, police officers are allowed to refer to their notes whereas, as the minister said, witnesses are the only people who appear at a trial who do not have access to the statements that they made previously. The provision will improve the implementation of justice and ensure that there is a more accurate record of what is being considered in a case. I support what is proposed.

Amendment 130 agreed to.
Amendment 131 not moved.
Section 40, as amended, agreed to.

After section 40

The Convener: Amendment 403, in the name of Margaret Curran, is in a group on its own. I apologise to Margaret for the fact that she came to last week’s meeting but was unable to speak to her amendment.

Margaret Curran (Glasgow Baillieston) (Lab): It has been most illuminating to be here. I thank the clerks for their assistance in drafting amendment 403.

The amendment is simple but significant. It represents a stage in our move to enhance the rights of victims. The issue emerged from my work with a constituent and their family yet it has a wider resonance for Scotland.

The Parole Board for Scotland makes important decisions, whose consequences have a real impact on victims, their families and wider society. Essentially, amendment 403 would equip the Parole Board with a better means to make decisions and would give it a fuller appreciation of the impact of those decisions.

The key principle behind the amendment is that, although written representations can be very effective, it is important to add another dimension. We know that, although some victims can make their views known through written representations, a number find it difficult to do so and would find it easier to articulate their views if they were present at the parole hearing. Given the gravity of the decisions that the Parole Board makes, it is proper that we provide all possible means to ensure that it has full information. The amendment would provide the opportunity for victims to give their own testimony, which would be a very simple step forward.

11:00

Victims have the right to be heard. The Parole Board has the right to hear their representations to ensure that it understands the full impact of its decisions. Providing for direct representation—the right to say what has happened and to set out the consequences of the board’s decision—would empower victims and, ultimately, would empower the board itself.

My amendment suggests a simple step forward. I very much hope that the committee will support it.

I move amendment 403.

Robert Brown: Margaret Curran has raised a very interesting issue. The Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003, which a previous Government introduced, brought in victim statements at the sentencing stage and gave victims the right to make written representations to the Parole Board when it is considering releasing someone on licence. That is entirely right and I think that it helps to put victims' concerns at the heart of the process, which was often seen previously as something that did not really concern them.

I have no doctrinal view on the right to be heard by the Parole Board. I do not think that we have had any particular evidence on that one way or the other. The questions that occur to me are whether it would create any considerable cost or bureaucracy in the system and whether it would provide any advantage to most victims. Manifestly, the question of release cannot depend on the victim of one criminal believing that the offender should be detained for ever, while the victim of another offender is in a rather more forgiving camp. However, evidence that the offender would be liberated to an address two doors down from a prison to addresses that are two doors down from their victim. Therefore, it is imperative that criminal justice social work has a role in all assessments.

My understanding is that more can always be done to scrutinise the needs of victims. A core part of considering release plans must be consideration of the impact on victims. As Robert Brown said, offenders cannot be released from prison to addresses that are two doors down from their victim. Therefore, it is imperative that criminal justice social work has a role in all assessments.

I understand the desires behind amendment 403, but I am cautious about it. Perhaps the minister could comment on current practice in such meetings. My concern would be that, if you allowed a victim in, you would have to open up the hearing to offenders and their legal team, which would change the nature of what the board does; it looks at all the evidence of all the parties but takes a step back from it.

My other concern is that the amendment deals with the Parole Board but does not deal with life prisoner tribunals. If the amendment is agreed to, we could end up with a situation where victims would have the right of representation at Parole Board hearings, which involve offenders who are serving determinate sentences of four years or more, but they would not have the parallel right to make representation to life prisoner tribunals, which does not seem right.

Angela Constance: I cannot imagine that anybody round the table would be unsympathetic to the need to create more opportunities for victims to be heard at various points in the criminal justice system. A number of years ago, I had the opportunity to observe a meeting of the Parole Board. My recollection is that members of the board had a large number of cases to deal with at any one sitting and all the evidence before them was written. None of the professionals was there. The offender and his brief were certainly not there. Perhaps the minister could comment on current practice in such meetings. My concern would be that, if you allowed a victim in, you would have to open up the hearing to offenders and their legal team, which would change the nature of what the board does; it looks at all the evidence of all the parties but takes a step back from it.

In short, there is a case for such a change, but I want to be reassured by the Government that amendment 403 gets it right. I want to hear the minister’s view before I decide my approach.

Angela Constance: I cannot imagine that anybody round the table would be unsympathetic to the need to create more opportunities for victims to be heard at various points in the criminal justice system. A number of years ago, I had the opportunity to observe a meeting of the Parole Board. My recollection is that members of the board had a large number of cases to deal with at any one sitting and all the evidence before them was written. None of the professionals was there. The offender and his brief were certainly not there. Perhaps the minister could comment on current practice in such meetings. My concern would be that, if you allowed a victim in, you would have to open up the hearing to offenders and their legal team, which would change the nature of what the board does; it looks at all the evidence of all the parties but takes a step back from it.

In short, there is a case for such a change, but I want to be reassured by the Government that amendment 403 gets it right. I want to hear the minister’s view before I decide my approach.

James Kelly: Margaret Curran has lodged an important amendment, which I support.

I would like to address a specific issue that is not the same as the one that Margaret Curran... addressed. When the committee was considering the Megrahi case, one thing that I was concerned about was that there was no proper basis on which the victims’ views on compassionate release could be taken into account in the Parole Board hearing. There would at least have been more information for the Parole Board to consider if victims’ views had been taken into account. It is right that we give a proper platform to victims who have suffered as a result of crimes and that we properly consider their views.

Amendment 403 is important. It would give people the opportunity to give verbal evidence. As committee members, we hear verbal evidence on many subjects that is often much stronger and that often carries much greater weight than the written evidence that we receive. The amendment seeks to let witnesses give appropriate views in the process. It is powerful, and I support it.

Stewart Maxwell: I have listened to the comments that have been made, and I think that we have never taken any evidence in the area before. I do not have detailed knowledge of the Parole Board and its daily workings. There is a danger of agreeing to amendments at this stage without having wider knowledge, but we should consider Angela Constance’s comments on the Parole Board meeting that she attended, although that was some time ago. If what she saw is the norm, I share her concern that, if the process is opened up on one side, it will inevitably have to be opened up on all sides. I think that that would lead to the danger of there being almost a second trial in which people try to examine the case rather than the parole argument. It is completely understandable that victims will inevitably focus on the original incident, whereas the Parole Board’s job is much wider than that. There is a danger that everybody would end up attending Parole Board meetings and focusing on the wrong things. Many complex issues are involved, and I am not minded to support the amendment without receiving further detailed evidence.

Nigel Don (North East Scotland) (SNP): I would like to continue from where James Kelly left off. He made the extremely important point that, by and large, we attribute more weight to verbal pieces of information. We naturally take more notice of a person who is in front of us than we do of the written word. I also take the point that Margaret Curran made that some victims will feel that the amendment would empower them and help them to move forward. I accept that, but I am also aware that some victims need to disengage. I merely put this forward as a possibility but, if it is perceived that one is more likely to get the right answer from the Parole Board if one engages with it, that will stop people disengaging and moving on in their life. There is a bit of personal experience behind what I am saying. I think that there would be several unintended consequences. However, I have no intention of repeating what other people have said. These things are all about balance and I do not have the right answer, I merely make the point that there is a substantial risk of unintended consequences. I am a little hesitant to suggest that we should agree to something on which we have not heard balanced evidence. We can see the point of amendment 403, and we understand why Margaret Curran lodged it. I see that she is waking her head. I point her to the other side of the argument—I am concerned that her amendment might end up having unintended consequences.

The Convener: As no other members have comments, I will make some of my own. The case for amendment 403 is distinctly arguable. I can quite see the logic of it but, at this stage, I am not persuaded under a number of headings, the first of which is workability. No application for parole can be made prior to the convicted person having spent four years in custody. In practice, many hearings relate to cases in which the offender has spent considerably longer than that in custody. It might well be the case that the victim has moved house on several occasions since the original court case when the sentence was imposed. There would be practical difficulties involved in contacting the victim, which might or might not be possible to overcome. That is a consideration.

Secondly, the nature of the representations that would be made is an issue that concerns me. Robert Brown was right to describe a situation that could quite easily arise, whereby the result of a hearing could be determined by the nature of the victim or the victim’s representative. That could give rise to difficulty because some people are more forgiving than others, whereas others may have a degree of vindictiveness. In any event, we could end up in a situation in which, in the charged atmosphere that might well pertain at the hearing, the interests of justice might not be best served.

Questions were raised about the terms of release, which I did not think were particularly apposite, because social work departments should be able to manage that, so I have no difficulty in that regard.

My other concern is that, in many cases in which an application is made for parole, the crime to which the application relates is murder or culpable homicide. There could obviously be no representations by the victim in such cases, and it is not quite clear whether Margaret Curran believes that the right to make representations would pass to a surviving relative, for example. Perhaps she could address that issue at the appropriate juncture.

There is merit in amendment 403 but, as I said, I am not yet totally persuaded. I will make a Fergus Ewing: First, I thank Margaret Curran for lodging amendment 403, which has enabled us to have a useful debate on an important area. She is correct to raise the issue and allow it to be debated.

As representatives of constituents, all of us will, on occasion, have received requests to assist those who have been the victims of the most serious crimes and will have had discussions with those victims in our surgeries. I have had many such discussions, including with females who have been the victims of rape in many different circumstances, none of which I can go into. Suffice it to say that the feelings that are held in those cases are obviously extremely strong. We recognise that the plight of the victim is of huge importance. Many of the individuals concerned—especially vulnerable young females—will have been scarred for life by the experiences that they have undergone. Therefore, the matters that we are considering are extremely important. I just wanted to preface my remarks on the amendment with that reflection as a constituency MSP.

11:15

We have already taken steps to improve the victim notification scheme, for example by extending it to victims of offenders who are sentenced to 18 months or more in prison. With the convener’s permission, I would like to go into a bit more detail, which I think might be of some assistance. The 2003 Act formalised the victim notification scheme, which had been an administrative arrangement since 1997. The VNS gives victims of prescribed offences, primarily offences against the person such as rape, or, in cases when the victim has died, an eligible family member, the right to receive certain information about an offender who has been sentenced to 18 months or more in prison. The VNS also gives victims the right to receive information regarding Parole Board for Scotland review hearings and to make written representations to Scottish ministers prior to a decision being made on the release of and on the licence conditions to be applied to a prisoner.

Offenders sentenced to four years or more are considered by the PBS for release on licence from the halfway point of sentence and automatically released on licence at the two-thirds point. The board usually has no involvement in the decision to release offenders sentenced to under four years. Those offenders are currently released automatically and unconditionally at the halfway point of their sentence—an exception being certain short-term sex offenders, where there is scope for them to be released on licence. Those comments might help to put matters in context.

It is vital that victims are aware of the role of the Parole Board and of the limits of its decision making to avoid disappointment and the possibility of the victim emerging fearful or traumatised as a result of reliving the crime at a Parole Board hearing. That is why we are currently overhauling the information provided to victims about the Parole Board and about how to make representations, to ensure that the guidance is as clear and accessible as possible.

Giving victims the choice whether or not to be heard at a Parole Board hearing is an important development in enhancing victims’ participation in the criminal justice system. However, a number of practicalities need to be addressed, to cover the workability factor to which the convener alluded. There are almost 500 oral or tribunal hearings a year at which the offender is present and a further almost 1,200 casework meetings a year at which the offender is not present. An effective system would need to be put in place to ensure that victims could be present at appropriate hearings. As I have said, there is a very large number of such hearings.

In addition, as well as ensuring that victims have a clear understanding of the role of the Parole Board and are properly supported throughout the process, decisions need to be made on a number of issues, including, first, what constitutes “being heard”? Secondly, should victims be heard at all Parole Board hearings, even ones where the offender is not present or represented? Thirdly, if a sex offender is involved, should the victim and offender be in the same room, or can alternative arrangements be put in place, such as victims giving a statement by videolink, for pretty obvious reasons? Finally, what about the families of victims who have died?

Those issues all need to be resolved before a robust mechanism can be put in place that allows victims to have an effective voice at Parole Board hearings. To resolve the issues, we would take into account the views of victims organisations and the Parole Board.

We are concerned that there are also difficulties with the amendment. For example, new subsection (1A) of section 17 of the 2003 Act would provide that representations under section 17(1) may include a request by the victim to be heard at the relevant hearing of the Parole Board. As I have said, as section 17 stands, representations are made to the Scottish ministers rather than to the Parole Board, for a reason that I will come on to. If the amendment were accepted, victims would be recording with Scottish ministers a desire to appear before the Parole Board, but it would be entirely inappropriate for Scottish ministers to decide whether a person can appear at a Parole Board hearing. At present, representations are made to Scottish ministers so that they can redact sensitive information and give the representations a wider context. That procedure is designed to protect victims from inadvertently disclosing sensitive information to their assailants. It is not intended to remove the victim's voice; it is intended to protect the victim in some circumstances. If the amendment were to be agreed to, it would place this duty, and others, on the Parole Board in respect of representations that it does not itself directly receive. We question whether it is appropriate to place such duties on the Parole Board in those circumstances.

In addition, if victims were able both to make written representations to Scottish ministers and to be heard at the Parole Board, what would happen if there were contradictions between the two sources? Also, there is no definition of what constitutes a victim's "immediate family" or what constitutes a "friend".

Margaret Curran will recognise that those are lawyerly objections that have been carefully considered by the officials who are ably assisting me this morning. That said, we concur with the thrust of the amendment and undertake that the Scottish Government will put together proposals that will enable victims to be heard at appropriate Parole Board hearings.

For some of the complex reasons that many members, not least Angela Constance, Stewart Maxwell, Nigel Don and the convener, have mentioned, we will be unable to complete the work in time for the passage of the bill, but the Scottish Government will bring proposals to the Parliament as soon as possible. Allowing oral representations at a Parole Board hearing might not require primary legislation but might be possible to deliver through amendments to the Parole Board rules, so it might be effected quite quickly once the practicalities are addressed. That piece of information might be of particular value to members in their consideration of how to proceed this morning. In other words, we might not necessarily have to wait for another bill to come along before taking action.

In the meantime, given the difficulties with the amendment as drafted and our commitment to work further on the issue, including a commitment that firm proposals to allow victims to make oral statements at appropriate Parole Board hearings will be brought before the Parliament, I respectfully invite the member to withdraw amendment 403.

The Convener: Thank you, Mr Ewing. That was a helpful contribution.

Margaret Curran: I thank the minister for his helpful response to my amendment. I was a bit disappointed earlier because I thought that I was meeting a wall of resistance, but I am pleased with what the minister said.

I will focus on some of the practicalities before moving on to some of the principles. I accept the importance of workability, and I have no desire to undermine the Parole Board’s hearings in any way. I have tried, in the intervening week, to address some of the minister’s points. He will note that I have made some amendments to my original amendment that have been accepted. For example, it picks up the point about a “relevant hearing” and tries to say what “being heard” means. I am happy to talk to the Government about that if it is not clear enough but, with the clerks’ advice, I thought that those practicalities had been addressed.

I am sure that we could consider alternative arrangements when there is a particular need for privacy; that could easily be addressed. I will also take advice from the lawyers in this room and I am sure that we can find a workable definition of “family” or “relative”. I cannot believe that that will be beyond our abilities, especially given the experience that we in Scotland have of such things.

I was disappointed by some of the criticisms of amendment 403. Some of the principled criticisms of the proposal could apply to written statements as much as to oral statements. If we have conceded that victims have the right to make written representations, it is a simple step forward to say that they have the right to make oral representations. I agreed very strongly with the minister’s introduction and I think that he shares my motive because many people believe passionately that the Parole Board makes decisions without fully comprehending the victim’s experience and its impact.

That is not meant in any way to undermine the Parole Board’s decision-making authority. It is merely a matter of giving the Parole Board the information to inform the process. Some people were beginning to confuse that. I am not talking about a substitute for a court or a rerun of the trial but about a Parole Board making a decision. With respect, that is entirely different, and all parties understand that it is entirely different.

The one principle that I appeal to you on relates to the fact that many victims find making written statements very difficult; they do not capture the victim’s experience or allow them to fully articulate what they want the Parole Board to take into account. As has been said, it can be about how the victim lives afterwards. I do not think that the process would be driven by vengeful victims or by people who want to be heard inappropriately or to misuse the system. It is about the principle of victims having the right to be heard and ensuring that, when the systems in Scotland make decisions, they fully appreciate the victim’s experience. Ultimately, the decision lies with the Parole Board, and I do not think that amendment 403 undermines that in any way. I appreciate what the minister said, and I recognise the motives behind it.

If allowing oral representations at parole hearings might not require later primary legislation, I am inclined to press amendment 403. It seems to me that we have the opportunity now to make the proposal work in this bill. I would be a bit nervous about leaving it and, if I press it and lose, it does not stop the Government doing it anyway, so I am in a win-win situation.

The Convener: I comment in passing that it is unusual for you to display a degree of nervousness.

The question is, that amendment 403 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 403 disagreed to.

The Convener: The amendment falls but, on the basis of what has been said, I think that Margaret Curran can retire having achieved a result.

Section 41—Breach of undertaking

The Convener: Amendment 518, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 519 to 522 and 540.

Fergus Ewing: Amendments 518 to 522 and 540 will implement the European Union framework decision on taking account of convictions in member states of the European Union in the course of new criminal proceedings. The framework decision requires to be implemented by 15 August 2010. Amendments 518 to 520 and 522 seek to amend primary legislation to ensure that Scottish courts will be able to consider previous convictions in other EU countries. Amendment 521 provides an order-making power for Scottish ministers to make further amendments to legislation to ensure that the framework decision is fully implemented. Amendment 540 requires that any such order be made using the affirmative procedure.

The framework decision is based on the principle of mutual respect for the justice systems in each member state. It seeks to assist courts across the EU in administering justice, in passing sentences and in upholding the integrity of the rule of law.

I move amendment 518.

The Convener: As no one else wishes to speak to the amendments, and as the issue is fairly straightforward, does the minister feel the need to wind up?

Fergus Ewing: No.

Amendment 518 agreed to.

Section 41, as amended, agreed to.

After section 41

The Convener: Amendment 420, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 420 will clarify the jurisdiction of a sheriff or justice of the peace to grant a warrant for execution by a police member of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency, or by a constable who is not a constable of a police force for a police area that lies within the sheriff’s or JP’s jurisdiction. Amendment 420 is necessary because there is, following a recent court judgment, some uncertainty about the power of a sheriff to grant a warrant in this regard. The uncertainty applies both to constables of police forces and to SCDEA police members. Amendment 420 will address that uncertainty by inserting a new section that will make it clear that a sheriff is not prevented from granting a warrant for execution by a constable or a police member of the SCDEA simply because that constable or police member is not a constable of a force that lies within the sheriff’s sheriffdom.

Amendment 420 will allow a sheriff to issue a warrant to an officer from outwith his sheriffdom who is investigating an offence that potentially falls within his sheriffdom. For example, Lothian and Borders Police might be investigating a housebreaking in Edinburgh and want to search premises in Glasgow as part of that investigation. The amendment puts it beyond doubt that, in such situations, the sheriff in Glasgow will not be prevented from granting a search warrant for execution by an officer from Lothian and Borders Police. Equally, amendment 420 clarifies that a sheriff will not be prevented from granting a warrant to any police member of SCDEA simply because that police member is not a constable of the local force.

Amendment 420 will not affect any other grounds that would affect a sheriff's ability to issue a warrant.

I move amendment 420.

Amendment 420 agreed to.

Sections 42 and 43 agreed to.

After section 43

The Convener: Amendment 132, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 197.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 132 will repeal sections 24A to 24E of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, which provide for an electronically monitored movement restriction requirement to be imposed as a condition of bail in some cases.

Electronically monitored movement restriction conditions of bail were piloted in four courts, from April 2005 to December 2007. Such conditions could be imposed only in limited circumstances, where the court had already refused to grant bail and a subsequent application was made by the accused for bail with a movement restriction condition. The evaluation into the pilots highlighted low use of the provisions by the courts, high breach rates and high cost and disproportionate burdens being placed on enforcement agencies.

The previous Administration agreed that the pilots should end, so the regulations that empowered the pilot courts to impose movement restriction conditions were revoked. Repealing sections 24A to 24E of the 1995 act will remove any concerns to the effect that the Scottish Government intends now, or in the future, to resurrect them. Amendment 197 is consequential on agreement to amendment 132.

I move amendment 132.

Bill Butler (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab): I believe that the courts should retain the right to impose, where it is deemed appropriate to do so, an electronic tag on people who are granted bail. However, I am unclear as to what the effect of amendment 132 will be. I will be grateful to be wrong, but it suggests to me that the Government’s intent is that the power to impose an electronic tag as a condition of bail be removed. Closer inspection of the amendment suggests that under existing provisions of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, a court is able to impose further conditions that it considers necessary to ensure that the conditions of an offender’s bail are observed. Can we have clarity from the minister that the further conditions that are referred to will still include electronic tagging, where it is appropriate?

The Convener: While the minister seeks advice from his officials, I underline that this could be a matter of concern. There is a history of significant breaches and we wish to ensure that the law is adequate for the wider protection of society. Minister, are you now in a position to sum up?

Fergus Ewing: Yes. I make it clear that if amendment 132 is agreed to, it will entirely remove tagging for bail because of the results of the evaluation of the pilots, which were undertaken as I described and were found to demonstrate that electronic tagging does not work.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 132 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Against

Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 132 agreed to.

Section 44—Prosecution on indictment: Scottish Law Officers

The Convener: Amendment 421, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 422 to 427 and 451.

Fergus Ewing: Amendments 421 to 427 and 451 are technical amendments. Section 44 of the bill will remove the requirement for indictments to be libelled in the personal name of the Lord Advocate or—as the case may be—of the Solicitor General. It will amend the existing framework, which is in place through the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, regarding the raising of solemn cases where there is a vacancy, or vacancies, in the office, or offices, of the Scottish law officers. It also makes provision concerning the continuing effect of such proceedings. The amendments are designed to provide additional transitional arrangements for the raising of indictments in those circumstances, and to make provision for their continued effect, both of which are considered to be necessary.

I move amendment 421.

The Convener: The amendments could remove a situation that had the potential to cause some excitement.

Amendment 421 agreed to.

Amendments 422 to 427 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 44, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 45 and 46 agreed to.

After section 46

11:45

The Convener: Amendment 428, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 428 will insert into the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 two new sections on prosecution of sexual offences.

Proposed new section 288BA of the 1995 act will provide a statutory basis for use of a docket attached to an indictment, or to a complaint by the Crown, to inform the defence of the Crown's intention to lead evidence of an offence that has not been charged. That approach might be used when a complainer alleges that a more serious sexual offence than that which has been charged was committed against her, but there is sufficient corroborative evidence to support only a less serious charge. For example, a complainer might allege that she was raped, but there might be corroborated evidence to support only a charge of attempted rape or sexual assault.

In the past, in order to enable the complainer to give a full and honest account of what happened to them, the Crown followed the practice of attaching a docket to the case to inform the defence of the Crown's intention to lead evidence of an offence that has not been charged. That approach might be used when a complainer alleges that a more serious sexual offence than that which has been charged was committed against her, but there is sufficient corroborative evidence to support only a less serious charge. For example, a complainer might allege that she was raped, but there might be corroborated evidence to support only a charge of attempted rape or sexual assault.

The use of a docket to lead evidence of an offence that has not been charged is restricted to circumstances in which the act or omission in the docket relates to the same event as the offence that has been charged, or a series of events of which that offence is a part. Therefore, a docket cannot be used to lead evidence of an alleged offence that is unrelated to that which has been charged.

Proposed new section 288BB of the 1995 act is a technical addition. It will provide that it is competent for the Crown to libel more than one statutory sexual offence, or a combination of statutory sexual offences and common-law offences, in a single charge. It is competent to libel more than one common-law offence in a single charge, but it is not clear that it is competent to libel more than one statutory offence or a statutory offence and a common-law offence in a single charge.

At present, it is common practice for the Crown to libel physical and sexual aspects of an assault as part of a single charge in circumstances where, for example, it is alleged that the accused assaulted and raped the complainer. That benefits the prosecution because of the ruling in Campbell v Vannet that only the essential facts of a crime require to be corroborated, and not every single element of a charge. By providing a statutory basis for mixed libelling of common-law and statutory sexual offences, we will ensure that the move to a statutory framework for sexual offences under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 does not inadvertently make sexual offences more difficult to prosecute.

I move amendment 428.

The Convener: As I see it, amendment 428 just puts into statute what has been the practice of the courts for a lengthy period and it aims simply to overcome the problems that were caused by the Campbell case. It should be supported.

Amendment 428 agreed to.

Section 47—Remand and committal of children and young persons

The Convener: Amendment 541, in the name of Robert Brown, is in a group on its own.

Robert Brown: Amendment 541 is a probing amendment that seeks clarity. The Scottish Government has rightly set out the policy intent to end detention of children under 16 in adult establishments and young offenders institutions for young people aged 16 to 21. That intention, which is backed by all parties, is the purpose of section 47. However, it has been suggested that, although section 47 deals with section 51 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, it does not deal with section 44 of that act.

I am told that, in a recent case in Dundee, a sheriff sent a 15-year-old to Polmont YOI, allegedly under section 44 of the 1995 act. I sought to clarify the issue by way of a parliamentary question and the answer said that there had been no such occurrences under section 44 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. However, I understand that the case has been made known to the minister and I hope that it has been possible for him to check it out.

The difficulty might arise from the phrasing of section 44 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, which applies to children, who are—I presume—designated as “persons under 18”, and which says that the sheriff may, but presumably does not require to, send a child who is convicted of an offence to residential accommodation that is provided by a council. Amendment 541 would restrict the relevance of that to children of 16 and 17, which would, I hope, resolve the ambiguity. There is a technical issue about whether the Government’s clear intentions have been effectively put into the bill. My intention as regards the amendment will obviously depend on what the minister can say to me in reply.

I move amendment 541.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 541 would remove a sheriff’s power to place a young person in residential accommodation following conviction for an offence for which an adult could be imprisoned. We believe that it is sometimes appropriate for a sheriff to place a young person in residential accommodation, which is defined as an establishment that provides residential accommodation for children. For example, a sheriff may wish to place a young person in secure care, where their needs and risk can be best managed in the controlled care setting of secure accommodation.

When considering the abolition of unruly certificates in 2008, we consulted a number of relevant organisations on the impact of that change, including Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People, who supported the abolition and said that

“this welcome change in legislation will go some way to keeping children out of prison.”

It should be noted that there has been no such consultation on the impact of amendment 541, which would remove the power of sheriffs to place young persons in residential accommodation. I can tell Robert Brown that I understand that in practice, before the detention of a child under section 44 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, a sheriff will usually seek the advice of the principal reporter before sentencing and is obliged to do so where a child is subject to a supervision requirement under section 49 of the 1995 act.

Robert Brown mentioned a particular case. I say simply that I am aware of the case and that we have written to Dundee sheriff court for clarification of how that case was dealt with. It would not be appropriate for me to comment further at this stage.

Robert Brown: I have listened to the minister. My intention with amendment 541 was not to change the arrangements with regard to residential accommodation, but to focus on whether section 44 of the 1995 act did funny things that had not been got rid of. However, in the light of the minister’s comments, although the matter has not been entirely bottomed out, I will not press amendment 541 at this time. Perhaps the minister can keep me advised of the outcome of his inquiries on the issue.

Amendment 541, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 47 agreed to.

Sections 48 to 51 agreed to.

After section 51

The Convener: Amendment 429, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 454 to 456, 458 and 459.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 429 will extend the application of sections 288C, 288E and 288F of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, which prohibit an accused person from conducting their own defence in certain cases involving sexual offences, or in cases involving child witnesses or other vulnerable witnesses. Currently, the prohibition applies specifically to preliminary hearings, trials and victim statement proofs. The amendments will extend the prohibition to “any relevant hearing”, which means a hearing at which, or for the purposes of which, a witness is to give evidence.

It is important that the amendments be agreed to. The prohibitions will apply in cases in which the alleged victim or a witness might be particularly intimidated or otherwise inhibited from giving their evidence. Such cases include those that involve certain sexual offences and child witnesses under the age of 12, or other vulnerable witnesses. Our intention is to ensure that victims and witnesses are not to be cross-examined by the alleged perpetrator in any relevant hearings relating to such cases. The law as it stands does not cover all the types of hearing at which it is possible for a witness to give evidence, which is why we seek to make the amendments. The accused will, of course, still be legally represented, and will be notified that they cannot conduct their own defence. However, the provisions take account of the interests of vulnerable witnesses in cases where there would be considerable potential for intimidation if the accused was to conduct their own defence.

Amendments 454 to 456 and amendment 458 will, if amendment 429 is agreed to, make a number of consequential amendments to the 1995 act. They will replace references to specific hearings with the general term “any relevant hearing”. Amendment 459 will make a consequential amendment to the Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004. It should be noted that paragraph (b) of amendment 459 is consequential on agreement to amendment 132.

I move amendment 429.

The Convener: When the issue was looked at in connection with earlier legislation, it was revealed that the situation to which the minister referred had happened only once in the past 50 years. Nevertheless, it is clearly undesirable that an accused person should conduct his own defence and have the opportunity of confronting or cross-examining the alleged victim. Amendment 429 simply seeks to extend that established principle, and to my mind it is worthy of support. I take it that there is no need to wind up, minister.

Fergus Ewing: There is no wind-up.

Amendment 429 agreed to.

Section 52—Disclosure of convictions and non-court disposals

Amendments 519 and 520 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 52, as amended, agreed to.

After section 52

Amendment 521 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

After schedule 2

Amendment 522 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 53 agreed to.

Section 54—Submissions as to sufficiency of evidence

The Convener: Amendment 462, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 463 to 477 and 514.

Fergus Ewing: The amendments make a number of changes to the bill, creating a new Crown right of appeal against certain judicial decisions that can end a trial.

Amendments 462 and 463 make technical changes to the new statutory submission that the defence may make on the sufficiency of evidence in a case. That submission may be that the evidence is insufficient in law to justify the accused being convicted of the indicted offence or that there is no evidence to support part of the circumstances in the indictment. If successful, it will result either in the judge acquitting the accused of the indicted offence or an amendment to the indictment. The amendments ensure that the submission may be made only once, either at the close of all evidence in the case or at the conclusion of the prosecutor’s address to the jury.

Amendments 464 to 467 are technical and will ensure that the Crown appeals provisions better reflect existing criminal court practice.

Amendment 468 clarifies that it will not be possible for the defence to make a common-law submission that, on the entire evidence that has been led in the case, no reasonable jury, properly directed, could convict. That reflects the policy intention on the introduction of the bill. However, the Sheriffs Association suggested in its written evidence to the committee that the provisions in the bill would not prohibit that type of submission. Amendment 468 will make certain that that type of submission cannot be made.

Amendments 469 and 477 make provision for time limits when a prosecutor wishes to exercise the new Crown right of appeal that is created by section 55. The appeals concerned are against two types of judicial decision: first, a ruling that there is no case to answer; secondly, a direction that the Crown case is insufficient for the jury to convict on a particular charge or to support some part of the charge. The existing provisions do not currently set out time limits for the Crown to indicate that it intends to appeal. That might cause some difficulties in practice and unfairness to accused persons if it were to result in extended delay. The amendments therefore ensure that there will be an overall deadline of seven days from the making of the decision being appealed for the lodging of a note of appeal. The prosecutor will have to intimate an intention to appeal either immediately after the judicial decision or after seeking an adjournment of up to two days in order to consider whether to make an appeal. No new time limits are proposed for any appeal against a ruling during a trial that an important item of prosecution evidence is inadmissible, as that mode of appeal is subject to the leave of the court.

Amendment 470 will require the suspension of the effect of the acquittal. That will allow the court to grant bail without there appearing to be two contradictory orders in operation.

Amendment 474 makes a minor, clarifying amendment to new section 107D of the 1995 act.

Amendments 471, 472 and 514 deal with bail and remand decisions when a Crown appeal is made against an acquittal under section 55. Although the person will have been acquitted, it will be necessary for the court to decide whether they should be bailed or remanded during the period between the acquittal and the deciding of the appeal. The amendments regulate that decision.

12:00

Section 55 already covers that situation through new section 107A(2) of the 1995 act. It reflects the Scottish Law Commission’s recommendation that decisions to remand an acquitted person subject to a Crown appeal should occur only in exceptional circumstances. However, the existing provision is unsatisfactory, as it suggests that the exceptional requirement would apply to both the possible options—not just to remand but to bail. We have given detailed thought to the Scottish Law Commission’s reasons for recommending that a remand decision should occur only in exceptional cases. The person concerned will of course have been acquitted, and there are strong arguments of fairness against placing such a person in custody. On the other hand, courts are well versed in making bail decisions, and the normal framework allows them to look at all the circumstances before taking their decision.

The Crown appeals provisions will allow challenge to an acquittal caused by an error by a trial judge. The cases that the Crown will decide to appeal under the new provisions are likely to be at the most serious end of the spectrum and those in which the public interest is most likely to be affected by the outcome. Those appeals will be rare. The Crown anticipates that only three or four will be made in any year. An example of an appeal could be in a murder trial where the judge has ruled that there is no case to answer and that decision is closely contested by the Crown.

The Scottish Law Commission recognised that there may be cases in which it would be justified to remand someone subject to a Crown appeal. There is a clear public interest in ensuring that especially dangerous persons are not released in the period between an incorrect decision and a ruling by the appeal court to correct that mistake and quash the acquittal. The person might reoffend or seek to flee justice, and it seems vital to us that the courts should not be bound by an unreasonably high test before the safety and security of the public can be safeguarded.

After consulting the Crown Office, we have concluded that the exceptional test is not needed for remand decisions. Amendment 471 will therefore remove the word "exceptionally", which means that the normal test that courts are used to applying in making bail and remand decisions will apply. It involves a presumption in favour of bail, which can be overturned where there is a good reason for refusing it.

Amendment 472 will provide an additional safeguard by ensuring that detention can occur only where there are arguable grounds of appeal.

Amendment 514 is a consequential amendment, which will add a Crown appeal to the instances in which bail can be granted under the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995.

Amendments 473 and 475 are technical amendments that will remove two unnecessary provisions.

Amendment 476 will allow a prosecutor to desert a case for the time being, pending the result of a Crown appeal. That should save court time and prevent a trial continuing in relation to several minor charges where there is an outstanding Crown appeal on the main charge in the indictment. Desertion will permit the prosecutor to reassess the case in its entirety, following the result of the Crown appeal.

I move amendment 462.

The Convener: This is a fairly important issue. I invite other contributions.

Robert Brown: I have a brief comment to make on amendment 471, which will remove the words "exceptionally and" with regard to the detention of the person. If that amendment were agreed to, the remnants of new section 107A(2)(b) of the 1995 act would read:

"after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard" the court may

"order the detention of the person in custody or admit him to bail."

It is fair to say that no guidance is given to the court as to the circumstances, which the minister outlined carefully. Is there an issue about whether the court should have guidance from Parliament about the circumstances in which detention and custody—in these unusual situations—would be appropriate?

Fergus Ewing: Given the potential controversy of amendment 471, I sought to cover the issues involved at some length and to go through them in greater length than I did those of the other—not unimportant—amendments in the group.

By removing the phrase "exceptionally and", amendment 471 will in effect apply the normal test, so that the normal rules of considering whether to grant bail will apply. We make that change in the expectation—indeed, the certainty—that judges are very familiar with the application of that test and are therefore well aware of how it should be applied. For that reason, we do not think it necessary to specify that further guidance should be issued, as we can be confident in our expectation that those who are required to make decisions about bail are very well experienced in such decisions.

The Convener: I suspect that the amendments are predicated on the failure of the prosecution in the World’s End murder case and seek to protect the Crown’s position where a no-case-to-answer submission under section 97 of the 1995 act is granted by the trial judge. As the law stands at present, the only remedy for such a decision would be for the matter to be taken to the appeal court on the Lord Advocate’s reference. On that basis, the prosecution would have already failed and the accused could not be subject to reindictment.

It is worth recording that instances where a no-case-to-answer submission has been successful are very few in number, as the minister has said. Amendment 469 would allow the Crown to seek to appeal such a decision by allowing for the adjournment of the trial diet while the appeal is determined. Personally, I have no difficulty with the proposed time factor, as I think that the two-day limit is appropriate. I also have no difficulty with the proposal that the accused be remanded in custody rather than be granted bail.

I am minded to support the amendments.

Does the minister wish to wind up the debate?

Fergus Ewing: Let me say briefly that the amendments reflect the recommendations of the Scottish Law Commission’s “Report on Crown Appeals”.

Amendment 462 agreed to.

Amendments 463 to 468 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 54, as amended, agreed to.

Section 55—Prosecutor’s right of appeal

Amendments 469 to 476 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 55, as amended, agreed to.

Section 56 agreed to.

Section 57—Further amendment of 1995 Act

Amendment 477 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 57, as amended, agreed to.

Section 58—Retention of samples etc

The Convener: Amendment 478, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 404, 405, 479, 406, 480, 407, 481, 482, 408, 494, 499, 502 to 504, 512 and 513. I point out that if amendment 478 is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 404, because of pre-emption.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 478 will make a number of changes to section 18 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. The amendment will apply the provisions on destruction of samples to the new sections 18B and 18C that will be inserted by section 59 of the bill and it will make consequential changes to cross-references. Amendment 478 will also insert new subsection (7AA) into section 18, which will remove the requirement that devices that are used to collect forensic data from the external skin of a person outside Scotland can only be those that are approved by the Scottish ministers. That power is considered unnecessary and bureaucratic, and we have no evidence that it has been used.

James Kelly’s amendments 404 to 408 introduce significantly more stringent powers for the retention of data from people who are prosecuted for but not convicted of an offence. The aim appears to be to bring our legislation closer to the Crime and Security Act 2010, which was recently passed for England and Wales. It is worth remembering that, in the case of S and Marper v the United Kingdom, the judgment found the retention regime in England and Wales to be incompatible with article 8 of the European convention on human rights. That regime provided that forensic data on those who were not subsequently convicted of an offence could be retained for an indefinite period of time. The UK Government’s Crime and Security Act 2010 amended the regime.

However, it is also worth noting what the House of Lords and House of Commons Joint Committee on Human Rights said about the provisions in the 2010 act in its 15th report of the 2009-10 session, which was published in March:

“in our view, the proposal to continue to retain the DNA profiles of innocent people and children for up to 6 years irrespective of the seriousness of the offence concerned and without any provision for independent oversight, is disproportionate and arbitrary and likely to lead to further breaches of the ECHR.”

The report concluded that “even if the Government is able to persuade its colleagues on the Committee of Ministers”— whose next meeting will be in June 2010—

“to accept its approach, we consider that there is a significant risk that the proposals in the” 2010 act

“would lead to further litigation both at home and at the European Court of Human Rights and a significant risk of further violations of the right to respect for private life by the United Kingdom.”

Mr Kelly’s amendments seek to introduce a similar retention regime in Scotland, but with retention triggered following the person’s being proceeded against, not arrested, as in England and Wales. That approach would mean that someone who was prosecuted for but acquitted of a minor breach of the peace would have their DNA and fingerprints retained for six years—the same period for which someone who was prosecuted for but not convicted of rape or murder would have their DNA and fingerprints retained. Given that lack of discrimination between minor and serious offences, Mr Kelly is asking us to introduce an approach that would be at greater risk of ECHR challenge. A successful challenge that found the approach to be disproportionate and unlawful may itself lead to justice being undermined. For example, an individual may be able to challenge his conviction on the ground that his DNA was retained unlawfully and therefore was inadmissible as evidence. If the DNA evidence was crucial to the case, a court could declare the DNA evidence to be inadmissible and the person could be acquitted or have his conviction quashed.

The Scottish approach to the retention of DNA that is taken from those who are not subsequently convicted of an offence, as set out in section 18A of the 1995 act, was looked upon favourably by Strasbourg, because it differentiates between the most serious offences and minor offences by providing for retention only when a person is proceeded against for certain sexual and violent offences. It allows a minimum retention period of three years, but it also enables that period to be extended if the courts deem that necessary. In fact, when an unconvicted person is considered to pose a significant risk, DNA can be retained beyond the six-year period that is allowed for in England and Wales.

There are, therefore, two strong features of the Scottish approach that do not apply in England. First, retention under section 18A does not apply to minor offences; it applies only to sexual and violent offences, which provides the differentiation that was sought by the judgment in S and Marper v the United Kingdom. Secondly, the decision on the appropriate period for which to extend the retention of DNA is taken independently by the court, taking into account the evidence that is before it. We do not want to take a backward step in terms of the ECHR by moving away from the current regime, which was considered to be proportionate.

12:15

In its response to our 2008 consultation on the acquisition and retention of forensic data, the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland supported the current regime, stating:

“Members are supportive of the current procedures in relation to retention of the DNA of individuals who, having had criminal proceedings initiated against them in respect of a relevant offence, are not convicted. There is also strong support for the widening of these powers to include the retention of the fingerprint records of such persons.”

The law officers have indicated that, under their responsibility for prosecuting offences in Scotland, they support Scotland’s current approach and would not wish to move to an approach where there was uncertainty about ECHR compliance.

In relation to the evidence presented by the United Kingdom Government to support its new retention periods for unconvicted persons, of course if you retain more DNA you are going to get more hits and solve more crimes. However, the question is not solely about evidence, but about proportionality and finding a balance between what is acceptable to the police in terms of providing evidence to investigate crime, to the courts in terms of compatibility with the ECHR and to the people of Scotland in terms of protecting their civil liberties. We believe that we have the balance correct with the current law, and for that reason we oppose amendments 404 to 408.

Amendment 479 is a technical amendment that amends section 58(3) of the bill in order to recast the adjustment that is being made to section 18A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995.

Amendment 480 amends section 58(3)(c) of the bill, which amends section 18A of the 1995 act. It substitutes a reference to ensure consistency in terminology across the forensic provisions in the 1995 act and the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003.

Amendment 481 amends section 58 of the bill to insert new provisions into section 18A of the 1995 act. It amends section 18A by providing the sheriff principal with the power to amend the date of destruction for any forensic data that are held under section 18A, should he or she allow an appeal made by a chief constable against the original decision of a sheriff not to extend the retention period. Where an appeal is successful, the sheriff principal will have the same power as the sheriff to grant an order amending or further amending the destruction date. The order is limited to a period of two years from the previous destruction date.

Amendment 499 clarifies the purposes for which Scottish police forces, the Scottish Police Services Authority or other bodies operating on behalf of the police can use forensic data from outwith Scotland. In accordance with new section 19C(2) of the 1995 act, which is inserted by section 60(1) of the bill, such data can be used for the prevention and detection of crime, the investigation of an offence, the conduct of a prosecution or the identification of a person. Amendment 502 makes provision for the sharing of forensic data by the police within Scotland and other jurisdictions for use in accordance with section 19C(2) of the 1995 act or for checking against other relevant data. The amendment also enables the police, the Scottish Police Services Authority or a person acting on behalf of a police force to use forensic data provided to them by other jurisdictions to check them against Scottish forensic data held on relevant databases. The amendments are aimed at providing a clear description in statute of the powers of the police to use and provide forensic data to support the investigation, detection and prosecution of crime, including cross-border crime. The terms of section 19C(2) of the 1995 act will ensure sufficient safeguards on the uses of the data.

Amendments 503 and 504 provide for forensic data mentioned in section 19C(1) of the 1995 act to be used for the investigation of a crime or suspected crime and the conduct of a prosecution in a country or territory outside Scotland. The effect of the amendments is that the powers under new section 19C of the 1995 act on the use of samples will be applicable to the investigation of crime or suspected crime or the conduct of a prosecution in England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Amendment 512 inserts a new paragraph into schedule 5 to the bill, as it makes minor and technical amendments to sections 18(8)(c) and 19 of the 1995 act. It provides consistency with the policy elsewhere in the bill by removing the reference to “impressions” in section 18(8)(c) of the 1995 act. All other references to “impressions” will be removed, as this term is now considered to be obsolete for the purposes of forensic data provisions in the 1995 act. The term “relevant physical data”, as defined in section 18(7A) of the 1995 act, already catches the types of impressions that are required for these provisions. Replacing the term “prints” with “relevant physical data” will ensure that palm prints and other kinds of relevant physical data are also included for the purpose of section 18(8)(c) of the 1995 act, as the current meaning of “prints” is limited to fingerprints.

Amendment 513 repeals section 20 of the 1995 act, as it has become obsolete. That section provides the power to check physical data, prints and samples against other physical data. However, if the amendments are accepted, that will be provided for in new section 19C of the 1995 act, which clarifies the power in more detail, and explains its limits and its cross-border application, so as to render section 20 of the 1995 act unnecessary.

Amendment 482 modifies the definition of a relevant sexual offence in section 18A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. Among other things, that section grants the power to retain DNA from individuals who have been prosecuted for but not convicted of certain sexual offences. The amendment provides that public indecency is a relevant sexual offence for the purpose of section 18A only if it is narrated in the criminal proceedings that there was a sexual element to the conduct.

Amendment 494 amends the list of relevant sexual offences in section 19A of the 1995 act to include public indecency, but only where a court has made a finding that there was a sexual element to the behaviour. Following the High Court case of Webster v Dominick in 2005, it was held that the common-law offence of shameless indecency was not a relevant charge in Scots law, therefore the offence that should be prosecuted is public indecency, as it covers conduct of a sexual nature. In response to that judgment, the offence of public indecency where there is a sexual element to the behaviour has been substituted for the now obsolete offence of shameless indecency.

Amendment 494 adds offences under sections 47, 49, 49A and 49C of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 to the relevant violent offences that are listed in section 19A(6) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. The amendment has two effects. First, it allows DNA samples, DNA profiles and fingerprints to be retained from individuals who have been proceeded against but not convicted of public indecency, provided that there was a sexual element to the conduct or an offence under section 47, 49, 49A or 49C of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995. Those sections concern offences involving the possession in a public place of an offensive weapon or an article with a blade or point. Secondly, the amendment will enable the police to take DNA and fingerprints under section 19A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 from any person who has been convicted of such an offence after their conviction. Statistical information shows that those who are convicted of possessing an offensive weapon have an above-average propensity to go on to commit serious violent crime. The amendment will bring that offence into line with violent offences that are already included in the list in relation to which people can have their DNA retained if they are proceeded against but not convicted.

I move amendment 478.

James Kelly: I support amendments 404 to 408, which are all in my name and seek six-year retention of DNA for all those who have been prosecuted but not convicted. I also seek provision for two-year extensions on application.

The amendments are important. The primary objective is to extend the DNA database. It is important to understand that the retention time is limited to six years; unlimited retention is not being sought. It is also important to recognise that DNA can be used not only in detecting crime but in clearing people who are innocent if it can be proven that their DNA was not at the scene of the crime.

There have always been people who have opposed extensions of the DNA database. Some argue that the DNA of people who have been found guilty of minor crimes should not be held. However, I put forward the case of John Morton, who was found guilty of rape earlier this year. The offence was committed in 2002. He was detected when his DNA was taken after a minor breach of the peace in 2007, and he was brought to court. That shows the power of the DNA database in tracking down those who commit unlawful acts. In addition, I submit that, in England and Wales, there have been 832 successful matches against the database for serious crimes over the past year. One of those matches was in the case of Paul Hutchinson, who murdered a young teenager in 1983. He has now been convicted, 27 years after his awful crime.

There are those, including the minister, who hold up the DNA system in Scotland as a model system, but given that the rape conviction rate, which was announced recently, is at a 25-year low, no one will hold up our record on rape prosecutions as an international model. I submit that the extension of the DNA database would help with tracking down offenders in the 2,000 rape cases in Scotland that remain unsolved. It is one thing to say that we all take the issue seriously, but we must look at provisions that will allow us to make progress and be successful in getting more convictions and bringing more people to trial. I submit that the extension of the DNA database is a prime example of a measure that would do that.

In relation to the minister’s points about the ECHR, he noted that the UK Government moved from a position of indefinite retention of DNA data to one of retention for six years so that the legislation would be fit for purpose. Therefore, I dissent from the views that he expressed in his opening remarks.

I oppose amendments 478 and 482 because, essentially, they support the Government’s position in the bill, which is that of those who are prosecuted for but not convicted of an offence, only the DNA of those who are prosecuted for but not convicted of serious violent and sexual offences should be retained.

I support amendments 479 and 480, which provide clarification on samples, and amendment 481, which provides clarification on two-year extensions. I support amendment 494, which clarifies the definitions of sexual and violent offences, and amendment 499, which seeks to allow forensic data that are obtained outwith Scotland to be used by the Scottish police. In addition, I support amendment 502 on the sharing of forensic data within Scotland, and amendments 503 and 504, which seek to allow the use of samples for prosecutions in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. Those are sensible amendments. I also support amendments 512 and 513, which are simply tidying-up amendments.

The Convener: As James Kelly said, the debate on this group is an important one. Although I regret having to postpone it, members have other commitments over the lunch hour, which will last literally one hour. I suspend the meeting until 2 o’clock but, as members will be aware, there is a briefing at 1.30.

12:28

Meeting suspended.

14:03

On resuming—

The Convener: We resume the debate on amendments to section 58, on matters pertaining to the retention of DNA samples. We have heard from the minister and James Kelly, but other members wish to contribute.

Robert Brown: I was about to launch into my devastating assault on James Kelly when the meeting was suspended, so I am feeling slightly frustrated.

I am genuinely concerned about James Kelly’s amendments 404 to 408, which, if I understand them correctly, are designed greatly to widen the categories of people acquitted after trial or not proceeded against from whom DNA samples can be retained, and to double the normal time of retention from three to six years.

Mr Kelly mentioned 2,000 unsolved rape cases. I cannot believe that identification forms the issue in more than a small proportion of those cases, or that, in cases involving what might be described as violent stranger rape, the question of identification is the issue. As far as I can see, the difficulties in rape cases are almost always to do with cases of acquaintance rape, which often involve the consumption of drugs or alcohol, which complicates the issue and puts the onus on consent. None of that has anything to do with DNA samples.

I am not aware of there being any great evidence to suggest that James Kelly’s amendments are good or necessary. As has been said, there is a balance between the rights of the individual—particularly one who has been found not guilty of a crime or who has not been proceeded against—and the interests of public safety.
There is a case—although I do not agree with it—for everyone having their DNA on a giant database. There might be some logic to that, providing that the authorities could be trusted not to load the database on to a memory stick and leave it on a bus. However, if it is accepted that it is not appropriate to store everyone’s DNA information, which is the context within which we are operating, there can be only a limited right to retain DNA for serious matters, and for a limited time, where a person has been acquitted or not proceeded against.

I think that I am right in saying that the United Kingdom holds more DNA samples than almost any other country in Europe. James Kelly seems to be copying his amendments from the position in England, but I suggest to him that we should exercise caution in following the English model, given that the previous attempt by the Labour Government to go down that road rightly fell foul of the ECHR.

I have heard nothing to suggest that the Scottish model, which is reasonable and proportionate, causes particular problems. We know that, under section 29(2)(d) of the Scotland Act 1998, any provision that is incompatible with the ECHR is outwith the legislative competence of the Scottish Parliament.

The minister referred to the judgment in S and Marper v the UK. The criticism in that case was of the blanket and indiscriminate nature of DNA retention in England and Wales; it also highlighted the need to distinguish between adults and children in terms of the retention regime. The UK was found to be in violation of the ECHR on that basis, and I think that James Kelly’s amendments raise the same issues.

The Council of Europe’s Committee of Ministers has discussed the UK Government’s response and has expressly stated that the regime in Scotland, which provides for the retention of the DNA of unconvicted adults only in relation to serious offences and only for three years, was in accordance with the ECHR. As the minister mentioned earlier, the highly regarded Joint Committee on Human Rights of the House of Commons and the House of Lords also argued persuasively that a six-year period of retention for unconvicted adults was a disproportionate interference with privacy rights under article 8 of the ECHR.

In short, James Kelly’s amendments are not really supported by evidence, they are disproportionate and, much more significantly, they are likely to be the subject of ECHR challenge. The committee ought to reject them.

Nigel Don: I will carry on in the same vein. It is not often that I quote with approval a joint committee of the House of Lords and the House of Commons, but the Joint Committee on Human Rights was openly critical of the UK Government’s stance.

Although James Kelly has quite reasonably tried to bring a policy north of the border so that there can be some similarity with what goes on in the south—I endorsed that approach in relation to previous amendments—he has ignored the real dangers, which go further than even those that Robert Brown has suggested. We could be in a position in which someone who was convicted of a heinous crime could be subsequently acquitted and freed on the basis that the DNA evidence on which they were convicted should not have been held. I do not want to take that risk, and I am astonished that anyone would. There is a risk that the entire legislative framework could be overturned by a European judgment, with the consequences that those who were convicted on the basis of stored DNA could be released and that those whose DNA was retained could claim compensation. The proposal opens up a pile of unnecessary problems, which we have already been warned about.

There is some logic in the idea that we should retain everyone’s DNA at birth, as that would help to convict a few people. However, as Robert Brown said, if we are not going to do that—we are quite clear that we are not going to do it, and the ECHR is also quite clear on the matter—we need to have a system that is proportionate, as the present one is, and does not run the obvious risk of falling foul of decisions that we already know about. On that basis, I think that it would be absolutely crazy to support the Labour Party’s position.

Cathie Craigie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab): James Kelly’s amendments take account of the decisions that were reached as a result of the ECHR. To quote Nigel Don, if the committee does not accept them, it would be ignoring the very real and dangerous criminals who are out there and who could be caught if we retained their DNA. I fully support James Kelly’s amendments, and I think that the argument that they do not comply with the ECHR is exaggerated scaremongering.

Stewart Maxwell: When Cathie Craigie talks about people scaremongering on the issue, she must be referring to the Joint Committee on Human Rights of the House of Commons and the House of Lords, as its members are the people who pointed out the risks that are involved in going down the road that the current, or rather previous, Labour Government suggested and which James Kelly is also suggesting, in terms of a retention period of six years. I do not think that that committee was scaremongering. It was pointing out the genuine risk that his new rules would breach the ECHR.

James Kelly's amendments completely ignore the valuable and reasoned report by the joint committee and the European ruling on proportionality as regards the retention of DNA. If we agree to the amendments we run the risk of being in breach of the ECHR right away. If the amendments pass into law that is subsequently challenged, rather than catching and keeping more dangerous criminals, we could end up detaining fewer dangerous criminals because people who had been convicted on the basis of DNA that had been retained under legislation that, according to the ECHR, was unlawful would, of course, have their convictions quashed. That is a dangerous road to go down.

I am not surprised that Labour members support that approach because that is what the Labour Party in London has been doing. Frankly, we should not follow the Labour Party in London; we have learned that lesson over many years. We should stick to the proportionate system that we have in Scotland and the recommendations on DNA retention that have been widely accepted and respected by Europe and others. We should reject amendments 404 to 408.

The Convener: The matters under discussion have been debated by the Parliament in the past. I have serious reservations about Mr Kelly’s amendments—to my mind, they are simply not arguable in law. I have no issue with the retention of DNA samples that are taken on conviction. It is clear that it will be necessary for the police and other authorities to retain samples during an inquiry or investigation and for some time thereafter. That is recognised in existing law, which gives the police the additional protection of being able to apply for the retention of such samples for a maximum of three years in the case of unconvicted persons who have been charged with violent or sexual offences, with a further extension allowed on application to the sheriff. That appears to be a reasonable position.

Mr Kelly's amendments go much further and would allow the authorities to retain samples from those who have not come before a court or those who, having done so, have been acquitted. Leaving aside the issue of desirability, the amendments fly in the face of established law.

In its December 2008 judgment in the case of S and Marper v the United Kingdom, the European Court of Human Rights took the view that English law breached article 8 of the European convention. An application under article 14 also went to the court. Although they did not make a determination on that application, the indications from the justices were that, had they not disposed of the matter by making a determination under article 8, they would have found that the law was flawed under article 14, too.

In effect, Mr Kelly seeks to make our law identical to English law that has, unfortunately, already failed to clear the European hurdle. It is perhaps significant that in their judgment the European justices referred to the law of Scotland as it stands and commented that the Scottish position is satisfactory. The minister also commented on that. The justices said, albeit in Eurospeak, that England was out on a limb, being the only jurisdiction that followed that line.

I am probably the last person here who would overplay the line of human rights, civil liberties and the European dimension generally, but I feel that what Mr Kelly seeks to do would be undesirable on the one hand and completely contrary to the law as it stands on the other. Were we to change the bill to incorporate his amendments, we would inevitably be subject to challenge and we would not win. I understand Mr Kelly’s frustrations, but I can suggest only that the problem was caused by his colleagues in London, who incorporated the European convention into Scots law through the Scotland Act 1998, while assiduously avoiding doing the same to English law.

Fergus Ewing: I will reply to a couple of arguments that have been made in the debate. First, Mr Kelly referred to the Morton case and demonstrated how careful we need to be about the examples that we use to demonstrate the effectiveness of retention policies.

The Morton case involved DNA that was taken from someone who was accused of a fairly minor crime in 2009. The sample was found to match DNA taken from a rape scene in 2002. All DNA taken from those arrested is checked immediately against crime scene stains for unsolved crimes on the Scottish DNA database. It does not have to be retained for that to happen. In other words, the DNA comes from the crime scene, rather than being retained DNA from a specific individual. The identification was therefore made not because the individual’s DNA had been retained but because the crime scene sample had been retained. That is an entirely different matter and, therefore, I respectfully submit, wholly irrelevant to the arguments that Mr Kelly advanced.

In addition, I understand that it has been argued in the press down south that the research on which the move towards a six-year period is based is itself based in part on research from the Jill Dando institute for crime science. The institute said that its research should not have been used as a basis for the proposals, because it was unfinished.
Without repeating the arguments that the convener and other members have made, it seems to me that there is clear proof that the pre-existing regime in the Marper case has already fallen foul of the ECHR. We are not talking about a theoretical future breach of the ECHR—a breach of the ECHR by England and Wales has already been shown. They have already been rapped on the knuckles. They have sought to address the issue by proposing the six-year period, which makes no distinction at all for the gravity of offences. It seems to me that that approach is fraught with risk and, for the reasons that Mr Maxwell and Mr Don have outlined, could confound the very objectives that Mr Kelly and Ms Craigie wish to achieve. We all wish those who are guilty of serious crimes to be brought to justice. However, that objective would be confounded if we do so by using evidence that is then found to be inadmissible because it breaches the ECHR for reasons that are clearly foreseeable. For those reasons, I strongly urge Mr Kelly not to move his amendments.

The Convener: Before I put the question, because there has been a lapse in time since we started this discussion, I remind members that, if amendment 478 is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 404, because of pre-emption.

The question is, that amendment 478 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Against
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 405 disagreed to.

Amendment 479 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Amendment 406 moved—[James Kelly].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 406 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 406 disagreed to.

Amendment 480 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Amendment 407 moved—[James Kelly].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 407 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 407 disagreed to.

Amendment 481 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Amendment 482 moved—[Fergus Ewing].
The Convener: The question is, that amendment 482 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Against
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 482 agreed to.

Amendment 408 moved—[James Kelly].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 408 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 408 disagreed to.

Section 58, as amended, agreed to.

After section 58

The Convener: Amendment 418, in the name of Stewart Maxwell, is grouped with amendment 419.

Stewart Maxwell: Amendment 418 inserts new sections 18AA and 18AB into the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995.

Proposed new section 18AA provides for the retention of forensic data that are taken from an individual at the time of their arrest or detention, where that person subsequently accepts a fiscal disposal issued under sections 302 to 303ZA of the 1995 act in connection with an offence or offences. Where the fiscal disposal relates only to a relevant sexual or relevant violent offence, as defined by reference to the list of sexual and violent offences set out in section 19A(6) of the 1995 act, the forensic data can be retained for at least three years from the date on which the measure was issued. Where the fiscal disposal relates only to offences that are not relevant sexual or relevant violent offences, the data must be destroyed within two years of the date on which the disposal was issued. That period cannot be extended. A fiscal measure can be issued in relation to a number of offences. Where such a disposal is issued in respect of a mixture of offences—that is, some of the offences are relevant sexual or relevant violent offences and some are not—the forensic data can be retained for at least three years from the date on which the measure was issued.

Proposed new section 18AB provides for the extension of the retention period beyond three years where the fiscal offer was issued and accepted in relation to a relevant sexual or relevant violent offence. The police can apply to a sheriff to have the retention period extended for a further two years on a rolling basis. The decision of a sheriff can be appealed to the sheriff principal by both parties, and the sheriff principal’s decision on the application will be final.

Amendment 419 inserts a new section 18AC into the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. It provides that the forensic data that are taken from an individual at the time of their arrest or detention for a fixed-penalty offence, within the meaning of the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act 2004, can be retained if they subsequently accept a fixed-penalty notice that is issued under part 11 of that act. The forensic data must be destroyed no later than two years from the date on which the fixed-penalty notice was issued. There is no provision for an extension of the retention period. If more than one fixed-penalty notice is issued in connection with other fixed-penalty offences arising out of the same incident, the data must be destroyed no later than two years from the date of the later notice.

At present, there is no provision for forensic data to be retained when individuals accept fiscal disposals that are issued under sections 302 to 303ZA of the 1995 act, whether or not they are for sexual and violent offences. Nor is there provision to enable forensic data to be retained when individuals accept fixed-penalty notices that are issued under the 2004 act. That is despite the fact that the behaviour of the person who has been arrested or detained was serious enough, in those cases, to warrant arrest or detention for the offence in question. In fiscal disposal cases in which relevant sexual or relevant violent offences are involved, it is proportionate that the data should be kept for a three-year period with the possibility of extension. That fits in with our current rules. The police need to be able to compare data that are taken from individuals who are involved in such serious offences for the benefit of society at large.

I understand that a recent Strasbourg case looked favourably on the retention periods in existing section 18A of the 1995 act, which enables forensic data to be retained for at least three years if a person is prosecuted for certain sexual and violent offences but is not subsequently convicted. The three-year period is based on those retention periods.

Retention of the data for a maximum period of two years is appropriate in cases where a fixed-penalty notice under the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act 2004 is accepted or a fiscal disposal is accepted for a non-sexual or non-violent offence. That is because such offences are not as serious as sexual or violent offences, so it makes sense that there should be a lesser period of retention. Again, the individuals might not have been convicted of the offence, but in accepting an offer of a fixed-penalty notice or a fiscal disposal, they accept liability for their actions.

Procedures for the collection and retention of forensic data are already in place, so I believe that the additional costs should be minimal.

I remind colleagues that we examined this issue at stage 1 in our evidence and report. It was clear that the quite correct move to the greater use of non-court disposals has meant that DNA and so on that would have been retained is not being retained because of that administrative change. I believe that the amendments will plug a loophole in the current law.

I move amendment 418.

Robert Brown: I am grateful to Stewart Maxwell for the lengthy explanation of the detail of his amendments 418 and 419. As he rightly said, we discussed these issues at stage 1. The amendments are intended to correct what a number of people saw as an anomaly that had crept in as a result of the wider use of fixed penalties.

At first glance, the amendments look straightforward—indeed, the committee made a recommendation on the subject—but one or two aspects of them make me hesitate and I wonder whether we have considered them carefully enough. They would undoubtedly extend the retention of DNA from the current position, which has to be justified. The issue arises whether what is proposed is proportionate and whether we have really considered the material criteria required for the retention of DNA, such as the gravity of the offence. There is a certain tension between saying that the offences need to be reasonably grave and making provision in relation to offences for which a fixed penalty has been accepted. There might be issues about where we have fixed penalties and where we do not. Those points were made by the Scottish Human Rights Commission, too.

I invite the minister and Stewart Maxwell to respond to that. Putting aside the anomaly argument, which we all accept, what is the case for extending the retention of DNA in such cases? I accept that we are not talking about cases in which people were not found guilty or were not proceeded against. There is a conviction and, therefore, there is less of an argument about proportionality than there would be otherwise. Nevertheless, those issues still come into it. Some of the issues that we discussed with regard to a previous group of amendments, such as ECHR, proportionality and gravity, still have to be considered. The committee report was fairly cautious and urged a balance between consistency and proportionality.

I hasten to say that I am not necessarily against the amendments; I just think that we should put on the record a bit more of a substantial case for extending the retention of DNA.

James Kelly: I speak in support of amendments 418 and 419. I maintain the position that I argued previously—that those who are prosecuted but not convicted should have DNA retained for six years. Amendments 418 and 419 provide for a lesser period than that, but I acknowledge that my amendments were defeated. I also acknowledge that Stewart Maxwell’s amendments would close existing loopholes in the law and add to the existing DNA database. I repeat what I said before: the extension of the DNA database is positive and will help us to solve more crimes.

Bill Butler: I believe that amendments 418 and 419 are proportionate, reasonable and balanced and would not have a detrimental effect in terms of ECHR. The extension of the retention of DNA would relate to those who have been convicted, which is appropriate. The amendments would close a loophole in the law. I encourage Robert Brown to see them as balanced and proportionate. If we can get consensus on that round the table, that would be a good thing.

14:30

The Convener: Stewart Maxwell will have to convince me, too. I recognise that there is an anomaly and he is right to bring it to the committee’s attention, but I am not yet entirely convinced that the amendments are proportionate. The committee has some unfinished business involving summary justice reforms and the way in which the Procurator Fiscal Service is dealing with them. Although some concerns have arisen, no case has been brought to my attention in which a conditional offer, fiscal fine or fixed penalty has been given in respect of a sexual or serious violent offence. If that had happened, there would have been considerable concern on the part of all members.

I would have thought that a case in which there is an argument for DNA retention should be a matter for prosecution so that the court can apply a realistic disposal. That might not be a custodial sentence, but it would certainly make some attempt to constrain and restrain the conduct of the accused person.

I am also a little concerned about the wording of proposed new section 18AA(2)(a) of the 1995 act, which amendment 418 would insert. It states, inter alia, that the data or sample must have been taken "while the person was under arrest or being detained".

The vast majority of these cases do not result in an individual being arrested, and "detention" is a word of variable meaning. Does the wording in the amendment relate to the person being detained at a police office or some other place of custody? Perhaps Stewart Maxwell could address that point in his summing up.

I can see what is being attempted in the amendments, but I am not totally persuaded by them. I will listen to the minister and Mr Maxwell with considerable interest.

Fergus Ewing: Stewart Maxwell’s amendments 418 and 419 make a positive addition to the bill as they introduce valuable new powers for the retention of data taken from individuals who have committed acts that are serious enough to culminate in arrest or detention. Although they have not been convicted, the individuals concerned have accepted a fiscal disposal or a fixed-penalty notice issued under the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act 2004, and in doing so they have accepted liability for their actions.

The evidence on reconvictions supports what we see as the key premise behind the amendments—that those who commit offences may well reoffend. We are committed to reducing the number of offenders who are dealt with by the courts and the prison system. Nevertheless, it is important that provision is made in a proportionate way, as the convener said, for the retention of data from those who have offended but who have been dealt with by way of fiscal disposals. The amendments accord with the principles in the S and Marper v UK judgment, in which Strasbourg held that the retention of data from those who had not been convicted has the legitimate aim of preventing and detecting crime.

It is important to note that Strasbourg held that it is incompatible with the European convention on human rights to retain for an indefinite period data from those who have not been convicted of an offence, as we heard in the discussion on the previous group. Nothing in the amendments challenges that. They favour the approach of section 18A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, which enables forensic data that are taken from those who are not convicted to be retained for at least three years if the individuals were proceeded against for certain sexual or violent offences.

The approach that is taken in amendments 418 and 419 is fair and proportionate. First, and crucially, the amendments do not allow forensic data to be retained indefinitely. Secondly, the retention periods take account of the seriousness of the offence. Correctly, they are more stringent for those who are responsible for relevant sexual or violent offences than for those who commit less serious offences. Thirdly, the retention periods in the amendments for those who are arrested or detained in relation to a sexual or violent offence replicate the periods in section 18A of the 1995 act, which Strasbourg has already considered to be proportionate.

The measures are important and the Government supports Mr Maxwell’s amendments 418 and 419.

Stewart Maxwell: I am glad that members round the table, whether or not they end up supporting amendments 418 and 419, agree that there is an anomaly in the law as it stands. That, of course, leads on to the argument about whether my amendments would introduce an extension of the law. I accept that it would be an extension in the sense that more DNA samples would be retained. However, such samples would always have been retained had the previous method of dealing with individuals carried on so that people would have been charged and would have gone to a court disposal rather than a non-court disposal. The change to that, which was made on perfectly sensible and efficient grounds, has led to what is effectively an anomaly. The proposed extension is not an extension in a different direction from what was previously envisaged for the retention of samples.

Robert Brown raised the issue of the gravity of an offence. I have tried to be proportionate and balanced—Bill Butler referred to that—in my amendments, in that the retention for more serious offences in the category of sexual or violent offences would be for three years, with possible extensions on appeal. However, less serious offences would have a retention period of two years, which would not be extended. As I said, I have tried to be proportionate and balanced in that regard.

On the convener’s point about the meaning of the phrase “being detained” in amendment 419, the minister pointed out that that wording reflects the 1995 act’s reference to those who are arrested or detained, so it is the same style of wording. Unless officials or the minister want to correct me, I maintain that being detained does, indeed, mean being detained at a police station or other such place. That was my intention, and it is my view that that is the definition of "being detained". In any case, it means the same as what is in the 1995 act. I am sure that that is well understood by those who operate it.

The Convener: You are taking obvious refuge in that legislation.

Stewart Maxwell: I am indeed. The purpose of my amendments comes down to an attempt to correct an anomaly but stay well within the proportionate system that we have. I think that amendments 418 and 419 do that, and I hope that members will support them.

Amendment 418 agreed to.

Amendment 419 moved—[Stewart Maxwell]—and agreed to.

Section 59—Retention of samples etc from children referred to children’s hearings

The Convener: The next group of amendments is on section 59, "Retention of samples etc from children referred to children’s hearings". There are a substantial number of amendments. Amendment 409, in the name of James Kelly, is grouped with amendments 410, 360, 483, 484, 545, 381, 485, 486, 411, 546, 487 to 492, 382, 493 and 412. I draw members’ attention to the substantial number of pre-emptions that are noted on the groupings list.

James Kelly: I speak in support of amendments 409 to 412. I acknowledge that this is a complex and sensitive area of the law. My amendments seek to achieve the indefinite retention of the DNA of those children found guilty of serious violent or sexual offences and grave offences. This position is in line with the recommendation in the Fraser report, “Acquisition and Retention of DNA and Fingerprint Data in Scotland”, that the law for children should be consistent with the law for adults in this area. The Government’s proposal to retain DNA for three years does not go far enough. We are all well aware of the Bulger case and the case down in Colchester. When we look at instances like that, it fills us with fear about what might happen in the future with such offenders. Essentially, the issue is one of risk. It is about looking at offenders who have committed the crimes in question and assessing whether there is a risk that they may reoffend. I suggest that there is such a risk and that it is therefore appropriate in such cases to hold DNA indefinitely.

I oppose amendments 380, 381, 485 to 487, 545 and 546 because they support a three-year period of retention, which does not go far enough.

As I said, I acknowledge that this is a sensitive area and that a balance must be sought and a risk assessed, but it is correct that, where children commit such serious crimes, DNA should be retained indefinitely.

I move amendment 409.

Robert Brown: This is a complex area. The amendments that are on offer produce a variety of principles and practices in respect of the proper approach to the retention of samples that are taken from children who appear before hearings on offence grounds. The Scottish Government is aware of the issue and wants to categorise certain serious offences as the only ones for which DNA samples would be retained. To do so, it proposes to give itself order-making powers to define the list of offences. In my view, that is an intrinsically wrong approach. When dealing with such a significant matter, we should specify the list of offences in the bill, if it is thought that automatic retention in such circumstances is the right approach.

Amendments 409 and 410, in the name of James Kelly, leave it to the principal reporter to designate an offence as sufficiently grave to warrant the retention of DNA from the child. In a way, that is a more transparent and independent approach, but it puts a new and different responsibility on the reporter that I am not sure he or she is set up to fulfil. Furthermore, it is likely to lead to a high level of inconsistency. The deletions that are proposed by amendment 410 seem to remove the requirement for a limit on how long the child’s DNA may be kept. That is not the right approach.

Amendment 380 in my name, to which amendment 381 is consequential, offers a third, more appropriate approach. DNA could be kept only if there were an application by the chief constable to the sheriff, who would have to be satisfied that the child continued to pose a risk to public safety that justified DNA retention. That would occur in only a handful of cases and where there was an objective justification of public safety. It has been argued that the approach places the child in the middle of a legal dispute. However, such cases are likely to have been referred to the sheriff on the facts, and the court is a better place than the hearing to address such strictly legal issues, especially when the matter is important to both public safety and the rights of the child.

It is relevant to mention that, not long ago, I lodged a parliamentary question to find out how many cases were involved. The reply to question S3W-31832 indicated that data on 34 children aged between 12 and 15, 867 children of 16 to 17 and 157,000 people aged over 18 are held on the Scottish DNA database; I suspect that such data may be held in other places. As an interesting side report, I note that the youngest person on whom data are held is 13 and the oldest is 97.

The Nuffield Council on Bioethics recommended:

“When considering requests for the removal of”

children’s DNA profiles and the destruction of their samples

“there should be a presumption in favour of the removal of all records, fingerprints and DNA profiles, and the destruction of samples.”

Children 1st took more or less the same position, which was also supported by the Information Commissioner’s Office and the Law Society of Scotland. It is important to recall the view of the Scottish Children’s Reporter Administration, which thought that “there should be a judicial process, separate from the Children’s Hearings System,” to determine whether

“there was a clear and justifiable reason for doing so”.

Those are cogent and important witnesses on the issue.

As members have said, in some rare cases the risk that a child poses to the safety of others is significant enough to justify the interference with the child’s right to privacy that the retention of their DNA represents. Amendment 380 acknowledges that DNA retention should be proportionate, based on relevant criteria, including continuing risk, and subject to appropriate safeguards for children.

Amendment 546 defines the start point from which the right to retain the DNA is calculated as the date of the offence or incident, rather than the slightly confusing welter of later dates in section 59. It also gives greater clarity and comprehension to the arrangements and makes them administratively easier to organise. The period can be extended by application to the court, if necessary.

Amendment 546 raises a different issue. There is no clarity or guidance in the bill that indicates the circumstances or criteria that justify an extension of the time for keeping or destroying DNA samples. There should be. Sheriffs will need to grapple with the issue, and they should know the Parliament’s mind on it. Currently, no such criteria are specified in law. It is unclear on what basis chief constables will apply for extension or on what grounds sheriffs will decide. Amendment 546 requires the Scottish ministers to consult stakeholders and to specify such grounds in secondary legislation. That may not be the ideal way of proceeding, but it is appropriate given the current position. To a degree, it echoes the question why DNA should be kept or destroyed in the first place, which we have not really bottomed out.

Quite substantial issues of principle are involved, and we should be clear about where we are going. A number of alternatives are before the committee and I respectfully recommend the rather more restricted approach of my amendments.

14:45

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 409 seeks to establish a way of differentiating between low-level and serious assaults. The aim is to ensure that the powers to retain forensic data from children that are included in new sections 18B and 18C, which section 59 inserts into the 1995 act, are confined to assaults at the more serious end of the scale.

I support the principle behind the amendment—we do not want to retain the DNA of children who are involved in playground scuffles, after all—and we are considering how that can best be achieved. The cabinet secretary wrote to you, convener, on 8 April, setting out progress in developing the list of offences that will trigger retention, and explaining the issues around assault that James Kelly’s amendment highlights.

Early discussions of the forensic data working group, which the cabinet secretary set up to take forward proposals arising from the Fraser review, and to make recommendations on the implementation of the DNA provisions in the bill, established that the principal reporter’s definition was not the preferred option. There are, however, definitions used by the police and the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service that could be applied. As we are working on the issue in conjunction with relevant stakeholders, I ask James Kelly whether he is prepared to withdraw amendment 409 on the understanding that we will identify a means of addressing the issue separately. I will, of course, keep the committee up to date on developments.

By removing the requirement for the destruction of forensic data after three years, James Kelly’s amendments 410 to 412 appear to introduce the indefinite retention of forensic data from children who accept that they have committed a serious sexual or violent offence, or are found to have done so, in the course of a children’s hearing. Again, it seems that the amendments seek to bring Scotland into closer alignment with the new retention rules introduced by the Crime and Security Act 2010 in England and Wales. Under those arrangements, the forensic data of children aged 10 and upwards who are convicted of one serious offence or of two minor offences within a specified period can be retained indefinitely. Although Mr Kelly’s amendments apply only to the serious sexual and violent offences that will be covered through the existing bill provisions, I believe that indefinite retention is a step too far. With the right support, a child might not continue to pose a risk of offending throughout their adult life. Although I believe that it is right for children’s forensic data to be retained for a limited period in relation to the more serious offences, retention should be extended beyond that period only if the child continues to pose a risk. I do not believe that Mr Kelly’s amendments support that principle, and I do not want to undermine Scotland’s justice system by introducing measures that are at far greater risk of a successful challenge under the ECHR.

Scotland has a unique approach to dealing with the majority of children who offend, which is through the children’s hearings system. In contrast to England and Wales, where all children who have committed offences are taken to court, in Scotland, except in the most serious of cases, we have a system that focuses on supporting the child to change his or her behaviour. Other provisions in the bill seek to ensure that all children under the age of 12 are dealt with in that way and I believe that that is the right approach.

I come now to Robert Brown’s amendments 380, 381 and 382. Although I very much doubt that it is Robert Brown’s intention, there might be a technical issue with amendment 380 because there is a risk that, as drafted, it could be interpreted to allow for the indefinite retention of the forensic data of children who meet the retention criteria. That is because it removes from the bill the provision that requires forensic data to be destroyed within three years unless the chief constable applies to have that period extended. Amendment 380 gives chief constables discretion about whether to make the application to a sheriff to extend retention. As there is no requirement to make an application to a sheriff under the amendment, if the police decide not to make such an application, it could be argued that any forensic data that have been retained under proposed new section 18B of the 1995 act do not have to be destroyed and can be held indefinitely. I am pretty sure that that is not Robert Brown’s intention. I will move on to address what I think that his amendments seek to achieve.

The provisions in proposed new section 18B of the 1995 act allow for automatic retention for an initial period of three years in relation to serious sexual and violent offences. Robert Brown’s amendments seek to introduce an approach that requires a sheriff to assess individually each child who has committed a serious sexual or violent offence in order to make a ruling on whether their forensic data should be retained for the initial three-year period.

I can identify with the intentions behind James Kelly’s amendments at one end of the scale and Robert Brown’s amendments at the other, but I believe that the provisions in the bill steer a balanced middle course between those two sets of amendments. We decided at an early stage to move from the suggestion that there should be indefinite retention to ensuring that there was sufficient differentiation between the retention of data from children who accept that they have offended or are found by a sheriff to have offended and the retention of data from adults who are convicted of an offence.

The provisions of the bill as introduced were developed following careful consideration of the issues arising from Professor Jim Fraser’s review and our subsequent consultation. The recommendation in Jim Fraser’s report was that there should be indefinite retention of data from children who are found by a children’s hearing to have committed a sexual or violent offence. However, having considered the responses to our consultation and the issues that were raised by the S and Marper v the United Kingdom judgment, we took on board the points that were made about the need to consider children’s rights carefully in the development of our retention policies. As a result, the provisions seek to retain automatically for an initial period of three years forensic data only from children who are found by a children’s hearing to have committed a serious sexual or violent offence. Thereafter, as Robert Brown said, a chief constable must apply to a sheriff for further extensions, which can be up to two years. In response to Mr Brown’s query about how those applications would be dealt with, I suggest that it would be for the police to make the submission and for the judge to decide whether to grant the extension. As I said, I imagine that the criteria would include the extent to which a child continued to pose a risk. That is fairly straightforward.

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice wrote to you, convener, setting out the sexual and violent offences to which the provision will apply. I have already addressed issues around assault in relation to James Kelly’s amendment 409. The fact that retention will be automatic does not, in my view, make the provisions in proposed new sections 18B and 18C of the 1995 act disproportionate. What is important is that the principles that are applied to the power for automatic retention are proportionate and balanced. That will be achieved by ensuring that the retention is triggered only in relation to serious offences and that it is time limited. I am concerned that, instead of bringing greater fairness, Robert Brown’s amendments would involve the child in a court process and place a greater burden on the police and the courts.
Let us not pretend that children who commit serious sexual and violent offences pose no risk to others. Indeed, it is widely accepted that the victims of such offences are often other children. Those children have rights, too—the right to feel safe in the knowledge that their assailant has been identified and that their behaviour is being addressed and the right not to become victims in the first place. Let us also acknowledge that, with the correct support, many children can and will turn their lives around before they become adults. For that to happen, it must first be possible to identify that they committed the offence. Those who no longer pose a risk beyond the initial retention period should no longer have their forensic data retained. If the court decides that a child continues to pose a risk to the public, it will be possible to extend the retention period beyond the initial three years.

We have a strong tradition of protecting children’s rights in Scotland, and our children’s hearings system is unique in its focus on supporting the child. I believe that the provisions in the bill strike the right balance between the rights of the child and public safety; therefore, I cannot support James Kelly’s amendments 410 to 412 or Robert Brown’s amendments 380 to 382.

Amendment 545 would amend new section 18B, which section 59 of the bill inserts into the 1995 act. The amendment seeks to adjust the date from which the three-year period of retention starts. At present, the bill provides that the period should be calculated as starting from the date on which the child accepts having committed, or is found to have committed, a relevant offence. Amendment 545 would change the starting point of the three-year period to the date on which the offence was committed. Therefore, the overall time for which the DNA was retained would be shorter, because the starting date would be moved forward to include the time between the commitment of the offence and the point at which it was accepted. However, amendment 545 would be extremely difficult to implement in practice. It is not always possible to confirm the exact date on which offences were committed. It is also unclear how amendment 545 would work if a child was referred to a children’s hearing for a historical offence that met the retention criteria but had been committed more than three years before the child’s appearance at the hearing. In such a case, it appears that any forensic data taken from the child could not be retained because three years would already have lapsed since the commission of the offence. Furthermore, sexual offences often involve conduct that happens on a number of occasions on different dates. Amendment 545 does not account for what the date of destruction should be in those scenarios. For those reasons, the date when a child accepts having committed, or is found to have committed, a relevant offence is a clearer, more consistent and more reliable trigger point.

Amendment 546 would complicate the process by which a sheriff may grant an application to extend the retention period for forensic data that are taken from, or provided by, children who have been referred to a children’s hearing. The amendment provides that, before granting such an application, the sheriff must be satisfied that it meets one of a number of criteria that are to be set out in regulations that are to be made by the Scottish ministers. Subsection (6) of new section 18B, which the bill inserts into the 1995 act, already provides for the Scottish ministers to make an order prescribing relevant sexual or violent offences for the purposes of section 18B. That new section sets the basis for the retention of data and provides that forensic data are to be retained only from those who have committed the most serious offences. When the police apply to a sheriff for an extension to the retention period, the justification behind the application may relate to operational policing matters, which will differ in each application made. It is impracticable to specify a list of criteria that a sheriff should consider that would apply in each case.

For those reasons, it is unnecessary and cumbersome to require the development of regulations that set out criteria that are to be applied when considering the extended retention of forensic data. The police are experienced in assessing risk and presenting such cases to the court, just as courts are experienced in weighing the arguments and facts that are presented to them in coming to a decision. Therefore, we do not support amendments 545 and 546.

Amendment 483 is a minor amendment to subsection (7) of new section 18B. The amendment will correct a cross-reference to new section 18C of the 1995 act, which is also inserted by section 59 of the bill.

Amendment 485 is a technical amendment linked to amendment 486. New section 18B of the 1995 act grants the power to retain data from children who have been referred to a children’s hearing on the grounds of a relevant offence. Amendment 486 provides that public indecency can be specified as a relevant sexual offence only if it is clear in the referral to the children’s hearing that there was a sexual element to the offence. Although it is unlikely that such an offence would trigger retention of data from children, the proposed change is required because the list of relevant offences applicable to children that is to be made by order of the Scottish ministers is to be drawn from the list of offences in section 19A(6) of the 1995 act.
Amendment 487 will insert new subsections (4A) and (4B) into new section 18C of the 1995 act. Subsections (4A) and (4B) will provide the sheriff principal with the power to make an order to extend retention if the sheriff principal accepts an appeal from a chief constable under section 18C(4) against the sheriff’s original decision not to extend retention of forensic data from a child. That will bring the process for extending retention into line with the terms of section 18C(3), which specifies the power for a sheriff to make an order setting a new destruction date. The new destruction date that is set by the sheriff principal must not be more than two years later than the previous destruction date.

Amendments 488 and 489 are technical drafting amendments that will replace the term “expired” with the term “elapsed” in describing the period for bringing appeals under new section 18C of the 1995 act. That is for consistency with existing section 18A of the 1995 act.

15:00

Amendment 491 also ensures consistency with terminology that is used in section 18A of the 1995 act. Amendment 492 is a technical amendment to the definition of “relevant chief constable” in new section 18C(8) of the 1995 act. This is a drafting change that has no effect on the purpose of the provision. Amendment 493 is a tidying-up amendment that removes section 59(2), which is no longer required, in light of amendment 478.

I am nearing the end, convener.

The Convener: I am relieved to hear that.

Fergus Ewing: Amendments 484 and 490 are technical amendments that are designed to achieve consistency in the terminology describing the types of forensic data that are taken and retained.

I hope that that is all clear, and I urge the committee to resist the amendments in the names of James Kelly and Robert Brown.

The Convener: As has been said, many of these amendments highlight quite difficult and sensitive matters and we have to be particularly careful when considering them.

I find some merit in James Kelly’s amendments. We are dealing with matters in relation to which the grounds of referral have been admitted or proved following a hearing before a sheriff, which means that we are dealing with cases in which the child has been convicted, if we can use such a term, in relation to the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. I also have some sympathy with James Kelly in his attempts to categorise the type of offence in relation to which he is seeking the retention of the data. However, having heard what the minister has said about that, there appears to be on-going work under that heading, and I would not be minded to support the amendments.

Clearly, there are difficulties with this issue and we must be particularly careful. I believe that this matter could do with a more leisurely approach because, inevitably, there will be problems.

I invite the minister to add any comments that he might have, after that fairly comprehensive narration of the circumstances around the amendments.

Fergus Ewing: I appreciate the arguments that you have just made, convener. We welcome the fact that James Kelly has lodged his amendments, which we support in principle. As I have indicated, we are doing further work on the issue and we will come back to the committee before stage 3 with the conclusion of our deliberations, which might involve lodging an amendment or suggesting that the issue be dealt with in secondary legislation. In either event, we will come back to the committee before stage 3, as soon as we have completed our deliberations. I say that in a desire to be helpful to members on an issue in relation to which we are all moving, or seeking to move, in the same or a similar direction.

The Convener: I do not think that there is any great division of opinion on the matter.

James Kelly: Leaving aside the technical amendments, which I support, the remaining amendments fall into two groups. My amendments 410 to 412 involve the indefinite retention of DNA for serious violent and sexual offences, and the remaining amendments consider a variety of ways of implementing the three-year retention.

I support indefinite retention, and I point the minister to his own consultation on the Fraser report, which also went down that route. That is a strong recommendation.

Various contributors to the debate have spoken about the need to be proportionate about the retention of DNA. My main concern is public safety, which is why my amendments seek to extend the DNA database. It is important that the public safety aspect has a higher priority.

I hear what the minister says about amendment 409. I welcome the work that the forensic data working group has done on definitions. Bearing that in mind, and the minister’s comments, I am prepared to withdraw amendment 409 in the hope that we can make some progress in the area.

Amendment 409, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: Amendment 410, in the name of James Kelly, has already been debated with amendment 409. If amendment 410 is agreed to, I will not be able to call amendments 380, 483, 484 or 545 on the ground of pre-emption.

Amendment 410 moved—[James Kelly].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 410 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 410 disagreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 380, in the name of Robert Brown, has already been debated with amendment 409. If amendment 380 is agreed to, I will not be able to call amendments 483 or 484 on the ground of pre-emption.

Amendment 380 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 380 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 380 disagreed to.

Amendments 483 and 484 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Amendments 545 and 381 not moved.

Amendment 485 moved—[Fergus Ewing].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 485 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Against
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 485 agreed to.

Amendment 486 moved—[Fergus Ewing].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 486 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Against
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 486 agreed to.

Amendment 411, in the name of James Kelly, has already been debated with amendment 409. If amendment 411 is agreed to, I will not be able to call amendments 546, 487 to 492, or 382 on the ground of pre-emption.

Amendment 411 moved—[James Kelly].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 411 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)

Against
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 411 disagreed to.

Amendment 546 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 546 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 546 disagreed to.

Amendments 487 to 491 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 492, in the name of the cabinet secretary, has already been debated with amendment 409. If amendment 492 is agreed to, I will not be able to call amendment 382.

Amendment 492 moved—[Fergus Ewing].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 492 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Against
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 492 agreed to.

Section 59, as amended, agreed to.

After section 59
Amendment 494 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 60—Use of samples etc

The Convener: Amendment 495, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 496 to 498, 500, 501 and 505 to 510.

Fergus Ewing: I will be brief.

Amendments 495 to 498, 500, 501 and 505 to 510 amend sections 59 and 60 of the bill, which, in turn, amend the forensic data provisions in the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 and section 56 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003. That is in order to achieve consistency in the terminology describing the types of forensic data that are taken and retained. The amendments are essentially tidying amendments.

I move amendment 495.

The Convener: The amendments seem to be fairly straightforward.

Robert Brown: The Government amendments are unexceptionable. However, is the Government doing any further work on the destruction of samples as opposed to DNA profiles and on the complex issue of the security and lawful usages of DNA profiling information? New section 19C of the 1995 act, which will be introduced by section 60 of the bill, seems to authorise the use of the material for criminal investigations and identification of the bodies of deceased persons, but I am not sure whether that is the same as forbidding other uses—for example, the use of samples by researchers. I imagine that that ought not to be legitimate. It does not appear to be an offence to use DNA samples for other unauthorised purposes, but perhaps it should be. To whom do the samples ultimately belong? Does an accused person have a right to part of the samples, as they do with blood or urine samples in drink-driving cases?

Section 70 of the bill gives powers for data matching that seem to be innocuous, but they are potentially wide ranging. I would appreciate the minister’s view on that. It may be preferable if he wrote to the committee in detail after the meeting rather than dealing with the matter now. Nevertheless, I would be interested in an update on those background issues.

The Convener: The minister could deal with those matters in summing up, as no other member wishes to participate in the discussion.

Fergus Ewing: In my truncated comments, I said that the amendments are technical and that they basically tidy things up. I have two things to say in answer to Robert Brown’s questions. First, the working group is considering all the general issues. Secondly, with respect, I think that Mr Brown’s remarks relate not to section 60, but to a later section, so we could perhaps consider them later. Of course, if I have misspoken—I think that that is the Americanism—on any matter, I would be more than happy to correct what I have said later on, but I do not think that the points that Mr Brown has made are relevant to the group of amendments that we are considering.

Amendment 495 agreed to.

Amendments 496 to 510 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 60, as amended, agreed to.

Section 61—Referrals from Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission: grounds for appeal

15:15

The Convener: Amendment 133, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 134 and 135.

Fergus Ewing: Amendments 133 to 135 are minor amendments to section 61, which deals with the grounds for appeal following a reference by the Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission to the High Court.

As drafted, the proposed new subsection (4A) being inserted into section 194D of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 would require that the grounds for appeal arising from an SCCRC reference must relate to one or more of the reasons contained in the commission’s statement of reasons. However, the statement of reasons produced by the commission will commonly set out not only the reasons why it is making a referral, but the other possible grounds that it has considered and decided not to refer on. One interpretation of proposed new subsection (4A) might be that an appeal founded on something that the commission has said in the statement of reasons is not a reason for referral. The additional words inserted by amendment 133 avoid that.

Amendments 134 and 135 make minor adjustments to the language of proposed new subsections (4B) and (4E) to fit better with the terminology used in the High Court. Rather than referring to additional grounds of appeal being “raised”, the provisions are adjusted to refer to the appeal being “founded” on additional grounds. There is no change in the effect of the provisions.

I move amendment 133.

Amendment 133 agreed to.

Amendments 134 and 135 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 61, as amended, agreed to.

Before section 62

The Convener: Amendment 430, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 430 clarifies that section 24 of the Vulnerable Witnesses (Scotland) Act 2004, which abolished the competence test in respect of all witnesses, also applies to evidence given by prior statements made before 1 April 2005, when section 24 came into force. Section 24 removed the court’s entitlement to ask questions of witnesses to establish whether they could understand the difference between truth and lies, and the general duty of witnesses to tell the truth.

Amendment 430 seeks to address a gap in the current law where the Crown seeks to rely on the evidence of a witness that is contained in a prior statement made before section 24 came into force. In such circumstances, it is necessary, under section 260(2)(c) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, for the court to establish whether the witness would, at the time that the statement was made, have been a competent witness in proceedings. In certain cases, particularly those involving sexual abuse where the abuse spans a number of years, the Crown must often seek to rely on such statements. The amendment is intended to ensure that such statements are not prevented from being put before the court simply because they were made before section 24 came into force. The Scottish Government believes that it is important that all witnesses, particularly the most vulnerable, are given the opportunity to be heard. The court should also have the opportunity to hear all the relevant evidence in a case.

Amendment 430 seeks to ensure that witnesses are treated equally, and to avoid the situation where some witnesses are prevented from giving their evidence on the ground of competence and others are not. The rights of the accused are protected because the judge or jury will still have to decide whether the testimony is reliable and credible.

I move amendment 430.

Amendment 430 agreed to.

Section 62—Witness statements: use during trial

The Convener: Amendment 383, in the name of Robert Brown, is in a group on its own.

Robert Brown: To a degree, amendment 383 follows from the earlier group in which we considered amendments 130 and 131. I do not want to rehearse the arguments again, but the bill more or less gives witnesses a blanket right to refer to a prior statement, which I presume would usually mean a precognition that had been taken by the police or others rather than a verbatim statement. There are issues with that, although I can see occasions on which it would be relevant.

I would not go to the stake on the wording, but I do not believe that there should be an automatic entitlement. The bill states that the court “may” allow the witness to refer to the statement, so it is not quite an automatic entitlement, but it is heading in that direction because no criteria are laid down. In my amendment, I have tried to restrict the entitlement a little. I will be interested to hear the minister’s thoughts on the matter against the background of the earlier debate.

I move amendment 383.

Bill Butler: I am not convinced by Robert Brown’s amendment. I believe that there should be a uniform right. The amendment seeks to introduce the phrase “if... there is good reason to do so”, but how would “good reason” be defined? How would the provision be applied? It is clearer to have a uniform right for all victims. However, perhaps Robert Brown can come back to that and convince me when he sums up.

Fergus Ewing: Section 62 does not require the court to allow the witness to refer to his statement. It leaves it to the court’s discretion to decide whether to permit the witness to do that. The main difficulty with amendment 383 is that it explicitly requires the court to exercise its discretion only if there is a good reason, which carries the implication that the court can exercise its discretion in other matters without having a good reason for doing so. That would be quite absurd.

Moreover, we trust the Scottish judiciary properly to exercise their discretion and we think it dangerous to suggest that they might do otherwise in the absence of an express provision, which is tautologous. Lord Coulsfield did not recommend such a test and the Scottish Government does not believe that one is necessary.

For those reasons, we do not support amendment 383.

Robert Brown: I accept most of what the minister says. Nevertheless, we are left in a funny position.

I think that Bill Butler misunderstood what section 62 does, to be honest. It does not quite give an automatic entitlement, although it is difficult to see the grounds on which the court could refuse to exercise its discretion against all the elaborate stuff about statements that is laid out. My concern is that the approach unbalances the thing a little bit. However, I will not press the amendment against the minister’s desire. With the committee’s agreement, I seek leave to withdraw it.

Amendment 383, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 62 agreed to.

Sections 63 and 64 agreed to.

After section 64

The Convener: Amendment 384, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 384 seeks to increase from 16 to 18 the age up to which witnesses are automatically entitled to special measures when giving evidence in human trafficking cases. Young victims of human trafficking offences should be supported as much as possible to give their evidence. In saying that, however, we must also bear in mind the accused’s right to a fair trial.

The amendment simply amends the Vulnerable Witnesses (Scotland) Act 2004 to increase the age under which a witness is automatically entitled to special measures in human trafficking cases from 16 to 18. That is consistent with the support that is available to child witnesses elsewhere in the UK and it will ensure future compliance with the European Commission proposal for a framework decision on preventing and combating trafficking in human beings and protecting victims. That proposal has been retabled as a European directive following the implementation of the Lisbon treaty.

I move amendment 384.

Amendment 384 agreed to.

Section 65 agreed to.

Section 66—Witness anonymity orders

The Convener: Amendment 431, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 432 to 441.

Fergus Ewing: Almost all the amendments in the group respond to the committee’s request in its stage 1 report that we reconsider drafting and to evidence that was given at stage 1.

Amendments 431 and 432 clarify who in the court should be able to see the identity of a witness who is granted an anonymity order for the purposes of giving their evidence. The amendments limit that to the judge and, if there is one, the jury in order to avoid creating any possible conflict of interest for defence agents. That also removes any worries that an interpreter or supporter might be intimidated or compromised because they can see the identity of an anonymous witness.

Amendments 433 and 435 are technical. By replacing the phrase “relevant material” with “relevant information”, they ensure that references to disclosure responsibilities in the context of applications for witness anonymity orders are consistent with other disclosure provisions elsewhere in the bill.

Amendment 434 strengthens the duty that is contained in new section 271P(4) of the 1995 act so that information about an application for a witness anonymity order must be disclosed by the parties in a way that does not lead to the witness’s identity being disclosed. Failure to ensure that would cut across the whole point of a witness being granted an anonymity order.

Amendments 436 and 437 have been lodged in response to comments that were made by High Court judges in their evidence to the committee at stage 1. Amendment 436 removes unnecessary words from new section 271R(2)(b) of the 1995 act. Amendment 437 replaces the words “sole and decisive evidence implicating the accused” in new section 271R(2)(c) of the 1995 act with “material evidence implicating the accused”.

That better reflects the rules of corroboration in Scotland and the fact that the witness’s evidence may or may not be decisive.

Amendment 438 reflects more accurately modern practice whereby judges give “direction” to the jury rather than a “warning”. In context, the direction would be that any anonymity order that was made in relation to a witness does not prejudice the accused. The amendment is, again, a response to comments that were made by the High Court judges during their stage 1 evidence.

Amendment 439 removes the requirement to seek the leave of the court of first instance to appeal against a witness anonymity order. It is a matter of balance. On one hand, leave to appeal acts as a safeguard against spurious appeals and delaying tactics; on the other hand, given the serious implications of granting or refusing to grant a witness anonymity order, it could be argued that it should always be possible to appeal such decisions. On balance, we believe that it would be better to remove the requirement to seek leave in that context.

Amendments 440 and 441 amend schedule 3 to remove references to “unsafe conviction”, as the safety of a conviction is not a concept that is used in Scots law. Those references will be replaced with more appropriate references to “quashing a conviction”.

I move amendment 431.

The Convener: The issues appear to be fairly straightforward.

Amendment 431 agreed to.

Amendments 432 to 439 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 66, as amended, agreed to.

Schedule 3—Witness anonymity orders: transitional

Amendments 440 and 441 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Schedule 3, as amended, agreed to.

Section 67 agreed to.

After section 67

The Convener: Amendment 442, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 450.

Fergus Ewing: Amendments 442 and 450 seek to provide an order-making power to facilitate implementation of the EU framework decision on the European evidence warrant for the purpose of obtaining objects, documents and data for use in proceedings in criminal matters. A European evidence warrant may be used to obtain evidence that is held in another member state, which could include objects that were found during a search, financial records and admissions that were made at interviews. In general, the evidence that is covered by a European evidence warrant will already exist—a warrant is not to be used to conduct interviews, take statements, carry out bodily examinations or intercept communications. We are required to implement the framework decision by 9 January 2011. Amendment 442 grants the power to the Scottish ministers to implement the framework decision by order.

There are several reasons why an order-making power is appropriate here. First, it will permit further time to consult key stakeholders on the detail of the provisions for implementing the framework decision in Scotland. Secondly, it will allow us to produce provisions in discussion with the Home Office, which has yet to take steps to implement the decision in the rest of the UK. Thirdly, we are aware of two EU initiatives that are currently under discussion that may lead to the framework decision being revised and, possibly, replaced. The likelihood of that is not clear, but implementation by order will allow us to respond to those EU developments as and when they occur.

I move amendment 442.

Amendment 442 agreed to.

Before section 68

15:30

The Convener: Amendment 443, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 415, 416, 511 and 417.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 443 will insert before section 68 a new section that will amend the provisions in the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, which sets out how lists of jurors are compiled for trials in the sheriff courts. The change will increase flexibility for sheriff clerks in citing jurors and in allocating them to trials when they attend in response to citations. For that reason, the Scottish Court Service strongly supports the changes.

The first change, in proposed new subsection (2)(b), will enable jurors to be cited to a sheriff court trial not only from the sheriff court district in which that trial is to occur, but from other districts within that sheriffdom. That will obviously increase the pool of potential jurors for any sheriff court trial. It will also result in greater fairness for members of the public who are liable to be cited for jury service. Some sheriff courts in a sheriffdom are, inevitably, busier than others, which results in the potential for eligible members of the public who live in those districts to be summoned more often than those who live elsewhere in the sheriffdom. The change will provide greater equity and was supported by a large majority of respondents to a specific question on the issue in our consultation paper, “The Modern Scottish Jury in Criminal Trials”.

The change leaves to the discretion of the sheriff principal the questions whether to summon jurors from a wider area, and in what proportion. Clearly, it is a different matter for someone who lives in Arbroath district to be cited to Dundee than for someone who lives in Lerwick to be cited to Inverness. Such discretion is therefore important.

Sheriff clerks will continue to have their own discretion to excuse potential jurors. Nevertheless, persons from, for example, Campbeltown who are cited to Dumbarton would be able to make a case to the sheriff clerk in the usual way. In those circumstances, we do not expect the advantages of the change to be outweighed by unreasonable burdens being placed on some members of the public.

The change that is set out in proposed new subsection (2)(d) would repeal the 1995 act’s provision that restricts the availability of jurors to the trials for which they were originally listed.

Amendment 511 seeks to insert a new section after section 68. That new section will make a number of changes to the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980 relating to the excusal system for jurors. Two groups of people are exempt from jury service: those who are ineligible for jury service and those who are disqualified from it. There is a further category of people who are excusable as of right from service listed in the 1980 act. The purpose of the proposed new section is to require those who are entitled to be excused by right from jury service to apply for that excusal at the beginning of the citation process. Amendment 511 will not affect the right to ask for discretionary excusal, whereby potential jurors can be excused if they show good reason. A new section is required because the original section in the 1980 act refers to both civil and criminal juries and, as the committee has noted, changes to civil juries are outwith the scope of this bill.

I am removing extraneous material from my notes to foreshorten matters, convener.

The Convener: I am grateful to you, Mr Ewing.

Fergus Ewing: The proposed changes will reduce bureaucracy and improve operational effectiveness.

I move amendment 443.

At this point, I was planning to move on to Mr McLetchie’s amendments. I can cover those now or after Mr McLetchie has spoken to them. I am in your hands, convener. I think that this matter was raised with the clerk earlier.

The Convener: It would perhaps be easier if you were to defer your comments until we have heard from Mr McLetchie, who I now welcome to the committee and invite to speak to amendment 415 and to the other amendments in the group, if he is so minded.

David McLetchie (Edinburgh Pentlands) (Con): Indeed I am, convener. Will I have an opportunity to sum up after Mr Ewing has commented?

The Convener: No.

David McLetchie: So, you want it all in a oner.

The Convener: Yes.

David McLetchie: Right you are. Thank you very much.

I have much pleasure in speaking to amendments 415 to 417, which are in my name. As I said in the stage 1 debate, raising the age limit for jurors is an issue on which I have campaigned since July 2005 in response to an inquiry from a then 67-year-old constituent who, on being called to serve, discovered to her disappointment that she was disqualified by reason of her age.

I was particularly pleased when proposals to raise the age limit to 70 were incorporated into the bill, and duly congratulated the minister on bringing the change to Parliament. The measure will increase the potential pool of jurors by 200,000 persons and will bring the age limit in Scotland into line with the age limits that apply in the rest of the United Kingdom. It will also correct a long-standing anomaly, which has existed notwithstanding the fact that both sit in judgment on accused persons, between the age limits for judges and for jurors.

However, as I pointed out during the stage 1 debate, it is possible to have no upper age limit, as is the case in a number of jurisdictions around the world, and to couple that with an automatic right of self-excusal in the case of a person over 70 who is called for service. That system is supported by Age Scotland, the organisation that represents the interests of older people in Scotland following the merger of Age Concern Scotland and Help the Aged in Scotland. Age Scotland asked me to lodge amendments on this important issue of principle for debate and consideration today.

Comparable systems of self-excusal from jury service for the over-70s operate successfully in Ireland and a number of states and provinces in Australia, Canada and the United States. Moreover, nearer to home the Ministry of Justice is canvassing the option, in a consultation on options for increasing the upper age limit for jurors in England and Wales, which is already 70. In other words, having finally caught up with England, we may again fall behind.

In my view, and in that of organisations such as Age Scotland, the merits of amendments 415 to 417 can be summed up as follows. First, they would remove a prominent example of unjustified age discrimination in public life. Secondly, they would allow older people in Scotland who are able and willing to perform their civic duty—and who are, in many cases, enthusiastic about that—the opportunity to do so. Such people include the constituent who first raised the issue with me five years ago. Thirdly, they would allow older people who did not feel up to serving on a jury the opportunity to excuse themselves. Fourthly, they would expand the pool of jurors significantly; at present, there are more than 600,000 people in Scotland aged 70 and over. Finally, they would reduce the cost to the Scottish Government of compensating jurors for lost earnings, given that the juror pool would encompass many more older people who have retired from work.

I call the amendments "the Arlene amendments", after Arlene Phillips. Members will recall that she is the lady whom the BBC unceremoniously dumped from the "Strictly Come Dancing" jury because, at the age of 66, she was considered to be too old to serve. At the time, that caused a storm of protest and raised a lot of interest in issues of age discrimination in our society. Many people thought that Arlene Phillips was more than capable of judging whether John Sergeant had murdered a quickstep, and resented her replacement by a younger model.

Away from the world of television juries, the amendments raise an important issue of principle as to the value that our society places on the wisdom and judgment of our older people. The idea that people are automatically incapable of exercising sound judgment when they are over the age of 65—or 70, for that matter—is manifest nonsense. I submit that it makes sense to move to a system in which there is no formal age limit. That is the essence of amendments 415 to 417.

I have been looking through a list of people who will be ineligible to serve on a jury in Scotland if my amendments are not agreed to. They include three serving members of the Scottish Parliament, one of whom is a Deputy Presiding Officer, and our former Presiding Officer, Sir David Steel. In the wider sphere, the ineligible would include Cardinal Keith Patrick O'Brien, who is apparently wise enough to participate in the election of the Pope but is considered incapable of deciding on the guilt or innocence of a person in Scotland, even after a lifetime spent hearing confessions from people in Scotland. The ranks of the disqualified would also include distinguished Scots such as Moira Anderson, Ronnie Corbett, Winnie Ewing, Alasdair Gray, Edwin Morgan, Sir Jackie Stewart and many more from all walks of life whose work and views are greatly respected and valued by all of us.
I have much pleasure in commending amendments 415 to 417 to the committee and would welcome members’ support for them.

Bill Butler: Who would argue with such arguments so wittily put? I certainly would not. Amendments 415 to 417 are worthy of support. Mr McLetchie said that he has campaigned on the issue since July 2005. I suppose that this is the first and last time that I will join him in support of a campaign, but I am more than willing to do so today.

Other jurisdictions, including Canada and Australia, do not consider the lack of an upper age limit for jury service to be a problem; in fact, they consider it to be an advantage and a matter of simple justice. It helps people who wish to perform their civic duty to do so and attacks a rather senseless age discrimination.

Amendments 415 to 417 are worthy of support and include the logical option of self-excusal. They are resilient and cogent.

Robert Brown: I have considerable sympathy with David McLetchie’s argument and with what Bill Butler said. The bill’s approach is welcome and practical. As a matter of principle, adult citizens should be entitled to carry out certain civic duties. Indeed, if they are retired, they may have more time and convenience to sit on a jury.

However, I have two concerns on which I would be interested to hear the minister’s responses. The first is about whether receipt of a jury citation would cause too much anxiety to some older people. There is no doubt that the arrival of official forms can upset some people who are not sure what they should do with them.

The second concern is whether there would be a risk of having jurors who had difficulties in carrying out their duties. An American study, which is mentioned in the English consultation that David McLetchie mentioned, indicated a clear relationship between age and recall of case facts and of the judge’s instructions, with the older jurors displaying markedly poorer performance than younger ones.

Certainly, we must consider the rights of older people, but fairness in the trial must be the central and determining consideration. Do we risk having less competent juries, as the American study suggested, and less sound verdicts? I pose the question because I really do not know the answer. If there is such a risk, how significant is it and are there ways of overcoming it? Have there been problems in other countries that have got rid of the age limit?

Apart from that, there are issues of ill health and infirmity among older people. It is a matter of degree and of the individual rather than the category, so one must be careful about how it is put. However, if people have hearing difficulties for example, there could be problems.

I appreciate that one verges on being politically incorrect in making some of those points, but it is important that jury members have the ability to participate effectively in decisions. I merely raise some of those concerns as matters that would have to be dealt with adequately, not only by way of self-excusal from service. The issues are slightly wider than that and thought must be given to some of the other issues in the interest of the central matter of the trial’s fairness.

Stewart Maxwell: I agree with the comments from Bill Butler and Robert Brown. There is no problem with agreeing with both of them, because it is right and proper that we remove discrimination from our society. The current age limit of 65 is discriminatory and we all welcome the change to 70, but I share Robert Brown’s concerns. He is right to say that it is not a matter of category but of individuals and degree.

There is no doubt that, as some people grow older, they would have more difficulty in being able to deal with jury service for a range of reasons. We have to be careful that, in asserting the rights of one group of individuals, we do not remove or discriminate against the rights of others—the point that Robert Brown made about fair trial. There is a slight difficulty in that respect, although the logic of David McLetchie’s arguments for amendments 415 to 417 is impeccable.

I wait to hear what the minister has to say on David McLetchie’s amendments. I welcome the move to an upper age limit of 70, but I am not yet 100 per cent convinced of the argument that David McLetchie makes for the complete removal of an upper age limit.

I agree with Robert Brown’s initial comment about official forms coming through the doors of some older people if such a change in the law is made. Those forms should be abundantly clear about the right of older people to excuse themselves so that we do not inadvertently cause distress. If the paperwork was to make that clear, it would go some way to dealing with some of the concerns. It would have to be made clear to people that they could excuse themselves and would not be letting anybody down or causing problems and that it was their right to choose, rather than a duty for which they were not putting themselves forward.

15:45

The Convener: Are there any other contributions? Having looked round the table and seen that there is no one with an interest to declare and that cognitive responses appear to be perfectly satisfactory, I ask the minister to wind up. The issues that you should be addressing are age discrimination legislation and what is happening in other jurisdictions.

Fergus Ewing: The Scottish Government has a great deal of sympathy with amendments 415 to 417 in Mr McLetchie’s name. Indeed, the Cabinet Secretary for Justice met David Manion of Age Concern Scotland to discuss the issue on 31 March and to confirm that.

We are aware that groups such as Age Concern Scotland, which represent our older citizens, support older people being given the opportunity to serve in this way. I am also sure that many of those who would not be included by the Government’s own proposals to increase the age limit for jury service to 70 years could nevertheless contribute a great deal as jurors, as many members have argued. Our allowing people over the age of 70 to serve would widen the pool of available jurors, which is one of the arguments that Mr McLetchie made. He has made the case for the changes very ably.

I take it as read that we are all opposed to age discrimination; the Government has a great deal of sympathy with the arguments. It is therefore in the interests of discussion and of not pre-judging the issue that I would like to put some counter-arguments, so that the committee, in reaching its decision, can give them whatever weight members think is appropriate.

First, with regard to the fairness of age limits, judges and sheriffs are required to retire from office at 70, although they may be called upon, at the discretion of the senior judiciary, to sit as retired judges or sheriffs up to the age of 75. That may be a relevant consideration when considering the upper age for people who carry out jury service who are, in a sense, also judges: they are judges of the facts.

Secondly, jury service is a civic duty, not a right—I think that that was the thrust of the argument behind Mr Brown’s remarks, or perhaps his primary argument. The extent of that duty is serious and onerous and it is a very important duty. As Mr Brown argued, the matter must be seen from the perspective of the accused and their right to a fair trial. For example, having no age limit is likely to lead to an increased number of applications for excusal. According to a paper that was published recently by the Ministry of Justice in England and Wales, people aged 70 and over are, broadly, at least twice as likely as those under 70 to need to be excused or discharged from jury service on medical grounds. In addition, a proportion of people over 70 who are fit to do service may wish to be excused.

I wonder—this is not in the script—whether there is not an additional argument. Some people over 70 who are called on to do jury service might feel a sense of duty to society to fulfil what is expected of them, which is very admirable. In doing their jury duty there might, however, be reasons that are known to them—ill-health or whatever—that would make it difficult for them to complete their jury service. One can understand that there might be reluctance for a person to excuse himself or herself because of a sense that they would, somehow, be letting society down. One can envisage that approach being taken by some individuals over 70 who have perhaps served their country well in many other ways in the past.

Thirdly, there would be additional costs for the Scottish Court Service, although we do not think that those would be astronomical costs. The estimate that I have from the Scottish Court Service is that the change would cost £18,000 per annum, which is not a huge amount of money. I am not sure how the SCS reached that estimate, but that is the figure that it has provided. On the other hand, it might be said that the £18,000 could be outweighed by potential financial savings in reducing the likelihood of costs being incurred for loss of earnings for those who are working and are called on to give jury service. To present a balanced approach, there might be additional costs on the one hand, but the potential for savings on the other. Those are all matters that a full consultation might allow us to get at with greater clarity.

I am aware from our postbag that some people over 70 are keen to serve as jurors. I am also aware that there might be others for whom jury service would be an additional unnecessary burden. In the nature of things, the over-70s are more likely to start trials as jurors but might, for a wide range of reasons—I mean no disrespect to anyone in the category—be unable to complete their service. It appears to me from what was said earlier that the most serious argument against people over 70 serving as jurors is that the possibility of the jury’s falling below the 12 members who are needed for it to be quorate could increase the likelihood of the court’s being unable to continue the trial. The risk that that might pose to the administration of justice has not yet been quantified. In response to our proposal to increase the age limit to 70, there was comment that greater attention might have to be paid to ensure a balanced age profile. The position would be exacerbated by opening jury service to the over-70s. I am not sure that too much reliance is placed on that argument, but I offer it to the committee.

I acknowledge that placing the onus on older persons to decide whether they are able to carry out jury service is not uncommon in other jurisdictions. However, it is not an objective practice and carries risks. An American study, to which I think Robert Brown alluded in his remarks, noted a clear relationship between age and recall of case facts and of the judge’s instructions, with the oldest jurors displaying markedly poorer recall than younger jurors, although I fully accept that individuals’ capacities will vary greatly. Many younger jurors might have a lower capacity than many older jurors, but it might be nonetheless prudent to give further regard to that study and to ascertain whether there are other studies. The convener invited me to refer to other jurisdictions, but I cannot refer to extensive research. It might be possible to do that, were the committee to decide that more work needs to be done in the area. In some respects, our knowledge base might not be as strong as it could be, so there is no doubt that further time and consultation would allow us to increase that knowledge base. In other respects, we might still be uncertain about some matters.

The Ministry of Justice has stated specifically that it “has not yet reached any decision on whether a change to the present limit should be made or what form any change might take. It first wishes to receive the widest possible range of responses to this paper from the general public and those with a particular interest in criminal justice and age issues”.

It is plain that a major consultation on the matter is being carried out down south. By contrast, the increase in the Scottish age limit to 70 years, as set out in section 68, has been widely consulted on and was supported by 90 per cent of those who responded on the issue.

We will be guided by the committee’s views on the matter and the committee might wish to take a decision on it now. On the other hand, we would also be happy to keep the issue under review as part of consideration of how our juror changes are implemented. We will be interested in the consultation south of the border, for example, and will consider further action in the future. We are aware that should the committee agree to the amendments there will be an interaction with the Government’s amendment 511, which will require people to seek excusal as of right within seven days of receiving their first notice. However, that is simply a detail. I await with interest committee members’ views and the decision that they will take.

To reassure Mr McLetchie, I add that although it might appear that were I to suggest that people such as Winnie Ewing should be excluded from serving on a jury, I might get short shrift from her, she is likely to say that there is no way she would want to serve on a jury because she is far too busy electioneering.

Amendment 443 agreed to.

Section 68—Upper age limit for jurors

Amendment 415 moved—[David McLetchie].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 415 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against

Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)

Abstentions

Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 6, Against 1, Abstentions 1.

Amendment 415 agreed to.

Amendment 416 moved—[David McLetchie].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 416 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

[Interruption.]

Nigel Don: Sorry, did you count me? I did not vote.

The Convener: Are you abstaining, then?

Nigel Don: No, I am sorry—I am against amendment 416.

The Convener: It has been a long day.

For

Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against

Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)

Abstentions

Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 6, Against 1, Abstentions 1.

Amendment 416 agreed to.
Section 68, as amended, agreed to.

Bill Butler: Perhaps it is as well that we are not on a jury. [Laughter]

After section 68

Amendment 511 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 69—Persons excusable from jury service

Amendment 417 moved—[David McLetchie].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 417 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Abstentions

Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 7, Against 0, Abstentions 1.

Amendment 417 agreed to.

Section 69, as amended, agreed to.

The Convener: In view of the lateness of the hour and the fact that some members are showing signs of fatigue—[Laughter]—I conclude today’s proceedings and thank members for their considerable and constructive input.

Meeting closed at 15:57.
The Bill will be considered in the following order—

- Sections 1 to 3 Schedule 1
- Sections 4 to 18 Schedule 2
- Sections 19 to 66 Schedule 3
- Sections 67 to 139 Schedule 4
- Sections 140 to 145 Schedule 5
- Sections 146 to 148 Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 70

Kenny MacAskill

136 In section 70, page 89, line 34, leave out <and Wales>

Kenny MacAskill

137 In section 70, page 90, line 21, leave out from <body> to end of line 23 and insert <health and social care body mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (e) of section 1(5) of the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (Northern Ireland) 2009 (c.1).>

After section 71

Robert Brown

551 After section 71, insert—

<Collection of information on criminal injuries>

Duty of Health Boards to collect etc. information on criminal injuries

1. The Scottish Ministers may make regulations requiring every Health Board to—
   (a) collect information on criminal injuries treated in or otherwise coming to the attention of relevant hospitals, and
   (b) provide that information to the relevant chief constable.

2. The Scottish Ministers must make the first regulations under subsection (1) before the expiry of 12 months beginning with the day of Royal Assent.

3. Regulations under subsection (1) must include provision that any information provided to a relevant chief constable must be in such a form that persons who have sustained criminal injuries cannot be identified.
(4) Regulations under subsection (1) may include provision about—

(a) the criminal injuries about which information is to be collected (including by reference to the offences involved),

(b) the information on such injuries which is to be collected (including information as to the places at which, and circumstances in which, those injuries are sustained),

(c) the types of hospitals from which such information is to be collected (including the departments within such hospitals from which information is to be collected),

(d) the times at which and manner in which such information is to be provided to relevant chief constables.

(5) In this section—

“criminal injuries” means injuries which are, or are suspected of having been, directly attributable to the commission of an offence involving violence,

“Health Board” means a board constituted by order under section 2(1)(a) of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29),

“relevant chief constable” means the chief constable for the police force whose area comprises or includes all or part of the Health Board’s area, “relevant hospitals” means hospitals the administration of which is the Health Board’s responsibility.

Section 72

Kenny MacAskill

138 In section 72, page 94, line 29, leave out <Law> and insert <Justice>

Kenny MacAskill

139 In section 72, page 94, line 41, leave out <27> and insert <37>

Kenny MacAskill

140 In section 72, page 94, line 42, leave out <penetrative>

Kenny MacAskill

141 In section 72, page 95, line 1, leave out <31> and insert <42>

Kenny MacAskill

142 In section 72, page 95, line 2, leave out <35> and insert <46>

Kenny MacAskill

143 In section 72, page 95, line 3, at end insert—

<( ) an offence under section (Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) (slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00).>
In section 72, page 95, line 14, leave out <42> and insert <54>

Section 74

In section 74, page 96, line 23, after <station> insert <in Scotland>

In section 74, page 97, line 5, leave out from  to end of line and insert—

(a) a requirement under section 117A(2) (surrender of passports: England and Wales and Northern Ireland), or
(b) a requirement under section 117B(2) (surrender of passports: Scotland).”.

In section 74, page 97, line 5, at end insert—

(a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or
(b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine, as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).”.

After section 74

After section 74, insert—

Sex offender notification requirements

The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) is amended as follows.

In section 85 (notification requirements: periodic notification)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “period of one year” substitute “applicable period”,

(b) in subsection (3), for “period referred to in subsection (1)” substitute “applicable period”, and

(c) after subsection (4) insert—

“(5) In this section, the “applicable period” means—
(a) in any case where subsection (6) applies to the relevant offender, such period not exceeding one year as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe in regulations, and

(b) in any other case, the period of one year.

(6) This subsection applies to the relevant offender if the last home address notified by the offender under section 83(1) or 84(1) or subsection (1) was the address or location of such a place as is mentioned in section 83(7)(b).”.

(3) In section 86 (notification requirements: travel outside the United Kingdom), subsection (4) is repealed.

(4) In section 87 (method of notification and related matters), subsection (6) is repealed.

(5) In section 96 (information about release or transfer), subsection (4) is repealed.

(6) In section 138 (orders and regulations)—

(a) in subsection (2), after “84,” insert “85,,” and

(b) after subsection (3) insert—

“(4) Orders or regulations made by the Scottish Ministers under this Act may—

(a) make different provision for different purposes,

(b) include supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provisions.”.

After section 75

Kenny MacAskill

146 After section 75, insert—

<Risk of sexual harm orders: spent convictions

In section 7 of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) (limitations on rehabilitation under the Act), in subsection (2), after paragraph (bb) insert—

“(bc) in any proceedings on an application under section 2, 4 or 5 of the Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 9) or in any appeal under section 6 of that Act;”.

Section 77

Kenny MacAskill

523 In section 77, page 98, leave out lines 5 to 10

Kenny MacAskill

524 In section 77, page 98, line 14, leave out from <(including)> to <operation)> in line 15

Kenny MacAskill

525 In section 77, page 98, line 22, at end insert—

<( ) After that section insert—
“10A Authorisation of surveillance: joint surveillance operations

In the case of a joint surveillance operation, where authorisation is sought for the carrying out of any form of conduct to which this Act applies, authorisation may be granted by any one of the persons having power to grant authorisation for the carrying out of that conduct.”.

Kenny MacAskill
526 In section 77, page 98, line 27, at end insert—
<( ) In section 14 (approval required for authorisations to take effect)—
(a) in subsection (5)(b), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”, and
(b) subsection (7) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill
527 In section 77, page 98, line 27, at end insert—
<( ) In section 16 (appeals against decisions by Surveillance Commissioners), in subsection (1), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”.>

Kenny MacAskill
528 In section 77, page 98, line 30, leave out from <, where> to <surveillance,> in line 31

Section 78

Kenny MacAskill
529 In section 78, page 98, line 39, leave out <(3)> and insert <(3A)>

Kenny MacAskill
530 In section 78, page 99, line 1, leave out <(3A)> and insert <(3AA)>

Kenny MacAskill
531 In section 78, page 99, line 8, leave out <or>

Kenny MacAskill
532 In section 78, page 99, line 18, leave out <(3A)> and insert <(3AA)>

Kenny MacAskill
533 In section 78, page 99, line 23, at end insert—
<( ) in paragraph (cc) of subsection (6), after “General” insert “, or Deputy Director General,”.>

Kenny MacAskill
534 In section 78, page 99, line 26, leave out <(5)(a)> and insert <(5)>
Kenny MacAskill

535 In section 78, page 99, line 26, leave out <“where> and insert <“Where>

Kenny MacAskill

536 In section 78, page 99, line 29, after <operation,> insert <the person referred to in subsection (2)(h) is>

Section 79

Kenny MacAskill

537 In section 79, page 99, line 39, at end insert—

<(  ) In section 113B (enhanced criminal record certificates), in subsection (3), for the words from “, or” immediately following paragraph (a) to the end of paragraph (b), substitute “(or states that there is no such matter or information), and

(b) if the applicant is subject to notification requirements under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42), states that fact.”.>

Kenny MacAskill

538 In section 79, page 100, line 1, leave out <section 113B> and insert <that section>

After section 79

Kenny MacAskill

447 After section 79, insert—

<Rehabilitation of offenders

Spent alternatives to prosecution: Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974

(1) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 8A (protection afforded to spent cautions), insert—

“8B Protection afforded to spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) For the purposes of this Act, a person has been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence if the person (whether before or after the commencement of this section)—

(a) has been given a warning in respect of the offence by—

(i) a constable in Scotland, or

(ii) a procurator fiscal,

(b) has accepted, or is deemed to have accepted—

(i) a conditional offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), or

(ii) a compensation offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302A of that Act,
(c) has had a work order made against the person in respect of the offence under section 303ZA of that Act,

(d) has been given a fixed penalty notice in respect of the offence under section 129 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

(e) has accepted an offer made by a procurator fiscal in respect of the offence to undertake an activity or treatment or to receive services or do any other thing as an alternative to prosecution, or

(f) in respect of an offence under the law of a country or territory outside Scotland, has been given, or has accepted or is deemed to have accepted, anything corresponding to a warning, offer, order or notice falling within paragraphs (a) to (e) under the law of that country or territory.

(2) In this Act, references to an “alternative to prosecution” are to be read in accordance with subsection (1).

(3) Schedule 3 to this Act (protection for spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland) has effect.”.

(3) After section 9A (unauthorised disclosure of spent cautions), insert—

“9B Unauthorised disclosure of spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) In this section—

(a) “official record” means a record that—

(i) contains information about persons given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence, and

(ii) is kept for the purposes of its functions by a court, police force, Government department, part of the Scottish Administration or other local or public authority in Scotland,

(b) “relevant information” means information imputing that a named or otherwise identifiable living person has committed, been charged with, prosecuted for or given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence which is the subject of an alternative to prosecution which has become spent,

(c) “subject of the information”, in relation to relevant information, means the named or otherwise identifiable living person to whom the information relates.

(2) Subsection (3) applies to a person who, in the course of the person’s official duties (anywhere in the United Kingdom), has or has had custody of or access to an official record or the information contained in an official record.

(3) The person commits an offence if the person—

(a) obtains relevant information in the course of the person’s official duties,

(b) knows or has reasonable cause to suspect that the information is relevant information, and

(c) discloses the information to another person otherwise than in the course of the person’s official duties.

(4) Subsection (3) is subject to the terms of an order under subsection (6).
In proceedings for an offence under subsection (3), it is a defence for the accused to show that the disclosure was made—

(a) to the subject of the information or to a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information, or
(b) to another person at the express request of the subject of the information or of a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information.

The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for the disclosure of relevant information derived from an official record to be excepted from the provisions of subsection (3) in cases or classes of cases specified in the order.

A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 4 on the standard scale.

A person commits an offence if the person obtains relevant information from an official record by means of fraud, dishonesty or bribery.

A person guilty of an offence under subsection (8) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, or to both.”.

After Schedule 2 (protection for spent convictions) insert—

"SCHEDULE 3

PROTECTION FOR SPENT ALTERNATIVES TO PROSECUTION: SCOTLAND

Preliminary

1 (1) For the purposes of this Act, an alternative to prosecution given to any person (whether before or after the commencement of this Schedule) becomes spent—

(a) in the case of—

(i) a warning referred to in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 8B, or

(ii) a fixed penalty notice referred to in paragraph (d) of that subsection, at the time the warning or notice is given,

(b) in any other case, at the end of the relevant period.

(2) The relevant period in relation to an alternative to prosecution is the period of 3 months beginning on the day on which the alternative to prosecution is given.

(3) Sub-paragraph (1)(a) is subject to sub-paragraph (5).

(4) Sub-paragraph (2) is subject to sub-paragraph (6).

(5) If a person who is given a fixed penalty notice referred to in section 8B(1)(d) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence, the notice—

(a) becomes spent at the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence, and

(b) is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of that rehabilitation period."
(6) If a person who is given an alternative to prosecution (other than one to which sub-paragraph (1)(a) applies) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence—

(a) the relevant period in relation to the alternative to prosecution ends at the same time as the rehabilitation period for the offence ends, and

(b) if the conviction occurs after the end of the period referred to sub-paragraph (2), the alternative to prosecution is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence.

2 (1) In this Schedule, “ancillary circumstances”, in relation to an alternative to prosecution, means any circumstances of the following—

(a) the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given or the conduct constituting the offence,

(b) any process preliminary to the alternative to prosecution being given (including consideration by any person of how to deal with the offence and the procedure for giving the alternative to prosecution),

(c) any proceedings for the offence which took place before the alternative to prosecution was given (including anything that happens after that time for the purpose of bringing the proceedings to an end),

(d) any judicial review proceedings relating to the alternative to prosecution,

(e) in the case of an offer referred to in paragraph (e) of subsection (1) of section 8B, anything done or undergone in pursuance of the terms of the offer.

(2) Where an alternative to prosecution is given in respect of two or more offences, references in sub-paragraph (1) to the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given includes a reference to each of the offences.

(3) In this Schedule, “proceedings before a judicial authority” has the same meaning as in section 4.

Protection for spent alternatives to prosecution and ancillary circumstances

3 (1) A person who is given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence is, from the time the alternative to prosecution becomes spent, to be treated for all purposes in law as a person who has not committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence.

(2) Despite any enactment or rule of law to the contrary—

(a) where an alternative to prosecution given to a person in respect of an offence has become spent, evidence is not admissible in any proceedings before a judicial authority exercising its jurisdiction or functions in Scotland to prove that the person has committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence,

(b) a person must not, in any such proceedings, be asked any question relating to the person’s past which cannot be answered without acknowledging or referring to an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, and
(c) if a person is asked such a question in any such proceedings, the person is not required to answer it.

(3) Sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply in relation to any proceedings—

(a) for the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution was given, and

(b) which are not part of the ancillary circumstances.

4 (1) This paragraph applies where a person ("A") is asked a question, otherwise than in proceedings before a judicial authority, seeking information about—

(a) A’s or another person’s previous conduct or circumstances,

(b) offences previously committed by A or the other person, or

(c) alternatives to prosecution previously given to A or the other person.

(2) The question is to be treated as not relating to alternatives to prosecution that have become spent or to any ancillary circumstances and may be answered accordingly.

(3) A is not to be subjected to any liability or otherwise prejudiced in law because of a failure to acknowledge or disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances in answering the question.

5 (1) An obligation imposed on a person ("A") by a rule of law or by the provisions of an agreement or arrangement to disclose any matter to another person does not extend to requiring A to disclose an alternative to prosecution (whether one given to A or another person) that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances.

(2) An alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, or any failure to disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, is not a ground for dismissing or excluding a person from any office, profession, occupation or employment, or for prejudicing the person in any way in any occupation or employment.

6 The Scottish Ministers may by order—

(a) exclude or modify the application of any of paragraphs (a) to (c) of paragraph 3(2) in relation to questions put in such circumstances as may be specified in the order,

(b) provide for exceptions from any of the provisions of paragraphs 4 and 5 in such cases or classes of case, or in relation to alternatives to prosecution of such descriptions, as may be specified in the order.

7 Paragraphs 3 to 5 do not affect—

(a) the operation of an alternative to prosecution, or

(b) the operation of an enactment by virtue of which, because of an alternative to prosecution, a person is subject to a disqualification, disability, prohibition or other restriction or effect for a period extending beyond the time at which the alternative to prosecution becomes spent.

8 (1) Section 7(2), (3) and (4) apply for the purpose of this Schedule as follows.
(2) Subsection (2), apart from paragraphs (b) and (d), applies to the determination of any issue, and the admission or requirement of evidence, relating to alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and to ancillary circumstances as it applies to matters relating to a person’s previous convictions and circumstances ancillary thereto.

(3) Subsection (3) applies to evidence of alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and ancillary circumstances as it applies to evidence of a person’s previous convictions and the circumstances ancillary thereto.

(4) For that purpose, subsection (3) has effect as if—

(a) a reference to subsection (2) or (4) of section 7 were a reference to that subsection as applied by this paragraph, and

(b) the words “or proceedings to which section 8 below applies” were omitted.

(5) Subsection (4) applies for the purpose of excluding the application of paragraph 3.

(6) For that purpose, subsection (4) has effect as if the words “(other than proceedings to which section 8 below applies)” were omitted.

(7) References in the provisions applied by this paragraph to section 4(1) are to be read as references to paragraph 3.”

Kenny MacAskill

448 After section 79, insert—

<Medical services in prisons

Medical services in prisons

(1) For section 3A of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 (c.45) (medical services in prisons) substitute—

“3A Medical officers for prisons

(1) The Scottish Ministers must designate one or more medical officers for each prison.

(2) A person may be designated as a medical officer for a prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).

(3) A medical officer has the functions that are conferred on a medical officer for a prison by or under this Act or any other enactment.

(4) A medical officer is not an officer of the prison for the purposes of this Act.

(5) Rules under section 39 of this Act may provide for the governor of a prison to authorise the carrying out by officers of the prison of a search of any person who is in, or is seeking to enter, the prison for the purpose of providing medical services for any prisoner at the prison.

(6) Nothing in rules made by virtue of subsection (5) allows the governor to authorise an officer of a prison to require a person to remove any of the person’s clothing other than an outer coat, jacket, headgear, gloves and footwear.”.
(2) In section 41D of that Act (unlawful disclosure of information by medical officers), for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) This section applies to—

(a) a medical officer for a prison, and

(b) any person acting under the supervision of such a medical officer.”.

(3) In section 107 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 (c.33) (officers of contracted out prisons), for subsections (6) to (8) substitute—

“(6) The director must designate one or more medical officers for the prison.

(7) A person may be designated as a medical officer for the prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).”.

(4) In section 110 of that Act (consequential modifications of the 1989 Act etc.)—

(a) in each of subsections (3) and (4), for “3A(6)” substitute “3A(5) and (6)”;

(b) subsection (4A) is repealed, and

(c) in subsection (6), for “3A(1) to (5) (medical services)” substitute “3A(1) and (2) (medical officers)”.

(5) In section 111(3) of that Act (intervention by the Scottish Ministers), in paragraph (c), after “prison” insert “and the medical officer or officers for the prison”.

Section 80

Angela Constance

413 In section 80, page 100, line 29, after <victims> insert <(including children and young people)>

Section 85

Kenny MacAskill

696 In section 85, page 104, line 7, leave out <an accused> and insert <criminal proceedings relating to a person>

Kenny MacAskill

553 In section 85, page 104, line 7, leave out <(other than precognitions and victim statements)>

Kenny MacAskill

697 In section 85, page 104, line 9, leave out <case against the accused> and insert <proceedings>

Kenny MacAskill

555 In section 85, page 104, line 10, leave out subsection (2)
Kenny MacAskill

556  In section 85, page 104, line 20, at end insert—

<(3) In sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)) “information”, in relation to appellate proceedings, includes material of any kind given to or obtained by the prosecutor in connection with the appellate proceedings or the earlier proceedings.

(4) In subsection (3)—

“appellate proceedings” has the meaning given by section (Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation),

“earlier proceedings” has the meaning given in section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5).>

Section 86

Kenny MacAskill

557  Leave out section 86 and insert—

<Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases

(1) This section applies where in a prosecution—

(a) an accused appears for the first time on petition, or

(b) an accused appears for the first time on indictment (not having appeared on petition in relation to the same matter).

(2) As soon as practicable after the appearance, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with details of all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused that the agency is aware of that was obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the matter to which the appearance relates.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

(4) In this section, “investigating agency” means—

(a) a police force, or

(b) such other person who—

(i) engages (to any extent) in the investigation of crime or sudden deaths, and

(ii) submits reports relating to those investigations to the procurator fiscal, as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe by regulations.>

Section 87

Kenny MacAskill

558  In section 87, page 105, line 24, leave out <86(3)> and insert <(Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases)(2)>
Kenny MacAskill

559 In section 87, page 105, line 30, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(  ) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the further information, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with details of it.

( ) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that further information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.>

Kenny MacAskill

560 In section 87, page 105, line 33, leave out from beginning to <“the”> in line 34

Kenny MacAskill

561 In section 87, page 105, line 35, leave out <86(3)> and insert <(Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases)(2)>

Kenny MacAskill

562 In section 87, page 106, line 1, leave out <this section> and insert <subsection (3)>

Section 88

Kenny MacAskill

563 Leave out section 88

After section 88

Kenny MacAskill

564 After section 88, insert—

<Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases

(1) This section applies where a plea of not guilty is recorded against an accused charged on summary complaint.

(2) As soon as practicable after the recording of the plea, the investigating agency must inform the prosecutor of the existence of all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused that the agency is aware of that was obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the matter to which the plea relates.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.>

Kenny MacAskill

565 After section 88, insert—
Continuing duty of investigating agency: summary cases

(1) This section applies where—

(a) an investigating agency has complied with section (Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases)(2) in relation to an accused, and

(b) during the relevant period the investigating agency becomes aware that further information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused has been obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the accused’s case.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the further information, the investigating agency must inform the prosecutor of the existence of the information.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that further information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

(4) In this section, “relevant period” means the period—

(a) beginning with the investigating agency’s compliance with section (Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases)(2) in relation to the accused, and

(b) ending with the agency’s receiving notice from the prosecutor of the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4), proceedings against an accused are to be taken to be concluded if—

(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,

(b) the accused is acquitted,

(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,

(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,

(e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or

(f) the complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

Section 89

Kenny MacAskill

566 In section 89, page 106, line 31, after <where> insert <in a prosecution>

Kenny MacAskill

567 In section 89, page 106, line 33, after <indictment> insert <(not having appeared on petition in relation to the same matter)>
Bill Aitken
147 In section 89, page 106, line 37, leave out <review all the> and insert <disclose to the accused all>

Bill Aitken
148 In section 89, page 106, line 38, leave out from <and> to end of line 14 on page 107

Kenny MacAskill
568 In section 89, page 107, line 1, leave out from beginning to <applies> in line 2 and insert—
   <(b) disclose to the accused the information to which subsection (3) applies.
   (3) This subsection applies to information>

Kenny MacAskill
569 In section 89, page 107, line 3, leave out <prosecution case> and insert <evidence that is likely to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused>

Kenny MacAskill
570 In section 89, page 107, line 5, leave out <prosecution case> and insert <evidence to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused>

Kenny MacAskill
571 In section 89, page 107, line 6, leave out subsections (4) to (6)

Kenny MacAskill
572 In section 89, page 107, line 15, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)(b)>

Bill Aitken
149 In section 89, page 107, line 15, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>

After section 89

Kenny MacAskill
573 After section 89, insert—
   <Disclosure of other information: solemn cases
   (1) This section applies where by virtue of subsection (2)(b) of section 89 the prosecutor is required to disclose information to an accused who falls within paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (1) of that section.
   (2) As soon as practicable after complying with the requirement, the prosecutor must disclose to the accused details of any information which the prosecutor is not required to disclose under section 89(2)(b) but which may be relevant to the case for or against the accused.
   (3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) details of sensitive information.>
(4) In subsection (3), “sensitive”, in relation to an item of information, means that if it were to be disclosed there would be a risk of—

(a) causing serious injury, or death, to any person,
(b) obstructing or preventing the prevention, detection, investigation or prosecution of crime, or
(c) causing serious prejudice to the public interest.

Section 90

Kenny MacAskill

574 In section 90, page 107, line 19, leave out <subsection (5) or (6) of section 89> and insert <section 89(2)(b)>

Bill Aitken

150 In section 90, page 107, line 19, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Kenny MacAskill

575 In section 90, page 107, line 24, leave out from beginning to <“the”> in line 27 and insert <and

(b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.

(2A) As soon as practicable after complying with subsection (2), the prosecutor must disclose to the accused details of any other information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware.

(2B) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2A) details of sensitive information.

(2C) In subsection (2)>

Bill Aitken

151 In section 90, page 107, leave out lines 24 to 26 and insert <and

(b) disclose to the accused any such information not already disclosed under section 89(2)>

Kenny MacAskill

576 In section 90, page 107, line 28, leave out <subsection (5) or (6) of section 89> and insert <section 89(2)(b)>

Bill Aitken

152 In section 90, page 107, line 28, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Kenny MacAskill

577 In section 90, page 107, line 30, at end insert—

<“sensitive” has the meaning given by section (Disclosure of other information: solemn cases)(4)>
Kenny MacAskill

578 In section 90, page 107, line 31, leave out <this section> and insert <subsection (2C)>

Section 91

Kenny MacAskill

579 In section 91, page 108, line 5, leave out <under section 89(5) or 90(2)> and insert <by virtue of this Part>

Bill Aitken

153 In section 91, page 108, line 5, leave out <89(5) or 90(2)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

580 Move section 91 to after section 99

Section 92

Kenny MacAskill

581 In section 92, page 108, line 10, leave out from <section> to <accused> in line 11 and insert <this Part the prosecutor is required to disclose>

Bill Aitken

154 In section 92, page 108, line 10, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

582 Move section 92 to after section 96

Section 93

Bill Aitken

155 In section 93, page 108, line 20, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>

Kenny MacAskill

583 Leave out section 93

Section 94

Kenny MacAskill

584 In section 94, page 108, line 30, leave out from beginning to <pre-trial> in line 31 and insert—

<(1) This section applies where the accused lodges a defence statement under section 70A of the 1995 Act.
(1A) As soon as practicable after the prosecutor receives a copy of the defence>

Kenny MacAskill

585 In section 94, page 108, leave out lines 34 to 36 and insert <and
(b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.>

Kenny MacAskill

586 In section 94, page 109, line 8, leave out lines 8 to 13 and insert—
<(4) At least 7 days before the trial diet the accused must—
(a) where there has been no material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the last defence statement was lodged, lodge a statement stating that fact,
(b) where there has been a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the last defence statement was lodged, lodge a defence statement.>

Kenny MacAskill

587 In section 94, page 109, line 13, at end insert—
<(4A) If after lodging a statement under subsection (2), (3) or (4) there is a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence, the accused must lodge a defence statement.
(4B) Where subsection (4A) requires a defence statement to be lodged, it must be lodged before the trial diet begins unless on cause shown the court allows it to be lodged during the trial diet.>

Kenny MacAskill

588 In section 94, page 109, line 14, after <statement> insert—
<( )>

Kenny MacAskill

589 In section 94, page 109, line 14, leave out <other>

Kenny MacAskill

590 In section 94, page 109, line 15, at end insert <or
( ) during the trial diet if the court on cause shown allows it.>

Kenny MacAskill

591 In section 94, page 109, line 15, at end insert—
<( ) As soon as practicable after lodging a defence statement or a statement under subsection (4)(a), the accused must send a copy of the statement to the prosecutor and any co-accused.>
Kenny MacAskill

592 In section 94, page 109, line 20, at end insert—

<( ) particulars of the matters of fact on which the accused intends to rely for the purposes of the accused’s defence,>

Kenny MacAskill

593 In section 94, page 109, line 21, leave out <in relation to disclosure>

Kenny MacAskill

594 In section 94, page 109, line 27, at end insert—

<( ) In section 78 of the 1995 Act (special defences, incrimination, notice of witnesses etc.), after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) Subsection (1) does not apply where—

(a) the accused lodges a defence statement under section 70A, and

(b) the accused’s defence consists of or includes a special defence.”.>

Bill Aitken

Supported by: Robert Brown

156 Leave out section 94

Section 95

Kenny MacAskill

595 In section 95, page 109, line 32, leave out <prosecutor receives from the accused> and insert <accused lodges>

Kenny MacAskill

596 In section 95, page 109, line 38, at end insert—

<( ) particulars of the matters of fact on which the accused intends to rely for the purposes of the accused’s defence,>

Kenny MacAskill

597 In section 95, page 109, line 39, leave out <in relation to disclosure>

Kenny MacAskill

598 In section 95, page 110, line 4, at end insert—

<( ) As soon as practicable after lodging a defence statement, the accused must send a copy of the statement to the prosecutor and any co-accused.>

Kenny MacAskill

599 In section 95, page 110, line 5, after <receiving> insert
Kenny MacAskill

600 In section 95, page 110, leave out lines 8 to 10 and insert <and

(b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.>

Kenny MacAskill

601 In section 95, page 110, line 24, at end insert—

<(  ) In section 149B of the 1995 Act (notice of defences), after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Subsection (1) does not apply where—

(a) the accused lodges a defence statement under section 95 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00),

(b) the statement is lodged—

(i) where an intermediate diet is to be held, at or before the diet, or

(ii) where such a diet is not to be held, no later than 10 clear days before the trial diet, and

(c) the accused’s defence consists of or includes a defence to which that subsection applies.”.>

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown

157 Leave out section 95

After section 95

Kenny MacAskill

602 After section 95, insert—

<Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings

(1) This section applies where the accused lodges a defence statement under section 95 at least 14 days before the trial diet.

(2) At least 7 days before the trial diet the accused must—

(a) where there has been no material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the defence statement was lodged, lodge a statement stating that fact,

(b) where there has been a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the defence statement was lodged, lodge a defence statement.

(3) If after lodging a statement under subsection (2) there is a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence, the accused must lodge a defence statement.

(4) Where subsection (3) requires a defence statement to be lodged, it must be lodged before the trial diet begins unless on cause shown the court allows it to be lodged during the trial diet.>
(5) As soon as practicable after lodging a statement under subsection (2)(a) or a defence statement under subsection (2)(b) or (3), the accused must send a copy of the statement concerned to the prosecutor and any co-accused.

(6) As soon as practicable after receiving a copy of a defence statement lodged under subsection (2)(b) or (3) the prosecutor must—
   (a) review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and
   (b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.

(7) In this section, “defence statement” is to be construed in accordance with section 95(2).

Kenny MacAskill

603 After section 95, insert—

Court rulings on disclosure

Application by accused for ruling on disclosure

(1) This section applies where the accused—
   (a) has lodged a defence statement under section 70A of the 1995 Act or section 95 or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings) of this Act, and
   (b) considers that the prosecutor has failed, in responding to the statement, to disclose to the accused an item of information to which section 89(3) applies (the “information in question”).

(2) The accused may apply to the court for a ruling on whether section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—
   (a) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,
   (b) a description of the information in question, and
   (c) the accused’s grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—
   (a) comply with subsection (3), or
   (b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the accused an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court must—
   (a) make a ruling on whether section 89(3) applies to the information in question or to any part of the information in question, and
(b) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the justice of the peace, sheriff or judge who is presiding, or is to preside, at the accused’s trial.

Kenny MacAskill

604  After section 95, insert—

<Review of ruling under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure)

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court has made a ruling under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) that section 89(3) does not apply to an item of information (the “information in question”), and

(b) during the relevant period—

(i) the accused becomes aware of information (the “secondary information”) that was unavailable to the court at the time it made its ruling, and

(ii) the accused considers that, had the secondary information been available to the court at that time, it would have made a ruling that section 89(3) does apply to the information in question.

(2) The accused may apply to the court which made the ruling for a review of the ruling.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question and the secondary information, and

(c) the accused’s grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or

(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the accused an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court may—

(a) affirm the ruling being reviewed, or

(b) recall that ruling and—

(i) make a ruling that section 89(3) applies to the information in question or to any part of the information in question, and

(ii) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.
Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the justice of the peace, sheriff or judge who dealt with the application for the ruling that is being reviewed.

Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the ruling being reviewed.

In this section, “relevant period”, in relation to an accused, means the period—
(a) beginning with the making of the ruling being reviewed, and
(b) ending with the conclusion of proceedings against the accused.

For the purposes of subsection (10), proceedings against the accused are taken to be concluded if—
(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,
(b) the accused is acquitted,
(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,
(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,
(e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or
(f) the indictment or complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 95, insert—

Appeals against rulings under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure)

(1) The prosecutor or the accused may, within the period of 7 days beginning with the day on which a ruling is made under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure), appeal to the High Court against the ruling.

(2) Where an appeal is brought under subsection (1), the court of first instance or the High Court may—
(a) postpone any trial diet that has been appointed for such period as it thinks appropriate,
(b) adjourn or further adjourn any hearing for such period as it thinks appropriate,
(c) direct that any period of postponement or adjournment under paragraph (a) or (b) or any part of such period is not to count toward any time limit applying in the case.

(3) In disposing of an appeal under subsection (1), the High Court may—
(a) affirm the ruling, or
(b) remit the case back to the court of first instance with such directions as the High Court thinks appropriate.

(4) This section does not affect any other right of appeal which any party may have in relation to a ruling under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure).*
Section 96

Kenny MacAskill

606 In section 96, page 110, line 28, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b) or 95(3)(b)>

Bill Aitken

158 In section 96, page 110, line 28, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

607 In section 96, page 110, line 32, leave out from <is> to end of line and insert <but for that plea would have been likely to have formed part of the evidence to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused.>

After section 96

Kenny MacAskill

608 After section 96, insert—

<Disclosure after conclusion of proceedings at first instance>

Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation

In sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure))—

“appellant”, in relation to appellate proceedings, includes a person authorised by an order under section 303A(4) of the 1995 Act to institute or continue the proceedings,

“appellate proceedings” means—

(a) an appeal under section 106(1)(a) or (f) of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(b) an appeal under paragraph (b), (ba), (bb), (c), (d), (db) or (dc) of subsection (1) of section 106 of the 1995 Act which brings under review in accordance with subsection (3)(a) of that section an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(c) an appeal under section 175(2)(a) or (d) of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(d) an appeal under paragraph (b), (c) or (cb) of subsection (2) of section 175 of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice which is based on the type of miscarriage described in subsection (5) of that section,

(e) an appeal to the Supreme Court against a determination by the High Court of Justiciary of a devolution issue,
(f) an appeal against conviction by bill of suspension under section 191(1) of the 1995 Act,

(g) an appeal against conviction by bill of advocation,

(h) a petition to the nobile officium in respect of a matter arising out of criminal proceedings which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice which is based on the existence and significance of new evidence,

(i) an appeal under section 62(1)(b) of the 1995 Act against a finding under section 55(2) of that Act,

(j) the referral to the High Court of Justiciary under section 194B of the 1995 Act of—
   (i) a conviction, or
   (ii) a finding under section 55(2) of that Act.

Kenny MacAskill

609 After section 96, insert—

<Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance>

(1) This section applies where appellate proceedings are instituted in relation to an appellant.

(2) As soon as practicable after the relevant act the prosecutor must—
   (a) review all information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the grounds of appeal in the appellate proceedings, and
   (b) disclose to the appellant any information that falls within subsection (3).

(3) Information falls within this subsection if it is—
   (a) information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose,
   (b) information to which, during the earlier proceedings, the prosecutor considered paragraph (a) or (b) of section 89(3) did not apply but to which the prosecutor now considers one or both of those paragraphs would apply, or
   (c) information of which the prosecutor has become aware since the disposal of the earlier proceedings that, had the prosecutor been aware of it during those proceedings, the prosecutor would have been required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b).

(4) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the appellant.

(5) In this section—
   “earlier proceedings”, in relation to appellate proceedings, means the proceedings to which the appellate proceedings relate,
   “relevant act” means—
   (a) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) of the relevant definition, the granting under section 107(1)(a) of the 1995 Act of leave to appeal,
(b) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (c) or (d) of the relevant definition, the granting under section 180(1)(a) or, as the case may be, 187(1)(a) of that Act of leave to appeal,

(c) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (e) of the relevant definition, the granting of leave to appeal by the High Court of Justiciary or, as the case may be, the Supreme Court,

(d) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (f) of the relevant definition—

(i) if leave to appeal is required, the granting under section 191(2) of that Act of leave to appeal,

(ii) if leave to appeal is not required, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the bill of suspension and the interlocutor granting first order for service,

(e) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (g) of the relevant definition, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the bill of advocation and the interlocutor granting first order for service,

(f) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (h) of the relevant definition, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the petition and the interlocutor granting first order for service,

(g) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (i) of the relevant definition, the lodging of the appeal,

(h) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (j) of the relevant definition, the lodging of the grounds of appeal by the person to whom the referral relates,

“relevant definition” means the definition of appellate proceedings in section (Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation),

Kenny MacAskill

610 After section 96, insert—

<Continuing duty of prosecutor

(1) This section applies where the prosecutor has complied with section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(2) in relation to an appellant.

(2) During the relevant period, the prosecutor must—

(a) from time to time review all information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the grounds of appeal in the appellate proceedings which relate to the appellant, and

(b) disclose to the appellant any information that falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).
(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the appellant.

(4) In subsection (2), “relevant period” means the period—
   (a) beginning with the prosecutor’s compliance with section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(2), and
   (b) ending with the relevant conclusion.

(5) In subsection (4), “relevant conclusion” means—
   (a) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) of the relevant definition—
      (i) the lodging under section 116(1) of the 1995 Act of a notice of abandonment, or
      (ii) the disposal of the appeal under section 118 of that Act,
   (b) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (c) or (d) of the relevant definition—
      (i) the disposal of the appeal under section 183(1)(b) to (d) of that Act,
      (ii) the abandonment of the appeal under section 184(1) of that Act,
      (iii) the setting aside of the conviction or sentence or, as the case may be, conviction and sentence under section 188(1) of that Act, or
      (iv) the disposal of the appeal under section 190(1) of that Act,
   (c) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (e), (f), (g) or (h) of the relevant definition, the disposal or abandonment of the appeal,
   (d) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (i) of the relevant definition, the disposal of the appeal under section 62(6) of that Act or the abandonment of the appeal,
   (e) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (j) of the relevant definition—
      (i) if the referral or finding is being treated as if it were an appeal under Part 8 of that Act, the conclusion mentioned in paragraph (a) above,
      (ii) if the referral or finding is being treated as if it were an appeal under Part 10 of that Act, the conclusion mentioned in paragraph (b) above or, where the referral or finding proceeds by way of bill of suspension, bill of advocation or petition to the nobile officium, paragraph (c) above.

(6) In this section, “relevant definition” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5).>

Kenny MacAskill

611 After section 96, insert—

<Application to prosecutor for further disclosure>

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) the prosecutor has complied with section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(2) in relation to an appellant, and
(b) the appellant lodges a further disclosure request—
   (i) during the preliminary period, or
   (ii) if the court on cause shown allows it, after the preliminary period but before the relevant conclusion.

(2) A further disclosure request must set out—
   (a) by reference to the grounds of appeal, the nature of the information that the appellant wishes the prosecutor to disclose, and
   (b) the reasons why the appellant considers that disclosure by the prosecutor of any such information is necessary.

(3) As soon as practicable after receiving a copy of the further disclosure request the prosecutor must—
   (a) review any information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the request, and
   (b) disclose to the appellant any of that information that falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(4) In this section—
   “preliminary period”, in relation to the appellate proceedings concerned, means the period beginning with the relevant act and ending with the beginning of the hearing of the appellate proceedings,
   “relevant act” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5),
   “relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section (Continuing duty of prosecutor)(5).

Kenny MacAskill

After section 96, insert—

<Further duty of prosecutor: conviction upheld on appeal

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) in an appeal to the High Court of Justiciary, the High Court upholds the conviction of a person, and
   (b) after the conclusion of the appeal the prosecutor becomes aware of—
      (i) information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose, or
      (ii) information that falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3) which would have related to the grounds of appeal but was not disclosed.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(4) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.
In this section, “earlier proceedings” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5).

Kenny MacAskill

After section 96, insert—

<Further duty of prosecutor: convicted persons

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) a person has been convicted,
   (b) after conviction the prosecutor becomes aware of information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose, and
   (c) section (Further duty of prosecutor: conviction upheld on appeal) does not apply.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) If the person institutes appellate proceedings in relation to the conviction, the prosecutor need not comply with the duty imposed by subsection (2) during the appropriate period.

(4) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(5) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.

(6) In this section—
   “appropriate period”, in relation to appellate proceedings, means the period beginning with the relevant act and ending with the relevant conclusion,
   “earlier proceedings” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5),
   “relevant act” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5),
   “relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section (Continuing duty of prosecutor)(5).

Kenny MacAskill

After section 96, insert—

<Further duty of prosecutor: appeal against acquittal

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) the prosecutor appeals against the acquittal of a person, and
   (b) after lodging the appeal the prosecutor becomes aware of information which relates to the appeal and falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.
The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

The prosecutor ceases to be subject to the duty imposed by subsection (2) on the disposal of the appeal by the High Court of Justiciary.

Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 96, insert—

Court rulings on disclosure: appellate proceedings

Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure

(1) This section applies where the appellant—

(a) has made a further disclosure request under section (Application to prosecutor for further disclosure), and

(b) considers that the prosecutor has failed, in responding to the request, to disclose to the appellant an item of information falling within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3) (the “information in question”).

(2) The appellant may apply to the court for a ruling on whether the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question, and

(c) the appellant’s grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or

(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the appellant an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court must—

(a) make a ruling on whether the information in question, or any part of the information in question, falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3), and
(b) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) In this section, “the court” means the court before which the appellant’s appeal is brought.

(9) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the judges who are to hear the appellant’s appeal.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 96, insert—

<Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court has made a ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure) that an item of information (the “information in question”) does not fall within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3), and

(b) during the relevant period—

(i) the appellant becomes aware of information (“secondary information”) that was unavailable to the court at the time it made its ruling, and

(ii) the appellant considers that, had the secondary information been available to the court at that time, it would have made a ruling that the information in question does fall within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(2) The appellant may apply to the court which made the ruling for a review of the ruling.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question and the secondary information, and

(c) the appellant’s grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or

(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the appellant an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court may—

(a) affirm the ruling being reviewed, or
(b) recall that ruling and—

(i) make a ruling that the information in question, or any part of the information in question, falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3), and

(ii) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the judges who dealt with the application for the ruling that is being reviewed.

(9) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the ruling being reviewed.

(10) In this section, “relevant period”, in relation to an appellant, means the period—

(a) beginning with the making of the ruling being reviewed, and

(b) ending with the relevant conclusion.

(11) In subsection (10), “relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section (Continuing duty of prosecutor)(5).>

Section 97

Kenny MacAskill

617 In section 97, page 110, line 36, leave out <section 89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <this Part>

Bill Aitken

159 In section 97, page 110, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

618 In section 97, page 111, line 2, at end insert—

<(4) Subsection (5) applies if the information is contained in—

(a) a precognition,

(b) a victim statement,

(c) a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor does not intend to call to give evidence in the proceedings, or

(d) where the proceedings relating to the accused are summary proceedings, a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor intends to call to give evidence in the proceedings.

(5) In complying with the requirement, the prosecutor need not disclose the precognition or, as the case may be, statement.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where the proceedings relating to the accused are solemn proceedings and—

(a) the information is contained in a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor intends to call to give evidence in the proceedings, or
(b) the information is contained in a statement and the prosecutor intends to apply under section 259 of the 1995 Act to have evidence of the statement admitted in the proceedings.

(7) In complying with the requirement, the prosecutor must disclose the statement.

Section 98

Kenny MacAskill

In section 98, page 111, line 5, leave out <section 89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <this Part>

Bill Aitken

In section 98, page 111, line 5, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 98, page 111, line 19, at end insert—

<(4A) If despite subsection (2) the accused discloses the information or anything recorded in it other than in accordance with subsection (3), a person to whom information is disclosed must not use or disclose the information or anything recorded in it.

(4B) Subsections (2), (4) and (4A) do not apply in relation to the use or disclosure of information which is in the public domain at the time of the use or disclosure.>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 98, page 111, line 22, at end insert—

<( ) a petition to the nobile officium,

( ) proceedings in the European Court of Human Rights.>

Section 100

Bill Aitken

In section 100, page 111, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

Leave out section 100

Section 101

Kenny MacAskill

Leave out section 101
Section 102

Kenny MacAskill

624 In section 102, page 112, line 26, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b)>

Bill Aitken

162 In section 102, page 112, line 26, leave out from <89(5)> to <information> in line 28 and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose an item of information to an accused>

Kenny MacAskill

625 In section 102, page 112, line 31, leave out from <serious> to <prejudice> in line 34 and insert

Kenny MacAskill

626 In section 102, page 112, line 35, leave out from  to end of line 7 on page 113 and insert <an order under section 106 (a “section 106 order”).>

Bill Aitken

163 In section 102, page 113, line 5, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 6 and insert <89(2) or, as the case may be, 90(2)(b)>

Section 103

Kenny MacAskill

627 In section 103, page 113, line 10, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

628 In section 103, page 113, line 11, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

629 In section 103, page 113, line 12, after <may> insert <also>

Kenny MacAskill

630 In section 103, page 113, line 15, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

631 In section 103, page 113, line 16, after <may> insert <also>

Kenny MacAskill

632 In section 103, page 113, line 20, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>
In section 103, page 113, line 24, after <section> insert <104 or>

In section 103, page 113, line 26, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

In section 103, page 113, line 31, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Section 104

In section 104, page 114, line 4, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

In section 104, page 114, line 12, leave out from <non-disclosure> to <accused> in line 16 and insert <section 106 order would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest>

In section 104, page 114, leave out lines 23 to 26 and insert—

<(9) If after giving the prosecutor and, subject to subsection (10), the accused an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (4) of section 105 are met, the court may make an exclusion order under subsection (3) of that section.

(10) On the application of the prosecutor the court may exclude the accused from the hearing appointed under subsection (8).>

Section 105

In section 105, page 114, line 28, after <103(2)(b)> insert <or (3)>

In section 105, page 114, line 30, at end insert—

<(2A) On the application of the prosecutor the court may exclude the accused from the hearing.>

In section 105, page 114, line 31, after <and> insert <, subject to subsection (2A),>
Kenny MacAskill

642 In section 105, page 114, line 31, after <heard> insert <on the applications for the exclusion order and the section 106 order to which it relates>

Kenny MacAskill

643 In section 105, page 114, line 36, leave out from <non-disclosure> to <accused> in line 39 and insert <section 106 order relates would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest>

Section 106

Kenny MacAskill

644 In section 106, page 115, line 3, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

645 In section 106, page 115, line 6, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(2) The court must—

(a) consider the item of information to which the application for a section 106 order relates,

(b) give the prosecutor and (if the court has not made an exclusion order) the accused the opportunity to be heard, and

(c) determine—

(i) whether the conditions in subsection (3) apply, and

(ii) if so, whether subsection (4) applies.>

Kenny MacAskill

646 In section 106, page 115, line 14, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b)>

Bill Aitken

164 In section 106, page 115, line 14, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

647 In section 106, page 115, line 15, at end insert—

<( ) that section 89(3)(a) or (b) applies to the information,>

Kenny MacAskill

648 In section 106, page 115, line 16, leave out from <it> to <prejudice> in line 20 and insert <there would be a real risk of substantial harm or damage>
In section 106, page 115, line 23, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

In section 106, page 115, line 25, leave out from beginning to <conditions> in line 27 and insert
This subsection applies if the court considers that the item of information could be disclosed or partly disclosed in such a way that—
(a) the condition>

In section 106, page 115, line 29, at end insert—
(4A) If the court considers that subsection (3) (but not subsection (4)) applies, it may make a section 106 order preventing disclosure of the information.
(4B) If the court considers that subsection (4) applies, it may make a section 106 order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the manner specified in the order.>

In section 106, page 115, line 35, leave out subsection (6)

After section 106

After section 106, insert—
Orders preventing or restricting disclosure: Secretary of State

Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State

(1) The Secretary of State may apply to the relevant court for an order under this section (a “section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order”) in relation to the proposed disclosure by the prosecutor to the accused in relevant criminal proceedings of information which the prosecutor—
(a) is required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b), or
(b) intends to disclose otherwise than by virtue of this Part.

(2) If the Secretary of State also makes an application in accordance with subsection (2) or (3) of section (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State), the relevant court must comply with subsections (6) and (7) of that section.

(3) Where an application is made under subsection (1), the relevant court must—
(a) consider the item of information to which the application relates,
(b) give the Secretary of State and the prosecutor the opportunity to be heard,
(c) if the application relates to information which the prosecutor is required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b) and a non-attendance order has not been made, give the accused the opportunity to be heard, and

(d) determine—

(i) whether the conditions in subsection (4) apply, and

(ii) if so, whether subsection (5) applies.

(4) The conditions are—

(a) that if the item of information were to be disclosed there would be a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest,

(b) that withholding the item of information would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial, and

(c) that the public interest would be protected only if a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order of the type mentioned in subsection (6) were to be made.

(5) This subsection applies if the court considers that the item of information could be disclosed or partly disclosed in such a way that—

(a) the condition in paragraph (a) of subsection (4) would not be met, and

(b) the disclosure (or partial disclosure) would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(6) If the court considers that subsection (4) (but not subsection (5)) applies, it may make a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order preventing disclosure of the information.

(7) If the court considers that subsection (5) applies, it may make a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the manner specified in the order.

(8) For the purposes of subsection (7) the order may in particular specify that—

(a) the item of information be disclosed after removing or obscuring parts of it (whether by redaction or otherwise),

(b) extracts or summaries of the item of information (or part of it) be disclosed instead of the item of information.

(9) If an application is made under this section the relevant criminal proceedings must be adjourned until the application is disposed of or withdrawn.

(10) In this section and sections (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State) to (Application for non-attendance order)—

“relevant court” means the court before which relevant criminal proceedings are taking place,

“relevant criminal proceedings” means criminal proceedings relating to the item of information to which the application under this section relates.
After section 106, insert—

<Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State>

(1) This section applies where the Secretary of State applies for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order.

(2) If the application under section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) relates to solemn proceedings, the Secretary of State may also apply to the relevant court for—
   (a) a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order, or
   (b) a non-attendance order (but not a restricted notification order).

(3) If the application under section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) relates to summary proceedings, the Secretary of State may also apply to the court for a non-attendance order.

(4) A restricted notification order is an order under section (Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order) prohibiting notice being given to the accused of—
   (a) the making of an application for—
      (i) the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order to which the restricted notification order relates,
      (ii) the restricted notification order, and
      (iii) a non-attendance order, and
   (b) the determination of those applications.

(5) A non-attendance order is an order under section (Application for non-attendance order) prohibiting the accused from attending or making representations in proceedings for the determination of the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order to which the non-attendance order relates.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where the Secretary of State applies—
   (a) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order, or
   (b) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) or (b) for a non-attendance order.

(7) Before determining the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, the court must—
   (a) in accordance with section (Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order), determine any application for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order,
   (b) in accordance with section (Application for non-attendance order), determine any application for a non-attendance order.>
Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order

(1) This section applies where by virtue of section (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State)(2)(a) the Secretary of State applies for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order.

(2) On receiving the application, the relevant court must appoint a hearing to determine whether a restricted notification order should be made.

(3) The accused is not to be notified of—
   (a) the applications for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, the restricted notification order and the non-attendance order, or
   (b) the hearing appointed under subsection (2).

(4) The accused is not to be given the opportunity to be heard or be represented at the hearing.

(5) If, after giving the Secretary of State and the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (6) are met, the court may make a restricted notification order.

(6) Those conditions are—
   (a) that disclosure to the accused of the making of the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and
   (b) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of a restricted notification order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(7) If the court makes a restricted notification order, it must also make a non-attendance order.

(8) If the court refuses to make a restricted notification order, the court must appoint a hearing to determine the application for a non-attendance order.

(9) If after giving the Secretary of State, the prosecutor and, subject to subsection (10), the accused an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (6) of section (Application for non-attendance order) are met, the court may make a non-attendance order under subsection (4) of that section.

(10) On the application of the Secretary of State the court may exclude the accused from the hearing appointed under subsection (8).

Kenny MacAskill

656 After section 106, insert—

Application for non-attendance order

(1) This section applies where by virtue of section (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State)(2)(b) the Secretary of State applies for a non-attendance order (but not a restricted notification order).

(2) On receiving the application, the relevant court must appoint a hearing.

(3) On the application of the Secretary of State the court may exclude the accused from the hearing.
(4) If after giving the Secretary of State, the prosecutor and, if not excluded under subsection (3), the accused an opportunity to be heard the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (5) are met, the court may make a non-attendance order.

(5) Those conditions are—

(a) that disclosure to the accused of the nature of the information to which the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order relates would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and

(b) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of a non-attendance order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

Section 107

Kenny MacAskill

657 In section 107, page 116, leave out lines 6 and 7 and insert—

<(  ) an application for an exclusion order,
(  ) an application for a section 106 order,
(  ) an application for a restricted notification order,
(  ) an application for a non-attendance order,
(  ) an application for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order,>

Kenny MacAskill

658 In section 107, page 116, line 11, leave out <to whom the application, review or appeal relates> and insert <in relation to the determination of the application, review or appeal>

Kenny MacAskill

659 In section 107, page 116, line 14, at end insert—

<(  ) Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in a non-notification case, the court—
(a) must give the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard, but
(b) must not give the accused an opportunity to be heard.

(  ) Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in a restricted notification case, the court—
(a) must give the prosecutor and the Secretary of State an opportunity to be heard,
(b) must not give the accused an opportunity to be heard.

(  ) Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case, the court must give all the parties an opportunity to be heard.

(  ) The prosecutor may appeal to the High Court against a decision of the court not to appoint special counsel in any case.
The Secretary of State may appeal to the High Court against a decision of the court not to appoint special counsel in a restricted notification case.

The accused may appeal to the High Court against a decision not to appoint special counsel in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case.

In this section and section (Role of special counsel)—

“non-notification case” means a case where the court is determining—
(a) an application for a non-notification order,
(b) an application for review of the grant or refusal of a non-notification order,
(c) an appeal relating to such an order,

“restricted notification case” means a case where the court is determining—
(a) an application for a restricted notification order,
(b) an application for review of the grant or refusal of a restricted notification order,
(c) an appeal relating to such an order.

After section 107

Kenny MacAskill

660 After section 107, insert—

<Persons eligible for appointment as special counsel>

The court may appoint a person as special counsel under section 107(2) only if the person is a solicitor or advocate.

Kenny MacAskill

661 After section 107, insert—

<Role of special counsel>

(1) Special counsel’s duty is, in relation to the determination of the relevant application or appeal, to act in the best interests of the accused with a view only to ensuring that the accused receives a fair trial.

(2) Special counsel—
(a) is entitled to see the confidential information, but
(b) must not disclose any of the confidential information to the accused or the accused’s representative (if any).

(3) Special counsel appointed in a non-notification case or a restricted notification case must not—
(a) disclose to the accused or the accused’s representative (if any) the making of the relevant application or appeal, or
(b) otherwise communicate with the accused or the accused’s representative (if any) about the relevant application or appeal.
(4) Special counsel appointed in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case must not communicate with the accused about the relevant application or appeal except—
   (a) with the permission of the court, and
   (b) where permission is given, in accordance with such conditions as the court may impose.

(5) Before deciding whether to grant permission, the court must give—
   (a) the prosecutor, and
   (b) in the case of an application for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order or a non-attendance order, the Secretary of State, an opportunity to be heard.

(6) In this section—

“the confidential information” means—
   (a) the information to which the relevant application or appeal relates, and
   (b) a copy of the relevant application or appeal,

“relevant application or appeal” means the application or appeal referred to in section 107(1) in respect of which special counsel is appointed.

Kenny MacAskill

662 After section 107, insert—

<Appeals

(1) The prosecutor may appeal to the High Court against—
   (a) the making of a section 106 order under section 106(4B),
   (b) the making of a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order,
   (c) the making of a restricted notification order,
   (d) the making of a non-attendance order,
   (e) the refusal of an application for a non-notification order,
   (f) the refusal of an application for an exclusion order, or
   (g) the refusal of an application for a section 106 order.

(2) The accused may appeal to the High Court against the making of—
   (a) an exclusion order under section 105(3),
   (b) a section 106 order,
   (c) a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, or
   (d) a non-attendance order.

(3) The Secretary of State may appeal to the High Court against—
(a) the making of a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order under section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) (7),

(b) the refusal of an application for a restricted notification order,

(c) the refusal of an application for a non-attendance order, or

(d) the refusal of an application for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order.

(4) If special counsel was appointed in relation to an application for a non-notification order, special counsel may appeal to the High Court against the making of—

(a) the non-notification order, or

(b) a section 106 order in relation to the same item of information.

(5) If special counsel was appointed in relation to an application for a restricted notification order, special counsel may appeal to the High Court against the making of—

(a) the restricted notification order, or

(b) a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order in relation to the same item of information.

(6) An appeal must be lodged not later than 7 days after the decision appealed against.

(7) The prosecutor is entitled to be heard in any appeal under this section.

(8) The accused is entitled to be heard in an appeal under—

(a) subsection (1)(a) or (g) or (2)(b) unless—

(i) a non-notification order has been made, or

(ii) an exclusion order has been made,

(b) subsection (1)(b), (2)(c) or (3)(a) or (d) unless—

(i) a restricted notification order has been made, or

(ii) a non-attendance order has been made,

(c) subsection (1)(d), (2)(d) or (3)(c) unless the court, on the application of the Secretary of State, excludes the accused from the hearing,

(d) subsection (1)(f) or (2)(a) unless the court, on the application of the prosecutor excludes the accused from the hearing.

(9) The Secretary of State is entitled to be heard in an appeal under subsection (1)(b), (c) or (d), (2)(c) or (d) or (5).>

Section 108

Kenny MacAskill

663 Leave out section 108
Section 109

Kenny MacAskill
664 Leave out section 109

Section 110

Kenny MacAskill
665 Leave out section 110

Section 111

Kenny MacAskill
666 In section 111, page 116, line 35, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
667 In section 111, page 117, line 3, leave out from <, and> to end of line 6

Bill Aitken
165 In section 111, page 117, line 6, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill
668 In section 111, page 117, line 7, after <be,> insert <special counsel or>

Kenny MacAskill
669 In section 111, page 117, line 8, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
670 In section 111, page 117, line 10, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
671 In section 111, page 117, line 13, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
672 In section 111, page 117, line 16, after <prosecutor> insert <or, as the case may be, special counsel>

Kenny MacAskill
673 In section 111, page 117, line 19, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>
After section 111

Kenny MacAskill
679 After section 111, insert—

<Review of section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order>

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court makes a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, and

(b) during the relevant period the Secretary of State, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused becomes aware of information that was unavailable to the court at the time when the order was made.

(2) The Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused may apply to the court to review the order.

(3) Except in the case mentioned in subsection (4), the same persons are entitled to be heard on the application for review as were entitled to be heard on the application for the order.

(4) If—

(a) a restricted notification order was granted in relation to the order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section (Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order)(6) are met, the court may, where the Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor or special counsel applies for the review, make an order prohibiting notification of the application for review being given to the accused.

(5) If—
(a) a non-attendance order was granted in relation to the order which is under review, and
(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section (Application for non-attendance order) (5) are met,

the court may, where the Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused applies for the review, exclude the accused from the review.

(6) If the court is not satisfied that the conditions mentioned in section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) (4) are met, the court may—

(a) recall the order which is under review, or
(b) recall the order which is under review and make an order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the specified manner.

(7) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the order which is under review.

(8) In this section—

“specified” means specified in the order of the court,

“the relevant period”, in relation to an accused, means the period—

(a) beginning with the making of the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, and
(b) ending with the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.>

Section 112

Kenny MacAskill

680 In section 112, page 118, line 6, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

681 In section 112, page 118, line 6, after <order> insert <or a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order>

Kenny MacAskill

682 In section 112, page 118, line 7, after <consider> insert <in relation to each order>

Kenny MacAskill

683 In section 112, page 118, line 8, leave out <non-disclosure order> and insert <order concerned>

Kenny MacAskill

684 In section 112, page 118, line 10, leave out <non-disclosure order> and insert <order concerned>

Kenny MacAskill

685 In section 112, page 118, line 12, leave out <90(4)> and insert <111(8)>
Section 113

Kenny MacAskill

686 In section 113, page 118, line 21, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

687 In section 113, page 118, line 30, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

After section 115

Kenny MacAskill

688 After section 115, insert—

<Abolition of common law rules about disclosure>

(1) The provisions of this Part replace any equivalent common law rules about disclosure of information by the prosecutor in connection with criminal proceedings.

(2) The common law rules about disclosure of information by the prosecutor in connection with criminal proceedings are abolished in so far as they are replaced by or are inconsistent with the provisions of this Part.

(3) Sections (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) and (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure) do not affect any right under the common law of an accused or appellant to seek disclosure or recovery of information by or from the prosecutor by means of a procedure other than an application under one or other of those sections.

(4) Subsection (5) applies where, following an application (the “earlier disclosure application”) by the accused or the appellant under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) or section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure), the court has made a ruling that (as the case may be)—

(a) section 89(3) does not apply to information, or

(b) information does not fall within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(5) The accused or, as the case may be, the appellant, is not entitled to seek the disclosure or recovery of the same information by or from the prosecutor by means of any other procedure at common law on grounds that are substantially the same as any of those on which the earlier disclosure application was made.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where, following an application (the “earlier common law application”) by the accused under a procedure other than an application under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) or (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure), the court has decided not to make an order for the recovery or disclosure of information by or from the prosecutor.

(7) The accused or, as the case may be, the appellant is not entitled to make an application under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) or (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure) in relation to the same information on grounds that are substantially the same as any of those on which the earlier common law application was made.
In this section, “appellant” has the meaning given by section (Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation).

Section 116

Kenny MacAskill

In section 116, page 119, line 20, leave out from <“prosecutor”> to end of line 21 and insert—

<“investigating agency” has the meaning given by section (Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases)(4),

“procurator fiscal” and “prosecutor” have the meanings given by section 307(1) of the 1995 Act.>

Bill Aitken

In section 116, page 119, line 24, leave out <89(5) and (6),> and insert <89(2)(b),

( ) section (Disclosure of other information: solemn cases)(2),>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 116, page 119, line 24, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 27 and insert <89(2),

(b) section 90(1) and (2),

(c) section 93(2) (where it first occurs),>

Angela Constance

In section 117, page 120, line 10, at end insert <, or

(b) to determine or control that conduct despite being able to appreciate the nature or wrongfulness of it.>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 117, page 120, line 31, leave out <it> and insert <such abnormality>
Section 121

Kenny MacAskill

168 In section 121, page 123, leave out lines 2 and 3 and insert—

<(3A) No order may be made under subsection (1) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>
Cathie Craigie
2 In section 125, page 128, line 25, leave out subsection (2)

Cathie Craigie
3 In section 125, page 128, line 26, leave out subsection (3)

Cathie Craigie
Supported by: Robert Brown
4 Leave out section 125

After section 127

Sandra White
516 After section 127, insert—

<Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues>

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 41(2) (definition of place of public entertainment), after paragraph (aa) insert—

“(ab) adult entertainment venues (as defined in section 45A) in relation to which Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of that section) have effect, while being used as such;”.

(3) The title of Part 3 becomes “Control of sex shops and adult entertainment venues”.

(4) After section 45 insert—

“45A Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues

(1) A local authority may resolve that Schedule 2, as modified for the purposes of this section, is to have effect in their area in relation to adult entertainment venues; and, if they do so resolve, that Schedule (as so modified) has effect from the day specified in the resolution.

(2) The day referred to in subsection (1) must not be before the expiry of the period of one month beginning with the day on which the resolution is passed.

(3) A local authority must, not later than 28 days before the day referred to in subsection (1), publish notice that they have passed a resolution under this section in a newspaper circulating in their area.

(4) The notice is to state the general effect of Schedule 2, as modified for the purposes of this section.

(5) For the purposes of this section, Schedule 2 is modified as follows—

(a) in paragraph 1, sub-paragraphs (b)(ii) (and the word “or” immediately preceding it) and (c) are omitted;

(b) for paragraph 2 substitute—

“2 In this Schedule, “adult entertainment venue” has the same meaning as in section 45A.”;

52
(c) in paragraph 9—

(i) after sub-paragraph (5)(c) insert—

“(ca) where it is intended to sell alcohol in the adult entertainment venue, an application for the grant, renewal or transfer of a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16) relating to that venue has been refused;”; and

(ii) after sub-paragraph (6) insert—

“(6A) A local authority may refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a licence despite the fact that a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16) is in effect in relation to the adult entertainment venue.”;

(d) in paragraph 25, for “section 45” in each place where those words occur, substitute “section 45A”; and

(e) for “sex shop”, in each place where those words occur, substitute “adult entertainment venue”.

(6) In this section, “adult entertainment venue” means any premises, vehicle, vessel or stall used for a business which consists to a significant degree of providing relevant entertainment before a live audience; and, for the purposes of that definition—

“audience” includes an audience of one;

“display of nudity” means—

(a) in the case of a woman, exposure of her breasts, nipples, pubic area, genitals or anus;

(b) in the case of a man, exposure of his pubic area, genitals or anus;

“relevant entertainment” means—

(a) any live performance; or

(b) any live display of nudity,

which is of such a nature that, ignoring financial gain, it must reasonably be assumed to be provided solely or principally for the purpose of sexually stimulating any member of the audience (whether by verbal or other means).”.

Section 128

Kenny MacAskill

173 In section 128, page 129, line 25, at end insert—

< ( ) in paragraph 2(3)(b), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”,

( ) in paragraph 2(8)(a), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”,>
Section 129

Kenny MacAskill

174 Leave out section 129

After section 130

Bill Aitken

460 After section 130, insert—

<Premises licence applications: crime prevention objective>

In section 23(5) of the 2005 Act (grounds for refusal of premises licence application), after paragraph (b), insert—

“(ba) that the appropriate chief constable has made a recommendation under section 21(5) that the application be refused,”.

After section 131

Kenny MacAskill

175 After section 131, insert—

<Reviews of premises licences: notification of determinations>

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 39 (Licensing Board’s powers on review), insert—

“39A Notification of determinations

(1) Where a Licensing Board, at a review hearing—
(a) decides to take one of the steps mentioned in section 39(2), or
(b) decides not to take one of those steps,
the Board must give notice of the decision to each of the persons mentioned in subsection (2).

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—
(a) the holder of the premises licence, and
(b) where the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application, the applicant.

(3) Where subsection (1)(a) applies, the holder of the premises licence may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(4) Where—
(a) subsection (1)(a) or (b) applies, and
(b) the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application,
the applicant may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(5) Where the clerk of a Board receives a notice under subsection (3) or (4), the Board must issue a statement of the reasons for the decision to—

(a) the person giving the notice, and
(b) any other person to whom the Board gave notice under subsection (1).

(6) A statement of reasons under subsection (5) must be issued—

(a) by such time, and
(b) in such form and manner,
as may be prescribed.”.

After section 132

George Foulkes

542 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence applications: disability compliance statements
In section 20 of the 2005 Act (application for premises licence), after subsection (4)(f), insert—

“(fa) a statement of compliance with Part 3 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, including information as to where reasonable adjustments have been or will be made to remove barriers to access for disabled people.”.

Bill Aitken

547 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence: minor variations
(1) Section 29(6) of the 2005 Act (definition of minor variations to premises licence) is amended as follows.

(2) In paragraph (a), insert at the end “or if the variation relates only to parts of the premises to which the public does not have access”.

(3) After paragraph (c) insert—

“(ca) any reduction in the capacity of the premises,
(c) any change in the name by which the business carried on in the premises is to be known or under which it trades,
(cc) any variation of the layout plan or operating plan required by virtue of any enactment relating to planning, building control, food safety or fire safety,”.

Robert Brown

550 After section 132, insert—
Premises licence: transfer on application of person other than licence holder

(1) Section 34 (transfer on application of person other than licence holder) of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (3)—
   (a) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (d) is repealed, and
   (b) after that paragraph insert “, and
       “(e) for any other reason, the business that was (prior to the event in question) carried on in the licensed premises to which the licence relates ceases to be carried on in those premises.”.

(3) In subsection (4), insert at the beginning “Subject to subsection (4A),”.

(4) After that subsection insert—
   “(4A) In the case of an application made following the event specified in subsection (3)(e)—
      (a) subsection (8) of section 33 applies as if, after the words “the Board must” there were inserted “, if satisfied in all the circumstances that it is reasonable to do so,”, and
      (b) subsection (10)(b) of that section applies as if, after the words “if not so satisfied,” there were inserted “but otherwise satisfied that in all the circumstances it is reasonable to do so.”.

Kenny MacAskill

693 After section 132, insert—

Premises licences: connected persons and interested parties

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 40 insert—

“Connected persons and interested parties

40A Connected persons and interested parties: licence holder’s duty to notify changes

(1) A premises licence holder must, not later than one month after a person becomes or ceases to be—
   (a) a connected person in relation to the licence holder, or
   (b) an interested party in relation to the licensed premises,
   give the appropriate Licensing Board notice of that fact.

(2) A notice under subsection (1) that a person has become a connected person or an interested party must specify—
   (a) the name and address of the person, and
   (b) if the person is an individual, the person’s date of birth.

(3) Where a Licensing Board receives a notice under subsection (1), the Board must give a copy of the notice to the appropriate chief constable.
(4) A premises licence holder who fails, without reasonable excuse, to comply with subsection (1) commits an offence.

(5) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (4) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 2 on the standard scale.”.

(3) In section 48 (notification of change of name or address)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and

(ii) after paragraph (b) insert “, or

(c) the name or address of any person who is—

(i) a connected person in relation to the licence holder, or

(ii) an interested party in relation to the licensed premises,”,

(b) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Where a Licensing Board receives a notice under subsection (1), the Board must give a copy of the notice to the appropriate chief constable.”.

(4) In section 147 (interpretation), after subsection (4) insert—

“(5) For the purposes of this Act, a person is an interested party in relation to licensed premises if the person is not the holder of the premises licence nor the premises manager in respect of the premises but—

(a) has an interest in the premises as an owner or tenant, or

(b) has management and control over the premises or the business carried on on the premises.”.

(5) In section 148 (index of defined expressions), in the table, insert at the appropriate place—

“interested party section 147(5).”.

Robert Brown

543 After section 132, insert—

<Provisional premises licences

(1) Section 45 (provisional premises licence) of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (6), for “2 years” substitute “5 years”.

(3) In subsection (8), paragraph (b) and the word “and” immediately preceding it are repealed.

(4) In subsection (10), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—

“(a) for subsection (2) there were substituted—

“(2) An application under subsection (1) must be accompanied by—

(a) a plan sufficient to identify the site of the subject premises and give a general indication of their size,

(b) a document giving a general indication of—

(i) the anticipated capacity of the premises,
(ii) the hours during which it is proposed to serve alcohol on the premises,

(iii) the extent to which it is proposed to allow children or young persons entry to the premises, and

(c) the certificate required by section 50(2).”, and

(b) subsections (4) and (5) were omitted.”.

(5) After subsection (10) insert—

“(10A) Sections 21 to 32 have effect in relation to any provisional premises licence application and to any provisional premises licence as if references to—

(a) the operating plan were read as references to the document required under section 20(2)(b) (as substituted by subsection (10)(a)), and

(b) the layout plan were read as references to the plan required under section 20(2)(a) (as so substituted).”.

Kenny MacAskill

176 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence applications: food hygiene certificates>

(1) Section 50 of the 2005 Act (certificates as to planning, building standards and food hygiene) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (7), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may, by order, specify.”.

(3) After subsection (7), insert—

“(7A) An order under subsection (7) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.”.

(4) In subsection (8)(c), for “the 1990 Act” substitute “section 5 of the Food Safety Act 1990 (c.16)”.

After section 133

Bill Aitken

548 After section 133, insert—

<Consumption of alcohol on licensed premises outwith licensed hours>

In section 63(2) of the 2005 Act (exceptions to offence of allowing sale, consumption etc. of alcohol outwith licensed hours), after paragraph (f) insert—

“(g) allow alcohol to be consumed on licensed premises at any time within 45 minutes of the end of any period of licensed hours by—

(i) the premises licence holder,

(ii) the premises manager, or

(iii) any person aged 18 or over who, at the end of that period of licensed hours, was working on the premises.”.
Section 134

Kenny MacAskill

539 In section 134, page 134, line 17, leave out from <after> to end of line 22 and insert <in sub-paragraph (4), after “Board” in the second place where it appears insert “or to a member of staff provided under paragraph 8(1)(b)”>

After section 134

Kenny MacAskill

449 After section 134, insert—

<Extended hours applications: notification period

(1) Section 69 of the 2005 Act (notification of extended hours application) is amended as follows.

(2) After subsection (3), add—

“(4) Subsections (5) and (6) apply where the Licensing Board is satisfied that the application requires to be dealt with quickly.

(5) Subsections (2) and (3) have effect in relation to the application as if the references to the period of 10 days were references to such shorter period of not less than 24 hours as the Board may determine.

(6) Subsection (3) has effect in relation to the application as if for the word “must” there were substituted “may”.”>

Section 136

Kenny MacAskill

177 In section 136, page 135, line 3, at end insert—

<(ba) the notice does not include a recommendation under section 73(4),>

Kenny MacAskill

178 In section 136, page 135, leave out lines 22 to 27 and insert—

<(a) hold a hearing for the purposes of considering and determining the application, and

(b) after having regard to the circumstances in which the personal licence previously held expired or, as the case may be, was surrendered—

(i) refuse the application, or

(ii) grant the application.”.>

After section 136

James Kelly

698 After section 136, insert—
24 hour licences: refusal, revocation etc. on advice or recommendation of Local Licensing Forum

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 64 (24 hour licences to be granted only in exceptional circumstances)—
   (a) in subsection (1), for “Subsection (2) applies” substitute “Subsections (2) to (4) apply”,
   (b) in subsection (2), at the end insert “(the granting of any such application being referred to in this section and section 64A as “24 hour licensing”)”, and
   (c) after subsection (2) insert—
      “(3) In reaching a decision under subsection (2), the Licensing Board must have regard to any advice given or recommendations made by the Local Licensing Forum for the Board’s area that allowing 24 hour licensing in the area in which the subject premises are situated would be inappropriate or undesirable.
   (4) Where the Local Licensing Forum has not, at the time the application is made, given any advice or made any recommendations about the appropriateness or desirability of allowing 24 hour licensing, the Licensing Board may invite it to do so before reaching a decision under subsection (2).”.

(3) After that section insert—
   “64A Revocation etc. of 24 hour licence on advice or recommendation of Local Licensing Forum
   (1) This section applies where—
      (a) a Licensing Board has granted, under section 64, an application for 24 hour licensing, and
      (b) the Local Licensing Forum for the Board’s area subsequently gives advice or makes recommendations to the Board to the effect that 24 hour licensing in the area in which the subject premises are situated is inappropriate or undesirable.
   (2) The Licensing Board—
      (a) must have regard to the advice or recommendations of the Local Licensing Forum, and
      (b) may either revoke the licence or vary it so as to restrict the licensed hours during which alcohol may be sold on the premises to a continuous period of less than 24 hours.”.

After section 137

Kenny MacAskill

179 After section 137, insert—

<Appeals
   In section 131(2) of the 2005 Act (appeals), the words “by way of stated case, at the instance of the appellant,” are repealed.>
Kenny MacAskill

694  After section 137, insert—

<Liability for offences

(1)  The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2)  In each of the following provisions, the word “knowingly” is repealed—

(a)  section 1(3)(b),
(b)  section 103(1),
(c)  section 106(2),
(d)  section 107(1),
(e)  section 118(1),
(f)  section 120(2) and (3),
(g)  section 121(1),
(h)  section 127(4), and
(i)  section 128(5).

(3)  After section 141 (offences by bodies corporate etc.) insert—

“141A  Defence of due diligence for certain offences

(1)  It is a defence for a person charged with an offence to which this section applies to prove that the person—

(a)  did not know that the offence was being committed, and
(b)  exercised all due diligence to prevent the offence being committed.

(2)  This section applies to an offence under any of the following provisions of this Act—

section 1(3)(b),
section 103(1),
section 106(2),
section 107(1),
section 118(1),
section 120(2) or (3),
section 121(1),
section 127(4),
section 128(5).

141B  Vicarious liability of premises licence holders and interested parties

(1)  Subsection (2) applies where, on or in relation to any licensed premises, a person commits an offence to which this section applies while acting as the employee or agent of—

(a)  the holder of the premises licence, or
(b) an interested party.

(2) The holder of the premises licence or, as the case may be, the interested party is also guilty of the offence and liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(3) It is a defence for a holder of a premises licence or an interested party charged with an offence to which this section applies by virtue of subsection (2) to prove that the holder of the licence or, as the case may be, the interested party—

(a) did not know that the offence was being committed by the employee or agent, and

(b) exercised all due diligence to prevent the offence being committed.

(4) Proceedings may be taken against the holder of the premises licence or the interested party in respect of the offence whether or not proceedings are also taken against the employee or agent who committed the offence.

(5) This section applies to an offence under any of the following provisions of this Act—

section 1(3),
section 15(5),
section 63(1),
section 97(7),
section 102(1),
section 103(1),
section 106(2),
section 107(1),
section 108(2) or (3),
section 113(1),
section 114,
section 115(2),
section 118(1),
section 119(1),
section 120(2),
section 121(1),
section 138(5).”.

After section 138

Kenny MacAskill

699 After section 138, insert—

Powers of Licensing Standards Officers

(1) Section 15 of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.
(2) The section title becomes “Powers of entry, inspection and seizure”.

(3) In subsection (2)—
   (a) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (b) is repealed, and
   (b) after that paragraph insert—
       “(c) power to take copies of, or of an entry in, any document found on the premises, and
       (d) power to seize and remove any substances, articles or documents found on the premises.”.

(4) In subsection (3)—
   (a) for “either” substitute “any”, and
   (b) in paragraph (b), after “information” insert “or explanation”.

(5) After subsection (4) insert—
   “(4A) Subsection (3)(c) includes power to require any document which is stored in electronic form and which is accessible from the premises to be produced in a form—
       (a) in which it is legible, and
       (b) in which it can be removed from the premises.

(4B) Nothing in subsection (3) requires a person to produce any document if the person would be entitled to refuse to produce that document in any proceedings in any court on the grounds of confidentiality of communications.

(4C) Nothing in subsection (3) requires a person to provide any information or explanation or produce any document if to do so would incriminate that person or that person’s spouse or civil partner.”.

(6) After subsection (6) insert—
   “(7) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision about the procedure to be followed in the exercise of a power under this section.

(8) Where a Licensing Standards Officer seizes any substance, article or document under subsection (2)(d), the Officer must leave on the premises a notice—
   (a) stating what was seized, and
   (b) explaining why it was seized.

(9) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision about the treatment of substances, articles or documents seized under subsection (2)(d).

(10) Regulations under subsection (9) may, in particular, make provision—
   (a) about the retention, use, return, disposal or destruction of anything seized,
   (b) about compensation for anything seized.”.

Schedule 4

Kenny MacAskill

180 In schedule 4, page 149, line 11, leave out <22(2) or>
In schedule 4, page 150, leave out lines 18 to 21

Section 140

Leave out section 140

Section 142

Leave out section 142

Section 143

In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section (Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions)(1),>

In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section (Convictions by courts in other EU member States)(2),>

In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section (European evidence warrants)(1),>

In section 143, page 138, leave out line 33

In section 143, page 138, line 33, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section 146(1) containing provisions which modify any enactment (including this Act), or>

In section 143, page 138, line 34, leave out <146(1) or>

In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or
Robert Brown

549 In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

( ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 38(1), (2), (3) or (4),>

Schedule 5

Kenny MacAskill

189 In schedule 5, page 151, line 35, at end insert—

<The Libel Act 1792 (c.60)
The Libel Act 1792 is repealed.
The Criminal Libel Act 1819 (c.8)
The Criminal Libel Act 1819 is repealed.
The Defamation Act 1952 (c.66)
In the Defamation Act 1952, section 17(2) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

451 In schedule 5, page 152, line 10, at end insert—

<The Law Officers Act 1944 (c.25)
In section 2(3) of the Law Officers Act 1944 (Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland), for the words from “three” to the end substitute “287 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46)”.

Kenny MacAskill

452 In schedule 5, page 152, line 12, leave out from <In> to <1974> and insert—

<( ) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 is amended as follows.
( ) In section 1>

Kenny MacAskill

453 In schedule 5, page 152, line 15, at end insert—

<( ) In section 6(6)(bb) (convictions in service disciplinary proceedings), for “the Schedule” substitute “Schedule 1”.
( ) The Schedule (service disciplinary proceedings) is renumbered as Schedule 1.>

Kenny MacAskill

190 In schedule 5, page 152, line 24, at end insert—

<The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 (c.36)
The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 is repealed.>
In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, after <89> insert <, 111>

In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, at end insert—

The Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (c.52)
In section 243(4)(b) of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (restriction of offence of conspiracy: Scotland), the words “or sedition” are repealed.

In schedule 5, page 153, line 12, at end insert—

The Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.40)
In Schedule 4 to the Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 44, sub-paragraph (2) is repealed.

In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

In section 11 (certain offences committed outside Scotland)—
(a) in subsection (3), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”,
(b) in subsection (4), for “dealt with, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.

In section 17A (right of person accused of sexual offence to be told about restriction on conduct of defence: arrest), in subsection (1)—
(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—
“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

In section 18(8)(c) (power to take prints etc. under authority of a warrant unaffected by section), for “prints, impressions” substitute “relevant physical data”.
In section 19(1)(b) (samples etc. taken from person convicted of offence), the words “impression or”, in both places where they occur, are repealed.

In schedule 5, page 154, line 4, at end insert—
<Section 20 (use of prints, samples etc.) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

514 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 23A (bail and liberation where person already in custody)—

(a) in each of subsections (1) and (4), for “23 or 65(8C)” substitute “23, 65(8C) or 107A(2)(b)”, and

(b) in subsection (3), for “22A(3) or 23(7)” substitute “22A(3), 23(7) or 107A(2)(b)”.

Kenny MacAskill

455 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 35 (judicial examination), in subsection (4A)—

(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

456 In schedule 5, page 154, line 42, at end insert—

<In section 66 (service and lodging of indictment etc.), in subsection (6A)(a)—

(a) for sub-paragraphs (zi) and (i) substitute—

“(i) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in sub-paragraph (iii), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

In section 71 (first diet)—

(a) in subsection (A1), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(b) in subsection (B1)(c), for the words “before the trial diet” substitute “in relation to any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(c) in subsection (1A)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(d) in subsection (1B)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(e) in subsection (5A)(b), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”, and

(f) after subsection (7), insert—
“(7A) In subsections (A1) and (5A)(b), “relevant hearing” means—

(a) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (a) of subsection (B1), any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence,

(b) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (b) of that subsection, a hearing referred to in section 288E(2A),

(c) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (c) of that subsection, a hearing in respect of which an order is made under section 288F.”.

Kenny MacAskill

457 In schedule 5, page 155, line 3, at end insert—

<In section 79 (preliminary pleas and preliminary issues), in subsection (2)(b)(ii), after “under section” insert “22ZB(3)(b),”.

Kenny MacAskill

458 In schedule 5, page 155, line 23, at end insert—

<In section 140 (citation), in subsection (2A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 144 (procedure at first diet), in subsection (3A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 146 (plea of not guilty), in subsection (3A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

414 In schedule 5, page 155, line 31, leave out paragraphs 35 to 39

68
Kenny MacAskill

515 In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—

<The Offensive Weapons Act 1996 (c.26)

In the Offensive Weapons Act 1996, section 5 is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

194 In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—

<The Defamation Act 1996 (c.31)

In the Defamation Act 1996, section 20(2) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

195 In schedule 5, page 157, line 10, leave out paragraph 44 and insert—

<(1) The Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 9 (power to specify hospital unit), in subsection (1)(a), for “insane” substitute “found not criminally responsible or unfit for trial”.

(3) In section 13 (increase in sentences available to sheriff and district courts), subsection (2) is repealed.

(4) In section 56 (powers of the court on remand or committal of children and young persons), subsection (3) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

196 In schedule 5, page 157, line 28, at end insert—

<The Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (c.28)

Section 10 of the Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (exemption from liability: activities in relation to publications) is amended as follows—

(a) in subsection (1), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,
(b) in subsection (2)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,
(c) in subsection (3), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,
(d) in subsection (4)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,
(e) in subsection (6)(a), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed, and
(f) in subsection (8), the words “and criminal liability” are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

459 In schedule 5, page 157, line 36, at end insert—

<The Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 5)

In the Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 the following provisions are repealed—

(a) in section 4 (prohibition on accused conducting case in person in certain cases), subsection (4),
(b) section 17 (bail conditions: remote monitoring of restrictions on movements), and
(c) in the schedule (further modifications of the 1995 Act), paragraph 55.

Kenny MacAskill

695 In schedule 5, page 158, line 32, at end insert—

“In section 74 (appointment of stipendiary magistrates), subsection (6) is repealed.

After section 74 insert—

“74A Exercise of functions by stipendiary magistrates

(1) A stipendiary magistrate may, by reason of holding that office—

(a) exercise the same judicial and signing functions as are exercisable by a

JP,

(b) do so in the same manner as a JP (including by using the title of office of JP).

(2) For the purpose of subsection (1)—

(a) the acts of a stipendiary magistrate are valid as if the magistrate were a

JP,

(b) it does not matter if an enactment from which a JP derives authority to act in a specific case does not bear to give equivalent authority to a stipendiary magistrate.

(3) However, subsections (1) and (2) are subject to any provision of an enactment which expressly excludes a stipendiary magistrate from acting in a specific case.

(4) This section does not limit any other functions of a stipendiary magistrate (in particular, those exercisable in that capacity only).”.

In section 76 (signing functions)—

(a) in subsection (2), for “signing functions in the same manner as” substitute “the same signing functions as are exercisable by”,

(b) subsection (4) is repealed.”

Kenny MacAskill

197 In schedule 5, page 158, line 36, at end insert <and

(ii) sub-paragraph (b) is repealed.”

Kenny MacAskill

387 In schedule 5, page 159, line 12, at end insert—

“The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9)

In section 55(7) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (offences committed outside the United Kingdom), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.”

70
Kenny MacAskill

198  In schedule 5, page 159, line 14, leave out <134> and insert <156>
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

6th Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- a list of any amendments already debated;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the sixth day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Data matching for detection of fraud etc.
136, 137

Collection of information on criminal injuries
551

Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc. (minor corrections etc.)
138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 144, 198

Foreign travel orders – surrender of passports
444, 445, 446

Sex offender notification requirements
145

Risk of sexual harm orders – spent convictions
146

Police and SCDEA – authorisation of surveillance
523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528

Police and SCDEA – authorisation of interference with property
529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536

Enhanced criminal record certificates: disclosure of sex offender notification requirements
537, 538

Rehabilitation of offenders – spent alternatives to prosecution
447, 452, 453
Medical services in prisons
448

Assistance for victim support
413

Disclosure - meaning of “information”
696, 553, 697, 555, 556

Provision of information to prosecutor
557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 689

Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information
566, 567, 147, 148, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 149, 573, 574, 150, 575, 151, 576, 152,
577, 578, 579, 153, 580, 581, 154, 582, 155, 583, 156, 157, 606, 158, 607, 617, 159,
619, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 690, 166, 691

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 148 pre-empts amendments 568, 569, 570 and 571
Amendment 572 and amendment 149 are direct alternatives
Amendment 574 pre-empts amendment 150
Amendment 575 pre-empts amendment 151
Amendment 576 pre-empts amendment 152
Amendment 579 pre-empts amendment 153
Amendment 581 pre-empts amendment 154
Amendment 606 and amendment 158 are direct alternatives
Amendment 617 and amendment 159 are direct alternatives
Amendment 619 and amendment 160 are direct alternatives
Amendment 624 in group (Defence statements) and amendment 162 are direct alternatives Amendment 626 in group (Application to court – orders preventing or restricting disclosure) pre-empts amendment 163 in this group Amendment 646 in group (Application to court – orders preventing or restricting disclosure) and amendment 164 in this group are direct alternatives Amendment 667 in group (Appeals against disclosure orders etc.) pre-empts amendment 165 in this group
Amendment 690 pre-empts amendment 166
Amendment 166 pre-empts amendment 691

Defence statements
584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600,
601, 602, 611, 624

Court rulings on disclosure
603, 604, 605, 615, 616

Disclosure – application to appellate proceedings
608, 609, 610, 612, 613, 614

Means of disclosure
618
Confidentiality of disclosed information and disclosure to third party
620, 621, 622, 623, 692

Application to court – orders preventing or restricting disclosure
625, 626, 627, 628, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641,
642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 666, 669, 670, 671, 673, 675,
676, 677, 678, 680, 686, 687

Orders preventing or restricting disclosure - applications by Secretary of State 653, 654, 655, 656, 679, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685

Disclosure – appointment of special counsel
657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 668, 672, 674

Appeals against disclosure orders etc.
662, 663, 664, 665, 667

Abolition of common law rules on disclosure
688

Mental disorder and unfitness for trial
24, 167, 195

Conditions to which licences under the 1982 Act are to be subject 168

Licensing – powers of entry etc. (definition of “authorised civilian employee”) 169

Licensing of metal dealers
385

Licensing of street trading – food hygiene certificates
170

Licensing of market operators
171, 172, 2, 3, 4

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 172 pre-empted amendments 2 and 3

Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues
516

Applications for licences
173

Provisions to be considered as part of the Alcohol etc. (Scotland) Bill
174, 182, 186

Premises licence applications
460, 542, 176, 180
Reviews of premises licences – notification of determinations
175

Premises licence – minor variations
547

Premises licence – transfer
550

Premises licences – connected persons and interested parties
693

Provisional premises licences
543

Consumption of alcohol on licensed premises outwith licensed hours
548

Occasional licences
539

Extended hours applications – notification period
449

Personal licence applications
177, 178, 181

24 hour licensing
698

Appeals against decisions of licensing board
179

Liability for offences under 2005 Act
694

Powers of Licensing Standards Officers
699

Corruption in public bodies
183

Orders and regulations – circumstances in which affirmative procedure required
187, 188

Incest and related offences
190

Criminal law – revision
191, 193
Breach of undertakings – consequential modification
457

Exercise of functions by stipendiary magistrates 695

Amendments already debated

Community payback orders – consequential modifications
With 342 – 414

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour
With 112 – 143

Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions
With 105 – 184

Presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention
With 100 – 392

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
With 114 – 189, 192, 194, 196

People trafficking (and consequential provision)
With 371 – 386, 387

Clarification of existing offence prohibiting the carrying of offensive weapons
With 109 – 515

Children – age of criminal responsibility and minimum age of prosecution
With 379 – 549

Convictions in other UK or EU jurisdictions
With 518 – 540

Bail conditions – remote monitoring requirements
With 132 – 197

Prosecution on indictment – Scottish Law Officers
With 421 – 451

Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused
With 429 – 454, 455, 456, 458, 459

Crown appeals
With 462 – 514

Retention of samples etc. – adults
With 478 – 512, 513
European evidence warrants
With 442 – 450
Present:

Bill Aitken (Convener)  Robert Brown
Angela Constance  Cathie Craigie
Nigel Don  James Kelly
Stewart Maxwell  Dr Richard Simpson (Committee Substitute)

Apologies were received from Bill Butler (Deputy Convener).

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 6).

Amendment 586 was agreed to (by division: For 6, Against 2, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were moved and, with the agreement of the Committee, withdrawn: 551, 413 and 24.

Amendments 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 163, 165 and 166 were pre-empted.

The following amendments were not moved: 147, 148, 149, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162 and 164.

Sections 71, 73, 75, 76, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 99, 114, 115, 118, 119 and 120 were agreed to without amendment.

Sections 70, 72, 74, 77, 78, 79, 85, 86, 87, 89, 90, 91, 92, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 111, 112, 113, 116 and 117 were agreed to as amended.

The Committee ended consideration of the Bill for the day, section 120 having been agreed to.
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

The Convener (Bill Aitken): Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. I ask everyone to ensure that mobile phones are switched off. We have an apology from Bill Butler, who is replaced by the Labour Party committee substitute, Dr Richard Simpson, whom I welcome to the meeting.

There is only one item on the agenda—stage 2 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, which is in its sixth day. The committee will not proceed beyond section 125 today. I welcome the Cabinet Secretary for Justice, Kenny MacAskill MSP. I welcome, too, the Scottish Government officials who are accompanying the cabinet secretary. Members should have copies of the bill, the sixth marshalled list of amendments and the sixth list of groupings of amendments for consideration today.

Section 70—Data matching for detection of fraud etc

The Convener: Amendment 136, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 137.

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Kenny MacAskill): Amendments 136 and 137 are minor and technical amendments to section 70. They will update references to the names of United Kingdom bodies following recent changes.

I move amendment 136.

Amendment 136 agreed to.

Amendment 137 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 70, as amended, agreed to.

Section 71 agreed to.

After section 71

The Convener: Amendment 551, in the name of Robert Brown, is in a group on its own.

Robert Brown (Glasgow) (LD): Amendment 551 relates to knife crime and to what is known as the Cardiff model. We all know that an astonishing number of victims of knife crime refuse to report incidents of assault on them to the police. The Cardiff model was introduced by Professor Jonathan Shepherd of Cardiff University, a face and jaw surgeon, who was dismayed by the number of young victims of violent crime whose faces he had to stitch up. Under the Cardiff model, accident and emergency wards collect information about the precise locations and times of violent incidents and share the anonymised information with the police, thus assisting them in implementing prevention action plans to greater effect. That has happened in Cardiff since 2002 and has, reportedly, led to a 40 per cent fall in violent assaults over the first five years, up to 2007. Cardiff moved to being the safest city of the family of 15 comparable cities that were surveyed by the Home Office.

The model has been followed in parts of Scotland: it is being rolled out by Lanarkshire NHS Board, Glasgow royal infirmary Edinburgh royal infirmary, in Fife and in Aberdeen. The purpose of amendment 551 is to empower Scottish ministers to require the use of the programme throughout the country. Too often, we have been mystified by the failure of Government—I hasten to say that this is not a crack at the current Government, but a generality—to replicate apparently successful projects or ideas throughout the country. Here is an idea that has made a significant contribution to cutting violent crime—particularly knife crime—that is far more relevant and far more evidence based than the provisions on mandatory sentences that the committee approved earlier in stage 2, and which will have to be removed at stage 3. It saves lives, cuts crime and facilitates successful crime prevention by the police. It would be criminal if it were not made a feature of joint working between hospitals and police services throughout Scotland. That is why the amendment contains not just a power but—in subsection (2)—a duty on Scottish ministers to get on with the job.

I move amendment 551.

Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): I am delighted that Robert Brown has seen the light and has been converted to the idea, given that I campaigned for its introduction back in the 2003 to 2007 session of Parliament. Unfortunately, the then justice minister opposed it, as did Labour and the Liberal Democrats. It is nice to see that if you stick at something, eventually your opponents will see that they were wrong and you were right. However, as was stated at the time and since, as far as I am aware, it is totally unnecessary to introduce to the bill regulations that would require health boards to collect and provide information on criminal offences. As Mr Brown said, a number of health boards are already rolling out the programme. It has been piloted in a paper-based exercise, which seems to have proved to be a difficult and complicated way to do it. My understanding, from my discussions with A and E consultants and others, is that the electronic system that is currently being rolled out is the one that should succeed in allowing the programme to happen. Work is being done on kinks and difficulties with that system.

As far as I can see, the Cardiff model is already being used. I will be delighted when it is rolled out throughout the country. Previous justice ministers did not support the idea, but the current justice ministers have supported the roll-out, and are working closely with the violence reduction unit and others to ensure that it goes ahead. There is no requirement for amendment 551.

Dr Richard Simpson (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab): The first thing to say is that an important feature of the system is that the information that it gathers provides the police with a detailed and graphic look at where violence is focused in postcode areas. Secondly, health boards might be required or asked to gather the information, but can that be enforced? Can it be made part of the information technology structure? At the moment, the IT structure does not collect the data in the way in which it should.

The issue also goes beyond the knife crime to which Robert Brown referred. The surgeon whom he mentioned has been dealing with people who are drunk and incapable, or falling-down drunk. How are we going to define criminal injuries? As a doctor, I know that determining what is a criminal injury as opposed to an injury might be easy when it is knife crime, but there are other forms of assault that do not involve a knife or a gun, and it might be difficult to determine whether an injury is a criminal injury. The definition of criminal injury is pretty important, and as it is offered in amendment 551, it is rather light. It simply talks about “injuries which are, or are suspected of having been, directly attributable to the commission of an offence involving violence”.

That is a slightly difficult definition.

From a health point of view, however, I welcome the thrust of what Robert Brown is trying to achieve through amendment 551.

The Convener: As there are no other contributions, I will make one myself. As Stewart Maxwell has already pointed out, and as the good book says, there is no greater joy in heaven than when a sinner repenteth. Some of us who are sitting around this table will hope that Robert Brown will, similarly, repent in his attitude to mandatory sentencing for knife crime.

Amendment 551 is arguable and it has merit. The statistical information that it would require would be of considerable value, as the Cardiff experiment has demonstrated. There does, however, seem to be a contrary argument on the basis that what Robert Brown is seeking is already happening anyway, and it might not be necessary to put it into the bill. I will listen with interest to what the cabinet secretary has to say because Mr Brown’s idea has considerable interest.

Kenny MacAskill: We acknowledge the well-intentioned nature of amendment 551. The majority of patient contacts do not raise issues about public safety or the investigation of a crime. However, many health professionals, including in the Scottish Ambulance Service, accident and emergency departments, minor injury clinics and general practitioner surgeries, might have contact with individuals who have been involved in crimes or who have been injured as a consequence of crimes. For that reason, guidance on sharing information between NHS Scotland and the police was developed and issued to NHS Scotland and chief constables in March 2008. NHS boards should, therefore, already be operating policies and procedures that support health professionals who are employed or contracted by them in adopting a consistent approach to sharing information in order to promote public safety and aid in the prevention and detection of crime, while respecting and safeguarding the interests of patients and the public, and the confidentiality of personal information.

We also support work to introduce injury surveillance in Scotland, particularly the pilot that is being undertaken by the national police-led violence reduction unit at NHS Lanarkshire. The pilot addresses three major challenges: the collection of relevant data at accident and emergency departments; matching those data with police data; and using the data in police tasking processes. The more widespread use of injury surveillance would significantly benefit police forces and health boards, but it is necessary to do further work around ensuring that data are collected accurately and consistently, and that they can be made available to police forces in an appropriate format. We expect the evaluation of the pilot and learning from the injury surveillance work that is going on elsewhere in Scotland to inform our understanding of how best to deliver injury surveillance in Scottish hospitals.

We are also unclear about the drafting of amendment 551. On the one hand, it seeks to give Scottish ministers the power to make regulations that would require health boards to collect information on criminal injuries that are treated in or otherwise come to the attention of hospitals, and to provide that information to the relevant chief constables. It would then impose a duty on Scottish ministers to make the regulations within 12 months. We are therefore unclear whether a power or a duty is sought.

In the light of the existing guidance and the current pilot to address the issues that lie behind amendment 551, we do not think that the amendment is necessary, so we ask the committee to reject it, with the caveat that the Government is committed to supporting the pilot and will, after proper evaluation, seek to disseminate the practice more widely.

10:15

Robert Brown: It was worth lodging amendment 551. The cabinet secretary’s final point about whether the amendment seeks a power or a duty is answered by the terms of the amendment itself. I am trying to empower ministers, although it is possible that that is not necessary, and to require them to move forward on the issue.

The one element of disappointment is that the cabinet secretary did not give us much information about the timescale for evaluation of the pilot. Perhaps we can follow that up hereafter.

Richard Simpson and Stewart Maxwell made some useful points about background information. The questions of IT structures and the supporting definitions are important, but they are subsidiary to the principle of what we are trying to do with the bill. If there is the political will to continue working on the issue—the cabinet secretary has assured us that there is—it can, I hope, be sorted out.

Given that the proposed system has been in use in Cardiff since 2002, and given that we are piloting it in Scotland, I hope that any difficulties will not take too long to resolve and that it should be possible to move forward. Against that background, and with a view to checking some details with the cabinet secretary, I seek to withdraw amendment 551, with the committee’s permission, while reserving the right to come back to it at stage 3 if I think that that is appropriate.

Amendment 551, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 72—Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc

The Convener: Amendment 138, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 139 to 142, 144 and 198.

Kenny MacAskill: When the bill was introduced in March 2009, the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 was still in bill form and was passing through the Parliament. Amendments 139 to 142 and 144 are technical amendments that reflect the format of the finalised Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009. Amendments 138 and 198 are also minor technical amendments.

I move amendment 138.

Amendment 138 agreed to.

Amendments 139 to 144 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 72, as amended, agreed to.

Section 73 agreed to.

Section 74—Foreign travel orders

The Convener: Amendment 444, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 445 and 446.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 444, 445 and 446 will amend section 74, which will amend various sections of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 that deal with foreign travel orders.

One of the principal changes that will be introduced by section 74 is the requirement for sex offenders who are subject to a foreign travel order that prohibits them from travelling to a country outside the UK to surrender their passports to the police. The intention behind the changes to the foreign travel order regime is to strengthen the police’s ability to manage sex offenders in the community and to increase the use of foreign travel orders with the aim of preventing child-sex tourism. The changes that we are making to the foreign travel order regime in Scotland will mirror those that have already been introduced in the rest of the UK by the Policing and Crime Act 2009.

Section 74(5) will insert new section 117B into the Sexual Offences Act 2003, and provides that if a Scottish court imposes a foreign travel order on a sex offender that prohibits him or her from travelling to any country outside the UK, that order must require the offender to surrender all their passports at the police station that is specified in the order. Amendment 444 seeks to make a minor but necessary amendment to section 74(5) that will make it clear that if a Scottish court imposes a foreign travel order on a sex offender, the offender can be required to surrender their passports at a police station only in Scotland, and not to a police station anywhere in the UK.

Amendment 445 will make it an offence in Scots law for a sex offender who is subject to a foreign travel order that has been issued by a court in England, Wales or Northern Ireland and which prohibits him or her from travelling to a country outside the UK to fail to surrender their passport, without reasonable excuse, at a police station in England, Wales or Northern Ireland. It will therefore ensure that, in such circumstances, it will be an offence in Scots law to fail to surrender a passport in any part of the UK. Without that change, sex offenders who are based in other parts of the UK would have leeway to travel to airports or ports in Scotland to use their passports to leave the UK.

Amendment 446 makes it clear that the sheriff court will have jurisdiction to deal with the failure to surrender passport offence under section 122(1B) of the Sexual Offences Act 2003.
I move amendment 444.

The Convener: That seems straightforward. As members have no comments, there is no need for the minister to wind up.

Amendment 444 agreed to.

Amendments 445 and 446 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 74, as amended, agreed to.

After section 74

The Convener: Amendment 145, in the name of the minister, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 145 responds to the Justice 2 Sub-Committee’s report on child sex offenders and our stated intention to introduce legislative change that will require sex offenders who do not have permanent homes to report more frequently to police stations to verify information that they have previously notified to the police. It will confer on the Scottish ministers a power to make regulations that will prescribe the increased frequency of such reporting. At present, such offenders are required to attend a police station to verify their information only once a year. Homeless sex offenders are recognised as presenting a higher risk to the public because they are harder to monitor because they have no fixed abode. To require a homeless offender to attend a police station in person more frequently to notify the police that he is still living at the place or address of which he last notified them, and that his personal details are correct, will provide greater confidence that the police can effectively manage and monitor homeless sex offenders.

The detail of the regulations, including the optimum level of increased frequency of reporting, is being discussed by justice officials and representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland. Given the importance of the measures and the effect that they will have on the people who will need to comply with them, the regulations will be subject to the Parliament’s affirmative resolution procedure.

Failure to comply with the requirements under amendment 145 without reasonable excuse will carry the same maximum penalty as other breaches of the notification regime, namely up to five years’ imprisonment. The amendment will bring Scotland into line with the rest of the UK, where parallel amendments were made through the Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008.

The proposed changes to section 138 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 are largely technical in nature and replicate amendments that have been made for the rest of the UK.

I move amendment 145.

The Convener: Again, that is fairly straightforward.

Amendment 145 agreed to.

Section 75 agreed to.

After section 75

The Convener: Amendment 146, in the name of the minister, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 146 is a minor amendment that will allow spent conviction information to be disclosed in proceedings under the Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 for the making, variation, renewal and discharge of, and appeals in relation to, risk of sexual harm orders. Such spent conviction information may be placed before a court in equivalent proceedings in England and Wales, as it can in Scotland in proceedings on sexual offences prevention orders and other orders under the Sexual Offences Act 2003. However, when the 2005 act introduced risk of sexual harm orders in Scotland, the necessary amendment was not made to the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 to allow a court to consider spent conviction information in proceedings relating to such orders. Amendment 146 addresses that anomaly.

I move amendment 146.

Amendment 146 agreed to.

Section 76 agreed to.

Section 77—Grant of authorisations for directed and intrusive surveillance

The Convener: Amendment 523, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 524 to 528.

Kenny MacAskill: Members will be aware that crime does not respect police force boundaries. We want to ensure that the law supports the police in tackling crime while maintaining relevant safeguards.

Section 77 will amend the Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Scotland) Act 2000 so that directed and intrusive surveillance can be authorised as part of a joint police or joint police and Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency operation, which will ensure that when the police consider it necessary to use such techniques in a joint operation, there is no need for time-consuming multiple applications and authorisations. Instead, a single force will be identified to take the lead in authorising such activity, which will remove unnecessary bureaucracy while maintaining the existing safeguards.
Continuing consultation with ACPOS has identified the need to extend the original provisions of section 77 to include the use of covert human intelligence sources in joint operations. Without such a provision, we will reduce unnecessary bureaucracy for some, but not all, types of surveillance.

None of the amendments in the group will give extra powers of investigation to the police, nor will any of them add to the list of bodies that can use the investigatory powers in question. Rather, they will ensure that the powers that are already in place can be authorised in the most effective and efficient manner while appropriate checks and safeguards are maintained. Existing safeguards in the application procedure will be maintained, and the independent oversight of surveillance operations that is provided by the Office of Surveillance Commissioners will continue. The OSC inspects all police forces annually to ensure that powers are used appropriately and that the proper processes are followed.

Amendment 523 seeks to remove section 77(2), as the inclusion of provision for the use of covert human intelligence sources in a joint operation allows for a simpler drafting approach to be taken. Amendment 524 will adjust section 77(3)(a) and amendment 528 will adjust section 77(6) as a consequence of that new approach.

Amendment 525 seeks to replace proposed new section 9A of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Scotland) Act 2000 with a new section 10A which, in joint operations, will allow the lead force to authorise the use of all forms of surveillance that are covered by the 2000 act, thereby avoiding the need for multiple authorisations.

Amendment 526 will include in section 77 provision to amend section 14(5)(b) of the 2000 act by adding the rank of deputy director general of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency to the definition of “the most senior relevant person” to whom a surveillance commissioner must make a report, should he or she decide not to approve an intrusive surveillance authorisation. In removing section 14(7) from the 2000 act, amendment 526 reflects amendments that were made in the Police, Public Order and Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2006.

Amendment 527 will include in section 77 provision to amend section 16 of the 2000 act by adding the deputy director general of the SCDEA to the list of the ranks of people who may appeal to the chief surveillance commissioner about a decision by a surveillance commissioner. Provision was included in section 77 to allow the deputy director general to approve authorisations for intrusive surveillance. Amendments 526 and 527 are technical amendments that are required to provide the deputy director general with the same approval rights as the director general.

I move amendment 523.

The Convener: In the past, the process must have been fairly convoluted and could have caused delays, so it is clear that the amendments have value.

Amendment 523 agreed to.

Amendments 524 to 528 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 77, as amended, agreed to.

Section 78—Authorisations to interfere with property etc

The Convener: Amendment 529, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 530 to 536.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 529, 530 and 532 are technical amendments to section 78 that will update subsection references to take account of changes that UK legislation has made to section 93 of the Police Act 1997 since the introduction of the bill.

Amendment 531 will remove unnecessary wording from section 78(2)(a). Amendment 533 will update section 78(2)(b) to include the rank of deputy director general of the SCDEA in section 93(6)(cc) of the 1997 act, which defines the relevant area for which the deputy director general of the SCDEA will be able to approve authorisations for property interference.

Amendment 534 is a technical amendment that will alter the position at which the change in section 78(3)(b) is made in section 94 of the Police Act 1997. Amendment 535 will make a minor editing change to section 78(3)(b) that is required as a result of the movement of text by amendment 534.

Section 78(3)(c) will add proposed new section 94(6) to the Police Act 1997 to provide for an urgent single authorisation of property interference in a joint operation. Amendment 536 will improve the wording of section 78(3)(c) to add a corresponding reference to section 94(2)(h) of the 1997 act.

I move amendment 529.

Amendment 529 agreed to.

Amendments 530 to 536 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 78, as amended, agreed to.
Section 79—Amendments of Part 5 of Police Act 1997

The Convener: Amendment 537, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 538.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 537 and 538 ensure that notification requirements under part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 will be included on enhanced criminal record certificates, which are commonly referred to as enhanced disclosures. Amendments to the Police Act 1997 that were made by the Protection of Vulnerable Groups (Scotland) Act 2007 were intended to ensure that notification requirements under part 2 of the 2003 act were included on basic, standard and enhanced disclosures. Section 49 of the 2007 act makes similar provision for scheme record disclosures under that act.

As preparations for the implementation of the 2007 act intensified, however, it came to light that the amendments did not have the intended policy effect. Including the information on the other disclosures but not on enhanced disclosures would be inconsistent. Amendments 537 and 538 correct the oversight in the existing provisions and bring the arrangements for disclosure of notification requirements under part 2 of the 2003 act into line.

I move amendment 537.

The Convener: Again, the amendments are clearly of value.

Amendment 537 agreed to.

Amendment 538 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 79, as amended, agreed to.

After section 79

The Convener: Amendment 447, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 452 and 453.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 447 inserts after section 79 a new section that amends provisions in the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974. At present, there is an anomaly under the 1974 act. In Scotland, individuals who have a spent conviction are treated as if they have not committed an offence, whereas people who accepted an alternative to prosecution such as a fiscal fine or a fiscal compensation order may be indefinitely required to disclose the fact if, for example, they are asked the right question at a job interview or when filling in an insurance form. That happens because people who have accepted an alternative to prosecution in Scotland are not afforded protection under the 1974 act, which provides protection only for people who have been convicted of an offence. The 1974 act does not protect people who have accepted a penalty as an alternative to prosecution, as they have not been convicted.

However, that is no longer the position in England and Wales. The Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 extended protection under the 1974 act for people with spent convictions to cover situations involving cautions, reprimands, warnings and any equivalent order that is issued outside England and Wales. A person who accepts an alternative to prosecution in Scotland or a caution in England might therefore find it more difficult to get a job or might have to pay higher insurance costs in Scotland as a result of the lack of protection under the 1974 act. Amendment 447 corrects that anomaly by inserting two new sections—8B and 9B—and a new schedule 3 into the 1974 act.

The effect of amendment 447 is that, when an alternative to prosecution becomes spent, the person will not have to declare it or any circumstances that were ancillary to the offence, and failure to do so will not be a ground for dismissing or excluding the person from any office, profession, occupation or employment or prejudicing the person in any way.

Amendments 452 and 453 are minor consequential amendments.

I move amendment 447.

Amendment 447 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 448, in the name of the minister, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: In early 2007, ministers established the prison health care advisory board to explore the feasibility of transferring enhanced primary health care services in Scottish prisons from the Scottish Prison Service to the national health service. The advisory board comprised senior staff from the SPS and NHS boards, NHS and SPS staff organisations, and Scottish Government advisers. The board’s report recommended that all primary care services in prisons should become the responsibility of NHS boards.

The alignment of primary care services in prisons with those that are available to the public is recommended by the World Health Organization. A similar change was completed in England and Wales in 2006 and in Northern Ireland in 2008. Amendment 448 facilitates that transfer of responsibility in Scotland. It amends the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 and the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 to remove the duty on Scottish ministers to provide medical services in state-run prisons and the duty on the contractor to provide those services in contracted-out prisons. The responsibility for providing primary care services in prisons will fall to NHS boards under general health legislation.

Amendment 448 maintains the special role and status of medical officers in prisons. It requires the Scottish ministers or contractors to designate one or more medical officers for each prison and limits who can be designated as a medical officer. It provides that medical officers will no longer be deemed to be prison officers as they will no longer be appointed by the Scottish ministers to provide medical services in prisons. Medical practitioners will be appointed by health boards to provide medical services in prisons and the Scottish ministers will designate certain of those practitioners to be medical officers for the purposes of the 1989 act and the Prisons and Young Offenders Institutions (Scotland) Rules 2006.

The rest of amendment 448 ensures that the medical officers who are designated under the new powers will have much the same status within the prison as the medical officers who are appointed under current powers have, for example in relation to searches and restrictions on the disclosure of information.

I move amendment 448.

Robert Brown: I support the general intent of the amendment. I say in passing that I am hugely impressed by the number of amendments that we have considered so far in which the Scottish National Party Government is seeking to bring us into line with the position in England. However, I have a question about the practical implications of amendment 448, because moving from one system to another often creates hiccups and difficulties. Will the minister give the committee some information on how the system will work in practice? I am particularly interested to know whether different standards of service will apply to prisoners and to the general population.

It has long been accepted that there are high levels of people with mental health problems, developmental difficulties and other challenges in prisons. The issue arose recently with regard to the number of psychologists. Nobody pretends that the level of support under the present system is necessarily what it ought to be. However, my point is that there probably require to be significantly higher levels of support by psychiatrists, psychologists and certain therapists than is available to the general community, and those higher levels are not in place in prisons at present. How will that be reflected in the level of provision that is made on the ground? We certainly do not want any negative unintended consequences from what is otherwise a positive move. Any such consequences would impact badly on the effectiveness of the criminal justice system.

Dr Simpson: I have two points to raise, the first of which is technical. I ask the minister whether the phrase “registered medical practitioner” in proposed new section 3A(2) of the 1989 act should read “licensed medical practitioner” given that, since November last year, those who are actually practising are required to be licensed as well as registered. I think that the wording will need to be updated at stage 3. I will be interested to hear whether the minister’s officials agree.

Secondly, I have questions about paragraphs (5) and (6) of proposed new section 3A of the 1989 act.

Paragraph (5) refers to the purpose of the search as

“the purpose of providing medical services for any prisoner at the prison”, but it states that the search is “a search of any person who is in, or is seeking to enter, the prison”.

I would like the minister or his officials to explain the link between the prisoner to whom medical services are intended to be provided and the person entering the prison who is to be the subject of a search.

Finally, I wonder whether paragraph (6) takes the right approach. The amendment refers to “the person’s clothing other than an outer coat, jacket, headgear, gloves and footwear”.

Rather than state that the rules do not allow the governor

“to authorise an officer of a prison to require a person to remove”

garments, should it not be stated that those officers are not authorised to require persons to remove those garments? The descriptions, as drafted, are not all-embracing.

Those are my slight concerns. Otherwise, I very much support the Government’s action in moving health care in prisons back into the national health service. It should not have been taken out of the NHS under a previous Government. That was understandable at the time because of difficulties in providing primary medical services to the prisoners at an appropriate cost—that was why services were put out to Blue Arrow and Medacs Healthcare. However, I welcome the intention to return those services to the health service. We should not underestimate the difficulties or the costs involved—those are the reasons why, although the policy has been agreed in principle, it is taking a lengthy period to implement.

Angela Constance (Livingston) (SNP): I did not intend to be political with regard to the amendment. Nevertheless, I say to Robert Brown that it is interesting that it has taken an SNP
Government to move health care in prisons towards best practice.

Like Richard Simpson, I remember well the difficulties associated with contracting out health care in prisons. From experience, I know that medical services in prisons were, at times, not what they should have been. In general, the amendment is a sensible, pragmatic move towards doing the right thing. Our national health service should apply to us all, irrespective of our rank or status and irrespective of whether we are law-abiding citizens or offenders. If we are even remotely serious about making prison work, we must ensure a good standard of health care in prisons.

The Convener: Those who are detained should receive the same degree of care as anyone in the outside world. On that subject, I recently wrote to the cabinet secretary about a particular prisoner of some notoriety who has now been released. I received the appropriate assurance in that respect, for which I am grateful. When someone’s liberty is taken away, we must ensure that the care that is provided is as we would all wish it to be.

A number of points of a technical nature have been raised by Robert Brown and Richard Simpson, which I invite the cabinet secretary to address in his response to the debate.

Kenny MacAskill: On the comments that have been made by Richard Simpson and others, we welcome the general direction of travel. The Government has not taken an ideological position on the subject; we are simply trying to do the right thing, as has been mentioned.

The reference to garments and searches will allow prison rules to reflect the change that is being made. We are more than happy to reflect on the matter and if there are better ways of achieving that change, we will see what can be done at stage 3. We are simply trying to ensure that matters remain as they are.

On whether the wording should be “licensed medical practitioner” rather than “registered medical practitioner”, my understanding is that it should be “registered medical practitioner”. However, we will check and address the matter if changes are necessary.

On Robert Brown’s points, the support was never provided by the NHS; it was provided by the civil service before being outsourced. The intention is not to take one step forward and two steps back. It would be counterproductive if we allowed health care in prisons—especially in the field of mental health, where we know that there are significant problems for the Prison Service and prison officers—to deteriorate. A programme board will oversee the issue. Its members will work together according to a principle of equivalence, to try to end the situation that exists in health care—as in other areas—whereby there is no joining up of services when people are released from prison back into the community, and to place on the NHS a duty to ensure a smooth transition.

10:45

The Convener: We accept that this significant change or transformation will not be problem free. However, all parties—unions, management, governors and health boards—are working together. We will check the small print to ensure that it is correct and appropriate. Equally, we will take on board the points that Robert Brown and others correctly made, because we must ensure that this well-intentioned direction of travel does not have unforeseen consequences.

Amendment 448 agreed to.

Section 80—Assistance for victim support

The Convener: Amendment 413, in the name of Angela Constance, is in a group on its own.

Angela Constance: Amendment 413 is a probing amendment that I lodged after discussions with Action for Children Scotland. The amendment seeks to insert, after “victims” in section 80(1), the phrase “including children and young people”.

The purpose of the amendment is to ensure that bodies that provide support to victims of crime include in their work a strong focus on assisting children and young people who have been victims of offending.

Members will be aware that section 80 provides the Scottish Government with the power to make grants to bodies “for the purposes of or in connection with the provision of assistance to victims, witnesses or other persons affected by an offence.”

I hope that this probing amendment will clarify how such grants will help to support children and young people who have been victims of offences, given that young people are far more likely to be the victims than the perpetrators of crimes. I always think that it is worth reiterating that children and young people are more likely to be victims than perpetrators.

I am sure that, in the bill, “victims” means “victims of all ages”, but I am interested in the cabinet secretary’s views as to whether there is any added value in specifically mentioning children and young people. I appreciate that there may be no legal or technical need to mention them specifically, but I wonder whether there would be merit in doing so and whether that would bring a focus on work with children and young people. As I said, children and young people are more likely to be victims than perpetrators.

I move amendment 413.

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): I oppose amendment 413. It is well intentioned, but I do not think that it is necessary. Section 80 as drafted covers children and young people. The amendment focuses on victims, whereas section 80 makes provision for grants to assist witnesses, too. I also believe that there would be unintended consequences from our agreeing to amendment 413 that could lead to confusion.

Kenny MacAskill: As Mr Kelly said, section 80 will give the Scottish ministers greater flexibility in this area—for example, flexibility to fund local authority support for victims of human trafficking. Section 80 provides for an enabling power; it does not signal a change to the overall approach to paying grants to organisations that support victims and witnesses. Although we understand and appreciate the intention that lies behind amendment 413, the existing wording of section 80 covers all victims, regardless of age, so it allows the payment of grants to organisations that support children or young people who are victims of crime. Moreover, singling out one group of victims for specific mention could lead to questions about support for other groups. The amendment is therefore unnecessary.

Furthermore, if the amendment were agreed to, section 80 could arguably be read as limiting Scottish ministers to paying grants only to organisations that support both adults and young people. That would inadvertently reduce, rather than enhance, ministers’ ability to help victims, which we are sure is not the intention. We invite the member to withdraw amendment 413, given the assurances that I hope we have provided.

The Convener: I invite Angela Constance to wind up and press or withdraw amendment 413.

Angela Constance: I think that I have made my point that children and young people are more likely to be victims than perpetrators.

The Convener: Three times, in fact.

Angela Constance: Four, actually.

I am content with the cabinet secretary’s answer and take on board members’ comments. Amendment 413 was certainly not meant to have unintended consequences for victims who are not children or young people, so I will withdraw it.

Amendment 413, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 80 agreed to.

Sections 81 to 84 agreed to.

Section 85—Meaning of “information” amendments will simplify the provisions, there are also areas that were not covered when the bill was introduced but which we consider we need to seek to add in. Those include provisions on disclosure post conclusion of first-instance proceedings, on appeals and on ensuring that there is a means of representing reserved interests in decisions about the non-disclosure of information on public interest grounds.

The need for statutory provision on disclosure post conclusion of first-instance proceedings arose from the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in McDonald v HMA, which did not issue until October 2008 and therefore post-dated Lord Coulsfield’s review. It was not possible to develop provisions on this substantive matter prior to the introduction of the bill.

Similarly, the need for a mechanism for the secretary of state to be able to make applications to the court for information to be withheld to protect the public interest became clear only during engagement with UK Government officials following the introduction of the bill.

Finally, we stress the importance of certainty in creating a statutory disclosure scheme. One of the key motivations for creating a statutory scheme is to ensure that the duties and responsibilities in the scheme are as clear as possible and to get away from the moving target of constantly evolving substantive common law in this area.

Unless we make clear in legislation all the significant rights and duties, the risk is that those gaps will be filled in through case law, which will undermine certainty for police and prosecutors, which is one of the most important benefits of a statutory scheme.

Although many of the interests that responded at stage 1 would not be adversely affected by the continuing evolution of the law, prosecutors and the police most certainly would. We therefore ask the committee to give appropriate weight to the evidence of the bodies that play a central role in operating the scheme.

In particular, we remind the committee of the Lord Advocate's evidence at stage 1, when she said:

“Although the essential concept appears to be breathtakingly simple, its practical application is extremely complex ... Much more streamlined legislation would be more attractive, but to leave open some issues might imperil future convictions because a decision that the obligations were different from those that had been understood by prosecutors would, to some extent, have retrospective effect.”

The Solicitor General for Scotland echoed the Lord Advocate’s comments when he said:

“Prosecutors need certainty. You need to know with which rules you must comply in order to comply with disclosure obligations ... The bill gives us a comprehensive set of rules so that the police and the prosecutor know that if they comply with those rules, they will comply with their disclosure obligations, which will ensure a fair trial in accordance with article 6 of the European convention on human rights.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 9 June 2009; c 2072-73.]

Given that our proposed statutory disclosure regime is of a similar size to that which operates in England and Wales, and for the reasons that we have set out today, we are convinced of the need to ensure that we have appropriate statutory provisions in Scotland, which we accept results in complex and technical provisions.

We have sympathy with Lord Coulsfield’s concern that police officers should have a clear and simple statement of what they are supposed to do. The bill does not stand alone; it is supplemented by the ACPOS guidance, and all Scottish police officers are undergoing training on disclosure to ensure that what is expected is clear to them. Attempts to set out the duty more simply often miss critical elements. Although the formulation offered by Lord Coulsfield in his written submission to the committee is helpful, it omitted an essential element of the duty: namely, that of providing the accused with material, relevant information that the prosecutor intends to lead in evidence against him. It is vital that the bill covers all aspects of the prosecutor’s duty. It is also essential that developments in the nature of that duty in appellate proceedings that post-date Lord Coulsfield’s report are included in the bill.

We remain willing to keep the provisions under review and to continue searching for means of simplifying the provisions ahead of stage 3. Although such opportunities might be limited for the reasons that I have just set out, we will look positively at any suggestions that come forward from any source. As a start, we hope that members will agree that amendments 696, 553, 697, 555 and 556 offer a useful simplification of section 85 and ensure that the meaning of “information” in the section extends across all criminal proceedings at first instance and appeal.

I move amendment 696.

Robert Brown: As the minister said, this is a complex area. I accept his rationale for adding in the new things. Having said that, I was conscious that although he used the words “clear” and “coherent”, the word “concise” did not enter into his explanation. It seems to me that there is a relationship between the length and complexity of the provisions and their comprehensibility to those who have to operate them in practice.

I will make a number of points, starting with the general observation that it is very difficult for the committee to seek with any confidence to amend the provisions that the Government has put forward in this very technical area. I certainly do not feel confident about doing that to great effect, even though I have a legal background. I will restrict myself to probing one or two bits.

It seems to me that the main effect of the amendments is to widen the definition of “information” to include precognitions and victim statements. I am not clear about the exact effect of that. The point is developed in a later group, on means of disclosure, but I want to know what the purpose is. Amendment 618, which we will come to later, makes it clear that the Crown—rightly in my view—is under no duty to release either a Crown precognition or a victim statement as such to the defence. As far as I can see, the only purpose of the amendments is to make positive provision for situations in which the Crown intends to rely on a statement by referring to it in court. That seems a very complex approach, given that I think I am right in saying that the Crown is currently under no duty to reveal precognitions. I wonder whether we are getting into a way of doing something that is slightly more complex than it has to be, when a relatively simple and straightforward point is at the heart of it.

Stewart Maxwell: I agree with much of what Robert Brown and the minister said. This has been a very difficult area for the committee. I want to make one or two general remarks. Since our stage 1 report was produced, many of us have thought about this area quite a lot and have examined it in detail.

I supported the report’s comments about the difficulty that we faced in dealing with the complexity in part 6, which deals with disclosure. However, examination since stage 1 of some of the reasons for that has helped me to come to a fairly simple conclusion.

11:00

I accept that the requirement for clarity and certainty overrides the preference for conciseness. I am concerned that, if the bill ends up being too concise, it will result in less certainty and clarity. The people from whom we took evidence and with whom we discussed the matter indicated that the requirement for clarity and certainty with regard to disclosure is paramount. The provisions are necessary. They may not be perfect and may not be exactly how we would like all law to be—concise, if at all possible—but the need for clarity and certainty is paramount. It is important that we support amendments that lead to that outcome.

James Kelly: I will make some general comments. I agree with what other members have said about the complex nature of part 6. Given the technical nature of a number of the provisions and amendments, it is difficult for the committee to get to grips with.

I accept the comments that have been made about the rationale for lodging some of the amendments, given the additional court cases and discussions that have taken place at UK level. I also accept the cabinet secretary’s point that it is important to ensure that there are no gaps in law that would allow case law and precedent to develop as the basis for thinking in the area. Although the provisions are complex and some of the amendments are lengthy, in general I favour an approach that provides for certainty.

The Convener: To save time later in proceedings, I will make my contribution now. This is undoubtedly a complex matter. There is no division in principle between what the Government is trying to do and what anyone else is trying to do. With the incorporation of European human rights requirements in Scots law, it was necessary to do something under this heading; the McDonald case simply underlined that.

No one has a reasonable problem with the principle of disclosure, which is a continuation of the well-established Scots law principle of best evidence. Where, in the course of a police inquiry, evidence that could exculpate the accused comes to light, it is important and, understandably, in the interests of justice that that be disclosed to the defence. There is no difficulty with that.

My difficulties related to the complexity of the provisions. I had a real fear that we were making life a bit more difficult for our prosecuting authorities than was necessary. Lord Coulsfield, who produced the original report on the issue, took the same view, although I accept the cabinet secretary’s point that work on the report predated some of the appeal cases that have been determined not only at the Scottish court of criminal appeal but in the House of Lords, as was.

I thought that we could simplify matters, but the amendments that have been lodged would add 20 sections to the bill. There is undoubtedly a degree of irony in that, although the good intentions of all are under no particular scrutiny. Some of the amendments that I lodged are basically wrecking amendments in respect of this part of the bill, but they contain a probing element. The secondary target has been achieved. The committee was reassured by our visit to the procurator fiscal’s office in Edinburgh, where we had a lengthy, detailed discussion of the disclosure requirements. I particularly found comfort in the fact that a thorough process is in place that involves the fiscals, the advocate deputes, and the police. Accordingly, I am as confident as I can be that the appropriate procedures will be followed. Inevitably, things go wrong from time to time, as they do in any organisation, but the systems are in place. I put on record the committee’s appreciation of the facility that was given to us, which was a very positive experience; I am sure that those who attended the visit will agree.

That brings me to the other questions that arise about whether it is appropriate to have everything codified in the bill. My preferred option is to keep it simple. That said, I accept the arguments made by those whom we met during our visit, and those to whom we spoke last week during our useful lunchtime session with the officials, and that were made in the evidence that was provided by the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor General when they addressed the committee. Therefore, with some slight misgivings, I am prepared to allow matters to proceed. We should consider the issue again before stage 3, because some points might arise that we have not anticipated until now. However, this has been a constructive exercise to which all members of the committee have contributed. That being the case, I see no particular need to pursue my blocking amendments to remove disclosure from the bill. I am as reassured as I can be.

Kenny MacAskill: I put on record my gratitude to the committee for its forbearance and understanding. Disclosure is a complex area of law, but it is important to get it right, otherwise injustices might occur and guilty people might go free. We have to provide as much certainty as we can, albeit in a changing world with court cases being heard regularly in appeal courts and elsewhere. We have to provide some basis for understanding by the police and prosecutors about what is involved.

I will deal first with Robert Brown’s specific issue, and then with more general points. Precognitions and victim statements were not previously supplied to the court, and that situation does not change, but the Crown will have to see whether any information contained within them should be provided to the court. There is no change, in that documentation will not be provided, but any appropriate information that requires to be disclosed that would be relevant to the defence and which forms the basis of the prosecution will have to be transmitted. That is simply a replication.

On the more general matter, we accept, and it is my own view, that the law should be as simple as possible and should be easily understood by the man or woman in the street. Equally, we live in a world with the European convention on human rights, court challenges and obligations to be a bit more specific for front-line practitioners. We are happy to undertake to seek to review the situation as we go into stage 3. I cannot say that we have identified any particular areas to review, but we acknowledge the committee’s direction of travel and we will see what we can do. We all agree that disclosure is a complex area of law that needs to be reviewed, but if we do not set out some guidance, constant challenges could be made that would make life difficult for the police and prosecutors and that could fundamentally undermine justice being served.

Amendment 696 agreed to.

Amendments 553, 697, 555 and 556 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 85, as amended, agreed to.

Section 86—Provision of information to prosecutor

The Convener: Amendment 557, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 558 to 565 and 689.

Kenny MacAskill: As was touched on previously, we acknowledge the stage 1 evidence that expressed concern about the complexity of the provisions in part 6 of the bill. We are conscious that the provisions about schedules of information attracted particular comment and we considered very carefully how best to address that. We do not wish to set in stone administrative arrangements for investigators and prosecutors that might need to change and adapt over time and which, for that reason, would more properly belong in the code of practice or in guidance that will operate alongside the new legislation. Therefore, amendments 557 to 565 seek to address that by removing the provisions that deal with the administrative aspects of the scheduling of information. They will now be dealt with in the code of practice or in guidance.

The amendments do not, however, change the scheme that we envisaged at introduction. There will still be schedules of information in solemn cases. All that the amendments do is remove from the bill the administrative and practical details of that scheme. The amendments also adjust the provisions as necessary to ensure that the prosecutor is able to comply with the duties imposed by virtue of this part of the bill.

I move amendment 557.

The Convener: That seems straightforward.

Robert Brown: I have just a couple of comments—I said earlier that I wanted to probe one or two things. Sections 86, 87 and 88 are all about the duty of the investigating agencies, particularly the police, to give information to the prosecutor. I accept that there is an issue about schedules, but I am not clear what the duty adds to the current position. When I was a procurator fiscal depute, I expected the police to provide me with all the relevant information and would have caused a bit of a fuss if they had not done so.
Surely it is entirely unnecessary to state that specifically in statute.

Leaving aside the issue of the schedules, I am not clear what the duty adds to the existing position. I would have thought that the issue could be dealt with through a behind-the-scenes arrangement between the police and the prosecuting authorities that does not need to be in the bill. It might well be that the matter is carried forward practically through the schedules, but do we really need to get into all the detail of it in the bill?

Kenny MacAskill: The police have a statutory duty to provide information to the prosecutor, but it is not as comprehensive as what we propose in the bill. The amendments put on record that information must be provided. It is not so much a question of practice as one of principle. As the Solicitor General said in evidence to the committee when he spoke about the duty of the prosecutor:

“You need to know with which rules you must comply in order to comply with disclosure obligations.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 9 June 2009; c 2072.]

In the same way, investigators need to know the rules with which they must comply so that the prosecutor can comply with his disclosure obligations. The amendments are about ensuring that we provide some statutory basis for what the police require to do so that people work in conjunction. There is no duty to make the prosecutor aware of the existence of information not provided to him nor to provide details of that information. As I said, the amendments ensure that we set things out clearly. There will be ACPOS guidance, but it is appropriate that we state in the bill what we expect from officers as well as from prosecutors.

Amendment 557 agreed to.

Section 86, as amended, agreed to.

Section 87—Continuing duty to provide schedules of information

Amendments 558 to 562 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 87, as amended, agreed to.

Section 88—Review and adjustment of schedules of information

Amendment 563 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

After section 88

Amendments 564 and 565 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 89—Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information

The Convener: A number of the arguments under section 89 have been dealt with. Amendment 566, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 567, 147, 148, 568 to 572, 149, 573, 574, 150, 575, 151, 576, 152, 577 to 579, 153, 580, 581, 154, 582, 155, 583, 156, 157, 606, 158, 607, 617, 159, 619, 160 to 165, 690, 166 and 691. I draw members’ attention to the pre-emption information on the list of groupings.

11:15

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 566, 567, 569, 570, 577 to 583, 591, 606, 607, 617, 619, 690 and 691 are a range of minor technical amendments, many of which seek to simplify the provisions in part 6.

Amendments 568 and 571 and consequential amendments 572, 574 and 576 simplify the duty of disclosure by removing unnecessary detail from the bill—detail that is explanatory and administrative in nature and, as such, can more properly sit in the code of practice or rules of court.

Amendment 573 introduces a new section after section 89 that applies to solemn proceedings. The provision is designed to replace the provisions concerning schedules that were in sections 86 to 88 when the bill was introduced and is aimed at removing unnecessary administrative detail. Amendment 575 works alongside amendment 573 by simplifying provisions in section 90.

Most of the other amendments are relatively minor technical ones. Amendment 566 makes it clear that section 89 is triggered by the events listed in section 89(1). Amendment 567 is a minor technical amendment to section 89(1)(b) to make it clear that, in solemn proceedings, that section applies when the accused appears for the first time on indictment only when he has not previously appeared on petition in relation to the same matter. Without the amendment, it could be argued that the duty is triggered at the stage at which an accused person appears on indictment for the first time.

Amendment 571 seeks to remove subsections (4), (5) and (6) of section 89. Amendment 568 seeks to reinstate the duty of disclosure set out in section 89(5) and give it greater prominence in the section. The effect of amendment 568 is to require the prosecutor to disclose to the accused information that meets the tests set out in subsection (3). Amendments 572, 574 and 576 are consequential on amendment 568.

Amendments 569 and 570 are minor technical amendments, the purpose of which is to make it clear that the prosecutor must disclose to the accused information that is likely to be led by the prosecutor in the course of the criminal proceedings.

Amendment 573 will leave the provisions to focus on the core, statutory, duty to disclose details of non-sensitive information that is relevant to the case for or against the accused. Amendment 573 also seeks to make it clear that, in assessing the sensitivity of information, it is the risk as opposed to the likelihood of harm that is to be weighed.

The effect of amendment 573 is to set out a specific duty for the prosecutor to disclose to the accused details of information that is not sensitive and that the prosecutor is not required to disclose under section 89 but which may nonetheless be relevant to the case for or against the accused.
Amendment 573 defines “sensitive” in relation to an item of information and has the effect of requiring that prosecutors assess the risk of any of the harms specified in proposed new subsection
(4) coming to pass as a result of the disclosure of that information, rather than the likelihood of any of those harms occurring.

Amendment 580 is a minor technical amendment to section 91. Amendment 581 is a minor technical amendment to section 92 that is designed to simplify the provisions, and amendment 582 is a minor technical amendment that reorders the provisions by moving section 92 to sit after section 96. Amendment 583 is a technical amendment that seeks to remove section 93 and is consequential on amendment 573. Amendment 591 is, in turn, a technical amendment that is consequential on amendment 583.

The purpose of amendment 575 concerns the nature of the continuing duty of the prosecutor to disclose information to the accused and to make provision for a continuing duty, following the duty proposed by amendment 573. The effect of amendment 575 is therefore to remove the unnecessary specific process step for the prosecutor to consider whether section 89(3) applies and, instead, simply impose a duty to disclose information to which section 89(3) applies. Amendment 578 is a minor, technical amendment that is consequential on amendment
575. Amendment 579 is a minor, technical amendment, as is amendment 606, which is consequential on other amendments in the group in relation to the duties of the prosecutor to disclose information to the accused.

The convener’s amendments 156 and 157 are likely a response to the concerns expressed during stage 1 about defence statements. Those concerns were, in the main, focused on the proposal to require a defence statement to be lodged in solemn proceedings. Our position on defence statements is simple and twofold. First, the provisions in the bill are designed to ensure that everything that should be disclosed to the accused in order for them to receive a fair trial, is disclosed. That is fundamental, and we cannot risk something not being disclosed, inadvertently and through no fault of the prosecutor, because they did not appreciate and could not have appreciated its significance—that would not be fair or just.
Secondly, if the defence seeks additional information, it should be required to provide some information to explain the materiality and relevance of the information sought. If the defence challenges lack of disclosure, we believe that it must explain why it is making that challenge and, to do that, must refer to those aspects of the accused’s defence to which the information is material and relevant. The question is not one of payment, as the Glasgow Bar Association suggested in its submission to the committee, but rather one of proper argument being made in what is, after all, an adversarial procedure.

We also remind members that we are seeking to implement Lord Coulsfield’s recommendations on the matter. He stated:

“The legislation or the statutory code of practice should explicitly place on the Crown a responsibility to review disclosure decisions in the light of any new information provided by the defence.”

In reaching that conclusion, Lord Coulsfield said:

“There is no doubt that it can be to the advantage of the defence to provide such a statement if there is a particular and positive line of defence and the defence are looking for material to support it. Any system of disclosure therefore needs to enable and encourage the defence to make an advance statement of their position whenever they perceive that this would help to secure fuller relevant disclosure and a fair trial for their client.”

I urge members to reject the convener’s amendments.

Amendment 607 is a minor, technical amendment, as indeed are the other outstanding amendments.

I move amendment 566.

The Convener: I intimate that, in line with what I said earlier, I will not pursue the matter, so I will not move amendment 147. Do other members wish to contribute?

Robert Brown: I have one or two little comments. This may be a slight quibble, but amendment 566 seeks to add the phrase “in a prosecution” after the word “where” in section 89, which states:

“This section applies where—
(a) an accused appears for the first time on petition”.

2334
I confess that I am at a total and utter loss to understand what that phrase would add to the meaning of section 89. As far as I am aware, petitions, indictments and summary complaints always relate to prosecutions. I cannot think of any circumstance in which they might relate to something else. What on earth would the phrase add?

I also have small quibble about amendment 567. The Government’s proposal is to add in parenthesis after the word “indictment” in section 89(1)(b) the words:

“not having appeared on petition in relation to the same matter”.

Surely to goodness the insertion of the word “or” after section 89(1)(a) would achieve the same effect without having to add all those words. I mention those amendments as examples because I came across them, but it seems to me that they echo a slightly more general point.

The convener’s wording of his amendments 147 and 148 on disclosing rather than reviewing was, dare I say, more lucid than that of the Government’s amendment 568. Similarly, Government amendments 569 and 570 seem to me to add nothing but words, without making any clarification.

I will say a brief word about defence statements, which we will discuss in more substance when we come to a later group of amendments. The cabinet secretary appeared to say that their introduction was justified because the defence had to explain why it was asking for more disclosure and the proper way forward was to do that by defence statement. Any judge who received a request for more disclosure would require justification and background before he could address the specific point.

It is worth observing that, as the committee noted in its stage 1 report, the view of Lord Coulsfield—whom the cabinet secretary drew in evidence—was that there should be an option for defence statements, rather than a duty on the defence to provide them. That presents a substantial difference to the position that the Government takes, which is not justified by Lord Coulsfield’s view.

Nigel Don (North East Scotland) (SNP): I will allow the cabinet secretary to draw breath for a moment by commenting on general principles.

A lay reader of the Official Report or anyone who has tuned in and is watching the meeting live is entitled to ask themselves whether committee members are absolutely aware of the detail of every provision that is in front of them. Speaking personally, it is clear that I am not. Before the committee meeting, I looked at the cabinet secretary’s purpose and effect notes, which run to 44 pages on the amendments on disclosure.

It is worth acknowledging that I cannot pretend that I am familiar with every detail of the matter. I am grateful that we have a qualified lawyer on the committee but, as a layman, I am content to rest on the knowledge that the Crown Office and the Government have liaised on disclosure and are trying to put together a comprehensive and workable system. They and the police will have to work it out. I am grateful to them for all the hard work that has gone into it but, as a layman, I have to hope that they have got it right.

Perhaps disclosure should have been the subject of a separate bill. I am probably not alone in thinking that the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill has grown so big that it is very difficult for any of us to see the wood for the trees. That is not a criticism of how the Government has managed what has turned up, but perhaps there is a lesson for the future in that some of the issues should have been put into separate bills to enable us to address them more comprehensively.

Kenny MacAskill: There are two specific matters. In amendments 566 and 567, we are trying to clarify that section 89 relates to a particular prosecution. People can appear on a petition warrant but that is not the first indictment. Amendments 566 and 567 seek to clarify that the provisions are concerned with the first indictment.

The second issue concerns disclosure and whether defence statements should be optional. The position could be resolved by the court, which could sit in an administrative capacity to try to work out what information should be passed between the Crown and the defence. However, the purpose of putting some onus on the defence is to give the Crown notice of what it should be looking for. It would be perfectly open to a defence agent simply to say that the defence was one of case denied, in which case the Crown would have to put together what it could. Equally, if the defence said, “It wasn’t them. They weren’t there. It was somebody else,” that would put the Crown on notice that it should provide any relevant information that it found when looking through precognitions or victim statements.

The purpose of introducing disclosure is to try to ensure that we resolve as much as possible and focus in. The courts will still be able to intercede, but the provisions on defence statements are meant to ensure that, before we even get to court, we know the situation so that the defence and the Crown provide appropriate information. The provisions will not force people to make incriminatory statements and the option will exist for the defence simply to say that the case is denied. Equally, if there were something relevant, it would be helpful if the Crown knew what it should be looking for in any victim statements, or whatever—for example, that a man in a red jersey was seen running in a north-westerly direction.

The provisions on disclosure are being introduced in an attempt to draw matters together before a case gets to court.

The Convener: We will shortly revisit the issue of defence statements.

11:30

Amendment 566 agreed to.

Amendment 567 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendments 147 and 148 not moved.

Amendments 568 to 572 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 149 not moved.

Section 89, as amended, agreed to.

After section 89

Amendment 573 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 90—Continuing duty of prosecutor

Amendment 574 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 150 is pre-empted.

Amendment 575 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 151 is pre-empted.

Amendment 576 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 152 is pre-empted.

Amendments 577 and 578 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 90, as amended, agreed to.

The Convener: This is an appropriate point at which to adjourn for a few minutes.

11:34

Meeting suspended.

11:45

On resuming—

Section 91—Exemptions from disclosure

The Convener: If amendment 579 is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 153, on the ground of pre-emption.

Amendment 579 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 91, as amended, agreed to.

Amendment 580 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 92—Redaction of non-disclosable information by prosecutor

The Convener: If amendment 581 is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 154, on the ground of pre-emption.

Amendment 581 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 92, as amended, agreed to.

Amendment 582 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 93—Solemn cases: additional disclosure requirement

Amendment 155 not moved.

Amendment 583 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 94—Defence statements: solemn proceedings

The Convener: Amendment 584, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 585 to 602, 611 and 624.

Kenny MacAskill: This matter was touched on earlier. The amendments will ensure that the prosecutor is well placed, first, to assess all the information of which they are aware and, secondly, to disclose information that the bill requires them to disclose. That ensures, in turn, that the criminal proceedings are fair to the accused.

Amendments 584 to 601 make a number of technical amendments to those provisions that are aimed at simplifying the prosecutor’s duties in response to receiving a defence statement and the interplay between defence statements and special defences, to avoid duplication. They also insert new provisions that are designed to make clear the accused’s responsibilities. The accused must provide an update on his defence statement at least seven days before the trial in summary proceedings. The amendments also require the accused in both solemn and summary proceedings to provide a further update covering the period right up to the trial date and even during the trial, if permitted by the court. The amendments also insert provision requiring the lodging of defence statements in court and the provision of copies to the prosecutor and any co-accused.
Amendments 591 and 596 amend provisions in sections 94 and 95 to expand on the information that the accused must include in his defence statement.

Amendment 602 makes new provisions on the lodging of defence statements in summary proceedings where there has been a material change in circumstances. The provisions are necessary to ensure that the accused has every opportunity to inform the prosecutor of any material change in his defence and that, in turn, the prosecutor has every opportunity to ensure that any additional information that needs to be disclosed as a result is disclosed.

Amendment 611 relates to appellate proceedings and ensures that there are mechanisms for an accused person to seek disclosure of items of information in appeals. That does not detract from the prosecutor’s duties, but we believe that it is an important right for the appellant to have.

Amendment 624 is a minor, consequential amendment.

I move amendment 584.

Robert Brown: I appreciate that defence statements are covered in a number of sections, but it might be appropriate to comment on them now. The minister is aware of the committee’s scepticism on the issue. He will recall that we reported at stage 1:

“the Committee is not currently persuaded that there is merit in the proposal to make defence statements compulsory in solemn cases, as it appears that the timing of their production may risk jeopardising important principles of justice.”

We requested further information on the Scottish Government’s position.

I am reluctant to seek to override the professional view of the Government and its team of advisers on these matters, but I ask the minister to justify further the commitment to the concept of defence statements, which I must say smack of an inappropriate import from English law. Indeed, we took some evidence to that effect, if I recall correctly, from Ian Duguid of the Faculty of Advocates and others. There have been difficulties in English law anyway, but the context is also procedurally different.

I am not totally struck by subsection (4) of proposed new section 70A of the Criminal Justice and Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 as inserted by section 94 of the bill, nor by the Government’s recasting of it in amendment 587, or by amendment 602, which extends it to summary procedure. Not only is there to be a defence statement, there is also to be a supplementary procedure about whether there is to be a second defence statement. Surely subsection (5), which allows the defence to lodge a defence statement at any time, is enough. The more complicated the provisions are, the more scope there is for problems. I dissent from the view, which the minister expressed earlier, that stating the whole thing in statute necessarily makes it clearer. The longer and more complicated it gets, the more likely it is that there will be problems.

Amendments 589 and 590, on the other hand, are sensible changes if there are to be defence statements at all. I am not sure that I see the point of amendments 592 and 596, which seem to replicate in different words new section 70A(6)(a) of the 1995 act and section 95(2)(a) of the bill.

We also have amendment 611, which provides for a second shot at disclosure. Again, there might be a reason for that, but one would have thought that it could be stated in one sentence without the need to repeat the whole thing ad longum. Again, the amendment seems to make things more complicated rather than more straightforward.

The Convener: As Robert Brown says, defence statements are dealt with under a number of headings but it is probably appropriate to have the debate now. I, too, have some reservations.

As the law stands, accused persons or their representatives require under certain circumstances to lodge special defences, such as incrimination of an individual or a number of individuals or an alibi, which is probably the most common special defence that is lodged. Notice must be given to the Crown two weeks before the preliminary diet that the accused intends to lead such a defence. The purpose of the requirement is self-evident. It gives the Crown the opportunity to investigate the special defence and adjust the case accordingly if necessary. We could not have a situation in which a trap could be set for a prosecutor whereby evidence was introduced that incriminated a third party and the Crown had not had an opportunity to have the police investigate the matter.

The requirements under some of the amendments are a little different in that the defence would be asked to lodge with the Crown a defence statement on which the defence case would be based. That approach could have dangers. An accused person has the presumption of innocence and it is for the Crown to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the accused committed the crime that is libelled against him. Nothing in our existing law states that we have to make life easy for the Crown. Indeed, if we make life too easy in some instances, it could be contrary to natural justice. It is a question of balance. This is an unfortunate import from the law south of the border, which at this stage I think we could do without. I will listen to the cabinet secretary's response and other contributions with considerable interest. At this stage, I am a little short of being persuaded that the general measure is appropriate.

Kenny MacAskill: I assure both the convener and Robert Brown that we are not simply bringing in an English import. There are many defences that do not fall within the category of special defences, which are entirely separate from defence statements. If we do not have supplementary defence statements, how do we ensure that the procurator fiscal and the Crown are up to date? A defence position can change during the course of a prosecution. It is not about setting a trap for the defence but about ensuring that the Crown can make available any appropriate information that is relevant. If the Crown does not know what the nature, or intended nature, of the defence is, it has to either trawl through information and make assumptions or simply provide whatever information it thinks is relevant. It is perfectly appropriate and acceptable for the defence to change position and direction, which happens in many instances, but it would be helpful for the conduct of the case if that could be made clear, so that the Crown could review whether any further information might be relevant and, as we have discussed, whether any precognitions and victim statements should be made available.

The point has been made by the Crown, whether through the Lord Advocate or through the Solicitor General, that in many major cases the number of witnesses is huge. Some are there not to deal with substantial matters but to say that they secured perimeters, for example. A prosecutor might originally think that that is not of any relevance. However, if the defence was made at some stage that the area of ground in question was of significance and that something had happened there, it would be appropriate for that information to be made clear—even though, during the Crown's first trawl, the fact of an officer stating his name and age and saying that he roped off a bit of land at a crime locus might appear to be of little relevance or benefit to others. That is why we have to ensure that we have the ability to update information and that we do so throughout.

Lord Coulsfield recommended standard forms for defence statements. He clearly saw some merit in them and some benefit of them in Scotland, although we accept that he did not necessarily see them as mandatory.

Amendments 592 and 593 are intended to ensure that defence statements are as effective and comprehensive as they need to be and, to that end, that they contain all the information that might have a bearing on the prosecutor's duty of disclosure. Amendment 592 will insert a new paragraph into new section 70A(6) of the 1995 act, which will require that the accused sets out in his defence statement

" particulars of the matters of fact on which the accused intends to rely for the purpose of the accused's defence".

At present new section 70A(6)(c) of the 1995 act requires only that the defence statement sets out "any point of law in relation to disclosure".

On further reflection, we considered that the limitation of the phrase "in relation to disclosure" is unnecessary and could lead to the unintended consequence that points of law that do not expressly relate to disclosure but nevertheless have a bearing on what might require to be disclosed are not intimated to the prosecutor. In turn, there could be a risk that information that the prosecutor requires to disclose for the accused to receive a fair trial is, inadvertently, not disclosed. Amendment 593 will give effect to that by removing the words "in relation to disclosure".

Amendment 596 will insert a new paragraph into section 95(2) of the bill, which will require that the accused sets out in his defence statement

" particulars of the matters of fact on which the accused intends to rely for the purposes of the accused's defence".

At present, subsection (2) requires only that they set out "any point of law in relation to disclosure".

On further reflection, we considered that the limitation of that phrase was unnecessary.

The convener is, quite correctly, concerned about the unintended consequences and dangers of defence statements. Prosecutors need some understanding of the nature of the defence if they are to be able to check out matters, but a defence statement should, by its very nature, be helpful to the accused rather than incriminatory. The requirement for a defence statement is not meant to set a trap, which the convener is correctly concerned about. In trials of significant size and complexity that involve huge numbers of witnesses and productions—many of which, quite correctly, might not necessarily be relevant to the issue of who did what—the defence statement will provide some focus so that the Crown can ensure that matters of relevance are provided. The defence statement provides that appropriate assurance.

12:00

The English provisions are much more complicated and detailed. We have not adopted them wholesale, but we have learned from them. As I said, we believe that the issues that were raised in stage 1 will be addressed through the amendments, but we are happy to review matters if the committee requires further details.

If the Crown failed to provide information on the basis not that it sought to deny information to the defence but that it considered the information not to be relevant, justice would not have been provided for. However, if the Crown is to be able to fulfil its duty and obligation to the accused, the Crown needs some information about what the defence is looking for in the victim statements, precognitions and other productions. As I said, the purpose of defence statements is not to incriminate the accused but to ensure that the Crown has sufficient knowledge to be able to provide all the relevant information that will allow the defence to put forward its position.

The Convener: That concludes what has been a reasonably full debate on another difficult matter.

Amendment 584 agreed to.

Amendment 585 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 586 moved—[Kenny MacAskill].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 586 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)
Simpson, Dr Richard (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 6, Against 2, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 586 agreed to.

Amendments 587 to 594 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 156 not moved.

Section 94, as amended, agreed to.

Section 95—Defence statements: summary proceedings

Amendments 595 to 601 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 157 not moved.

Section 95, as amended, agreed to.

After section 95

Amendment 602 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group of amendments is about court rulings on disclosure. Amendment 603, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 604, 605, 615 and 616.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 603 to 605, 615 and 616 will assist accused persons and appellants who disagree with a prosecutor's assessment of the information that is to be disclosed under the new statutory regime. The bill already contains some provision to allow accused persons to challenge the prosecutor’s decision, but our amendments go one step further by allowing accused persons and appellants to apply to the court for a ruling on whether the information in dispute is material. Accused persons will be able to do that only following the prosecutor's determination of a defence statement, and appellants will be able to do that only after they have lodged a statement seeking further disclosure under the provision to be inserted by amendment 611, which was dealt with in the previous grouping. There is no intention to interfere with the principle that the prosecutor is the main decision maker in relation to information that is to be disclosed; our amendments simply provide a mechanism for the prosecutor's assessment to be tested by the court.

I move amendment 603.

Robert Brown: I am sorry to be difficult on this one, but amendments 603 and 604 seem to add yet more verbiage about court rulings on disclosure and a review of them by the court. I would have thought that a ruling by the court and perhaps even a request for a review of new information would be implicit powers of the court in any event. Can the minister confirm that that is the case? The specific appeal provision may be necessary, but the Government seems to require the equivalent of “War and Peace” to state the procedure, which is surely commonplace in other circumstances, and that seems unnecessary. Do we need amendments 605, 615 and 616?

The Convener: I think that that question needs to be addressed, Mr MacAskill. Once again, there is a danger of overcomplicating matters.

Kenny MacAskill: This is a brand new procedure and there are no obvious existing provisions for it. It is about making things clear to the court, providing relevant information to the court and setting the scene for the court.

Amendment 603 will allow an accused to apply to the court for a ruling when information has not been disclosed in response to a defence statement. The application may be made when the information would materially weaken or undermine the evidence that is likely to be led by the prosecutor; when the information would materially strengthen the accused’s case; or when the information would be likely to form part of the evidence to be led by the prosecutor. Amendment 603 sets out the procedure by which the court will appoint a hearing for the purposes of making a ruling on the information that is in dispute.

Amendment 604 will permit an accused person to seek a review when further information that was not available at the time of the ruling has emerged that is considered to have a material bearing on the court’s consideration. Amendment 604 also sets out the procedure by which the court will appoint a hearing for a review for the purposes of a determination of the application. The court may affirm or recall, in full or in part, the ruling in respect of the information that is in dispute.

Amendment 605 will allow the prosecutor or the accused to appeal to the High Court against the ruling made under the provision that is inserted by amendment 603, and the High Court may affirm the ruling or remit the case back to the court of first instance.

Amendments 615 and 616 make the same provision that I have outlined in respect of amendments 603 and 604. However, instead of applying to criminal proceedings in the first instance, they enable an appellant in appellate proceedings to seek a ruling on disclosure in the same way.

If we did not have the procedure that is provided for in amendment 604, the accused would have no remedy through a review. I appreciate the committee’s concerns on a whole array of issues relating to the amendments, but they introduce a new procedure regarding defence statements and it is important that there should be some opportunity for the accused and their agents to seek a review, whether in the first instance or on appeal. That is why we must insert this formal procedure for appeals to the courts and the opportunities for review. It is regrettable that we must do that, but if we want to ensure that the accused has a remedy, we must provide for it and specify what that remedy is.

Amendment 603 agreed to.

Amendments 604 and 605 moved—[Kenny
MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 96—Effect of guilty plea

Amendment 606 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—
and agreed to.

Amendment 158 not moved.

Amendment 607 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—
and agreed to.

Section 96, as amended, agreed to.

After section 96

The Convener: The next group of amendments is on disclosure—application to appellate proceedings. Amendment 608, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 609, 610 and 612 to 614.

Kenny MacAskill: Sections 86 to 90 set out the duties of disclosure on prosecutors and investigating agencies in proceedings at first instance, before a verdict has been reached in a case.

We are conscious that these amendments add new provisions that are technical and may appear rather complex in nature. We believe that they are necessary, though, to take into account the most up-to-date and authoritative jurisprudence of the higher courts on the crucial question of what the prosecutor requires to disclose to persons to whom criminal proceedings relate before those proceedings can be fair and compliant with the European convention on human rights.

The case of McDonald v HMA, to which we referred earlier, affirmed that the duty of disclosure is a continuing one, which continues even after an accused person is convicted. It made clear that the nature of the duty after conviction and during appeals is different from the duty at first instance.
Lord Coulshfield did not envisage, and could not have envisaged, that when he was carrying out his review. In light of that decision, we are seeking to add in provisions to reflect those differences in the duty.

The purpose of the amendments is to define the nature of the duty after the conclusion of the proceedings and in any appellate proceedings that follow any first instance proceedings. The amendments will ensure that the prosecutor’s duty of disclosure is laid out in statute for all criminal proceedings, not only those at first instance, and including after the proceedings have come to an end. Without them, there would be an incomplete picture in statute as to the prosecutor’s obligations.

The provisions to be inserted by amendments
612 to 614 make it clear that there is no requirement on the prosecutor to proactively review the information he holds, as to do so would place an undue burden on prosecutors.

We appreciate that that adds complexity to the scheme for disclosure of evidence, but that complexity is unavoidable if we are to ensure that prosecutors have certainty as to their duties and convicted persons and appellants have certainty and comfort that their rights to disclosure will continue to be met by prosecutors throughout the proceedings relating to them, and beyond.
As the Solicitor General said in his evidence to members at stage 1,

“You need to know with which rules you must comply in order to comply with disclosure obligations.” – [Official Report, Justice Committee, 9 June 2009; c 2072.]

I move amendment 608.

Robert Brown: Why do the amendments in this section that relate to appellate proceedings and things of that kind not simply say something like, “The duty of disclosure applies on appeal as it does at first instance and the provisions of this part apply to appellate proceedings with any necessary modifications,” and set out any kind of exception? The minister touched on reasons why the detail of the need to review the whole thing again did not apply on appeal. I did not entirely catch the point there. There may be exceptions to it. Why do we not have just a general statement of principle, rather than going through the whole thing all over again. To my mind, that adds complexity to the whole arrangements.

Kenny MacAskill: Mr Brown makes a valid point. The reason is that the McDonald v HMA case made it clear that the proceedings were different and distinct. Therefore, I think that it is necessary that we differentiate between what happens at first instance and what happens in appellate matters. It is not simply a matter of replicating the duty, because there are differences.

Amendment 608 agreed to.

Amendments 609 to 616 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 97—Means of disclosure

Amendment 617 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 159 not moved.

12:15

The Convener: The next group of amendments is on the means of disclosure. Amendment 618, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 618 seeks to clarify and simplify the bill’s provision on the treatment of witness statements in the context of the prosecutor’s duty of disclosure. It goes hand in hand with amendments 553 and 555, which remove the existing provision on the issue, which was set out in section 85.

Amendment 618 is a technical amendment and our policy has not changed. The intention is still to conform to Lord Coulsfield’s recommendations that witness statements, as a class of document, should have to be disclosed only in solemn proceedings in respect of those witnesses whom the prosecutor intends to lead in evidence.

Our position has also not changed on summary proceedings. In practice, prosecutors will continue to provide the accused with a summary of the evidence for and against him, but they will not be under a duty to disclose the statements, as a class of documents, of any witnesses regardless of whether they intend to lead the witness in evidence. However, comments that we have received about the complexity of the provisions have made us think that the provision should be moved and adjusted, and amendment 618 seeks to do that.

I move amendment 618.

Amendment 618 agreed.

Section 97, as amended, agreed to.

Section 98—Confidentiality of disclosed information

The Convener: Amendment 619, in the name of the minister, has already been debated with amendment 566. I point out, however, that amendment 619 and amendment 160, which follows, are direct alternatives.

Amendment 619 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 160 not moved.

The Convener: We turn now to the confidentiality of disclosed information, and disclosure to third parties. Amendment 620, in the cabinet secretary’s name, is grouped with amendments 621 to 623 and 692.

Kenny MacAskill: Section 98 makes provision on the confidentiality of disclosed information, and section 99 creates an offence when a person knowingly uses or discloses information in contravention of section 98.

Amendment 620 makes it clear that sections 98 and 99 apply to persons who have received disclosed information in an unauthorised manner, and it clarifies that the confidentiality provisions do not apply to information that is in the public domain at the time of its use or disclosure.

Section 98 permits the accused to use information that has been disclosed to him for the preparation and presentation of an appeal. Amendment 621 will ensure that that includes petitions to the nobile officium and proceedings in the European Court of Human Rights.

Amendment 622 seeks to remove section 100 as, on reflection, we do not think that it is necessary to include specific provisions on the accused being able to apply to the court for an order allowing him to disclose information to a third party. There are sufficient existing mechanisms for an accused person to seek information through requests under data protection and freedom of information legislation, and also to seek the recovery of information and documents in civil court proceedings. Amendments 623 and 692 are consequential amendments that arise from amendment 622.

I move amendment 620.

Amendment 620 agreed to.

Amendment 621 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 98, as amended, agreed to.

Section 99 agreed to.

Section 100—Order enabling disclosure to third party

Amendment 161 not moved.

Amendment 622 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 101—Contravention of order under section 100

Amendment 623 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 102—Application for non-disclosure order

The Convener: Amendment 624, in the name of the cabinet secretary, has already been debated with amendment 584. Once again, I point out that amendment 624 and amendment 162, which follows, are direct alternatives.

Amendment 624 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 162 not moved.

The Convener: Amendment 625, in the minister’s name, is grouped with amendments 626 to 652, 666, 669 to 671, 673, 675 to 678, 680, 686 and 687.

Kenny MacAskill: Sections 102 to 106 implement Lord Coulsfield’s recommendation that legislation should provide for a system of public interest immunity hearings in Scotland. We are conscious of reservations that were expressed at stage 1 about the complexity of the scheme for primary legislation and we have sympathy with those views. However, as we said in our response to the stage 1 report, it is vital that the bill sets out the procedure and considerations that are to be taken into account in such decisions, so that sufficient judicial safeguards are in place to ensure that information is not withheld on the ground of public interest unless doing so is strictly necessary.

The scheme as a whole must be compatible with the accused’s rights under the European convention on human rights. Leaving important elements of it to subordinate legislation might mean that ECHR compatibility was achieved only later, when rules were made. We need to be able to demonstrate to Parliament here and now that the scheme as a whole is compatible.

We have looked again at the provisions and considered whether scope exists to fillet out parts of them to be dealt with in subordinate legislation. We have concluded that it would be inappropriate to extract elements of the scheme and put them in subordinate legislation. Instead, we have lodged several amendments to simplify some of the more complex provisions in the scheme and to make clearer the tests that the court is to apply.

We have also responded to the Sheriffs Association’s concern at the apparent anomaly that the proposed test for non-notification orders appears to be lower than that for exclusion orders.

I move amendment 625.

Amendment 625 agreed to.

The Convener: If amendment 626 is agreed to, amendment 163 will be pre-empted.

Amendment 626 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 102, as amended, agreed to.

Section 103—Application for non-notification order or exclusion order

Amendments 627 to 635 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 103, as amended, agreed to.

Section 104—Application for non-notification order and exclusion order

Amendments 636 to 638 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 104, as amended, agreed to.

Section 105—Application for exclusion order

Amendments 639 to 643 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 105, as amended, agreed to.

Section 106—Application for non-disclosure order: determination

Amendments 644 and 645 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.
The Convener: Amendments 646 and 164 are direct alternatives.

Amendment 646 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 164 not moved.

Amendments 647 to 652 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 106, as amended, agreed to.

After section 106

The Convener: Amendment 653, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 654 to 656, 679 and 681 to 685.

Kenny MacAskill: Members will recall that Lord Coulsfield recommended that legislation should provide for a system of public interest immunity hearings in Scotland, and provisions for that are included in the bill. The amendments in this group are designed to create a parallel system to enable the secretary of state to apply for similar orders in the public interest.

The purpose of amendments 653 to 656, 679 and 681 to 685 is to establish a system to enable applications to be made to the court by a UK Government minister for orders prohibiting the disclosure of information that the prosecutor is otherwise required to disclose, and for other orders ancillary to such orders where, if the information were to be disclosed, there would be a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest.

The scheme that is set out in our amendments broadly mirrors the scheme that is set out in sections 102 to 106, which enables such applications to be made by the prosecutor. The amendments recognise that public interest issues might arise in criminal proceedings in which secretaries of state might have an interest.

The new scheme might use different terminology to the scheme that is set out in sections 102 to 106, but the concepts and procedures are broadly the same. A section 106 order corresponds to an order preventing or restricting disclosure, an exclusion order corresponds to a non-attendance order and a non-notification order corresponds to a restricted notification order.

The key to that is that, despite any differences in terminology, in considering the applications and in any review by the court of its decisions in relation to those applications, the court will broadly do the same thing. It will always closely consider disclosure versus non-disclosure, balancing the competing interests of the injury to the public interest imperative on the one side with the private individual’s interests and their right to receive a fair trial on the other.

Amendments 679 and 681 to 685 repeat and mirror those further aspects that already exist in the domestic regime.

I move amendment 653.

Amendment 653 agreed to.

Amendments 654 to 656 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 107—Special counsel

The Convener: Amendment 657, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 658 to 661, 668, 672 and 674.

Kenny MacAskill: Sections 102 to 106 establish a scheme to enable the court, on the application of the prosecutor, to determine whether information that the prosecutor would otherwise be required to disclose should be withheld on public interest grounds. Amendments 653 to 685 seek to establish a similar scheme to enable applications to be made by the secretary of state.

Section 107 makes provision regarding the appointment of special counsel by the court and their duties in those hearings. Amendment 657 is consequential on amendments 653 to 685 and extends section 107 to cover applications by the secretary of state for orders to prevent or restrict disclosure in the public interest.

Amendment 658 is a technical amendment that is designed to clarify that the special counsel role is limited to the determination of the applications and does not apply to the whole criminal trial proceedings.

Amendment 659 seeks to ensure that the prosecutor or, as the case may be, the secretary of state and, in certain circumstances, the accused are able to make representation to the court before the court decides whether to appoint special counsel. It also makes provision for appeals against the decision of the court not to appoint special counsel. Amendment 659 also gives the prosecutor and secretary of state the power to appeal against a decision not to appoint special counsel and gives the accused a similar power to appeal in any case other than a non-notification or restricted notification case.

Amendment 660 provides that only solicitors or advocates may be appointed as special counsel.

Amendment 661 makes provision to regulate the role and functions of special counsel and the interaction between the accused and special counsel. It will establish a duty on special counsel to act in the best interests of the accused in so far as to ensure that the accused receives a fair trial. It also specifies the rules that special counsel must follow in respect of information to which they have access and how they will interact with the accused.

Amendments 668, 672 and 674 will enable special counsel to seek a review of the decision of the court in respect of a section 106 order and will extend the powers that are available to the court in reviews that are carried out under section 111 to reviews by special counsel.

I move amendment 657.

12:30

Robert Brown: I think that the provisions on special counsel are necessary in rare cases, but I query how section 107 and the new section that is proposed by amendment 660 would operate in practice. The implication seems to be that any solicitor or advocate may be appointed as special counsel, but, given that we are talking about cases that might involve terrorists or people with a background in organised crime, I assume that anyone who acts as special counsel will have to have some experience or special expertise beyond the normal. Will the court keep a list of such people? Who will suggest such people? Could the defence do so? On what basis will the matter be decided by the court? In short, how will people be chosen to act as special counsel?

The Convener: Mr MacAskill will deal with that in his summing up.

Kenny MacAskill: There will be a list, but the details of how it will be provided are still being worked out.

We must take those points on board to ensure that there is a fair balance and that not just anyone is appointed as special counsel. Those matters are being worked out and we will keep the member and the committee informed.

Amendment 657 agreed to.

Amendments 658 and 659 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 107, as amended, agreed to.

After section 107

Amendments 660 and 661 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 662, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 663 to 665 and 667.

Kenny MacAskill: Sections 108, 109 and 110 enable appeals to be brought in relation to section 106 orders, exclusion orders and non-notification orders. Amendments 663, 664 and 665 will remove those sections from the bill, and amendment 662 will insert, in their place, a new, expanded section on appeals, which will give the prosecutor, the accused, the secretary of state and special counsel appropriate rights of appeal in relation to the various orders that can be made under the bill. In addition, amendment 662 specifies how appeals will be dealt with under the revised scheme.

Amendment 667 seeks to simplify section 111.

I move amendment 662.

Amendment 662 agreed to.

Section 108—Appeal by prosecutor against refusal of application for order

Amendment 663 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 109—Appeal by accused against making of exclusion order or non-disclosure order

Amendment 664 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 110—Appeal by special counsel

Amendment 665 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 111—Review of grant of non-disclosure order

Amendment 666 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: I point out that if amendment 667 is agreed to, I will not be able to call amendment 165 on the ground of pre-emption.

Amendment 667 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Sections 111, as amended, agreed to.

After section 111

Amendment 679 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 112—Review by court of non-disclosure order

Amendments 680 to 685 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 112, as amended, agreed to.

Section 113—Applications and reviews: general provisions
Amendments 686 and 687 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 113, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 114 and 115 agreed to.

After section 115

The Convener: Amendment 688, in the name of the minister, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 688 introduces a new section into the bill that ensures that the disclosure provisions in the bill will displace the current common law rules on disclosure, but only to the extent that they are replaced by or are inconsistent with the bill’s provisions. The new section also clarifies the interaction between the scheme that is proposed in our amendments for court rulings on materiality and existing common law remedies that allow persons to recover documents. That is to ensure that, in making applications to the court, whether under the bill or at common law, the accused does not get a second bite at the cherry by being able to go back to the court for a ruling on broadly the same grounds. That is necessary to avoid delays to cases and duplication of work by our courts.

I move amendment 688.

Amendment 688 agreed to.

Section 116—Interpretation of Part 6

Amendment 689 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: I call amendment 690, in the name of the minister. If amendment 690 is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 166, on the ground of pre-emption.

Amendment 690 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 691 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 692 moved—[Kenny MacAskill].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 116 be agreed to. Are we agreed? I am sorry. There is a typo in the brief. For the record, the question is, that amendment 692 be agreed to.

Amendment 692 agreed to.

The Convener: We turn to section 117—[Interruption.] Unfortunately, there is another typo in the brief. First, I must put the question on section 116.

Section 116, as amended, agreed to.
Indeed, there might be dangers in adding on a volitional part to the defence as doing so might give rise to narrow interpretations of the scope of the appreciation element."

In its discussion paper, the Scottish Law Commission said that it was inclined to adopt the position that the test for defence should not contain a volitional element. However, it went on to say:

"we have not reached a concluded view".

I am most concerned about the latter point.

The SLC also said that, although most of its consultees were divided on the question, most agreed that the wider cognitive criterion of appreciation would cover any relevant volitional failing. About half of the consultees who responded on the issue accepted that there was no need for any volitional element and two consultees gave clear support for it. I suppose that it is of significance that none of the consultees could provide any example of an instance in which a person might fail the test for the defence on the appreciation criterion but satisfy it purely on the volitional element.

I seek clear reassurance that people who require a special defence are indeed covered by that defence, as it is not in the interests of justice for people wrongly not to be subject to the measures of compulsion that are available under the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003. To put it in blunt terms, it is not in anybody's interests for those who have a mental disorder and who should be cared for by the mental health system to end up inadvertently in prison.

I move amendment 24.

12:45

Dr Simpson: I thank Angela Constance for raising this issue, which is clearly difficult. The question of insight as opposed to compulsion is difficult. I was not involved in the committee’s consideration of the bill at stage 1, but I can fully understand the consultees’ difficulty in reaching a conclusion on the issue. I will be interested to hear whether the cabinet secretary can provide clarification, because it is an extremely difficult issue on which to reach a conclusion.

The Convener: Yes, this is a difficult issue—we seem to be running into a lot of them this morning. In speaking to amendment 24, Angela Constance demonstrated in a very sensitive manner the knowledge that she acquired in her previous occupation. The committee wants to get this right, and seeks the appropriate reassurance from the cabinet secretary. I do not think that the concerns on the issue are restricted to Ms Constance.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 167 is a minor technical amendment that is aimed at improving the readability of section 117. Amendment 195 is a minor technical amendment that will help to tidy the statute book of redundant provisions.

Section 117 introduces a new statutory defence to replace the common-law defence of insanity. This new statutory test provides for a special defence in respect of persons who lack criminal responsibility by reason of mental disorder at the time of the commission of the offence with which they are charged. There are two elements to the test, both of which must be met for the test to be met. The first element is the presence of a mental disorder suffered by the accused at the time of the conduct constituting the offence. The second element is that, for the defence to be available, the mental disorder must have a specific effect on the accused: the inability of the accused to appreciate either the nature or wrongfulness of the conduct constituting the offence.

Amendment 24 seeks to alter the test so that a person could also claim the special defence when the effect of their mental disorder was such that they were unable to determine or control their conduct despite being able to appreciate the nature or wrongfulness of it. That would likely be a departure from the current common-law defence of insanity and would certainly be a departure from the test recommended by the Scottish Law Commission in its 2002 report, upon which the provisions in sections 117 to 120 are based.

During its careful consideration of the proposed test, the Scottish Law Commission looked closely at whether a volitional element of the sort proposed by amendment 24 should feature as an explicit part of the test, and thought that it should not. It may be helpful if I quote from the Scottish Law Commission’s considerations as they relate to the issues raised by amendment 24. Paragraph 2.53 of the SLC’s 2002 report states:

"Volitional issues pose major practical questions. How can the law distinguish between someone who could have desisted from criminal conduct but chose not to desist, and someone who could do no other than commit the act? As this question is often put, what is the difference between an irresistible impulse and resisible, but not-resisted, impulse? This issue can only be resolved by looking to the reasons for the person’s acting as they did, but this approach leads back to considerations of what are essentially cognitive matters."

The report goes on to say:

"The use of an expanded cognitive base for the test could cover all the cases where a person should not be found criminally responsible. Consider the example of a woman who feels she is ‘driven’ to killing her children to save them from her own bad parenting. This case essentially involves a cognitive failing (based on the depression which gives rise to her perception of inadequacy as a parent) rather than a purely volitional one. The question becomes one of trying to identify any case where a person who committed criminal conduct would be found criminally responsible on the appreciation test but would be treated as lacking criminal responsibility in respect of a volitional incapacity."

In response to the Scottish Law Commission’s consultation, the majority of consultees considered the question and offered the view that the wider cognitive criterion of appreciation would cover any relevant volitional failing. None of the consultees could provide an example in which a person might fail the test for the special defence on the appreciation criterion, but satisfy it purely on a volitional one.

The Scottish Law Commission concluded that:

"We take the view that if the 'appreciation' criterion is to be understood in a wide sense, as we argue that it should, then there is no need for any volitional element. Indeed, there might be dangers in adding on a volitional part to the defence as doing so might give rise to narrow interpretations of the scope of the appreciation element."

We agree with the Scottish Law Commission’s reasoning on the framing of the test and we do not support amendment 24.

Angela Constance: Thank you. I think that I am satisfied with the cabinet secretary’s answer, particularly his clear statement that, if it is the view that the "appreciation' criterion is to be understood in a wide sense as we argue that it should, then there is no need for any volitional element."

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

7th Marshalled List of Amendments for Stage 2

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

Sections 1 to 3  Schedule 1
Sections 4 to 18  Schedule 2
Sections 19 to 66  Schedule 3
Sections 67 to 139  Schedule 4
Sections 140 to 145  Schedule 5
Sections 146 to 148  Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 121

Kenny MacAskill

168 In section 121, page 123, leave out lines 2 and 3 and insert—

<(3A) No order may be made under subsection (1) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>

Section 122

Kenny MacAskill

169 In section 122, page 125, line 1, leave out from <5,> to <29> in line 2 and insert <5 and 11>

Section 123

Robert Brown

385 Leave out section 123

After section 124

Kenny MacAskill

170 After section 124, insert—

<Licensing of street trading: food hygiene certificates>

(1) Section 39 of the 1982 Act (street traders’ licences) is amended as follows.
(2) In subsection (4), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument specify”.

(3) After subsection (4), insert—

“(5) An order under subsection (4) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.

(6) A statutory instrument containing an order made under subsection (4) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.”.

Section 125

Kenny MacAskill
171 In section 125, page 128, line 24, at beginning insert <In>

Kenny MacAskill
172 In section 125, page 128, line 24, leave out from <is> to <In> in line 26 and insert <, in>

Cathie Craigie
2 In section 125, page 128, line 25, leave out subsection (2)

Cathie Craigie
3 In section 125, page 128, line 26, leave out subsection (3)

Cathie Craigie
Supported by: Robert Brown
4 Leave out section 125

After section 127

Sandra White
516 After section 127, insert—

<Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues>

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 41(2) (definition of place of public entertainment), after paragraph (aa) insert—

“(ab) adult entertainment venues (as defined in section 45A) in relation to which Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of that section) have effect, while being used as such;”.

(3) The title of Part 3 becomes “Control of sex shops and adult entertainment venues”.

(4) After section 45 insert—
Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues

(1) A local authority may resolve that Schedule 2, as modified for the purposes of this section, is to have effect in their area in relation to adult entertainment venues; and, if they do so resolve, that Schedule (as so modified) has effect from the day specified in the resolution.

(2) The day referred to in subsection (1) must not be before the expiry of the period of one month beginning with the day on which the resolution is passed.

(3) A local authority must, not later than 28 days before the day referred to in subsection (1), publish notice that they have passed a resolution under this section in a newspaper circulating in their area.

(4) The notice is to state the general effect of Schedule 2, as modified for the purposes of this section.

(5) For the purposes of this section, Schedule 2 is modified as follows—

   (a) in paragraph 1, sub-paragraphs (b)(ii) (and the word “or” immediately preceding it) and (c) are omitted;

   (b) for paragraph 2 substitute—

   “In this Schedule, “adult entertainment venue” has the same meaning as in section 45A.”;

   (c) in paragraph 9—

   (i) after sub-paragraph (5)(c) insert—

   “(ca) where it is intended to sell alcohol in the adult entertainment venue, an application for the grant, renewal or transfer of a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16) relating to that venue has been refused;”; and

   (ii) after sub-paragraph (6) insert—

   “(6A) A local authority may refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a licence despite the fact that a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16) is in effect in relation to the adult entertainment venue.”;

   (d) in paragraph 25, for “section 45” in each place where those words occur, substitute “section 45A”; and

   (e) for “sex shop”, in each place where those words occur, substitute “adult entertainment venue”.

(6) In this section, “adult entertainment venue” means any premises, vehicle, vessel or stall used for a business which consists to a significant degree of providing relevant entertainment before a live audience; and, for the purposes of that definition—

   “audience” includes an audience of one;

   “display of nudity” means—

   (a) in the case of a woman, exposure of her breasts, nipples, pubic area, genitals or anus;

   (b) in the case of a man, exposure of his pubic area, genitals or anus;

   “relevant entertainment” means—
(a) any live performance; or
(b) any live display of nudity,

which is of such a nature that, ignoring financial gain, it must reasonably be assumed to be provided solely or principally for the purpose of sexually stimulating any member of the audience (whether by verbal or other means).”>

Section 128

Kenny MacAskill

173 In section 128, page 129, line 25, at end insert—

< ( ) in paragraph 2(3)(b), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”,
( ) in paragraph 2(8)(a), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”,>

Section 129

Kenny MacAskill

174 Leave out section 129

After section 130

Bill Aitken

460 After section 130, insert—

<Premises licence applications: crime prevention objective

In section 23(5) of the 2005 Act (grounds for refusal of premises licence application), after paragraph (b), insert—

“(ba) that the appropriate chief constable has made a recommendation under section 21(5) that the application be refused,”.>

After section 131

Kenny MacAskill

175 After section 131, insert—

<Reviews of premises licences: notification of determinations

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.
(2) After section 39 (Licensing Board’s powers on review), insert—

“39A Notification of determinations

(1) Where a Licensing Board, at a review hearing—

(a) decides to take one of the steps mentioned in section 39(2), or
(b) decides not to take one of those steps,
the Board must give notice of the decision to each of the persons mentioned in subsection (2).

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—
(a) the holder of the premises licence, and
(b) where the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application, the applicant.

(3) Where subsection (1)(a) applies, the holder of the premises licence may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(4) Where—
(a) subsection (1)(a) or (b) applies, and
(b) the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application,
the applicant may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(5) Where the clerk of a Board receives a notice under subsection (3) or (4), the Board must issue a statement of the reasons for the decision to—
(a) the person giving the notice, and
(b) any other person to whom the Board gave notice under subsection (1).

(6) A statement of reasons under subsection (5) must be issued—
(a) by such time, and
(b) in such form and manner,
as may be prescribed.”.

After section 132

George Foulkes

542 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence applications: disability compliance statements

In section 20 of the 2005 Act (application for premises licence), after subsection (4)(f), insert—

“(fa) a statement of compliance with Part 3 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, including information as to where reasonable adjustments have been or will be made to remove barriers to access for disabled people.”.

Bill Aitken

547 After section 132, insert—
<Premises licence: minor variations>
(1) Section 29(6) of the 2005 Act (definition of minor variations to premises licence) is amended as follows.

(2) In paragraph (a), insert at the end “or if the variation relates only to parts of the premises to which the public does not have access”.

(3) After paragraph (c) insert—
“(ca) any reduction in the capacity of the premises,
   (cb) any change in the name by which the business carried on in the premises is to be known or under which it trades,
   (cc) any variation of the layout plan or operating plan required by virtue of any enactment relating to planning, building control, food safety or fire safety.”.

Robert Brown

550 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence: transfer on application of person other than licence holder>
(1) Section 34 (transfer on application of person other than licence holder) of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (3)—
   (a) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (d) is repealed, and
   (b) after that paragraph insert “, and
   “(e) for any other reason, the business that was (prior to the event in question) carried on in the licensed premises to which the licence relates ceases to be carried on in those premises.”.

(3) In subsection (4), insert at the beginning “Subject to subsection (4A),”.

(4) After that subsection insert—
“(4A) In the case of an application made following the event specified in subsection (3)(e)—
   (a) subsection (8) of section 33 applies as if, after the words “the Board must” there were inserted “, if satisfied in all the circumstances that it is reasonable to do so,”, and
   (b) subsection (10)(b) of that section applies as if, after the words “if not so satisfied,” there were inserted “but otherwise satisfied that in all the circumstances it is reasonable to do so.”.

Kenny MacAskill

693 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licences: connected persons and interested parties>
(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 40 insert—
“Connected persons and interested parties

40A Connected persons and interested parties: licence holder’s duty to notify changes

(1) A premises licence holder must, not later than one month after a person becomes or ceases to be—
   (a) a connected person in relation to the licence holder, or
   (b) an interested party in relation to the licensed premises,
   give the appropriate Licensing Board notice of that fact.

(2) A notice under subsection (1) that a person has become a connected person or an interested party must specify—
   (a) the name and address of the person, and
   (b) if the person is an individual, the person’s date of birth.

(3) Where a Licensing Board receives a notice under subsection (1), the Board must give a copy of the notice to the appropriate chief constable.

(4) A premises licence holder who fails, without reasonable excuse, to comply with subsection (1) commits an offence.

(5) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (4) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 2 on the standard scale.”.

(3) In section 48 (notification of change of name or address)—
   (a) in subsection (1)—
      (i) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and
      (ii) after paragraph (b) insert “, or
   (c) the name or address of any person who is—
      (i) a connected person in relation to the licence holder, or
      (ii) an interested party in relation to the licensed premises,”,
   (b) after subsection (2) insert—
      “(2A) Where a Licensing Board receives a notice under subsection (1), the Board must give a copy of the notice to the appropriate chief constable.”.

(4) In section 147 (interpretation), after subsection (4) insert—
      “(5) For the purposes of this Act, a person is an interested party in relation to licensed premises if the person is not the holder of the premises licence nor the premises manager in respect of the premises but—
      (a) has an interest in the premises as an owner or tenant, or
      (b) has management and control over the premises or the business carried on on the premises.”.

(5) In section 148 (index of defined expressions), in the table, insert at the appropriate place—
      “interested party section 147(5).”
Robert Brown

543 After section 132, insert—

<Provisional premises licences>

(1) Section 45 (provisional premises licence) of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (6), for “2 years” substitute “5 years”.

(3) In subsection (8), paragraph (b) and the word “and” immediately preceding it are repealed.

(4) In subsection (10), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—

“(a) for subsection (2) there were substituted—

“(2) An application under subsection (1) must be accompanied by—

(a) a plan sufficient to identify the site of the subject premises and give a general indication of their size,

(b) a document giving a general indication of—

(i) the anticipated capacity of the premises,

(ii) the hours during which it is proposed to serve alcohol on the premises,

(iii) the extent to which it is proposed to allow children or young persons entry to the premises, and

(c) the certificate required by section 50(2).”, and

(b) subsections (4) and (5) were omitted.”.

(5) After subsection (10) insert—

“(10A) Sections 21 to 32 have effect in relation to any provisional premises licence application and to any provisional premises licence as if references to—

(a) the operating plan were read as references to the document required under section 20(2)(b) (as substituted by subsection (10)(a)), and

(b) the layout plan were read as references to the plan required under section 20(2)(a) (as so substituted).”.

Kenny MacAskill

176 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence applications: food hygiene certificates>

(1) Section 50 of the 2005 Act (certificates as to planning, building standards and food hygiene) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (7), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may, by order, specify.”.

(3) After subsection (7), insert—

“(7A) An order under subsection (7) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.”.

(4) In subsection (8)(c), for “the 1990 Act” substitute “section 5 of the Food Safety Act 1990 (c.16)”.

>
After section 133

Bill Aitken

After section 133, insert—

<Consumption of alcohol on licensed premises outwith licensed hours

In section 63(2) of the 2005 Act (exceptions to offence of allowing sale, consumption etc. of alcohol outwith licensed hours), after paragraph (f) insert—

“(g) allow alcohol to be consumed on licensed premises at any time within 45 minutes of the end of any period of licensed hours by—

(i) the premises licence holder,

(ii) the premises manager, or

(iii) any person aged 18 or over who, at the end of that period of licensed hours, was working on the premises.”.>

Section 134

Kenny MacAskill

In section 134, page 134, line 17, leave out from <after> to end of line 22 and insert <in sub-paragraph (4), after “Board” in the second place where it appears insert “or to a member of staff provided under paragraph 8(1)(b)”.>

After section 134

Kenny MacAskill

After section 134, insert—

<Extended hours applications: notification period

(1) Section 69 of the 2005 Act (notification of extended hours application) is amended as follows.

(2) After subsection (3), add—

“(4) Subsections (5) and (6) apply where the Licensing Board is satisfied that the application requires to be dealt with quickly.

(5) Subsections (2) and (3) have effect in relation to the application as if the references to the period of 10 days were references to such shorter period of not less than 24 hours as the Board may determine.

(6) Subsection (3) has effect in relation to the application as if for the word “must” there were substituted “may”.”.>

Section 136

Kenny MacAskill

In section 136, page 135, line 3, at end insert—

<“(ba) the notice does not include a recommendation under section 73(4),>
Kenny MacAskill

In section 136, page 135, leave out lines 22 to 27 and insert—

(a) hold a hearing for the purposes of considering and determining the application, and

(b) after having regard to the circumstances in which the personal licence previously held expired or, as the case may be, was surrendered—

(i) refuse the application, or

(ii) grant the application.”.>

After section 136

James Kelly

After section 136, insert—

<24 hour licences: refusal, revocation etc. on advice or recommendation of Local Licensing Forum

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 64 (24 hour licences to be granted only in exceptional circumstances)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “Subsection (2) applies” substitute “Subsections (2) to (4) apply”,

(b) in subsection (2), at the end insert “(the granting of any such application being referred to in this section and section 64A as “24 hour licensing”)”, and

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(3) In reaching a decision under subsection (2), the Licensing Board must have regard to any advice given or recommendations made by the Local Licensing Forum for the Board’s area that allowing 24 hour licensing in the area in which the subject premises are situated would be inappropriate or undesirable.

(4) Where the Local Licensing Forum has not, at the time the application is made, given any advice or made any recommendations about the appropriateness or desirability of allowing 24 hour licensing, the Licensing Board may invite it to do so before reaching a decision under subsection (2).”.

(3) After that section insert—

“64A Revocation etc. of 24 hour licence on advice or recommendation of Local Licensing Forum

(1) This section applies where—

(a) a Licensing Board has granted, under section 64, an application for 24 hour licensing, and

(b) the Local Licensing Forum for the Board’s area subsequently gives advice or makes recommendations to the Board to the effect that 24 hour licensing in the area in which the subject premises are situated is inappropriate or undesirable.

(2) The Licensing Board—
(a) must have regard to the advice or recommendations of the Local Licensing Forum, and
(b) may either revoke the licence or vary it so as to restrict the licensed hours during which alcohol may be sold on the premises to a continuous period of less than 24 hours.”;

After section 137

Kenny MacAskill

179 After section 137, insert—

<Appeals

In section 131(2) of the 2005 Act (appeals), the words “by way of stated case, at the instance of the appellant,” are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

694 After section 137, insert—

<Liability for offences

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In each of the following provisions, the word “knowingly” is repealed—

(a) section 1(3)(b),
(b) section 103(1),
(c) section 106(2),
(d) section 107(1),
(e) section 118(1),
(f) section 120(2) and (3),
(g) section 121(1),
(h) section 127(4), and
(i) section 128(5).

(3) After section 141 (offences by bodies corporate etc.) insert—

“141A Defence of due diligence for certain offences

(1) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence to which this section applies to prove that the person—

(a) did not know that the offence was being committed, and
(b) exercised all due diligence to prevent the offence being committed.

(2) This section applies to an offence under any of the following provisions of this Act—

section 1(3)(b),
section 103(1),
section 106(2),
section 107(1),
section 118(1),
section 120(2) or (3),
section 121(1),
section 127(4),
section 128(5).

141B Vicarious liability of premises licence holders and interested parties

(1) Subsection (2) applies where, on or in relation to any licensed premises, a person commits an offence to which this section applies while acting as the employee or agent of—

   (a) the holder of the premises licence, or
   (b) an interested party.

(2) The holder of the premises licence or, as the case may be, the interested party is also guilty of the offence and liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(3) It is a defence for a holder of a premises licence or an interested party charged with an offence to which this section applies by virtue of subsection (2) to prove that the holder of the licence or, as the case may be, the interested party—

   (a) did not know that the offence was being committed by the employee or agent, and
   (b) exercised all due diligence to prevent the offence being committed.

(4) Proceedings may be taken against the holder of the premises licence or the interested party in respect of the offence whether or not proceedings are also taken against the employee or agent who committed the offence.

(5) This section applies to an offence under any of the following provisions of this Act—

   section 1(3),
   section 15(5),
   section 63(1),
   section 97(7),
   section 102(1),
   section 103(1),
   section 106(2),
   section 107(1),
   section 108(2) or (3),
   section 113(1),
   section 114,
   section 115(2),
section 118(1),
section 119(1),
section 120(2),
section 121(1),
section 138(5).”.

After section 138

Kenny MacAskill

699 After section 138, insert—

< Powers of Licensing Standards Officers

(1) Section 15 of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) The section title becomes “Powers of entry, inspection and seizure”.

(3) In subsection (2)—

(a) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (b) is repealed, and

(b) after that paragraph insert—

“(c) power to take copies of, or of an entry in, any document found on the premises, and

(d) power to seize and remove any substances, articles or documents found on the premises.”.

(4) In subsection (3)—

(a) for “either” substitute “any”, and

(b) in paragraph (b), after “information” insert “or explanation”.

(5) After subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) Subsection (3)(c) includes power to require any document which is stored in electronic form and which is accessible from the premises to be produced in a form—

(a) in which it is legible, and

(b) in which it can be removed from the premises.

(4B) Nothing in subsection (3) requires a person to produce any document if the person would be entitled to refuse to produce that document in any proceedings in any court on the grounds of confidentiality of communications.

(4C) Nothing in subsection (3) requires a person to provide any information or explanation or produce any document if to do so would incriminate that person or that person’s spouse or civil partner.”.

(6) After subsection (6) insert—

“(7) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision about the procedure to be followed in the exercise of a power under this section.

(8) Where a Licensing Standards Officer seizes any substance, article or document under subsection (2)(d), the Officer must leave on the premises a notice—
(a) stating what was seized, and
(b) explaining why it was seized.

(9) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision about the treatment of substances, articles or documents seized under subsection (2)(d).

(10) Regulations under subsection (9) may, in particular, make provision—
(a) about the retention, use, return, disposal or destruction of anything seized,
(b) about compensation for anything seized.”.

Schedule 4

Kenny MacAskill
180 In schedule 4, page 149, line 11, leave out <22(2) or>

Kenny MacAskill
181 In schedule 4, page 150, leave out lines 18 to 21

Section 140

Kenny MacAskill
182 Leave out section 140

Section 142

Kenny MacAskill
183 Leave out section 142

Section 143

Kenny MacAskill
184 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—
   <( ) an order under section (Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions)(1).>

Kenny MacAskill
540 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—
   <( ) an order under section (Convictions by courts in other EU member States)(2).>

Kenny MacAskill
450 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—
   <( ) an order under section (European evidence warrants)(1).>
Kenny MacAskill

In section 143, page 138, leave out line 33

Kenny MacAskill

In section 143, page 138, line 33, at end insert—

<(  ) an order under section 146(1) containing provisions which modify any enactment (including this Act), or>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 143, page 138, line 34, leave out <146(1) or>

Robert Brown

In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

(  ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 17(1), (2) or (3),>

Robert Brown

In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

(  ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 38(1), (2), (3) or (4),>

Schedule 5

Kenny MacAskill

In schedule 5, page 151, line 35, at end insert—

<The Libel Act 1792 (c.60)
The Libel Act 1792 is repealed.
The Criminal Libel Act 1819 (c.8)
The Criminal Libel Act 1819 is repealed.
The Defamation Act 1952 (c.66)
In the Defamation Act 1952, section 17(2) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

In schedule 5, page 152, line 10, at end insert—

<The Law Officers Act 1944 (c.25)
In section 2(3) of the Law Officers Act 1944 (Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland), for the words from “three” to the end substitute “287 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46)”.

Kenny MacAskill

In schedule 5, page 152, line 12, leave out from <In> to <1974> and insert—

<(  ) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 is amended as follows.
In section 1—

Kenny MacAskill

In schedule 5, page 152, line 15, at end insert—

在未来6(6)(bb)（在服务纪律处分程序中的定罪）中，对“the Schedule”替换为“Schedule 1”。

The Schedule（服务纪律处分程序）重新编号为Schedule 1。

Kenny MacAskill

在第152页第24行，末尾插入—

《同居及有关罪行（苏格兰）法1986年（c.36）》

《性侵犯相关犯罪（ Scotland）法1986年（c.36）》

该法是废除的。

Kenny MacAskill

在第153页第3行，插入前89号之后，插入111号之后—

《工会和劳动关系（合并）法1992年（c.52）》

在《工会和劳动关系（合并）法1992年（c.52）》第243(4)(b)段中，对“共谋罪”进行废除。

Kenny MacAskill

在第153页第3行，末尾插入—

《刑事程序（相关性条款）（Scotland）法1995年（c.40）》

在《刑事程序（相关性条款）（Scotland）法1995年（c.40）》第44段第2款中，废除。

Kenny MacAskill

在第153页第12行，末尾插入—

《性侵犯相关犯罪（ Scotland）法1986年（c.36）》

《同居及有关罪行（ Scotland）法1986年（c.36）》

在第153页第35行，末尾插入—

《同居及有关罪行（ Scotland）法1986年（c.36）》

在第153页第35行，末尾插入—

《刑事程序（相关性条款）（Scotland）法1995年（c.40）》

在《刑事程序（相关性条款）（Scotland）法1995年（c.40）》第11段，...

(a) 在第(3)节中，将“控告，起诉”替换为“起诉”；

(b) 在第(4)节中，将“处理，起诉”替换为“起诉”。

Kenny MacAskill

在第153页第35行，末尾插入—

《刑事程序（相关性条款）（Scotland）法1995年（c.40）》

在《刑事程序（相关性条款）（Scotland）法1995年（c.40）》第17A段中，对性侵犯相关犯罪的被告有权被告知关于犯罪的限制，第1(1)段—

(a) 对第(za)段和第(3)段，替换为—
“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

512 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 18(8)(c) (power to take prints etc. under authority of a warrant unaffected by section), for “prints, impressions” substitute “relevant physical data”.

In section 19(1)(b) (samples etc. taken from person convicted of offence), the words “impression or”, in both places where they occur, are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

513 In schedule 5, page 154, line 4, at end insert—

<Section 20 (use of prints, samples etc.) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

514 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 23A (bail and liberation where person already in custody)—

(a) in each of subsections (1) and (4), for “23 or 65(8C)” substitute “23, 65(8C) or 107A(2)(b)”, and

(b) in subsection (3), for “22A(3) or 23(7)” substitute “22A(3), 23(7) or 107A(2)(b)”.

Kenny MacAskill

455 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 35 (judicial examination), in subsection (4A)—

(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

456 In schedule 5, page 154, line 42, at end insert—

<In section 66 (service and lodging of indictment etc.), in subsection (6A)(a)—

(a) for sub-paragraphs (zi) and (i) substitute—

“(i) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
In section 71 (first diet)—

(a) in subsection (A1), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”,
(b) in subsection (B1)(c), for the words “before the trial diet” substitute “in relation to any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,
(c) in subsection (1A)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,
(d) in subsection (1B)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,
(e) in subsection (5A)(b), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”, and
(f) after subsection (7), insert—

“(7A) In subsections (A1) and (5A)(b), “relevant hearing” means—

(a) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (a) of subsection (B1), any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence,
(b) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (b) of that subsection, a hearing referred to in section 288E(2A),
(c) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (c) of that subsection, a hearing in respect of which an order is made under section 288F.”.

Kenny MacAskill

457 In schedule 5, page 155, line 3, at end insert—

<In section 79 (preliminary pleas and preliminary issues), in subsection (2)(b)(ii), after “under section” insert “22ZB(3)(b),”.

Kenny MacAskill

458 In schedule 5, page 155, line 23, at end insert—

<In section 140 (citation), in subsection (2A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 144 (procedure at first diet), in subsection (3A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—
“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 146 (plea of not guilty), in subsection (3A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

414 In schedule 5, page 155, line 31, leave out paragraphs 35 to 39

Kenny MacAskill

515 In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—

<The Offensive Weapons Act 1996 (c.26)

In the Offensive Weapons Act 1996, section 5 is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

194 In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—

<The Defamation Act 1996 (c.31)

In the Defamation Act 1996, section 20(2) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

195 In schedule 5, page 157, line 10, leave out paragraph 44 and insert—

<(1) The Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 9 (power to specify hospital unit), in subsection (1)(a), for “insane” substitute “found not criminally responsible or unfit for trial”.

(3) In section 13 (increase in sentences available to sheriff and district courts), subsection (2) is repealed.

(4) In section 56 (powers of the court on remand or committal of children and young persons), subsection (3) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

196 In schedule 5, page 157, line 28, at end insert—

<The Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (c.28)

Section 10 of the Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (exemption from liability: activities in relation to publications) is amended as follows—
(a) in subsection (1), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,
(b) in subsection (2)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,
(c) in subsection (3), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,
(d) in subsection (4)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,
(e) in subsection (6)(a), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed, and
(f) in subsection (8), the words “and criminal liability” are repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

459 In schedule 5, page 157, line 36, at end insert—

<The Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 5)

In the Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 the following provisions are repealed—

(a) in section 4 (prohibition on accused conducting case in person in certain cases), subsection (4),
(b) section 17 (bail conditions: remote monitoring of restrictions on movements), and
(c) in the schedule (further modifications of the 1995 Act), paragraph 55.>

Kenny MacAskill

695 In schedule 5, page 158, line 32, at end insert—

In section 74 (appointment of stipendiary magistrates), subsection (6) is repealed.

After section 74 insert—

“74A Exercise of functions by stipendiary magistrates

(1) A stipendiary magistrate may, by reason of holding that office—

(a) exercise the same judicial and signing functions as are exercisable by a JP,
(b) do so in the same manner as a JP (including by using the title of office of JP).

(2) For the purpose of subsection (1)—

(a) the acts of a stipendiary magistrate are valid as if the magistrate were a JP,
(b) it does not matter if an enactment from which a JP derives authority to act in a specific case does not bear to give equivalent authority to a stipendiary magistrate.

(3) However, subsections (1) and (2) are subject to any provision of an enactment which expressly excludes a stipendiary magistrate from acting in a specific case.

(4) This section does not limit any other functions of a stipendiary magistrate (in particular, those exercisable in that capacity only).”.

In section 76 (signing functions)—
(a) in subsection (2), for “signing functions in the same manner as” substitute “the same signing functions as are exercisable by”;
(b) subsection (4) is repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

197  In schedule 5, page 158, line 36, at end insert <and

   (ii) sub-paragraph (b) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

387  In schedule 5, page 159, line 12, at end insert—

   <The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9)

   In section 55(7) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (offences committed outside the United Kingdom), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.

Kenny MacAskill

198  In schedule 5, page 159, line 14, leave out <134> and insert <156>
7th Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- a list of any amendments already debated;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the seventh day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Conditions to which licences under the 1982 Act are to be subject
168

Licensing – powers of entry etc. (definition of “authorised civilian employee”) 169

Licensing of metal dealers
385

Licensing of street trading – food hygiene certificates
170

Licensing of market operators
171, 172, 2, 3, 4

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 172 pre-empts amendments 2 and 3

Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues
516

Applications for licences
173

Provisions to be considered as part of the Alcohol etc. (Scotland) Bill
174, 182, 186

Premises licence applications
460, 542, 176, 180
Reviews of premises licences – notification of determinations
175

Premises licence – minor variations
547

Premises licence – transfer
550

Premises licences – connected persons and interested parties
693

Provisional premises licences
543

Consumption of alcohol on licensed premises outwith licensed hours
548

Occasional licences
539

Extended hours applications – notification period
449

Personal licence applications
177, 178, 181

24 hour licensing
698

Appeals against decisions of licensing board
179

Liability for offences under 2005 Act
694

Powers of Licensing Standards Officers
699

Corruption in public bodies
183

Orders and regulations – circumstances in which affirmative procedure required
187, 188

Incest and related offences
190

Criminal law – revision
191, 193
Breach of undertakings – consequential modification
457

Exercise of functions by stipendiary magistrates 695

Amendments already debated

Community payback orders – consequential modifications
With 342 – 414

Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions
With 105 – 184

Presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention
With 100 – 392

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
With 114 – 189, 192, 194, 196

People trafficking (and consequential provision)
With 371 – 386, 387

Clarification of existing offence prohibiting the carrying of offensive weapons
With 109 – 515

Children – age of criminal responsibility and minimum age of prosecution
With 379 – 549

Convictions in other UK or EU jurisdictions
With 518 – 540

Bail conditions – remote monitoring requirements
With 132 – 197

Prosecution on indictment – Scottish Law Officers
With 421 – 451

Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused
With 429 – 454, 455, 456, 458, 459

Crown appeals
With 462 – 514

Retention of samples etc. – adults
With 478 – 512, 513

European evidence warrants
With 442 – 450
Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc. (minor corrections etc.)
With 138 – 198

Rehabilitation of offenders – spent alternatives to prosecution
With 447 – 452, 453

Mental disorder and unfitness for trial
With 24 – 195
Present:

Bill Aitken (Convener)  Robert Brown
Bill Butler (Deputy Convener)  Aileen Campbell (Committee Substitute)
Angela Constance  Cathie Craigie
Nigel Don  James Kelly

Also present: Sandra White. Apologies were received from Stewart Maxwell.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 7).

The following amendments were agreed to (by division):

385 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
2 (For 5, Against 0, Abstentions 3)
3 (For 5, Against 0, Abstentions 3)
4 (For 5, Against 0, Abstentions 3).

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division):

171 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
172 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
548 (For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were moved and, with the agreement of the Committee, withdrawn: 516, 550, 543 and 698.

The following amendments were not moved: 460, 542, 547, 392 and 549.

Sections 124, 126, 127, 130, 131, 132, 133, 135, 137, 138, 139, 141, 144, 145, 146, 147 and 148 and the long title were agreed to without amendment.

Sections 121, 122, 128, 134 and 136, schedule 4, section 143 and schedule 5 were agreed to as amended.

The Committee completed Stage 2 consideration of the Bill.
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

10:05

The Convener: Agenda item 2, which is the seventh day of stage 2 proceedings on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, is our principal business today. The committee aims to complete stage 2 today. That may or may not be possible; we shall see what progress we make.

I welcome the Cabinet Secretary for Justice, Kenny MacAskill MSP. As is usual on such occasions, he is accompanied by Scottish Government officials, who may alternate, depending on the nature of the business that is to be discussed.

Members should have their copies of the bill, the seventh marshalled list of amendments and the seventh list of groupings of amendments for consideration.

Section 121—Conditions to which licences under 1982 Act are to be subject

The Convener: Amendment 168, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Kenny MacAskill): Amendment 168 is a technical amendment to section 121 to make the power to prescribe mandatory conditions in respect of licences under the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 subject to the affirmative procedure. The amendment follows comments that were received from the Subordinate Legislation Committee.

I move amendment 168.

Amendment 168 agreed to.

Section 121, as amended, agreed to.

Section 122—Licensing: powers of entry and inspection for civilian employees

The Convener: Amendment 169, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 169 is purely a minor technical amendment that tidies up provisions in section 122 by removing an unnecessary reference to section 29 of the 1982 act.

I move amendment 169.

Amendment 169 agreed to.

Section 122, as amended, agreed to.

Section 123—Licensing of metal dealers
The Convener: Amendment 385, in the name of Robert Brown, is in a group on its own.

Robert Brown (Glasgow) (LD): Amendment 385 would delete section 123. In essence, the bill as it stands seeks to make the licensing of metal dealers optional, but I am not convinced that that is a particularly good idea, particularly in a time of recession, and I am not—so far at least—satisfied that the case has been made for it. I am all in favour of local discretion, but I am not sure that things should be done in such a way in the area that we are discussing.

The licensing and control of metal dealers seems to me to be very useful. We are talking about a trade that can deal with the proceeds of certain types of crime. The area is well regulated at the moment, and it should continue to be.

The committee heard evidence on the matter at stage 1. Several councils commented it would be odd to make such a change at a time of economic downturn. I am not persuaded of the need for the change, which is why I seek to delete section 123.

I move amendment 385.

The Convener: I have a degree of sympathy with the amendment. It is well known that the theft of precious metals is a major criminal activity; the theft of base metals should also be of concern. Criminal acts are, of course, a matter for the criminal courts, but I think that an additional sanction should be present that would result in a metal dealer who was guilty of reset potentially losing his or her licence. That in itself would act as a deterrent. I am therefore minded to support the amendment, unless the cabinet secretary can persuade me otherwise.

Kenny MacAskill: We understand the concerns that the convener and Robert Brown have expressed, but let me explain why we do not support amendment 385. Amendment 385 seeks to remove from the bill provisions that were recommended to the Scottish Government by local authorities and the police as a means of future-proofing the licensing of metal dealers. The effect of the amendment would be to maintain the 20-year-old ceiling of £100,000 annual turnover above which licensing boards are not able to license the operation of metal dealers. It may help if I explain that we will ensure in the transitional arrangements for the commencement of section 123 that no local authority will be left without a licensing scheme if it wishes to maintain one. In addition, any local authority that chooses to move to the optional scheme using the new powers that are contained in section 123 must consult the relevant bodies in their area, in particular the police, before they are able to do so.

It should be left open to local authorities to remove licensing burdens should circumstances—both social and economic—no longer require them. In many areas, local authorities might decide to continue with the current licensing arrangements. However, local authorities should have the flexibility to move to an optional licensing regime for metal dealers if they consider that appropriate for their areas. That is why we oppose Robert Brown’s amendment 385, although we recognise the underlying concern.

Robert Brown: I intend to press amendment 385. A technical issue might relate to the £100,000 limit, but it could be dealt with in another way, if that were necessary.

The law of unintended consequences applies. It is all very well for one council to decide that it does not need a metal dealers licensing regime, but that has implications for surrounding councils, particularly as council areas are fairly small. For example, Glasgow City Council is surrounded by several other authorities. One can readily see that people who want to operate at the dubious end of the market might move to a surrounding local authority’s area if it took a slightly more lax view than Glasgow did. Section 123 has considerable dangers, so I will press amendment 385.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 385 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Campbell, Aileen (South of Scotland) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 385 agreed to.
Section 124 agreed to.

After section 124

The Convener: The next group is entitled “Licensing of street trading—food hygiene certificates”. Amendment 170, in the cabinet secretary’s name, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 170 updates references to food hygiene legislation in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. Section 39 of the 1982 act provides that applications for a street trader’s licence when the activity includes a food business and involves the use of a vehicle, kiosk or moveable stall must be refused by the licensing authority unless a food hygiene certificate is produced. The food hygiene certificate must be signed on the food authority’s behalf and must say that the premises comply with the requirements of regulations that are made under section 16 of the Food Safety Act 1990. However, food safety regulations are now made under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 in order to implement various European Union regulations, rather than under section 16 of the 1990 act. The result is that the reference in the 1982 act no longer works properly.

Amendment 170 allows the Scottish ministers to specify in an order the requirements with which a food hygiene certificate is to state compliance. That will allow the references to keep up with changes in food safety regulation.

I move amendment 170.

The Convener: The issue is fairly straightforward.

Amendment 170 agreed to.

Section 125—Licensing of market operators

The Convener: Amendment 171, in the cabinet secretary’s name, is grouped with amendments 172 and 2 to 4. I draw members’ attention to the pre-emption information in the list of groupings.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 171 and 172 implement the commitment that we made in December 2009 to reinstate the blanket exemption that charities enjoy from the market operator provisions of the 1982 act. As we said, the licensing provisions in the bill were the result of recommendations from an independent task group that the previous Administration established and which undertook an extensive review of civic government licensing throughout Scotland. The group recommended that charities should no longer be exempt from applying for a market operator’s licence and that exemption should be left to licensing authorities’ discretion.

However, we received many representations and understood the concerns that the change in the bill would have an impact on fundraising events in general. We therefore decided that the proposal should not proceed, and our amendments 171 and 172 deliver on that.

We acknowledge the fact that Cathie Craigie’s amendment 2 would achieve substantially the same effect. However, the clear advantage of our amendments 171 and 172 is that they leave section 125 in a neater form.

Amendment 3 seeks to remove section 125(3). That provision implements another recommendation of the task group to ensure that licensing authorities are able to regulate car boot sales. The current reference in section 40(4) of the 1982 act to sale “by retail” has caused doubt about licensing authorities’ ability to do that. Unlike the charities exemption, the provision in the bill has raised no concerns and we are not sure why Cathie Craigie might want to remove it. The retention of the charities exemption means that only commercially organised car boot sales could ever come within the scope of the licensing regime. We therefore oppose amendment 3.

Amendment 4 would remove section 125 entirely. We believe that section 125, in its shortened form, should be retained and we therefore oppose amendment 4.

I move amendment 171.

10:15

Cathie Craigie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab): I call on members of the committee to support amendments 2 to 4 and to reject the Government’s amendments 171 and 172.

When the committee took evidence during its stage 1 consideration of the bill, it was clear that charitable organisations were concerned that they could find themselves facing a charge if they wanted to put on a summer fair or a garden fête. There was concern about that across the board, particularly among religious groups, uniformed organisations and sporting groups. My amendments would take us back to the status quo and the position that is currently enjoyed by charitable organisations.

Amendment 171 would leave in section 125(3) the reference to sale “by retail”. The committee will confirm that, during stage 1, it was unclear to us just what “by retail” meant. I do not think that the bill would be improved by leaving that provision as it is. The phrase “by retail” could refer to an organisation going along to a wholesaler and buying things to resell at its garden fête or whatever. As the purpose and effect notes that have been provided by the Government acknowledge, licensing authorities already have the power, under existing legislation, to license car boot sales if that is an issue of concern. It would be up to the Government to provide clarity on that through guidance, if necessary. If some local authorities are using the existing legislation to license sellers at car boot sales, what is to prevent all local authorities from doing that? I do not accept the need to leave the phrase “by retail” in the bill.

Robert Brown: I support Cathie Craigie’s amendments. The original proposal to require voluntary sector or non-commercial groups to obtain a market trader's licence would have been a bureaucratic nonsense in 95 per cent of instances. There was, in any event, some uncertainty about how far the council's discretion to allow exemptions would extend if the change were made. Restoration of the status quo through the removal of section 125 seems to be the simplest solution and would give relief to many voluntary sector groups.

In defence of the Government's initial position, it is fair to say that there could be issues with large-scale events such as free concerts and the like. I would be interested to know whether the Government's thinking on that issue has advanced.

Car boot sales vary from the large-scale events that take place at places such as Polmadie to much smaller events that are organised by churches, care homes and other such organisations. There must be a degree of proportionality to any action that is taken in relation to such things. In recent years, there has been quite a lot of legislation that has increased the burdens on voluntary sector and local organisations, and I do not think that we should add what the Government proposes to those burdens.

The Convener: If no other members wish to contribute, I too will speak to the amendments.

Government amendment 171 seems a genuine effort to correct a failure where the existing bill is simply not proportionate. Cathie Craigie highlighted those difficulties in speaking to amendment 2. Clearly, where an event that is held for whatever purpose is attended by a large number of individuals, the local authority will require to involve environmental health officers, building control and so on. Therefore, it is totally appropriate that such events should be subject to licensing. On the other side of the argument, one cannot equate an event such as T in the Park with a church flower show. Clearly, we need to do something, as the bill as it stands is simply not an appropriate response to what has been a particularly limited difficulty.

The Convener: If no other members wish to contribute, I too will speak to the amendments.

Government amendment 171 seems a genuine effort to correct a failure where the existing bill is simply not proportionate. Cathie Craigie highlighted those difficulties in speaking to amendment 2. Clearly, where an event that is held for whatever purpose is attended by a large number of individuals, the local authority will require to involve environmental health officers, building control and so on. Therefore, it is totally appropriate that such events should be subject to licensing. On the other side of the argument, one cannot equate an event such as T in the Park with a church flower show. Clearly, we need to do something, as the bill as it stands is simply not an appropriate response to what has been a particularly limited difficulty.

Kenny MacAskill: Obviously, the issue has fundamentally been driven by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, and we are more than happy to enter into discussions with COSLA to ensure that we strike the appropriate balance. As the convenor pointed out, we need to ensure that we can deal with commercial enterprises—including those that run car boot sales for considerable profit and which sometimes even masquerade as charitable ventures. However, at the same time, we need to protect church flower shows and other events for worthy charitable organisations, which is the tenor of the argument made by Cathie Craigie and Robert Brown. Obviously, we are happy to discuss the issue with the committee and with COSLA, both at present and hereafter.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 171 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Campbell, Aileen (South of Scotland) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 171 disagreed to.

The Convener: Before proceeding, I point out that, if amendment 172 is agreed to, I cannot call amendments 2 and 3 on the grounds of pre-emption.

Amendment 172 moved—[Kenny MacAskill].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 172 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Campbell, Aileen (South of Scotland) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 172 disagreed to.
Amendment 2 moved—[Cathie Craigie].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 2 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Abstentions
Campbell, Aileen (South of Scotland) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 0, Abstentions 3.

Amendment 2 agreed to.

Amendment 3 moved—[Cathie Craigie].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 3 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Abstentions
Campbell, Aileen (South of Scotland) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 0, Abstentions 3.

Amendment 3 agreed to.

Amendment 4 moved—[Cathie Craigie].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 4 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Abstentions
Campbell, Aileen (South of Scotland) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 0, Abstentions 3.

Amendment 4 agreed to.

Sections 126 and 127 agreed to.

After section 127

The Convener: The next group is on control of lap-dancing and other adult entertainment venues. Amendment 516, in the name of Sandra White, is the only amendment in the group.

Sandra White (Glasgow) (SNP): I wish to concentrate on three areas: what the amendment will do; what it will not do; and why the amendment is necessary. Even though it is early in the morning, I would like to mix things up a bit and start by talking about what the amendment will not do.

The committee has received submissions from theatre companies and Scottish Ballet. However, amendment 516 does not affect theatrical performances at all. That is not the intention. Proposed new section 45A(6) of the 1982 act defines "relevant entertainment" as "any live performance; or ... any live display of nudity, which is of such a nature that, ignoring financial gain, it must reasonably be assumed to be provided solely or principally for the purpose of sexually stimulating any member of the audience (whether by verbal or other means)."

I draw the committee's attention to that, because the wording relates specifically to lap-dancing clubs. Theatrical performances are not "solely or principally" for that particular purpose.

In response to representations that have been made to me, I point out that local authorities would not be forced to implement the legislation, if amendment 516 is agreed to. The provision is not mandatory; there is no blanket ban. However, local authorities would have the choice of implementing the legislation if they so wished. At the moment, local authorities' regulation in this area is based on four grounds and it is difficult for them to get the outcome that they want; usually they have to appeal the decision, and it goes to the courts, which costs them a lot of money. Those four grounds are: preventing crime and disorder; preventing public nuisance; protecting children from harm; and securing public safety. It is difficult for councils to prove cases on those grounds, and members of the public who want to register objections have to reside within the area, which makes it difficult for some people to do so. I live in an area that has lap-dancing clubs and I, along with others, have given evidence to the local court in Glasgow. However, we have found it difficult to have our objections passed through.
Lap-dancing clubs objectify women. “Safer Lives: Changed Lives”, which was published by the Scottish Government and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, recognises activities that are undertaken as part of commercial sexual exploitation, including table dancing and lap dancing, as forms of violence against women that have been shown to be “harmful for the individual women involved and have a negative impact on the position of all women through the objectification of women’s bodies.”

I have visited lap-dancing clubs and have spoken to men who were there. I asked a group of young chaps from Belfast what they thought of the girls in the club and was told that they thought they were “slags” and “slappers”. When I asked them how they would feel if their sister, girlfriend or wife were performing the dance, they said that there was no way that anyone that they knew would do that. You can see the difference in how the girls are perceived by men who visit those places.

I do not want to take up too much time, in case members want to ask questions. I believe that amendment 516 will be beneficial to women and will tackle the perception that men have of them. It will also enable local authorities to make a legitimate choice about whether they wish this type of entertainment—I would place inverted commas around that word—to be allowed to operate in their areas.

I move amendment 516.

10:30

Robert Brown: I think that Sandra White has put forward her case reasonably and logically, but amendment 516 gives rise to some issues. First, the committee has not taken significant oral evidence on the issue that it deals with—although we have received quite a volume of written evidence on it—so the proposal has not been tested. I confess that I am feeling my way on the issue.

Sandra White tried to deal with the objection that her amendment might apply to theatrical performances. I hear what she says about the terms of subsection (6) of proposed new section 45A of the 1982 act, but I am not sure that the proposed provision provides as clear an exemption as one would hope. It says that relevant entertainment “must reasonably be assumed to be provided solely or principally for the purpose of sexually stimulating any member of the audience”.

That takes us into quite complex territory and makes for a difficult situation, unless an exemption is provided specifically for theatrical performances. The interplay between morality and theatrical or literary issues has a long history, which goes right back to “Lady Chatterley’s Lover”.

My second point is about what might be described as grandfather rights. As I understand it, there are a number of existing lap-dancing clubs in Glasgow and Edinburgh. According to information in the paperwork, no new applications for such clubs have been granted since 2004, so the position does not appear to be changing. There does not appear to be a problem with local authorities knocking back new applications, but I would like to know how amendment 516 would apply to existing establishments, in which people have invested money. How those establishments would be dealt with is an issue.

Another issue is unintended consequences. A submission from a chap called Allan Balsillie—I do not know who he is; the submission does not provide any background—makes what seems to me to be the valid point that “All that would be required is a business element, a degree of nudity and an audience of one.”

If that is the case—I think that I am right in saying that that would be the case, as I read the proposed provision—it would, as Allan Balsillie says, apply to prostitution and activities of that kind. We have already had a debate, in a different context, about moving into that area. Many of us would agree that there is limited justification for doing so, but it is an area in which more substantial investigation, background research and perhaps an inquiry would be required to allow us to arrive at a solution. I would be interested to know whether amendment 516 would apply to such situations; it seems to me that it would.

My final point is about whether the amendment is necessary at all. COSLA and the Law Society of Scotland express doubts about that. They say that, in their view, the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 provides adequate powers in this area. Given that we are talking about provisions that would amend sections of other pieces of legislation, I am not entirely clear about how everything fits together, but when two reputable bodies that are closely involved in the legalities of the issue and the council end of it express such views, we must take them seriously.

I have a number of concerns about amendment 516, which are to do with unintended consequences and other implications, grandfather rights and the views that have been expressed by the responsible bodies, which seem to go against us giving a positive response to the amendment.

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): In lodging her amendment, Sandra White has raised some important issues. It is clear that the objective behind it is to restrict inappropriate entertainment in venues such as lap-dancing clubs. As Sandra White said, we do not want to promote situations in which women are regarded with a lack of dignity. From that point of view, I sympathise with her objectives.

However, there are issues with the drafting of amendment 516. I have some sympathy with what Robert Brown said. We have not taken any evidence on the issue, and some of the submissions are contradictory. I cannot say that I am qualified to come down on one side or the other, but I note from submissions such as the one from Scottish Ballet that what is proposed could have unintended consequences for the entertainment arena. Therefore, Sandra White might want to reconsider her amendment, have appropriate discussions and lodge a redrafted version of it at stage 3. As amendment 516 is currently drafted, I do not feel able to support it.

The Convener: The subject matter of amendment 516 is a particularly seedy and unattractive aspect of the entertainment industry, and I know that Sandra White has, properly, spent some time on the issue. That said, I have serious reservations about the amendment on three grounds.

First, I do not think that the issue around theatrical performances has been satisfactorily resolved. I will listen to what Sandra White says on that point in summing up, but I think that the amendment as drafted is deficient in that respect. Secondly, the amendment, although certainly arguable, is not in terms of law strictly speaking necessary. I refer Sandra White to section 23 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, which I think covers the matter adequately—this is a matter for local authorities. Thirdly, I have a problem with the matter coming before the committee in connection with this bill, although I am mindful of the difficulty that Sandra White faced in that the bill, which is becoming more comprehensive by the week, was probably the only place in which she could have this argument ventilated. Nevertheless, it seems to me that the matter is more for local government; it is more a matter of the licensing function. Bearing in mind the extraneous matters that have come before the committee under this heading, I understand why it is here, but it would rest much more comfortably with local government legislation and should be a matter for the Local Government and Communities Committee.

Kenny MacAskill: The Government’s position echoes that of Mr Brown and Mr Kelly. We understand and support Sandra White’s wish for communities to be able to refuse to host venues that provide such entertainment, but we have significant concerns about amendment 516. Although we support the policy intention behind the amendment, in giving local authorities that discretion, as Mr Brown articulated there are drafting difficulties with the amendment in its current form, which will require to be addressed.

I therefore ask Sandra White to withdraw amendment 516, with an offer from us to assist and support a stage 3 amendment that clarifies exactly when an adult entertainment licence is required and the premises for which it is required. We hope that that will address the concerns of Mr Brown and Mr Kelly, and maintain the ethos of what Ms White wishes to achieve.

Sandra White: I have listened to members and the cabinet secretary. The convener mentioned local government legislation, but it has been difficult to find a place in that legislation where I can add this provision. Legislation exists, but local authorities are certainly not as able to implement it as they would like to be. That is why an amendment is needed to ensure that there is zero tolerance of lap-dancing clubs.

Mr Brown referred to the chap who mentioned the prostitution issue. I do not think that it has anything to do with that. The chap also said in his submission that Glasgow wishes to put forward its morality with a blanket ban throughout Scotland; I have explained that that is not absolutely true. The ethos of amendment 516 is to enable local authorities—the provision is not mandatory—to choose whether they want lap-dancing clubs.

I will take up the cabinet secretary’s offer and will be happy to work with him and the officials. On that basis, I wish to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment 516, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 128—Applications for licences

The Convener: The next group is on applications for licences. Amendment 173, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 173 amends section 128, which deals with applications for licences under the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. Section 128 makes a number of changes to schedules to that act, one of which requires people who are applying for licences under the act to provide details of their date and place of birth on the application forms. For licence applications that are covered by part 2 of the 1982 act, there is a requirement to display a notice detailing various pieces of information about the licence application. In certain circumstances, a licensing authority must, following receipt of the licence application, publish a notice detailing pieces of information about that application. That is part of the licence application process.

The convener will recall writing to me in September last year, expressing concern that personal details of applicants could be placed in the public domain, as well as being used by the applicable statutory bodies to assist them with their background checks into applicants. In my written response of 7 September 2009, I indicated that the Government would expect local authorities to use the additional information that is provided in the application—that is, the applicant’s date and place of birth—only for the purposes of assisting relevant authorities such as the police in looking into the background of the applicant.

Unfortunately, although our response of 7 September correctly summarised our policy, the effect of the provisions in section 128 was incorrectly summarised. We thank the committee for drawing the matter to our attention.

Amendment 173 ensures that an applicant’s date and place of birth will not be included in the notices that are required for the purposes of a licence application under part 2 of the 1982 act.

I move amendment 173.

Amendment 173 agreed to.

Section 129, as amended, agreed to.

Section 130, as amended, agreed to.

Amendment 460 not moved.

The Convener: I would invite George Foulkes to speak to amendment 542, but he is not present. Mr Kelly can enlighten us.

James Kelly: I can indicate that George Foulkes wishes not to move amendment 542.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 176 updates references to food hygiene legislation in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. Amendment 180 is a minor technical amendment to paragraph 5 of schedule 4.

We have had discussions with Capability Scotland, which probably explains why Mr Kelly will not move amendment 542. We are happy to work towards the ethos of what George Foulkes was seeking to achieve.

Section 131 agreed to.

After section 131

The Convener: The next group is on reviews of premises licences—notification of determinations. Amendment 175, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 175 seeks to improve the transparency of the premises licence review process that is provided for in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. First, it ensures that adequate notification of a licensing board’s decision following a review hearing is given to the licence holder and to the person who applied for a review.

Secondly, the amendment ensures that, when a licensing board takes action against a licence holder following a review hearing, the licence holder is able to request a statement of reasons from the board. Such provisions already exist in the 2005 act in connection with the premises licence application process.

Finally, the amendment ensures that a statement of reasons can be requested by a person who applies for a review of the licence, whether or not any action is taken by the board following the review hearing.

I move amendment 175.

Amendment 175 agreed to.

Section 132 agreed to.

After section 132

Amendments 542 and 547 not moved.

The Convener: The next group is on premises licence—transfer. Amendment 550, in the name of Robert Brown, is the only amendment in the group.
Robert Brown: Amendment 550 is one of a number of amendments that have come to me and to other committee members through the licensed trade. They express what people in the trade see as issues of practical difficulty with the operation of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 as opposed to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976.

I do not pretend to have expertise in the area, but it is right to put before the committee the views that have been given to me on the issue of licence transfers. It has been suggested that the practical and legal difficulties under section 34 of the 2005 act have not been as fully understood by the people dealing with them as perhaps they should be. The 2005 act provides that the transferee lodges an application for transfer in certain limited circumstances, such as when the premises licence holder has died, become incapacitated or insolvent, or when the business that is carried on in the licensed premises to which the licence relates is transferred. That is fairly straightforward in itself.

However, there are many circumstances in which those criteria cannot be satisfied, and it has been suggested that that gives rise to serious if not fatal consequences for the premises licence concerned. A useful example can be seen when company A owns licensed premises that it has let to company B, to a partnership, or to someone else. The premises licence is in the name of company B, who is the tenant or the subsidiary. The business finds that it can no longer continue, and the premises licence holder advises the owners that they are unable to trade further. They then renounce the lease, vacate the premises and hop it: they cannot be found and are not interested in what will happen thereafter. Even if they can be contacted, it might not be possible to reach agreement.

In such circumstances, the tenant and current licence holder has gone: they might not be contactable, they might not be interested in assisting with the transfer of the licence or whatever, or they might be seeking to hold the owners to ransom. The designated premises manager who is appointed by the premises licence holder might well also have left and have no interest in replacing themselves, so the premises cannot trade. The owners cannot apply for a new licence because they are not the licence holder. No one else can trade and the premises are left in limbo because the licence remains with the current premises licence holder. The terms of section 34(3) of the 2005 act are not satisfied because the licence holder has not died or has not become incapacitated or insolvent, and the company has not been dissolved or become insolvent. Without the support of the premises licence holder, there can be no transfer of the licence under section 33 of the 2005 act, and that can put the business and any related jobs at risk, too.

An application for a new premises licence is costly and time consuming; it would also be subject to overprovision assessment and other things of that sort. An application cannot be made for the same premises, because there cannot be two premises licences at the same time. The proposition is that the owner or other interested party, including perhaps financial institutions that have lent money, need to be able to apply for transfer of a premises licence in such circumstances. That argument seems to be reasonably persuasive. I am conscious that the matter is quite technical, and I am interested to hear the cabinet secretary’s response.

I move amendment 550.

The Convener: As Robert Brown said, the matter is technical. However, it has the capacity to impact significantly on the operation of the licensed trade. We are in a little bit of a jam because the bill, as it stands, does not contain the appropriate level of flexibility. Two years might seem a long time to those of us round this table, but bearing in mind all the inevitable time-consuming exercises that have to be performed in the circumstances that Robert Brown described, it is not a significantly long time. I found Mr Brown’s arguments fairly persuasive and I will listen with considerable interest to the cabinet secretary.

Kenny MacAskill: We are grateful to Robert Brown for lodging amendment 550 and we understand the spirit in which it is intended. Although the factual example to which he referred is true, it is the only instance that the Law Society and the licensed trade have been able to suggest to us would occur. Equally, it would not be the case that there would be two outstanding licences, as one would automatically fall.

We have doubts about amendment 550 because it could enable a licence transfer application to be made on the cessation of the business operating from licensed premises and that would restrict local communities and the police’s ability to comment on the suitability of the premises to reopen. If a tenant who holds the premises licence simply ceases to trade and leaves, it is a contractual matter between the tenant and their landlord. We do not believe that primary legislation is the correct place to deal with such disagreements. The 2005 act enables the landlord to hold the premises licence. Alternatively, such situations could be dealt with through both parties’ contractual arrangements. It should not be a matter for licensing boards.

That is why we ask Robert Brown to withdraw amendment 550. The matter that he mentioned is correct, but we do not believe that it occurs in practice. If the amendment were to be agreed to, licences could be transferred, which would restrict the licensing boards from having their say.

Robert Brown: I accept to some extent what the cabinet secretary says; I was concerned when I saw the purpose and effect notes about some of the possible implications that might emerge from the amendment. Against that background, I am prepared to seek to withdraw the amendment, but I would like some assurance from the cabinet secretary, if he is prepared to go that far, that he accepts that the example I gave causes some problems—it is perhaps an unusual example, but it happens nevertheless. Is he prepared to look further at that to see whether there is a way round the problem? As I said, although I do not want to impose on the bill technical amendments that I am not entirely confident will do what I want them to do, I want my concerns to be taken forward. If the cabinet secretary can give me that assurance, I will be prepared not to press amendment 550 today.

Kenny MacAskill: I am happy to give the assurance that we will look at the matter. Our understanding is that the best way of dealing with it is to ensure that the contractual arrangement entered into between the major company and the tenant specifies that if one goes, the licence falls automatically. We are happy to look at whether we can take other steps. Primarily, it is a case of ensuring that such considerations are part and parcel of every lease and contractual arrangement drawn up in respect of licensed premises.

Amendment 550, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: The next group is on premises licences—connected persons and interested parties. Amendment 693, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 693 is the first of two amendments that seek to address issues relating to vicarious responsibility for licensing offences. Amendment 694 will be dealt with in a later group.

Amendment 693 tackles a concern that was highlighted to us by the police that there is a tier of people and organisations responsible for the operation of licensed premises who cannot be held to account for the operation of licensed premises. The premises licence might be held by the property owner, but a tenant might be in control of operating the business on the premises. Alternatively, a management company with no property rights over the premises might be employed by the property owner to exercise management control over the business that is carried on in the premises.

However, at present the police are unable to make representations to licensing boards on the conduct of those groups or to take action against them if offences take place on the premises. Indeed, there is no requirement on the part of the licence holder to notify the licensing board of the existence of those groups.

Amendment 693 ensures that the licence holder must notify the existence of those “interested parties” to the licensing board. That would enable the board to consider the conduct of those parties in determining licence applications or considering whether to review an existing licence. Amendment 693 also seeks to ensure that any changes in the details of “connected persons” are notified to licensing boards, which will, in turn, forward the information to the chief constable. As a result, the licensing board and the police will be kept informed of the details of, for example, the partners of firms and the directors of companies that hold premises licences, which will enable a premises licence to be reviewed if the police or the board have concerns about the conduct of the partners or directors of licence-holding partnerships or companies.

I move amendment 693.

The Convener: A degree of vicarious liability applies in this provision. Does not existing licensing legislation deal with the matter already, given the separation of licences into premises and personal licences?

Kenny MacAskill: The answer is no. To some extent, this sits in the middle ground between premises and operating licences and the fact is that, if the amendment is not agreed to, we will not be able to deal with these related people. There is a lacuna here, if I can put it that way, and we are trying to close it to ensure that the boards and the police have this information.

The Convener: With that reassurance, I will proceed.

Amendment 693 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on provisional premises licences. Amendment 543, in the name of Robert Brown, is the only amendment in the group.

Robert Brown: Amendment 543 is not dissimilar to amendment 550 in that it emerges from comments that were made by the licensed trade on practical difficulties with the operation of the 2005 act. The trade believes that the Government has not fully understood the considerable implications of the current situation for jobs and investment in Scotland. It is claimed, for example, that the lack of a provisional premises licence akin to a site-only licence under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 has meant that some major leisure projects have not progressed and there is concern that the same will happen in future. The trade makes the obvious point that that would be bad for jobs, investment and the industry.

Unlike site-only applications under the 1976 act, where the information provided could be sketchy and the board had little or no control over the final product, a premises licence has an operating plan that, in site-only format, can give a broad but clear indication of whether a proposed development is to be, say, a five-star international hotel, a specialist facility of some sort, a restaurant or whatever. The Government will remember that before a premises licence can even be applied for, planning permission must be granted to ensure that the council has considered and addressed any major concerns.

Without the option of a site-only-type provisional premises licence, all that developers can do is produce a full and detailed plan, obtain a building warrant for a finished product and then apply to the board, following which the proposals might or might not be accepted. However, it is alleged that the costs incurred in such preliminary considerations can for major projects easily run to six figures or more. Faced with the stark choice of constructing a new hotel, which requires a licence and will incur significant costs, or a retail park, a pension fund or developer will find the former a very unattractive option. Moreover, most projects do not have an agreed occupier and other deals have to be done before they can go ahead.

I do not usually lodge amendments that are so sympathetic to big developers, but the point seems to me to be valid. In any case, it will also be a considerable issue for smaller developments such as chain restaurants. Unlike the position with the 1976 act, under which the information provided was scant and controls were almost non-existent, the board would be able to see what was in the operating plan, which could have fairly broad parameters to begin with, and to decide whether the proposal fell within its own policies. Indeed, if any operational difficulties arose, boards would have a considerable number of options at their disposal.

I am subject to the Government’s views but, as I say, a valid point has been made that requires to be answered. If I recall correctly, the committee also received at least some written evidence on the matter for its stage 1 report.

I move amendment 543.

James Kelly: I must be honest; I am not persuaded by amendment 543. Robert Brown has raised a reasonable issue and I appreciate that the licensed trade needs certainty about some applications before building work can progress, but I do not think that the proposed approach to handling applications is correct. The provisional licence would be granted on the basis of a brief outline, but when the licence came to be confirmed the licensing board’s power to refuse the application would be restricted and the public and the police would have no input into the discussion on whether to confirm the licence. On that basis, I oppose amendment 543.

11:00

Nigel Don (North East Scotland) (SNP): I have some sympathy with the position that Robert Brown has outlined. It was not very long ago that I sat on a licensing board. In my experience, there are applications in relation to which it is fairly clear what the licensed premises are about, particularly if we are talking about a hotel, so the current situation, whereby a detailed application is required, goes a bit too far. However, amendment 543 would go too far in the other direction.

There might be some middle ground that ought to be explored. I am interested to hear what the Government has to say. There is a point lurking behind amendment 543, which we need to address if we are to achieve some kind of balance.

The Convener: Amendment 543 is yet another arguable amendment. A two-year provisional licence might not be appropriate in respect of larger-scale developments. The last thing that any member wants to do is to inhibit development, in particular in the difficult economic times that are likely to be faced by the licensed trade and everyone else.

I understand James Kelly’s argument. He made a valid point. The matter is difficult. I look to the Government to give a view, on the basis of which I will make my determination.

Kenny MacAskill: I appreciate that Robert Brown is putting forward, as a courtesy, the industry’s concerns. There are matters to clarify. Mr Don is right to say that sometimes a hotel is a hotel. However, a short distance from where we sit there are establishments that started out as hotels but are now superpubs and there are establishments that started out as entertainment complexes that are now super-superpubs—if we can call them that. Matters are not always straightforward, which is why we have concerns about amendment 543.

On many occasions we have considered representations from lawyers representing the licensed trade who wanted to change the requirements for a provisional premises licence. The changes in amendment 543 would represent a significant departure from the legislation that was put in place by the previous Administration and would significantly undermine the ability of the public, the police and licensing boards to know what was being proposed in their communities.

Amendment 543 would enable vague outlines to be submitted as part of the provisional premises licence application, thereby in effect reducing sensible consideration of what was going to be built. When premises were completed there would be no effective method for the public, the police or even the licensing board to influence the licence until the premises were operating.

We are concerned that to some extent licensing boards would be asked to buy a pig in a poke, because the premises that open at the end of construction might be somewhat different from what was initially outlined. That would have wide implications, including for the police and for boards’ assessments of overprovision.

There must be an ability to scrutinise applications effectively, either at the start or at the end of the process. Amendment 543 would deny that. We question why premises that are already built should be subject to more scrutiny than premises that are merely planned—after all, both establishments have the same effect on the local community when they are open. We ask Robert Brown to withdraw amendment 543.

Robert Brown: It was worth having the debate, because we have aired a number of the issues. I accept that the public’s right to know what is proposed is important—like other members, I have been on that side of the argument more than once—but I am not sure that we have got the balance right. Nigel Don made a valid point in that respect. It is about striking a balance between giving developers a reasonable indication as to whether things are going in the right direction, before they have spent huge amounts of money, and not prejudicing the rights of the public.

We might look again at whether the provisional premises licence should last two years. Although there may be argument about a period of five years, it has been indicated that one or two years is a bit too tight for some more complex developments. I am keen for the minister to look further at the detail of the issue, but I will not press amendment 543 at this stage.

Amendment 543, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: I call amendment 176, which is in the name of the cabinet secretary.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 176 updates references to food hygiene legislation in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. Amendment 180 is a minor technical amendment to paragraph 5 of schedule 4.

I move amendment 176.

Amendment 176 agreed to.

After section 133

The Convener: Amendment 548, in my name, is in a group on its own and relates to the consumption of alcohol on licensed premises outwith licensed hours.

To some extent, it has been a tradition in the licensed trade that those who work in public houses, in particular, should have the opportunity at the close of business to have a drink on the premises. The 2005 act was somewhat deficient in, effectively, precluding that. I doubt that that was the intention.

It is important to stress what we are talking about. Like the rest of us, people who work in the licensed trade take the view that they are entitled to a refreshment after a hard shift. Many people in the licensed trade work hard. By the time that they are required to finish work, it is late in the evening. They are left with the choice of either drinking at home, which is not the most sociable way of drinking—depending on whom they live with—or going to a club, which is somewhat pricey. Many people of a certain vintage might not view going to a club as the highlight of their social day.

In amendment 548, I suggest simply that, once the doors have closed and the premises are no longer strictly speaking a public house, as all of us would understand the term, it is appropriate for those who work there to be given a drink on a non-commercial basis by those for whom they work. That is no different from someone who works in an office or a factory being offered a refreshment from the drinks cabinet by their boss at the end of a particularly hard shift. It is unfortunate that the 2005 act prohibits that, which cannot be the intention.

I move amendment 548.

Angela Constance (Livingston) (SNP): In my 10 years of working many a hard shift in the social work department, I was never offered a drink at the end of the day, sadly.

The Convener: That may speak volumes about your lack of a relationship with your boss, but we had better not pursue that.

Bill Butler (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab): The amendment might create an unintended loophole, as it would allow what are colloquially known as lock-ins further rein. I may be wrong about that, but I am interested to hear what the Government has to say about the issue.

Kenny MacAskill: Bill Butler is on the right path and is heading in the right direction. We appreciate that employers may wish to reward their staff at the end of a day’s trading by permitting them to have a drink for a limited period... at the end of prescribed licensing hours. However, we have consulted the police and support the view of the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland that amendment 548 would open a loophole that would be open to abuse.

It would be difficult for the police to confirm whether the people who were drinking on premises after licensed hours were doing so legitimately or whether there had been a breach of the relevant provisions of the 2005 act. Amendment 548 would require the police, in monitoring the after-hours consumption of alcohol, to identify those who had been working on the premises at the end of the licensed hours. That would place an additional burden on the police at a time when they are already faced with monitoring the after-hours consumption of alcohol by the residents of licensed premises and their guests.

I therefore ask Bill Aitken to withdraw his amendment 548, albeit that he lodged it for the benefit of those who have been working hard.

The Convener: I do not accept the cabinet secretary’s argument or, on this occasion, ACPOS’s argument. I do not think that it is beyond the wit of man—particularly Strathclyde’s finest, or whoever else is involved—to ascertain who works on the premises. It would not be a particularly lengthy exercise.

The commonsense approach would be to consider how many people were enjoying the facility. If they were limited in number, it would be clear that they were people who worked on the premises, and a routine check could be done to ensure that there was no abuse. The other safety valve in that respect would surely be whether cash was changing hands. If people were on the premises and the cash registers were clinking away merrily, that would be a commercial undertaking and, as such, a breach of the spirit of what I am seeking to do with my amendment.

I find it deeply depressing that the cabinet secretary—who himself has been known to socialise from time to time—is taking a harsh view and, basically, a doctrinal approach to those who seek simply to have a genuine refreshment at the end of the day. Accordingly, I press my amendment.

The question is, that amendment 548 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)

Against
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Campbell, Alileen (South of Scotland) (SNP)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 548 disagreed to.

The Convener: Unfortunately for the licensed trade, the views of the killjoys predominate. [Laughter.]

Bill Butler: That was not said with your usual objectivity, convener.

Section 134—Occasional licences

The Convener: Having had the entertainment for the morning, we proceed back to business. Amendment 539, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 539 deals with an issue that Nigel Don raised at stage 1, which we thank him for raising.

Amendment 539 enables licensing board staff below the clerk of the licensing board to assess an occasional licence application and determine whether it should be fast tracked. If no objections or representations are made within the shortened notice period that the bill provides, the member of staff will be permitted to grant the application.

The provision removes a concern that was raised by Glasgow licensing board—and further explored by Nigel Don—about what would happen to an application if the clerk was absent, for example because of illness. We are pleased that we are able to propose an adjustment through amendment 539 to ensure that applications are not delayed through no fault of the applicant.

Amendment 539 also ensures that the determination of occasional licence applications may be delegated to members of support staff only when no objections to or representations on the application have been received. That clears up an inconsistency in the 2005 act whereby an occasional licence application can be determined by support staff even when objections to or representations on the application have been lodged.

I move amendment 539.

The Convener: Again, the issue is fairly straightforward.

Amendment 539 agreed to.

Section 134, as amended, agreed to.
After section 134

The Convener: Amendment 449, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: We have already made provision in section 134 to enable licensing boards to introduce fast-track procedures for granting occasional licences. At the request of the licensed trade we are introducing the same procedure for extended hours applications, through amendment 449.

Extended hours applications enable licensed premises to apply for additional hours—above those agreed in their licence—for certain specified events. In rural areas, a licensed premises might be the only venue that is available to cater for events such as funeral lunches, which by their nature are required at short notice. Amendment 449 enables the licensed hours of such premises to be extended at short notice to cater for such events.

We will expect each licensing board to update their licensing policies, indicating where the use of fast-track procedures is acceptable, but also to review their use in connection with the local licensing forums to ensure that they are being used proportionately. We believe that that is a reasonable measure to improve the working of the licensing system for the trade, licensing boards and the communities that they serve.

I move amendment 449.

11:15

The Convener: Thank you. I think that to some extent that addresses a concern that was raised in the committee’s report.

Amendment 449 agreed to.

Section 135 agreed to.

Section 136—Personal licences

The Convener: We turn to personal licence applications. Amendment 177, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 178 and 181.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 177 and 181 are minor technical amendments that will remove an inconsistency between two provisions in the bill that deal with the determination of personal licence applications. Amendment 178 is a minor technical amendment that will address a concern raised by Glasgow licensing board in relation to new section 74(8) of the 2005 act, which will be inserted by section 136(2)(c) of the bill. Section 74 of the 2005 act deals with the determination of personal licence applications by licensing boards. Glasgow licensing board was concerned that new section 74(8) could be interpreted so as to suggest that a hearing on a personal licence application could be held only after the application had been granted or refused. The policy intention is that a hearing may be held to determine whether to grant or refuse a personal licence application. Amendment 178 will change the wording of new section 74(8) to remove any confusion as to when the hearing may be held and make a minor correction to the punctuation of the provision.

I move amendment 177.

Amendment 177 agreed to.

Amendment 178 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 136, as amended, agreed to.

After section 136

The Convener: We turn to 24-hour licensing. Amendment 698, in the name of James Kelly, is in a group on its own.

James Kelly: The law at present allows the granting of 24-hour licences in exceptional circumstances, which is correct. There are special occasions for which 24-hour licenses are appropriate. However, such licences, where not appropriate, can lead to concerns in communities about the overconsumption of alcohol spilling over into crime and antisocial behaviour and having an adverse effect on communities. On licensing, it is important to listen to communities’ views, so local licensing forums have a key role to play in liaising not only with the community but with the licensing board.

Amendment 698 would give the local licensing forum greater influence, but, ultimately, the powers would remain with the licensing board. That would allow the local licensing forum to advise on the appropriateness of current 24-hour licence applications and allow the local licensing forum to make representations on existing licences. That would allow licensing forums to take representations from communities and make appropriate representations to the licensing board where it felt that such licences were inappropriate and could have an adverse impact on the community. Ultimately, the power to grant or revoke licences would remain with the licensing board. The amendment would give the licensing board the power not only to revoke such licences but to vary them if it thought that that was appropriate.

Amendment 698 is worth while. It would strengthen the role of local licensing forums, provide for some key communication between licensing forums and licensing boards, and improve the process of granting and monitoring 24-hour licences.

I move amendment 698.
Robert Brown: I am attracted, subject to the cabinet secretary’s comments, to James Kelly’s amendment 698. It seems that we have rowed back a bit from advocating the 24-hour city and the modern lifestyle that we used to hear about a great deal. In some areas, extended drinking hours are a curse to local residents, passers-by and the police. This is a genuine matter for local decision making in local circumstances. Amendment 698 seems to strengthen the hand of both the public and the licensing board in that regard. Subject to comments, I am sympathetic to amendment 698.

The Convener: I, too, have some sympathy with what Mr Kelly says. Licensing boards should take on board comments that are made by licensing forums. However, I am a little uncertain as to whether it is appropriate to state that in the bill. It seems to me that what is proposed is a matter of good and sound practice, which I hope will be adhered to, but the problem with such things is that if one puts them in a bill, even with these undoubted good intentions, they can be a little meaningless. As Robert Brown said, we have come back from the 24-hour licensing concept. My own view, for what it is worth, is that I see nothing wrong with 24-hour licensing, provided that the situation of the licensed premises is such that it is not going to be a nuisance to local residents and create the difficulties to which James Kelly, quite properly, referred.

This is a matter upon which one would expect the licensing forum to comment. I would find it profoundly disappointing if any licensing board refused to take cognisance of what had been said. I am a little uncertain as to the desirability of putting a matter like this in the bill, but I will listen to the cabinet secretary.

Kenny MacAskill: Convener, we all have sympathy with the points that you, Mr Kelly and Mr Brown have elucidated. However, let me explain why we have concerns about amendment 698.

Our position is that the licensing legislation already provides what the amendment seeks to achieve. Unlike in England and Wales, there is a legislative presumption against 24-hour licensing in Scotland. Licensing boards must refuse an application for 24-hour licensing unless satisfied that there are exceptional circumstances. The Scottish ministers’ guidance to licensing boards states that more detailed consideration should be given to any application for a licence that requests opening times in excess of 14 continuous hours. A number of safeguards are therefore in place that restrict the ability of licensing boards to grant 24-hour licences.

In any event, amendment 698 would effectively duplicate provisions that already exist in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. The amendment would require licensing boards to have regard to the advice or recommendations of the local licensing forum in determining any application for a 24-hour licence. However, licensing boards are already under a general obligation to have regard to the advice given or recommendations made by the local licensing forum under section 12 of the 2005 act.

Amendment 698 seeks to allow licensing boards to revoke or vary a 24-hour licence on the recommendation of the local licensing forum. However, licensing boards are already able to take those steps following a review of the licence under sections 36 and 37 of the 2005 act. Therefore, if a 24-hour licence is granted and subsequently causes concerns relevant to any of the licensing objectives, a licensing board can, under its existing powers, take the action envisaged in amendment 698.

The safeguards for local communities against 24-hour licensing are already contained in the 2005 act, and amendment 698 could undermine the effectiveness of those safeguards.

While I understand, and do not just sympathise with but agree with, Mr Kelly’s worries about the situation, we argue that we currently have the powers within the 2005 act, which was brought in by the previous Administration, and we therefore request that he withdraw his amendment, given the assurances that are currently in place.

James Kelly: I recognise, from the comments made by committee members, that we have rowed back from the original position on 24-hour licences. In my original comments, I said that such licences, as the cabinet secretary said in his summing up, are only granted in exceptional circumstances.

I am keen to give a voice to local communities, through the local licensing forums, on 24-hour licences. That is the purpose of amendment 698. I take on board the cabinet secretary’s comments and will reflect on whether the current legislation meets the requirements of the amendment. If I am not satisfied that that is the case, I will bring back the matter at stage 3.

Amendment 698, by agreement, withdrawn.
Section 137 agreed to.
After section 137

The Convener: Amendment 179, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: The 2005 act introduced a new appeals system based on the stated case procedure used in criminal appeals, as recommended by the Nicholson committee. A number of concerns about that system have been raised by licensing practitioners from the trade and licensing boards, concerns that were repeated by witnesses to the Justice Committee. The system has been criticised for being slow, time consuming and expensive. Amendment 179 will amend the appeals system to return to the summary application process used in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976, as requested by licensing practitioners.

I move amendment 179.

The Convener: The amendment acknowledges concerns expressed by the licensed trade and should be agreed to.

Amendment 179 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 694, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: We believe that those who operate licensed premises must carry a high degree of responsibility for the operation of their premises and the actions of their staff. No licence holder should be able to evade responsibility by staying away from their premises without fear of being convicted of an offence arising from an act or omission by a member of their staff while they are absent. In part, that problem was addressed in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, which ensures that there is a person directly responsible for the sale of alcohol on a licensed premises in the form of a designated premises manager, who must hold a personal licence.

However, for a significant and growing proportion of the trade, the present operational structure is that head office dictates the policies that must be pursued on individual premises. Often, managers have no freedom about what signage is used or what products are placed on offer. Therefore, whether or not the manager is the designated premises manager, how the premises operate is dictated from elsewhere. In effect, the licence-holding company can simply continue by sacking managers and not being held responsible for their actions.

The importance of holding the premises licence holder to account is best demonstrated by the attempts to tackle underage sales, the law against which has always been difficult to enforce. In the past, many licensees did not enforce that law as rigorously as they could have done, but that changed with the introduction of test purchasing. The threat to the premises licence encouraged many organisations to train their staff to ask for proof of age. Although an offence is committed by the server, such positions in the service sector and the retail trade are sometimes low paid, low skilled and suffer a high turnover in staff, so it is vital that adequate staff training is carried out and proper operational systems are maintained.

Currently, the licence holder can escape punishment by claiming ignorance of the conduct in question and cannot be held to account for failures to introduce adequate management systems and staff training. Amendment 694, which has been drafted in consultation with the police, ensures that premises licence holders can be held liable for a number of offences committed by members of their staff. Amendment 694 also ensures that premises licence holders are correctly afforded a defence of due diligence, where they can demonstrate the consistent steps that they took to prevent those offences from being committed.

Amendment 693 was debated with an earlier group and introduces the concept of “interested parties” to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.

Amendment 694 ensures that those interested parties may be prosecuted under many of the offences listed in the 2005 act for the conduct of their staff on the premises. The defence of due diligence will be available to interested parties, as it will be to licence holders.

I move amendment 694.

11:30

Robert Brown: I find the cabinet secretary’s arguments highly persuasive, particularly with regard to the defence of due diligence in relation to the management issue. However, we have had representations from the licensing law subcommittee of the Law Society of Scotland, which is fairly critical of amendment 694. It indicates that there will be considerable discouragement for large companies that currently hold premises licences and are obviously far removed, practically and physically, from the day-to-day activities within the premises. It seems to me that the defence of due diligence is an adequate cover for that kind of situation.

The Law Society’s subcommittee also raises the point that there would be significant issues with regard to administrators, receivers and trustees in bankruptcy, where there has not been the same personal control of management at that stage. I am not quite sure how everything would happen in terms of timescales and so on. Can the cabinet secretary assure us that the criticisms of the Law Society’s subcommittee are not, in fact, valid?

The Convener: My concerns are similar to those of Robert Brown. Clearly, I am totally sympathetic with what the Government seeks to do in the amendment in that, if someone is failing to administer, supervise and train their staff properly, they cannot escape the consequences of a breach of the 2005 licensing act, the most apparent one being the selling of drink to underage people. I can see what the Government’s intent is, but I am a bit dubious; we might be going a bit over the top. That view is explained very clearly in the Law Society’s submission. We want to think this amendment through quite carefully, cabinet secretary.

Kenny MacAskill: I disagree with the Law Society’s view. Clearly, in the circumstances of liquidations, we expect the usual practices to be in force and systems to be in place. For example, we expect that in the case of health and safety. We would be astounded if a large operating company did not seek to ensure that staff were trained in, understood and implemented health and safety legislation. We seek to take a similar attitude on licensing as it is inappropriate for someone simply to say that they sent out a notice three years ago, or whatever else. We would not accept that for health and safety, so we should not accept it in the case of licensing.

Are there difficulties for those who come in as receivers or liquidators? Well, of course there are complications, but it is about ensuring that you have the system and structures in place. Again, we would not expect a liquidator to say, “I’m only the liquidator, so I’m not implementing health and safety legislation.” Of course there are some difficulties for large companies, but they tend to have the appropriate staff. Frankly, if they do not, they should not carry out the operation. As I said, there is an analogy here between health and safety and licensing. We are simply asking that licence holders take responsibility for the right that we as a community are giving them to sell alcohol, and do not simply say, “It wisnae me.”

Amendment 694 agreed to.

Section 138 agreed to.

After section 138

The Convener: The next group is on the powers of licensing standards officers. Amendment 699, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 699 amends section 15 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 to widen the powers available to licensing standards officers. LSOs were created under the 2005 act and have the role of providing information and guidance in the operation of the 2005 act, supervising compliance by licence holders with licence conditions in the provisions of the act and providing mediation services for disputes between licence holders and other persons concerning compliance with the act’s provisions. In carrying out those duties, a number of LSOs have raised concerns about the lack of any powers in the 2005 act to enable them to seize documents in the course of an investigation of licensed premises. There are a number of consumer protection regimes whereby authorised officers can seize items in the course of their investigations. A number of LSOs have expressed the view that the lack of any powers of seizure in the 2005 act leaves them at a distinct disadvantage when compared with other consumer protection regimes. The effect of amendment 699 will be that LSOs will be able to call on powers that will enable them to take copies of documents found on the premises, including electronic documents that are accessible from the premises, and seize and remove any substances, articles or documents found there.

Amendment 699 provides protection for those wishing to withhold documents or information from an LSO on grounds of confidentiality or in the interests of avoiding self-incrimination. It also allows ministers to make regulations on the procedures that are to be followed by LSOs in exercising their powers and in relation to the treatment of items that are seized.

We wish to ensure that LSOs are fully equipped to carry out their compliance and enforcement duties effectively. We think that amendment 699 will assist in that regard.

I move amendment 699.

The Convener: As members have no questions for the cabinet secretary, I ask him to deal with the question of situations in which the seizure of computer material might have an inhibiting effect on the ability of the licensee to run the business.

Kenny MacAskill: A copy can be made of any document found, leaving the original on the premises. There are regulatory powers that enable ministers to revisit the matter. We are working on the issue. The main aim is to be able to access the information, not to retain it in perpetuity.

Amendment 699 agreed to.

Section 139 agreed to.

11:36

Meeting suspended.

11:45

On resuming—

Schedule 4—Further modifications of 2005 Act

Amendments 180 and 181 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Schedule 4, as amended, agreed to.

Section 140—Licensed premises: social responsibility levy
Amendment 182 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—
and agreed to.

Section 141 agreed to.

Section 142—Corruption in public bodies
The Convener: Amendment 183, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 183 seeks to remove section 142 from the bill. The Bribery Bill was introduced into the United Kingdom Houses of Parliament in late 2009 and became an act in April 2010. The act's sections extend to Scotland and modernise the law on bribery and corruption. The committee will recall its consideration earlier this year of the legislative consent motion for the Bribery Bill. The Parliament approved the LCM on 11 February. As part of this modernisation of the law, the Bribery Act 2010 repeals, among other statutes, both the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act 1889 and the Prevention of Corruption Act 1906 in their entirety. As such, section 142 of the bill, which seeks to make minor technical changes to both acts, is no longer needed.

I move amendment 183.

Amendment 183 agreed to.

Section 143—Orders and regulations
The Convener: Amendments 184, 540, 450 and 186, all in the name of the cabinet secretary, have all been previously debated. In the circumstances, and if no member objects to the question being put en bloc, I ask the cabinet secretary to move all four amendments.

Amendments 184, 540, 450 and 186 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 187, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 188.

Kenny MacAskill: We lodged amendments 187 and 188 following discussion with the Subordinate Legislation Committee after the introduction of the bill. Section 146 of the bill contains standard provisions that permit the Scottish ministers by order to “make such supplementary, incidental or consequential provision as they consider appropriate for the purposes of, in consequence of or for giving full effect to any provision of the Act.”

Section 146(2) contains the usual provision allowing orders under this section to modify acts or other enactments. Acts can be modified either by making express changes to the text or by changing the effect of the act without changing the actual text. In the bill as introduced, the effect of sections 143(3) and 143(4)(b) would be that an order under section 146 would be subject to negative procedure except where the order seeks to “add to, replace or omit any part of the text of an Act”.

In those cases, affirmative procedure would be followed for the order. The Subordinate Legislation committee raised a concern that the approach in sections 143(3) and 143(4)(b) would permit an order under section 146 that modifies the effect of an act through non-textual amendments to be subject to negative procedure. The effect of non-textual amendments to an act can often be as significant as that of textual amendments. Given that the bill impacts on the rights and liberties of individuals, we committed to the Subordinate Legislation Committee that we would lodge stage 2 amendments that would mean that affirmative procedure would be required for any order under section 146 that makes any modification of any enactment, whether through textual or non-textual amendments. Amendments 187 and 188 meet that commitment.

I move amendment 187.

Amendment 187 agreed to.

Amendment 188 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—
and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 392, in the name of Robert Brown, was debated with amendment 100 on 13 April, which indicates the length of the proceedings in dealing with this fairly complex bill. Are you moving the amendment, Mr Brown?

Robert Brown: As the section to which it relates is no longer in the bill, there is not much point.

The Convener: That is clearly the appropriate position.

Amendment 392 not moved.

The Convener: Amendment 549, in the name of Robert Brown, has been debated with amendment 379 and is of equal antiquity to amendment 392.

Amendment 549 not moved.

Section 143, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 144 and 145 agreed to.

Schedule 5—Modifications of enactments
Amendments 189, 451, 452 and 453 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on incest and related offences. Amendment 190, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 190 is a minor amendment to repeal the Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 in its entirety. The amendments made by that act have now been completely superseded. This modest contribution will help to tidy the statute book.

I move amendment 190.

Amendment 190 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 191, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 193.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 191 repeals one of the minor amendments contained in schedule 15 to the Criminal Justice Act 1988 relating to investigations of serious or complex fraud. The changes that were made by paragraph 111 of that schedule have now been superseded by more recent legislation, and that paragraph can be repealed.

Amendment 193 will tidy up the statute book. It repeals an amendment that was made by the Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, as the amended provisions will be overtaken by further amendments made by section 34 of the bill.

I move amendment 191.

Amendment 191 agreed to.

Amendments 192, 193, 386, 454, 512 to 514, 455 and 456 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on breach of undertakings—consequential modification. Amendment 457, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Section 41 adds proposed new sections 22ZA and 22ZB to the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. It makes provision in relation to offences that are committed while a person is subject to a police undertaking, and the provisions are broadly similar to those that apply when an accused person commits an offence while liberated on bail. Proposed new section 22ZB makes provision for evidential and procedural matters in relation to offences that are committed or dealt with under proposed new section 22ZA. Amendment 457 is consequential on proposed new section 22ZB and will ensure that the standard provisions in section 79 of the 1995 act relating to preliminary pleas and preliminary issues apply to proposed new section 22ZB.

I move amendment 457.

Amendment 457 agreed to.

Amendments 458, 414, 515, 194 to 196 and 459 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on the exclusively Glasgow situation and the exercise of functions by stipendiary magistrates. Amendment 695, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Despite its length, amendment 695 is merely a technical amendment to the Criminal Proceedings etc (Reform) (Scotland) Act 2007 to clarify that stipendiary magistrates may exercise the very same judicial and signing functions as a justice of the peace. It also clarifies that a member of a local authority who is not a justice of the peace may exercise the same signing functions as a justice of the peace. In each case, that is meant to be the obvious result under the existing references in the 2007 act to exercising functions in the same manner as a JP. However, we would like to take the opportunity to make the position explicit for the avoidance of doubt.

I move amendment 695.

The Convener: Will the cabinet secretary briefly fill us in on the situation with regard to sheriffs?

Kenny MacAskill: They are not affected. The amendment relates to the interaction between stipendiary magistrates and JPs. We do not believe that provisions are necessarily required, but there has been some doubt, and the amendment seeks to clarify matters. Sheriffs are above and beyond the amendment, which clarifies the position with stipendiary magistrates and JPs.

The Convener: Yes. I have noticed such issues in the past. However, I will leave that issue on the side.

Amendment 695 agreed to.

Amendments 197, 387 and 198 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Schedule 5, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 146 to 148 agreed to.

Long title agreed to.

The Convener: That ends stage 2 consideration of the bill. The work on the bill has undoubtedly been complex and difficult, and the fact that we have achieved what we have with, I would like to think, reasonable clarity speaks volumes about the commitment of individual committee members, the efficiency of the clerks and the co-operation of the Scottish Government. I am grateful to all concerned.

There will be a brief suspension before we continue with our other business.
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Church of Scotland
Presbytery of Edinburgh

Aware that the proposals of the Scottish Prisons Commission to establish Community Payback Sentences and a presumption against custodial sentences of six months and less are contained within the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill presently before the Scottish Parliament, I write on behalf of the Church of Scotland’s Presbytery of Edinburgh to express support for these proposals.

These developments will make a positive difference for many: victims of crime will be given the assurance that with prison reserved for fewer people in custody for longer periods, there is a greater chance of significant work being done to help address offending behaviour, reducing the likelihood of more people becoming victims of crime in the future. Offenders will be able to keep intact their family relationships, their accommodation and, for some, their employment and so stand a better chance of desisting from future crime. Communities will not only benefit from action to right the damage caused by crime but from the sense of communities being valued and relationships being restored.

The report “Scotland’s Choice” invites communities to support people who have served their time by giving people “a fair chance for a fresh start” (Section 3.51). We welcome this opportunity and believe that Churches already participate in such and will continue to want to do so through the pastoral care of the victims of crime, of prisoners and ex-offenders, and of the families of those affected by crime, through initiatives such as Fresh Start, GROW (Greyfriars Recycles Old Wood), through prisoner and community service placements, and the counselling offered by Simpson House and others.

We think that these proposals will go some way to making Scotland a more forgiving society. The Presbytery of Edinburgh therefore offers its support for the presumption against custodial sentences for six months or less and the introduction of Community Payback Orders contained in the proposed Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

Rev Dr George J Whyte
Presbytery Clerk
10 February 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Glasgow Bar Association

Observations and thoughts concerning Part 6 (Disclosure) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Relevant materials:-

1. European Convention on Human Rights
2. The Scotland Act 1998
4. Sinclair v HMA
5. Holland v HMA
6. McDonald v HMA
8. Heaney & McGuinness v Ireland, ECHR 34720/97, decision 21st December 2000
9. Article v Italy, ECHR
10. Starrs & Chalmers v HMA
11. Murray v United Kingdom
12. HMA v Murtagh (PC) 2009 SCCR, 610

There is a fundamental difficulty in presenting a GBA position in relation to disclosure as addressed within the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill (the Bill) at this stage.

As I write there is presently awaited a hearing upon an Advocate General’s Reference from the Appeal Court in Edinburgh to the Privy Council in the case of Murtagh set for 24th and 25th June 2009. The case of Murtagh seeks to settle the question posed in the earlier Privy Council case of McDonald v HMA wherein Lord Roger advised that the Privy Council awaited a case which would seek to address the contention that it would be appropriate for the Crown, in certain circumstances with reference to Article 8 of the Convention, to withhold the previous convictions of Crown witnesses which were not “material” in their assessment.

Section 85(2)(c) of the Bill makes reference to this thinking. This is a position which is being opposed in the case of Murtagh, and should be opposed by the legal profession as a whole. Article 6(1) is an absolute right and the disclosure of statements and previous convictions as earlier addressed in the cases of Sinclair and Holland affords to the Crown no ability to withhold any material by way of statement of previous conviction which is subjected to a “materiality” test.

It appears that the whole thrust of the Bill as far as matters of disclosure is concerned is to attempt to narrow the scope of material which would be provided to the defence and second, adjudge upon the “materiality” of that information as decided by the Crown themselves.
This would not in my opinion be Convention compliant.

Further, the Bill seeks to differentiate between solemn and summary cases, both in relation to the information to be disclosed, and in relation to the duties upon the defence in order to trigger disclosure.

Paragraphs (d) and (e) of section 85(2) of the Bill make this differential explicit.

Paragraph (d) states, as far as solemn cases are concerned, that statements of witnesses are to be disclosed but only those whom the prosecutor intends to call in the proceedings. Paragraph (e) states that in summary cases the statements of witnesses shall be disclosed from witnesses whom the prosecutor intends to lead in evidence.

There is a subtle but very important difference. In paragraph (d) the prosecutor intends to delimit his responsibilities for disclosure to those persons identified on his list of witnesses. In paragraph (e) the Crown seeks to delimit the circumstance even further to those witnesses the prosecutor actually intends to lead in evidence.

This shall be a sharp deflection away from the present circumstance of disclosure where the Crown are presently required to disclose to the defence all statements ingathered by the Crown in relation to potential witnesses in the case. Paragraphs (d) and (e) are a clear attempt by the Crown to prevent enquiry by the defence in line with the accused’s Article 6 rights.

This is to be seen as a very serious retrograde step, not only actively delimiting the accused’s Convention rights but nurturing a culture of secrecy and ownership of the statements ingathered in a case which is reflective of pre-Convention proceedings.

The Scottish Government needs to be reminded that Convention rights require to be “practical and effective” and not “hypothetical and illusive”. (Article v Italy, ECHR).

Sections 86 – 90 of the Bill deal in general terms with the prosecutor’s duty to ensure the ingathering of information from all agencies involved in the investigation of crime, and the dissemination of that information to the defence. This is in line with perceived practice within the English jurisdiction and reflects to a degree, comments made in the prior cases of Holland, Sinclair and McDonald.

However, section 86(6) of the Bill introduces categories of information without specifying in any detail what the categories propose to represent. The categories themselves are identified as sensitive, highly sensitive and non sensitive. The Bill thereafter reflects within subsequent sections and subsections a degree of non disclosure or reticence to disclose information which is termed sensitive or highly sensitive. Again this flies in the face of the accused’s Article 6 Convention rights of full disclosure as articulated in the earlier European and JCPC jurisprudence. In short, the use of the categories within section 86(6) is a means of enabling the prosecuting authorities not only to decide upon “the materiality” of information to the defence but to restrict that information when the Crown determines it should do so.
The Scottish Government is to be reminded that the defence cannot “rely upon the intellectual honesty of the Crown” (Starrs & Chalmers v HMA).

Section 89(3) again illuminates the thinking of the Crown in that they specifically take to themselves decisions in relation to the “materiality” of information.

Section 91 of the Bill, exemptions from disclosure, specifies material which is not to be disclosed as prohibited by section 17 the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. There is however no undertaking within the Bill that the defence must be notified of this withholding of information where it should apply in any specific case such that at present as the Bill is drafted, there may be a withholding of information relevant to section 17 of RIPA but the defence are not informed that it is even an issue far less that they are being availed of that information.

Section 92 of the Bill seeks to enshrine in statutory format the pernicious, and creeping, practice of the Crown to “redact” information from any disclosable material. Again, this is a practical and ongoing exercise by the Crown in adjudging the materiality of information, whether said material is sensitive, or indeed simply superfluous, and thus falling to be redacted, without notification of any reasons for such redaction to the defence.

In such circumstances the Crown are given a free rein in relation to their determination of materiality or superfluity, and in relation to the “intellectual honesty” which is applied to the task.

Sections 93 and 94 of the Bill differentiate solemn from summary proceedings.

In short, under section 93 the Crown are under a greater onus of disclosure and explanation than they would be in a summary case. We cannot as a profession allow a differential in disclosure, and the stringency for such, to exist between solemn and summary procedure. The European Convention on Human Rights, Article 6, makes no distinction whatsoever between the Scottish concept of solemn and summary procedures in relation to the rights of the accused. The ease of operation of procedures in the Scottish jurisdiction is not a matter of any concern to the accused or the Convention and the Scottish Government must be pressed to ensure that Convention rights are guaranteed for all accused persons appearing under both procedures in all jurisdictions in Scotland. In short, disclosure must be equitable for the accused whether he is appearing in the High Court of Appeal or in the Bailie Court at Glasgow District Court. There is simply no justification in European jurisprudence for an accused person to be treated differently in either forum.

The driver, which is obviously a financial one as far as the Scottish Government and the Crown is concerned, is not acceptable as a reason for delimiting the Convention rights of any citizen faced with a criminal charge.

Perhaps the most pernicious aspect of the Bill is addressed in section 94 and section 95 of the Bill.
Section 94 is a section dealing with defence statements, solemn proceedings whereas section 95 deals with defence statements, summary proceedings.

The concept of the defence statement as either a means of triggering disclosure to the defence or as a means of “payment” for such disclosure is highly pernicious and corrosive to the interests of justice. The European Court of Human Rights has repeatedly condemned any attempt at compelling an accused person to self-incriminate or to make statement in relation to his case overruling the accused’s right to silence.

Although the right not to incriminate oneself guaranteed by Article 6(1) is not an absolute right it is a right which is highly jealously guarded and not to be abrogated without serious reason (Heaney & McGuinness v Ireland).

The Bill as presently proposed by way of the necessary provision of a defence statement by an accused person in solemn proceedings would be incompatible with Article 6 on the same basis as that found in the case of Murray v United Kingdom in that it would “in effect it destroyed the very essence of the privilege against self incrimination” as the “degree of compulsion” which had been applied through criminal proceedings would have been incompatible with the accused’s Convention rights.

It is notable that Bill as presently drafted does not advise of any sanction against an accused person for failing to deliver a defence statement. In my opinion the GBA should support a position whereby the proposed section 70A of the 1995 Act as outlined at section 94(2) of the Bill, be treated as an anathema to the interests of justice. An attempt to compel an accused person to set out “the nature of the accused’s defence, including any particular defences upon which the accused intends to rely” is not only offensive to the Convention but flows contrary to the historical Scottish position. The same proposed section 70A further seeks to require the defence to disclose any “point of law in relation to disclosure which the accused wishes to take and any authority on which the accused intends to rely for that purpose” as part of the accused’s defence statement.

There is absolutely no requirement in good sense for a challenge to lack of disclosure to be necessarily married to a requirement by the defence to disclose the nature of the accused’s defence. A mechanism for statutory challenge to lack of disclosure is capable of standing alone, as it presently does under Devolution Issue Minute or other Minute under the Human Rights Act, or Specification of Documents, without any requirement of payment for it by way of defence statement.

The circumstance under section 95 of the proposed Bill is somewhat different in relation to summary proceedings in that although a defence statement is not required in summary proceedings, it is required in order to articulate the Crown to actively review the information within its keeping as far as materiality to the case is concerned. The defence should not be placed under this onus as the onus is clearly upon the Crown as per the cases of Holland and Sinclair and McDonald, which is an ongoing duty to make full and ongoing disclosure to the defence.
Moving on to section 97 of the Bill, Means of Disclosure, subsection (2) states that the prosecutor may disclose the information by any means. This is a subsection that requires the attention of the defence agent in that there have been a number of occasions where it was necessary to seek disclosure of the original handwritten statements, which once perused, showed a marked differential between the content of the handwritten statements and the subsequent typed version of statement. Differential was noted on a number of occasions either by way of material that was edited out of the typed statement or material which was added in to the typed statement, or material which was in a wrong order from that set out in the original handwritten statement. Therefore the Crown should of necessity be required to disclose the statements of witnesses in their original format, and also provide the typed versions for ease of perusal.

Subsection 3 of section 97 again is a curtailment of the “facilities” that should be made available to the defence under Article 6(3) of the Convention, in that the Crown seek to control not only the method of release of disclosure material but further constrain the defence in relation to the time and place of perusal of same. This is simply unacceptable and disclosure materials should be disclosed in full and handed over to the defence for the defence to peruse same at their own leisure and not that of the Crown.

Section 98, Confidentiality of Disclosed Information, subsection (3)(a) restricts the use of disclosed materials to the “original proceedings”. There may be a number of occasions where a defence agent, perhaps dealing with the same client charged with a number of offences stretching across more than one complaint may be able to use disclosed information from one case relevant to another, perhaps in relation to an attack upon the credibility or reliability of Crown witnesses. The section and subsection is therefore drafted far too narrowly, and unnecessarily restrictively to the interests of justice and the particular accused in any case. This is most important given there are rather severe criminal sanctions envisaged by the Bill in relation to any unauthorised disclosure.

Said sanctions are outlined under section 99 of the Bill.

Section 100, subsection (3)(b) gives an opportunity to the defence to be heard in relation to seeking an order enabling disclosure of disclosed information to a third party. I would presume that in solemn proceedings that there would be payment for Court proceedings and preparations as per normal. However, if this is a mechanism which requires to be utilised under summary procedure that is a very significant additional portion of work which should be funded separately from present Legal Aid Regulations in order not to delimit the raising and articulation of such points in pursuit of the client’s rights under Article 6 of the Convention.

Similar funding issues are important in relation to summary procedure in relation to any application by the Procurator Fiscal under section 102 of the Bill, Application for Non Disclosure Order.

Section 103, Application for Non Notification Order or Exclusion Order, is again a matter of great significance for the defence in that the Crown seek to take to themselves non disclosure of items of information and also the authority of the Court that that particular non disclosure is not made known to the defence.

This is a very serious turn of events and should of course be opposed at every turn in that the defence cannot fully pursue the accused’s Article 6 right to a fair trial if matters of necessary disclosure are being withheld from them and also if notification that the Crown are acting in that way is also being withheld from them.

Section 107, Special Counsel, is a section which seeks to bring the Scottish jurisdiction in line with the English jurisdiction as detailed in the case of Regina v H.

Said developments within Scots Law should be vigorously opposed as it is as further attempt by the Crown to orchestrate the decisions concerning materiality, and also whether information is to be handed to the defence, or whether said decisions not to hand material to the defence are to be kept secret from the defence and should be vigorously opposed. Our Lordships in Regina v H were content that Special Counsel be selected by the Attorney General (equivalent of the Lord Advocate in Scotland). Therefore, in effect, even though the list of Special Counsel selected by the Attorney General is “approved” by “appropriate professional bodies” the “gift” of being Special Counsel would be very much at the hand of the prosecutor. This is a system which should be strenuously opposed as, as outlined in the case of Starrs and Chalmers, the “intellectual honesty” of the Crown should not be relied upon by the defence to safeguard the rights of any accused.

Again, these are issues which shall be discussed in detail before the Privy Council in the forthcoming case of Murtagh set for 24th and 25th June 2009 wherein the Advocate General shall no doubt seek the impra matter of the Privy Council for the imposition upon the Scottish jurisdiction of a similar system for Special Counsel within the Scottish jurisdiction as articulated under the draft Bill, as is already existing in the English jurisdiction.

As an overview, the thrust of the Bill is not simply as promulgated by the Justice Department as being a means of creating a statutory framework for disclosure to be made to the defence as was required under the cases of Holland, Sinclair and McDonald but rather, and perniciously, to restrict the scope and means of disclosure to the defence and also in certain circumstances, to withhold disclosure from the defence whilst maintaining the defence in ignorance of said lack of disclosure.

The necessity within the grounds of the draft Bill for the defence to give notice to the Crown of their line of defence is wholly novel within the Scottish jurisdiction a complete anathema to the spirit and wording of the Convention itself. Similar, and strident, opposition should be made in relation to the proposed system of “Special Counsel” which seeks to formularise not only the secrecy of proceedings in determination of the materiality of information which may fail to be disclosed, but also selecting at the hand of the prosecutor those individuals who are charged with making the decision. In simple terms, the use of a Special Counsel in determining materiality of any information would be a “Chinese wall” between the Special Counsel and the Lord Advocate’s office. Such a system would not be adversarial or public.
Update following decision of JCPC in HMA v Murtagh

The decision of the court in Murtagh, given that it followed a reference by the Advocate General for Scotland, is most significant regarding the treatment of disclosure throughout the UK jurisdiction.

The decision encapsulates not only previous convictions of all witnesses, but details of outstanding cases and prosecutors fines, (in short, previous convictions and outstanding cases, or PCOCs).

Lord Hope in the chair, adopted unanimously, stated that the Crown disclosure manual, June 2009 edition, shall require to be reviewed in the light of the court’s opinions such that ‘greater emphasis needs to be placed on the need for a generous approach to be taken’. [para 37]

Specifically, ‘the balance is in need of adjustment towards a general working rule that only those parts of the criminal history should be withheld that are likely to be embarrassing or damaging to the witness if disclosed to the defence and do not satisfy the test of materiality. Should a dispute arise which the parties cannot resolve for themselves, the procedure which Lord Rodger recommends at para 69 should be adopted so that the decision can be made by the court’. [para 37]

At para 69 Lord Rodger states – ‘If, however, a dispute arises which the parties cannot resolve, it must be decided by the judge. It is not for the Board to devise the appropriate procedure, beyond saying that it should not be elaborate. Basically, the Crown should place the convictions before the judge with a brief indication, agreed with the defence, of the matter on which the witness is expected to give evidence. It is then up to the judge to decide whether the conviction is material and should therefore be disclosed. There should be no need for submissions by either side.’

Arbitrary Crown redaction or withholding of information, in relation to PCOCs, has now been checked by the Judicial Committee. The principles laid down by the court being:

1) The Crown must disclose all PCOCs unless they are perceived by them to be –

   a. immaterial to the case

   AND

   b. embarrassing/damaging to the witness [to be viewed in the light of PCOCs already disclosed]

2) In the event of dispute, the Crown should advise the defence of their ‘difficulties’ and seek resolution with them.

3) If resolution cannot be achieved parties are to seek the determination of the court on the issue in dispute.
4) The High Court of Justiciary are charged with formulating a simple procedure to give determination in such disputes, which should not require direct submissions.

Gerry Sweeney
Solicitor-Advocate
January 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Peter Schevtschenko

I am concerned that there is a proposal to criminalise indoor paid sex.

I could understand in a way if this was meant to target only those persons who have paid sex with a person subject to violence or threats (as in England) but this proposal intends to criminalise all indoor paid sex.

What is the logic behind criminalising consenting indoor paid sex? Is it merely to punish those who freely participate? If that’s the reason then we are on the slide towards a totalitarian regime.

Gay men will be subject to persecution as happened in the past merely because money changes hands. Perhaps this is the hidden agenda?

The logistics of enforcing such a law, is it feasible? How much police time and public money will be wasted on a victimless crime when there are more serious crimes that take place - murder, terrorism, rape, arson, burglary, criminal damage, vandalism.

If this is just to send out a message then the only message I see is that a minority of people who are in positions of power take great delight in imposing their prejudices on others just to feel morally superior.

Peter Schevtschenko
24 February 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Amy Vergnes

I am writing in horror and disbelief at the news of this last minute amendment which proposes to criminalise prostitution and it's advertising in Scotland, and although I am based in England I would like to express my disgust at the apparent intention to police what consenting adults can and cannot do behind closed doors.

I am a working prostitute based in the North of England and have friends, colleagues and clients in Scotland, Edinburgh in particular. To wholesale outlaw our work is to force the responsible and legitimate side of the industry underground where workers are more susceptible to attacks and robberies as the unscrupulous will know we will not be able to go to the Police for fear of being arrested ourselves - this situation already exists in America. You will not stop men and women working as prostitutes, only make it more difficult and dangerous for us all.

The despicable practices of sex-trafficking (and the sex industry itself is NOT intrinsically linked to trafficking any more than catering, domestic service, manufacturing or agricultural industries are - do you propose to ban those too?) would be far more easily forced out if workers and punters alike could freely report suspect events, plus the proper police of existing laws on fraud, coercion, kidnap and rape. All of the practices that need to be stopped are already illegal, and legislation such as this does nothing other than put all sex workers at risk - why do those of us working happily, successfully and independently (and there are many thousands of us all over the UK) deserve to be punished because it is too much trouble to concentrate on those who deserve the full attention of the law? Why should we lose our livelihoods? As for our advertising, how do you propose to police the Internet anyway, especially bearing in mind that most of our websites are not hosted in the UK? Why should the Scottish taxpayers fund such a preposterous and unworkable law?

Some people object to prostitutes and prostitution because it offends their personal beliefs and moral sensibilities - that is entirely up to them and there are plenty of aspects of law and day to day that I also find morally objectionable. But this is the 21st century, and morals have no place in law.

I urge you to throw this patronising, abusive, ill-informed shambles in the bin where it belongs.

Amy Vergnes
25 February 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the International Union of Sex Workers

Response to amendments 11A to 11C to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

The International Union of Sex Workers is the only UK organisation of individuals themselves working in the sex industry. We are the people who see reality of the industry day to day. We are the people who will be living with the consequences of the decisions that you make.

We campaign for laws that prioritise and protect the human rights and safety of everyone in the sex industry, whether by choice, circumstance or coercion, and for the inclusion of those who will be affected in decisions which concern our rights and safety. Although the amendments proposed do not explicitly criminalise selling sex, they vastly increase the web of criminality by which sex workers are surrounded: this cannot be to our benefit.

It is generally the case that proposals for increased criminalisation of consensual adult commercial sex are based on the allegation that they will decrease violence against people in the sex industry, prevent trafficking and coercion in the sex industry, and dissuade people from entering the sex industry in the first place.

There is no evidence for these outcomes. Indeed research suggests that increased criminalisation at best makes no difference if measured against these outcomes, and that a range of harmful unintended consequences ensue.

- There is no evidence that demand for commercial sex is the primary cause of trafficking: trafficking occurs in the sex industry for the same reasons it occurs in other industries.
- There is no evidence that the majority of sex workers are unwilling. Research finds a range of reasons people enter and remain in sex work.
- There is no evidence that trafficking for sexual exploitation is demand led.
- There is no evidence that most purchasers of sexual services wish to buy services from the unwilling.

There is considerable evidence that criminalising consenting commercial sex is harmful both to those directly involved and to society as a whole – criminalisation has been recognised by UNAIDS and the UN Secretary General as contributing to the spread of HIV.

“In countries without laws to protect sex workers, drug users and men who have sex with men, only a fraction of the population has access to prevention. Conversely, in countries with legal protection and the protection of human rights for these people, many more have access to services. … Not only is it unethical not to protect these groups; it makes no sense from a health perspective. It hurts all of us.”
United Nations Secretary General Ban Ki-moon

Amendment 11A Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity
This seems intended to criminalise sex workers’ clients, i.e., giving the state the power to overrule a woman’s consent to sex, but is so broadly drafted that sex workers may be subject to prosecution as well as our clients.

The Swedish National Board of Health and Welfare has carried out surveys since the criminalisation of clients and in 2007 concluded “This is the third time we have done such a survey … once again … it is difficult to get a clear cut picture on the extent of prostitution.”

Don Kulick sums up the harm done to people in the sex industry by “the Swedish model”: “The truly surprising thing is not that the law impacts extremely negatively … The truly surprising thing is that politicians and feminist groups … resolutely ignore these negative consequences in their continual insistence that the law is good. … the law may indeed feel good for those who are only interested in … ‘sending a message’ they don’t like prostitution. But for those involved in sex work, the law … is a disastrous throwback to an era of violence, exploitation, persecution and police harassment that many of us thought could never be possible in a country that is supposedly so enlightened and progressive as Sweden.”

The only UK academic to repeatedly examine the role of demand in trafficking into the sex industry, Julia O’Connell Davidson, concludes: “…we could almost say that supply generates demand rather than the other way about… attempts to suppress the prostitution market, whether focused on sex workers or their clients, necessarily implies subjecting those who sell sex to what Radin describes as “the degradation and danger of the black market … it is … hard to see why anyone genuinely concerned with protecting and promoting human rights would place measures to tackle consumer demand for commercial sex at the top of their policy agenda” (Italics ours.)

Amendment 11B Advertising paid-for sexual activities
If made law, this amendment sends a clear message to everyone in the Scottish sex industry that our lives and our livelihoods are of no importance to our elected representatives. It is disingenuous and hypocritical to allow the sale of sexual services to be described as a legal act, and yet prevent us from advertising that legal service.

The amendment will directly push sex workers into the hands of (criminal) third parties as we will be committing an offence if we advertise our own (legal) services.

11C Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity
This amendment is the one that will have the most immediate consequences in terms of increased violence against sex workers, as it imposes a legally enforced isolation. Although all the amendments combine to infringe the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, this is the most direct breach - Article 20, section 1 states “Everyone has the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association.” Again, the breadth of criminalisation means that everyone associated with sex workers if we work together in ways that increase our safety will be at risk of prosecution.

These amendments, if passed, ensure that the isolation, vulnerability and social exclusion of everyone in the sex industry are built solidly into Scottish law. The social and legal framework in which the sex industry is placed perpetuates our exclusion and increases our vulnerability to violence and other abuses.

Exclusion and vulnerability are perpetuated by those who refuse to listen to our complaints of actual violence and real abuses because they consider all our work to be violent and abusive. The abuses we suffer are used to argue for the eradication of our work, by those who dismiss the voices of sex workers that contradict their ideological positions.

Tackling violence against people in the sex industry requires listening to what we say when we talk about actual violence. That this can be done successfully has been demonstrated in Liverpool. With the assistance of specialist services, Liverpool police are achieving a 40% detection rate for rapes committed against street sex workers reported to the police; six times higher than the national average for all women. 90% of cases for violence against sex workers that went to court during 2005 to end March 2009 resulted in convictions. To do this means treating crimes of violence – rather than the placement of advertisements – as a priority: there is an inherent contradiction between the police role of protection and enforcement.

A community's worth is measured by the way it treats the most vulnerable. We ask that the Scottish government treat women, men and transgender people who sell sex and adult entertainment services as equal members of society and pursue policies that prioritise our rights and safety.

26 February 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Margo MacDonald MSP

Amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill in the name of Trish Godman - Offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities

My reason for asking that these points on the amendments on paid-for sexual activities in my name and that of Trish Godman should be circulated to Justice Committee members is that following two surgical procedures last week, I cannot be sure that I will be fit enough to attend the committee when the amendments are considered.

In general, I would seek to persuade the committee that although proposed for laudable reasons, the amendments in Trish Godman’s name should be rejected.

Firstly, the term “sexual activities” is too imprecise to withstand examination. Ms Godman casts her prohibitive net too wide by trying to net with catch-all amendments such diverse activities as lap or table dancing, brothel keeping, escorting, massage, advertising and paid for sex.

For example, do “sexual activities” extend to lap dancing if there is no physical contact between dancer and spectator(s)? Is the test of whether an offence has been committed (a) that money has changed hands between the spectator(s) and the dancer or his/her representative(s)/employer(s), or (b) that sexual arousal was experienced by the spectator(s)?

If (b) is the determining factor, how will this be policed? Will this definition of sexual activities extend to the electronic or filmed transmission of lap dancing and its variants? Will it be an offence to view such activities in cinemas, or in the privacy of spectators’ homes?

As for “paid for” sex, does this extend to an agreement between two adults that for a sexual act performed by one on another person(s), an agreed sum will be paid, or a favour returned, for example, by the “buyer” ensuring advantage in obtaining promotion at work, or gifts e.g. jewellery being given to the “seller” by the “buyer”? How will such activities be policed?

As regards “advertising,” does this term extend to the wearing of provocative clothing? What is to be the determining factor in the event of a positive response? Will this extend to electronic images transmitted without description or comment on the subject’s reason for publicising such an image?

These amendments do not recognise the complexities of sexual behaviour and the contemporary means of accessing and providing paid for sex. The motivation to bring about an end to paid for sex has not resulted in amendments to existing law, or the creation of new laws that could be policed effectively without severely straining local financial and human resources. Were these to become law, paid for sex would be driven underground, away from the Police, away from the support services for the victims of the sex trade's possible violence and exploitation.
Reject these amendments, please.

Amendments in the name of Margo MacDonald

The amendments in my name echo, to a greater or lesser degree, the de facto situation in Scotland’s cities following the discontinuation of the “management zone” policies introduced by Lothian and Borders and Grampian Police for the better management of street prostitution in their areas.

The pattern of prostitution has changed following the change in the law on so-called “kerb-crawling.” Although some street prostitution is still obvious in Glasgow, and less so in Aberdeen and Edinburgh, paid for sex is now more commonly available indoors. Contact between potential buyers and sellers is by mobile phone or via the internet.

My amendments are closer to the actual situation that now exists in regard to prostitution, and if enacted, would be more likely to produce local policies customised to the needs of local communities as well as minimising the potential harm associated with the provision of sexual services.

I commend these amendments to the committee as pragmatic, relevant and more likely to achieve a better situation as regards paid for sex than Ms Godman’s amendments.

Margo MacDonald MSP
1 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Terrence Higgins Trust

I am writing in relation to the Stage 2 amendments to the above Bill lodged by Trish Godman MSP in respect of ‘offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities.’

Terrence Higgins Trust (THT) is the UK’s largest HIV and sexual health charity, providing a wide range of services for people living with, affected by or at risk of HIV and STIs. We work across Scotland in areas including Ayrshire & Arran, Lanarkshire, Grampian, Highland and Argyll & Bute and have centres in Glasgow, Aberdeen and Inverness. Women and men involved in prostitution can be at increased risk of sexual ill health and as such they are a group of people that we aim to work with and support.

The amendments lodged cover a complex range of issues and the purpose of our letter is not to examine these. Rather, we would like to encourage the Committee to take evidence on these amendments in order to ensure robust scrutiny of a potential legal change that could have broad implications. In particular, we would like clarification of how these measures, in particular those which pertain to the ‘facilitating’ of paid for sexual activities, could impact on the provision of support services for women and men involved in selling sex.

We would be grateful of the opportunity to take part in any further written evidence taking that the Committee considers appropriate, particularly in relation to the health needs of people involved in selling sex. Thank you in anticipation.

Catherine Murphy
Policy & Parliamentary Officer
25 February 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Terrence Higgins Trust

I am writing in relation to the Stage 2 Amendments to the above Bill lodged by Trish Godman MSP in respect of 'offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities.'

We previously wrote to the Committee to ask that it consider taking further evidence on these amendments and we welcome its decision to do so. As outlined in our initial letter, our role as a leading sexual health and HIV charity means that our interest in these amendments relates to their potential impact on the safety, health and wellbeing of people involved in selling sex and the implications for wider public health.

Currently in Scotland, the prevalence of HIV remains low among people involved in sex work. However, the existence of complicating factors such as violence and coercion in the sex work setting, sexual risk taking, drug misuse and the movement of people from areas of the world with a high prevalence of HIV means that individuals can be at increased risk of sexual ill health and that the accessibility of appropriate support remains crucial.

Concerns have been raised at both a national and international level regarding the structural barriers which the criminalisation of selling sex creates; potentially compromising access to support, health and wellbeing, and human rights for men and women involved in prostitution.

The Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS, UNAIDS identifies close consideration of structural barriers as a key action for Governments around the world:

"In addition to service provision, structural barriers including policies, legislation and customary practices that prevent access and utilization of appropriate HIV prevention, treatment and care services must be addressed.

The risk of infection is highest where sex workers are most powerless and therefore unable to negotiate or insist on the use of condoms by their clients, or to resist violent and coercive sex. Therefore both social and structural efforts to reduce violence in sex work settings are needed."¹

More locally, the Royal College of Nursing has in recent years expressed a number of concerns in relation to the impact which the criminalisation of selling sex has on access to healthcare services and support for people involved in prostitution.

¹ http://www.unaids.org/en/PolicyAndPractice/KeyPopulations/SexWorkers/default.asp

With regards to the amendments proposed, we understand that amendment 8* 11A: ‘Engaging in a paid for sexual activity’ aims to further move the focus of criminalisation away from the seller towards the purchaser of sex. However, in the absence of a repeal or significant review of Section 46 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act we are concerned that these amendments can only serve to provide further opportunities to criminalise and marginalise men and women involved in selling sex and subsequently strengthen structural barriers to support and services.

Specifically, we are concerned that a complete ban on the advertising of paid for sexual activity, as outlined in amendment 11B, could serve to disempower individuals who are working independently; potentially making them more vulnerable to engaging with or being exploited by third parties or entering into more dangerous situations. In other areas of the UK where enforcement of the law has been tightened we have seen our service users taking more risks (working alone, working in places they are unfamiliar with, seeing clients they are unsure about etc).

Similarly, we are anxious that amendment 11C: ‘Facilitating engagement in a paid for sexual activity;’ will negatively impact on the arrangements which people selling sex may make to enhance their personal safety, such as working together with additional support. We appreciate that the aim of this amendment is to address coercion by third parties. However, the concept of ‘facilitation’ as outlined in the amendment is broad enough to potentially criminalise people working in a supportative capacity either as instructed by the person selling sex for reasons of safety in the case of reception workers or cleaners, or in terms of outreach provided by agencies or organizations. In the case of off street sex work, we would expect that access for support agencies into premises where sex was being sold could be made considerably more difficult by this amendment. Again we are concerned that this amendment could also result in more people entering into risky or isolated situations.

We entirely understand that there is eagerness to try to improve the situation for women and men involved in sex work in Scotland. However, we do not believe that legislating in this way will achieve that aim. Much more has to be done to increase our understanding of the health and social justice concerns and needs of people who sell sex in Scotland before truly informed decisions on legislation can be taken.

The Expert Group on Prostitution set up in 2003 was intended to examine, amongst other things, the health and social justice issues surrounding the selling of sex in Scotland. The Group elected to break down their review into three in-depth reports over a number of years. The first report Being Outside, http://www.rcn.org.uk/newsevents/press_releases/uk/rcn_reacts_to_government_decision_to_drop_key_amendments_on_sex_workers_from_criminal_justice_and_immigration_bill published in December 2004 focussed on the issues for women involved in selling sex in on street environments. The second and third reports were earmarked to examine the issues for women in off street locations and for men involved in selling sex respectively.

A number of considerations, including the time constraints imposed by the Scottish Parliamentary elections in 2007, meant that the group did not complete the latter reports. THT believes that these reports could have made a significant contribution to informing understanding and future policy on two significantly marginalised and unseen populations.

A renewed commitment to honour the review process outlined by the Expert Group on Prostitution in 2003, ensuring that the health and social justice issues of these vulnerable groups are examined, would be a welcome way to move consideration of this issue forward. Legislating in the absence of such work could have a number of unforeseen implications and could further marginalise or compromise the safety of women and men involved in sex work.

Thank you in anticipation of your consideration

Catherine Murphy
Policy and Parliamentary Officer
17 March 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2
Written submission from Violette Dew

I am writing this email to express my concern about the proposed amendment to the Scottish Police Bill. It is a constant struggle now with restrictions and legalities to work in a safe and productive way as a sex worker. This current proposal on the table will only endanger sex workers and push the industry underground, where we will have to not only deal with the aforementioned restrictions and legalities, but also a very real criminal threat and endangerment of our lives. At the end of the day, we just wish to work in peace, pay our taxes, and live our lives in peace.

Violette Dew
25 February 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Laura Lee

I write to object in the strongest possible terms to the proposed amendments to the law regarding prostitution in Scotland.

I am an independent escort and have been a sex worker for 16 years. In my time as a sex worker I have come to gain an invaluable amount of first hand knowledge of the industry. At present, it is possible for sex workers to enjoy an open relationship with the authorities, and we can feel confident in the full support of the police should we need to report any attacks, robberies etc.

If prostitution is criminalised, those open channels of communication will be severed and an environment of mistrust will develop. I strongly urge you to consider that if we look towards regulation rather than prohibition, a workable solution can be reached for everyone. It is my firm belief that if the industry becomes more clandestine, it is then that the real criminals will emerge, those who will seek to offer "protection" to the women.

Turning to advertising, it will be impossible to monitor internet advertising in particular, since the vast majority of sites are hosted off shore and are outside the jurisdiction of the UK. The recent calling by Harriet Harman to shut down Punternet is an example of that.

With regard to targeting the clients, I fail to see why Scottish taxpayers should have to fund such a preposterous project. The real criminals to be targeted are those who traffic women into this country and force them to work against their will. Is it really an appropriate use of valuable police and court time to arrest and charge those men who choose to use the services of a sex worker? Surely our valuable resources would be better deployed in finding those women who so desperately need our help and prosecuting those who have trafficked them?

It is possible now to open a copy of a tabloid newspaper and make an appointment to go and visit any number of working "flats" around the UK. This is therefore an important link in being able to identify and assist trafficked women, so if that is outlawed, it will be far more difficult to trace them. To take that one step further, if we had a system of licensed brothels with regular inspections then we would have no need for street workers, the women could work in safety and it would open up the channels of communication between sex workers and the authorities.

In terms of our acceptance in society, these proposed regulations will turn the clock back 20 years and increase the marginalisation and stigma that we already experience, prostitutes are not criminals and should never be treated as such.
Finally, I am willing to meet with MSPs and discuss these proposals further.

Laura Lee
1 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Jane Scoular, Jane Pitcher, Dr Jo Phoenix, Dr Maggie O’Neill, Dr Teela Sanders, Professor Phil Hubbard

We write in relation to the proposed amendments to section 34 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill which seek to criminalise the purchasing of sex and related activities in Scotland. Given that these proposals were carefully considered and rejected by the Expert Committee on Prostitution in 2004, we are concerned to see their reappearance in the form of a late amendment to a more general bill. We write to urge the Committee to engage in a more extensive consultation over the amendment, a more detailed debate and create a more research and evidence-informed strategy of reform for the issues arising from prostitution.

The proposal to criminalise commercial sexual transactions represents a radical change to the criminal law in this area. No Parliament in the UK has ever taken such a step, particularly one that is not well supported by either public opinion or academic evidence from the UK or abroad.

It is important to clarify issues and avoid unnecessary polarisation on this issue. We fully support the intended aims of section 34 that is: to promote the safety of women and children, to address issues of vulnerability, to improve the welfare of those in prostitution and to create viable alternatives to selling sex. We do, however, question whether these aims can be achieved through the ‘seemingly’ simple solution of criminalising the purchase of sex and related activities and/or through the introduction of interventions which target the individual and leave the wider economic and social context of that individual untouched.

Prostitution, like drug and alcohol abuse, is multi-faceted and multi-factorial. Research from across a range of settings has indicated that simply criminalising one side of such a profoundly complex social issue will not solve the problems that the proposal is attempting to solve. Criminalising the purchase of sex has not, so far, produced any conclusively tangible effects in terms increasing the safety of women, or decreasing levels of male violence and exploitation in prostitution. There are only a small number of international comparators and these are with countries with distinctive cultural and social contexts. It is extremely difficult to measure the impact since much research has been ex post facto, but what credible research there is suggests displacement of sex work and further threats to the safety of workers¹.

Research literature from within the UK would indicate that attempts to further regulate or control the more troubling aspects of prostitution through the use of powers of criminalisation (of women or of the men who buy sex): (i) will result in displacement of prostitution (geographically or temporally) (cf WHAT WORKS); (ii) can potentially drive prostitution underground as women shift the patterns and places they sell sex away from places most likely to be policed, making women more reliant on third parties and engendering even more risky behaviours in the women; (iii) will not be easily enforceable and may prove extremely costly to enforce what is only a low level criminal charge and (iv) will not achieve the stated aims of the change in law. Criminalising the purchase of sex does nothing to ameliorate the social stigma and marginalisation that research has amply demonstrated produces many of the negative consequences of prostitution. More than anything else, criminalising the purchase of sex and using increased criminal justice interventions is a very blunt tool when the overall objective is to increase gender equality and social justice.

Given the complexity of prostitution and the difficulties of enforcing such a law, the real consequence of section 34 is likely to be only symbolic at best i.e. it will send a message. At worst, by assuming that the economic, social, welfare, educational, health and psychological factors of prostitution can be reduced to the issue of male power alone, the proposal to criminalise the purchasing of sex works to marginalise possible alternative political and legal strategies that might be more effective in achieving safety, security, equality and social justice for people in prostitution. One issue that tends to be forgotten in the political discussions is that two hundred years of research also tells us that for many women the choice is to engage in prostitution, as risky as it is, is at times a better choice. For some women, the choices are as stark as selling sex, shoplifting, stealing and/or robbery. Criminalising the purchase of sex will not stop women selling sex. It could, as research would indicate, lead to more ‘legitimate’, less violent or abusive purchasers of sex being harder for these women to find.

Given the equivocal nature of this evidence and the seriousness of the issue, it is one which requires much wider consultation and research-based evidence than this forum provides, given the range of other measures the committee will have to consider.

Notably, similar proposals were made but not pursued in England and Wales in ‘Paying the Price’ and ‘A Co-ordinated Strategy’ which was met with a substantial body of criticism from some of the leading academic experts in the field\textsuperscript{4}. Concerns were expressed specifically about the use of criminal law to tackle a complex issue of social inequality, the introduction of compulsory orders designed to exit women from prostitution and the lack of consultation with sex workers as stakeholders. These important issues do not appear to have been taken into account in formulating these most recent proposals, which have not been widely debated.

We would urge the Justice Committee to engage in a more extensive consultation with all key stakeholders which would presumably help to broaden out the current narrow focus of reform into a more inclusive, research-informed reform strategy. We would urge the committee to make a careful balanced assessment of this complex area before undertaking steps that are not based in credible authoritative, peer-reviewed research, arise from a weak consensus and will result in harmful consequences.

Finally we should add that all of these points are supported by research evidence which we would be happy to present to the committee.

Jane Scoular, Reader in Law, University of Strathclyde
Jane Pitcher, Independent Social Researcher
Dr Jo Phoenix, Reader in Criminology, Co-Director of the Crime, Violence and Abuse Research Group, Deputy Head of Faculty, Durham University
Dr Maggie O’Neill, Reader in Criminology, Durham University
Dr Teela Sanders, Senior Lecturer in Sociology of Crime, University of Leeds
Professor Phil Hubbard, Head of Department, Department of Geography, Loughborough University

1 March 2010

\textsuperscript{4} There are many such academic papers in a peer-reviewed journals, for a good overview see Phoenix, J. 2009. \textit{Regulating Sex for Sale: Prostitution, Policy Reform and the UK}. Bristol: Policy Press.
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Action Scotland Against Stalking

Scottish Government’s proposed amendment for anti stalking legislation.

I am delighted the Scottish Government is taking forward an amendment but having looked at the proposed legislation there are one or two matters which cause us some concern.

We feel that the omission of stalking as a specific named crime and defined behaviour is an omission which could lead to an abuse of this proposed legislation by those guilty of the crime.

Our major concern is that the Scottish Government’s proposed amendment is so general, it will result in no change in court sentencing, whereas if stalking is specifically identified as a crime where the behaviours involved are broadly categorised within a specific framework, it leaves no room for any ambiguity. This has already been achieved in many other countries and American States and not without good cause or reason. It narrows the focus of sentencing and gives weight to the severity of the crime.

Stalking is not just simply threatening, alarming and distressing behaviour but can be frequently a precursor to violence, rape and murder. Whilst any threatening, alarming and distressing behaviour may disrupt lives it does not necessarily carry the implicit or explicit threat of violent action and may not necessary cause the psychological damage commonly experienced by stalking victims.

It is for this reason stalking needs to stand alone separately and individually and it is only through this that the severity of the crime will be fully identified, acknowledged and appreciated.

Identifying stalking as a specific crime, rather than being treated as an example of threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour, will encourage the correct interventions to be put in place at a much earlier stage.

The Scottish Government’s proposal does not differentiate between threatening, alarming and distressing behaviour which can occur within Breach of the Peace legislation and stalking - for example: someone throwing a brick into a crowd of people as opposed to a dedicated campaign of terror conducted by one individual against another specific individual.

Stalking is not a general anti social behaviour: it is a targeted terrorist attack against a chosen individual. Stalking and threatening, alarming and distressing behaviour are therefore worlds apart in terms of behaviour, context, intent and impact.
The concept of stalking, what it is and what it means already exists within public consciousness.

Whilst the term stalking is a euphemism for a particular phenomenon which involves motive, intent and purpose it is none the less a shared global concept understood by all within every public and private domain of society and the term widely used by the media.

It is time our legislation utilised this shared knowledge and understanding and caught up with the reality of stalking and its deviant behaviours by placing it within its own legislative framework, which proves not just a clear legislative definition but an operational definition which identifies the motive, the mode and the perspective.

Society is well aware of what stalking is, but it is the courts, the authorities and legislation which do not.

Rhoda Grant’s amendment has set out to achieve this. It has recognised the disparity between public and legislative awareness and has attempted to close this gap.

Rhoda Grant’s amendment has also helped operationally define the broad categories of behaviour which constitutes stalking. Stalking consists of a broad category of behaviours. As we are well aware a stalker does not concentrate on one specific act of stalking or category of acts, but a constellation of several acts. It is the constellation of acts which is a very important element of stalking and these are defined within Rhoda Grant’s amendment thus providing clarity and better operational precision.

The individual acts may not initially be construed as threatening by the recipient but when viewed as a whole stalking can be identified as occurring.

It is important to avoid invalidation on vagueness grounds.

Whilst the law does not need to define the forbidden conduct with mathematical precision, it does need to distinguish the blurriness between lawful activity and stalking activity.

Again Rhoda Grant’s amendment has achieved this.

Stalking by its very nature is a silent and hidden crime describing behaviours between one individual and another and unless it is named and the behaviour defined specifically within a legislative framework it will continue to remain hidden thereby putting 1 in 6 women and 2% of men at risk.

Because threatening, alarming and distressing behaviour is such a broad term it is hard for implementation of legislation to be consistent across the board. By defining stalking as a specific and named crime, consistency of application of legislation will be easier to achieve and the amendment will be seen as having more power in the public perception.
The Scottish Government’s proposed amendment has failed to address key areas to protect victims of stalking behaviour.

Therefore, in conclusion, my argument is against any legislation which fails to name the crime specifically, accurately or appropriately. Placing stalking under a law which is not specifically tailored to this particular and unusual type of crime will result in it being unconstitutionally vague, when “the forbidden range of behaviour” is so poorly defined that a person or persons of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application, or it is so indefinite that it permits arbitrary arrests or discriminatory enforcement.

It is our contention that in failing to take this opportunity to define stalking as a specific crime the Scottish Government will be seen as having missed a great opportunity to address a social ill which is far more pervasive, damaging and dangerous than is acknowledged under the present proposal.

Any anti stalking legislation must set explicit, objective standards for a defendant’s actions, knowledge, and the effect of his conduct on his victim.

Whilst the Scottish Government’s amendment is welcome and deals with the issues arising out of the Harris case we feel we need Rhoda Grant’s amendment to address the crime of stalking.

Ann Moulds
Action Scotland Against Stalking
1 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the UK Network of Sex Work Projects

Comments on proposed amendments 11a, 11b and 11c of section 34 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

1. Background: about UKNSWP

The UK Network of Sex Work Projects is a voluntary sector umbrella organisation to which projects providing support services to sex workers and sexually exploited people can affiliate. UKNSWP is a charity which facilitates networking and the sharing of good practice in the provision of support services for sex workers. The aim of the UKNSWP is:

“To promote the health, safety, civil and human rights of sex workers, including their rights to live free from violence, intimidation, coercion or exploitation, to engage in the work as safely as possible, and to receive high quality health and other services in conditions of trust and confidentiality, without discrimination on the grounds of gender, sexual orientation, disability, race, culture or religion”

Our criteria for assessing policy and law relating to prostitution is that it should enhance the health, safety, civil and human rights of sex workers and enable the provision of accessible, quality and needs based support services. UKNSWP is also committed to a policy and practice approach based on needs assessment and rigorously collected knowledge and research evidence.

UKNSWP has 60 member projects (including members in Scotland) who offer frontline support services to and have direct contact with thousands of female and male sex workers throughout the UK. Member projects work with a diverse range of people involved in sex work and also sexually exploited people. Amongst our members are projects offering support to people across different sectors of the sex industry.

UKNSWP facilitates the sharing of good practice in the provision of support services for sex workers and promotes the health and safety of sex workers. Members are well placed to observe the impact of laws and policies on sex workers and on targeted services themselves. We also have associate members amongst whom are some of the key academic and policy researchers on prostitution in the UK.

2. Member consultation and concern about timescale for submission

UKNSWP only became aware of proposed amendment during the week of 15 February, hence we have been unable to submit a comprehensive response in the timeframe nor have we been able to carry out the level of consultation with our members that we would generally undertake on a specific piece of legislation. The UKNSWP Policy Group meeting (a networking meeting open to all members) was scheduled for 19 February so we were able to take these amendments to that group for discussion and feedback. During the last two years members have been widely consulted generally about approached to polices and laws to relating to men who paying for sexual services, hence we have been able to draw on that consultation material.

UKNSWP also expresses concern that key organisations that have a role in offering support to sex workers and people experiencing sexual exploitation, plus other stakeholders, may not have been made aware of the proposed amendments and process to respond to these.

Overall our main concern relating to all three parts of the proposed amendment are that they would be likely to make sex work in Scotland more covert and more dangerous, be likely to impede the work of social care and health projects in providing support services to sex workers and are unlikely to do anything to reduce trafficking or other forms of coercion due to their untargeted nature.

A number of international bodies recognise that frameworks of criminalisation of sex work are not conducive to the protecting the rights of sex workers, their safety and access to health social care and other support for sex workers.

3. 11a Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity

We read this legislation as being targeted at people who pay for sexual services and we read this amendment as criminalisation all people who pay for sexual services or “activity” as referred to in the amendment. We urge the Scottish parliament to consider our concerns for such blanket criminalisation of people who pay for sexual services. Are concerns about this amendment are:

- It does not address sex workers’ exposure to violence since violence against sex workers is frequently associated with refusal to pay (Kinnell, 2008). It fails to understand the dynamics of violence against sex workers in Britain. Criminalising payment for sexual services could increase this kind of violence and make prosecutions for violence more difficult. It would also inhibit clients from coming forward as witnesses in murder cases.
- There is already concern that the criminalisation of clients of street sex workers via the Prostitution (Public Places) Scotland Act 2007 has already undermined street sex workers’ safety by making their activities more covert and criminalisation of clients who patronise indoor workers is likely to have the same effect.
- It would oblige police to target a very wide range of clients, thus diverting them from pursuing those who are abusive to sex workers.
- UKNSWP also consider this approach to be ineffective and potentially counter-productive in addressing trafficking and coercion by making sex work more covert. It would also inhibit clients with concerns about coercion or trafficking from passing information to the police.
- Would be extremely difficult to police: bringing the police into potentially all situations where consenting adults agree to paid for sex activity
4. 11b Advertising paid-for sexual activities

We are concerned that this amendment if accepted would bring a blanket ban on advertising. This has a wide number of impacts and risks including:

- Preventing men and women themselves involved voluntarily in sex work using any form of advertising for their own services without them committing a crime. Hence it will bring into the criminal framework a whole group of sex workers who are currently not criminalised.
- Making sex workers more dependent on intermediates to find clients and host their advertising, hence leaving them more vulnerable to financial and other forms of exploitation.
- Forcing sex work further underground and more illicit, furthering the social exclusion of sex workers and marginalising sex workers from support services and other authorities such as the police.
- Further heightening the invisibility, and with that, vulnerability of sex workers to violence and exploitation.
- Making it more difficult for health social care, support services, the police and other authorities to identify sex workers and make contact with them.
- Increasing the control and power of organised criminals and exploitative and abusive individuals who are willing to take the risk of advertising.

In this amendment bans all advertising no distinction is made between:

- Exploitative individuals, for example those involved in trafficking who use advertisements in some way, and independent sex workers themselves placing their own advertisement (e.g. an independent female escort working for herself via a personal website, an independent male sex worker advertising via Gaydar, or two female or transgender sex workers sharing a working flat).
- Advertising that includes for example explicit sexual imagery placed in general public spaces and discrete advertising in discrete locations or specific websites.

We are unclear of the aims of this amendment. If it is intended to address trafficking and exploitation we are not aware of research that demonstrates that banning all forms of advertising of sexual services is effective in preventing, detecting and prosecuting traffickers and people who force people into prostitution.

5. 11c Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity

One of the consequences of this proposed amendment is that it can remove relatively safer environments for sex work to take place and can force people to work in more dangerous or exploitative conditions. It increases the possibility of sex workers working alone, working in more dangerous conditions, moving on to other venues without safety precautions.

As we read this amendment maids and receptionists employed by a sex worker could become subject to this law. A key safety measure in off street settings is the presence of a maid or receptionist (Sanders and Campbell, 2006)ii. Also in the situation where two sex workers work together by mutual agreement, but use a flat in the name of one of the sex workers, that sex worker would be subject to this offence.

As currently written this amendment would be applied equally to a receptionist working for an independent sex worker taking money from clients for the sex worker, a driver employed by a sex worker AND a trafficker who uses violence or threats to force someone to sell sexual services.

6. Concluding comments: law and policy to prevent and address violence against sex workers and enhance access to support services

Creating policy and law to address sexual, violent and other crimes committed against sex workers, exploitation of people in the sex industry, the trafficking of people for sexual exploitation, the sexual exploitation of children and young people, are supported and commended by UKNSWP. We want to see these human rights abuses addressed and perpetrators of such crimes brought to justice. Indeed our members are actively working around these issues and support people who have been victimised. However, these proposed amendments appear misdirected and it is unclear to UKNSWP how these will:

- Focus police and other criminal justice resources to bring exploiters to justice.
- Address violence against sex workers.
- Improve the safety and welfare of sex workers.
- Create a legal framework which encourage sex workers to access health and social care support services.

Since its establishment UKNSWP has advised those in government and policy makers to adopt laws and policies which:

- Prevent and address violence against sex workers, including appropriate criminal justice responses to sexual, violent and other crimes committed against sex workers. Also we encourage policy makers to avoid adopting laws which themselves create conditions that can jeopardise the safety of sex workers. The majority of projects in our network provide safety interventions and support for sex workers who have been victims of crime. We would urge the Scottish government to consider the implications for safety of this proposed legislation as outlined in this paper. We also urge the Scottish government to support initiatives that have seen real success in addressing violence against sex workers e.g. policing and local authorities treating crimes against sex workers as hate crime, investing in specialist staff within support services to support sex workers who are victims of crime (following the model of a specialist Independent Sexual Violence Advisor in Liverpool NB the “Merseyside” model as reported at the National ACPO Vice Conference 2009 has seen a large increase in sex workers reporting crimes to the police and in convictions for rape), supporting campaigns/schemes to encourage sex workers to report crimes committed against them, funding specialist projects to enhance their “ugly mugs/incident reporting schemes” and safety work.
- Improve access to a range of holistic support be that; health promotion, primary health care, harm reduction interventions, drug treatment, legal advice, housing advice and support, specialist support to migrant sex workers, specialist support to trafficked people and exit support amongst many other elements of support interventions. We urge the Scottish Government to consider the concern that the proposed amendments may further impede the work of social care and health projects and make access to support services more difficult for sex workers.

Rosie Campbell
Co-Chair Policy Group
25 February 2010

\[1\] Kinnell (2008) in the most comprehensive analysis of violence against sex workers in the UK “Violence and Sex Work in Britain”, Willan Publishing, found that a high proportion of the violence suffered by both street and off-street sex workers comes from those who do not pay for sex. At indoor premises the vast majority of violence occurs in the course of robberies. A substantial amount of violence to street sex workers comes from members of the ‘general public’, such as gangs of youths, aggrieved local residents and vigilantes. Violence from these sources will not be addressed by criminalizing paying for sex. Those who approach sex workers in the guise of ‘clients’, and then perpetrate sexual or physical assaults, are already very unlikely to be paying for sex. Kinnell found that re-examination of numerous instances of violence against sex workers indicates that a very high proportion of attacks arise in situations where the aggressor is not paying for sex, and so, by definition, is not a client. The confusion arises because aggressors frequently imitate client behaviour, to gain access to sex workers’ premises, or to persuade an individual sex worker to go with him to a location where she has no protection from the violence that he intends. She found that some attackers rationalize their aggression by claiming that they did not know their victim was a sex worker until she asked to be paid, and that this request provoked rage. She found many cases where attackers felt “insulted” by the suggestion that they “need” to pay for sex; they found it degrading to their self-esteem to see themselves as insufficiently attractive or persuasive to obtain sex partners without offering monetary inducement. She found that in most accounts of attacks that have taken place in these circumstances, it is clear that the aggressor has approached the victim in circumstances which show that he did know the woman was a sex worker, so must have anticipated that he would be asked to pay. She argues that closer examination of the language and behaviour of men, who use the “client disguise” or the “non-client excuse”, reveals common attitudes of misogyny and contempt towards sex workers, and numerous instances where rape and assault have been used to demonstrate their power, to deny that they are clients, and to deny the woman’s right to demand payment. Initiatives that construct a discourse of “shame” around paying for sex could further fuel the attitudes of this group of men. She also highlights the “discourse of disposability” which sustains cultural attitudes that shape attitudes to sex workers and urges responsible authorities not to adapt laws and polices which feed into this discourse.

Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Lieutenant Colonel R E P Spencer

Amendments in the name of Trish Godman

My attention has been drawn to certain (apparently classified as “minor) amendments to this Bill, currently before your Committee, proposed by Trish Godman MSP, which appear on page 59 of the Marshalled List of Amendments. I understand that your Committee has put consideration of these amendments off for a short while, to enable mature consideration. I hope that that consideration will lead to their rejection.

As a Scot, my view of this matter suffers, possibly, from the fact that I am an English Solicitor, but is helped by my career having been as a military prosecutor, which brought me into contact with the sex-industry, and its consequences, in a good variety of different jurisdictions.

I comment on the basis that whatever the merits (and for me, I am for reasonable control, rather than a futile attempt to abolish the sex industry) that human sexuality will continue to express itself in many ways, including commercial ones, whatever legislation may be passed to outlaw “paid-for” sex.

In my respectful opinion, the proponent of this amendment, which if passed into law would bring about a substantial change in principle, is wrongly seeking to insinuate this matter as a late amendment, in the less than honest hope that there will not be time for it to have proper consideration, and will simply be accepted without debate.

There is no doubt whatever that there are serious social problems in Glasgow and its environs, which are manifested by violence, drug use and street prostitution and other undesirable activities. I seriously question, however, whether driving prostitution deeper underground will help solve any problems whatsoever. Indeed, leaving aside the matter of making All-Scotland legislation to solve Glasgow’s problems, by attacking symptoms rather than causes, I would suggest that these amendments, if passed, will make things worse for the providers of sexual services, who are often presented as victims.

Intriguingly, this proposal, which is loosely, even sloppily, drafted, will penalise the poor man whose fifty pound back seat sex will be criminalised, but have no effect on the rich man who provides a flat, jewellery, clothing and so forth for his mistress.

Certainly there are women (and men too) who drift, sadly and unwillingly, into the sex industry, where they are abused, and, in a few terrible cases, murdered.
There are also many women who have taken a considered decision to enter the industry, in a wide variety of roles – I spoke a few years ago to one woman, who told me that she did not think it right that her partner should support her son, so provided for him through prostitution. I have met others who, deserted by the fathers, have decided that their children would benefit from private education, and found that the best way that they could finance that would be through work as “escorts”. The key in most cases lies in the departure, for whatever reason, of the husband, or co-habitee, leaving the woman to pay the mortgage and otherwise support herself and a child or children.

There are also Courtesans, who, intelligent, highly educated and cultured, have made a fully considered life/career choice.

Mrs Godman’s proposal seeks to criminalise all varieties of “paid for sexual activity”, which seems intended to cover everything from strip-tease, lap dancing, through telephone sex and safe escort work to dangerous back-street prostitution, and, indeed on into the “bondage and discipline” world, but seems, fundamentally, aimed at prostitution.

Currently, although the law, rightly, penalises many coercive and exploitative activities ancillary to the sex-industry, as well as soliciting and kerb crawling, for one person, alone, to provide to another person, for a money payment is not illegal – indeed it does, of course, provide a taxable income to the provider, which HMRC taxes with enthusiasm. (Unfortunately, currently, the law does act against the bodily security of sex-workers, by classifying premises where more than one person works at the same time as a “brothel”.)

What this means is that a woman, active in the sex industry has, at least nominally, the proper protection of herself and her property under the law, and, subject to the prejudices of police and prosecutors, can expect any complaint that she may make of assault, rape or robbery, to be properly and promptly investigated.

The current proposal does not make it an offence, per se, for a person (woman mostly) to sell her sexual services – but if the purchaser is a criminal, surely, the vendor is at least his accomplice?

If this proposal is accepted, I suggest that the consequences will be as follows:

- The sex-industry will be driven further underground, out of the reach of the various agencies which seek to help and support those involved.
- There will be substantial loss to the Revenue – a tolerated industry pays taxes, but an underground one does not!
- A surprisingly large number of hard working women, and men, will be deprived of their incomes, and thrown onto dependence on benefits from central and local government.
- There will be a considerable increase in traffic down the M74 to Carlisle, Preston and Manchester, which will not contribute to road safety, or to Scotland's carbon footprint but will put money into the English sex-industry!

These amendments should be rejected.

Lieutenant Colonel R E P Spencer
3 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Dr Lorraine Sheridan

The proposed amendment by Rhona Grant, MSP, is, in my view, too specific. Despite the fact that I will use the term ‘stalking’ here, the relevant research evidence would indicate that the term ‘stalking’ is not gainfully utilised in anti-stalking legislation. Widely drafted terms tend to lead to greater numbers of successful prosecutions. As such, “threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour” is preferable, as these terms are easily understood and do not demand definition. Employment of the term ‘stalking’ does tend to demand strict definition, which is not suited to this (perhaps uniquely) nebulous crime.

It is essential that stalking is loosely drafted in law as virtually any behaviour can, when repeated and targeted, constitute ‘stalking’. Examples of ostensibly routine and harmless behaviours include walking past the target’s house and asking the target out on dates. Providing examples of inherently more sinister behaviours in law would only serve to undermine how damaging ostensibly harmless behaviours can be to the victim. It is the chronicity of stalking that makes it unique (most interpersonal crimes are acute in nature) and presents a special case for particularly loosely drafted legislation. Case law around Europe presents a picture of legal practice that leaves more than enough room for stalkers to be effectively punished without a need for lists of definitive behaviours.

The specific stalking type behaviours listed do not cover what the now extensive empirical literature recognises as the primary stalking behaviours. Even if the list were reflective of the major actual stalking behaviours, it would likely be soon outdated as stalking activities are dynamic and alter according to technological innovations and social changes. European case law demonstrates that anti-stalking laws are usually interpreted with a lack of rigidity, and that this is beneficial in that it leads to larger numbers of stalkers being prosecuted. For instance, the Dutch anti-staking law is loosely drafted and sees 93% of all cases proven.

A real plus of Rhona Grant’s amendment is that fear of harm is not limited to the victim alone, and is extended to persons associated with the victim (subsection 2 (ii)). Research demonstrates that the average number of persons directly affected in a stalking case is 21 (principally children, other family members and friends of the victim).

Dr Lorraine Sheridan
Chartered Forensic Psychologist and Senior Research Fellow
Heriot-Watt University
8 March 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2
Written submission from the Coalition Against Trafficking in Women

Amendment 8 (Godman) to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

I write in support of an amendment to the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill that would create an offence of “engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activity.” The Coalition Against Trafficking in Women (CATW) supports this amendment because it is based on the understanding that any society that purports to encourage and defend women’s equality must reject any act or policy that institutionalizes the buying of women as sexual commodities.

Background and Expertise

I am Professor Emerita at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, in the United States. I have received research and program grants from the US Department of Justice, the US Department of State, the Norwegian Organization for International Research and Development Aid (NORAD), UNESCO, and other foundations to study prostitution policy in various countries and advocate for legislation that supports women’s right to be free from sexual exploitation. My publications focus primarily on national and international prostitution policy and legislation, international and domestic sex trafficking, and the health effects of violence against women, including prostitution, and human sexuality.

From 1994-2007, I was the co-executive director of the Coalition Against Trafficking in Women, International, an international non-governmental organization in consultative status with the UN Economic and Social Council. Currently, I am on the Board of Directors. I have specialized expertise working in UN, regional and national contexts where I have advised governments and NGOs on public policy related to the links between sex trafficking and prostitution and the negative consequences of decriminalization and legalization of prostitution. I have testified on prostitution legislation and policy before numerous congressional and parliamentary committees in Albania, Canada, Croatia, Latvia, Lithuania, Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United States and the European Union.

In 2008, the Attorney General’s office in Canada asked me to serve as an expert witness in a legal case that was a Charter Challenge to the prostitution laws in Canada. As part of my affidavit, I was asked to undertake a report on Sweden’s prostitution policy and on the consequences of the Swedish law that penalizes the buyers of sexual services. I will summarize below my major findings, which are relevant to the new offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity that the Justice Committee is now considering.
Findings from Sweden Relevant to the Scottish Amendment that would create an offence of “engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activity:”

The success of the Swedish model is confirmed by its results, documented in several reports of the Swedish National Rapporteur on Trafficking/National Criminal Investigation Department.

1. Sweden appears to be the only country in Europe where sex trafficking has not seen a substantial increase. In her report published in 2004, the Swedish National Rapporteur on Trafficking estimated that between 400-600 women were trafficked into Sweden during 2003. This is a number that has remained fairly constant since the law came into force in 1999.

2. The Swedish figures should be compared to trafficking figures in neighboring countries such as Denmark where there are no legal prohibitions against the purchase of women in prostitution. Denmark has a smaller population than Sweden (roughly 5 ½ million to Sweden’s 9 million), yet higher numbers of victims of trafficking. In Denmark, which has decriminalized aspects of prostitution and has no law against the buying of sexual activities, 5,500-7,800 women are prostituted every year, 50 percent of whom are estimated to be trafficked from outside the country.

3. Swedish police who monitor the phone conversations of suspects indicate that traffickers see Sweden as an inhospitable climate to set up business. The National Rapporteur further reports that the traffickers state that potential buyers are fearful they will be arrested, causing traffickers to change their prostitution venues frequently—a costly practice.

4. The police, who originally opposed the law, now generally see the law penalizing the buyers as an important tool in their fight against organized crime and sex trafficking. Europol, police forces in other European countries, and testimonies from women in prostitution have also confirmed that Sweden is not an attractive market for traffickers.

5. The Swedish National Rapporteur on Trafficking has stated that the number of those involved in prostitution has dropped 40 percent in Sweden, from 2,500 in 1998 to 1,500 in 2003, 4 years after the law was passed. The Swedish National Board of Health and Welfare has also reported that “There have been no changes in the extent of prostitution since 1999,” [and] “the current total is still less than before the new law went into effect.”

6. In 2005, a European Parliament-commissioned report concluded that Sweden’s legislation, with its penalization of demand, seems to produce fewer victims of trafficking than in 11 countries in Europe that were studied. The study was undertaken by the Transcrime Institute entitled “Study on National Legislation on Prostitution and the Trafficking in Women and Children.” It examined the way in which a country’s prostitution legislation influenced the number of trafficking victims.

7. Swedish women's organizations and shelters report that increased numbers of women in prostitution are seeking help and receiving many of the resources they need since the law penalizing the buying of sexual services came into force. For example, representatives of the Pros-Centre in Stockholm whose work is to provide services for women in prostitution state that “Of the 130 persons with whom they had contact during the past 3 years [2002-04], 60% have left prostitution permanently, and many women point to the Law as an incentive in their having sought assistance.”

I draw the following conclusions about Sweden and laws penalizing the demand for sexual activities. Men who formerly bought women in prostitution now think seriously before they do so, because they know the law will be enforced. The law against the purchasing of “sexual services” has had a chilling effect on sex trafficking.

Other Countries that Penalize the Demand for Sexual Services

Norway - The success of the Swedish model is also confirmed by a new 2009 law in Norway against the buying of sexual activities that was passed by a parliamentary vote of 44-28. The Norwegian legislation added two enhancements to the Swedish model: it changes the wording from the purchase of a “sexual service” to the purchase of a “sexual act;” and it covers the purchase of a sexual act outside Norway.

The Norwegian legislation criminalizing the demand follows other laws that penalize the buyers, all which have been passed since the 1999 Swedish law came into force: for example, in the Philippines and Korea. For the first time, these laws target the demand for prostitution that promotes supply.

One year after the Norwegian law came into force, police estimate that the number of women in street prostitution has decreased by 20 percent. Indoor prostitution is also estimated to be down by 16 percent.

The police in Oslo also report that there are many fewer buyers on the street. In 2009, 334 buyers were arrested, charged and fined. In Bergen, police report that advertisements for sexual services have dropped 60 percent. Bergen police have effectively monitored telephone numbers in these advertisements to identify buyers and have charged them. An added value to this monitoring is that it reveals a wider network of criminal organizations involved in prostitution and trafficking and their links to other criminal groups involved in child prostitution, pornography and drug trafficking.
Iceland - In 2009, Iceland passed a law criminalizing the purchase of a sexual service. Art. 206 states: “Any person who pays, or promises to pay or render consideration of another type, for prostitution shall be fined or imprisoned for up to 1 year.” The penalty for buying a child under age 18 for prostitution is a fine or imprisonment for 2 years.

United Nations - Likewise, the United Nations and several countries have made it a punishable offense for their military, peacekeepers and related personnel to buy women for sexual activities in prostitution. The human trafficking policy of the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) prohibits the purchase of sexual services by UN peacekeepers and related personnel. Even if prostitution is not a crime in the jurisdiction in which the peacekeepers operate, the UN policy prohibits the purchase of “sexual services” since it identifies prostitution itself as an act of sexual exploitation.

Objections to Criminalizing the Demand for Sexual Services: Prostitution Goes Underground?

The most common objection to legislation penalizing the demand for sexual services is that it drives prostitution and prostituted women underground. This objection is mainly anecdotal and comes predominantly from individuals and organizations who opposed the Swedish legislation before and after it was passed.

I examined these objections and the alleged evidence for them in my affidavit to the Attorney General in Canada. I also examined allegations of increased violence directed against prostituted women by more dangerous buyers.

1. What does it mean to say that prostitution and prostituted women “go underground?” Most of these allegations refer to Internet-mediated contacts between women and men who buy women on Internet sites. Prostitution and pornography industries have always taken advantage of technological innovation in videos, DVDs and the Internet. These developments are not a consequence of the Swedish legislation penalizing the demand.

2. In 2004, the Swedish National Board of Health and Welfare (NBHW) concluded that there is no evidence that the Swedish Law penalizing the buying of sexual services has caused an increase in prostitution-related contacts on the Internet. Their report maintained that the number of women who are prostituted via the Internet remained stable at around 80-100.

3. While there may be an increase of Internet advertising of sexual services, the same women advertise on many different sites.
4. Prostitution cannot go underground in the sense that contacts need to be established initially between women and those men who want to buy sexual services and, later, for the act of prostitution to take place. In most countries, the majority of prostitution takes place indoors. Internet sites, brothels and sex clubs are hardly underground meeting places.

5. Police report that they have not found any increase in the extent of violence against women in prostitution that would supposedly result from the presence of more dangerous clients remaining when the “safer” buyers leave the streets for fear of being caught by the police (NBHW).

Some Comparative Points with Other Countries

1. Countries that have no laws against the demand for sexual services, even countries that have legalized prostitution such as the Netherlands, report that there are increased prostitution services advertised on the Internet.

2. Since legalization of prostitution in the Netherlands and Germany, many women do not obtain working permits and do not register as the law requires because they want to retain their anonymity. Thus, they must go underground to avoid being arrested and penalized. It is more correct to state that legalization of prostitution, NOT penalizing the demand, drives women underground (Daalder Report, 2007).

3. Amsterdam, Rotterdam and The Hague have closed their prostitution tolerance zones because of the increased criminal presence and violence to women in prostitution that resulted after the new legalization legislation in 2000.

4. In 2006-07, Amsterdam closed down 1/3 of the window brothels in the city. The city concluded that these brothels were either in the hands of organized crime or its allies.

5. In 2007, a report commissioned by the Ministry of Justice in the Netherlands and authored by A.L. Daalder entitled Prostitution in the Netherlands since the Lifting of the Ban took a hard look at whether the legalization legislation had fulfilled its goals. It found that the situation of women in prostitution had not improved, their emotional well-being was lower than it was in 2001, and most women had not accessed the proclaimed social and economic benefits that were to follow legalization. Pimping is still prevalent with the added benefit to pimps of being legal entrepreneurs, and a large number of young women are induced into prostitution. Trafficking appears to be rampant as evidenced by the majority of foreign-born women in the legal and non-legal sectors. Former criminals run many of the brothels and sex clubs, and ties with organized crime permeate the legal and non-legal brothels.
6. Even the Netherlands proposes penalizing the buyers - A series of measures has been proposed to address the damaging consequences of the Netherlands legalized prostitution policy. In 2008, the Ministry of Justice announced plans to criminalize the purchasing of illegal persons in prostitution and those without licenses. Based on the fact that “There are still too many problems in the prostitution sector, including human trafficking,” the Ministry of Justice has sent a bill to Parliament to prosecute the buyers -- what the press has called “taking a step in the direction of how Sweden has been approaching the problem.”

Conclusion

Amendment 8 proposing changes to the Sexual Offences Act of 2009 that creates an offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity will place Scotland in the company of those countries who recognize that to discourage prostitution and trafficking, they must address the demand – the men who buy women in prostitution. Demand has been largely invisible in national, regional and international prostitution policy, but this is beginning to change.

It would be unfortunate if Parliament approved Amendments 8A-AD (Macdonald) because they seriously weaken Amendment 8. These amendments restrict the offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activities to those that “cause alarm” and are “coerced.”

In 2006, Finland passed legislation simply penalizing the buyers of coerced and trafficked women in prostitution. There have been few buyers arrested, charged and prosecuted under this legislation because it is almost impossible to prove coercion in the prostitution context, thus exempting the majority of buyers from the reach of the law.

Like all laws, the proposed legislation penalizing the buyers of sexual activities fulfills a normative function by prohibiting the sale of women for prostitution. Law is normative as well as protective and punitive. This is one of Amendment 8’s most important functions. The Amendment to create an offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity signals a country’s will to discourage the treatment of any woman as a sexual instrument and commodity. If passed, this new legislation in Scotland will serve as an international model for the promotion of equal rights and protections for the some of the most vulnerable women in law and life.

Dr Janice G. Raymond
10 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Roger Matthews

I have been engaged in conducting a strategic review in Glasgow over the last year. This review has involved conducting interviews with women working on street and indoors as well as with relevant practitioners.

It is clear from this research that controlling prostitution in its various forms requires that we address the issue of demand. At the extremes are coercive clients who threaten, intimidate and violent towards women working in prostitution who are seen as vulnerable targets as well as those whose use of prostitutes is largely ‘recreational' and who only seem to pay for sexual services because there is no explicit legislation deterring them from paying for sex.

Research carried out in Glasgow and elsewhere suggests that the majority of these clients are married or are living with partners or that they pay these women to engage in forms of sexual activity that their 'respectable' wives and partners refuse to do. The price for indulging these men's sexual appetites is hundreds of women whose lives are ruined while sending out a message to the wider community that buying the sexual services of women is a legitimate activity.

Considerable gains have been made in Glasgow in recent years in relation to reducing the number of women working on the streets and there are currently strategies in place to reduce the off street trade. Reducing the demand for sexual services would allow these gains to be extended and consolidated and it would also be advantageous to introduce legislation to control those who exploit and coerce women involved in prostitution.

Roger Matthews
Head of Crime Reduction and Community Safety Research Group
London South Bank University
10 March 2010
written submission from Rosie Macintyre

I am writing to voice my profound concern and disgust towards the proposed amendments to the Scottish Police Bill which will have a seriously detrimental affect on the lives of currently legitimate sex workers within Scotland.

As one of the many sex workers in Scotland who has made an informed and elected choice to enter such a profession, I am horrified to learn of the proposed amendments you are keen to introduce. Currently, as an independant escort I am able to work in a safe and legal environment where I can pay my taxes - as any other self employed professional - and work in the comforting knowledge that I have the support of the police.

Despite your pathetically poor attempts to mask this amendment as a positive change to the sex industry in Scotland, you are in fact - very naively - doing the exact opposite. Instead of making the streets of Scotland a safer, cleaner place, you will actually be creating an underground prostitution scene. It goes without saying that this will be a very dangerous and unsafe environment for woman and men alike to work in.

The problem of prostitution that you need to address is that of trafficking. Open any red top news paper and you will find a wealth of adverts "selling" woman. Why are you not focusing your attention on helping these woman and convicting the monsters who instigating these rings?

I find it astonishing that you believe you can eradicate the Scottish sex industry by simply putting these amendments into place. Sex workers will migrate south! Those that don't will continue to work in what will then be an incredibly unsafe environment. Wisen up!

It should go without saying, I strongly oppose these amendments.

Rosie Macintyre
10 March 2010
Sentencing for Knife Crime - Amendments 10 and 10A

1. The assumption underpinning both of these amendments is presumably that the proposed minimum sentences will act as a deterrent to those who might consider carrying knives. If this assumption is correct, then the incidence of knife crime would decrease. However, while many people believe that criminal sentences have a deterrent effect, there is no evidence to support this. A recent authoritative review of the international research literature by the former Director of the Cambridge Institute of Criminology, Professor Michael Tonry, concludes that there is little credible evidence that changes in sanctions affect crime rates. For example, neither the Californian three strikes legislation nor the zero tolerance policing project in New York, both of which were claimed to demonstrate reductions in crime, had no significant impact on criminal behaviour. In New York, the decline in crime rates which occurred had begun four years previously (1990-91) and continued through the process of the zero tolerance policing project and did so across the USA (where quite different policing policies were being pursued) and not just in New York.

2. Though it may seem counter-intuitive to suggest that the threat of sanctions does not exercise much influence on criminal behaviour, it is in fact relatively easy to see why this is the case. For punishment to have a deterrent effect on behaviour, certain conditions need to be met. The first of these is certainty: the prospective offender needs to believe that there is a very high chance of being apprehended. The second is celerity: the punishment needs to be immediate. The third is severity: the offender must experience the punishment as a significant ‘pain’ to be avoided. The fourth is intelligibility: the offender has to see the pain of the punishment as flowing (more or less automatically and immediately) from the behaviour. It is for all of these reasons that, for example, human beings learn very quickly not to place their hands in a fire. However, the reality is that none of these conditions can be applied in relation to sentencing for knife crime. Offenders know that there is a low chance of being apprehended; proper punishment can only occur after arrest, prosecution and trial have taken place; and so the link between the pains of imprisonment and the knife-carrying behaviour is both contingent and remote. Knife carrying is better understood as part of a problematic culture amongst certain young males, not simply an individual rational decision – and the measures that we use to address it must recognise this.

3. Judges already have the power to sentence offenders to a prison sentence for carrying a knife and do so regularly. These amendments are therefore unnecessary.
4. The culture of knife carrying is dangerous and undesirable, but the imposition of minimum sentences will do nothing to change this culture. It is misleading or misconceived to expect that it could. The Violence Reduction Unit promotes a public health approach to dealing with violence which is more likely to have a real impact on behaviour.

Reference

Professor Neil Hutton
Centre for Sentencing Research
University of Strathclyde

Professor Fergus McNeill
Scottish Centre for Crime and Justice Research University of Glasgow

12 March 2010
Amendment proposed by Trish Godman MSP: Engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities

The Justice Committee has pointed out that there is a need for evidence rather than opinion on this issue. I am an academic with considerable experience of research in this field. I will start with the one absolute certainty about prostitution from the academic literature. This is that there are many forms of prostitution and that harms are concentrated only where sex workers are afraid and can be manipulated by predators such as traffickers, pimps, corrupt police and unscrupulous business managers.

Beyond that certainly, there is a great wealth of high standard academic literature that provides evidence on prostitution but it is not clear what kind of evidence the justice committee are looking for. That the debate has focused on assertions may be because ultimately this debate is one about values and rights. What evidence is needed to discuss rights? What evidence is needed to show that people do not experience sex as violence and that receiving money from a sex partner does not render sex violent? Sex workers are very keen on preventing violence in their work and have no difficulty in differentiating sex work with a client from violence from an attacker.

Where sex workers advocate for their right to say yes to prostitution, the chief concern is about their fundamental rights to peaceful assembly, freedom of expression and opinion, security of the person and equal protection of the law, to participate in public life without discrimination or violence, freedom from arbitrary interference with their private and family life.

The current proposal to criminalise paid for sexual activity ignores the complexities of sex market variations and instead deliberately conflates prostitution (the exchange of sex and money) with some of the harms that stem from its criminalised organisation. Specifically, by conflating prostitution with violence and with trafficking, the current proposals ignore prostitutes' voices and their concerns that their rights will be ignored. Women and gay men in particular have campaigned and won the right to have sex without shame and on their terms. The proposed legislation would appear to reverse these social advances and to give the state the authority to over-rule consenting adults.

If evidence is sought on the impacts of criminalising prostitution, there are plenty of international examples including the USA and Sweden. How inferences are drawn from the situation in these countries depends on the view of the writers and again the arguments come down to values or competing morals. The only country to try to end all prostitution has been China and even with the full power of the Chinese state this was not accomplished. The only country to completely decriminalise prostitution has been New Zealand and the very recent thesis by Gillian Abel from the University of Otago is the only full report on the (overwhelmingly positive) impacts of this.

On the extent of this proposed legislation, the law applies to everyone and there can be few sexual relationships where there is no financial understanding. Just how will a couple prove that although sex took place and money changed hands that this was not prostitution? The answer appears to lie in establishing motive: whether sex was exchanged ‘for’ money or money was exchanged ‘for’ sex. Establishing motive is always a difficult thing to prove in court and with a law that would appear to apply to most adults in the country, the courts will be overwhelmed.

There is a specialist library collection on sex work at the University of the West of Scotland which may be consulted by all who are interested http://www.uws.ac.uk/schoolsdepts/library/specialcollections/uknswp.asp

Linda Cusick
Reader in Substance Use
University of the West of Scotland
4 March 2010
New offences in relation to stalking

History of Experience

My name is Hamish Brown and I retired in 2004 as a Detective Inspector on the Specialist Crime Directorate at New Scotland Yard after over thirty years service with the Metropolitan Police. Although I have a thorough investigative background, especially in relation to particularly serious matters including rape and murder, I went on to specialise in stalking cases. I am considered an authority on the subject of stalking and was awarded the MBE for my work in this area.

I first became involved in the issue of stalking in 1997 (before the Protection from Harassment Act 1997) when I investigated a protracted and complex case of an eighteen year old female victim being stalked by means of anonymous letters. These letters, which ultimately numbered sixty four over six months, were either sent to her home address or left on her car and were of a frightening and intimidatory nature. The perpetrator was finally caught through surveillance and observation operations and transpired to be someone the victim had previously casually known through working at a fast food outlet. During the investigation a second female victim, of the same age, came to light and who was subject to a lesser number of letters and over a shorter period of time.

There was no stalking legislation in place at the time and I considered offences such as threatening behaviour did not reflect the seriousness of the crimes. Both victims, although not physically injured, were traumatised over what had happened and I called for them to be psychologically examined. As a result of the examinations I brought one of the first prosecutions for psychological injuries with the defendant being charged with grievous bodily harm and actual bodily harm to the mind. The defendant pleaded guilty and was sentenced to four and a half years imprisonment. I was commended by the trial judge at Kingston upon Thames Crown Court and later by the Metropolitan Police Assistant Commissioner for determination, leadership and detective ability.

I was subsequently selected to research the subject of stalking under the Home Office Police Research Award Scheme. I conducted national and international research which involved liaising with police forces throughout the United Kingdom, prosecutors, charities and other interested parties. I also visited and worked with the Los Angeles Police Department Threat Management Unit (Stalking Squad) as well as the San Diego District Attorney’s Stalking Strike Force. I went on to produce the publication Stalking and other forms of harassment; an investigators’ guide which is an easy to follow manual. This was distributed throughout the UK and internationally and had to be reprinted to meet demand. I was awarded by the then Home Secretary (Rt. Hon. Jack Straw) as a winner under the Home Office Police Award Research Scheme.

I later went on research the issue of child bullying and created the advice leaflet Protection from stalking and harassment; a guide to minimising the risk to children. My work was acknowledged by the Minister of State for the Home Office.

Since retirement I have continued to be substantially involved with stalking and I lecture extensively to diverse audiences both nationally and internationally. My audiences in the UK have included to police, NHS mental health, probation, Rape Crisis, Woman’s Aid, domestic violence forums, universities and colleges and many victim support groups. On the international front I have addressed audiences throughout the United States and Europe. This has included being key note speaker in Houston, Texas when I addressed the conference of ‘End Violence Against Women International,’ in Beverly Hills to the entertainment industry and law enforcement and in Los Angeles to the Association of Threat Assessment Professionals annual conference. In Europe, whilst lecturing at many major events, I spoke in Kassel, Germany at a European Stalking Symposium attended by judges, lawyers, politicians and senior police officers.

In respect of consultancy work I have been commissioned by the Home Office to examine ‘witness intimidation’ from a stalking perspective and advised on the formation of national guidance. I have also been engaged with police forces, including the Metropolitan Police, to advise and to formulate policy. In addition I have advised with an Australian charitable organisation regarding the creation and wording of a stalking victims’ safety plan.

In the media I often appear on TV and radio giving opinion of stalking matters. I am also regularly appear to comment on other serious criminal matters.

Consideration of Amendments

It is my view is that stalking is a unique offence that requires specific legislation to deal with it. This is important as it will identify what is becoming an ever increasing crime and one, it has been proved, to be a precursor, on occasions, to murder and other serious crimes especially in the domestic violence arena.

What must be remembered is the acts in isolation are usually not criminal offences in themselves but it is the totality of the behaviour that counts. For example, it is not a crime to stand outside a person’s house, constantly follow them or leave innocent articles (such as flowers) on their car. This attention, if unwelcome, can be immensely upsetting for the victim although no actual offence has been committed.
It is necessary to have a lateral thinking approach to the crime of stalking to understand how the crime works. If someone approaches the police with a bleeding nose and complains they have been assaulted it is not difficult to see the physical evidence to support the allegation. In the case of stalking, however, the situation is entirely difficult and that is why clear law is required to deal with, what I describe as, abstract evidence. To illustrate this consider the following real life scenarios where there is no physical assault or damage but the actions have been subtle, not unlawful in themselves, but succeeded in terrifying the victims. These cases all involve a man stalking a woman but it must be remembered women can, and do, stalk men and there can be same sex stalking as well.

A man is aware his former partner dislikes a certain piece of music to such an extent she cries when she hears it. The reason for this is because it was played at the funeral of her younger brother who was killed in a car crash. The man telephones her during the day, knowing she is out at work, and when the message recording machine comes on he plays that music down the telephone.

A lady, who is estranged from her husband, is walking down the road holding her five year old son’s (John) hand. She receives a text message that says, 'John’s shoe lace is undone.'

A female victim answers her door one evening to find undertakers with a coffin to collect her.

A lady returns home one night when it is dark and goes to bed. When she awakes the next morning and opens the bedroom curtains she sees a grave had been dug in her back garden.

The case where a man was living with a female and when the relation ended he moved out but must have kept a key. The lady was in the habit of leaving post-it type notes around the house reminding her to do certain things. One day she was in the kitchen and left a note on the kitchen table reminding herself to buy some bread. She left the house for the afternoon to have coffee with a friend and when she returned there, on the kitchen table, was............. a loaf of bread.

To each of the above victims this was a personal attack but one that left no physical scar. It is of paramount importance that there is law that legislates for this behaviour and which is easy to understand, follow and enforce. In dealing with this somewhat mystic type of crime it is essential the law is focused on what the offence entails and what the ingredients are. This will help the police investigations with a framework into what can constitute an offence, it assists prosecutors in considering and conducting prosecutions, it will give the defence a clear break down of the crime and what they will expect to be proved against their client and will give clarity to the courts hearing the cases and, when appropriate, imposing sentences.
I am used to dealing in England with the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 which I welcome having specific legislation for a specific offence. There has to be interpretation of the alleged stalking acts and the words ‘harassment’ (which includes alarm or distress) and ‘fear of violence’ are used for the two offences. Although I find this good legislation difficulties have arisen with the police not identifying the stalking acts as crimes. Whilst this can be rectified through training it must be the case the law has to be easier to follow if there is a ‘list method’ as identified with the amendment proposed by Rhoda Grant. Furthermore this amendment mentions the offence of stalking and clearly legislates what the offence is about.

The Government proposal, on the other hand, although technically covering stalking behaviour, does not go far enough, in my view, in demonstrating it has identified stalking as a particular problem. It is my experience the words incorporated in legislation of ‘Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour’ can lend themselves solely for public order situations. It is my concern, with stalking being such a unique offence, and one that has been shown can lead to substantially more serious matters, this crime will not receive the recognition it deserves and will be lost in this definition.

I support the amendment by Rhoda Grant and commend it to you. I am willing to appear to give oral evidence.

Hamish Brown MBE
11 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Amanda Lewis

I am writing to lodge my objection to the amendment proposed by Trish Godman.

Whilst I would dearly love to see all forms of coercion and trafficking in the sex industry eradicated once and for all. I fail to see how making prostitution illegal will help anybody.

Trafficking, violence against women and rape are already illegal and more legislation won’t make them go away. In this case it will make them more difficult to find though. If what is desired is an “out of sight, out of mind” situation, then by all means criminalise prostitution. I and others like me will then, for all intents and purposes, lose our recourse to the law. There will be people who will use this fact against us.

I am an independent prostitute currently working in the North of Scotland. Should you - against all sane reasoning – choose to vote for this amendment, I will become a commuter. I will travel to places where the law is on my side, but not everyone will be able to do so. The less fortunate, the girls who may well be coerced etc will not be able to jump into their cars and pop over the border to England for a few days. They will be forced to work in back alleys, away from prying eyes. Without any legal way to advertise, they will find pimps to provide punters. Rather than help these people, this amendment will drive them underground and leave them at the mercy of criminals.

As independent, law abiding, taxpaying sex workers I would question why we are seemingly the subject of a sudden witch hunt? Why amendments are quietly added at the eleventh hour? Should we not have our chance to speak and defend ourselves and our industry? Since when have we been governed by Puritans who seek to legislate on our activities in the bedroom? Since when have sexual relations between consenting adults been anyone else’s business?

I urge you to reject this amendment.

Amanda Lewis
12 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Cassandra Bay

I am appalled at this last minute amendment, which proposes to criminalise prostitution and it's advertising in Scotland.

I work as an independent prostitute in England and carry out my business in a responsible and legitimate manner, as do the friends and associates I have in the sex industry. I cannot believe that anyone can fail to see that making prostitution illegal rather than regulating it is endangering our livelyhoods and more importantly our lives.

All I have to say has already been said by Amy Vergnes and Laura Lee and I wish to add my voice to theirs.

Cassandra Bay
12 March 2010
I write in reaction to the group of proposed amendments to section 34 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill the effect of which will, if passed into law, criminalise paid-for sexual activities in Scotland and would respectfully ask the Committee to consider the following grounds of objection:-

1. The Assault on the Liberty of the Individual: The proposed change in the law is an unjustified assault on the freedom of the individual, a freedom which in its present conception has been valued in Western society since the 18th Century. The French ‘Declaration of Human Rights and of the Citizen’ (1789), penned with the help of the later American President, Thomas Jefferson, states in Article 4: ‘Liberty consists in the freedom to do everything which injures no one else.’ The nineteenth century philosopher John Stuart Mill enunciated in his essay ‘On Liberty’ (1859) the principle that government should not forcibly prevent people from engaging in victimless crimes or offences against private morality. The touchstone of intervention by government is the ‘harm principle’ by which power can only be rightfully exercised over any member of a civilized community, against his will, to prevent harm to others. The respected American jurist, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr, expressed the harm principle succinctly as follows: ‘The right to swing my fist ends where the other man’s nose begins’. The mere act of parties privately engaging in consensual sexual activity for money is not a matter which justifies the intervention of the law.

2. A Breach of Human Rights: The proposed amendments are in breach of Articles 8 and 17 of the European Convention on Human Rights. Article 8 of the Convention specifically states that ‘everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.’ Article 17 prohibits a State from abusing the rights of its citizens. Both the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations and the European Court have treated sexual life as an integral part of a person’s privacy and autonomy and in a number of cases in recent years ruled that laws prohibiting consensual homosexual acts between adults violated the right to respect for family life, notwithstanding that these acts may be viewed by the public as immoral, shocking or offensive. It is well established by the European Court that adult consensual sexual activity in private is covered by the concept of ‘privacy’. In the recent case of Mosley v News of the World (2008), where Mr Max Mosley achieved a victory against the News of the World for publishing details of his sex life, Mr Justice Eady said ‘People’s sex lives are to be regarded as essentially their own business.’

3. Legislation, if any, should be stand-alone: The measures represent such a far-ranging incision into the liberty of individuals that if they were to be enacted at all, it should be through legislation purely confined to the issues in hand rather than being grafted onto and masked by an anonymous sounding Executive Bill.

4. The financial understandings of sexual relations: The underlying nature of sexual relations, even within marriage, always involves a financial understanding which may be defined broadly to include a mutual exchange of services to the equal benefit of both parties and where not, may amount to sexual slavery. The social reformer Mary Wollstonecraft (1759 – 1797) first articulated this. Social mores are presently so permissive that a man may take a woman to dinner on a first date and spent a couple of hundred of pounds on food, drink and entertainment in the clear expectation that the evening will end with a pleasurable sexual encounter. The woman may accept the date with the same expectation. Yet in terms of the amendments such an encounter could be interpreted as a financial sexual transaction through payment being made ‘in kind’ by the supply of food, drink and entertainment.

5. Oppressive Power of Arrest: Even if a case could be made for criminalising paid-for sexual activity, in terms of the last amendment of the group a constable is entitled to arrest without warrant any person whom he suspects is committing an offence. This in itself is an arrogation of power which cannot be justified or regarded as proportionate to the ‘offence’.

6. Prostitution as a necessary social safety valve: A person who supplies sexual services in return for payment is in fact fulfilling an important role in society as a necessary safety valve; this has been the case in all societies since time immemorial. A survey carried out in the United Kingdom in 2000 revealed that 10% of men in a sample of 11,000 over a given period had availed themselves of paid sex with a female prostitute; this percentage is likely in fact to be higher as fear of disclosure would have depressed truthful responses from the sampled group. The attraction of this service for the man is that he can have sex without any commitment to the woman allowing both parties to walk free from the encounter, both satisfied from their differing perspectives. Physical sexual satisfaction without emotional commitment is essentially the theme of the relationship between prostitute and client. It is well established by research data that married men with families occupying responsible positions form a substantial group within society who use the services of female prostitutes. Such men probably do so as a means of escape from the tedium of being tied to one long-term sexual partner, safe in the knowledge that their short extramarital encounter need not damage the lasting relationship with their married partner.

7. The happiness of the prostitute: The prostitute is also entitled morally and legally to his or her sexual freedom and happiness and to enjoy the full protection of the law. At the upper end of the profession of female prostitution most women engage in that occupation entirely of their own free will, without being controlled for gain or trafficked and independently enjoy expressing their sexuality without the emotional or financial commitment to one man. These women are not working in dilapidated conditions to support a drug habit and many of them are people of intellect, wit and education. They carry on their business in a self-regulated manner from clean and well-appointed premises with full respect and regard to their own health and that of their clients, with far greater care than that applied by the casual ‘civilian’ heterosexual society outside prostitution. Calling themselves ‘professional escorts’ they attract their clients by sophisticated internet advertising and discreetly enjoy the freedom and financial advantage which prostitution gives them with the social excitement of meeting and giving pleasure to different men, to whom they may act as unofficial counsellors, advisers and therapists; such women generally enjoy high respect from their clients. Prostitutes are people too and long term loving relationships emerging from this social interaction are not unknown.

8. The mistake of generalisation: The parties seeking to pass these amendments confuse the women at the higher end of the sexual services market with women working at the lower end who may be trafficked or selling their services to fund an addictive drug habit. Any legislator should try to understand the many reasons why a woman becomes a prostitute and to accept the fact that the prostitute may find fullness and happiness in her life by that occupation. If a woman is sufficiently courageous to overcome the social opprobrium of engaging in prostitution and accept the risk of exposure, by becoming a prostitute she re-defines her own sexuality in her own terms and takes charge of that sexuality to find a sense of empowerment. She makes herself available but at the same time exclusive only to those who pay her for her time which she decides how, when and where to allocate and to whom. She does not need to exist within a conventional relationship with all its moral obligations and instead offers herself to a section of society which is prepared to seek her out and pay for her company and comforts. She has freed herself from such relationships and can choose any partner she wishes entirely on her terms. The American philosopher Camille Paglia has said ‘The prostitute has come to symbolize for me the ultimate liberated woman, who lives on the edge and whose sexuality belongs to no-one.’

9. A legislative over-reaction: The range of amendments is a legislative over-reaction to the failure of the earlier legislation which criminalised the purchase of sexual services on the streets of Scotland resulting in that market being transferred to flats and houses. Where there is harm caused by the sale of sex by women who have been trafficked into Scotland or are engaging in prostitution to support a drug habit, bringing forth additional punitive legislation will fail, driving prostitution ‘underground’ and leading to a general loss of respect for the law and the legislators. The problems arising from harm to women where it does exist in the sale of sexual services will not be solved by punitive, prohibitive legislation but rather by active, caring intervention to remove or at least reduce the identified harm.

10. Difficulties of detection and proof: Proving that there has been a financial sexual transaction will be very difficult (a) to detect and (b) to prove beyond all reasonable doubt in a court of law. Will police budgets be increased to deal with the increased responsibility in the detection of the new crime? Will a new Moral Police be established to enforce the new law akin to the Moral Police which exists in Iran? The experience of the South African Police in enforcing the amended Immorality Act of 1950 which notoriously criminalised sexual relations between different races and involved spying on couples through windows and keyholes may be useful for the Scottish Police to refer to. It is however doubtful whether in the present permissive society the morale of individual police officers will actually support the difficult detective work needed to pursue what they may regard as a criminalised moral offence.

11. A Final Exhortation not to cast the stone: Prostitutes are people too and most are law-abiding citizens who in some instances occupy responsible jobs outside their sexual lives. They are morally and legally entitled to their own freedom and happiness and to pursue their avocation, without oppression, with the full protection of the law. These discriminatory and oppressive amendments represent a stone to be cast against the present and future prostitute and his or her client. They will do nothing to serve Scotland except to present her as an intolerant country in the eyes of Europe and the World. Members are respectfully exhorted not to cast that stone and instead pause to consider the wisdom of legislating against the harmless expression of the sexual urge which is the strongest instinct of mankind and without which there would be no Scotland and no Scottish Parliament. Members may also be reminded that the Roman Emperor Justinian, on whose Institutes the Law of Scotland is based, was married to a prostitute, Theodora, some 20 years his younger.

Christopher Isherwood
12 March 2010
About us

Eaves is a women’s organisation that provides high quality housing and support to vulnerable women. We support and accommodate women who have been trafficked into prostitution via our POPPY Project, whilst our LEA Project helps women exploited in prostitution in London to exit the sex industry safely. Eaves also carries out research, advocacy and campaigning to prevent all forms of violence against women www.eaves4women.co.uk

OBJECT is the leading human rights organisation which challenges the sexual objectification of women in the media and popular culture because of its links to discrimination and violence against women www.object.org.uk

About the Demand Change! Campaign

The Demand Change! Campaign was launched by Eaves and OBJECT in June 2009. It has three key aims:

1. To promote an increased understanding of the myths and realities surrounding prostitution
2. To call for prostitution to be seen and widely understood as a form of violence against women
3. To lobby for adoption of the ‘Nordic model’ which tackles demand for prostitution, decriminalises those selling sexual acts and provides adequate resources to assist people to exit prostitution.

For more information about the campaign please visit www.demandchange.org.uk

Following the submission of expert evidence, alongside a series of high profile lobbying, influencing and awareness raising activities, the Demand Change! Campaign was instrumental in ensuring the safe passage of Section 14 (Section 15 in respect of Northern Ireland) of the Policing and Crime Act \(^1\) through Westminster Parliament in November 2009. This new legislation makes it an offence to pay or attempt to pay for sexual services from someone who has been subject to force or exploitation, and it comes into effect in England, Wales and Northern Ireland on 1\(^{st}\) April 2010.

\(^1\) http://www.opsi.gov.uk/acts/acts2009/pdf/ukpga_20090026_en.pdf [Link no longer operates]
Overview

Eaves and OBJECT have expertise on the subject of sexual exploitation, therefore our submission relates specifically to the proposed ‘Offences of engaging in paid-for sexual activity’ in Scotland’s Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill. The Demand Change! Campaign wholeheartedly endorses the new proposed offence of engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, providing that it is the buyer of sexual services that is criminalised in these circumstances and not those who are purchased for sexual purposes.

Rationale

Prostitution is a form of violence against women

Prostitution is a human rights violation – which, whilst affecting some men and boys – is profoundly gendered and is defined by the United Nations as an act of violence against women². Treating women merely as sexual objects through commercial sexual exploitation rather than as individuals contributes to attitudes underpinning gender-based discrimination and violence³. For many women, poverty, marginalisation and vulnerabilities trigger entry into prostitution for their own survival or for the benefit of others. Consider the following:

- 75% of women in prostitution became involved when they were under the age of eighteen⁴.
- Up to 70% of women in prostitution spent time in care. 45% report experiencing sexual abuse and 85% physical abuse during their childhoods⁵.
- 74% of women in prostitution identify poverty, the need to pay household expenses and support their children, as primary motivators for being drawn into prostitution.⁶
- More than half of UK women in prostitution have been raped and/or seriously sexually assaulted and at least 75% have been physically assaulted at the hands of both pimps and punters.⁷
- 68% of women in prostitution meet the criteria for Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) in the same range as victims of torture and combat veterans undergoing treatment⁸.

---

² As defined in the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women.
⁶ Women’s Resource Centre, op cit.
• Women in prostitution in London suffer from a mortality rate that is 12 times higher than the national average.9
• 9 out of 10 women surveyed would like to exit prostitution.10

The harsh realities of prostitution are further revealed in the testimonies of survivors who approached the Demand Change! Campaign to tell their stories – please see attached.

The importance of tackling the demand for prostitution

Criminalising those exploited in prostitution fails to address the reasons that led to their involvement in the first instance – such as poverty, drug use or fear and coercion by a third party. Instead we must focus on the buyer – those who have the power and financial resources to actively choose to purchase women, men, girls and boys who have been exploited in prostitution, and in doing so create the demand that fuels the growth of the sex industry and associated crimes such as trafficking.

Indeed, the UK has multiple international and domestic obligations to tackle the demand for prostitution, in recognition of the harms inherent within it. The most important of these obligations is Article 6 of the Convention on the Elimination Of All Forms Of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), which calls on State Parties to: Take all appropriate measures, including legislation, to suppress all forms of traffic in women and exploitation of the prostitution of women. Other relevant international instruments in this context include:

• Council of Europe’s Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings (2005)
• Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948)
• UN Slavery Convention (1926)
• Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956)
• European Convention of Human Rights (1950)
• International Convention on Civil and Political Rights (1966)
• UN Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery (est. 1975)
• UN Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women (1994)
• UN Fourth Conference on Women (Platform for Action) (1995)
• EU Council Framework Decision on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (2002).

---

10 Farley, M., (2003), op cit.
The need for strong legislation

For the first time in UK law welcome attempts are being made to more directly tackle demand. Section 14 of the Policing and Crime Act will have the effect of shifting criminal liability away from people exploited through prostitution to those who purchase sexual acts, ensuring that buyers take responsibility for their exploitative actions. This legislation signifies an important step towards gender equality and social justice. However, this law, as it applies to England, Wales and Northern Ireland, does not go far enough.

Global evidence points to the fact that the most effective way to address prostitution is to fully decriminalise those who are sold for sexual purposes, while at the same time placing a blanket ban on the purchase of sexual services. This approach, which is commonly known as the ‘Nordic model’, has been introduced in Norway, Sweden and Iceland, the three countries that top global polls in terms of gender equality. Its positive effects are best seen in Sweden, where this legislation has been in force for more than ten years. Since its introduction there has been a dramatic drop in the number of women in street prostitution\(^\text{11}\), Sweden is a no longer an attractive destination for traffickers\(^\text{12}\), and the number of men purchasing sexual services has fallen significantly\(^\text{13}\).

Closer to home, evidence gathered from men who purchase sex also highlights the crucial importance and indeed power of legislation to tackle this exploitative behaviour. In a study of 103 London men who pay for sex, 55% believed that a majority of women in prostitution are ‘lured, tricked or trafficked’ and 50% said that they themselves had used a woman in prostitution who they knew was under the control of a pimp\(^\text{14}\). Similarly, 50% of 110 men who buy sex interviewed in Scotland believed that women in prostitution are victimised by pimps\(^\text{15}\). However, buyers’ knowledge of exploitation in no way deters them from using women in prostitution. In fact, the most effective deterrent identified in both research studies was the law – 89% of Scottish buyers and 85% of London buyers would be deterred by having their name placed on the sex offenders register, 84% of Scottish buyers and 83% of London buyers would be deterred by their picture and/or name appearing in a local newspaper and 69% of Scottish buyers and 80% of London buyers would be deterred by a higher monetary fine.

\(^{11}\) Ekberg, Gunilla (2008) Summary of Speech given at a conference organised by the Coalition Against Trafficking in Women Asia-Pacific (CATW AP), April 25 2008, Manila, the Philippines.
\(^{12}\) Ibid.
\(^{13}\) Swedish government, published November 2008 (Swedish language only).
Conclusion

In light of all of the above evidence, the Demand Change! Campaign urges the Scottish Government to take the bold and visionary move of fully criminalising the purchase of sexual services through the proposed new offence of engaging in a paid-for sexual activity.

In doing so, Scotland will not only be following the excellent example set by the Nordic countries in this respect, it will also be taking the clearest, most courageous and most progressive approach to addressing prostitution of all the nations in the UK.

This offence will be perfectly complemented by the accompanying proposed offences of ‘advertising paid-for sexual activities’, and ‘facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity’ as a way of tackling those legitimate and illegitimate ‘business people’ who profit from the sexual exploitation of others.

At the same time, the Demand Change! Campaign strongly recommends that measures are taken in Scotland to ensure that those who are victims of sexual exploitation are fully decriminalised, and adequate resources are injected into developing and expanding holistic support services to help those involved in prostitution to exit the sex industry safely and permanently, overcome the damage caused by it, and enable them to avail of other life opportunities including training, education and employment.

Ruth Breslin
Research and Development Manager
Eaves

Anna van Heeswijk
Campaigns Coordinator
OBJECT

12 March 2010
Demand Change! Women Exploited in Prostitution Speak Out

Shelly’s Story

I want you to imagine that you were me. Do not think of it happening to someone far away. Do not view the reality with detachment or with pity. Imagine being so dead inside that you cannot care what happens to your body.

To see that, I must take you back to my first night in prostitution.

On that first night, I was gang-raped. That was the test to see if I was suitable material for prostitution. When I say I was gang-raped, it was many gang-rapes over several hours.

Imagine queues of men raping you everywhere, inside every hole in your body. Imagine that it seems endless. Imagine that you go in and out of consciousness.

Then imagine that you don’t, cannot care. Haven't you learnt long ago, that your body is there to be damaged. That you have no right to say no. That your purpose is to service men in any and every way they can think of.

Johns know that they can do any violence to prostituted women and girls - knowing that the majority of our society will refuse to care. After all, it cannot be rape if the man has paid for it.

Angel’s Story

My partner’s addiction meant he needed drugs, needed money, and my body was a pathway to both. The word ‘pimp’ wasn’t in my vocabulary, though looking back I see that’s what he was.

Pornography was involved, first as a teaching aide, and later, I was made to be in it. Other men were involved, too, taking pictures, using me, laughing at me, hurting me, and laughing some more if I responded. I’d shake and vomit before, shake and vomit after, sometimes pass out with pain.

When I finally managed to crawl away from my partner, I was a mess. So when I saw an ad in the local paper advertising Escorts, I felt it was inevitable.

Life as an escort isn’t the glamorous, well paid life you read about in womens’ magazines. Put bluntly, it’s being paid to be fd, and because they’ve paid, johns [punters] are going to get their money’s worth. They expect you to do anything and everything, whatever turns them on. It was frightening – you didn’t know what you were turning up to.

Ada’s Story

When I was 23 I was trafficked by my boyfriend into prostitution.
My parents had thrown me out of the house, and my father had beaten me.

I was finding life very hard living with my friend, so when my boyfriend suggested that we move to the UK and get married, I was very excited. I thought it was a good chance to start a new life.

He paid for everything and we travelled together straight to London. I carried my own papers and travel documents. I was happy.

Three men picked us up from the airport. I thought they were my boyfriend’s friends. They took us to a house and while we were there, my boyfriend left. I did not see him go but after he had gone one of the men raped me.

They took me to a brothel and made me work there for six months. I had to have sex with two or three men a day and I was kept locked in at all times. I was exhausted as I had to see customers at whatever time they came to the brothel, so I was often woken up in the middle of the night. The men had guns and I was threatened a lot with physical violence, so I was afraid to say no.

I saw a lot of bad things while I was at the brothel. I saw the other women being beaten and raped. I was raped too.

I escaped at New Year, when the men held a New Year’s Eve party and I managed to run out of the back door.

I find it very hard to trust people now and I do not like myself. I can't believe my boyfriend did this to me.

Danielle’s Story

I worked for a woman who ran 4 brothels and would alternate between them. This was not a cozy collective of women helping each other out. This was a business and profit was what mattered. If I had my period I had to do my shift, if I was sore and exhausted I had to carry on. When I had to have an abortion and was still bleeding I had to do my shift.

Punters could be very aggressive. In groups they would have a ‘pack mentality’ and they would often be very rude and would be grabbing, slapping and touching us in the main seating area. They would often make very degrading comments about the way that women looked. The overwhelming feeling that I got was that they really hated us.

It was in saunas that I realised the extent of trafficking and the number of women there in that position. Some of these women didn't know where they were and were terrified. I worked with one woman who was talking about the fact that she and her boyfriend were going to get married and she was hoping to get pregnant and get out of the job. The next week she wasn't at work so I asked the other women if she'd got pregnant. They laughed and said that her boyfriend had sold her to another gang as she was becoming too much trouble. This was normal - something to laugh at.

Another woman came in one day with her head shaved and her finger cut off. I later found out that she had tried to escape from her trafficker and so he had cut her finger off as a warning. She was too scared to go to hospital so just put a bandage over the protruding bone.

If this happened in any other job you would be shocked and outraged but it wasn't really shocking. The whole nature of the job is people treating you as a thing, something to be penetrated and ejaculated over, something that shouldn't argue back, something that shouldn't display emotion. So you stop displaying emotion. You just try to get to the end of the shift.

Jo’s Story

I was thirteen when I started working. And I worked most afternoons/evenings after school. In my school uniform, no less. Not one guy ever, ever complained or mentioned that I was too young. Not one. In fact, it was quite the opposite - the guys were positively pleased that I was such a 'little slut, so young, and she f*g loves it too'. The same guys who had girlfriends/wives, and houses, and cars, and weren't perverts who f*d children, oh no, only strange old men in raincoats do that.

Different when it's a 'whore', though, isn't it? Because, hell, we're asking for it! Whether we're children or not. And tell me really, in your heart of hearts, if you don't actually think that a prostitute will be much more likely to die a violent and early death.

Then ask yourself why that should be. What it is about the sex industry that excuses violence towards its’ employees?

Laura’s Story

I was never the kind of prostitute that worked on the street. I graduated a year early top of my class, honourable, and accepted into University.

I know that often times people make the connection that only low class hookers who work on a street corner are the ones that end up hurt and abused. But that's a myth.

My clientele base consisted of names that groupies would wanna give their first borns for. I would accompany them on business meetings on their private jets to different functions to different conferences.

Still in the midst of all of this there were often times where I would be beaten or ostracised. If someone thought they deserved to get more than I was willing to give for what they spent, they would just take it.
Jo

No matter how fancily the trade is dressed up, the violence and disrespect are always there. Men regard buying a prostitute in the same way as hiring a slave that they can do with as they please, despite any laws or verbal agreements. It is that dynamic of prostitution that is so dangerous, and this dynamic will not change unless women are seen as on an equal footing with men, and not just sex objects.

Angel

When I see all over the media the message that sex work is fun and ok, it hurts me.

On the TV, it’s always fun, always light, always a choice, a witty anecdote, entertainment. When I was working, I had to say I enjoyed it and that I chose it – it’s what the johns want to hear, and as a prostitute I existed for their pleasure, my body and words were there for their pleasure. The real me was effectively mute.

Shelly

I am so p*d off with the ‘choice’ argument being used to dismiss so many women and girls.

What is ‘choice’ when it comes to being prostituted?

A free choice is not being prostituted in order to pay rent, to afford to care for your children.

A free choice is not being on the receiving end of childhood abuse, whether sexual, neglect or physical.

A free choice is not being brainwashed by the porn culture to believe that prostitution is glamorous and an easy way to make a pile of money.

A free choice would mean the prostituted woman or girl could turn away men if they had bad feelings about them without any consequences.

A free choice would be not being pushed by a pimp, manager or boyfriend to “just try it”.

A free choice would mean freedom of movement and knowledge of the world outside prostitution.

A free choice would mean there would be no need to use drink or drugs to blank out the reality.

A free choice would mean prostituted women and girls would not self-harm.
Free choice would mean all prostituted women and girls have real self-confidence, and would not have to make being happy a performance.

I don’t see any prostituted women and girls I know who had free choice. I am sick, so sick that it has to be said again and again about the harms of being prostituted.

It is always the man’s choice whether he will be gentle or “decent”.

Angel

It makes sense to target the johns and criminalise them, because they hold the money and they have all the power. Demand change.

NB Pseudo names have been given to protect the identity of women.
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Anjali Be

I would like to lend my support to the previous submissions of Amy and Laura, at the very least I believe this amendment is going to do nothing more than prevent some ladies legally earn a living, which will no doubt have a knock on effect.

Anjali Be
15 March 2010
Sentencing for knife crime - amendment to section 10

Sacro is aware of the proposals to amend the aforementioned Bill to require a court to impose a sentence of imprisonment of at least six months unless the court is aware of exceptional circumstances which justify not doing so.

It is the view of Sacro that this amendment is unnecessary for a number of reasons. These include:

The courts currently have the power to imprison those found guilty of carrying knives and already use this power appropriately when it is known that there was intention on the part of the offender to use the knife for malicious purposes.

There are numerous reasons why people carry knives in public. Some of these will be for entirely legitimate means including those who use knives as part of their work or leisure pursuits (fishing etc). To place pressure on sentencers to impose a custodial sentence on those found carrying knives for legitimate reasons is inappropriate and could result in the imprisonment of those who pose no risk to society at all.

Sacro are of the view that the carrying of knives by certain groups of young people is directly related to their involvement in gang culture, and their cultural issues. There is a significant body of anecdotal evidence which suggests that many young people involved in gang culture and the carrying of knives do so out of fear for their own safety. This behaviour is not excusable. However, our view is that mandatory imprisonment will not address the wider issues relating to the use of knives as weapons within society. It would be better to focus on the cultural issues behind the behaviour and attempt to address this using an educational approach as is currently the case in the work of the Violence Reduction Unit and campaigns such as the current “no knives – better lives” initiative.

Sacro
15 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Perth and Kinross Violence Against Women Partnership

Offence of stalking:

Perth and Kinross Violence Against Women Partnership welcomes and supports the introduction of this new offence.

- Stalking is a feature within many cases of domestic abuse and sexual violence and we welcome the introduction of this as a separate offence in its own right.
- Recognition that stalking can take many different forms (texts, email, in person) as outlined within the suggested amendments (lodged by Rhoda Grant and the Scottish Government) is also welcome.

(6) states: “course of conduct” involves conduct on at least two occasions.

- Again, we welcome this as stalking within Domestic Abuse and sexual harassment occurs frequently throughout the day, for example, perpetrator texting or emailing the partner or victim at work.

Offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitation of paid-for sexual activities:

Perth and Kinross Violence Against Women Partnership welcomes all amendments to this section. They are positive measures which we envisage would serve to inhibit those involved in purchasing or organising sexual activities.

11A. Engaging in paid-for sexual activity:

- This amendment is welcome as it provides a legal tool for beginning to address the actions of those who purchase sexual activity. In particular, assisting in addressing the issue of ‘off-street’ prostitution which is a key feature of Commercial Sexual Exploitation.
- Holding the purchaser of sexual activity accountable regardless of who receives the payment is a positive development and we welcome this.

11B. Advertising Paid-for sexual activities

- Perth and Kinross Violence Against Women Partnership welcomes this amendment as it provides a legal tool for tackling the very hidden element of commercial sexual exploitation, namely those involved in organising prostitution and trafficking of mainly women, children and young people for the purposes of prostitution.
11C Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity

- As above, this is welcome as it provides a legal tool for tackling ‘off-street’ prostitution. Allowing for those who support Commercial Sexual Exploitation through renting out a flat, house or any other premises to be held accountable for their actions and or decisions.

We would welcome clarification as to how the above could be enforced in relation to the internet which is frequently used to advertise and promote commercial sexual exploitation. Unfortunately, the internet appears to be an effective advertising medium, one which can facilitate and encourage the external/internal trafficking of largely (but not exclusively) women and girls across the country from location to location, in response to any demand for the ‘sexual activity’.

In addition to the above, we also support the introduction of the new offence criminalising the possession of extreme pornographic material which includes all images of rape and non consensual penetrative sexual activity.

Perth and Kinross Violence Against Women Partnership
15 March 2010
I am writing to express my shock and dismay at the recently proposed amendments which, if approved, will criminalise purchase of sex in Scotland and advertising of paid-for sex.

I am an escort in London but have close friends working in Scotland and I would like to join them in opposing this proposed legislation. I am Swedish and let me tell you, this so called Swedish model doesn’t do what you expect - prevent trafficking and pimping, but instead punishes people who haven’t done anything wrong and drives desperate single mothers right into the hands of pimps who promise to find clients for them but instead exploit and rob them.

I always thought that my right to sexuality is intrinsic and not dependent on government. I am free to choose who I have sex with, when and how, and what I receive in return. What sort of totalitarian regime (through possible jealousy and lack of sexual release) would want to meddle in what two people over the age of 18 get up to once the doors are closed? Let's have a closer look at your proposed amendment 11A.

(1) A person (“A”, aka a husband with a job) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, if A knowingly engages in a paid-for sexual activity with another person (“B” aka a housewife, A's wife and mother of his 3 children under the age of 5).

(2) A sexual activity is paid for where B engages in that activity in exchange for payment (since B has been off work for the past 5 years as she had to look after 3 children, she has had no income of her own and had to rely entirely on her husband for providing her and their children with everything, so B has to provide sexual services to A or A will find someone else to engage in sexual activities with and leave B and the children with nothing to live on, which, by the way, is what drives most Bs to prostitution).

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it is immaterial whether the payment is made –

(a) by A (the husband) or by any other person (e.g. his employer), or
(b) to B (the wife whose name is on the bills) or to another person on B’s behalf (the owner of a utility company or the local authority).

Another good example of a paid-for sex would be a bar scenario where a lonely guy buys a few drinks for a bored-looking girl on her own in hope of being invited to hers in return. So we have a housewife who provides sexual services out of desperation and a girl who was bought at the price of a few drinks. To me, this sounds more like abuse and exploitation than charging 150GBP for an hour of my time. Not to mention that in both cases the men commit a crime.

Since the dawn of times, women have used their sexuality and men’s lust to achieve what they wanted. Even female monkeys are known to engage in sexual activities in return for food and protection. If you think this can be changed overnight, it would be right to deem your chances as slim. So why not accept the fact that sex in exchange for payment will always be there and make it safe for all those participating in it?

Licensed parlours will make it safe for women to work and will help you “clear the streets” as those women who can’t take work home will have a parlour to go to rather than a car park, and have a madam to make sure they are not abused, raped and robbed. Licensed parlours will also be easily inspected which will facilitate identifying victims of trafficking and the people behind it.

Women working independently will be able to safely work in groups, providing more services and attracting more clients, thus making more money and paying more tax which will provide the police with some modern equipment that will help them fight real crimes like murder, rape, robbery, etc.

I have been in sex trade for over 7 years, I have worked in parlours, saunas, flats and on my own, I have sold sex in Sweden, England, Wales and Scotland. I have met over a hundred women (and a few men) who, like me, came to prostitution of their free will and do not find it abusive or exploitative but rather empowering as through selling sex they have been able to gain independence and financial security, which they were denied before through poor social security system, family circumstances, lack of education or country of origin. I urge you to stop telling us what to do with our bodies and let us get on with our lives.

Sofia Helgadottir
13 March 2010
As you know the Crown regards this Bill as one of the most important pieces of criminal justice legislation to come before the Scottish Parliament. In particular COPFS regards Part 6 of the Bill, which provides a statutory framework for disclosure of evidence in criminal proceedings, as particularly important to its work. You will no doubt be aware, as background to these provisions, Lord Coulsfield’s Review was initiated following an approach by the Lord Advocate to the then Justice Minister, Cathy Jamieson, as there was a clear need to place the common law system on a statutory footing to provide a degree of clarity and certainty to the process within which the police, the Crown and the accused can operate with certainty.

It is therefore, with some interest, that I observe your proposed amendments to the provisions, particularly your proposals to amend section 89 of the Bill to remove the “materiality” test, the effect of which would be that the accused would be provided with all relevant information obtained during the investigation regardless of whether that information might materially weaken the prosecution case or materially strengthen the defence case.

I thought it might be helpful if I provide some information on why the materiality test was included in the Bill. Lord Coulsfield recommended that the statutory definition of the duty of disclosure should be to disclose to the defence all material evidence or information which would tend to exculpate the accused whether by weakening the Crown case or providing a defence to it, as was set out in McLeod v HMA (No.2) 1998 JC 67. In making this recommendation, Lord Coulsfield recognised that there was very substantial reason to think that totally unrestricted disclosure would be impracticable and probably damaging to the operation of the criminal justice system.

I understand that some of the submissions made to the Justice Committee, most recently by the Glasgow Bar Association, have questioned whether a system whereby the Crown takes the initial decisions regarding the materiality of information would be compatible with an accused person’s right to a fair trial. It may be that these submissions have influenced your decision to table these amendments.

I hope I can offer you some reassurance in this respect, as this issue has been considered by the European Courts and by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

In Edwards v United Kingdom [1992] 15 EHRR 417, the European Court held that it was a requirement of fairness under Article 6 that the prosecution authorities disclose to the defence all material evidence for or against the accused. In McDonald v HMA 2008 SLT 993 the JCPC stated that the Crown’s obligation was to disclose any statements or other material of which it is aware and which materially weakens the prosecution case or materially strengthens the defence case. The Court considered the current common law regime whereby the Crown makes initial determination of the materiality of information, disclosing only that information to the defence and not all the relevant information, and held that the system, which includes provision for defence applications to the court to enforce the Crown’s duty of disclosure is compatible with an accused’s article 6(1) Convention rights.

The JCPC considered this issue again in HMA v Murtagh 2009 SCCR 610 in the particular context of criminal history records. In that case Lord Hope stated that it must be for the Crown to determine which parts of a witness’s criminal history record is material and which are not. Effectively, therefore, the JCPC concluded that it was compatible with an accused’s article 6(1) Convention rights for the Crown to make the initial determination of materiality.

Finally on this point, and for the sake of completeness, I would add that the new Supreme Court considered this issue again in the recent case of McInnes v HMA Hilary Term [2010] UKSC 7. In its judgement issued on 10 February 2010, the court stated that the law as to the duty of disclosure in Scotland is now reasonably well settled and article 6(1) of the Convention requires that the Crown disclose to the defence any information of which it is aware which would tend to materially weaken the prosecution case or materially strengthen the defence case.

I hope that the above cases provide you with the reassurance that a disclosure regime where materiality and not merely relevancy is the cornerstone of the Crown’s obligation is not only compatible with the accused’s right to a fair trial under the Convention but is also consistent with the current common law regime.

I appreciate fully the Committee’s concerns that the disclosure provisions are difficult and complex. It may be that a regime whereby the Crown discloses all relevant information would look much simpler on paper. However, it would render many of the other disclosure provisions within the Bill defunct. For example, there would be no need for the investigating agency to provide the Crown with details of relevant information as there would be no corresponding need to provide the defence with details of the relevant but immaterial non-sensitive information. Similarly, as the Crown would have to provide the defence with all relevant information, there would be no benefit in the investigating agency identifying the sensitive information.

While, at first glance, this may appear desirable, the ramifications of such a change would be very wide reaching. The system proposed in the provisions provides an important degree of protection to sensitive information, which relates not just to intelligence information but also to sensitive information regarding witnesses, victims and other third parties. If the Crown were obliged to give the defence all relevant information, then we could no longer redact sensitive and immaterial personal information from witness statements, medical records etc. Similarly we could no longer withhold immaterial personal data of individuals, which the Crown have obtained as part of the investigation but consider that it neither materially weakens the prosecution case or materially strengthens the defence case.

Such a fundamental change in the Crown’s duty would negatively impact on the article 8 rights of witnesses and other individuals and would result in much more personal data being disclosed than under the current regime. Lord Coulsfield recognised in his report that the Crown are also under an obligation to comply with articles 2 and 8 of the European Convention and the Crown must have regard to the protecting the safety and personal lives of individuals insofar as this does not interfere with the accused’s overarching right to a fair trial. This analysis, set out in paragraphs 6.2-6.4 of his report was expressly endorsed by the Privy Council in HMA v Murtagh.

Lord Hope specifically stated that where information falls within the scope of a witness’s private life then its release would be incompatible with that witness’s article 8(1) and should only be disclosed if the interference can be justified under article 8(2), i.e. in order to ensure that the accused can have a fair trial.

Given that the European jurisprudence makes it clear that it is only the disclosure of material information that is necessary to ensure a fair trial, I anticipate that any statutory regime that extends the Crown’s disclosure duty at a domestic level to all relevant information would result in a significant increase in applications by the Crown to withhold information, which was never envisaged when the non-disclosure provisions were prepared.

You will no doubt also recall that the submission to the Committee by Rape Crisis was particularly concerned that the provisions not compromise the rights of witnesses under Article 8 of the Convention.

While you may be concerned that section 89 as currently drafted may be complex, it is an accurate depiction of the current obligation. I would point out that the Supreme Court recognised in McInnes v HMA, that the one area of the common law disclosure regime that is reasonably well settled is that of the disclosure test. Changing the test in such a significant way may jeopardise this.

COPFS has demonstrated a strong commitment to ensuring that everything that can be done by way of instruction, organisation and training is done to eliminate the possibility of error, as is demonstrated by the Crown’s Disclosure Manual, which is publicly available on our Internet. If it would assist you, I would be more than happy to provide you will full briefing on how the Crown carries out its disclosure obligations, or if you would prefer, I could arrange for you to be given a demonstration, which could include how the new secure disclosure website will operate.

I hope that the above provides you with a greater understanding of the importance of the materiality test. I would of course be more than happy to meet with you to discuss this or any other aspect of disclosure.

Frank Mulholland
Solicitor General
16 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Stirling Council

In relation to the above I am writing on behalf of Stirling Council in support of amendment 8 lodged by Trish Godman and I urge the Justice Committee to support it too.

Prostitution is a form of violence against women, representing violation and inequality of women – not a free exchange between adults - and all women prostituted are participating in a system which is itself unequal.

The Scottish Government must challenge the normalisation of this so-called ‘industry’ and take a lead in rejecting this form of exploitation.

Harm-reduction approaches can still be promoted while condemning the systems and structures that promote inequality.

Demand for prostitution should be criminalised and women supported to exit prostitution with more education for all to prevent the continuation of this aspect of violence against women.

Anne Salter
Lead Officer Child Protection
Stirling Child Protection Committee
17 March 2010
Sentencing for knife crime

Knife related violence in Scotland is a significant problem which receives significant, focused and sustained attention from the police and criminal justice agencies as well as many other groups and individuals. Violence is a wicked and persistent problem and tackling it in all its forms requires persistent and coordinated efforts across a myriad of agencies and groups. It is everyone’s problem and there is no single solution to it.

Mandatory sentencing is a particularly emotive subject which elicits vigorous debate over its merits and impact. The majority of the research relating to the impact of mandatory sentencing and broader sentencing policy emanates from the United States. The US has some of the toughest sentencing policies in the world and the largest prison population (2.5 million prison capacity and approx 1 in 18 males in the US are currently serving time or being monitored).

Research looking at the significant decrease in crime (including violent crime) in the early 90s in New York suggested that the decline was due to the tougher sentencing policy. However, these decreases have also been attributed to zero tolerance policing, a collapse/stabilisation in the crack cocaine market and, more controversially, a change in the abortion policy in the 1970s. It is difficult to establish which, if any, of these factors were responsible for the decrease. The FBI suggest that across the country there has been a 20-25% decrease in crime since the introduction of tougher sentencing, heralding this policy as a significant deterrence. However, during the same time period the number of incarcerations have increased from below 2 million to over 7.5 million per annum, suggesting tougher sentencing has no impact on deterrence and that the reduction is due to the removal of criminals from society.

In Strathclyde the number of people arrested for possession of a bladed weapon is decreasing\(^1\) and the estimated number of serious violent incidents involving a knife has also declined\(^2\). In addition, although violence is under recorded in Scotland, reports like the Scottish Crime Survey indicate that overall violence is decreasing on a year by year basis. However, the recent homicide report in Scotland indicates that despite the decrease in overall homicides there has been an increase in the number of knife related homicides\(^3\). This overall effect of decreasing levels of knife violence yet no real impact in the number of knife related homicides was also seen in the England and Wales, where there was a decrease of 17% in the priority areas

---

\(^1\) 11% decrease from 2008 to 2009

\(^2\) 20% decrease on serious violence where details of a weapon were included

\(^3\) Due to the relatively low levels of homicide compared to other serious violence the increase in knife related homicide is not statistically significant.
yet an increase of homicides with a knife\textsuperscript{4}. Despite the debate over the overall impact of tougher sentencing policy on crime in general there is little debate on the impact of tougher sentences on homicide and it is widely accepted that there is no impact. Therefore it is projected that the provision of mandatory sentences for knife carrying would have no overall effect on the number of homicides per year in Scotland.

In 2009, 1780 individuals were arrested for possession of a bladed weapon in public (in Strathclyde). If all of these individuals were subsequently sentenced to a year for their crime then this would have an estimated financial burden approaching £60 million and require an approximate 20\% increase in prison capacity to house offenders. The alternative in this scenario is to liberate others to make space for the knife carriers; who would they be\textsuperscript{?}. In light of the current prison stock and the projected new build(s), mandatory sentences would bring the current system to a standstill and involve dangerous levels of overcrowding which would lead to serious problems of violence within the prison system and possible litigation against the government. Based on these statistics, which relate only to Strathclyde, we would need to build three new prisons. Has there been any thought given over to the mandatory term of imprisonment those who reoffend, once, twice?

There is debate over whether or not the application of minimum sentences is unconstitutional and degrades judicial independence. The key example from the UK relating to minimum sentences is from England and Wales, where research suggests that even the mandatory five year sentence for possession of a firearm is not applied: over 50\% of those convicted of possession of a firearm get less than three years.

The Violence Reduction Unit asked for consideration of mandatory sentencing in 2005 at which point it was discounted; however the increase from two to four years for knife possession was introduced in 2006. Over the last few years evidence from sentencing for knife related offences in Strathclyde have shown an upwards trend in the length of sentencing. The VRU have since reconsidered their initial stance based on the unworkable nature of the sentence, the lack of evidence demonstrating sustainable benefits and the evidence from re-offending rates that prison does not reduce violence.

The VRU is in favour of mandatory interventions and alternatives to prison disposals for first time offenders, whereby the offenders have to confront their behaviour and deal with the potential consequences of their actions in a way that will benefit them and the communities in which they live. At times custodial sentences are necessary if the individual presents a potential danger to society however, this is complicated if not impossible to capture under the guise of mandatory sentencing. The decision should be down to the judge on the day: they are in possession of all the salient facts including context and with this knowledge can best decide the most appropriate and effective disposal.

\textsuperscript{4} \url{http://www.crimereduction.homeoffice.gov.uk/violentstreet/violentstreet014.htm}
The VRU is committed to the sustainable long term reduction of violence in Scotland and believe that this will only be achieved by tackling the root causes of violence. Pursuing a mandatory policy for sentencing is costly and is unlikely to have the desired effect. The budget required to fund such a policy would be better used on strategies that have an evidence base of effectiveness and where sustainable reductions can be made making Scotland a safer place where all citizens can lead active productive lives.

There is no such thing as a single group of knife carriers, each sub group/individual comes with a different set of reasons why they carry knives. Only a small subsection of this group is affected by the influence of criminal justice and policing. More dangerously, the group of knife carriers that are most intent on doing harm would do so under any circumstance and just change their means of causing harm. Early indications suggest that knife carrying is more endemic in some areas of the country than others (other than Glasgow and the west coast), but if combined with the violence stats it is less likely that such carriers will inflict harm and their reasons for carrying may well be different and more transitional\(^5\). For example, should an individual who has a history of knife carrying and or violence be treated in the same way as a young man who has no history and is caught carrying a knife for the first time because he is scared of being a victim? Mandatory sentences would not necessarily account for individual circumstance and may lead to more harm than good.

Summary

There has been a significant decrease in the number of serious violent incidents involving a knife in Strathclyde. During this time we have seen a number of changes in the way that we police in Scotland, changing cultural attitudes, unrelenting campaigns, school based programmes and the treatment of individuals in court. There is no way to determine definitively which of these changes is causal in the reductions. In terms of sentencing we have not seen any real changes in the number of individuals given custodial sentences however, those who do receive custodial sentences are given longer sentences. There has also been an increase in the number of community based sentences and a decrease in the number of fines which may have also had an impact. Scotland is moving in the right direction and we are starting to see some real changes. These statistics only relate to those where possession of a knife is the most serious charge brought against them and not any other acts of violence. The Sheriffs and Judges are the only ones with the full knowledge of circumstance in each individual case and therefore are in the best position to consider the likely outcomes from the disposal. Mandatory sentences do not work; they do not account for individual circumstance. They are a punitive measure and will have a significant and negative impact on the life chances of many of our young men who through bad judgment have made a wrong decision, maintaining a continuing cycle of offending.

---

\(^5\) Unpublished, draft research Scottish Government of Gangs and Knifes
Detective Chief Superintendent John Carnochan QPM
Head, Scottish Violence Reduction Unit
16 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Victim Support Scotland

1. The need for a new offence relating to stalking

People who engage in behaviour constituting stalking in Scotland are currently prosecuted under the offence ‘breach of the peace’. The appeal court in Harris vs. HMA did however rule last year that in order for the activity to be seen as a breach of the peace, it requires a ‘public element’. Since stalking may be conducted in private and does as such not have a ‘public element’, Victim Support Scotland is delighted that amendments have been made to introduce a new offence of stalking in the Criminal Justice & Licensing (Scotland) Bill. Of the two different amendments presented to address stalking, we prefer the amendment introduced by Rhoda Grant since it is more explicit and straightforward, proscribing clearly the conducts covered and defines the impact of these conducts on the victim.

2. Name of the new offence relating to stalking

We strongly support Rhoda Grant’s suggestion to label the new offence as “stalking”, since this is a well-known term amongst the general public. As Ann Moulds from Action Scotland Against Stalking states, “the concept of stalking, what it is and what it means already exists within public consciousness”. An increasing number of countries are currently developing anti-stalking legislation, so we believe this is a good time for Scotland to do the same.

3. Behaviours and conducts covered by the new offence of stalking

The crime of stalking may comprise of behaviours that, by themselves, may not be criminal, for instance making phone calls, sending letters etc. Threats may be explicit or implicit or conveyed without words. Acts that appear meaningless or non-threatening to other people may be terrifying to the victim. Flowers sent to the victim's work – a seemingly non-threatening and often appreciated gesture – may make the victim terrified to leave work out of fear that the stalker is waiting outside. We find it important to stress that stalking is not always related to domestic abuse and the victim may not necessarily have had a relationship with the stalker. To understand stalking, attention must be paid to the context of the behaviour. Victim Support Scotland is therefore in favour of a clear definition of the acts and behaviours covered by the offence, such as the non-exhaustive list of conducts introduced by Rhoda Grant in section 6. We find it very important to stress that this list is non-exhaustive and that other behaviours can be covered if it brings out the same reactions for the victim, listed in section 2(c). Stalking affects every part of a victim’s life. It brings fear of random attacks, loss of trust in society and the criminal justice system, long-term distress and frustration. Psychological responses may include anxiety, fear and paranoia but also feelings of guilt, self-blame, isolation, anger, rage and depression. As such, we believe that the definition of “harm” in section 2(c)(i) should be widespread to include a wide scope of adverse physical and psychological reactions.

Regarding section 6(c), covering the conduct of “publishing any statement or other material”, we believe this conduct should be interpreted widely to include, for instance, posting material on networking sites such as Facebook, Bebo and Twitter.

Regarding section 6(h), we would like to receive further guidance on what is to constitute keeping a person “under surveillance”. We believe this should not only cover situations where the accused is using technical equipment, video cameras or surveillance software, but also cover instances where the accused observes the victim (or any other person) in person.

We are pleased to see that the suggested offence of stalking covers conducts where the accused knew or ought to have known (as stated in section 4) that the actions were likely to cause harm, apprehension or fear for the victim or any other person. We believe this will aim to eliminate the possibility for the accused to escape conviction by claiming that he/she was unaware of the impacts of the conduct on the victim.

4. Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour

Although we believe that Rhoda Grant’s amendment is more suitable to tackle behaviours and conducts relating to stalking, we do feel there is a need for an offence comprising of “threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour”, as proposed by the Government. This would be particularly suitable for cases that are currently being prosecuted under the offence “breach of the peace” but that lack the “public element”, for instance domestic abuse cases that occur behind closed doors. Following the Harris case, it has become increasingly difficult to raise domestic cases under “breach of the peace” and we are therefore pleased to see that amendment 378 intends to create a separate offence without the need for a “public element”.

Frida Petersson
Senior Research and Policy Officer
16 March 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Helen Johnson, Trustee of the Zero Tolerance Trust

I am writing to express my support for Trish Godman’s proposed amendment to create a new offence of engaging in paid-for sex. This is a really important opportunity to tackle the demand for prostitution in Scotland and create a significant cultural shift, placing responsibility for the harms of prostitution with the men who pay for it and in so doing, working to prevent violence against women and children. I recently completed some research into the sex industry and this has persuaded me that the industry is essentially exploitative. Debates on the agency of women put too much focus on responsibilising the women involved as opposed to addressing the exploitation of economic power that leads to the coercion of women into sex for money. It is my view that sexual wellbeing cannot be fostered in a culture where sexual relationships are commodified.

Helen Johnson
Zero Tolerance Trustee
15 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Lyn Tett, Trustee of the Zero Tolerance Trust

Submission in support of amendment 8

I wish to support amendment 8 because I view prostitution as part of the spectrum of men’s violence against women and this amendment will help to ensure that prostitution does not become normalised. Women become involved in prostitution for a variety of reasons such as homelessness, child sexual abuse, mental ill health, trauma, previous sexual violence, drug and alcohol misuse, money pressures and poverty. These factors, which serve to lead or force women into prostitution, should not be mistaken for the cause of prostitution itself, which is the demand from men to buy sex. Labelling prostitution as work or legitimate employment actually legitimises exploitation. Therefore it is unfair to criminalise those who are abused and exploited since prostitution is not a choice for women.

Lyn Tett
Zero Tolerance Trustee
16 March 2010
About Zero Tolerance

Zero Tolerance is a small national charity promoting innovative policy and practice to address the root causes of male violence against women and children. We pioneered the 3 P’s approach to tackling male violence – protection, provision and prevention. Of these, we believe that the prevention of violence through changing attitudes, structures and values is the key to changing the culture of endemic violence in which we live.

Summary of our position

We are strongly supportive of amendment 8 lodged by Trish Godman and urge the Justice Committee to support it. Our arguments in favour of this amendment can be summarised as follows:

- We see prostitution as a form of violence against women, representing violation and inequality of women – not a free exchange between adults - and believe that all women prostituted are participating in a system which is itself unequal.

- We wish to challenge the normalisation of this so-called ‘industry’ and we aspire to a world without these forms of exploitation

- We believe that you can still promote harm-reduction approaches while condemning the systems and structures that promote inequality. We would like to see demand criminalised and women supported to exit prostitution, and more education for all to prevent prostitution from happening.

- It is time for the ‘invisible man’ to be recognised and tackled.

Prostitution represents violation and inequality

We see prostitution as a form of violence against women and children, and also recognise that it causes harms to the smaller number of men who participate as sellers of sex, and to some extent to the men who buy sex. The Scottish Government has also described it as such in the ‘Safer Lives: Changed Lives’ document – noting therein that the harm that commercial sexual exploitation causes to all women, by sanctioning objectification of women’s bodies, happens regardless of whether individuals claim liberation or empowerment from the activity.
Prostitution is a manifestation of gender inequality. It is not a coincidence that the vast majority of people selling sex in Scotland are women and the vast majority of those buying sex from women are men. There is considerable evidence that selling sex for the vast majority of these women is not a freely made, positive choice but in fact a socially structured decision, which represents a submission to a lack of choice and options and a reflection of women’s wider economic inequality. The decision to sell sex is driven by necessity or desperation, by factors such as poverty, drug dependency, domestic abuse or child sexual abuse. But these individual factors are not root causes – the root cause of a system wherein men buy women’s bodies is the unequal distribution by gender of power, wealth and opportunity.

A Home Office report from 2007 said ‘The majority [of individuals involved in street prostitution]… live chaotic lives and have complex needs, and most are Class A drug users. They often face a multiplicity of risks to their physical, emotional and psychological health as well as problems relating to homelessness, lack of food, clothes, warmth, shelter, money and lack of family networks. Many are disengaged from mainstream services such as healthcare, housing and benefits and have a history of frequent contact with the Criminal Justice System.’

The Tyneside Cyrenians ‘Hidden for survival’ study (Feb 2008) found that sex was sold for as little as £5 (the average charge was £37), dispelling the myth of the lucrative career that media portrayals of prostitution perpetuate. This cannot be understood in isolation from a wider analysis of women’s poverty – women experience significantly more poverty, in significantly different ways from men. Women have a lower income than men during work and retirement; smaller, if any, savings; and are more likely than men to experience unmanageable debt. This is the context in which prostitution flourishes.

Prostitution can also be a consequence of other forms of neglect or abuse - 70% of those involved in street prostitution have a history of local authority care and 45% report experiencing sexual abuse during their childhoods (Home Office 2006). The Tyneside study found links with other forms of violence such as domestic violence – 41% of respondents reported being in a violent relationship and there was evidence of domestic abuse deterring women’s involvement in drug treatment as partners did not allow it.

Prostitution also represents the exploitation of children and young people. A Glasgow study showed that 24.5% of the women surveyed had entered prostitution before age 18, with 8.2% starting at age 16 or under.

On the issue of choice, we believe that individuals who claim that this is activity freely chosen constitute a minority of women participating in this

---

2 http://www.oxfam.org.uk/resources/ukpoverty/gender.html
industry, and further note that women working as prostitutes often describe the activity as freely chosen as a coping mechanism - for example in the European Women's Lobby film ‘Not for Sale’\textsuperscript{4}, Fiona Broadfoot, a survivor of prostitution, says “Women have to tell themselves they have made a choice to survive. I told myself for many, many years I was OK. I had to do that to survive the industry”. Once in prostitution, 9 out 10 surveyed women would like to exit but feel unable to do so.\textsuperscript{5}

It is clear to us from this evidence that women selling sex are victims of an exploitative and violent system and that it is time for more emphasis to be placed on those buying sex, generating the demand, and facilitating the system, hence our support for these amendments.

Prostitution should not be normalised

In February 2010, the Home Office published a review of Sexualisation of Young People. This review examined culture and society in the UK and found that jobs in brothels and lap-dancing clubs (where prostitution routinely happens) are advertised by Job Centre Plus and that “we are seeing the normalisation of [sex work] as viable career choices” which “sends out a powerful message to young people about what is of value” (para 29). The review also concludes that popular culture lends “credence to the idea that women are there to be used and that men are there to use them” (para 30).

In this climate, it is easy for young people to be groomed for involvement in prostitution: young women groomed as sellers and young men as users and controllers of women. It is increasingly seen as normal for men to use prostitutes as part of a night out with friends or colleagues\textsuperscript{6}, or a ‘stag’ night\textsuperscript{7} – and many regret doing so. A significant number of men who buy sex later regret it: 25% of men interviewed in Scotland said that they felt "significant shame and regret" at having bought sex.\textsuperscript{8} One study of men who use prostitutes found that for 29% of the men, prostitution was their first sexual experience.\textsuperscript{9}

To call a halt to this culture of prostitution as mainstream it is vital to curb demand and send out a message that prostitution is not a normal, legitimate form of work or entertainment. Tackling demand would send a message that Scotland rejects this exploitative industry and those who create and support it.

\textsuperscript{4}http://www.womenlobby.org/site/video_en.asp
\textsuperscript{5}Farley et al, 2003
\textsuperscript{6}http://www.fawcettsociety.org.uk/documents/Corporate%20Sexism.pdf.pdf
\textsuperscript{7}http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/8457172.stm
\textsuperscript{8}‘Challenging Men’s Demand for Prostitution in Scotland’, Women’s Support Project, 2008
Supporting this amendment and protecting those in prostitution are not mutually exclusive

Whilst we strongly support amendment 8, we do not believe that this change alone would represent a panacea. We would also ask the Justice Committee to consider other measures including better funding and support for prostitution exit programmes, changing the fact that prostitution can never be a spent conviction, decriminalising the selling of sex, and developing or promoting educational programmes to prevent prostitution and promote gender equality.

However, we would urge the Committee to keep in mind that supporting amendments to criminalise the purchase of sex and developing policy or legislation to protect women involved in selling sex are not mutually exclusive. Supporters of the move to criminalise the purchase of sex are often characterised by our opponents as uninterested in the experiences of prostituted women or men and unconcerned with harm reduction, which is not the case. We have no wish to place women at further risk. In fact what we seek to do is to protect them from a systematic industry of exploitation and abuse, while also protecting all women and children from the wider and longer term impacts of this industry.

We would therefore urge the adoption of amendment 8 now, and ask the committee to support the development and funding of clear exit strategies and other forms of support for women alongside the changes set out in the amendment.

It is time for the ‘invisible man’ to be recognised and tackled

Zero Tolerance has always believed that public discourse about violence against women focuses too much on women, and what they should do or not do to prevent violence, and too little on challenging the men who perpetrate the abuse. This is slowly changing and many statutory authorities are very clear now that the perpetrators of abuse need to be central to our decision making. For example, many local authorities have run ‘Zero Tolerance’ campaigns to tell perpetrators that there is no excuse for domestic abuse; Lothian and Borders Police recently ran an anti-rape campaign developed to communicate that “responsibility for rape will always lie with the rapist”\(^\text{10}\); and many authorities now run perpetrator programmes for abusive men.

Yet in terms of prostitution, the focus for years has been on the women who sell sex rather than the men who buy it. Women have been arrested and imprisoned for soliciting, earning convictions that can never be spent. Men have largely been ignored. Kerb-crawling legislation has had some impact but by and large men have been free to purchase sex with impunity. This has to change.

---

\(^{10}\) http://www.lbp.police.uk/press_release/articles/2009%5CDecember%5C10%5C1.htm
Other jurisdictions have successfully legislated to criminalise demand (Sweden, Iceland) and have seen a resultant reduction in prostitution and trafficking but also a change in social attitudes. In Sweden, which has legislated to criminalise the purchase of sex, there has been a marked change in public perception with 80% of the public now viewing prostitution as unacceptable, compared to 49% in 1999\textsuperscript{11}. We believe that the proposed amendments, if supported, could deliver a similar cultural shift in Scotland, which would drive us closer to gender equality, and ultimately to a fairer society in which all women and men can achieve their potential and live life free of abuse and violence. We urge the committee to support amendment 8.

We do not support amendments 8A-D (lodged by Margo Macdonald) or amendment 461 (lodged by Nigel Don).

Jenny Kemp
Prevention Network Officer, Zero Tolerance
15 March 2010

I refer to the above and thank you for inviting the Scottish Police Federation (SPF) to submit additional written evidence. The SPF has itself consulted widely on these amendments and in the time available gathered the following for your consideration;

Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences)

Amendments 8, 8A, 8B, 8C, 8D, 9 & 9A

The SPF shares the view that prostitution is as old as human civilisation itself. We believe that irrespective of any well intentioned legislation, the resilience and nature of prostitution will ensure its survival ‘till the end of time. We believe the activities of prostitutes are largely driven by desperation and believe any approach to this subject should be one of support and not seeking to further criminalise those who take part. Against that background, we believe there is nothing in these proposed amendments that will either assist those who engage with or in prostitution and indeed may increase the risk of harm in what is clearly a very dangerous ‘profession’.

At this time many of the areas in which prostitutes operate (at street level) are generally well known to police officers and areas are policed with sensitivity. The prospect of criminalising further prostitution and those who use prostitutes risks driving prostitution underground and into areas that will receive less police attention. This is also a real possibility for those who currently operate from premises, where an element of increased safety can be secured often due to the presence of a third party in the building. We recognise the issue of pimping is a serious one but believe many who facilitate or tolerate prostitution in or on their premises (and not pimps as understood in common parlance) do so because this is the ‘least worse’ option. Accordingly we believe this legislation may well penalise many who tolerate rather than those who actually ‘gain’ from the activities of prostitutes.

In addition to the statutory provisions of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Prostitution (Public Places)(Scotland) Act 2007 the age old common law offence of breach of the peace is available to police officers for those who both solicit sexual activity and those who engage with them. Whilst there will always be those who argue the police should and could do more, the existence of breach of the peace can effectively deal with the majority of events the proposed amendments seek to cover.

On the whole question of prostitution we believe the parliament must firstly determine whether it believes it is possible to either eradicate or minimise the effects of prostitution through yet further legislation or whether it simply wishes to control and restrict its impact. If parliament agrees with us that prostitution will survive all attempts to criminalise it, then it is our view the issue of control and restriction will not be achieved through these proposed amendments.

Sentencing for knife crime Amendment 10 & 10A

The SPF is acutely aware of the politicisation of this issue and offer our comments on a guarded basis. We previously offered comments in support of the establishment of a sentencing council and believe any attempts to undermine the impartiality and ability of that sentencing council, by means of legislated minimum sentences to be a retrograde step. In addition, we believe the risks of imprisoning young adults for what could be a moment of madness and foolishness could result in a fool entering prison only to leave 6 months or two years later as an educated criminal with a grudge against society. We believe everyone is capable of making a mistake and that in many cases learning from that mistake is ultimately of greater benefit than punishing it. Whilst representatives for sheriffs will have their own view and notwithstanding the reference to two years it is our opinion that the proposed amendment 10A to be a close reflection of the status quo.

New offences relating to stalking Amendments 402 & 378

The common law offence of Breach of the Peace is defined as follows;

Breach of the Peace is a crime at common law and is constituted by one or more persons conducting himself or themselves in a riotous or disorderly manner anywhere to the alarm, annoyance or disturbance of the lieges.

It appears to us that the provisions of the proposed amendments are by and large a rewrite and translation of this offence onto the statute book.

Calum Steele
General Secretary
16 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Anna Ritchie

Submission in support of amendment 8

I am strongly supportive of amendment 8 lodged by Trish Godman and urge the Justice Committee to support it. I believe that prostitution is a form of violence against women, representing the violation and inequality of women and believe that all women prostituted are participating in a system which is in itself unequal. I think that the normalisation of this so-called ‘industry’ must be challenged in order that we can eradicate these forms of exploitation

I believe that the demand for prostitution must be criminalised and that women should be supported to exit prostitution.

Anna Ritchie
16 March 2010
Foreword

Scottish Women’s Aid is a national organisation working for change on issues of domestic abuse and an umbrella body to a membership of 40 autonomous Women’s Aid groups throughout Scotland, which provide temporary accommodation (refuge), information and support to women, children and young people who experience domestic abuse in Scotland.

Introduction

Scottish Women’s Aid welcomes the opportunity to comment on these additional amendments to the Bill. We have specified below those amendments we agree to and would urge the Justice Committee to also give them their support.

Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences)
Amendment 8 (lodged by Trish Godman)

We support this amendment.

Prostitution is part of the spectrum of men’s violence against women and impacts both on those directly involved and on our wider culture. It is a significant social problem and is harmful, not only to the individual prostituted person, but also to society at large. It acts as a barrier to gender equality and this equality will be unattainable for women so long as society continues to sanction the perpetration of violence through men buying, selling and exploiting women and children through prostitution.

We do not view prostitution as a choice for women; it breaches their right to dignity, equality, respect and physical and mental well-being and is innately harmful.

The concept of the prostituted person having “choice” is a false distinction as it assumes the prostituted person always has freedom and the luxury of making an informed decision. This viewpoint also implies consent through the exchange of money; consent cannot be bought and the fact that money changes hands and the sexual services are paid for in no way validates the transaction.

In saying this, we acknowledge the fact that some women will take the decision to become involved in prostitution, but these are a minority, and we as a society cannot be responsible for enforcing the status quo and building policy for a minority, whilst ignoring the most vulnerable majority.

Further, there are no “distinctions” between forced and so-called “free” or “voluntary” prostitution and men purchasing sex do not make this “distinction”. It is our position that all prostitution is a social wrong and is exploitation of the person prostituted, regardless of the context, or whether that person is said to have consented to the prostitution.

There are a number of reasons as to why women become involved in prostitution - mental health and substance misuse issues, poverty, homelessness, having experienced domestic abuse or child sexual abuse- and for these vulnerable women, prostitution is often the last option of survival open to them. Prostitution should not be normalised as a viable career option.

Therefore, to address this exploitation, we must put the focus and responsibility for prostitution firmly on those who are inevitably invisible when this issue is discussed, that is those who create the demand and who purchase sex.¹

Given that human slavery, and the notion of individuals as commodities, was deemed unacceptable in 1833, it is a condemnation of our society that prostitution has continued to exist unchallenged until the 21st century.

On January 1, 1999, the Swedish Legislation, the Law that Prohibits the Purchase of Sexual Services (“the Law”) entered into force. This Law recognizes that it is the man who buys women (or men) for sexual purposes who should be criminalized, and not the woman. This was regarded as “the first attempt by a country to address the root cause of prostitution and trafficking in beings: the demand, the men who assume the right to purchase persons for prostitution purposes. This groundbreaking law is a cornerstone of Swedish efforts to create a contemporary, democratic society where women and girls can live lives free of all forms of male violence. In combination with public education, awareness-raising campaigns, and victim support, the Law and other legislation establish a zero tolerance policy for prostitution and trafficking in human beings.”²

¹ Men Create the Demand; Women Are the Supply; Donna M. Hughes; University of Rhode Island; Lecture on Sexual Exploitation, Queen Sofia Center, Valencia, Spain, November 2000 http://www.uri.edu/artsci/wms/hughes/demand.htm
See http://www.prostitutionresearch.com/c-prostitution-research.html generally for research on the negative impacts of prostitution
The issue of addressing prostitution through legislation is not a new concept for the Scottish Parliament. Most recently, the Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act 2007 addressed the issue of “kerb crawling”. This legislation only partly addressed the issues of demand and, thus, these much needed amendments close the gap, removing the distinction between street prostitution and indoors prostitution.

Scotland has international obligations to address the address the demand for prostitution, under:

- Article 6 of the Convention on the Elimination Of All Forms Of Discrimination Against Women, (“CEDAW”), UN General Assembly 1979
- UN Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women 1993

The purchase of women, children and young people for sex is fundamentally unacceptable and an affront to a modern Scotland. We must end prostitution now and these amendments will give us the power to make that happen.

We would also make a further comment. In Sweden, prostitution is officially acknowledged as a form of male sexual violence against women and children. Therefore, prostituted women and children are seen as victims of male violence who do not risk legal penalties.

In accepting prostitution as exploitation, we must also recognise that it is not right to criminalise those who are victimised and exploited. Therefore, these amendments must supported by additional interventions, such as the decriminalisation of those who are purchased for sexual activity, and the availability of appropriate and adequate support for women wishing to exit prostitution.

Amendments lodged by Margo MacDonald and by Nigel Don

We are unable to support these amendments

Amendments 399, 400, 401, 402, introducing a new offence of stalking (lodged by Rhoda Grant)

We support the introduction of a new offence of stalking. This, along with amendments 5, 6, 7 already lodged by Rhoda Grant, making the process of applying for non-harassment orders more accessible, will increase the options available to, and therefore, provide further support for, women, children and young people experiencing domestic abuse.
Amendment 378, relating to threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour (lodged by Kenny MacAskill)

It should be noted that this amendment has a separate and entirely different focus from the amendments in relation to stalking and harassment lodged by Rhoda Grant. We overwhelmingly support amendment 378, and the creation of a statutory offence clarifying the law on breach of the peace.
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Dr Anne Macdonald

Proposed stalking amendments

I am a consultant forensic psychiatrist with a particular interest in the management of stalking and the current proposals for specific legislation, and I hope the Justice Committee will accept this submission.

I have worked in various areas of forensic psychiatry in Scotland for 27 years; including as Scottish Ministers’ Advisor on forensic psychiatry 1997 – 2001, in which capacity I was the Health Department’s representative on the Ministerial Working Group on Domestic Violence. From 1985 and 2008 I was registered as a psychoanalytical psychotherapist and working with adult survivors of sexual trauma. I continue to work clinically with stalkers (men and women) and their victims, and helping to formulate a human resource policy on stalking in the NHS mental health workplace.

I am employed by NHS Greater Glasgow & Clyde, and a Non-Executive Lay Board Member of the Risk Management Authority in Scotland. This submission is my own and does not necessarily represent the views of any other person or organisation.

Rhoda Grant’s proposal 25 to introduce the words and concept of stalking in Section 31 (1) are welcome as the beginning of a process of acknowledgement of this problem. A definition would be helpful to avoid a circular argument. A variety of definitions exist but they have common characteristics. Badcock¹ (2005) notes that the term “…continues to be apt in its image of a hunter pursuing prey in a sustained but unequal relationship…” and Meloy et al² (2008) refer to an unwanted fixation by one person on another with ‘a behavioral progression…during which the fixation alienates others, undermines social networks, and erodes finances, leaving the person often isolated and destitute.”

Kropp et al³ (2006) define stalking for the purpose of their structured risk assessment of stalkers as ‘…unwanted and repeated communication, contact, or other conduct that deliberately or recklessly causes people to experience reasonable fear or concern for their safety or the safety of others known to them.”

¹ Badcock, R 2005 Chapter 8 in Stalking and Psychosexual Obsession ed Boon J.and Sheridan L
Stalking does not require particular physical behaviour or acts and crucially includes targeted violence taking place over time, even decades, such as severe persistent harassment. It is important to emphasise the imbalance and the unwanted nature of the process.

I propose the Committee might consider for the purposes of the legislation "Stalking is defined here as a pattern of unwanted and repeated communication, contact, or other course of conduct that deliberately or recklessly causes people to experience reasonable fear, alarm or concern for their safety or the safety of others known to them."

Stalking destroys a target’s social links and may cause real harm to their livelihood. A person who is being stalked will be shunned, disbelieved and treated with circumspection. This may happen without direct contact or knowledge of the target, without intent (as with bullying and harassment) and might be termed reputational harm or damage. I propose therefore that under section 31(3)(a) ‘or reputational harm’ should be added; also ‘harm to others associated with B’.

Section 31(3): Stalking is a pattern of behaviour which provokes a bodily survival reaction known as a ‘flight or fight’ response. It causes real harm, including physical and psychological damage to the target and to people relating to them. It carries the risk of death, directly as an effect of extreme fear on the body (for instance heart attack); indirectly secondary to avoidance action; directly through physical assault; and also at the hands of the target themselves in their state of fear or despair. I propose that ‘alarm’ be added to (b) as in ‘…arousing alarm, apprehension…’.

Section 31(4): A perpetrator will argue that most people would not expect such an extreme reaction. The ‘deliberate or reckless’ part of the definition proposed would be useful here or as in Scottish Government’s proposal.

Section 3(5)(a): I agree this paragraph is necessary and if included it allows for the word ‘reasonable’ to be removed from the ‘fear or concern’ paragraph below.

Stalking shares with fraud that it is open to the perpetrators’ ingenuity to use multifarious ways in which to enact harm. Hurt and control of the object are key issues for the stalker. Section 31 (6)(a) to (h) as proposed is therefore too specific, may be helpful for information or teaching but in the legal context carries the risk of reducing stalking to a series of acts. So wording such as ‘unwanted and repeated communication, contact or conduct’ (as above) should be sufficient. If examples are required a more general line such as ‘telephone calls, emails, following, gifts, complaints, threats, libel, property damage or physical assault” would be preferable.

Section 31(6)(b): Stalking works by isolating the target precisely because a reasonable person (whether colleague, police or family or friend) does not understand the alarm experienced by the target. If section 5 is included as a disclaimer there is no need to use the ‘reasonable person’ test in my view and
I propose that ‘acting in any way that causes alarm, fear or concern in B...’ would be better. Front line staff including health workers as well as police need to be educated in stalking and how it presents, as does society. Many of the harmful results would be mitigated by early identification and use of systems to record incidents.

The letter from the Cabinet Secretary for Justice dated 19 February 2010 introduces an amendment at Stage 2 to create a new statutory offence of ‘engaging in threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour’. It is helpful to understand the situation in which this need arises and it is reassuring that potential problems arising in terms of stalking have been considered. There is some overlap with domestic violence; stalking as severe and persistent harassment overlaps with vexacious complaints; and when physical assault is involved other charges are used. However, as stated earlier, naming stalking will be useful.

There is a great deal that can be done for victims before or instead of prosecution, with or without the direct aid of the criminal justice system, but a separate offence would enable this. My earlier comments about the definition pertain and the reasonable person test is not useful. Stalking is not reasonably anxiety provoking, but rather terrifying; and the reaction of the victim may appear disproportionate to an observer. While this may be an immediate response, victims learn that this tends to negatively impact on them and then withdraw.

Targets will not always be able to articulate what the problem is or why they are so upset. They may be made to feel that they have done something unforgivably wrong, or simply consider that disengagement requires an act which may place them or someone else at further risk. The external observer sees the target's inactivity as a sign of consent, or is presented with an inexplicable extreme physical or emotional reaction. Non-physical violence has particular power in being invisible to observers, in contrast to the reaction of the individual who feels the attack.

Labels commonly associated with sexual offending are useful here even when sexual issues are not directly relevant. Grooming describes the predator’s strategy of gradually acclimatisation of a target with a psychological contract which does not cause alarm until they feel caught by implication. If the target attempts to inform someone in authority and is not believed this is further isolating, and, appearing unable to disconnect reinforces bonding with their abuser, thus labelled entrapment.

The perpetrator is by definition the active partner and drives the way in which the relationship is seen as well as its progress, but it cannot be assumed that this person will be easily identified. Factitious victimisation describes the predator who presenting him or herself as the victim while retaining the advantage of setting the frame. For the perpetrator this may be even easier to manage at one removed, by proxy, using an innocent go-between. So an observer finds it impossible to identify a victim, and the target has difficulty in extricating themselves.
Predatory behaviour in animals involves picking off those perceived as vulnerable, so making a person vulnerable may of itself be harmful. In any group at a point in time some will be at the centre and others at the perimeter. When a threat is identified those perceived to be most at risk or most precious to the group will be moved towards the centre for safety. The process of naming stalking could become a part of society’s move to recognising it’s duty of care towards targets which would be of great benefit.

Dr Anne Macdonald
16 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Glasgow Addiction Services

Submission in respect to amendment 8

Glasgow Addiction Services is the key delivery mechanism for alcohol and drug related treatment services in the city. We act as a critical frontline response to the needs of some of the most vulnerable clients in Glasgow and Clyde.

We recognise that there is significant crossover between prostitution and addiction. As part our ongoing service developments we have been proactive in contributing to the City’s strategic ambition of eradicating prostitution and aim to assist both women and men to permanently exit from prostitution.

Glasgow Addiction Services believes that prostitution is inherently harmful. We witness the damage that prostitution causes to those involved. While it is our core business to address the presenting drug and alcohol issues we cannot do this in isolation. Many of our service users have extremely complex physical, social and psychological issues which are caused by or exacerbated by involvement in prostitution. Some are coerced into prostitution by partners or pimps, others are drawn to it as a means of survival e.g. roof over their head or simply because they have limited life opportunities. Many if not all experience low self worth and trauma and believe that they are of no value within society.

We believe that many vulnerable women and men are unable to be heard. We therefore have a duty of care to speak out on behalf of those who experience the detrimental consequences of prostitution. We strive to help service users rebuild their lives and as part of this we must ensure that we also contribute to building a society that rejects the exploitation of others for either personal gratification or commercial gain.

We therefore welcome and support the proposed changes lodged by Trish Goodman to challenge the demand for prostitution.

Jim McBride
Head of Addiction Service East CHCP
16 March 2010
I am writing to submit my support for the legislation to criminalise demand for prostitution.

As a psychotherapist who has worked to support women to exit prostitution I have seen the long term psychological and physical impact that their involvement has created.

For many legislators, criminal justice officials, government bodies and agencies, health care and social care workers and women working with women involved in prostitution the focus of their significant attention has been on the harm, violence and risk both physically and psychologically not only to the women involved in prostitution but to society as a whole. “Prostitution, pornography, and other forms of commercial sex are a multibillion dollar industry. They enrich a small minority of predators, while the larger community is left to pay for the damage.

People used in prostitution often need medical care as a result of the ever-present violence. They may need treatment for infectious diseases, including AIDS. Survivors frequently need mental health care for post-traumatic stress disorder, psychotic episodes and suicide attempts. “About a third end up chronically disabled and on Social Security.

The sex trade plays an active role in promoting alcohol and drug problems. Pimps also use prostituted women in forgery and credit card fraud. The community must pay for chemical dependency treatment, insurance costs and incarceration." (Parker.2007).

Glasgow City Council in Scotland is one of the very few councils worldwide who take a very determined, proactive and radical approach to women involved in prostitution and to social exclusion stating “This Council will support the development of a strategic, long term approach in the context of the Council’s Objectives and other policies such as Social Inclusion, Equality, Community safety, and Violence against women.

Violence, experience of abuse, homelessness, poverty and drugs are at the root of street prostitution in Glasgow. (Stewart. A. 2000). The Council absolutely rejects the view of prostitution as work, which merely requires legalising and regulating. The Council rejects the argument that prostitution is a civil right – no woman wants the right to be sexually exploited, abused and demeaned.

For all these reason I believe the demand has to be challenged as we know in a capitalist society with no demand there is no supply.
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from East Ayrshire Women’s Aid

We are writing to submit our support for the submission sent by Scottish Women’s Aid in response to the call for additional evidence in relation to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. We endorse their comments in full.

Karen Gardner
Training Worker
16 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Challenging Demand

The Women’s Support Project (WSP) is a feminist charity working to raise awareness about and improve services, to tackle violence against women and children which includes women exploited through commercial sexual exploitation. There are clear links between child abuse, childhood neglect and domestic violence to women’s involvement in prostitution. These factors, along with poverty, addictions, homelessness, trauma and mental health issues create vulnerability and inequality, which is exploited through men’s payment for sexual activity.

The WSP manages the Challenging Demand project (CD), which receives monies from the Scottish Government Violence against women funding. CD has 3 broad aims:

1. To increase understanding of the myths and realities surrounding commercial sexual exploitation including prostitution.
2. To increase awareness of prostitution and other forms of commercial sexual exploitation as a form of violence against women.
3. To lobby for approaches which focus on and target the men who make up the demand for prostitution. This strategy should also decriminalize all those involved in prostitution and resource support for exiting.

CD believes that focus must be on the demand - the men who assume the right to purchase others for prostitution, commodifying and marketing their bodies. No one has the right to exploit, nor profit from the exploitation of, another person regardless of any form of exchange of money, goods or services. We therefore support Amendment 8 (lodged by Trish Godman), which proposes changes to the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 to create three new offences – engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, advertising paid-for sexual activities, and facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity. We believe that this will effectively challenge those who profit from prostitution, i.e. pimps, brothel owners and traffickers. Equally importantly it will send out a strong message that such exploitation will not be tolerated in Scotland.

This criminalization of the demand should not be used as opportunity to further criminalise those who are purchased for sexual purposes.

We do not support amendment 8 (8A-8D, lodged by Margo Macdonald), proposing the addition of two further offences – causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity and profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities.
Prostitution is inherently harmful and this is what must be addressed – not whether it causes “alarm” to a third party.

“Prostitution and trafficking in women are seen as harmful practices that cannot, and should not be separated; in order to effectively eliminate trafficking in women, concrete measures against prostitution must be put in place” (Ekberg, 2003, p. 69). We do not support amendment 461 (lodged by Nigel Don) which creates an offence of paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force. CD believe that the burden of proving ‘force’ or coercion would be unworkable and we do not support a distinction between forced and voluntary prostitution. Most male consumers do not debate these alleged distinctions and whilst an occasional man may report trafficking concerns, most consumers do not ask whether women and girls choose to, are forced into or have been trafficked from abroad for prostitution. This disregard is also shown by 50% of 110 men who buy sex in Scotland (Challenging Demand report 2007) who believed that women in prostitution are victimised by pimps. This knowledge did not prevent them continuing the exploitation.

Scotland is obliged to address the demand for prostitution through Article 6 of the Convention on the Elimination Of All Forms Of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW). This calls on State Parties to: Take all appropriate measures, including legislation, to suppress all forms of traffic in women and exploitation of the prostitution of women. A number of other relevant international strategies call for the UK to intervene including:

- Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948)
- UN Slavery Convention (1926)
- Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956)
- European Convention of Human Rights (1950)
- International Convention on Civil and Political Rights (1966)

The recognition already exists in Scottish legislation “that offence provisions which specifically target purchasers would provide a more unambiguous message about the unacceptability of this behaviour and might assist in focusing efforts to tackle the demand for street prostitution”. (Deputy Minister for Finance and Public Service Reform, 2007). It is incongruent to recognize the role of The Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act 2007 in indicating the unacceptability of purchasing sexual activity but continuing to make a distinction between purchasing in a public place and purchase facilitated online or through a telephone call.
CD has a clear anti-prostitution stance but does not judge or criticise women involved. We do not deny that some women choose to become involved in prostitution but they represent a minority of the women and girls involved in Scotland. Any legislative approach must be based on the needs and experiences of many women for whom the element of choice is greatly reduced. It is important that we also hear their voices and experiences of women.

“During the time I was in prostitution I had to tell myself I was enjoying it, that I wanted to do it, I couldn’t admit to anyone particularly myself how much I hated it. In the end, no man should have the right to buy or sell women or girls, just for a sexual fantasy. He has no right to take away the prostituted woman’s or girl’s human rights.” (Fiona Broadfoot, founder of EXIT, in conversation).

“To be honest, when I hear the language of a safer form of prostitution, I know I am hearing the words of all those who will gain from the sex trade. Even though some say it from the goodness of their heart, they have fallen naively into traps of pimps, managers and johns. There is a huge belief that indoors prostitution must be safe, or at least safer than street prostitution. This I cannot get my head round. What is safe about being struck in a room with a strange man who knows he has permission to do whatever he wants to you, when he can use as much time as he wants to fulfill his porn fantasy. The only thing stopping him is not having enough money... All the sex trade is built on and makes its huge profits from having a class of women and girls who have no choice, no voice and no power. ... These are women and girls that can be manipulated into whatever violent porn fantasy makes the biggest profit. We can only make it safe enough when we built a world that refuses to allow any john to buy any prostitute for any reason. Then we can slowly destroy the sex trade. Then we can truly speak of safety.” R. Mott – formerly involved in prostitution.

For the majority of women in street prostitution (62.7%) was their main reason for involvement with most of the Glasgow women were using heroin (81.3%). For women indoors there were other reduced options driving them towards prostitution – financial pressures, household expenses and child-care were the main reasons. Whilst illegal drug use was not common amongst women indoors, they (34%) had higher usage of alcohol during work hours than women in street prostitution (14%).

Consumer violence

Consumer violence may not have obvious physical health consequences for many women in prostitution but it is almost uniformly violent and harmful to those involved in it. Research has shown that high levels of women experience some type of violence while prostituted. Another study reported that 82% of women reported being physically assaulted since entering prostitution, with 55% being assaulted by the demand. 88% had been physically threatened and 80% reported physical attacks that had resulted in serious injury. 68% of respondents reported having been raped whilst in prostitution.

A study on client violence by Hart, Bernard and Church 2006 found high levels of consumer violence experienced by women in prostitution (63%) with 37% experiencing it in the recent past. Whilst women in street prostitution reported higher levels of violence than women indoors and were also more likely to sustain injuries, prostitution indoors is not without high levels of violence. Indoor prostitutes were most likely to report vaginal or anal ‘attempted rape’ (17%).

Focusing on the demand

“Male demand is a primary factor in the expansion of the sex industry worldwide and sustains commercial sexual exploitation, and that the buyer has largely escaped examination, analysis, censure, and penalty for his actions” (J Raymond, 2002). CD recognises that male demand is not the only promoter of prostitution with different economic policies; globalization; an organized sex industry; financial and political crisis’s; female poverty preyed on by recruiters, traffickers, and pimps; stereotypes; and women’s inequality all contributing to the rise in global sexual exploitation. These factors, too, are highly gendered. Male demand drives this profitable exploitation so pimps, recruiters, and traffickers seek out a supply of women.

This amendment would help create a contemporary, democratic Scottish society where women and girls have lives free of all forms of male violence. It is a progressive and courageous move recognising that prostitution, like all forms of violence against women, constitutes a barrier to gender equality and any legislative approach should seek to remove such a barrier. This is a significant social problem, harmful not only to the individual prostituted person but also to society at large. Gender equality will not be attained while men buy, sell and exploit women and children by prostituting.

At the same time, CD strongly recommends that those who are victims of sexual exploitation are fully decriminalised, and resources are directed into holistic services to support people exit the sex industry permanently and overcome, overcome the damage caused by it, and provide other opportunities including training, education and employment.

Challenging Demand
16 March 2010

References

Barnard M, Hart G, Church S, “Client Violence Against Prostitute Women Working From Street and Off-Street Locations: A Three City Comparison”

Mott R - Http://rmott62.wordpress.com/2010/03/12/this-is-the-harm/

Written submission from the Scottish Coalition Against Sexual Exploitation

SCASE is a collation of individuals throughout Scotland which works to raise awareness of the harm caused to women through prostitution and other forms of commercial sexual exploitation, including stripping, lap dancing, pornography, sex tourism, mail order brides, and trafficking for the purposes of prostitution. It campaigns for legislative change necessary to: reduce the harm caused through prostitution and other forms of sexual exploitation; remove current gender inequality in the law; challenge the behaviour of men who buy sexual services.

SCASE takes the view that prostitution and other forms of sexual exploitation are part of a spectrum of men’s violence against women and children, which includes incest, rape, sexual harassment and domestic violence. There are clear links between issues such as childhood experience of abuse and neglect, domestic violence, poverty, homelessness, addiction, and women’s involvement in prostitution.

We oppose efforts, which focus on the “choice” women involved in sexual exploitation, which label prostitution as ‘sex work’ or which legitimate prostitution. These do not remove the harm caused but simply legitimize it. We do not view prostitution as a choice for women, irrespective of age, and believe that it is contradictory to condemn child prostitution whilst condoning or ignoring adult prostitution. Neither do we recognise the false distinctions between forced and so-called ‘free’ prostitution. All prostitution is exploitative of the person prostituted, regardless of the context, or of whether that person is said to have consented to the prostitution. Sexual exploitation eroticizes women’s inequality and is a vehicle for racism; Black women, minority ethnic women and indigenous women suffer disproportionately.

Although women in prostitution are agreeing to sexual activity, this is unwanted sex. In order to repeatedly endure this unwanted sex women have to dissociate, and many use alcohol or drugs to do so. This is the case irrespective of whether the prostitution happens on the street, in a brothel, or in a fancy hotel.

The vast majority of women in prostitution have suffered childhood neglect, violence and abuse. Most are poor and many are homeless and drug addicted. The vast majority of women come out of prostitution as poor as when they went in.

Many women have to resort to prostitution out of desperation or insurmountable financial hardship – when she finds herself impoverished with children to care for but lacking viable job skill. It is not as the media commonly suggests – that these women are all supposedly involved because when presented with a wide variety of attractive options, they’ve decided the sex industry has the most to offer. These reduced economic options are exploited and the most vulnerable women - poor women, women of color, and women with few job skills are more likely to find themselves in situations in which commercial sexual exploitation are their only options.

A woman might choose to become involved in prostitution because she can’t make that kind of money in any other field. A man, however, can. Why should we be prepared to accept that women who are poor, vulnerable and homeless should be “made available” for sexual exploitation by men. Most men however do not buy sex – studies have shown that between 10 and 15% of men in the UK have done so. The vast majority of men in Scotland choose to not exploit others for sex and this amendment goes some way to validating their choice.

SCASE questions why Scotland needs a “sex” industry where women’s bodies and sexuality are aggressively commodified and exploited. This is a cultural phenomenon with the demand for a never-ceasing availability of women for men to use sexually. We believe this amendment goes some way to highlight this fundamental problem in our culture where men’s sense of entitlement and privilege remains unchallenged.

Scottish Coalition Against Sexual Exploitation
16 March 2010
Before going on to the primary matter of my submission, I should like to take issue with your preference for receiving submissions in the proprietary format of an illegal foreign monopoly. This is not exactly the best way to run an open parliament, nor to encourage our native software industry.

The Scottish Parliament has, over the past two years, shown a shocking tendency to introduce extremely regressive and puritanical legislation in areas of sexual conduct. We have criminalised fifteen year old girls who have sex. We have banned the possession of images of ‘...rape and other non-consensual penetrative sexual activity, whether violent or otherwise...’, without any concept of how one tells, from an image, whether or not the participants were consenting; and thus, have essentially banned the possession of any image of human sexuality. And now we see a proposal to outlaw anyone ‘engaging in paid for sexual activities’.

What, pray, is a 'sexual activity'? When a doctor prescribes viagra for a patient, is that a 'sexual activity'? When a nurse takes a swab from a student who fears she may have a sexually transmitted disease, is that a ‘sexual activity’? When a woman who is in employment makes love to her spouse who is unemployed, is that a 'paid for sexual activity'? When I, as an author, write a story in which my characters have sex, and some person reading the story later experiences a frisson of arousal, is that a 'paid for sexual activity'? When a man pays a pro-domme to beat him with a whip, is that a 'paid for sexual activity', and if it is, how do you propose to distinguish that scenario from a man who pays an osteopath to help him with back pain? When your daughter goes out for a meal with a new boyfriend, and he pays, and they later find themselves in bed together, is that a 'paid for sexual activity'?
No-one denies that there are problems around coerced prostitution, and there is clearly a genuine public policy interest in protecting victims from such coercion. But coerced prostitution is explicitly covered by other provisions of the proposed bill. Given that, it is clear that the amendment tabled by Ms Godman deals exclusively with uncoerced, consensual acts. The state proposes to step into the bedroom, and determine what acts consenting adult citizens can and cannot choose to pay one another for.

When the Taleban introduced legislation like this into Afghanistan, the West rightly held them up to ridicule as puritanical, and trampling all over the human rights of the population. Do we really want Scotland to be seen as the moral heirs of the Taleban? Do we want Scotland to become once again a nation afraid of its own sexuality?

This proposed amendment is literally scandalous. It is shameful that any civilised person could even suggest it. It is no business either of Ms Godman's or of the Parliament's what adult citizens choose to do, consensually, in the privacy of their own homes.

Simon Brooke
15 March 2010
Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences)

I am writing in support of Amendment 8 to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. Like many activities that involve the exploitation of others, prostitution is a profitable business. These profits do not find their way to the women who have to endure the repeated acts of unwanted sex, the violence and the degradation. No, these profits are strictly for those who facilitate the prostitution of others. If Scotland is serious about becoming a society that respects humanity, that stands against those that abuse and exploit then we must tackle these facilitators of abuse. I therefore support the new offences of advertising paid-for sexual activities and facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity.

The Scottish Government is to be commended in its efforts to address the driving force behind prostitution – the men who demand access to women’s bodies on their terms. By criminalising those that pay for sex through the Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act 2007, the Scottish Government let society know that they believe men should take responsibility for their actions and pay the price if they are found to be sexually exploiting women on the streets. As we all know prostitution or the commercial sexual exploitation of women and girls is not limited to the outdoors. I therefore support the new offence of engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, which sends out the message that in Scotland we believe commercial sexual exploitation is unacceptable, regardless of the setting.

I do not support the further amendments by Margo Macdonald and Nigel Don as they do not appear to address the fact that all prostitution is harmful. It is widely documented that in order to endure the constant unwanted sexual acts that are prostitution, women use drugs and alcohol and disassociation to help them survive. If you try and imagine yourself in the position of a prostituted woman it is not difficult to understand why. These methods of survival have an extremely negative physical, emotional and mental affect upon the women.

The amendments refer to forced or coerced prostitution. How many women do we think make a free choice to become a ‘prostitute’? Desperation and a lack of choice “force” or “coerce” women into prostitution. Will these amendments cover these women? Lets not make laws that suggest some prostitution is acceptable and some isn’t, lets make laws that will provide the police, the courts, and communities with the teeth to tackle all types of prostitution.

Surely no humane person can argue in support of the purchase and sale of bodies? Surely any civilised society would do all within its powers to stop such a trade? Surely if men and women are to become truly equal we cannot be complicit in any activity that enables and entitles one group to reduce the other group to objects for sale?

I implore our Government to accept Amendment 8 and move Scotland towards a more equal society, free of abuse.

Lynn Anderson
16 March 2010
Amendments 8, 461 and 378 exemplify the urge towards over-extensive criminalization that mars too much contemporary penal policy.

Each amendment is directed at a genuine mischief that does properly concern the criminal law: the mischief of the exploitation and coercion to which so many of those engaged in the provision of sexual services for payment are subjected; the mischief of harassment that falls short of causing physical harm. In each case, however, the proposed offence is defined in such over-broad terms that it is no longer focused on that mischief, and defines as criminal too much conduct that, unworthy or disreputable as it might be, should not concern the criminal law.

In relation to paid-for sexual activity, Amendment 461 imports s.14 of the English Policing and Crime Act 2009. The objective elements of the offence are acceptable, since they specify a real mischief that should concern the criminal law, but subsection 2(b), declaring that it is ‘irrelevant ... whether A is, or ought to be, aware that C has engaged in exploitative conduct’, is objectionable, since it convicts someone who had no reason to believe that the person from whom he purchased sexual services had been subjected to exploitative conduct. Amendment 8 is even more objectionable, since it does not even require proof that the person being paid has been subjected to any kind of exploitation. What could justify the broader offence proposed in this amendment?

• If it is aimed at the real mischief of exploitation, that should be made explicit, and proof should be required not merely that sexual activity was paid for, but that the transaction was not free and uncoerced. That will of course create difficulties of proof, and there may be an argument for giving prosecutors some assistance—for instance by creating a legal presumption of exploitation or coercion on the basis of more easily proved facts, and then placing on the defendant the onus of at least adducing evidence that the transaction was, or that he reasonably believed it to be, free and uncoerced. That would require further discussion; but what is in principle illegitimate is to define an offence in terms that reach so much further than the mischief at which it is aimed.

• Or is the amendment aimed at the supposed immorality of prostitution, rather than at the exploitation and coercion to which many prostitutes are subjected? If so, it is surely time to retrieve the wisdom of the Wolfenden Committee, and to recognise that whatever the moral status of prostitution, it is not as such the criminal law’s business in what aspires to be a liberal society.

Both these amendments should be rejected.
In relation to Amendment 378, ‘Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour’, much of the conduct that it covers is already (and rightly) criminal. Insofar as it goes well beyond existing law it goes too far. A person who behaves, in private (see subsection 3(c)(ii)) in a way that a reasonable person would find threatening, alarming or distressing (subsection 1), and who is reckless as to whether the conduct would cause such fear, alarm or distress (subsection 2(b)), is guilty of an offence even if no one is actually frightened, alarmed or distressed—or is even aware of the conduct (see subsection 3(b)-(c)). Again, the law has been extended so far that it loses touch with the real mischief (harassment, including domestic harassment) at which it is properly aimed. This amendment too should be rejected: if there is evidence that the current legal provisions are inadequate to deal with the mischief, more carefully considered proposals (based on decent research) are needed.

A larger issue of concern here relates to procedure. The amendments noted above (and others) introduce a number of new offences (in particular on stalking, engaging in paid-for sexual activity and related offences, voyeurism, carrying a knife on workplace premises etc). Irrespective of the general question of whether or not these are appropriate areas for criminalization, we are particularly concerned that these amendments are introducing major new elements to the Bill at Stage 2. There is thus no opportunity for proper debate or thorough scrutiny of either the amendments individually or the Bill as a revised whole. The proper procedure for introducing such offences should be in a stand-alone piece of legislation or at a much earlier stage in the legislative process. Without this there is a risk that the democratic process is being subverted and that the law is being developed in an ad hoc and haphazard way, without due care and attention to either the principles of the criminal law or the likely impact and utility of the enacted provisions. For this reason we would strongly urge that the amendments introducing new offences be removed from the draft Bill and presented to Parliament in separate legislation.

Professor R A Duff (Department of Philosophy, University of Stirling)
Professor L Farmer (School of Law, University of Glasgow)
Professor S E Marshall (Department of Philosophy, University of Stirling)
Professor V Tadros (School of Law, University of Warwick)
Dr M Renzo (Department of Philosophy, University of Stirling)

Researchers on a Research Council funded project on Criminalization

17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Consenting Adult Action Network

Offences relating to the criminalisation of paid-for sexual activities

Consenting Adult Action Network (CAAN) Statement:

'We believe in the right of consenting adults to make their own sexual choices, in respect of what they do, see and enjoy alone or with other consenting adults, unhindered and unfettered by government.'

'We believe that it is not the business of government to intrude into the sex lives of consenting adults.'

Several in-depth and well-researched submissions from the International Union of Sex Workers, the UK Network of Sex Work Projects, academics and sex workers themselves have already made many fine points on the matter, so this evidence will not repeat their arguments. CAAN wishes to register their matching opposition to the proposal to criminalise paying for sexual activities and urges the Scottish Government to take oral evidence from actual sex workers regarding this proposed legislation.

This Bill will not stop non-consensual (forced) sex work

As the CAAN Statement says, we believe that consenting adults should be allowed to pursue their own sexual interests without government interference. We do not subscribe to the theory that all sex workers are forced into their profession; to say so denies them both the status of adults and the ability to consent. We feel that legislation of the type proposed serves only to punish consenting adults and will not protect any vulnerable groups. CAAN urges you to listen to the voices of sex workers when they explain how this bill would create a climate of fear and lower their standard of living.

The International Union of Sex Workers and others successfully demonstrate how this amendment will serve to reduce positive interaction with authorities, endangering both independent sex workers and forced (i.e. trafficked) sex workers. We support their arguments on the matter, and will instead look at Nigel Don’s amendment 11E.

Mr Don’s amendment 11E (specifically section (2)b) removes the clients’ ability to make conscious decisions to make a responsible choice in avoiding trafficked sex workers. By making it a crime to engage in business with a trafficked sex worker regardless of the ignorance of the situation, the responsibility is placed entirely upon the sex worker, not on the consumer. If the trafficked sex worker lies because they are afraid of the criminals who trafficked them in the first place, the consumer cannot be faulted for being given erroneous information. If the Scottish Government truly believes that forced prostitution is a product of supply and demand, they'll let the consumers vote with their feet. If people are allowed to choose FairTrade chocolate, surely they should be allowed to choose non-trafficked sex workers in a similar fashion.

Sexual diversity, not gendered oppression

CAAN supports diversity in sexuality. The Scottish Government, by contrast, seems to deny that diversity in sexuality exists. The term “sexual activities” in Ms Godman’s proposed amendments covers a wide range of activities, well beyond the scope of mere intercourse in exchange for money.

Ms MacDonald seems to think that Ms Godman’s intention is to target activities such as lap dancing; her concern for the definition of the term “sexual activities” is well-placed. Edinburgh in particular is known as a popular stag and hen night destination. If the term “sexual activities” encompasses lap dancing, what’s to stop it from being applied to Festival acts such as the Lady Boys of Bangkok and the Chippendales? How many strip-o-grams will lose their strippers? The effect on the local economy has not been considered.

Another popular type of business that may be targeted by the legislation is professional domination, the proprietors of which you may know as dominatrixes or pro-dommes. It is quite common to confuse dominatrixes with prostitutes, and people can be both, but the two are often separated by the fact that one may involve sexual actions (such as intercourse) and the other does not. Would the term “sexual actions” cover erotic sadomasochistic activities that do not result in orgasm? Would the people who choose to avoid forcing their partner or spouse to beat them be punished by the law as well? Would people who pay to use a dungeon for sexual enjoyment also be criminalised? The term “sexual activities” must be defined or striken entirely from the legislation. The law cannot be vague.

As several submissions (such as Jane Scoular et al) have pointed out, these amendments are based upon vast generalisations. They assume that all sexual activities are prostitution. They assume that all prostitutes are victims and have not freely chosen their career. They assume that all clients are men and abusers. These assumptions clearly show that these amendments are based upon stereotypes, not real-life examples. The oppressive views exhibited in these amendments are damaging not only to sex workers and their clients, but also to women (and indeed all people) in general in that they foster gender inequality and negative attitudes towards sex.

What is the “problem” that the Scottish Government is trying to solve with these amendments? It surely cannot be one relating to the welfare of the sex workers, as shown by several of the submissions. The narrow view of sexuality demonstrated by these amendments can only come from a viewpoint based in naïve moral superiority, not practical experience. The problem then can only then be a moral problem: People are having sex for fun and it makes other people mad. The solution is not to bow down to the constrictive dogmas of arm-chair moralists, but instead to listen to actual sex workers to find out what problems they face.

Listen to actual sex workers, not arm-chair moralists

CAAN strongly rejects all of the proposed legislation on criminalising paid-for sexual services. We urge the Scottish Government to take oral evidence from actual sex workers such as those who have submitted written evidence.

Becky Dwyer
Consenting Adult Action Network
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Allan Balsillie

Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity

I was invited to give evidence on the recent amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, presumably because of my previous submission on extreme pornography. My interest is in sexual freedom and so I’d like to make a few comments on the paid-for sexual activity amendment.

1. This would be legislation which would criminalise a significant portion of the population. It would impact on the sexual freedom of the individual and could breach article 8 of the ECHR, I'm unsure whether that could be derogated simply because money changes hands. It therefore deserves a full consultation period and should not be tacked on as an afterthought to an existing Bill late in the process.

2. The term "paid-for sexual activity" is too broad. It could be interpreted as the simply erotic activity. Laws should be clear in their meaning.

3. The proponents of such legislation tend to be very outspoken and persistent in their demands for action. As a result there is a danger that their views have simply become received wisdom. The Justice Committee needs to be more rigorous in identifying and challenging evidence which is neither strong nor impartial.

4. I attended the Equality and Human Rights Commission debate on prostitution. One thing that struck me was how disinterested the people who wanted to criminalise the use of prostitutes were in the opinions of the prostitutes themselves. The message that there were large numbers of people happily working in the sex trade as a career choice was not welcome and there were attempts to suggest the prostitutes who had gone to the trouble of attending weren't representative. Clearly there is a gap in the evidence here; prostitutes feel they have no voice and their opinions are being ignored. Their practical concerns for their livelihoods, their safety and for their clients should have a greater influence than ideological or moralistic argument.

5. Clients are also unrepresented in the evidence. It actually appears to be the pro-criminalisation groups who portray the opinions of clients and it's no surprise they choose to do so in a negative way. I notice there have even been attempts to label clients as rapists which must be far from the truth. A similar situation occurs with pornography; with campaigners claiming misogynistic attitudes among porn-users, and yet the research proves the exact opposite.

6. In summary this is too complex an issue for such simplistic treatment. Sort out what the government wants to achieve, ensure it's objectives are justified by the evidence and at least try to adopt a strategy which doesn't create yet more criminals for society to deal with. The one proposal I wouldn't object too immediately is the profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activity, but why does it have to be a sexual activity? What's wrong with simply "profiting from a coerced activity"?

Allan Balsillie
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Angus Council Social Work and Health Department

New offences relating to stalking

- The emphasis on intent in the section on threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour is welcome
- The relationship between the procedures for this behaviour and the offence of Breach of the Peace is unclear

Sentencing for knife crime

- The “exceptional circumstances” relating to the offence or to the offender which justify not imposing a custodial sentence of at least six months would benefit from further definition

Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity

- The proposed offence of “causing alarm” to another person by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity is a welcome introduction
- Section 11AB “profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities” is a welcome means of addressing enforced prostitution.

17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Church of Scotland
Church and Society Council

Amendment 10 (lodged by Richard Baker) and, as an amendment to that amendment, 10A (lodged by Bill Aitken):

When responding to the call for written evidence on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill the Church and Society of the Church of Scotland supported the Joint Faiths Advisory Board on Criminal Justice evidence to support the introducing of a presumption against short periods of detention and in favour of Community Payback Orders. This response covers the same issue, namely the value of custodial sentences.

Those that call for stronger and mandatory sentences for knife crime and even carrying a knife might sound popular but they miss the deeper issue. Knives only become weapons when they are in someone’s hands. The target of our efforts needs to be the choice to lift the knife, not wait until the knife has been lifted. We need to ask what kind of fear of others or lack of sense of self worth means carrying a knife seems like a good choice. There is little evidence that tougher sentences and greater powers for stop and search change behaviour positively. Instead they usually mean the talents and ingenuity of these young people are put to finding new ways of avoiding being caught because the source of the problem, fear and identity, has not been dealt with. We need to see past the knife and look into the eyes of the young person holding it and say “no, there is another way, let me walk with you to find it.”

This approach takes much more effort, demands that we search for the humanity in folk who might otherwise instill fear in those around them and be willing to walk with them even as they stumble. It takes longer but will bring about real change in real people and in the end, cost society a lot less in both cash and the human cost of damaged lives and grieving families.

On this basis the Church and Society Council is opposed to the introduction of a harsh mandatory custodial sentence in relation to carrying an article with a blade or point. Such a rigid response is at odds with the real need of society which is to address the underlying reasons for people choosing to carry knives.

Chloe Clemmons
Scottish Churches Parliamentary Officer
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Jill Mariengoff

I’m writing to object to the amendments suggesting that purchase of sex and advertising of paid-for sex be criminalised in Scotland. I trust that with these amendments Scottish government means well, but in reality the outcome will be the opposite.

I am a private companion currently working in Scotland so should the amendments pass, my business might suffer, but not necessarily so since my website is not hosted in the UK and is thus outside Scottish jurisdiction. Also, I do not see how my clients can be monitored (surely, Scottish police have better things to do than look through my keyhole day and night) - as I understand, if they are not seen handing me the payment, then nothing can be proven and no one can be charged with a criminal offence. I even have a feeling that, for some of them, the idea of a clandestine affair will only add charm to our encounter.

I am, however, concerned when it comes to other women involved in prostitution, most of whom will be hit hard by this proposed legislation. I’ve been working with ECP (English Collective of Prostitutes) for a few years now and I know for a fact that most women at the lower end of sex industry are single mothers trying to provide for their families. There are two things you can do to change their situation:

• Improve the social welfare system so mothers could rely on the state when they can’t rely on their men, or
• Legalise parlours and saunas so these women didn’t have to walk the streets and could work safely indoors.

But do not criminalise clients and advertising - this is where pimps come in and the women we are talking about have no other choice but to agree to pimps’ terms.

Other issues that often come up alongside prostitution are trafficking, coercion and violence. As far as I’m aware, these are already criminalised and having a second ban on them will not make them disappear.

I am sure many people before me have listed the benefits of controlled sex industry as opposed to criminalised one, so I’ll leave it at this. There are two more issues I would like to point out though.

First of all, please take it into consideration that there are men out there who, through age, physical disfigurement, personality traits, ablutophobia or a particular fetish, are not able to find partners who'd be willing to engage in sexual activities with them without being rewarded for it. The new amendments will deprive them of any sexual contact. The same refers to disabled people. Can you imagine a life where the only physical touch you get is when someone pushes you on a bus?

Also, I would like to remind you that there are some sexually frustrated men out there who, when they can’t buy what they want, will take it by force, which puts women and children in their proximity at risk of rape and sexual abuse.

I have only moved to Scotland 2 months ago and don’t want to have to pack my bags again, however, should my business suffer, I will move back to England and settle down in Carlisle or Newcastle to enjoy the benefits of both English and Scottish clientele (for whom it will only be an hour’s drive). I’m pretty sure I will not be the only one to move. This brings up the issue of money. Scots are known to be sexually insatiable and most working girls pay taxes, so if not our safety and wellbeing, then, hopefully, at least the thought of how much money will be going from Scotland to England will bring you back to reality.

Whether you criminalise clients or sex workers or both, prostitution will always be there - it’s been around since time immemorial and a few words on a piece of paper will not change the fact that men want women, it will only make things difficult for you and for us. So please reconsider these amendments. Should you require any additional information, I am willing to meet the Justice Committee to give oral evidence.

Jill Mariengoff
17 March 2010
Amendments 8, 10 and 10A

Amendment 8

How is ‘engaging in paid-for sexual activity’ to be determined?

Section 8 will result in confusion.

First, how should ‘sexual activity’ to be defined?

How will the law decide whether or not an activity is ‘sexual’? What does and does not count as ‘engage’? Is this to include non-physical activity, such as that conducted by phone, email, text-messaging, or paid-for transmissions of sexual activity etc? Should it include ‘escort’ work? Is ‘sexual’ to be defined objectively, or, subjectively? What will and will not count as ‘sexual activity’ and according to what principle? What is to be the test of whether or not ‘sexual activity’ has been committed? The implementation and policing of such legislation will not only problematic but is also likely to subject the law to ridicule.

How should ‘paid for’ be defined?

Will this include only monetary payment, or, will it include the provision of ‘gifts’ and/or payments-in-kind? Presumably the aim must be to target sexual activity which is purchased in a transaction. It would surely be anomalous only to focus on monetary payment alone and will create a huge loophole. At the same time, however, the more logical and broader definition will criminalise a huge range of explicit and implicit exchanges in which sexual activity is engaged in return-for some apparent benefit. Logically, it will include all kinds of explicit and implicit arrangements, incorporating transactions between people in on-going relationships.

Amendment 8 will expose vulnerable women and men working in prostitution to even less protection, not more.

The proposed amendment 8 is likely to have the overall effect of making sex work more covert, more marginal, more dangerous and more likely to inhibit the vital work of services trying to assist vulnerable people working in prostitution. It will also inhibit the work of police in investigating assaults, rapes and murders of people working in prostitution: witnesses are far less likely to be willing to come forward if they may be the subject of criminal charges.
Amendments 10 and 10A: Mandatory sentences for unlawful possession of knives.

What are the reasons for wishing to introduce mandatory minimum sentences? There tend to be two main arguments among politicians who have wanted mandatory sentencing: general deterrence; and secondly to ensure certainty in sentencing by eradicating (or nearly eradicating) judicial discretion in sentencing individuals.

1. Mandatory sentencing leads to injustice.

Mandatory sentencing is, by definition, insensitive to individual differences between cases, in terms of both the relative seriousness of the offence and the individual brought to court. It turns judges into machines. Sentencing becomes rigid and leads to perverse results (see below). It is welcome that there are 'escape clauses' in both Amendment 10 and 10A which allow judges to depart from the norm. However, on the other hand, to the extent that these escape clauses have an impact they defeat the very claim of automatic mandatory sentencing. (see point 10 below).

2. The 'general deterrent' effect of mandatory sentencing is weak-to-negligible.

This is not to deny that there will be some individuals who can be deterred, but the overall evidence is that where mandatory sentencing has been tried before it has done little if anything to reduce crime. General deterrence can work but only if certain assumptions are made. Most importantly, deterrence relies on the assumption that the people being targeted are careful, rationally-calculating individuals who think through their long-term futures, and are not impulsive or feckless. It also the assumption that people will expect to be caught. This works well for certain kinds of offences (e.g. traffic offences like speeding) which are relatively easy to detect. The carrying (as opposed to using) of knives is by its nature concealed and thus much more difficult to detect.

3. To the extent that general deterrence can work, we should expect displacement.

The broader empirical research literature about general deterrence underlines the point that to the extent that it can work, policy-makers should expect adaptation and displacement. While the overall effect of these amendments is likely to be minimal (and far less than other preventative initiatives), a few individuals may well think-through the penal consequences and, (assuming there is a huge increase in detection rates), opt to change their behaviour. However, it would, of course, be naïve to suppose that these rationally-calculating individuals will not consider carrying alternative types of weapons.
which are not covered by mandatory minimum penalties. This then begs the question: why not extend such penalties to the carrying of all weapons?

4. Proportionality. Why single out the carrying of pointed/bladed weapons and not a range of other offences which also cause great public concern?

If the argument is ‘x crime is a scourge therefore mandatory minimum sentences must be introduced’, why not also pass legislation making it mandatory that judges must give minimum sentences (at whatever level) for say, the carrying of other kinds of weapons; possessing so-called ‘date-rape’ drugs; possession of child pornography, etc? What is the difference of principle?

5. Mandatory sentencing leads to perverse results.

Mandatory minimum sentences have perverse results. By singling out the carrying of knives for mandatory minimum sentences, people who carry and brandish weapons other than knives will often be treated more leniently than people who are convicted of carrying a knife (but without any attempt to use it). Let us imagine, for instance, the convictions of two young men from the same neighbourhood and with roughly similar backgrounds. Eric is convicted of one charge of carrying a knife, but not of any attempt to brandish, nor to use it nor issue any threats to so. His is the standard kind of offence at which this proposed legislation is aimed. Eric must be sentenced to the mandatory term (six months under Amendment 10, or, two years under Amendment 10A). Peter, on the other hand, is convicted of also brandishing a different offensive weapon (ie not a bladed/pointed weapon). The sentence in Peter’s case is a discretionary matter and a shorter custodial sentence is passed than in Eric’s case. The sheriff recognises the absurdity – since Eric’s behaviour is patently more serious- but there are no exceptional or mitigating circumstances in Peter’s case to permit a departure from the automatic sentence.

6. Mandatory sentencing shifts discretionary power from the sentencing judge to the prosecutor.

In most cases there is more than one charge which the prosecution can choose to bring and there is an element of discretion in how to do so, including whether or not bring certain charges and in what forms. Under mandatory sentencing the prosecutor greatly increases his/her power at the expense of the judge. The decision as to how to prosecute a case effectively becomes the sentencing decision as well: prosecutors become de facto sentencers and the judge’s role is correspondingly diminished. This would be a retrograde step, not least since judicial decision-making is inherently more open and more challengeable than prosecutorial decision-making.
7. Mandatory minima laws contradict the policy drive to achieve greater efficiency in the justice system.

Where penalties are mandatory minima there tend to be fewer guilty pleas than when they are discretionary.\(^1\) This runs contrary to the aims of successive governments in trying to speed-up the justice system; will be a drain on precious resources at a time of major public spending cuts; and will cause witnesses additional and inconvenience and anxiety.

8. Amendment 10A requires a minimum custodial sentence of two years and thus will always have to be set for jury trial.

A consequence of amendment 10A means that where prosecutors choose to prosecute a case where there is a knife-carrying element the case will automatically have to be brought as a jury-triable procedure. This is because a custodial sentence of two years or more (the mandatory minimum specified by Amendment 10A) can only be passed under jury-triable (solemn) procedure. As the Committee will be aware, jury trial procedure is much stricter than summary procedure and has historically been reserved for extremely grave matters such as rape, treason, and murder. If prosecutors are applying the law they will be forced to prosecute every single eligible alleged knife-carrying case under jury-triable procedure.\(^2\) Will that be an efficient or sensible way to proceed?

9. Adaptive prosecutorial behaviour.

Given the near-automatic nature of mandatory minima, prosecutorial decision-making will, in fact, probably adapt in different parts of the country and in different ways, (as it has in other countries where mandatory mimima has been tried). For example, a study conducted by the United States Sentencing Commission found that prosecutors only filed charges in around one quarter of eligible cases. To avoid what many prosecutors (and judges) regarded as potentially unjust or unworkable consequences\(^3\), many prosecutors circumvented mandatory mimima by bringing different charges.\(^4\)

---

\(^1\) For example, the US Sentencing Commission found that trial rates were 250% higher for offences carrying a mandatory minimum sentence.

\(^2\) It would not be lawful for prosecutors to depart from this – under Amendment 10A such departures can only be determined by the judge.

10. ‘Escape clauses’ can only lead to subsequent criticism.

Escape clauses (which allow ‘departures’ from the basic automatic character of the amendments) will operate either too restrictively or too permissively. Their effect will be to stoke public cynicism about law and criminal justice. Amendments 10 and 10A are drawn slightly differently, but both are problematic because both begin with the ‘headline’ claim that the law will require that knife-carrying automatically mandates a minimum custodial sentence. Both amendments are being touted to the public as ensuring certainty and automatic consequences. If either escape clause is interpreted very restrictively it is bound to lead to cases of obvious injustice. On the other hand, if it interpreted permissively then it defeats the point of mandatory sentencing and will only increase public cynicism.

11. Mandatory minimum sentences have been tried before.

Both at national and state level, the USA has had the most experience of mandatory minima. Ironically, at the time Scotland is considering this move across the USA mandatory minima are being reversed.

12. There are many far more effective ways that Parliament can seek to shape sentencing and encourage certainty.

There are much more effective techniques which can encourage certainty in sentencing, including the use of a Sentencing Information System so that judges can have all the information available to them about sentencing patterns for certain kinds of cases, recent legislation, and narrative judicial-created Guidelines created in conjunction with a sentencing council.

Mandatory sentencing is a distraction from the serious, painstaking work of crime reduction. What we need to be concentrating on is supporting and resourcing the much more difficult but productive preventative strategies (joined-up between police, health, social services) which can and do work.

Dr. Cyrus Tata
Centre for Sentencing Research
Law School, Strathclyde University
17 March 2010

Amendment 8

I am in favour of the proposal submitted by Trish Godman (Amendment 8) which asks for changes to the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 by creating three new offences – engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, advertising paid-for sexual activities, and facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity.

I still can't believe that vulnerable woman are subjected to such a degrading and soul destroying way of life for the financial benefit and enjoyment of others. These women need help in order to get themselves out of this sex slave industry. Its people like you and I who can help them do so. I'm doing my bit.

Selina Duncan
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Rape Crisis Scotland

Amendment 8

1. Rape Crisis Scotland welcomes the opportunity to provide written evidence on this amendment. This is a crucial opportunity for the Justice Committee to consider the legislative framework in Scotland in relation to prostitution.

2. The harm caused to women by involvement in prostitution has been well documented and has been accepted by the Scottish Government in its policy document ‘Safer Lives, Changed Lives: A Shared Approach to Tackling Violence Against Women in Scotland’ which recognises prostitution as a form of violence against women.

3. In order to repeatedly endure this unwanted sex women have to dissociate, and many use alcohol or drugs to do so. This is the case irrespective of whether the prostitution happens on the street, in a brothel, or in a hotel. The vast majority of women in prostitution have suffered childhood neglect, violence and abuse. Most are poor and many are homeless and drug addicted. The vast majority of women come out of prostitution as poor as when they went in. Prostitution undermines gender equality. Why should we be prepared to accept that women who are poor, vulnerable and homeless should be "made available" for sexual exploitation?

4. Most men do not buy sex - studies have shown that somewhere between 10 and 15% of men in the UK have done so. A significant number of men who buy sex later regret it. 25% of men interviewed in Scotland said that they felt "significant shame and regret" at having bought sex. See www.womenssupportproject.co.uk/content/publications/183,182,216/ChallengingMensDemandforProstitutioninScotland2008.htm

5. In our experience, discussion around legislative and policy approaches to prostitution can often be unhelpfully polarised between those who advocate for prostitution as ‘sex work’ and a free choice and those who recognise the harms caused by prostitution. As an organisation, Rape Crisis Scotland believes that it is possible to work to reduce the harm caused to women in prostitution and at the same time put in place strategies to assist women to exit prostitution and to challenge the notion that it is acceptable for women’s bodies to be purchased in this way.
6. For too long in Scotland, institutional discrimination has existed within our legal approach to prostitution, with women involved in prostitution being criminalised but men who used women in prostitution not facing any real legal sanction. The Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Action 2007 was a welcome step in starting to address this unequal treatment by the law. The current amendment before the Committee provides an opportunity to consider further our responses to men who buy sex. If we are serious about eradicating prostitution in Scotland, it is essential that we tackle the demand for prostitution. The best way of doing this is to criminalise demand. This must be combined with programmes to provide support to women involved in prostitution, and assistance with exiting prostitution. Public education about the harm caused by prostitution is also crucial.

7. Rape Crisis Scotland supports Amendment 8 and we urge members of the Justice Committee to consider giving this amendment their support.

Sandy Brindley
National Co-ordinator
3 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Maisie Campbell

The personal, social, moral and political perspective of a professional escort

Why is it that some Members in the Scottish Parliament and some social researchers further afield treat us women like children or imbeciles, unable to make our own choices in entering prostitution? We are not all young girls brought in from Eastern Europe or craving for our next drug fix. It is a joyful occupation to be a professional escort working at the high end of the market and one gets to meet a lot of interesting people, but it is still hard work which I have done for the last 10 years since I graduated. The decision to take up sex-work was entirely my own without any pressure from anyone. That remains the case and it seems to me to be complete and unrealistic nonsense for armchair feminists and social theorists to claim that all women engaged in sex-work are abused and exploited simply by selling sex and that violence is necessarily associated with that work. I and all my independent escort friends at the high end of this ancient profession really enjoy what we are doing and take pride in it. We like the social connection of serving our loyal clients, meeting new ones and greatly enjoy the physical and material comforts which that work gives us. They say that a prostitute is a woman who makes many men happy rather then one man sad, and overall we are probably talking about serving the needs of nearly 20% of the Scottish male population, of all classes and occupations, high and low. For my part I am extremely selective, choosing my clients carefully and restricting myself to seeing one or two at most in any one day, and that on intermittent days. Many of us support our families with our earnings. During my 10 years in the profession I have never suffered abuse or violence of any kind and in fact am sure that many of my clients treat me with greater respect and kindness than their own wives. In that time I have learnt a lot about the strengths and weaknesses of the human character and often discuss my clients’ problems with them, offering sound advice where I can. There is actually a large element of caring for other human beings which goes into sex-work and it pays to be a good listener. First one must relax the client, then engage him in conversation, entertain him, find his sense of humour and try to become involved in his interests, whether in sport, art, music, business, politics or current affairs which generally means trying to keep up to date on several fronts; I do this by reading the Sunday ‘heavies’ to keep up with events of the week before. The actual sex bit, if there is any at all, is actually a small part of the total experience. This is a very high personal-maintenance occupation and one must constantly look to one’s physical appearance to remain attractive to the client. This includes watching one’s diet and visiting the gym two or three times a week, renewing one’s wardrobe with new lingerie, dresses and shoes, purchasing expensive beauty products and regularly visiting the beautician and tanning parlour. It involves detailed and extreme attention to personal hygiene and cleanliness and also keeping one’s flat or house perfectly clean.
for oneself and one’s clients before, throughout, and between dates in order to stave off health risks. It involves attention to one’s internet advertising to keep one’s image and profile fresh and exciting for the clients. And it involves time spent travelling to and from dates (‘outcalls’), including to other parts of the UK. It is a constant process of invention and re-invention and it requires the application of a lot of time, mental effort, money and work. Constantly living up to the expectations and interests of different men, always being in a good mood for a date, pushing one’s own day-to-day personal problems to the back of one’s mind and not taking them out on the client during a date, is all hard mental work requiring self discipline. The mark of a good escort is that she is able to meet her client’s expectations and help him leave the real world of problems outside the door for an hour or two and enter a world of fantasy with her in which he is made to feel very, very special. The moment of physical intimacy, when the escort and her client are the most important people in the world for each other at that instant, is actually only a small but important part of the experience; true love is just one style of having sex but simply because one might not be in love with the client does not mean that the act of love is not personal and intimate. The act of sex is not actually the whole experience of a date and to view it as such is to regard the occupation of an escort very crudely. Sometimes in fact sexual activity, by which I mean penetrative vaginal sexual intercourse, or ‘full vanilla’ as it is referred to in our business, does not take place at all. Some clients simply wish to talk, others simply wish evening companionship at dinner, others wish prostate massage or other ‘comforts’, some wish role play of various kinds, including being dominated in a manner reminiscent of their childhood, while others wish the application of pain on some part of their bodies. Being a professional escort therefore is all about the social service of responding to a masculine demand in the provision in a number of forms of a full ‘gfe’ (‘girl friend experience’) or acting like a part time and caring wife, though sometimes providing services that a wife may not willingly provide. Human beings are all different and that makes sex-work exciting.

I am afraid therefore that I will regard it as a form of violence perpetrated on me if paternalistic legislation is used to take away my right to work as an escort and with it my income, happiness and self-respect, as well as a form of violence against the rights to happiness of nearly 20% of the male population of this country. It is sad to reflect that if prohibition takes place it will be following the impulsive and recent initiative of one angry Glasgow Councillor against the low end of the profession supported by one MSP.

I have been told that in England the law is to change next month to criminalise a sexual transaction with a coerced woman, but not to ban the sale of sex altogether. I could live with that more tolerant position and wonder why everyone in Scotland cannot be treated in the same way. It seems to me to be unjust and unfair that the responsible top end of the profession should suffer by a total ban on its activities for the irresponsible behaviour of a few bad men at the bottom.

To the extent that Parliament may allow the majority of us to be penalised as a result of the activities of some nasty criminal elements possibly controlling a minority of women at the low end of the sex market, the suspicion will linger that there is concealed in such legislation an underlying moral judgement; that is that Parliament is simply passing these amendments because it does not like prostitution at any level. With such a morally fundamentalist position Parliament may be seen as a sort of ‘Tartan Taliban’, taking Scotland back hundreds of years. And if Parliament does criminalise paid-for sex it will be trying to send the water back up the waterfall; the need for sex and comfort is a human need, as real and natural as eating and drinking and all the other functions of the body, and if that need is frustrated it will lead to damaging social consequences elsewhere.

What I and the rest of the adult population in Scotland do willingly with our bodies, without causing harm to anybody, in the privacy of our own bedrooms and on what terms and with whom is in my view absolutely not the affair of any legislature and I know of no political party in Parliament with any mandate to make laws about these very private things.

I would therefore respectfully request the Justice Committee to reject the amendments to Section 34 of the Bill.

Maisie Campbell
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from West Dunbartonshire Violence Against Women Partnership

In support of amendment 8

About WDVAWP

West Dunbartonshire Violence Against Women Partnership is a Multi-Agency VAW Partnership committed to tackling all forms of Violence Against Women as defined by the Scottish Government's National Strategy to tackle Violence Against Women - Safer Lives: Changed Lives - A shared approach to tackling VAW in Scotland, 2009. This document takes its definition of violence Against Women from the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of Violence Against Women (1993) which follows:

Gender based violence is a function of gender inequality, and an abuse of male power and privilege. It takes the form of actions that result in physical, sexual and psychological harm or suffering to women and children, or affront to their human dignity, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or private life. It is men who predominantly carry out such violence, and women who are predominantly the victims of such violence.

Accordingly, violence against women encompasses but is not limited to:

Physical, sexual and psychological violence occurring in the family, within the general community or in institutions, including: domestic abuse, rape, incest and child sexual abuse;

Sexual harassment and intimidation at work and in the public sphere; commercial sexual exploitation, including prostitution, pornography and trafficking;

Summary of our position

The WDVAWP workers are strongly supportive of amendment 8 lodged by Trish Godman and urge the Justice Committee to support it. Our arguments in favour of this amendment can be summarised as follows:

- WDVAWP view prostitution as a form of violence against women, representing violation and inequality of women – not a free exchange between adults - and believe that all women prostituted are participating in a system which is itself unequal.

• WDVAWP wish to challenge the normalisation of this so-called ‘industry’ and we aspire to a world without these forms of exploitation

• WDVAWP believe that you can still promote harm-reduction approaches while condemning the systems and structures that promote inequality. We would like to see demand criminalised and women supported to exit prostitution, and more education for all to prevent prostitution from happening.

• WDVAWP agree that it is time the ‘invisible man’ should be recognised and tackled.

WDVAWP workers believe that the activities stated above have been shown to be harmful for the individual women involved and have a negative impact on the position of all women through the objectification of women’s bodies. This happens irrespective of whether individual women claim success or empowerment from the activity. It is essential to separate sexual activity from exploitative sexual activity.

A sexual activity becomes sexual exploitation if it breaches a person’s human right to dignity, equality, respect and physical and mental wellbeing. It becomes commercial sexual exploitation when another person, or group of people, achieves financial gain or advancement through the activity.

WDVAWP agree with current research and literature that for the majority of women entering into prostitution their choice is not a freely made positive choice. This organisation agree that the facilitation into prostitution stems from lack of choice due to structural inequalities in society whereby a women's body can be viewed as a commercial commodity to bought and sold and normalised as to be no different to that of the trading of goods and services in the market place.

Women enter into prostitution for a variety of reasons such as homelessness, child sexual abuse, mental ill health, trauma, previous sexual violence, drug and alcohol misuse, money pressures and poverty. These factors, which serve to lead or force women into prostitution, should not be mistaken for the cause of prostitution itself, which is the demand from men to buy sex. If men were not prepared to buy sex, then prostitution would not work as a survival behaviour.

With this view, WDVAWP have raised awareness and organised training with partners across West Dunbartonshire to develop a range of services that support women and their children affected by violence including the supporting vulnerable young women who are at risk of entering into all forms of commercial sexual exploitation.

Therefore WDVAWP workers support the amendment 8 proposed by Trish Goodman and would also urge the Justice Committee to consider other measures including better funding and support for prostitution exit programmes, changing the fact that prostitution can never be a spent conviction, decriminalising the selling of sex, and developing or promoting educational programmes to prevent prostitution and promote gender equality.

We would therefore urge the adoption of amendment 8 now, and ask the committee to support the development and funding of clear exit strategies and other forms of support for women alongside the changes set out in the amendment.

Carol Young
Administrator
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Eileen Stevenson

I am writing to you in support of Glasgow City Council's ENDPROSTITUTIONNOW campaign which highlights the harm caused through prostitution and puts the focus firmly on the buyers of sex - who create the demand - and who have in the past been invisible from public debate.

I am a supporter of this campaign, no woman wants to be on the street meeting the needs of men who think the woman that THEY are buying sex from have no feelings and do this soul destroying job putting themselves in danger every day because they want to, women whether it be the street corner, a flat, or the lobby of some plush hotel. This women has emotions and feelings, is someone’s daughter, someone's sister, someone’s mother, women find themselves in the seedy world of prostitution for many reasons its not a 1st choice. No young girl/young woman’s dreams and hopes for the future are to be bought by men so they can own them to fulfil there sad sexual demands

I believe that it is the demand which fuels the sex industry and, only by targeting the men who buy sex and by challenging attitudes, will we be able to put a stop to this harmful activity which blights cities and towns across Scotland.

Legislation which criminalises the purchase, advertising and facilitation of sex is needed as a matter of urgency. The Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill provides an opportunity for Members of the Scottish Parliament to support an amendment to this effect and to criminalise the buying of sex.

I call on my Member of the Scottish Parliament to support this change in legislation. It is time to assign responsibility where it belongs, with the purchasers of sex, and, ultimately, to ENDPROSTITUTIONNOW.

Eileen Stevenson
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Written Submission from the Glasgow Bar Association

We write with our submissions in relation to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill as invited by the Justice Committee.

We have restricted our comments to points of principle rather than a detailed review. The headings under which our submission is presented are as follows:-

Definitions

GBA

New Offences Relating to Stalking

Offence of Engaging in Paid-for Sexual Activity

Sentencing for Knife Crime

We submit as follows:-

Definitions

1. GBA means Glasgow Bar Association
2. COPFS means Crown Office & Procurator Fiscal Service
3. The words “we” and “our” refer to the Executive Committee of the Glasgow Bar Association which has approved this submission to the Justice Committee.

GBA

1. The Glasgow Bar Association was formed in 1959. The objects of the Association, as contained in its constitution, include the promotion of access to legal services and to justice; to consider and, if necessary, formulate proposals and initiate action for law reform and to consider and monitor proposals made by other bodies for law reform. The GBA also offers legal education programmes and sponsors and supports legal education and debate at Scotland’s Universities. We are an independent representative body.

2. Today the GBA remains a strong, independent body. It has just amended its constitution to allow Corporate Membership and current member levels sit at around three hundred, by far the biggest Bar Association in the country. Recent membership applications have been received from Govan Law Centre, Messrs Macroberts and Messrs Thompsons Solicitors. The GBA would encourage the Justice Committee to continue to seek its views on all legislative matters.

3. The contents of the submission are based on GBA members practising in the Summary Sheriff and JP Courts in Glasgow on a daily basis.
New Offences Relating To Stalking

4. In Principle the GBA has no difficulty with this proposed amendment. It is apparent that with the increased usage of mobile phone and internet communication, the capacity for forms of harassment and stalking conducted by means of telecommunications has increased. There are cogent public policy reasons for introducing this new offence which the GBA has considered and accepts. Harassment by e-mail can be a particularly disturbing type of harassment and one which is particularly convenient and easy to perpetrate.

Offence of Engaging in Paid-for Sexual Activity

5. The GBA has no comment to make on this proposed amendment. It supports the general public policy principle of the amendment.

Sentencing for Knife Crime

6. Knife Crime is a particular problem in Glasgow and the GBA welcomes any initiative which might help to address the problem. It is apparent from recent publicity that Strathclyde Police appear to be stopping and searching for knives on a wide-spread basis. We shall address both amendments in the one submission by explaining that, on summary complaint, if convicted of an offence under Section 49 of the Criminal Law Consolidation (Scotland) Act 1995, an accused can receive a maximum sentence of twelve months imprisonment. On indictment, the maximum sentence is one of four years imprisonment. We understand that COPFS has a policy whereby an accused charged with a contravention of Section 49 as aforesaid and who already has a Section 49 conviction, will be prosecuted by way of solemn procedure (maximum four years).

With regard to Mr Baker’s amendment, it seems to us that a likely consequence of this amendment if enacted would be that an individual who is caught in possession of a knife but who had perhaps forgotten that the knife was in his or her possession would be imprisoned for six months. Often a situation is presented to the Sheriff whereby a tradesperson who will use a knife or sharp instrument in the course of his or her employment, will be found in possession of the knife when not in the course of his or her employment. Often it is submitted to the Sheriff that the accused had forgotten that the knife was in his or her possession. It seems to us that Mr Baker’s amendment would result in such an accused person, as a first offender being sentenced to six months imprisonment. It is unlikely that the courts given the circumstances mentioned would treat such a case as “exceptional”.

Similarly, the amendment by Mr Aitken would have the effect of placing an onus on the accused to satisfy the court in mitigation, that a period of two years imprisonment would not be justified.

Generally speaking, we do not think that it is in the interests of justice for pressures to be placed upon Sheriffs with regard to the exercise of their discretion in sentencing. The recent case of MM v. Watson SCCR 2009 847 explains the difficulties that courts may face when the discretion of the Sheriff is fettered and can only be exercised in “exceptional” circumstances.

Glasgow Bar Association
17 March 2010
Written submission from Quarriers

Quarriers is a Scottish charity providing practical care and support in the areas of adult disability, children and families, epilepsy and young adults. Through more than 120 services in Scotland and south west England, we challenge inequality of opportunity and choice, to bring about positive change in people’s lives.

Amendment 8 - Offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities

Many of the people supported by Quarriers youth housing support services can be vulnerable to sexual exploitation by reason of their age, background and previous traumatic experiences. This response has been developed by Quarriers’ staff with considerable experience of working with young women and men who have been sexually exploited.

We have concerns that this legislative amendment will do little to achieve the cultural and attitudinal changes required to ensure that the purchase of sex becomes unacceptable.

- It is unclear whether “paid-for” includes transactions other than money. For example, young people can often be rewarded for sex with gifts of drugs, alcohol, clothes etc, either as a stand-alone transaction, or as part of a deliberate grooming process aimed at sexual abuse or exploitation, or normalising prostitution.

- Young people are often persuaded to encourage others to attend “parties”, usually held by older men, where money may not change hands, but where gifts are usually expected, and given, in exchange for sex. We are concerned that, in circumstances like this, young people may be committing the offence of “facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity” and the actual perpetrators of the offence escape any culpability.

- The proposed fine would not be seen as a deterrent, and we feel that, given the background and social standing of some of the people who engage in paid-for sexual activity, consideration needs to be given to sentencing options that would have a greater reputational impact.

Whilst the criminalisation of engaging in paid-for sexual activity might form a useful part of a far wider set of proposals aimed at addressing prostitution, more needs to be done to prevent the circumstances that lead to the vulnerability of young people and the consequent risk of their involvement in prostitution. Key priorities must include addressing issues of poverty, lack of opportunity, poor education and low levels of skills, employability and self-confidence, to ensure that young people are able to raise their aspirations and to achieve their full potential.

Kate Sanford
Policy Manager
19 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Action for Children Scotland

About Action for Children

Action for Children is one of the UK’s largest children’s charities working with over 156,000 children, young people and their families at around 420 projects across the UK. In Scotland we work in partnership to run more than 60 services for almost 8000 of Scotland’s most vulnerable children and young people. Action for Children Scotland welcomes the opportunity to submit supplementary evidence to the Scottish Parliament’s Justice Committee for its Stage 2 consideration of amendments on knife crime. Action for Children Scotland’s evidence draws upon our proven track record of successfully engaging young people who offend, or are at risk of offending or of re-offending, in robust community based alternatives to custody. These have proved highly effective in significantly reducing the likelihood of offending and of re-offending amongst the young people we work with. Many of these young people have been affected by knife crime, both as victims and/or as offenders. Action for Children Scotland’s evidence also reflects the key findings of the Step inside our shoes survey, which we carried out to find out more about young people’s attitudes to, and experience of, gun and knife crime across the UK.

General

Action for Children Scotland notes the proposals in Amendment Nos. 10 and 10A which would, if agreed by the Justice Committee, require the courts to impose mandatory sentences of at least six months or a minimum of two years respectively for carrying a knife. Our concern is that introducing mandatory custodial sentences for carrying knives will simply lead to more people being sent to jails which are already overcrowded, without tackling the underlying causes of knife crime and violence within our society.

Action for Children Scotland is also aware of the recent report published by the Scottish Government, Criminal Proceedings in Scottish Courts statistics, which confirms that Scottish courts are already imposing tough sentences for knife crime although there are concerns that only a minority (30%) of convicted offenders receive custodial sentences. Given this situation, we believe it is essential that sufficient time is allowed to assess the impact that longer sentences for knife crime are having on the level of offending, and of re-offending. Action for Children Scotland considers that, without such an assessment, there is a strong risk that the introduction of mandatory sentences could be both premature, and potentially ineffective. Achieving a lasting, long term solution to knife crime and violence will, instead, require the adoption and implementation of a package of measures.
These measures should include the greater use of community based disposals, and increasing the availability of affordable and accessible social and leisure opportunities for young people. The Scottish Government, local authorities, the police, the voluntary sector and other key agencies all have a key role to play in progressing the measures which we believe are necessary to deliver significant success in this area. Young people should be involved in the design and delivery of these measures, given the impact of knife crime on their lives. Young people are more often the victims of violent crime, than the perpetrators, and they want safer communities just as we all do. It should also be highlighted that many young people experience knife crime both as perpetrators and victims. Action for Children Scotland, therefore, believes that policy makers should engage with young people, and learn from their experiences, to help solve the problems of knife crime in our society.

What do young people tell us about knife crime?

Action for Children Scotland’s Step inside our shoes survey was conducted across the UK in 2008 to find out what young people think about gun and knife crime. A total of 821 young people responded to the survey, including 175 young people from Scotland, many of whom were accessing our services. Almost eight out of 10 were unemployed. They came from vulnerable communities where gun and knife crime is a significant problem. The results specifically reflect the views of those most affected by the problem, giving them the chance to be heard, to highlight their experiences and to have a role in shaping the solutions. The results provide a unique insight into the issue of gun and knife crime in Scotland, and across the UK.

How many young people have been affected?

- 31% of those who responded in Scotland told us they had been affected by gun and knife crime (29% across the UK);
- 20% had been personally affected (15% across the UK); and
- 40% knew someone who had been personally affected (41% across the UK)

What are the main reasons for young people's involvement?

- 73% said the main reason young people got involved in knife and gun crime was to protect themselves (63% across the UK);
- 72% blamed drugs (66% across the UK);
- 71% blamed alcohol (53% across the UK);
- 67% said it was to get revenge (61% across the UK); and
- 53% said peer pressure (63% across the UK)

How safe do young people feel?

- Only 37% said they feel ‘very safe’ in their community (28% across the UK); and
- 22% were worried about gangs in their area ( 36% across the UK)
Need for effective action to tackle knife crime

Action for Children Scotland believes that, if action to tackle knife crime is to succeed, it is essential the Scottish Government, local authorities, the police, NHS Boards, the voluntary sector and other key agencies adopt an integrated, joined-up approach to progressing the measures outlined below:

- Provide greater access to structured activities
  Evidence suggests that structured activities provided by youth services, including local authorities and voluntary organisations, and by other organisations working with children and young people, can reduce the risks of offending and of anti-social behaviour within local communities. Our Positive Options programme in Highland has shown how sport and leisure pursuits can be used to divert young people from troublesome behaviour. Action for Children Scotland, therefore, welcomes the Scottish Government’s commitment to implement the proposals outlined in Moving Forward: A Strategy for Improving Young People’s Chances Through Youth Work. We also welcome the financial support provided for community based projects and activities by the Scottish Government’s CashBack for Communities initiative. Action for Children Scotland hopes that these initiatives, by providing greater access to structured activities, will help to reduce the risks of children and young people getting involved in knife crime and other offences.

- Give young people a greater say in how to tackle violence
  Young people must be given greater encouragement and support by local authorities and the police to have a say in the design and delivery of the local anti-social behaviour strategies..

- Increase the availability of information about the impact of violence
  More information should be made available by the Scottish Government, local authorities, schools, the police and other agencies on the dangers and consequences of being involved in gun and knife crime, and/or gang-related violence. Action for Children Scotland, therefore, welcomes the launch of the Scottish Government’s No Knives, Better Lives initiative, which we believe can make an important contribution in this area.

- Increase employment training opportunities
  We welcome the Scottish Government’s commitment to implement More Choices, More Chances, and its continued focus on those young people who are not in employment, education or training. Real jobs and training opportunities can provide a way out for young people caught up in violence, and in the gang culture. The young people who need more choices and more chances lack basic opportunities to fulfil their potential. They face barriers which are often challenging, particularly in the current harsh economic climate, unless targeted support is available through services such as Action for Children Scotland’s Youthbuild.
Action for Children Scotland’s Youthbuild provides disadvantaged young people with that initial chance to access such opportunities, and to turn their lives around. It works with young people aged 16-24, including those who have been involved in knife crime, who face multiple challenges in finding work. Most have left school without any qualifications. The Youthbuild project provides every trainee with personalised one-to-one support as they learn a range of skills that are needed in the construction industry. Many of the young people then go on to start an apprenticeship, or to take-up a full-time position, in the construction industry.

The project is very much a collaborative approach between the private, public and voluntary sectors with many agencies getting involved in the delivery and support aspects of Youthbuild. Partners include Inspiring Scotland, Glasgow City Council, the European Social Fund, Inverclyde Council, City of Edinburgh Council, Clackmannanshire Council, West Dunbartonshire Council, East Ayrshire Council, Skills Development Scotland and the Scottish Government. About 60 private sector construction companies are involved, along with local housing associations such as the Oak Tree, Link, Cloch, Milnbank, Shettleston and Govanhill housing associations.

The Action for Children Scotland Youthbuild model was piloted in Glasgow and Inverclyde. An independent evaluation noted:

- a 70% success rate for helping young people move into employment;
- high completion rates for those involved in the programme; and
- considerable savings from diverting young people from trouble - the annual cost of a place for a male in prison, or on remand or in a young offenders’ institution is estimated at £31,106.

Together with our partners, we have now rolled Youthbuild out to West Dunbartonshire, Edinburgh, Clackmannanshire and East Ayrshire.

Invest in for early intervention
We believe that the Scottish Government, local authorities, NHS Boards and other agencies must put in place sustainable funding for services that can intervene early to support vulnerable and difficult to reach young people, and to prevent them from getting involved in knife crime. Many of the young people caught up in gun and knife crime fall within this group, and it is vital that they receive support at an early stage to address their behaviour, and to help turn their lives around.

Support community based projects
Community based projects such as, for example, Action for Children Scotland’s Ayrshire Crossover Project can make a significant contribution to help reduce knife crime in local communities. The Crossover Project works with young people who have offended, or are at risk of offending or of re-offending, including those involved in knife crime. Since its launch in June 2001, the project has developed innovative ways to help marginalised young people, including young offenders, to address their behaviour, and to get them involved in positive ways in their local communities. The project won the Young Scot Heritage Award for a community project where young people worked with the local community to regenerate an area in East Ayrshire. Together they landscaped a garden, which they chose to name The Miners' Memorial Walk. The experience of the Crossover Project demonstrates that, with the right support and opportunities, marginalised young people have a lot to contribute to their communities

Robert McGeachy
Policy and Public Affairs Manager
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from John Muir

Knife Crime (Mandatory Sentencing) (PE 1171)

My offer to Parliament to withdraw the word mandatory has been on the table since Tuesday 9 September 2008. No one from any party made any indication or offer to pursue the withdrawal of the word mandatory, yet all persisted in trying to score points off each other, rather a shame don’t you think.

However, it was left to me to try and redress the proposed content of the petition, and it was on 20 February 2010. It now reads: Calling on the Scottish Government to introduce mandatory custodial sentencing for persons found carrying knives or other dangerous weapons in public except where there are exceptional circumstances relating to the carrying of a knife or other similar sharp implement.

The withdrawal of the word (mandatory) is still on offer to this Justice Committee and indeed to all members of this elected parliament, if it is so desired.

At the Scottish Parliament petition meeting on Friday 23 January 2009 I offered to withdraw the mandatory clause, a matter which seemed to do little to appease the overwhelming and angering apathy and weakness from some quarters. Views ranged from 'prison does not work' to even the suggestion that no individual should go to prison. They are in contempt and detached from public opinion and demand.

The importance of 'Damians Law' was never specifically the absolute introduction of mandatory sentencing but more importantly an attempt to shake the government, the judiciary, the police and the public out of complacency and sanitised academic approach to serious violent crime which is largely responsible for the situation we find Scotland and indeed the UK facing. We have perhaps become as used to violent crime over such a long period of time that our resolve and horror is not truly reflected in penalties regardless of political gesturing. Is it any wonder the criminal fraternity does not respond?

Taking out 6 months sentences will serve no purpose - knife possession offenders will be put on a community service order which is a slap on the wrist for a potential thug and a killer if you carry a weapon you are considered a user.

The public want their streetsback! You are not listening to your electorate you do-gooding politicians.
Q. DOES PRISON REHABILITATE INDIVIDUALS?
A. In general, no. Prison has a poor record on that front as re-offending is high and it is very obvious that the facilities to rehabilitate do not exist in sufficient capacity despite the efforts of prison staff and associated agencies.

Q. DOES PRISON ACT AS A DETERRENT?
A. In truth, prison acts as a deterrent to the wider public and if it did not exist we would be subjected to considerable higher levels of offending by a section of the public who would not normally consider criminal behaviour? The section of society that it does not generally deter are the ones that currently use it as a full board hotel and see prison as part of their lifestyle and in some cases a club.

Q. DOES PRISON PROTECT THE PUBLIC?
A. Unequivocally, yes. If an individual is a danger or potential danger to the public, then if he or she is behind bars, the public are safe for that period. It is what we do with them in prison that may determine what type of individual comes out the other side and that is where the question of rehabilitation importantly raises its head, but concern about prison being a nasty horrible place that leaves an individual with low self esteem and creates animals, as true as it may be, it does not excuse the fact that the individual did what they did in the first instance that made them a danger to the public.

IT IS UTTERLY CONTEMPTABLE OR DETACHED FROM REALITY FOR ANY INDIVIDUAL TO SUGGEST OTHERWISE.
Prison in truth does no good apart from the undeniable fact that it puts a safety curtain between the public and the violent offender and that always was the true purpose of prison. The initial concept of prison has been polluted and needs redressed in order that we can assess what prison does and does well, and if we identify something that it does not do well, then we must balance the safety of the public against option custodial or otherwise.

EARLY INTERVENTION
What do we mean by this widely misused term?

Early by definition means to intervene before the event we fear happens.

We as a family were clearly let down by the overlooking of the facts in our case as fingers can be pointed at the judiciary – the prosecution service, welfare, and others including the police that a recidivist with a violent record was able to flaunt it and be released on bail.

Had early intervention been practiced my son would not be in his grave, and Damian's situation is sadly not unique.

Because an individual holds public office or rank, that does not assume they know best. It seems to me that some in this debate think this precisely. The politicians and authorities must have the support of the public and if they fail to deal with the current problem whilst singing the praises of untested solutions, the entire venture will fail, not least from lack of confidence from the public.

STATISTICS ... this is a scandal. Not only that the true use of knives is unknown, as is clearly identified between hospital statistics and government statistics.

Further to that, many robberies involve knives, yet the government cannot identify how many involved knives, or indeed, how many of the recorded violent crimes, involved knives. They can only identify possession. How are they placed to determine the solution if they do not know the extent of the problem? Early intervention must also include preventing a violent individual being at large to commit a murder or serious violent crime. That is also early intervention. Mr Carnochan stated knives do not kill people, people kill people. While that is a fair point, can I suggest equally that people carrying knives or weapons are far more likely to kill than if they were not?

DIS-INVENT PRISON
The point we are making is this. Should we be dis-inventing traditional prison as it currently stands? Should prison be taken back to what it originally was, somewhere to put somebody who is considered an immediate or potential danger to the public? If the answer to this is Yes, then prison has a place in society and therefore prison is good, providing the function of prison is clarified.

THE FINAL OPTION OF ESTABLISHMENT INCARCERATION
This option seems to alarm those of the mind that we should never abandon anybody and throw away the key. There is inherent weakness and gross naivety in this position as some do need locked up, however, nobody, and certainly not the principle of Damians Law, suggested throwing away the key. There must be punishment as well as opportunity, but punishment must be considered in the question, what is prison for?

Prison is not paying any kind of debt back to society. That is a legal nonsense term. Who drives by Greenock or Barlinnie prisons and thinks where a murderer or serious violent criminal recidivist is concerned, ‘Oh good, he is paying back society a debt?’ One thinks, ‘Thank goodness that person, who may be likely to harm me or my family, is now behind bars and walls where they cannot, in the meantime, do harm.’ Prison is nothing more than where you put somebody who is an unacceptable risk to the public.

REHABILITATION
Where does the Justice Secretary get the funding to have a rehab process in operation when prison officers have not been properly trained to counsel or advise. In 2010 when nothing has been undertaken to re-group what facilities they have or have not. The Justice Secretary has clearly stated that prison is a skoosh – prison should be a place of punishment with a designated period of the sentence must be served before more convivial conditions of confinement are offered to all prisoners. Failure to comply to whatever programme the prison has set will incur time added on and not time taken off.
The soft conditions prisoners have at the moment is quite disgraceful – they have TV channels, a comfortable bed, best of food, and if they don't like the menu outside catering is provided. There is a even temperature, good hot water for showers and washing facilities.

They then have all the wonderful civil liberties – civil rights to claim for all the sundries that upset their cosy lifestyles. 'What about my son.' He will always be 34-years, never grow old, yet no-one from the do-gooders society refer to his civil rights. The victims and their families are totally overlooked, ignored, yet the scum of our society thumb their noses at us – the surviving victims.

The simple fact is this. If the courts had enforced the maximum penalties for carrying knives many years ago, we would not be in this situation and debate to the same extent we are. We must re-introduce fear of penalty and totally disenfranchise the benefit and attraction of carrying a knife or a weapon.

Prison officers and staff must be given back control of their establishments. The complaints system and 'I know my rights' mentality has to go, even if this means taking on European Law.

Damian’s Law is and always was about common sense, the same common sense that should have been applied to Damian’s assailant but was not. The courts did not early intervene when they should have, otherwise Damian would be alive.

Most of the great changes in history are brought about by the common man and not the high and mighty who in fact have more often than not been swept aside where the common man is not being served. Whether the judicial, executive, or any other institutions have not served the community as well as they could have, or not at all, then they face being swept aside.

In conclusion may I respectfully ask why does the Scottish Justice Secretary have such a fetish for shiny buttons as it appears he is only taking advice from police officers at the higher level. He has said, and I quote: The Strathclyde Chief Constable and his colleague from Lothian and Borders plus the Violence Reduction Unit supremo if they thought that mandatory sentences would work they would implement them. Is it not the Scottish Parliament who should be taking that sort of decision?

May I also add a further point. The Public Petitions Committee asked ACPOS and the Violence Reduction Unit for their written comments, and surprise, surprise, both letters are almost identical in layout and content, suggests that the same person compiled the written form and had two others sign them. It is little wonder the public are confused.

In January 2009 I made the following statement to the knife crime summit was a pivotal point in the fight against knife and weapon crime. And also said any and all honest men would recognise that there had very nearly criminal institutional failure and neglect on the part of the authorities in which the protection of the Scottish nation is vested. That failure was borne out by the frequency of incidences of knife crime and by the disgraceful statistics that shame Scotland. May I reminded this learned committee that these statistics relate to real people and are not an academic board game.

Each and every one of these statistics represents a real victim a person whose life has been taken or shattered along with the lives of their family and friends. Blame will achieve little and as I have said political in-fighting will also achieve nothing. Systemic failure by us - the Scottish nation – to remove decisively the menace of knife crime in terms that criminal recidivists understand, will mean more needless carnage on the streets of Scotland.

A main question to this committee is this: are we going to allow the blood of the general innocent majority to be spilled on our streets because of the concerns and the rights of the criminal minority.

I submit for your further perusal, an extract from a newspaper:

> It is depressing nowadays to take up one's paper and read the daily catalogue of assaults and murders with knives, razors and other lethal weapons. Indeed slashings and stabbings are becoming so common that they appear to be accepted as part of our modern youth's recreation.

This is from the Letters Page of the Glasgow Evening Times dated 14.3.1930. Eighty years ago!

Is it not time for change?

John C Muir
Damian's Law Campaigner
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Law Society of Scotland

I refer to the call for written evidence from the Scottish Parliament’s Justice Committee with regard to amendments lodged for Stage 2, which the Committee considers raise significant new issues which were not considered during the Justice Committee Stage 1 enquiry.

The Criminal Law Committee of the Law Society of Scotland (“the Committee”) has had an opportunity to consider the issues raised in terms of these amendments and should like to respond as follows:-

New offences relating to stalking

The Committee has considered this group of amendments and has also considered the opinion of the Court delivered by the Lord Justice General in the Appeal by Mark Harris against HMA (2009 HCJAC 80).

In all the circumstances, the Committee question whether it is necessary to have a narrower definition enshrined in statute with regard to the crime of breach of the peace, which is of course a crime of effect and covers a variety of courses of conduct at common law where intent does not require to be proved.

Moreover, it is the Committee’s view that the decision in Harris does not mean that private conduct does not amount to breach of the peace, but simply that there may be a defence to breach of the peace where the conduct complained of took place in private. The High Court in its reasoning in Harris stated that where conduct complained of did take place in private, there should be evidence that there was a realistic risk of the conduct being discovered.

In all the circumstances, the Committee notes that both Amendments 402 and 387 narrow the range of criminality with regard to the common law crime of breach of the peace and also require the conduct to be committed intentionally.

The Committee highlights the offences as listed in the Telecommunications Act 1984 and in particular refers to Section 43 of the 1984 Act whereby a person who

(a) sends, by means of a public telecommunications system, a message or other matter that is grossly offensive or of an indecent, obscene or menacing character; or

(b) sends, by those means, for the purpose of causing annoyance, inconvenience or needless anxiety to another, a message that he knows to be false, or persistently makes use for that purpose of a public telecommunications system, shall be guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding Level 5 on the standard scale, or both.

The Committee notes that certain aspects of stalking may of course be prosecuted in terms of the 1984 Act and would also refer to the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 whereby a victim can apply for a civil order against a person who is pursuing a course of conduct which amounts to harassment or occurs in circumstances where it would appear to a reasonable person that it would amount to harassment.

In terms of Section 9 of the 1997 Act, a breach of a Non Harassment Order is punishable by five years’ imprisonment following upon conviction on indictment and one year’s imprisonment following upon a summary conviction.

On the basis, however, that the Scottish Parliament legislates for a new offence of stalking, the Committee believes intent will have to be proved as provided for in the amendments but has concerns with regard to the provision at Amendment 378 that the behaviour is directed at anyone in particular, and with regard to Amendment 402 that conduct could be with “any other person” as opposed to the complainer as being too widely drafted.

Sentencing for knife crime

The Committee notes the terms of Amendment 10, which seeks to amend Section 49 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 by obliging the Court to impose a sentence of imprisonment of at least 6 months (with or without a fine), unless the Court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence, or to the offender which justify not doing so (as amended by Amendment 10A which increases the sentence to 2 years (with or without a fine) unless the Court is satisfied, having regard to all the circumstances, that there are grounds for mitigating the normal circumstances of the conviction and thinks fit to order the offender to be imprisoned for a shorter period or not to order the offender to be imprisoned.

The Committee is of the view that it can be difficult to produce genuine exceptional circumstances as outlined in Amendment 10 and accordingly possession of a knife without reasonable excuse may oblige the Court to impose a custodial sentence where one was not appropriate.

The Committee notes that the Scottish Parliament’s Public Petitions Committee held a knife crime debate on Friday 23 January 2009, at which the Committee was represented by Peter Lockhart, Solicitor, Ayr.

It is the Committee’s understanding that, following this debate, the consensus of those participating was that mandatory minimum custodial sentences was not the way forward.

The Committee would, however, respectfully suggest that this is a matter which would require further parliamentary scrutiny and debate, and would be required to consider an evidence base which points to minimum mandatory custodial sentences with regard to possession of knives, being an effective measure put in place in order to reduce knife crime.

The Committee also notes from recent reports that the average custodial sentence with regard to possession of knife crime has risen by almost two thirds over the last two years.

Offence of engaging in paid for sexual activity (and related new offences)

The Committee would refer to its comments above in that this is perhaps a matter which is worthy of further parliamentary scrutiny and debate.

In particular, the Justice Committee may wish to ascertain the number of successful prosecutions obtained under the recently enacted Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act 2007.

The Committee notes, however, that, unlike the 2007 Act, there is no “relevant place” and highlights potential difficulties in the enforcement of these proposed provisions should these new offences be committed in private.

I trust that these comments are of some assistance.

Alan McCreadie
Deputy Director, Law Reform
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Clydebank Women's Aid Collective

Clydebank Women's Aid has existed since 1981 and has a depth of experience in relation to supporting women and children experiencing domestic abuse. We provide local direct services. Domestic abuse as with other forms of exploitation and violence against women, including prostitution, is allowed by a society that still undervalues and objectifies women. We often support women who have or are experiencing many forms of violence against women at the same time, including prostitution. We wish to associate ourselves, as an individual autonomous group, with the submission made by Scottish Women's Aid. Their submission gives a voice to those who are most marginalised, not organised and who don't have vested interests lobbying vociferously on their behalf.

Clydebank Women's Aid Collective
17 March 2010
Amendment 378

Introduction

The Christian Institute is a non-denominational charity established for the promotion of the Christian faith. We have over 3,000 supporters throughout Scotland, including 530 churches and church leaders. The Institute holds to the mainstream historic beliefs of Biblical Christianity. We have strongly opposed attempts to censor religious or ethical debate using the criminal law. We opposed the religious hatred offence, which in theory applied only to England and Wales, but would in practice have profoundly affected Scotland.1

Amendment 378 introduces a new offence of “Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour”. The very low threshold and extremely wide breadth of the offence as drafted give rise to serious free speech concerns. The offence introduces a speech crime. Religious believers could easily use the offence to silence their critics. But that is not what we want.

In England and Wales there have been shocking cases of unacceptable interference with free speech caused by public order and hate crime legislation. With a separate legislative framework, Scotland has been largely untouched by such cases, but this proposed new offence would bring with it a serious risk of free speech being inhibited.

Low threshold and broad scope

At its most extreme, the draft offence criminalises private behaviour which is not intended to cause fear, alarm or distress, and causes no one fear, alarm or distress. A huge range of conduct is caught by the offence. Our concern is not at the upper end: stalking and domestic violence must, of course, be criminalised. However, at the lower end, we are very concerned that the offence will restrict free speech.

The following scenarios could all be argued to fall within the ambit of the offence:

• A cartoonist produces images of Mohammed. Muslims say they are distressed by such a representation of their central religious figure.

---

• A boy holds up a sign outside a building owned by the Church of Scientology which reads: “Scientology is not a religion, it is a dangerous cult.”
• A Glasgow art gallery has an exhibition featuring the Bible, inviting those who feel excluded from it to ‘write themselves back in’. Obscene and offensive messages are scrawled over the Bible. Christians are distressed.
• A well known advocate of atheism speaks at a public debate at St Andrew’s University, in which he likens Christian belief in Christ to belief in fairies. He also makes parallels between raising children as Christians with forms of child abuse. A number of Christians present at the debate are shocked and distressed by these comments.
• A group campaigning against field sports holds a demonstration on the occasion of a local hunt near Dumfries. In a leaflet they give out to passers-by there is a picture of a seriously injured animal caught, which distresses some of the recipients.

Some of these situations have already arisen in Scotland. None of them would be intended to fall within a stalking offence. However, the threshold and scope of the offence as drafted mean that it is entirely possible such incidents would be covered by the wording. There is also a clear danger that an offence with such a low threshold will lead to the criminal law intervening in legitimate debate and will encourage people to use complaints to the police in an attempt to silence those who disagree with them.

The willingness of some to try to get the police involved in order to silence an opposing viewpoint was amply demonstrated by Patrick Harvie MSP in 2006. After Mario Conti, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Glasgow, said in a sermon that marriage had been undermined by the introduction of civil partnerships, Mr Harvie asked the police to investigate the Archbishop’s remarks. Mr Harvie said: “What he [Conti] said was clearly homophobic. This is a matter for the police.”

Introducing an offence with a low threshold like amendment 378 could serve to encourage such complaints against perfectly legal statements or activity, with an inevitable detrimental effect on free speech. Part of this detriment is the chilling effect – the culture of fear that is created when people are led to believe that the law criminalises far more than it actually does. People begin to censor themselves because they have been intimidated by the threat of the law being used against them, and this shuts down debate.

The justification for the new offence

We accept that the criminal law must be able to deal with “a wide range of behaviours constituting stalking” as the Government’s February news release stated. However, the definition of this offence is far broader than is

---

2 Sunday Herald, 15 January 2006
3 Scottish Government Press Release, Move to Strengthen Law on Stalking, 21 February 2010 necessary to criminalise stalkers. In fact, by the Government’s own admission, the offence is not “limited in scope to stalking related activity.”

The offence is also designed to cover other areas, such as domestic abuse.

Both stalking and domestic abuse are matters that the criminal law must address. However, attempting to do both within an ‘all singing all dancing’ single offence is, we submit, unwise, and perhaps explains the dangerous breadth of amendment 378.

Section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986

The drafting of the new offence invites a comparison with the public order offence of causing harassment, alarm or distress, which exists in England and Wales. Under section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 (see appendix A), a person commits an offence if he engages in “threatening, abusive or insulting” conduct “within the hearing or sight of a person likely to be caused harassment, alarm or distress thereby”.

Whilst there are differences between amendment 378 and section 5, there are striking similarities:

- The words “alarm” and “distress” are used in both offences, indicating that the potential impact of the behaviour on the victim is of the same order of seriousness.
- Neither offence requires that harassment/fear, alarm or distress be intended.
- Neither offence requires it to be proven that someone is actually caused harassment/fear, alarm or distress.
- In both cases, written and spoken words are included as part of the conduct which could constitute the offence.

In fact, the threshold of amendment 378 appears to be significantly lower, and the requirements of the offence therefore more easily met, than those of section 5:

- The offence under amendment 378 could take place in private, opening up the possibility that it could occur when both the perpetrator and the other person are inside a dwelling. This is explicitly excluded from the scope of the section 5 offence (section 5(2)).
- “Psychological well-being” is potentially more subjective and has a potentially lower threshold than anything in section 5.
- The element of ‘reasonableness’ in the section 5 offence is arguably a stronger safeguard. It incorporates an objective assessment of all the facts of the case including the alleged perpetrator’s circumstances and not just how the facts may appear to a “reasonable person”. There is therefore greater scope for mitigating factors to be taken into account in section 5 than amendment 378.
The issue of threshold is important because we would like to cite two cases of the use of section 5 to indicate the problems of its threshold, and therefore why we are concerned about the introduction of an offence with a similar threshold in Scotland. The dangers are even more acute when it is considered that the potential sentence in the new draft offence is considerably heavier than that under section 5.

Ben and Sharon Vogelenzang

In 2009 Christian hotel owners Ben and Sharon Vogelenzang were prosecuted under section 5 of the Public Order Act as a result of a religious debate over breakfast. The accusation was made against the couple by a Muslim guest who had been staying at their hotel. The case against the Vogelenzangs was dismissed last December by District Judge Richard Clancy.⁶

Even after the judge had dismissed the case, the Crown Prosecution Service maintained that there had been enough evidence for a realistic chance of conviction. CPS lawyer Nicola Inskip said: “In looking at the evidence in this case we had to consider whether there was any evidence that the defendants had caused harassment, alarm or distress...we were satisfied that there was sufficient evidence for a realistic prospect of conviction”.⁷

The readiness of the CPS to pursue a case against a couple over a religious discussion shows the danger of an offence drafted in such broad terms. It must be noted that even though the Vogelenzangs were found innocent, the consequences of the prosecution have been severe for them, particularly in terms of its financial impact on their business. Offences with a low threshold of this sort have an impact well beyond just those who are convicted.

Harry Hammond

Perhaps the most alarming case of injustice under section 5 is that of the pensioner Harry Hammond, who suffered from Asperger Syndrome, a form of autism. Sufferers can lack awareness of the effect their behaviour is having on others. When preaching in Bournemouth town centre, Mr Hammond held up a sign saying: “Stop Immorality”, “Stop Homosexuality”, “Stop Lesbianism”, “Jesus is Lord”.⁸ Mr Hammond was physically attacked by a group of protesters. Despite being forced to the ground and having mud and water thrown over him, it was Mr Hammond who was arrested, prosecuted and convicted under section 5 of the Public Order Act. One of the police officers on duty disagreed with his colleague over the arrest and he appeared as a witness for the defence.⁹ Peter Tatchell described Mr Hammond’s conviction

---

⁶ The Daily Telegraph, 10 December 2009
⁷ BBC News Online, 9 December 2009, see http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/england/merseyside/8404212.stm as at 15 March 2010
⁹ The Mail on Sunday, 5 May 2002
as “an outrageous infringement of free speech”.\textsuperscript{10} A leading textbook on this area of law calls the court’s rationale “grossly inadequate”\textsuperscript{11} and says the decision “puts the expression of all controversial ideas at risk of punishment under the Public Order Act”.\textsuperscript{12}

The obvious concern is that amendment 378, because of its broad drafting and consequently similar threshold to section 5, would give rise in Scotland to cases like Hammond or the Vogelenzangs. There is no reason to believe from the face of the amendment that either of these sets of facts would be outside the scope of the proposed new offence.

Criticism of section 5

The existing drafting of section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 has been strongly criticised from several quarters, not least the Westminster Parliament’s Joint Committee on Human Rights (JCHR). Two recent reports have attacked the low threshold of the offence. In March 2009, the Committee stated:

“In our view, section 5 of the Public Order Act gives the police a wide discretion to decide what language or behaviour is ‘threatening, abusive or insulting’. ...We consider that the Government should amend section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 so that it cannot be used inappropriately to suppress the right to free speech, by deleting the reference to ‘insulting’ language.”\textsuperscript{13}

The JCHR focused here on the issue of “insulting” being incorporated in the definition of the offence. However, we submit that amendment 378 has an even deeper flaw.

The only stipulation in amendment 378 about the nature of the behaviour is that it is likely to cause fear, alarm or distress to the reasonable person. The conduct which constitutes the offence is therefore only defined in terms of its potential consequences rather than its own offensive nature. There is no requirement that the conduct be threatening, abusive or insulting, let alone only threatening or abusive. The conduct simply needs to have the potential to cause distress. Such a threshold is much lower than the one criticised in England and Wales, and represents an even greater threat to free speech.

Human rights campaigning organisation Liberty submitted evidence to the JCHR expressing its concern about the use of section 5. Liberty said:

“Liberty has recently had cause for concern in relation to the application of section 5 of the POA. ...On 10 May 2008, a young

\textsuperscript{10} Guardian Online, 10 October 2007, see http://www.guardian.co.uk/commentisfree/2007/oct/10/hatespeechfreespeech as at 15 March 2010
\textsuperscript{11} Hare, I and Weinstein, J (Eds) Extreme Speech and Democracy, OUP, 2009, page 32
\textsuperscript{12} ibid, page 40
\textsuperscript{13} House of Lords, House of Commons Joint Committee on Human Rights, Session 2008-09, HL Paper 57, HC 362, page 54, para. 1.180 person was issued a summons by the City of London Police for refusing to remove his sign which read: “Scientology is not a religion, it is a dangerous cult.” The boy was taking part in a group protest outside the Church of Scientology’s central London headquarters and the police said that his use of the word “cult” violated section 5. Although City of London police later informed the boy that the prosecution would not be pursued, Liberty has concerns over police policy in this area and the chilling effect of such cases on legitimate free speech.”

Cases such as Hammond, the Vogelzangs and the Scientology example cited by Liberty only arise because of the way section 5 is drafted. It is extremely broad, allowing the police too much discretion and creating a situation in which they believe certain activity is contrary to the law when the offence in question was never intended by legislators to be applied so widely. This is the clear danger of amendment 378, which is simply too broad for the role the Government claims it is intended to fulfil.

Amendment 378 - a sweeping public order offence

The headline of the Government’s news release (“Move to strengthen law on stalking”) simply does not reflect the draft offence that has been brought forward. As has been shown, amendment 378 does not resemble a stalking-specific offence, but is much more akin to a general public order offence.

Rhoda Grant MSP’s amendment 402 is specifically targeted at stalking and to that extent would seem much more likely to achieve its aim without the unintended consequences for free speech that amendment 378 could have. Inherent in any stalking offence should be the requirement for a course of conduct, i.e. a minimum of two instances of behaviour. This is the key feature of the offence of stalking under the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 in England and Wales (see appendix B), and is also a feature of Rhoda Grant’s amendment.

As drafted, amendment 378 is a sweeping public order offence which would apply in a whole range of circumstances, carrying such a low threshold and such a heavy sanction that it represents a serious threat to free speech. Experience of a similar offence in England and Wales has shown the problems such a threshold can cause. The offence is unsuitable for its intended purpose of dealing with stalking and needs to be radically redrafted.

The Christian Institute
17 March 2010

14 Memorandum from Liberty, House of Lords, House of Commons Joint Committee on Human Rights, Session 2008-09, HL Paper 47-2, HC 320-2, vol. 2, Ev. 161, para. 21
APPENDIX A

Public Order Act 1986
Part I New Offences

5 Harassment, alarm or distress

(1) A person is guilty of an offence if he--

(a) uses threatening, abusive or insulting words or behaviour, or disorderly behaviour, or

(b) displays any writing, sign or other visible representation which is threatening, abusive or insulting, within the hearing or sight of a person likely to be caused harassment, alarm or distress thereby.

(2) An offence under this section may be committed in a public or a private place, except that no offence is committed where the words or behaviour are used, or the writing, sign or other visible representation is displayed, by a person inside a dwelling and the other person is also inside that or another dwelling.

(3) It is a defence for the accused to prove--

(a) that he had no reason to believe that there was any person within hearing or sight who was likely to be caused harassment, alarm or distress, or

(b) that he was inside a dwelling and had no reason to believe that the words or behaviour used, or the writing, sign or other visible representation displayed, would be heard or seen by a person outside that or any other dwelling, or

(c) that his conduct was reasonable.

(4)...

(5)...

(6) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

15 NOTES: Sub-ss (4), (5): repealed by the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005, ss 111, 174(2), Sch 7, Pt 1, para 26(1), (5), Sch 17, Pt 2
APPENDIX B

Protection from Harassment Act 1997

England and Wales

1 Prohibition of harassment

(1) A person must not pursue a course of conduct--
    (a) which amounts to harassment of another, and
    (b) which he knows or ought to know amounts to harassment of the other.

[(1A) A person must not pursue a course of conduct--
    (a) which involves harassment of two or more persons, and
    (b) which he knows or ought to know involves harassment of those persons, and
    (c) by which he intends to persuade any person (whether or not one of those mentioned above)--
        (i) not to do something that he is entitled or required to do, or
        (ii) to do something that he is not under any obligation to do.]

(2) For the purposes of this section, the person whose course of conduct is in question ought to know that it amounts to [or involves] harassment of another if a reasonable person in possession of the same information would think the course of conduct amounted to [or involved] harassment of the other.

(3) Subsection (1) [or (1A)] does not apply to a course of conduct if the person who pursued it shows--
    (a) that it was pursued for the purpose of preventing or detecting crime,
    (b) that it was pursued under any enactment or rule of law or to comply with any condition or requirement imposed by any person under any enactment, or
    (c) that in the particular circumstances the pursuit of the course of conduct was reasonable.

2 Offence of harassment

(1) A person who pursues a course of conduct in breach of [section 1(1) or (1A)] is guilty of an offence.

(2) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, or both.

(3) . . .

16 NOTES: Sub-s (1A): inserted by the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005, s 125(1), (2)(a); Sub-s (2): words "or involves" and "or involved" in square brackets inserted by the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005, s 125(1), (2)(b); Sub-s (3): words "or (1A)" in square brackets inserted by the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005, s 125(1), (2)(c).

17 NOTES: Sub-s (1): words "section 1(1) or (1A)" in square brackets substituted by the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005, s 125(1), (3); Sub-s (3): repealed by the Police Reform Act 2002, s 107(2), Sch 8.
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2
Written submission from Engender

Engender welcomes the opportunity to provide written evidence to the Scottish Parliament’s Justice Committee on legislative amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill as lodged for Stage 2 consideration. We can confirm that we are in support of the following proposed amendments:

- New offences relating to stalking
- Sentencing for knife crime

We are also very much in support of Trish Godman’s amendment (8) and would like in particular to comment in relation to the Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences).

Engender takes a clear stance on prostitution which we believe is part of the spectrum of men’s violence against women. As an organisation working on an anti-sexist agenda to make Scotland a fairer, safer place where women can flourish and contribute to both the social and market economies with dignity, freedom and justice, we have long been committed to raising awareness of the harm caused through prostitution. In line with amendment 8 we hold that it is vitally important to put the focus firmly on those who purchase sex, who create the demand, and who have in the past been invisible from public debate.

At Engender we believe that legislation must go further and that amendment 8 on the Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences) will go a long way in sending an unequivocal message that buying sex will not be tolerated.

During one of our recent ‘Inspiring Women’ discussion sessions at Engender our members were in agreement that the women involved in prostitution and other forms of commercial sexual exploitation will always be there as long as a demand and a market for prostitution exists. In order to change this we need to make a fundamental change, similar to that which has happened with domestic abuse and around sexual assault… 15 years ago these were seen as private matters but we now have a wider recognition that they are very much public and social issues. Our members are keen to have the same kind of cultural and attitudinal change happen in relation to prostitution.

At Engender we are in no doubt that prostitution is inherently harmful to those involved and also upon our wider culture. The harm that commercial sexual exploitation causes to all women, by sanctioning the objectification of women’s bodies, happens regardless of whether the paid-for sexual activity is ‘coerced’ and for this reason Engender does not support amendments 8A-D lodged by Margo Macdonald or amendment 461 lodged by Nigel Don.
We wholeheartedly endorse the work carried out by our sister organisations which include ‘Rape Crisis Scotland’, ‘Scottish Women’s Aid’, the ‘Women’s Support Project’ and ‘Zero Tolerance’ and we recognise and value their respective roles in shining a light on this form of oppression and exploitation of women. For us, the proposed amendments present an effective means of challenging demand for prostitution although this in itself should not be viewed as a ‘stand alone’ measure. Consideration must also be given to supplementary interventions such as:

- The decriminalisation of those who are purchased for sexual activity
- Appropriate and adequate resources being available to support women wishing to exit prostitution.

Carol Flack
Projects Director
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Glasgow City Council Social Work Services

Amendment 8

Glasgow has provided services to support women involved in prostitution for many years. Base 75 was established 20 years ago in response to concerns about the spread of blood borne viruses and increasing levels of violence against women involved in prostitution. The six murders and one suspicious death in the years between 1991-98 generated widespread media concern and brought the issue of street prostitution in the city to public and political attention with the Routes Out Of Prostitution Intervention Team being established in 2000.

Over this period Glasgow City Council’s policy has evolved into one that rejects the notion of prostitution as a choice, work or sexual behaviour. Rather, the policy considers prostitution to be a form of violence against women which is harmful to them, their families, communities and society generally. Reflecting this, services have evolved from a focus on harm reduction characteristic of the Base 75 service response to one supporting women exit prostitution implemented by the Routes out of Prostitution Intervention Team. Since 1995, over 2000 women have registered at Base 75 with the Intervention Team supporting over 500 women since 2001. More recently we have been able to evidence the usage of Base 75 drop in by women from outwith Glasgow and estimate this to account for 20 – 25% of service usage.

We have just completed a major review of Base 75 and the Routes Out Of Prostitution Intervention Team underpinned by extensive service usage analysis and service user consultation. The service user profile is one characterised by childhood abuse, domestic abuse and abusive relationships, mental health issues and substance / alcohol abuse issues. Women report a range of complex and multi faceted reasons for their involvement in prostitution: fund substance misuse, coerced, groomed, to support children. Women also report horrendous stories of the violence and abuse they have been subjected to and a third party reporting system is in operation with the Police Street Liaison Team. There is a huge crossover between involvement in prostitution and drug use and irrespective of women’s reason for first becoming involved in prostitution drug use escalates once they are involved.

A specific consultation exercise was undertaken with a group of very vulnerable frequent Base 75 service users. It is particularly striking that 98% of them had ceased involvement in prostitution but had become involved again due to relapse coming out of prison / leaving rehab, debt, homelessness, funding other’s habits, need for money and the negative influence of peer groups. By their own account women feel trapped in a situation they need support to escape from and whilst they value the non judgmental approach characteristic of Base 75 they are clear about the nature of support they need. When asked about any other help they would like to receive they identified addiction; alcohol counselling; benefits advice; debt advice; safe accommodation; mental health support; support to access college; education support; employment; support re children; opportunities for genuine friendships. It is the ambition of the redesigned service operating in the city centre and in Community Addiction Teams in CHCPs to enable women to access this help and support.

In Glasgow we have had a strong focus on supporting women involved in prostitution for over twenty years and we have seen how the reality of that involvement explodes the myths and stereotypes about prostitution. Prostitution is a form of commercial sexual exploitation privileging powerful interests and endangering women. We have seen the harm and damage it causes to the women whose bodies are bought, to their families, to communities and to our society.

We therefore very much welcome the developing focus on the purchase of sex. A senior Police Officer has warned about Scotland becoming the Bangkok of Europe and we believe that the amendment lodged by Trish Godman will enable the authorities to effectively challenge those who profit from prostitution. If supported it will send out a strong message that exploitation will not be tolerated in Scotland. Consequently, we strongly support the amendment lodged by Trish Godman.

Bridget Curran
Principal Officer Development, Children & Families
Social Work Services, Glasgow City Council
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Scottish Trades Union Congress

Introduction

The STUC is Scotland’s trade union centre. Its purpose is to coordinate, develop and articulate the views and policies of the trade union movement in Scotland; reflecting the aspirations of trade unionists as workers and citizens.

The STUC represents over 640,000 working people and their families throughout Scotland. It speaks for trade union members in and out of work, in the community and in the workplace. Our affiliated organisations have interests in all sectors of the economy. Our representative structures are constructed to take account of the specific views of women members, young members, Black/minority ethnic members, LGBT members, and members with a disability, as well as retired and unemployed workers.

The STUC welcomes the opportunity to contribute to this short consultation at Stage 2 of the Scottish Parliament’s Justice Committee scrutiny of the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill.

As indicated in earlier correspondence to Committee members from STUC General Secretary Grahame Smith, the STUC is supportive of Amendment 8, as submitted by Trish Godman MSP.

Policy

The amendment seeks to create an offence of ‘engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid sexual services’.

The STUC annual Congress 2009 called for ‘the criminalisation of the purchase of sex, whether in public places or private clubs and brothels throughout the UK, as a means of tackling human trafficking, exploitation and violence against women’

It is our view that tackling demand will reduce the exploitation of women, and reduce prostitution. Most women who are in prostitution are vulnerable, poor, and in bad health, many with drug and alcohol addictions. The STUC wishes to see investment in public services which can give appropriate support to women who are living with mental health problems, addictions, and in poverty, encouraging alternatives to prostitution. We have strong concerns that the worsening economic situation will expose more women to risk and harm through prostitution. Reducing demand is crucial.
The STUC would urge support for this Amendment to the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill, in the context of that additional investment to support women exiting prostitution.

Violence against women should be tackled wherever it occurs, and seeking to remove the current legitimacy that surrounds the purchase of sex is to be welcomed.

This would give a clear message, not just within Scotland, but wider afield, which would make a positive contribution to reducing the trafficking for sexual services and the exploitation that is associated with that.

The STUC Women’s Conference in 2008 raised strong concerns over the prospect of a significant rise in the commercial exploitation of women as the Commonwealth Games come to Glasgow in 2012.

Supporting this Amendment will give Scotland an appropriate legislative framework to address those concerns, and to continue to work across all agencies to tackle violence against women.

STUC
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Tamsin Groom, Sandyford, Glasgow

Comments on proposed amendments to sexual offences act regarding prostitution

Sandyford is a community sexual health service providing a holistic sexual health service to men, women and young people across Greater Glasgow and Clyde.

Part of our service includes providing support and sexual health care to women involved in prostitution at Base 75.

For many years we have provided a service to women engaging in prostitution both on and in off street locations.

We would agree with our partners and colleagues including Glasgow City Council, Glasgow Community Safety Services, TARA and Women’s Support Project that prostitution is inherently harmful to the women (and men) involved in selling sex but I would like to make a few additional comments regarding the proposed amendments:

1. Engaging in paid for sexual activity
   I would have concerns that this will also mean women and men that are involved in prostitution, once again making it easier to punish those involved rather than those who use and abuse.

   This change would have the effect of making prostitution illegal and although perhaps seen as the ideal position by a number of agencies within Scotland it should be made clear that this is the case./aim of the Scottish Government.

2. Advertising paid-for sexual activities
   Again although perhaps laudable this will punish those involved in prostitution and not those paying for it.

   Given that much of Advertising is via the internet this will be extremely difficult to police/implement how can it be Scotland only? and it also means that those involved in prostitution are further hidden and open to abuse.

   Why not fine those magazines and papers that advertise, and look at banning pornography.

3. Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity
   Surely should be subject to more than a fine, coercing vulnerable young people and adults into prostitution should be a custodial sentence in my opinion.
4. Causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity Uncertain what this would relate to?

Prostitution undertaken off street is unlikely to cause alarm so unsure who you are aiming to protect here.

Certainly those who find out their partners/relatives have been engaging in paid for sexual activity would experience alarm amongst a number of other emotions that would be difficult to legislate against.

I don’t think you can legislate against concerns from neighbours but significant disturbances could be addressed via Antisocial behaviour/breeches of the peace as is the current position.

5. Profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities
Anyone coerced into prostitution should be supported to exit and the perpetrators should have custodial sentences.

This could include traffickers… they should be subject to more that a £1000 fine.

Those running establishments where paid for sex takes place and allowing coerced sexual exploitation should also be subject to more that a fine.

I would support an amendment that looked at penalising anyone who is responsible for arranging or facilitating the prostitution or involvement in Pornography of anyone…not just those who are under 18.

These are my own comments and may not reflect the opinion of everyone within our organisation.

Tamsin Groom
Lead for vulnerable adults and consultant in sexual and reproductive health
Sandyford, Glasgow
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 2

Written submission from Glasgow City Marketing Bureau

Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences)

Glasgow City Marketing Bureau is responsible for promoting the city at home and overseas and has an important role in terms of Scotland’s tourism industry. We want Glasgow to be viewed as a city where all its citizens are treated with respect, equality and dignity and we believe that this cannot fully happen while prostitution continues to be tolerated and treated as an acceptable activity. We welcome the opportunity to write to the Justice Committee and overwhelmingly urge them to support Trish Godman’s amendment which would create an offence of engaging in paid for sexual activity.

Summary of our position:

• We believe that prostitution is a form of violence against women and harmful for those that are involved and also for the communities in where it exists.

• We consider that prostitution exacerbates existing gender inequality as it is predominantly women who sell sex and men who buy. It is also unsatisfactory that at the moment within the indoor sex industry it is largely the sellers who are charged e.g. with brothel keeping or living off immoral earnings, whereby the buyers are treated with impunity.

• We think legislation would challenge the normalisation of the sex industry in Scotland.

• There is a clear link between prostitution, trafficking and organised crime.

• We think it is important that the law considers “facilitation” as part of the offence as this would help disrupt the organisers, pimps and traffickers who arrange the transport and accommodation for those involved in the sex trade.

• From a marketing perspective, it is clear that advertising for sexual services is widespread not only on the internet but in newspapers and magazines across the city. Although enforcing the legislation on advertising would not be without challenge, we believe that it would still be a crucial step in targeting those that profit, create and support the sex trade in Scotland.
• We believe that by putting the focus on the buyers of sex this may act as a deterrent and make men think twice before they purchase a vulnerable women. Tackling demand would send out the important message that Scotland rejects prostitution and the exploitation inherent in this industry.

We do not support amendments 8A-D (lodged by Margo Macdonald) or amendment 461 (lodged by Nigel Don).

Glasgow City Marketing Bureau
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Fun Times

Response to amendments 11a, 11b, and 11c of the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill

I find it absolutely deplorable and completely shocking that members of the Scottish Executive would consider such draconian legislation as that proposed by amendments 11a, 11b, and 11c.

Myths. There are hundreds of myths about the industry, far too many to list here in this response. Many of these myths are the basis for amendments such as those proposed by Trish Godman. Below I have listed only a small number.

- Figures of the number of trafficked women of 4000/year. Proven wrong (see below).
- The “Job Description” published by “Safer Glasgow”. These claims are blatantly untrue. To claim that every sex worker will be treated as the site claims is ludicrous to say the least. Workers in the sex industry are not penetrated the way this site claims. Payment is agreed in advance and paid up front, unlike the claims made on this site. Most other claims made by this site are completely untrue.
- The figures claimed by “Demand Change” are unlikely to be accurate across the whole sex industry. It always depends what questions were asked, and who were asked by the various agencies that produced the figures. I could ask a different sector of the sex industry the same questions, and come up with figures of less than 1% for each claim made. Never forget the quote “There are lies, damned lies, and statistics”. The choice of statistics used may have been chosen to suit a particular agenda. Thus creating more myths about the industry as a whole, as opposed to giving a true and balanced view of it.
- Most sex workers are drug addicts. This may be accurate for street workers, but is most certainly not true for off-street workers. The numbers of off-street sex workers using drugs would be no higher than non sex workers in society.
- Sex workers carry and spread STIs. Sex workers in the main are some of the most aware people in the country about STIs, and will never risk infection of themselves or others. Many of the workers actively promote safe sex, not just within the industry, but out-with as well.

Demand. The demand for sexual services will never go away, irrespective of legislation. The sex industry has been around for hundreds, if not thousands of years, and even occurs in other species (but I’ll stick to the human race). Legislation produced by nations and civilisations throughout the ages, has failed to eliminate demand, and in some cases even increased it. Why would some legislation from the Scottish Executive be any different? It will not.
Trafficking. Much has been made of Trafficking south of the border in relation to the sex industry. Figures were published and used in the House of Commons of 4000 women trafficked into the UK each year with regard to the sex industry. This figure is still being published and used here in Scotland to try to push these amendments through. These figures were proven to be completely false. The Guardian proved beyond doubt that the figures quoted, and used to try to push through legislation at Westminster, were simply plucked from thin air, then hyped by MPs, radical feminists, the media and anyone else with an agenda. Thankfully, the House of Lords could see that the proposed legislation was wrong in its earlier drafts. The figures used then, and now, were used on the premise of “If you repeat a lie often enough, and loud enough, it becomes the truth”, well, not in the modern digital age it doesn’t, and the Guardian has proven this. Ref: http://www.guardian.co.uk/uk/2009/oct/20/trafficking-numbers-women-exaggerated [Link no longer operates]

In actual fact, most trafficked people in the UK end up working in the building industry, on farms, in the fish processing industry, in catering, and in many other industries.

Trafficking does need to be stopped. These proposed amendments will do nothing to stop it, but will in fact increase it through fear of reporting it. Trafficking should not be used to try to force these amendments through, as Baroness Kennedy has just begun an investigation into the effects of trafficking in Scotland. The Executive should wait for the publication of the report.

Street Prostitution. This section of the industry is driven predominantly by drug addiction, mainly crack cocaine and heroin. Street prostitution could be virtually eliminated from the streets of Scotland by taking the correct approach to drug treatment of addicts, and education of our children and young people. This is the area where most good could be done by MSPs. Not only would street prostitution be drastically reduced, but also street robbery, house breaking, and numerous other drug related crimes will also see a dramatic drop. Is this not something the Executive would like to see? Of course it is, but the proposed amendments will never achieve this. Only a step change in drug policy will, not anti sex work legislation. Scotland could have the lowest drug related crime rates in the UK, if not Europe. It is an achievable goal, but these amendments will only serve to hamper any efforts made in this area by forcing the industry underground and into the hands of pimps, drug dealers, or other criminals. Street work is an area of prostitution is where the vast majority of abuse, robberies, physical attacks, rapes, etc take place. I talked recently to a serving police officer. This officer suggested that the ending of tolerance zones has made their job infinitely more difficult. Workers and clients now fear the police, instead of assisting them to reduce abuse, theft, rape, etc. The amendments proposed will make workers lives even more difficult, and much more dangerous than they are now.
Saunas/Massage Parlours/Escort Agencies. This is an area that some positive legislation could be applied. Agencies, saunas, etc, should be licensed and regulated. This will ensure the workers are treated properly, and fairly. A licensing scheme for them could easily be brought in allowing them to trade, and the rights of workers protected. The amendments proposed will push them further into the black economy, where workers could be exploited or abused. There are also tax benefits to regulation and licensing.

Independent Escorts. Independent Escorts create no problems at all for our society. Many of them are very well educated, some to degree level (take Dr. Brooke Maganti, writer of the book Belle De Jour, as an example). There’s a site which was created by escorts, for escorts. The purpose of the site is to provide advice on a range of issues, including personal safety, warnings of dangerous clients, scams, health issues, and more. The escorts provide this resource free to all at their own expense. They are responsible professional people. They have entered the industry through personal choice, not through force, coercion, or any other method which was not their choice. The majority of them pay taxes, NI, etc. They don’t solicit in bars, clubs, or on the streets. They are happy with the choice they have made, and are free to leave the industry any time they want to. Why force them out of business into low paid work, or onto state benefits? It makes no sense whatsoever. How many workers from other industries can work legally, but be banned from advertising, and all clients automatically become criminals for using their services?

Advertising. Banning the advertising of sexual services will be the most futile legislation that the Scottish Executive will ever have produced. You can only ban advertising from places within Scotland. A ban will do nothing to prevent workers advertising on websites and publications based out with Scotland, and out with the UK, such as one very well known US based one), and another very well known Belize based one. Workers who do not have direct access to sites like this will end up driven to unscrupulous, and possibly criminal people, to place adverts on their behalf. Those people then have the ability to control, manipulate, and possibly abuse the workers. A ban on workers placing adverts would be a huge backward step.

Disabled Clients. There are a significant number of disabled clients that use the services of sex workers. It is often the only form of intimate physical contact they get. Should they now be branded criminals for seeking something that is a basic human instinct? No, they should not, but the proposed amendments will make them criminals. Will any MSP be prepared to stand up and say it is right to deny disabled people this most basic of human needs?

The proposed amendments have been introduced at the latest point in time in an attempt to have them pushed though without proper debate, or consultation. These amendments have been ill though out. Introducing blanket bans (prohibition) to an area such as an industry so complex as the sex industry would be nothing short of wrong in every respect. The workers in the industry would be put at significantly more risk than they are at present.
No consideration of the health, safety, welfare, etc of the workers has been made with regard to these amendments. What are the reasons for bringing in such draconian legislation? I feel it is to appease the moral stance of MSPs, or to be “seen to be doing something” which in actual fact would be “out of sight, out of mind”. Personal morals should never be a reason to introduce or alter any legislation. It could be a vain attempt to do what Westminster couldn’t, without consideration for the workers affected. Scotland has perfectly ample laws to cover rape, abuse, harassment, trafficking, kerb crawling, etc. Our Police forces struggle to keep up with the existing laws through budgetary or operational reasons. There’s no need for any new legislation.

Similar legislation was proposed in England and Wales, but the House of Lords stopped it. I urge the Justice committee to reject these amendments.

G. Alexander
Fun Times
14 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Scot-PEP

History and background

Scot-PEP was founded in 1989, as a self-help group run by sex workers for sex workers. In the 21 years that it has been in existence, it has worked across most sectors of the sex industry. For 15 years, it carried out the HIV prevention strategy of NHS Lothian as it affected female sex workers. It has also carried out projects funded by such as the National Lottery, Lloyds TSB Foundation for Scotland, Scottish Enterprise, the (former) Scottish Office, the Scottish Mental Health Foundation, the European Commission, World Health Organisation, UNAIDS and UNFPA. Other funders have included the City of Edinburgh Council and Lothian and Borders Police.

During that time, Scot-PEP has developed a reputation as one of the leading sex-work projects in the United Kingdom. Indeed, it has been used as a model for many similar projects throughout the country and beyond. Its Ugly Mugs scheme, which is an early warning system for sex workers to alert them about potentially dangerous clients and situations, was introduced in 1990. It has developed to the extent that it has been copied by many projects and police forces elsewhere.

Scot-PEP was also involved in establishing the Remote Reporting scheme for sex workers, which allows those who have been attacked to make reports to the police through them.

Both of these schemes have resulted in convictions which would not have been possible otherwise. They are a testament to the spirit and reality of co-operation which can, and does, exist, between sex-workers and the authorities.

We were part of the working group who developed Edinburgh’s protocol on support for victims of trafficking and I have regularly attended and given evidence to the EU Expert Group on the Trafficking of Human Beings. We are members of the Global Alliance Against Trafficking in Women.

One of our Board members co-chairs the UNAIDS Advisory Group on HIV and Sex Work.

Above all, Scot-PEP has remained an organisation which is run for and by sex workers. As a user-led organisation, it has always been available to provide a listening ear to those in the industry, whether in crisis or otherwise, and to point them in the right direction when many agencies and other authorities make uninformed or moralistic judgements.

Response to the proposed legislation

Scot-PEP has always considered itself a non-judgemental organisation. Whilst there are times when it does become involved in ideological debates (and it has the resources to do so), it has always seen itself as a practical organisation. It deals with the realities of the sex industry.

It is in the spirit of that practical approach, and its experience and knowledge, that Scot-PEP wishes to put on record its extreme concern about the amendments tabled by Trish Godman.

Over the past 25 years there has been, according to local polls, what most people consider a pragmatic, practical and enlightened approach to the management of paid-for sex in Edinburgh. It is also worth noting that policing the sale of sex is more efficient and effective in such an environment, as can be seen by the Grampian Police publication on the policies they had devised for the management zone in the Aberdeen area.

The licensing of indoor establishments has made the job of support services (such as Scot-PEP) much easier, with a consequent positive effect on public health. Additionally, it has brought income to local councils in terms of Rates, and the Treasury in terms of V.A.T. and direct taxes. It reduced the level of criminality that was previously associated with those establishments. It has also helped in the protection of young people from under-age exploitation, as evidenced by a number of convictions over the years. Finally, it is also an important element in the combatting of trafficking.

To criminalise those who frequent these establishments will wipe away all of those benefits.

We also had, for a number of years, a so-called Toleration Zone operating in Leith. This was a zone where street-based sex workers could operate in a relatively safe environment, under principles established by and agreed with the local police. In terms of safety, access to services and co-operation with the police, it was a great success. It also helped to minimise the extent of pimping and involvement of other criminal elements. However, it was particularly notable that a community spirit grew between those who worked there, and the success of the Ugly Mugs Scheme grew. Many attacks were prevented as a result of this spirit, and many attackers brought to justice.

In December 2001, the Toleration Zone was abolished, as a result of the increase in development into residential areas of formerly dilapidated areas of Leith, the traditional working areas for those in street prostitution.
In the first year of there being no zone, reported attacks on street-based sex-workers increased ten fold. This was a direct result of women being forced to work in areas away from the former Toleration Zone, in poorly-lit and quiet back streets, thereby putting themselves at greater risk. It also made it more difficult for service providers to access the women, with a potential knock-on effect on the spread of HIV and associated illnesses. Finally, it helped to dilute the previous spirit of co-operation with the police, which of course made their job much more difficult when it came to tracking down attackers.

That was the first of what turned out to be a three-pronged assault, in our opinion, on street-based sex workers. The second came in the autumn of 2007, when Parliament introduced its kerb-crawling legislation. It is a matter of record that Scot-PEP opposed the introduction of such measures, as we expected that the threat to the safety of the women would be similar to that of the withdrawal of the Toleration Zone.

It was, and more so. The formerly traditional areas of working in Leith have been largely abandoned, in favour of more isolated and outlying places, chosen by clients to minimise the chance of being challenged by the police. In addition, because of pressure by clients to conclude a deal quickly in order to avoid detection, the women have less time to evaluate the client on first contact, thus exposing them to greater potential danger.

The effects on numbers are plain. In the calendar year 2006, there were 66 attacks reported to us and the police through our Ugly Mugs Scheme. In 2007, the year in which the kerb-crawling legislation was introduced, there were 126. In the first nine months of 2008 alone, there were 85. Due to our loss of funding, and consequent staff cuts, we do not have data for the period since then.

From discussions with women, we are aware that levels of violence and harassment continue to grow, but that women are still not reporting to police as they see the violence as “normal” and do not see the benefit of reporting crimes. We believe that this increase in violence is a direct result of the increasing marginalisation that we have described.

The legislation is now almost 2 and a half years old, and we are not aware of there having been many, if any, convictions. However, this should not be read as a sign that the law has been successful in eradicating street prostitution. Far from it. Sex-workers and their clients are simply becoming increasingly inventive in their attempts to avoid the law.

This is perhaps not the correct forum in which to raise this, but we would like to put on record our call for this particular legislation to be reviewed and evaluated, from all perspectives, as soon as possible.
We are now faced with the third wave of measures that was mentioned earlier. Based on our experience of the previous two, the proposed legislation will, in our opinion:

1. further disperse the outdoor industry, driving it further underground.

2. drive the indoor industry (licensed and unlicensed establishments, and independent escorts working through the internet) underground.

3. further increase the potential harm to those who work in it.

4. at a time when HIV and sexually transmitted infections among those with multiple partners, including sex workers, are on the increase, be a further threat to their spread.

5. increase the risk of infection of HIV and Hepatitis C for those sex-workers who are injecting drug-users.

6. increase the risk of the involvement of criminality within the sex industry, particularly in drug supply and people trafficking.

7. finally eradicate the co-operation that existed for a long time between those who work in it and those who would regulate it.

8. by denying sex-workers the ability to earn a livelihood, they are more easily drawn into areas of criminality.

The International Perspective

Michel Sidibe, Executive Director of UNAIDS, and Ban Ki Moon, General Secretary, have both in the last year called for the decriminalisation of sex work to enable universal access to HIV prevention, treatment, care and support for especially marginalised groups including female, male and transgender sex workers. The proposed legislation flies in the face of that humanitarian call.

The Swedish Model

There has been much talk in the media about the so-called “Swedish Model”, where the Government of that country has criminalised the purchase of sex. I would caution the Committee not to place any reliance on the claimed “success” of that initiative.

As far as we are aware, the legislation has yet to be evaluated, either by the Swedish Government or anyone else. We understand that there are plans to evaluate it later this year, but only in terms of how well the justice system has dealt with the legislation; there will be no evaluation of its impact upon the lives of sex workers or its “success” or otherwise in eradicating prostitution.

We have our own regular contact with sex workers in Sweden. Although, of course, their experience is anecdotal, they do tell us that the industry has not been eradicated. Any claims about a reduction in activity are dubious; all that has happened is that, as we have already experienced here, there has been an increasing marginalisation, with those working being driven out of sight. One cannot call that “success”.

Scot-PEP
17 March 2010
Amendment 8

The City of Edinburgh Council submits the following in relation to Amendment 8, relating to new offences of engaging in a paid-for-sexual activity, advertising a paid for sexual activity and facilitating engagement in a paid-for-sexual activity. The views outlined in this response are also relevant to consideration of amendments 8A- to 8D and consequential amendments 9 and 9A.

Response to current legislation

1. The Scottish Parliament has considered issues relating to prostitution in Session 1 and 2 via scrutiny of a private member's bill and the Prostitution (Public Places) Scotland Act 2007. Despite extensive consideration of available evidence proposing wider legislation, the legislative measures were limited to tackling the impact of kerb crawling. There did not appear to be sufficient support for wider measures such as those envisaged by the amendments. This may be because there is disagreement about how effective further criminal offences may be in reducing demand.

2. The Council is committed to responding to prostitution and associated problems by enforcement of the current legislation and providing support and routes out for women involved. Edinburgh’s approach to tackling prostitution has evolved since the mid 1980’s, providing an informal, unofficial and pragmatic response to the complex issues associated with street prostitution. This area is currently dealt with as part of broader community safety strategies.

3. Since the introduction of the 2007 Act the frequency and volume of complaints about antisocial behaviour associated with prostitution has reduced. The number of complaints last year was in single figures compared to approximately 4000 other antisocial behaviour complaints recorded citywide.

4. There are widely differing estimates of the number of women involved in prostitution within the city. The Edinburgh Community Safety Partnership allocated funding to projects for ‘routes out’ of prostitution during 2008 and 2009. The projects actively sought to engage with women involved in the sex industry or at risk of becoming involved. Overall the projects engaged with 108 women of which 72 had direct links with the sex industry.
5. Whilst supporting the need to reduce demand for paid for sexual activity, the Council strongly believes that there is no consensus currently for creating new offences as a means of tackling demand.

Proposed legislation

6. The Council is concerned that there is lack of evidence based analysis to justify the introduction of new offences as an “add on” to the proposed legislation. This route does not allow in-depth consideration of all the complex issues surrounding prostitution, in terms of demand, and reasons why women become involved.

7. Effective and detailed pre-legislative scrutiny can only be achieved as part of a Bill that deals with the totality and complexity of the issues associated with prostitution.

8. Where similar legislation, dealing with demand, has been introduced in other countries, the effectiveness of the legislation appears to be disputed. The Swedish approach is often cited in this context with, it is argued, positive outcomes. Research carried out for the Home Office suggests however there may be gaps in the evidence of the effectiveness of that legislation.

9. The Council would point out that in addition to criminalising the purchase of sex, the Swedish legislation decriminalised the supply of sex. The Council understands that there are no proposals to remove existing offences in relation to supply of sex for payment. In that context the Council would argue that direct comparisons with the Swedish approach are limited.

10. The Council would strongly argue effective consideration and potential legislation should consider:

- the complexity of the environment as a whole
- the enforceability and effectiveness of potential legislation
- the impact and costs upon Local Authorities, Police, Procurator Fiscal service and the courts
- the most effective means of providing support for women seeking to exit prostitution
- displacement of criminal behaviour and associated risks if new offences introduced, and how these issues should be dealt with
- any alternatives available for challenging demand for prostitution services.

City of Edinburgh Council
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Andrew R Wilson

I am the editor of SCOLAG Legal Journal, a director of the Scottish Legal Action Group and a postgraduate student at the Law School of the University of Edinburgh. I write in a personal capacity in response to the call for submissions on the Stage 2 amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, specifically in respect to amendment number eight - Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences).

I wish to bring my strong objection to the proposals within Amendment 8 to the attention of the Committee. I object to the proposed provisions for the following reasons:

1. It is inappropriate to create these new crimes in such a manner;
2. Enacting the proposals would undermine the Rule of Law;
3. They lack a firm basis in empirical evidence;
4. The proposals are a retrograde step;
5. They unfairly discriminate against LGBT people;
6. They are an unwarranted interference with the right to a private life;
7. The supposed harm is better addressed outwith the criminal justice system;
8. The implications for the safety of sex workers and public health are unacceptable.

1. It is inappropriate to create new crimes in such a manner
It is not appropriate to create new crimes by way of a Stage 2 amendment to a wide-ranging Bill. Such a procedure may be utilised to close a loophole in the drafting of the Bill or address a lacuna in current law. However, to seek at Stage 2 to criminalise previously lawful behaviour unconnected with the Bill as it was introduced is simply wrong. To do so denies the people and the Parliament the opportunity of proper examination and consultation provided for at Stage 1. Indeed, it would go against the very spirit of open, inclusive and consultative democracy which devolution sought to deliver for the people of Scotland.

2. Enacting the proposals would undermine the Rule of Law
Amendment 8 seeks to create offences of what has always been lawful behaviour which the people of Scotland simply do not consider criminal. Deliberately enacting an unenforceable law brings Scots law and the Scottish Parliament into disrepute. Further, it undermines the very concept of the rule of law, central to which is the principle that the law must mean what it says. The longstanding prohibition of brothel keeping goes unenforced throughout Scotland because it is neither in the public interest nor supported by the general populace. Consequently, local authorities, police forces and the Crown Office effectively turn a blind eye to the prohibition. It is likely they would have little choice but to do the same for offences created by Amendment 8.
3. They lack a firm basis in empirical evidence
Public policy, especially in relation to criminal justice, should be firmly based on evidence. However, the prohibitionist lobby, which seeks to outlaw all commercial sex work, is not supported by sound evidence. Research cited in support of a prohibitionist line repeatedly fails on a number of grounds. Writing advocating prohibition is often predicated on ideological and/or moral presumptions which are infused with sexist assumptions of differences between male and female sexuality. Furthermore, focused primarily on street prostitution, much research and the prohibitionist stance itself, fails to recognise the diversity of commercial sex work and the marked differences that the various modes of work have on sex workers, clients, local communities and Scottish society. Research, evidence or testimony which refutes the contention that prostitution per se constitutes a form of violence against women is dismissed, sidelined or ignored.

4. The proposals are a retrograde step
The proposals within Amendment 8 would, if enacted, represent a retrograde step in public policy. They would in an instant reverse the slow progress made in public policy since the Wolfenden Report (1956-57 Cmd. 247 Report of the Committee on Homosexual Offences and Prostitution). To date that progress has been a principled retreat of criminal law from the private sexual morality of consenting adults. That is not a policy which is only relevant to past decades. Rather it is one which continues to form the basis for progressive law reform, as is evidenced by the work of the Scottish Law Commission and the Scottish Parliament in drafting and enacting the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009.

5. They unfairly discriminate against LGBT people
The advocated prohibition of prostitution is not only heterosexist in failing to take account of LGBT people, it is inherently homophobic. Amongst others, it deliberately ignores and seeks to criminalise the male clients of male sex workers. Yet, by definition a commercial sex transaction between consenting males is not an act of violence against women.

6. They are an unwarranted interference with the right to a private life
Amendment 8 goes far beyond criminalising male clients of male sex workers and even female clients of male sex workers as a form of ‘collateral damage’. It fundamentally denies any sex worker the right to exercise personal autonomy in their private lives. With no sound evidence base, and the criminalisation of the clients of male sex workers, the provisions would constitute an unwarranted interference with the human rights of all sex workers and their clients.

7. The supposed harm is better addressed outwith the criminal justice system
Prohibitionists seek to outlaw all sex work on the grounds that it is part of the systematic inequality of women. The remedies to such structural problems that may be related with commercial sex work lie beyond the blunt instrument of the criminal justice system. They must be properly addressed through education, health and social services.

8. The implications for the safety of sex workers and public health are unacceptable
Enacting the provisions in Amendment 8 will not end commercial sex work in Scotland, for the same reasons and in the same way that the prohibition on brothels has not eradicated brothels from Scotland. Rather, these provisions would further endanger sex workers and public health, driving commercial sex work even further underground and putting sex workers beyond the reach of health and support services which they need and Scottish citizens wish them to have. For a committee of the Scottish Parliament, currently sitting in a city which has historically had a relatively high incidence of heterosexual HIV infection the negative implications of Amendment 8 for the provision of health services to sex workers and their clients should be a decisive factor.

Andrew R. Wilson
17 March 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2
Written submission from White Ribbon Scotland

In support of amendment 8

About White Ribbon Scotland

The White Ribbon Scotland campaign is for men in Scotland who want to end violence against women. Campaign supporters pledge ‘never to commit, condone or remain silent about violence against women.’ We are part of a global campaign of men and boys committed to taking action to stop violence against women through raising awareness of the issues and providing education and support for others to take action against men’s violence against women. Our focus is on involving men, but we welcome the support of women too. We work collaboratively with women’s organisations and urge men to support their work.

Summary of our position

We are strongly supportive of amendment 8 lodged by Trish Godman and urge the Justice Committee to support it. Prestitution is a form of violence against women and its continued prevalence is a result of gender inequality. Current legislation reflects this and we wish to challenge demand for prostitutes by criminalisation of the purchase of sex. This would be a positive policy shift towards tackling the issue of prostitution and with adequate support provided for women to exit prostitution as well improved education of the harm caused by prostitution we can address this exploitative practice and go some way to addressing its normalisation.

Callum Hendry
White Ribbon Scotland
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 2

Written submission from the Women’s National Commission

Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity

I am writing to you as Chair of the Women’s National Commission (WNC). The WNC is the only official, independent, UK organisation providing the views of women across the four nations to the Governments. We have over 550 partner organisations, many of whom work directly with women who have experienced violence. Our Violence Against Women (VAW) Working Group, chaired by Professor Liz Kelly, includes a long established group of academics, service providers and activists, who work across all forms of violence against women in each of the four nations.

The WNC welcomes the opportunity to write to the Justice Committee and we overwhelmingly urge the Committee to support amendment 8 to the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill (Scotland) as lodged by Trish Godman, which would create an offence of engaging in paid for sexual activity, for the following reasons:

Prostitution is one of the clearest expressions of gender inequality in our society; the majority of women selling sex are women and the majority of people buying sex are men. This is not coincidental; the purchase of women’s bodies is the result of the unequal distribution of wealth, power and opportunity in our society. We believe that prostitution is a form of violence against women and harmful for those that are involved and also for the communities where it exists. It is also unsatisfactory that at the moment within the indoor sex industry it is largely the sellers who are charged e.g. with brothel keeping or living off immoral earnings, whereby the buyers are treated with impunity. We believe that by putting the focus on the buyers of sex this may act as a deterrent and make men think twice before they purchase a vulnerable women. By tackling prostitution at the point of demand, the Scottish Government will be sending out a clear message that this exploitative industry is not tolerated in Scotland.

Between March – May 2009, the WNC was commissioned by the Home Office to carry out a series of focus groups with women to inform the development of the Violence Against Women and Girls Strategy (England). We consulted a diverse range of women, including women in prostitution. Their stories, which involve growing up in care, drug abuse, self harm, domestic and sexual violence, childhood sexual abuse, and many other complex issues, illustrated to us that many women’s involvement in the sex industry was driven by necessity or deprivation. All of the women we spoke to said they would like help and support to exit prostitution.
“We’re in no-man’s land, constantly being judged. People in services are so judgemental, they ask us ‘what do you do’ – what do I say? I’m a crack-head, smack-head prostitute, what would you think? You wouldn’t talk to me. And how do I get any other job? I’ve got a criminal record; I’ve been 5 years in prison, what’s out there for me? I’m still young, but what help am I going to get now to get my life back on track? Nothing.” (Still We Rise, 2009)

“Abuse in childhood was what got me where I am now. I was put in care, into foster care, children’s homes, a secure unit, everything changed for me then when I was 8.” (Still We Rise, 2009)

By criminalising demand for prostitution and supporting women to exit prostitution, meaningful action can take place to challenge the normalisation of the sex industry in Scotland, which is having a negative effect on all women, and will lead to a change in social attitudes towards prostitution, as witnessed by other countries that have enacted similar legislation. For example in Sweden, which has legislated to criminalise the purchase of sex, there has been a marked change in public perception with 80% of the public now viewing prostitution as unacceptable, compared to 49% in 1999.

We also think it is important that the law considers “facilitation” as part of the offence as this would help disrupt the organisers, pimps and traffickers who arrange the transport and accommodation for those involved in the sex trade. There is a clear link between prostitution; trafficking and organised crime and strong legislation may also go some way to prevent an influx of trafficked women into Glasgow to meet the demand during the Commonwealth Games in 2014.

The continued growth of the sex industry continues to hamper efforts to reduce and prevent violence against women. Furthermore it legitimises the objectification of women’s bodies, which has negative consequences for all women and poses a major obstacle for achieving gender equality in Scotland. From a marketing perspective, it is clear that advertising for sexual services is widespread not only on the internet but in newspapers and magazines across the city. Although enforcing the legislation on advertising would not be without challenge, we believe that it would still be a crucial step in targeting those that profit, create and support the sex trade in Scotland.

---

The WNC believes that the proposed amendments, if supported, could deliver a similar cultural shift in Scotland, which would drive us closer to gender equality, and ultimately to a fairer society in which all women and men can achieve their potential and live life free of abuse and violence.

We urge the Committee to support amendment 8.

Baroness Joyce Gould of Potternewton
Chair, Women’s National Commission
17 March 2010
Amendment 8 (lodged by Trish Godman) proposes changes to the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 to create three new offences – engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, advertising paid-for sexual activities, and facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity, all to be subject, on summary conviction, to a fine of up to £1,000.

Open Road - NHS Greater Glasgow and Clyde supports amendment 8 as proposed by Trish Godman. Open Road is NHS Greater Glasgow and Clyde’s service for men who are involved in prostitution, taking the strategic lead for NHSGGC on this issue, providing a frontline service for the men involved and translating our learning into service redesign for mainstream services.

Males involved in prostitution are one of the hardest to reach and most vulnerable groups of men in Scotland. The health outcomes for this group of men are poor, with drug and alcohol addiction, depression, suicidal ideation, attempted suicide and sexual ill health including risk of exposure to HIV and STIs frequently reported.\textsuperscript{1,2} While Open Road would not subscribe to the notion of a “standard presentation” the issues presented by the men that have engaged with the service depict themes of early trauma, including:

- Childhood neglect and familial domestic abuse
- Direct emotional, physical and sexual abuse
- Experience of statutory residential care
- Early entry into homelessness services
- Experience of addiction to substances by self and/or carer/partner

It is with this in mind that Open Road believes prostitution to be exploitative and harmful. It is our belief that prostitution is a survival behaviour and should not be viewed as a sexual behaviour. As such, prostitution should not be confused and conflated with the right of an individual to participate in a mutually consenting and fulfilling private life. The core harm which prostitution creates is the psychological trauma of having to repeatedly submit to unwanted sex, which is in clear breach of the Scottish Government’s national sexual health strategy, \textit{Respect & Responsibility}, which endorses the World Health Organisation’s definition of sexual health, namely:

“\textbf{[T]he possibility of having pleasurable and safe sex experiences, free of coercion, discrimination and violence. For sexual health to be} attained and maintained, the sexual rights of all persons must be respected, protected and fulfilled." 3

This definition precludes the possibility of prostitution being contextualised as anything other than exploitative, harmful and at odds with the endorsement of the WHO definition. Further, if we are prepared to accept the psychological trauma of unwanted sex as the core harm, then we must also accept the reality that prostitution cannot be made safe. To eradicate the harm caused by prostitution, then the circumstances which allow prostitution to exist must be challenged.

Recognising the exaggerated vulnerability of the many men and women involved in prostitution, services should continue to offer support for men and women involved to reduce and ultimately exit from their involvement in prostitution, without fear of further disadvantage through their actions being criminalised. In the transaction between individual involved in prostitution and purchaser or organiser of sexual acts, it is the purchaser and/or organiser who has the choice of whether to exploit another person’s vulnerability through coercive paid-for sex.

It is in this spirit that Open Road supports the amendment proposed by Trish Godman to place the criminal justice responsibility upon the purchaser and/or organiser, both for creating the demand for prostitution and for creating the central harm of causing coercive and unwanted sex. We would ask for explicit clarity in respect of whom the phrase “engaging in a paid-for sexual activity” refers to, with an understanding that it encompasses the purchaser and not the person involved in prostitution.

Similarly, we support the principle of creating an offence of “advertising paid-for sexual activities” and would again ask for explicit clarity in respect of whom this offence refers to. While it is in the public interest to challenge organised crime and the advertising of sexual contact venues and industries, we do not feel it is in the public interest to prosecute against lone men and women who are involved in prostitution and who have advertised themselves.

We would be happy to provide further detail in evidence of our support and participate in relevant debate regarding the proposed amendment.

Julian Heng
Service Manager, NHS Open Road
17 March 2010

---

Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Scottish Women’s Convention

The purpose of the Scottish Women’s Convention (SWC) is to communicate and consult with women in Scotland to influence public policy. Through the Convention’s policy work, round table and celebratory events the SWC strives to have contact with women and relevant organisations. The SWC aims to provide an effective way of consulting with a diverse range of women in Scotland.

The Scottish Women’s Convention has a network of over 300,000 women from relevant organisations throughout Scotland.

This paper provides a response by the Scottish Women’s Convention to the call for written evidence on Stage 2 amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

Amendment 8 lodged by Trish Godman MSP – proposed changes to the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009

This proposes to create 3 new offences:

- Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity;
- Advertising paid-for sexual activities;
- Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity.

SWC Submission

The Scottish Women’s Convention offers strong support to the amendments proposed by Trish Godman MSP. Our organisation believes that the proposed amendments, which would make it an offence to engage in paid for sexual activity, will effectively deter a large number of men from buying sex. Recent research suggests that men would be reluctant to buy sex if there was a real threat of public exposure or criminal proceedings.

---

1 Women’s Support Project - Challenging Men’s Demand for Prostitution in Scotland - Page 28 - 69-79% of punters stated that they would be deterred by greater criminal penalties. Some of the men suggested that a combination of criminal sanctions and public exposure would be most effective. Apr 2008.

EAVES project - Men Who Buy Sex – 4.19 Deterrence – Being added to a sex offender register, prison or being publicly exposed. Higher fines, greater criminal penalties would deter these men from buying sex, if they were convinced that laws and penalties would actually be enforced. Dec 2009
The proposed amendments would also send out a strong message to those who profit from prostitution, i.e. pimps, traffickers and brothel owners - a message that says Scotland will challenge the exploitation of individuals bought for sex. The proposed amendments are a very positive and much needed approach towards eliminating the demand for prostitution that drives the supply.

In the longer term it also offers an opportunity to change conflicting attitudes in Scotland about “commericalised sex” and violence against women (VAW). The Scottish Government hope to change these attitudes as outlined in their publication “Safer Lives: Changed Lives”. Prostitution is clearly included as part of a wide spectrum of behaviours that constitute male violence against women.

“Activities such as pornography, prostitution, stripping, lap dancing, pole dancing and table dancing are forms of commercial sexual exploitation. These activities have been shown to be harmful for the individual women involved and have a negative impact on the position of all women through the objectification of women's bodies.”

It could be reasonably argued that most purchasers of sex in Scotland are men and most sellers of sex are women. The SWC believe the proposed amendments, if supported, would demonstrate a binding commitment by policymakers to the eradication all forms of violence against women.

The SWC strongly believes that the purchase of sex and the facilitation of paid-for sex contribute significantly to much wider gender exploitation. Too many women, working both on and off the street are subject to coercion, control and exploitation. By criminalising the seller of sex we attribute blame to those who are exploited while allowing those who buy sex to abdicate all responsibility for creating the demand for prostitution.

Furthermore, a core element of the eradication of VAW in Scotland is to educate young people in “respect and responsibility” and in doing so create a more equal society where respect is embedded in our culture. The SWC believe Scotland will not achieve this outcome whilst there are conflicting sexual behaviour messages about who is a victim and who is perpetrator or what constitutes abuse, violation or exclusion. This lack of consistency exacerbates the inequalities that force women to be exploited by selling sex and allow men to purchase it.

A number of those opposed to these amendments suggest that making it an offence to purchase sex will drive the “industry” underground and make women more vulnerable. The SWC would like to stress that we do not wish to place women at further risk of violence, persecution or exploitation and point to the Swedish Strategy as a way forward.

---

The criminalisation of the purchaser of sex has been in place in Sweden since 1999. The SWC believes that the noted success of the Swedish legislation is due to the structures which support the law in assisting women to find routes out of prostitution.

The Swedish Government have put in place a fully funded support mechanism whereby women are offered housing, healthcare, counselling and financial support which offers a route out of prostitution.

These interventions are critical to ensure those exposed to the exploitative nature of prostitution are able to exit their situation safely and with adequate support. It must be recognised that exposure to adverse circumstances and lack of support drive many into prostitution in the first place.

The overwhelming majority of women that the SWC have consulted with throughout Scotland do not concur with the view that it is an issue of choice for women to engage in prostitution - that selling sex is a choice freely made. Considerable evidence is available to support our participants’ view that many young girls and women enter prostitution as a result of a critical lack of choice in their life.3 In most circumstances it is only the buyer of sex who is exercising free choice.

Women have told the SWC they are willing to accept there is a very small minority in prostitution who stipulate they have chosen to sell sex. However, their view is that the vast majority of prostituted women have been exposed to multiple social and material disadvantages including homelessness, poverty and leaving the care system. Risk factors for entry into prostitution also include experience of physical and mental trauma as a result of domestic or child sexual abuse.

There was a strong indication in feedback that if it is unlawful to buy sex from someone under 18 years old it was equally unlawful to purchase it from someone over 18 years old, particularly as it was likely the seller had been forced into

---

3 http://www.fawcettsociety.org.uk/documents/Prostitution%20Factsheet%201.9.07.pdf

52% of women in street prostitution were under 18 when they first worked in prostitution.
Three quarters of women in street prostitution report being physically abused by their partners.
37% of women in prostitution have spent time in care.
22% of women in prostitution were homeless or living in temporary accommodation when they first sold sex.
74% of women in indoor prostitution, and 28% of those in street prostitution cite household expenses and supporting their children financially as their primary motivation.
prostitution below the age of eighteen. Many women said that the high percentage of drug and alcohol misuse among those engaged in prostitution supports a view that it is not in any way a “chosen” career path or one that those providing sexual services feel is voluntary or desired.

For those who suggest free choice and lucrative earnings compels their desire to work in prostitution, evidence from the Tyneside Cyrenians “Hidden for survival” study (Feb 2008) found sex is sold for as little as £5 – the average price being £37. This SWC believe this suggests desperation forces the selling of sex not the expectations of a lucrative freely chosen profession.

Women have told the SWC that there is a worrying trend towards the normalising of sex work (for example jobs in massage parlours and lap dancing clubs being advertised in Job Centre Plus) and mainstreaming the “sex industry” through the internet and “clubs”. This is potentially grooming our young people to condone wider clusters of attitudes related to sexual behaviours that normalise and justify both gender inequality and gender exploitation. It is increasingly seen as normal for men to use prostitutes as part of a “boys’ night out” or attending international sporting events such as the Olympics and World Cup.

Women will continue to be subjected to exploitation and wider inequalities while male demand for financially procured sexual activity is viewed purely as a commercial transaction for “punters” and not a criminal offence. We therefore urge the Scottish Parliament to support Amendment 8.

The SWC do not support the two further amendments 8A – 8D lodged by Margo Macdonald

- Causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity and profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities.

Nor do we support amendment 461 lodged by Nigel Don which creates an offence of paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

It is the view of the SWC that prostitution is harmful to both the individual and society as a whole irrespective of whether the person is forced or not. In addition we believe that the burden of proving force or coercion would make such legislation unworkable.

Isabelle Lannon
Policy Officer, Scottish Women’s Convention
17 March 2010
I wish to make a submission only in respect of the new offences relating to stalking. The amendment lodged by the Scottish Government seems at first sight preferable to that lodged by Rhoda Grant: it is more concise and easier to understand. It rightly avoids the need to prove actual fear in court in all cases. However, it gives rise to two concerns: it is too broad in one respect and too narrow in another.

First, I am concerned by the fact that the proposed offence could be committed merely by behaviour which is merely "alarming or distressing". A reasonable individual might be distressed, for example, by the sight of someone begging on the street, or a film or theatrical performance - even one which was advertised as distressing - but it would be an abuse of the criminal law to make begging an offence in this way, or to criminalise popular entertainment (even if only theoretically). This is particularly problematic because there is no "reasonableness" defence as there is in the amendment lodged by Rhoda Grant.

It is not appropriate for the Parliament to pass overly broad laws and then rely on police and prosecutorial discretion to prevent abuse: criminal offences should be narrowly drawn and should specify clearly what it is that should be covered. If the offence were restricted to conduct which would cause a reasonable person to "fear for the safety of any person" (i.e. if subsection (2)(b) were deleted), that would seem sufficient to meet the underlying aims of this legislation while avoiding the problem of overcriminalisation.

Secondly, the offence's use of the "reasonable person" standard gives cause for concern and may result in an overly narrow offence in some respects. Suppose, for example, that B is in some way more susceptible to being put in fear of harm - perhaps B has learning difficulties of some sort which have this consequence - and A chooses maliciously to exploit that sensitivity. Alternatively, suppose that A's conduct over time has resulted in B suffering psychological illness and B is now more susceptible to fear. Under this definition, A could now exploit that psychological illness to put B in fear for his or her safety with impunity.

Even if the reasonable person might not have been put in fear, the fact that A has intentionally put B in fear for their safety should result in their conduct being covered by this offence. A better approach might be for the offence to cover intentionally or recklessly behaving in such a way as would put a reasonable person in fear for their safety, or intentionally putting a person in actual fear for their safety.
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Jan Beattie and Susan Devlin

Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences)

We welcome the opportunity to write to the Justice Committee and overwhelmingly urge them to support Trish Godman’s amendment which would create an offence of engaging in paid for sexual activity.

Summary of our position:

- We believe that prostitution is a form of violence against women and harmful for those that are involved and also for the communities in where it exists.

- We consider that prostitution exacerbates existing gender inequality as it is predominantly women who sell sex and men who buy. It is also unsatisfactory that at the moment within the indoor sex industry it is largely the sellers who are charged e.g. with brothel keeping or living off immoral earnings, whereby the buyers are treated with impunity.

- We think legislation would challenge the normalisation of the sex industry in Scotland.

- There is a clear link between prostitution, trafficking and organised crime and strong legislation may go some way to prevent an influx of trafficked women into Glasgow to meet the demand during the Commonwealth Games in 2014.

- We think it is important that the law considers “facilitation” as part of the offence as this would help disrupt the organisers, pimps and traffickers who arrange the transport and accommodation for those involved in the sex trade.

- From a marketing perspective, it is clear that advertising for sexual services is widespread not only on the internet but in newspapers and magazines across the city. Although enforcing the legislation on advertising would not be without challenge, we believe that it would still be a crucial step in targeting those that profit, create and support the sex trade in Scotland.

- We believe that by putting the focus on the buyers of sex this may act as a deterrent and make men think twice before they purchase a vulnerable women. Tackling demand would send out the important message that Scotland rejects prostitution and the exploitation inherent in this industry.
We do not support amendments 8A-D (lodged by Margo Macdonald) or amendment 461 (lodged by Nigel Don).

Jan Beattie and Susan Devlin
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Glasgow Community and Safety Services

New offences relating to stalking

Glasgow Community and Safety Services coordinate and deliver on all work related to violence against women on behalf of Glasgow City Council including domestic abuse, rape and sexual assault and commercial sexual exploitation. GCSS are an active partner within the Glasgow Violence Against Women Partnership. GCSS services in relation to violence against women include ASSIST, Routes Out of Prostitution and TARA.

We are pleased to respond to this call for written evidence in relation to new offences relating to stalking.

The extent and seriousness of stalking in Scotland remains largely hidden, and is prosecuted under common law as a Breach of the Peace, sentencing options are limited and do not offer victims sufficient protection in law.

We would fully support the amendment proposed by Rhoda Grant (402). Stalking by its nature is a hidden crime and is often invisible to all but the intended victim. It is vitally important that we seize this opportunity to identify stalking as a specific crime. Stalking and harassment most commonly occurs within the context of domestic abuse and women experience these behaviours long after they have exited the relationship.

Domestic abuse occurs on a continuum that ranges from emotional abuse to murder and the escalation of abuse often follows a predictable pattern. It is imperative that the goal is to formulate responses that break the cycle of abuse through effective intervention at the earliest stages. Understanding the nature of domestic abuse can help prevent the further escalation of criminal activity, this includes stalking behaviour.

Opportunities for perpetrators to engage in this behaviour are often masked and disguised and it is vital that a clear message in law is send to perpetrators that their behaviour is visible and more so is a crime and one which the police, prosecutors and the courts will treat seriously and respond robustly to.

While there is no clear cut definition of stalking and harassment, the 2 terms are often used interchangeably. However stalking and harassment is generally used to describe planned, premeditated, intentional, repeated behaviour which causes fear, distress, alarm, upset and annoyance to the intended victim and severely impacts on their ability to function on a day to day basis for fear for their personal safety and wellbeing or that of their family and friends.
The vast majority of women experience stalking and harassment from current or former intimate partner. A variety of methods are deployed by the perpetrator to facilitate contact and these include unwanted text messages, visits, telephone calls, letters, and gifts. Perpetrators will also use a network of family and friends to stalk their intended victim. We are aware of one woman whose former partner was a taxi driver, he used his colleagues to report on the woman’s whereabouts, on some occasions on an hour by hour basis. They also reported back to him any hires they had from her address, on one instance she reported that a male relative was quizzed rigorously by a third party on why he had been at that address and what his relationship was with the woman concerned.

With the growth of the Internet, the instances of online stalking are increasing. The Internet has become a useful tool for stalkers. The veil of anonymity allows the perpetrator to exercise power and control over the victim by threatening the victim directly or posting messages that lead third parties to engage in harassment and threatening behaviour toward the victim.

Similar to domestic abuse, victims who experience stalking do not report the first incident to the police and one study estimates that it is not until the 100th incident does the victim take any action. Often each incident is seen in isolation and the cumulative effect is not visible. It is therefore very difficult to prosecute under existing law.

The impact stalking has on its intended victim can never be underestimated. Stalking creates a psychological prison that deprives its victims of basic liberty of movement and security in their homes. Any allegation of stalking needs to be taken seriously as it is synonymous with increased risk of serious harm including murder.

Similarly we also support the amendment proposed by Kenny MacAskill (378). GCSS take the view that this is not an alternative to the stalking amendment as proposed by Rhoda Grant but provides additional teeth to common law Breach of the Peace. It is the experience of ASSIST that where an allegation/charge of a Breach of the Peace has been made but there is no other witness other than the intended victim, it is highly unlikely that there will be a successful prosecution as there is no public element. There is a reluctance by Sheriff’s to accept that a Breach of the Peace has taken place if no one else was disturbed by the behaviour regardless of the impact it had on the intended victim. It is important that there are robust responses by the police, prosecutors and the courts and that offenders are held accountable for their behaviour.

We are also in support of the further amendments (399; 400;401) proposed by Rhoda Grant.

Glasgow Community and Safety Services
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 2

Written submission from Glasgow Community and Safety Services on behalf of Glasgow City Council and Community Planning partners

Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences)

Introduction

Glasgow Community and Safety Services (GCSS) welcomes the opportunity to provide evidence to the Justice Committee and to strongly urge that Amendment 8 lodged by Trish Godman MSP, which would create new offences criminalising those involved in the purchase, marketing and facilitation of paid for sexual activity, is supported. This proposed change to the legislative framework in Scotland is a crucial step in addressing this harmful activity which blights the lives of individuals and families in cities, towns and rural areas across Scotland. We believe that the Scottish Parliament should recognise the inherent harm of prostitution to those involved, by focusing on the source of the problem – the men who buy vulnerable women and men in prostitution.

GCSS is a charitable organisation formed by Glasgow City Council and Strathclyde Police to prevent crime, tackle anti-social behaviour and promote community safety in the city. GCSS has specific responsibility for taking forward work on violence against women on behalf of the Council. Managing support provision for women involved in prostitution and women who have been trafficked for sexual exploitation provides a wealth of specialised knowledge on the issue of prostitution and trafficking and in particular the experience and needs of women.

There have been robust, strategic and well developed partnership arrangements in Glasgow to address the various issues of violence against women and children since 1998. Whilst this response has been drawn up by GCSS on behalf of GCC the views are shared across Community Planning partners in the city. It is also worth noting that Commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking are priorities within the City’s Annual Strategic Safety Assessment.

Summary of our position

In 2009, the Scottish Government published “Safer Lives: Changed Lives” which recognises prostitution as a form of violence against women which has “been shown to be harmful for the individual women involved and have a negative impact on the position of all women through the objectification of women’s bodies. This happens irrespective of whether individual women claim success or empowerment from the activity”. We consider that the approach in “Safer Lives” firmly implies that the Scottish Government now have a clear duty to implement measures aimed to assist local authorities, community planning partners and the Police with tackling the demand for prostitution. Not only is prostitution harmful for those directly involved but the mainstreaming of the sex industry also has a broader cultural harm which normalises and condones sexual violence.

We believe that there are 3 key aims addressed by this amendment

1. Disruption of the sex industry

There is a clear link between prostitution, trafficking and organised crime and we believe that the proposed amendment would help disrupt the organisers, pimps and traffickers who profit from, create and support the Scottish sex industry.

2. Reduction of the ‘market’ by lowering demand

75% of women in prostitution became involved when they were under the age of eighteen. Source: Women’s Resource Centre http://www.wrc.org.uk/includes/documents/cm_docs/2008/s/statistics.pdf [Link no longer operates]

74% of women in prostitution identify poverty, the need to pay household expenses and support their children, as primary motivators for being drawn into prostitution. Source: Women’s Resource Centre, op cit.

A comprehensive analysis of routes into prostitution identified that: Certain vulnerable groups of girls and women were more likely to become involved in prostitution; these were those who had suffered physical or sexual violence or neglect. This group were further marginalised by experiences that included running away, being in local authority care, being involved in crime, substance misusing and being excluded from education. These girls and women were then ‘facilitated’ into prostitution as a result of grooming by pimps or other procurers. Source: Matthews, R., (2008). Prostitution, Politics and Policy.

More than half of UK women in prostitution have been raped and/or seriously sexually assaulted and at least 75% have been physically assaulted at the hands of both pimps and punters. Source: Home Office (2004b). Solutions and Strategies: Drug Problems and Street Sex Markets. London: UK Government.

3. Promotion of a more positive attitude to the issue of prostitution and challenging the inevitability

Tackling demand for prostitution would have the important role of challenging current attitudes towards prostitution and send out a message that prostitution is not a normal, legitimate form of work or entertainment.
Evidence supporting the amendment:

- Research suggests that arrest of the purchaser may be the single biggest specific deterrent to buying sex. (Wilcox et al) A rapid assessment of the literature as part of the Tackling Demand for Prostitution Review (Home Office, 2008).

- Evidence in Sweden shows that criminalising demand has positive results with the Swedish Government describing a dramatic drop in the numbers of individuals involved in selling sex and the number of men buying services. Comparisons were made in 2004 by Kasja Wahlberg, Detective Inspector at the National Police Board in Sweden and National Rapporteur for Trafficking in Human Beings between Sweden, Finland and Denmark in relation to the number of women trafficked. It was estimated that between 400 and 600 women were trafficked into Sweden each year for sexual purposes. Estimates put the number in Finland as between 10,000 and 15,000 and Denmark as 5,500 to 7800. Sweden appears not to be an attractive destination country for traffickers. (Give Prostitution the Red Light? A Question Time style debate on Prostitution in Scotland – Reform, Regulate or Reject, Equality and Human Rights Commission 2009). Jonas Trolle, an Inspector with the Stockholm Police Trafficking and Prostitution Unit visited Glasgow in March 2008. He described how Sweden now has “significantly less prostitution than our neighbouring countries….we only have between 105 and 130 women – both on the internet and on the street active in prostitution in Stockholm today.” Norway and Iceland have introduced similar legislation.

- Laws to tackle the demand for prostitution also have an impact on the social acceptability of the sex industry. Since Sweden introduced this legislation, there has been a marked change in public perception with 80% of the public now viewing prostitution as unacceptable, compared to 49% in 1999. Additionally, at the time of the change in legislation in 1999, it was estimated that 1 in 8 men bought sex. This is now estimated to be 1 in 14 men in 2009. (Gunilla Ekberg, Former Advisor to Swedish Government on Issues of Prostitution and Human Trafficking).

- This year England and Wales introduced measures to tackle demand in the Policing and Crime Act. Section 14 creates an offence of paying for sexual services of a prostitute who has been exploited or subjected to force by someone else. It is a strict liability offence whereby it is irrelevant whether the person who pays for sex is, or ought to be aware that the person has been exploited and whilst this is clearly a step in the right direction, we would urge the Scottish Parliament to go further and make a stand against this social evil. We believe that Section 14 may serve to exacerbate what we believe is a false distinction between “freely chosen” prostitution and the physically coerced trafficking of women and children. We believe that some forms of coercion are simply more visible than others. For example Liz Kelly in *Shifting Sands: A Comparison of Prostitution Regimes Across Nine Countries (2009) notes that “desperation for money – which can be linked to drugs, debt bondage, a controlling pimp, or material need – place women in contexts where they take decisions which compromise their safety or involve accepting exploitative conditions. They are not ‘victims’ in the narrowest sense of that concept: they are actively making choices. These choices, however, take place in situations not of their own choosing, and within which there are few, if any options”. Glasgow has recognised, and responded to, prostitution as survival behaviour since 1999.

- The most recent analysis by the Home Office estimated that up to 4000 women in the UK had been trafficked for sexual exploitation and that the UK market in trafficked women was worth up to £275 million. The Home Office admits that this is likely to be a significant underestimate (Home Office, Tackling the Demand for Prostitution: A Review, 2008). We believe that if the proposed amendment was to be adopted now this would assist in the creation of a hostile environment for those viewing the Commonwealth Games in 2014 as an opportunity to increase their earnings through the sex industry.

- Advertising for prostitution is now at an overwhelming level on the internet, newspapers and in magazines. Ireland has adopted laws against advertising of prostitution and brothels. Vera Baird, Solicitor General and Harriet Harman MP have taken inspiration from this and are now proposing laws aimed at legislating against third parties profiting from the sex industry – namely newspapers. Trish Godman’s amendment will be effective in prosecuting those directly involved in profiting from the sex industry and reducing the numbers of men paying for sex.

- The proposed legislative change would allow the Government to fully meet its obligations under Article 23 of the Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings, which encourages ratifying states to adopt measures allowing the temporary or permanent closure of establishments used to carry out trafficking of human beings. We consider that there is scope within the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill to widen Police powers through Amendment 8 so that at the same time as instructing a closure order on premises, those caught purchasing sex indoors would be penalised. This would bridge the gap that has been created in law by the Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act 2007, which has led to the unsatisfactory legal situation whereby buying sex indoors remains unchallenged and unpunished.

Our response to common objections:

- The most common misconception is that “criminalising the purchase of sex drives prostitution underground making it less safe for those involved”. Although the very nature of the sex industry makes it covert, prostitution can never truly exist underground as if the punters are able to find the women selling sex, then so can the Police and those offering services to help exit prostitution. Prostitution can never be safe. Indeed evidence from Germany, in Liz Kelly’s*Shifting Sands* (2009) report, where brothels are legal found that “more than three quarters (78%) had suffered physical violence while selling sex and almost two-thirds (63%) had been sexually assaulted (Bruckner and Oppenheimer, 2006). This is one of few studies to compare women in and outside the sex industry, finding higher levels of injury and health consequences – including problematic drug use – among women involved in prostitution. A key finding crucial to our response to this proposed amendment is that “the levels of violence sustained by women in prostitution are now widely acknowledged as disproportionate and whilst setting has some influence on its scale and seriousness, there is no evidence to date that any setting renders prostitution ‘safe’”.

- We firmly reject the notion of prostitution as a form of work. Normalising prostitution makes the abuse and exploitation invisible and turns pimps, traffickers and punters into business people and legitimate consumers. It fails to recognise the marginalisation and poverty which drives the majority of people into prostitution in the first place.

- It is clear from looking at the sex industry worldwide that prostitution is inextricably linked with organised criminal gangs and trafficking. In Amsterdam regulation of prostitution gave a green light for pimps and traffickers to operate. The Major of Amsterdam stated in 2004 that “the city’s legal prostitution zone has become a magnet for traffickers and that the prostitution zone was unsafe for women. The zone has become a haven for traffickers and drug dealers and has not achieved its aim, to break the links between prostitution and organised crime” *(Melissa Farley, Prostitution and Trafficking in Nevada – Making the Connections, 2007)*. In Sweden, the Russian mafia, through the Kemerovo group from Estonia has attempted to involve themselves in Sweden on three occasions. This group is the most powerful of the Russian Estonian mafia. In each case, the Swedish police has intercepted them. The Estonian Police confirm that this group has decided to no longer pursue Sweden due to it being a bad market for prostitution activities (as a result of the law) and because they were charged and prosecuted several times. (Kasja Wahlberg, Detective Inspector at the National Police Board in Sweden and National Rapporteur for Trafficking in Human Beings)

- The Women Support Project’s research Challenging Demand (2008) which interviewed 110 men in Scotland about their experience of buying sex, found that several punters believed that prostitution could be justified as a form of “rape prevention”. There is no evidence to support the theory that without prostitution to provide for men’s sexual needs there would be an increase in rape. Rape rate statistics from the US raise the possibility that there may even be a positive association between legal prostitution in Nevada and higher rape rates in that state. Melissa Farley has highlighted that “Nevada’s women are raped at rates that are twice that of New York and a fourth higher than the US average. Women are 3 times as likely to be raped in Las Vegas than New York. Men in the state tend to normalise sexual violence” (Prostitution and Trafficking in Nevada – Making the Connections, 2007).

We believe that the measures proposed by Trish Godman would not only reduce the demand to buy sex, but also make Scotland a less attractive destination country for traffickers and a more attractive place to live. However, more than just criminalising demand, we feel that the main impact of the proposed amendment would be to challenge attitudes and to send out a strong message that buying sex is not a harmless or acceptable activity. It is time to assign responsibility to where it belongs and put the focus on the demand. It is also clear that legislation is only part of the answer. It is important that attention is also paid to addressing inequality and promoting respect through education and prevention work with a particular focus on young people.

We do not support amendments 8A-D (lodged by Margo Macdonald) or amendment 461 (lodged by Nigel Don).

Glasgow Community and Safety Services on behalf of Glasgow City Council and Community Planning partners
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 2

Written submission from the LGBT Domestic Abuse Project

In support of amendment 8 to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

About LGBT Youth Scotland

LGBT Youth Scotland is a charity working towards a Scotland in which every lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) young person is included in society, can grow up happy and healthy, enjoys a safe and supportive upbringing, and is able to reach their full potential.

LGBT Youth Scotland provides a range of services and opportunities for young people, families and professionals, which aim to increase awareness and confidence, and reduce isolation and discrimination.

LGBT Youth Scotland works towards this vision by mainstreaming LGBT equality into generic services, and through the provision of specialist services directly to young people. Direct youth work including youth groups, volunteering and outreach are key aspects of the organisation's activity as are policy, research and training work.

About the LGBT Domestic Abuse Project

LGBT Youth Scotland also house Scotland's innovative LGBT Domestic Abuse Project which is working to increase the visibility and awareness of LGBT people's experience of domestic abuse. We are working with mainstream service providers to enable them to support LGBT people experiencing domestic abuse to ensure that no matter what service they access they will receive a good response – in line with the Scottish Government's national training strategy on domestic abuse.

Our organisational position

We are strongly supportive of amendment 8 lodged by Trish Godman and urge the Justice Committee to support it.

We recognise that prostitution is a form of gender based violence which impacts on women and this must be addressed. Gender based violence is also experienced by Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender people and our response is going to focus on that.

There is little information about the impacts of prostitution on lesbian, bisexual women and transgender men as there is little written evidence in terms of research, however we are aware that prostitution is a particular issue for gay men, bisexual men and transgender women.
The sexual orientation of lesbian and bisexual women will likely become invisible in any research around women involved in prostitution as their experiences of prostitution will be captured more broadly under the experience of women involved in prostitution. We are therefore unable to comment on whether this is an issue or not.

Studies carried out in Glasgow including An Overview of Male Sex Workers in Glasgow and Edinburgh J Connell and G Hart 2003 highlight prostitution for gay and bisexual men and young people.

Some of the particular issues were related to their previous experience of abuse in the form of domestic abuse or childhood sexual abuse. Some young people were groomed into prostitution from an early age.

Young gay and bisexual men are particularly vulnerable to becoming involved in prostitution particularly when there is a lack of family and peer support, positive role models and not knowing what to expect of a same sex relationship. Some felt that they could affirm their sexual orientation through prostitution:

> I wasn't listening to anybody, it's, like, ‘no, this is my life!, I'm going to go out and do it (rent)’... it (renting) can be soul destroying, but it's also maybe the first adult choice you make and it can be a way of reaffirming yourself (your sexuality), if you are having to lie to your parents, lie to your friends ‘yes, I'm straight, yes I'm straight’..."¹

On the issue of choice, we believe that individuals who claim that this is activity freely chosen constitute a minority of individuals participating in this industry, and further note that women and men involved in prostitution often describe the activity as freely chosen as a coping mechanism:

> As the majority of men saw no real viable alternative, or simply felt they had no choice, in selling sex, it was not surprising that their initial feelings surrounding sex work were ones of fear, apprehension and repulsion. Words frequently used to describe their initial experience of sex work included: disgust; scared; threatened; nerve racking; worried."²

There is little written evidence about transgender people involved in prostitution however anecdotal evidence would suggest that it is an issue for some trans women. Anecdotal evidence suggests that transphobia is a major factor which contributes to trans people getting involved in prostitution. For example, experiencing transphobia from neighbours and feeling that prostitution is the only route out to safer accommodation. Another factor is

¹ Pg 38 An Overview of Male Sex Workers in Glasgow and Edinburgh J Connell and G Hart 2003
² Pg 42 An Overview of Male Sex Workers in Glasgow and Edinburgh J Connell and G Hart 2003
maintaining employment while experiencing transphobia from colleagues, this can therefore result in poverty which we know is a factor which can lead people into prostitution.

It has to recognised that prostitution is an issue which affect LGBT people however there must be more research carried out to discover the full impact that prostitution has on the LGBT community.

LGBT Domestic Abuse Project
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 2

Written submission from the Scottish Centre for Crime and Justice Research (SCCJR)

The amendments added at Stage 2 to the Bill are a cause for concern as they accelerate a trend of over criminalization and penalization in Scotland. Some of us have submitted more detailed comments on the mechanics of specific amendments, but in this brief statement we at the SCCJR are writing to express our consensus that these amendments, taken together, would make for an unwieldy, unevidenced and over complicated law. Enacting these amendments will create pressures to divert scarce resources into the justice system and thereby undermine the current strategies for securing community safety.

Additionally, by deleting the sections relating to the principles of sentencing, watering down the sentencing council proposals of the Scottish Prisons Commission, hardening the approach to breaches of bail and police undertakings, defining serious and organised crime so broadly, Scotland is not only losing its chance to do something progressive and bold in realising a more effective justice system, but it is adopting a reactionary stance to come up with a law that almost certainly will lead to net widening, penal expansion and worsening rates of reoffending.

Just as America, the world’s most aggressive user of prisons, has begun to recognise the error of its ways in the face of a fiscal crisis caused by penal expansion\(^1\), Scotland would take up such discredited practices as mandatory minimum sentences; imprisonment as the main strategy of managing breaches of bail, probation and parole; and wide ranging criminalization of behaviour much of which is already prosecutable under common law or existing legislation. The amendments to the law hence appear to us to lack foundation in evidence or logic.

We also raise a separate concern about the procedure by which these amendments were made. The amendments proposed here introduce a number of new offences (in particular on stalking, engaging in paid-for sexual activity and related offences, voyeurism etc). Irrespective of the general questions of whether or not these are appropriate areas for criminalization, we are particularly concerned that these amendments are introducing major new elements to the Bill at Stage 2. There is thus no opportunity for proper debate or thorough scrutiny of either the amendments individually or the Bill as a revised whole. The proper procedure for introducing such offences should be in a stand-alone piece of legislation or at a much earlier stage in the legislative process. As things stand there is a risk that the democratic process is being subverted. Our concern, therefore, is that this Bill is becoming increasingly poor law. For this reason we would strongly urge that the amendments introducing new offences be removed from the draft Bill and presented to Parliament in separate legislation.

---

The Bill as originally introduced proposed reforms to sentencing based on a review of Scottish penal policy which included a widescale review of the empirical evidence related to the impact of sentencing on the prison population and put forward proposals on the basis of this evidence. The reforms proposed were a coherent package which sought to implement these proposals. We are concerned that the proposed amendments not only dilute the original proposals, but run the risk of replacing a principled and coherent approach to penal policy with just the kind of muddled and incoherent approach to sentencing that was identified as having created the problem for penal policy. This cannot be the most appropriate way to reduce re-offending and secure safer communities in Scotland.

Submitted by:

Dr Sarah Armstrong (University of Glasgow)
Dr Andy Aitchison (University of Edinburgh)
Dr Monica Barry (University of Strathclyde)
Dr (University of Glasgow)
Prof Michele Burman (University of Glasgow)
Dr Liz Campbell (University of Aberdeen)
Prof Antony Duff (University of Stirling)
Prof Lindsay Farmer (University of Glasgow)
Prof Roisin Hall (Glasgow Caledonian University)
Prof Neil Hutton (University of Strathclyde)
Dr Claire Lightowler (SCCJR)
Dr Fiona Leverick (University of Glasgow)
Prof Gill McIvor (University of Stirling)
Prof Fergus McNeill (University of Glasgow)
Mr David Moran (University of Stirling)
Dr Paul Norris (University of Edinburgh)
Ms Briege Nugent
Dr (University of Strathclyde)
Dr Kenneth Scott (University of the West of Scotland)
Dr Anna Souhami (University of Edinburgh)
Prof Richard Sparks (University of Edinburgh)
Prof Jackie Tombs (Glasgow Caledonian University)
Ms Beth Weaver (University of Strathclyde)
Dr (Glasgow Caledonian University)
Ms Suzanne Young (University of Stirling)

17 March 2010
CARE welcomes this amendment as a positive step towards reducing commercial sexual exploitation in Scotland. Whilst we recognise that there are some people who identify themselves as being empowered through prostitution, we also recognise that the vast majority of people caught in commercial sexual exploitation are there because of negative push factors, some of which are mentioned below.

Demand for paid sex is increasing in Scotland and the rest of the UK\(^1\). Some may say “So what? Although the idea of prostitution might offend the moral sensibilities of some, in a liberal society if adults agree to have sex on the basis that one pays the other this is really a private matter. There is no justification for state intervention.”

This argument sounds compelling but it overlooks an important fact.

The rationale for legal intervention is not to placate the foibles of enthusiasts for particular approaches to personal morality.

It is actually for the purpose of addressing inequality, lack of opportunity, poverty, homelessness, drug dependency and abuse of vulnerability. It certainly is not the place of the Scottish Parliament to be censorious but it is its responsibility to protect the vulnerable.

Commercial Sexual Exploitation in Scotland

As many as 70% of women involved in prostitution in the UK were drawn into prostitution, often by grooming, when they were children\(^2\). Up to 70% of women in prostitution spent time in care. 45% report experiencing sexual abuse and 85% physical abuse during their childhoods\(^3\). Individuals experiencing factors such as homelessness, living in care, problematic drug

---

\(^1\) H Ward et al, Who pays for sex? An analysis of the increasing prevalence of female commercial sex contacts among men in Britain. Sexually Transmitted Infections 2005; 81: 467-471. The proportion of men who reported paying for sex in the previous five years increased from 2% in 1990 to 4.2% in 2000. Given the growth of the sex industry since 2000, it would seem likely that demand will have continued to grow since 2000.

\(^2\)Home Office (2004) Paying the Price

\(^3\)Ibid
use, alcohol abuse, experience of violence and abuse in the home and debt are at particular risk of being drawn into prostitution\textsuperscript{4}.

68\% of women in prostitution meet the criteria for Post Traumatic Stress Disorder in the same range as torture victims undergoing treatment\textsuperscript{5}. More than half of UK women in prostitution have been raped and/or seriously sexually assaulted. At least three quarters have been physically assaulted\textsuperscript{6}.

The Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland (ACPOS) estimates that Scotland has 13.5\% of the UK's trade in human beings\textsuperscript{7}. During Operation Pentameter 2, Scottish police forces raided over 50 premises in Scotland: 59 people were dealt with as victims of trafficking and 35 suspects were arrested.

Trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation is currently a high profit, low risk venture for those who trade in people. It has been reported that some drug trafficking gangs have switched to people trafficking as there is more money to be made and less risk of being caught\textsuperscript{8}. A batch of heroin can be sold and used once but a human being can be sold and used again and again and again.

Conclusion

A reduction in the grooming, coercion and trafficking of so many vulnerable people must be reached. At present there is insufficient deterrent to gangs, traffickers, pimps and those buying sex in an off street context. Although Kerb crawling in Scotland was made an offence in the Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act 2007, at present there is no deterrent in the law to deal with demand in an off-street context. Until this root cause is addressed, a significant reduction in sex trafficking and other forms of commercial sexual exploitation will not be realised.

Whilst legislation which criminalises the payment of sexual services with someone who is under direct force is a good step forward, it does not protect people who may be in prostitution due to inequality, lack of opportunity, poverty, drug dependency or a history of abuse and grooming. If a person’s early experiences are shaped in such a way that there is little option other than engaging in prostitution, then even once they are away from the direct control of a pimp, the dominant influence of those experiences may still remain. It is important that the Justice Committee recognises this fact and accepts Amendment 8, which would work to protect all women, men and children who are being exploited through the sex industry.

\textsuperscript{4} Ibid
\textsuperscript{6} Home Office (2004) \textit{Paying the Price}
\textsuperscript{7} Scotland's Slaves, Amnesty International (August 2008)
\textsuperscript{8} In 2002 at a meeting in Bangkok the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) reported that one of the main factors the trade is rising is because traffickers feel there are fewer risks involved in trading humans compared with drugs.
Appendix: Current legislation

In March 2007, the then Scottish Executive Minister for Justice, Cathy Jamieson MSP, and Home Secretary Dr John Reid MP, launched the UK Action Plan on Trafficking. The Action Plan is a living document which sets out the Government strategy to tackle human trafficking in the UK.

The Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings sets out measures to protect and give support to survivors of trafficking. The UK Government ratified the Convention on 17th December 2008 and has committed to giving a 45 day reflection period to rescued victims during which time they will receive safe housing, medical care and assistance.

Section 22 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 introduced an offence for trafficking of persons into and out of Scotland for the purpose of sexual exploitation. However, the legislation did not cover trafficking within Scottish borders. There is a penalty of up to 14 years imprisonment for committing an offence of trafficking for sexual exploitation.

Prostitution itself is not illegal although activities surrounding prostitution in an on-street context are. The majority of legislation focuses on the individual in prostitution rather than the buyer although Kerb crawling was made an offence in the Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act 2007. Running a brothel is an offence under section 11 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 as is procuring (pimping) under section 7. The majority of trafficked victims in prostitution end up in brothels and other premises rather than working on the street. Currently the law does not offer any deterrents to buyers in an off-street context. The present law passively and indifferently sanctions this aspect of the trade.
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 2

Written submission from Unite the Union

Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences)

Unite fully supports the amendment proposed by Trish Godman MSP which would create an offence of engaging in paid for sexual activity.

Summary of our position:

• We believe that prostitution is a form of violence against women and harmful for those that are involved and also for the communities in where it exists.

• We consider that prostitution exacerbates existing gender inequality as it is predominantly women who sell sex and men who buy. It is also unsatisfactory that at the moment within the indoor sex industry it is largely the sellers who are charged e.g. with brothel keeping or living off immoral earnings, whereby the buyers are treated with impunity.

• We firmly reject the notion of prostitution as a form of work. Legitimising prostitution as a normal job fails to acknowledge the marginalisation and lack of choices which results in women being drawn into the sex industry in the first place.

• There is a clear link between prostitution, trafficking and organised crime and strong legislation may go some way to prevent an influx of trafficked women into Glasgow to meet the demand during the Commonwealth Games in 2014.

• We think it is important that the law considers “facilitation” and “advertising” as part of the offence as this would help disrupt the organisers, pimps and traffickers, who profit from, create and support the sex trade in Scotland.

• Tackling demand for prostitution would have the important role of challenging current attitudes towards prostitution and send out a message that prostitution is not a normal, legitimate form of work or entertainment.

• We would like to see demand criminalised and women supported to exit prostitution, and more education for all to prevent prostitution from happening.

We do not support amendments 8A-D (lodged by Margo Macdonald) or amendment 461 (lodged by Nigel Don).

Unite the Union
17 March 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 2
Written submission from the Scottish Justices Association

Amendment 402 grouped with Amendments 378, 399,400 & 401(new offence of stalking/threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour);
Amendment 10 grouped with Amendment 10A (sentencing for knife crime);
Amendment 8 grouped with Amendments 8A-8D, 9 & 9A (new offences in relation to paid-for sexual activity)

Preliminary
1. The Scottish Justices Association (SJA) is glad to receive the opportunity to provide written evidence on the above Amendments. However, it regrets the brief period allowed for the production of such comments.
2. Also, it suggests that, where new criminal offences are contemplated, in the absence of an emergency, they are better introduced into a Bill at the initial stage, after consultation, and with reference in the Policy Memorandum and Explanatory Notes, to allow fuller discussion.

New offence of stalking/threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour
3. It will be recalled that the previous Scottish Executive undertook a Consultation on stalking and harassment a few years ago\(^1\). This considered four options, one of which was “to introduce a more radical, new statutory offence to deal specifically with stalking and harassment\(^2\). The arguments for and against were canvassed\(^3\), and it noted that “a statutory offence might reduce the flexibility offered by the common law without obvious compensation\(^4\). It also observed that there was difficulty of definition, for “[a]ny definition would have to be drawn very generally if it were not to exclude a wide range of [objectionable] behaviour\(^5\), and questioned whether any difference would be made in practice and whether any benefits would be “substantive or presentational\(^6\).
4. The Consultation concluded that “the case for creating a new offence is not clear-cut” and that “the Scots common law [of breach of the peace, and of uttering

---

\(^1\) Scottish Executive Stalking and Harassment Consultation Paper (2000) (“Stalking and Harassment Consultation”).
\(^2\) Stalking and Harassment Consultation, para 25.
\(^3\) Stalking and Harassment Consultation, paras 40-47.
\(^4\) Stalking and Harassment Consultation, para 45.
\(^5\) Stalking and Harassment Consultation, para 45.
\(^6\) Stalking and Harassment Consultation, para 47.
threats] appears to enable the court to deal with the relevant type of offending behaviour and, if appropriate, hand down severe penalties”.7

5. This conclusion was re-inforced by the research commissioned thereafter8, which found that “there is little enthusiasm among practitioners (or victims) for a change in current legislative arrangements”9 (emphasis added). It concluded that more effective use of “breach of the peace” by police and procurator fiscals was the appropriate way forward10.

6. It may be that the redefinition of “breach of the peace” arising out of the line of cases including Smith v Donnelly 2001 SLT 1007, Paterson v HM Advocate 2008 SLT 465 and Harris v HM Advocate 2009 S.L.T. 1078 means that the offence might not cover some examples of the behaviour in consideration. There is also certainly a “fair labelling” argument that the inherent vagueness of “breach of the peace” should be departed from. But, particularly because the conclusion of the Consultation was against new legislation, and the subsequent research agreed, it is suggested that, if a new offence is proposed, it should be preceded by consultation in advance of a Bill, rather than at Stage 2.

7. In any case, important drafting problems remain for, as the Consultation Paper remarked “What do we mean by stalking or harassment? There are no clear-cut definitions ...”11. There are precedents for a definition, in that the Protection from Harassment Act 1997, s8, permits civil “non-harassment” orders (breach of which is an offence, incidentally), and the same Act, in s1, creates an offence of “harassment” in England and Wales (though interestingly, the definitions of harassment for these purposes are not identical). However, neither Amendment 408 nor Amendment 378 follows either of those precedents (though clearly some phrases have been picked from them), and a multiplicity of different definitions is of itself unfortunate. (It is also worth noting that the Draft Criminal Code for Scotland12 includes offences of “violent and alarming behaviour”13 and “intrusive and alarming behaviour”14 which appear likely to cover the behaviour in question, and might be considered).

8. Both Amendments are drafted in considerable detail. It is not possible or appropriate to make detailed drafting suggestions. However, it is suggested that

---

7 Stalking and Harassment Consultation, para 45.
9 Stalking and Harassment Research, p3 (“Conclusions”).
10 Stalking and Harassment Research, pp3-4 (“Conclusions”).
11 Stalking and Harassment Consultation, para 4.
13 Draft Criminal Code, s49.
14 Draft Criminal Code, s50.
the Amendment 402 ("stalking") offence may preserve the vagueness of "breach of the peace" insofar as it can turn in part on the concept of "physical or psychological harm" (subsection (2)(c)(i)) caused by a course of conduct which the alleged perpetrator "ought, in all the circumstances to have known ... would be likely to cause such harm ..." (subsection (4)). The approximate equivalent in the Amendment 378 offence may be preferred insofar as it rests on the concepts of "fear for the safety of any person" and being "alarmed or distressed" (subsection (1)(a)(i),(ii)).

9. On the other hand, the former restricts itself to the effect on the complainant, whereas the latter includes "fear for the safety of any person" (emphasis added), and the alleged perpetrator's "behaviour [need not be] directed at anyone in particular" (subsection (3)(a)), and need not "actually [cause] anyone fear, alarm or distress" and can be "in public or private" (subsection (3)(c)(i),(ii)).

10. In short, detailed consideration of either version (and of the further relevant Amendments) is necessary to reasonably ensure that the proposed offence reasonably accurately hits its target (though, given the debate as to what is meant by "stalking" or "harassment", touched upon in the earlier Consultation, this exercise is made more difficult uncertainty as to what the precise target of either proposal actually is).

11. The SJA concludes that, although it is by no means unwelcoming of a new offence of broadly this nature, in the absence of an emergency, these proposals should be put out for full consultation.

Minimum sentence for knife crime

12. Both amendments seek to impose a minimum sentence on conviction of an offence under s49 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 by a person of 16 or over. One would make the minimum 6 months "unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or the offender which justify not doing so". The other would make it two years "unless the court, having regard to all the circumstances, that there are grounds for mitigating the normal consequences of the conviction and thinks fit to order the offender to be imprisoned for a shorter period or not to order the offender to be imprisoned".

13. Minimum sentences can be seen to be, in principle, inappropriate, even when accompanied by "exceptional case" provisions. This is because they tend to reflect feeling in relation to high profile cases, and possibly because they assume that mimima constitute a deterrent. High profile cases are, of course, almost certainly atypical, and mean that either the minimum operates on cases which were not envisaged, or the "exceptional case" provisions have frequently to be invoked. Whether minimum sentences are in practice a deterrent is an empirical question, and it is not known if any studies suggest that such a minimum would have any effect in cases of this type.

14. In any case, as it is likely that the Sentencing Commission will be set up in the near future, and its guidelines will be produced after input from the Government, minima introduced now will be a hindrance to its activities.

15. The SJA therefore considers that neither version of the amendment should become law.

Offences in relation to “paid-for” sexual activities

16. A number of broad approaches to the law on prostitution are possible. One is that prostitution is immoral, and should therefore be suppressed by criminalising it. Another is that it may be immoral, but ineradicable, and criminalisation, by driving it underground, creates risks for those involved in it so great that while some associated activities might be criminalised, prostitution itself should not. A third is that, again it may be immoral, but ineradicable, and it impinges upon most people as a form of nuisance. A fourth is that prostitution is an acceptable activity and might be regulated, but should not be otherwise criminalised.

17. The fourth of these broad approaches is unlikely to be adopted in Scotland in the foreseeable future. Policy has in general swithered uneasily between the third and second approaches, which explains the non-criminalisation of prostitution itself, and the nature of the related offences described below, including their curiously ad hoc appearance in different pieces of legislation. The first has not been tried for some centuries.

18. At present, prostitution is not an offence, either for prostitute, or client, but there are related offences of:

(i) soliciting and importuning (as defined) for the purposes of prostitution by a prostitute in a public place (as one of a number of “Offences of annoying, offensive, obstructive or dangerous behaviour”\(^{15}\));

(ii) soliciting or importuning by a man “for immoral purposes”\(^{16}\) (as an offence of “Trading in prostitution and brothel-keeping”);

(iii) reverse soliciting (as defined) by a potential client in a public place (as an “Offence related to prostitution”)\(^{17}\);

\(^{15}\) Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, s46.

\(^{16}\) Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995, s11(1)(b).

\(^{17}\) Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act 2007, s1(1).
(iv) living on the earnings of male\textsuperscript{18} (as a “Homosexual offence”) or female\textsuperscript{19} prostitution (also as an offence of “Trading in prostitution and brothel-keeping”); and

(v) arranging the arrival in, or departure from, the United Kingdom of an individual, “intend[ing] to exercise control over prostitution by the individual or to involve the individual in the making or production of obscene or indecent material” (as an offence of “Traffic in prostitution, etc”)\textsuperscript{20}.

19. Thus, there is a case for consolidation of such offences. However, while the proposed Amendment 8 appears to include all of the above, it not only alters the drafting by replacing terms such as “solicit” and “importune” with “advertise”, “facilitate” (and possibly “engage in”), by using the very phrase “engage in”, it also appears to include prostitution itself. This would constitute a major change of policy.

20. Moreover, it does not appear that the “paid for sexual activities”, “advertising paid for sexual activities”, or “facilitating paid for sexual activities” are required to be in public, as is presumably implicit in the aim of criminalising prostitution, as such. Apart from any other consideration, this raises questions of enforceability.

21. It is also noticeable that, while the details of what constitutes payment are dealt with extensively (ss 11A(2), (3)(a),(b), 11C(2), (3), (4)(b)), Amendment 8 turns on the phrase “sexual activity” without actually defining it. Admittedly, the existing offences do not define “prostitution”, but “sexual activities” seems a good deal broader, including, for example, kissing, so it is not clear what activities are intended to be covered.

22. (Incidentally, Amendment 8B would create an offence of “profiting from co-erced paid-for sexual activities”, which may already be covered by “facilitating engagement” in the proposed s11C. However, Amendment 8A would extend coverage by including “Causing alarm etc. by engaging in paid-for sexual activity”).

23. Thus, the SJA concludes that any proposed amendments of this kind should again only be preceded by proper consultation.

The Scottish Justices Association
17 March 2010

\textsuperscript{18} Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995, s13(9).
\textsuperscript{19} Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995, s11(1)(a).
\textsuperscript{20} Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003, s22.
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Women’s Support Project

Amendment 8

The Women’s Support Project takes the view that in a Scotland that strives towards equality and human rights, it is not acceptable to condone or ignore the exploitation of women (and men) in prostitution. Condoning or accepting prostitution undermines work on gender equality and on violence against women. What sense could we make of work against rape, sexual harassment at work, stalking and underage sex if men can simply buy these activities through prostitution?

We therefore support Amendment 8 (lodged by Trish Godman), which proposes changes to the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 to create three new offences – engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, advertising paid-for sexual activities, and facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity. We believe that this legislation will empower the authorities to effectively challenge those who profit from prostitution, i.e. pimps, brothel owners and traffickers. Equally importantly it will send out a strong message that exploitation will not be tolerated, and in the longer term this will change attitudes towards ‘paid-for sexual activity’ and so reduce the demand from men to buy sex in prostitution.

We do not support amendment 8 (8A-8D, lodged by Margo Macdonald), which proposes the addition of two further offences – causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity and profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities. Nor do we support amendment 461 (lodged by Nigel Don) which creates an offence of paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc. Our view is that prostitution is inherently harmful, irrespective of whether the person is forced and this is what must be addressed – not whether it causes “alarm” to a third party. In addition we believe that the burden of proving ‘force’ or coercion would make such legislation unworkable.

Background

The Scottish Government includes prostitution and other forms of sexual exploitation in the spectrum of male violence against women (see for example ‘Safer Lives: Changed Lives. A shared approach to tackling violence against women in Scotland’)

Women become involved in prostitution for a variety of reasons such as homelessness, child sexual abuse, mental ill health, trauma, previous sexual violence, drug and alcohol misuse, money pressures and poverty. These factors, which serve to lead or force women into prostitution, should not be mistaken for the cause of prostitution itself, which is the demand from men to buy sex. If men were not prepared to buy sex, then prostitution would not work as survival behaviour.

Once the factors behind women's involvement in prostitution are understood it makes no sense to label prostitution as work or legitimate employment – to do so would legitimise exploitation. Neither, if we accept prostitution as exploitation, is it fair to criminalise those who are abused and exploited – in what other area of 'violence against women' would we criminalise the victims?

We are aware of individuals and organisation who defend a woman's 'right to choose prostitute', but in our experience such women represent a very small minority and are not representative of women involved in prostitution, either in Scotland or globally. We do not view prostitution as a choice for women, irrespective of age, and believe that it is contradictory to condemn child prostitution whilst condoning or ignoring adult prostitution. Neither do we recognise the false distinctions between forced and so-called 'free' prostitution.

It is estimated that approximately 1 in 10 men in the UK has bought sex – in other words approximately 9 out of 10 men have not bought sex. Why should vulnerable women (and men) be abused in prostitution in order to satisfy this minority interest?

Demand and Supply

Prostitution is essentially a market, driven by the demand from men to buy sex in prostitution. As Professor Donna Hughes has written:

"Prostitution is not natural or inevitable; it is abuse and exploitation of women and girls that results from structural inequality between women and men on a world scale.

The global sexual exploitation of women and girls is a supply and demand market. Men create the demand and women are the supply. Cities and countries where men’s demand for women in prostitution is legalized or tolerated are the receiving sites, while countries and areas where traffickers easily recruit women are the sending regions. http://www.uri.edu/artsci/wms/hughes/demand.htm

The negative impact of prostitution

There is much evidence to show that prostitution is harmful to women directly involved, women in general, to men who buy women in prostitution to families and to communities:
The negative impact of prostitution on men is often overlooked. Our Scottish research study found that 25% of men who had bought sex in prostitution expressed “significant regret or shame” about having done so. Challenging Demand 2008.

“I felt guilty. I had used her. I classed it as bad as rape”

This indicates that buying sex can have a significant negative impact on men’s sense of self worth and self-esteem in the longer term.

The research noted that 41% of the men interviewed had been with a friend or groups of friends on the first occasion when they bought sex, and that in some instances this encouraged the man to buy sex, whilst in others it led to men being coerced or pressurized.

“There was an atmosphere of all the lads egging each other on. One in particular was a virgin and seemed like he didn’t want to do it but all the guys pushed him into it and he did it.”

“There was pressure to go along with the guys. It was a common experience for young guys, for their 16th or 18th birthday.”

“I’ve always wished I hadn’t and just pretended to my friends that I’d done it.”

The research also noted links between sports events, including football, and abuse of women in prostitution.

One punter mentioned that he had taken Viagra before visiting a brothel, because “I wanted to do (my football team) proud.” Another said, “It was a celebration – our team won – and we thought let’s go and get laid.”

Popular culture, including music, film and ‘lad’s mags’ normalises sexual exploitation and sends out the message that it is ‘harmless fun’. We do not wish to see young men fall for this message, only to regret it later in life.

“It’s sleazy, you feel bad afterwards, maybe not that night. It’s just using someone and messing with their feelings. I wouldn’t advise it.”

“It’s nothing other than a release, an expensive one. It’s a bit degrading on both accounts. It’s an empty experience.”

There is ample evidence to highlight the negative impact of prostitution on women, families and communities. Prostitution is harmful in and of itself, i.e. the constantly repeated experience of submitting to unwanted sex is very damaging to women’s mental health, self-esteem and sexuality.
• Having to endure unwanted sex leads to the need to dissociate – often using drugs and/or alcohol. Whatever the reason for women entering prostitution, her drug and alcohol use is likely to hugely increase.
• Many women involved in street prostitution do not have care of their children (usually as a consequence of drug and alcohol misuse). This has a strong impact on the women themselves and is a common issue they need support on through services. It also has an impact on the children, the extended family, for example grandparents bringing up grandchildren, and on child protection services.
• Only 19% of women prostituted in flats, parlours and saunas are originally from the UK.
• 3 out of 4 women in prostitution become involved aged 21 or younger, and 1 in 2 aged 18 or younger.
• 87% of women in street-based prostitution use heroin.
• 75% of children abused through prostitution had been missing from school.
• As many as 85% women in prostitution report physical abuse in the family, with 45% reporting familial sexual abuse. ‘Paying the Price’
• In the UK as many as 60 women involved in prostitution have been murdered in the last 10 years. 80,000 women work in ‘on-street’ prostitution in the UK. The average age women become involved being just 12 yrs old. ‘Paying the Price’

Options for responding:

Harm Reduction. Work with women currently involved in prostitution needs to include harm reduction as a necessary response for the short term - but we also should be working to end prostitution forever. Harm reduction must be coupled with interventions to support women leave prostitution, which can often take many years. These interventions need to offer safe accommodation, drug treatment, robust counseling and support services, opportunities for women to develop their confidence and self esteem, learn new skills and training for future employment.

Decriminalisation. It is important that any move to decriminalise prostitution comes from the principle that prostitution is harmful and therefore must be ended. All forms of prostitution should be included, especially street prostitution as this is where many of the most vulnerable women are exploited.

In order to be effective, the decriminalisation of prostituted women must be preceded or accompanied by: criminalisation of third parties profiting from prostitution; criminalisation of buyers of sexual services; adequate resources to help women get out of prostitution; public education work to reduce the demand from men to buy sex.
We urge the Scottish Parliament to support Amendment 8 and by doing so move towards a fairer Scotland for all.

Jan Macleod
Senior Development Officer
Women’s Support Project
15 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland

I refer to your correspondence dated 4 March 2010 in connection with the above subject, which has been considered by members of the ACPOS Crime and Criminal Justice Business Areas, and can now offer the following by way of comment.

New offences Relating to Stalking

The existing dominant strategies in tackling Domestic Abuse are victim-centred. While this remains an essential factor, effective impact on Domestic Abuse, and particularly stalking behaviour, cannot be borne from such isolation. Boundaries must be expanded upon to allow for the efficient targeting of its perpetrators.

The amendments proposed by both Rhoda Grant MSP and the Cabinet Secretary for Justice, Mr Kenny MacAskill MSP are entirely relevant and both should be accepted with consideration given to the comments provided below.

- Amendment 402, Section 2(c)(ii) – “apprehension or fear for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person”.

This section requires clarification as it remains unclear if ‘apprehension’ is a subject in its own right or whether it is an alternative choice to ‘fear’ for B’s own safety. For the purposes of clarity, it is suggested that this subsection be extended to include 2(c)(iii) as detailed below.

(2)(c) A’s course of conduct causes B to suffer –

(i) physical or psychological harm, or
(ii) fear for B’s own safety or for the safety of others, or
(iii) apprehension for B’s own safety or for the safety of others

Clarification is sought on the use of the term ‘psychological harm’ and the burden of proof required to substantiate the charge. Would it be sufficient for a victim to describe psychological harm or is the degree of harm required to prove the charge such that it would require professional evidence to prove it?

- Amendment 402, Section 4

For the purpose of this section it is suggested that additional wording reflect that which is already enacted in England and Wales under the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 and the following is offered as a suggestion;
(4)(a) the person whose course of conduct is in question ought to know that it would be likely to cause such harm or arouse such apprehension or fear of another if a reasonable person in possession of the same information would think the course of conduct would be likely to cause such harm or arouse such apprehension or fear of another.

- Amendment 402, Section 7

  It is suggested that the powers of arrest for police officers be clearly defined as 'Unconditional'.

- Amendment 378 – Threatening, alarming, or distressing behaviour, Section 6

  It is suggested that the powers of arrest for police officers be clearly defined as 'Unconditional'.

Sentencing for Knife Crime

The Chair of the Criminal Justice Business Area (CJBA), Chief Constable David Strang of Lothian and Borders Police, has recently made public comment on this matter, in that a mandatory minimum sentence does not represent an effective disposal.

ACPOS believes discretion in relation to sentencing should remain with sheriffs who would consider the full circumstances of each offence and determine an appropriate sentence based on this.

ACPOS is committed to making Scotland a safer place and to reducing re-offending. We believe that this will not be achieved by sending people to prison unnecessarily.

In order to achieve a long term solution to crime the root causes should be addressed. Sentencing should be community based to address offenders’ behaviour and encourage them to make reparations to that community.

Offence of Engaging in Paid-For Sexual Activity and Related New Offences

ACPOS offers the following comments for consideration:

- Amendment 370 - Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution.

  ACPOS believes a period of national research into prostitution, its causal factors, impact and successful intervention, diversion and support strategies would be beneficial to this issue.

  Notwithstanding, given the lucrative financial opportunities for those involved in sexual exploitation and human trafficking for sexual purposes, the investigation, disruption and dismantling of prostitution-related organised crime groups operating in Scotland is a key part of our strategic aim for prostitution. ACPOS agrees that, at present, the penalties for brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution are wholly disproportionate and do not act as a deterrent for those profiting from such sexual exploitation. ACPOS, therefore, supports the proposed amendment.

- Amendment 8 (Section 11A) - ‘engaging in a paid-for sexual activity’.

ACPOS has significant concerns as to how the proposed offence would be put into practice. It would appear that the police would have to secure a sufficiency of evidence to prove the two main component parts, that:

1. Sexual activity had taken place, and
2. Payment was made for the sexual activity

It is presumed that the type of activity proposed is those services provided by prostitutes. Given the vast majority of ‘paid-for’ sexual activities take place ‘off street’ and, in any case out with the public’s view, ACPOS has concerns as to how sufficient evidence of such activities could be secured when balanced against the issues of proportionality and necessity.

As a consequence of there being no definition for the term ‘paid-for’ (and if it is assumed it will be interpreted around a monetary payment), there may be difficulty in evidencing the fact a ‘suspect’ had been in possession of cash and a transaction had occurred, especially if the transaction was carried out in a private place. In addition, given any suspected payment would be seized for evidential purposes, it is suggested that there may be a reluctance on the part of the ‘witness’ to cooperate with the enquiry, given the probability of a financial disadvantage.

ACPOS are of the opinion that officers may have difficulty obtaining sufficient evidence to report to the Procurator Fiscal, which in turn means there may be too few convictions for the proposed new offence to deter others. The Home Office publication ‘Tackling the Demand for Prostitution: A Review’ highlighted research indicating that, while risk of arrest may be a deterrent, the perceived risk of arrest is low, meaning any deterrent effect is limited. The Review quoted Rapid Evidence Assessment notes that ‘when the risk of discovery is so low, even in the most visible sector of the market, the consequences of paying for sex are sufficiently remote as to be exciting, yet not sufficiently high as to discourage’.

The ACPOS position is that further research in relation to outcomes and further consideration as to the practical application of such an offence is required and, as such, does not support the proposed amendment at this time.
- Amendment 8 (Section 11B) - advertising paid-for sexual activities.

Prostitution is, in many of its forms, a ‘market crime’ and follows the principles of supply and demand. ACPOS is of the opinion that strategies which address only one aspect of the ‘market’ will not deliver sustainable solutions and further consideration as to how buyers access the market, including the advertisement of paid-for sexual activities, would be worthwhile.

While agreeing with the principle, ACPOS believes the suggested amendment is not suitable in its present format and further research in relation to outcomes and the practical application would be of benefit.

The Republic of Ireland experience may provide an insight into the application of such an offence; legislation against third-party profiteering from the sex industry was introduced there in 1994. The Irish legislation creates an offence for any person to publish or cause to be published or distribute or cause distribution of an advertisement which advertises a brothel or the services of a prostitute in circumstances or manner which gives rise to the reasonable inference that the premises is a brothel or that the service is one of prostitution. The legislation includes those advertising prostitution services in other ways, for example displaying notices or posters, circulating leaflets or cards (such as those in telephone boxes) or on radio, television, computer, telephone, fax or photography. ACPOS can see value in considering the above legislation and its impact prior to considering the implementation of similar provisions.

ACPOS supports the need to legislate to control the advertisement of sexual activities, but has some reservations (outlined above) regarding the proposed amendment.

- Amendment 8 (Section 11C) - facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity.

ACPOS has concerns as to how the proposed offence would be put into practice. It would appear that the police would have to secure a sufficiency of evidence to prove that:

1. Sexual activity had taken place; and
2. Payment was made for the sexual activity; and
3. The sexual activity was knowingly facilitated

The concerns are based around those outlined in respect of Section 11A

The ACPOS position is that further research in relation to outcomes, and further consideration as to the practical application of such an offence, is required and, as such, does not support the proposed amendment at this time.
• Amendment 8A (Section 11AA) - causing alarm etc by engaging in paid-for sexual activity.

As outlined above, ACPOS is of the view that a multi agency approach to prostitution is required, with a policing approach that balances the 3 elements of individuals, communities and the investigation and prosecution of those who exploit and abuse. ACPOS is fully aware of the impact such crimes can have on communities, which can be victimised as a consequence of this ‘market crime’.

While complaints from communities regarding ‘on street’ activities are routinely responded to using legislation contained within the Civic Government (Scotland) Act, 1982 or Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act, 2007, there is no specific legislation which covers the more prevalent ‘off street’ activities that cause alarm, endangerment or nuisance. That said, there exists generic legislation in Scots Law, which, it is suggested, would be competent.

The recent Appeal at the High Court of Justiciary (Harris v HMA 2009) ruled that conduct which occurs in private and without affecting the community does not constitute a breach of the peace. Notwithstanding, the court declined to provide definitive guidance as to what public element would be sufficient to transform private conduct into a breach of the peace, observing that disturbance or potential disturbance of even a small group of individuals in a private house might suffice, provided there was a realistic risk of it being discovered. As such, it is suggested a charge of breach of the peace, in circumstances where there is a community complaint, may still be competent.

In addition, the common law crime of public indecency, and provisions contained within the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act, 2004, could be competent.

It is important that new legislation does not, inadvertently, make it more difficult to prosecute cases and, given the very specific nature of the proposed offence and the need to prove each of the component parts, ACPOS is of the view that this could be an unintended outcome.

• Amendment 8B (Section 11AB) - profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities.

Section 4 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 is entitled ‘sexual coercion’ and outlines:

If a person (A)—
(a) without another person (B) consenting to participate in a sexual activity, and
(b) without any reasonable belief that B consents to participating in that activity, intentionally causes B to participate in that activity, then A commits an offence, to be known as the offence of sexual coercion.
It is suggested that coercion to participate in any sexual activity, whether paid for or not, would be prosecuted under this section and any person who was in any way an ‘accomplice’, whether aiding and abetting (more commonly referred to in Scotland as Art and Part Liability) would also be charged with Section 4, Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act, 2009.

ACPOS does not support separate offences for coercion for sexual activity and coercion for paid-for sexual activities.

I trust that the foregoing is of assistance to you.

Caroline Scott
Assistant Chief Constable
ACPOS General Secretary
15 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Fiona Mactaggart MP

The attached report was submitted by Fiona Mactaggart MP as evidence on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill Stage 2 amendments.
CLAUSE 13 (now Clause 14), POLICING AND CRIME BILL: WHY THIS IS NEEDED TO TACKLE EXPLOITATION

REPORT AND EVIDENCE

Contents

Introduction: Fiona Mactaggart MP 2

Clause 14 (previously Clause 13), Policing and Crime Bill 4

Prostitution, Violence against Women and Human Rights: Rights of Women 5

Submission to the APPG on Prostitution and the Global Sex Trade: Fawcett Society 12

Survivor testimonies: EAVES Housing (which runs the Poppy Project supporting women who have been trafficked into prostitution and has dealt with almost 1400 women) 14

Voices from the streets: CARE (Christian Action Research Education) 18

Prostitution in New Zealand: CARE 20

Our position on prostitution: OBJECT 23

Clause 14, Policing and Crime Bill: National Association of People Abused in Childhood 27

Views: Salvation Army 29
Introduction by Fiona Mactaggart MP
Chair, All-Party Group on Prostitution and the Global Sex Trade

The All-Party Group on Prostitution and the Global Sex Trade has existed for a year. It was formed with the purpose:

“to raise awareness of the impact of the sale of sexual services on those involved and to develop proposals for government action to tackle individuals who create demand for sexual services as well as those who control prostitutes; to protect prostituted women by helping them to exit prostitution and to prevent girls from entering prostitution.”

The current opportunity for change in the law is Clause 14 (previously Clause 13) of the Policing and Crime Bill, which is passing through the House of Lords at present. It would insert a new section 53A into the Sexual Offences Act 2003, and would make it a strict liability offence to pay, or attempt to pay, for the sexual services of a woman (or child or man) who has been subjected to force, threats or any other form of coercion, or deception.

It seeks to ensure there are consequences for the man who chooses to buy sex, instead of for a seller who has no choice.

The clause has widespread support. The All-Party Group launched a statement signed by 54 organisations on 12 October 2009, calling for this clause to be passed as the most effective way of protecting women in prostitution from violence.

Tackling demand for prostitution

Until now attempts to deal with the sex trade in the UK have not focused strongly enough on preventing its growth. Most women who are prostituted are doing it because they are under the control of someone who is making a profit from them, they may be trafficked or groomed into prostitution as children, they may be dependent on drugs and need money for that, they have little choice.

Residents in areas where prostitutes work on the streets also have little choice, if they see prostitutes having sex in the alleys behind their homes or find condoms and drug paraphernalia in the street as they are walking children to school.

But the buyers who want to pay for sex do have a choice. If this clause is passed, it would mean that they might choose not to pay a prostitute unless they are 100% sure she is willing. If not, they risk getting a criminal record.

One intention of the clause is to encourage a change in the behaviour of men purchasing sex. It is not necessary to have large numbers of prosecutions. When car seat belts were made mandatory in the 1960s, behaviour swiftly changed. There were few prosecutions and drivers got in to the habit of wearing seat belts. It made them and all others using the roads safer.

Strict liability
It is relatively easy to prosecute a strict liability offence. The All-Party Group on Prostitution and the Global Sex Trade met Chief Constable Tim Brain, then ACPO lead on prostitution. He agreed that the new offence could work well if prosecutions could be targeted. As it is a strict liability offence, evidence would just need to show that a woman has suffered coercion or exploitation, and a man has paid or intends to pay to have sex with her, an offence is committed.

The proposed offence does not make paying for sex illegal. It would make paying for sex with a woman who has been coerced into prostitution illegal. It does not stop prostitution nor attempt to stop women deciding to do this freely. It could contribute towards making all prostitutes safer, if their customers become a bit more thoughtful.

Experience in other countries

Sweden made buying sex illegal ten years ago and the numbers of prostitutes and the numbers of trafficked women there have gone down. Sweden is no longer seen as an attractive destination by traffickers. The European countries which have legalised the sex industry have the highest numbers of trafficked women, with estimates of 50% of prostitutes in the Netherlands being trafficked and 90% in Germany.

The way forwards

Tackling demand is a way to make women safer and to reduce trafficking. But not everyone agrees. So I asked other organisations working with prostitutes, working for women’s rights and working to support women in leaving prostitution to contribute to this report, to explain their views. It was quickly produced to make sure that Parliamentarians have the information before Clause 14 (previously 13) is again debated. This report is the result.

The APPG hopes that this report will help to raise the vital issues covered in this clause and that Members of the House of Lords will support the clause when the Policing and Crime Bill returns to the House for debate at Report stage, on 3 November 2009.

Prostitutes are more likely than other women to be killed and attacked and to be dependent on illegal drugs. It has been found that women in prostitution have a mortality rate 12 times higher than the national average. This clause is a crucial step towards the protection of women.

Fiona Mactaggart
Chair, APPG on Prostitution and the Global Sex Trade
October 2009

---

1 Kajsa Wahlberg, national rapporteur on trafficking in human beings, 2004 report
Clause 14 (previously 13), Policing and Crime Bill 2009

The clause states:

14 Paying for the sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc: England and Wales

After section 53 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c. 42) insert –

53A Paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

(1) A person (A) commits an offence if –
(a) A makes or promises payment for the sexual services of a prostitute (B),
(b) a third person (C) has engaged in exploitative conduct of a kind likely to induce or encourage B to provide the sexual services for which A has made or promised payment, and
(c) C engaged in that conduct for or in the expectation of gain for C or another person (apart from A or B).

(2) The following are irrelevant –
(a) where in the world the sexual services are to be provided and whether those services are provided,
(b) whether A is, or ought to be, aware that C has engaged in exploitative conduct

(2A) C engages in exploitative conduct if
(a) C uses force, threats (whether or not relating to violence) or any other form of coercion, or
(b) C practises any form of deception.

(3) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.
Prostitution, Violence Against Women and Human Rights: Clause 14 (previously Clause 13) of the Policing and Crime Bill

Evidence for the All-Party Group on Prostitution and the Global Sex Trade

Introduction

Rights of Women\(^4\) has been providing women with free, specialist legal advice for over 30 years. Our areas of expertise include all forms of violence against women (including domestic and sexual violence), family, immigration and asylum law and we frequently run conferences and training on these issues.

Rights of Women operates the UK’s only legal advice line for survivors of sexual violence. On this line we advise hundreds of women every year who have experienced rape and other forms of sexual violence, including women involved in prostitution and women who have been trafficked into the UK for the purposes of sexual exploitation. Working with the Home Office, we have also produced From Report to Court: A Handbook for Adult Survivors of Sexual Violence\(^5\), ten thousand copies of which have been distributed across England and Wales over the past year to survivors, their supporters, police officers and other professionals in the criminal justice system.

Rights of Women’s position on Clause 14 is directly informed by the experiences of the women we support and from our commitment to secure equality, justice and respect for all women. We support the clause because we believe that it offers a unique opportunity to discourage the demand to sexually exploit through prostitution vulnerable women, men and children as required under international human rights law.

Prostitution Is a Form of Violence Against Women

Prostitution involves the commodification and sale of sexual services for financial or other gain. In the UK it is estimated that 80,000\(^6\) people are involved in prostitution with the prostitution market calculated to be worth up to £1 bn. Home Office research in 2003 into organised crime markets estimates that up to 4,000 women are trafficked in the UK

\(^4\) Rights of Women advises, educates and empowers women by:
- Providing women with free, confidential legal advice by specialist women solicitors and barristers.
- Enabling women to understand and benefit from their legal rights through accessible and timely publications and training.
- Campaigning to ensure that women’s voices are heard and law and policy meets all women’s needs.

\(^5\) This publication, along with a range of information sheets, can be downloaded free of charge from our website at www.rightsofwomen.org.uk.

for the purposes of sexual exploitation. Given the growth in people trafficking since 2003, this figure is now believed to be a “significant underestimate”.7

There is no legal definition of what conduct or forms of harm constitute violence against women within the law of England and Wales. However, the UN Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women8 defines violence against women in Article 1 as:

> “any act of gender-based violence that results in, or is likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or in private life”.

Article 2 of the Declaration further states that violence against women encompasses, but is not limited to:

> “…Physical, sexual and psychological violence occurring within the general community, including rape, sexual abuse, sexual harassment and intimidation at work, in educational institutions and elsewhere, trafficking in women and forced prostitution…”

It is upon this definition that the Government’s definition of violence against women is based9.

The use of the term “forced prostitution” in Article 2 of the Declaration has been used by some to argue that it is possible to differentiate between women in prostitution who have ‘chosen’ this form of ‘work’ and those who are forced into prostitution by traffickers or organised crime networks. However, the definition is focussed on the effects of the conduct or behaviour in question on the woman concerned. Therefore, any conduct that results in “physical, sexual or psychological harm” is a form of violence against women.

Prostitution (often referred to euphemistically as ‘sex-work’) is normalised by those who seek to legalise the sex industry as a form of entertainment like any other, with sexual services being exchanged for payment with both the prostituted woman10 and the purchaser able to make free and meaningful choices. Within this context, sexual services are viewed as simply another commodity that can be bought and sold without harm to either of the parties involved and for the mutual benefit of both.

The evidence from prostituted women themselves tells another story. Research carried out on the harm caused by prostitution in nine countries found that:

- 71% of women interviewed had been physically assaulted;
- 63% had been raped;
- 68% met the criteria for post-traumatic stress disorder (this figure is in the same range as that for soldiers seeking treatment following active service and for survivors of torture); and,
- 89% wanted to leave prostitution.11

---

8 A/RES/48/104 – 1993
9 See www.homeoffice.gov.uk/documents/cons-2009-vaw for further information. [Link no longer operates]
10 I am using the term “prostituted woman” to indicate that what is actually being done is the prostitution of one person (usually a woman) by another person (usually a man) for commercial reasons.
Roger Matthews’ comprehensive analysis of research on routes into prostitution identified that:

- Certain vulnerable groups of girls and women were more likely to become involved in prostitution; these were those who had suffered physical or sexual violence or neglect.
- This group were further marginalised by experiences which included running away, being in local authority care, being involved in crime, drug addicted and being excluded from education.
- These girls and women were then ‘facilitated’ into prostitution as a result of grooming by pimps or other procurers.\(^{12}\)

The world average age for entry into prostitution is 13 years old, with as many as 75% of those in Britain prostituted, entering before their 18\(^{th}\) birthday. The average age of first involvement in prostitution in the UK is at just 15 years old.\(^{13}\)

The evidence is clear that for the vast majority of prostituted women, the experience is one that involves physical, mental and sexual violence which traumatises and de-humanises, causing significant and long-lasting physical and emotional harm. It is perhaps not surprising therefore that Sigma Huda, the former UN Special Rapporteur on Trafficking concluded that:

“Prostitution as it is actually practised in the world does satisfy the elements of trafficking. It is rare that one finds a case in which the path to prostitution and/or a person’s experience does not involve, at the very least an abuse of power and/or an abuse of vulnerability. Power and vulnerability in this context must be understood to include power disparities based on gender, race, ethnicity and poverty.”\(^{14}\)

The exploitation of women through prostitution is, therefore, a form of violence against women as defined in the UN Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women.

Once prostitution is understood to be a form of violence against women the UK’s obligations under international human rights law\(^ {15}\) are engaged. It is therefore important to understand what the key obligations on the UK government are.

\(^{13}\) Paying the Price, page 16, the report can be downloaded from http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/documents/paying_the_price.pdf?view=Binary. [Link no longer operates]

\(^{15}\) Relevant international law includes, but is not limited to:
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948)
- UN Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others (1949)
- European Convention of Human Rights (1950) (the ECHR)
- UN Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women (1994)
- The European Union Council Framework Decision on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (the Framework Decision).
- Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings (the Trafficking Convention).
The UK is a signatory of the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination Against women (1979) (CEDAW). Article 5 CEDAW requires States, including the UK, to challenge social attitudes that tolerate inequality and discrimination and:

“...to modify the social and cultural patterns of men and women, with a view to achieving the elimination of prejudices and customary and other practices which are based on the idea of the inferiority or superiority of either of the sexes or on stereotyped roles for men and women”.

Article 6 goes on to require States to take “all appropriate legislative and other measures” to deal with trafficking and the “exploitation of the prostitution of women”.

General Recommendations are issued by the Committee that monitors compliance with CEDAW. General Recommendation 12 (1989) sets out the positive obligations on States to eliminate gender-based violence while General Recommendation 19 (1992) goes further in describing the positive obligations on States to eliminate gender-based violence (including sexual violence, forced prostitution and trafficking), making clear that States may be responsible for private acts if they fail to act with due diligence to prevent the violation of rights or to investigate and punish acts of violence.

The Committee that monitors States’ compliance with CEDAW has found that “gender-based violence is a form of discrimination that seriously inhibits women’s ability to enjoy rights and freedoms on a basis of equality with men”. In a recent case in the European Court of Human Rights on domestic violence, the Court concluded that a State’s failure to protect women against violence was discrimination because it breached their right to equal protection of the law.

The Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others (1949) recognises that both prostitution and trafficking are “incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person”. The Convention requires States to:

- Criminalise those who groom or coerce anyone into prostitution or exploit the prostitution of others (regardless of the purported consent of the prostituted person).
- Criminalise those who are involved in brothel keeping.

The Convention is interesting because of its recognition that it is not possible to separate trafficking from prostitution and that in order to discourage the former, States need to take action against the latter.

Article 9.5 of the UN Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (2000) requires States to “discourage the demand that fosters all forms of exploitation of persons, especially women and children, that leads to trafficking”. The Council of Europe Convention on Action Against Trafficking in Human Beings (2005) also requires States to analyse and respond to the factors that result in women being trafficked and suppress them, including the demand to sexually exploit women.

The 1995 UN Fourth Conference on Women’s Platform for Action also recognised sexual violence, trafficking and forced prostitution as forms of violence which require positive State action. Thus under strategic objective D.3, which is focused on eliminating trafficking in women and assisting victims of violence due to prostitution and trafficking, the Platform For Action calls on States to:

---

17 Opuz v Turkey [2009] (Application no. 33401/02) para 191
“Take appropriate measures to address the root factors, including external factors, that encourage trafficking in women and girls for prostitution and other forms of commercialized sex, forced marriages and forced labour in order to eliminate trafficking in women, including by strengthening existing legislation with a view to providing better protection of the rights of women and girls and to punishing the perpetrators, through both criminal and civil measures”.

The international human rights law outlined above sets out the myriad of positive obligations on the UK Government to discourage the demand to exploit individuals through prostitution and trafficking. Positive obligations require States to do more than simply exercise due diligence in the investigation of criminal activity. Rather, they require States to analyse and respond to the causes of prostitution, trafficking and violence against women and take concrete steps to discourage demand.

Clause 13 (now Clause 14)

Clause 14 will discourage demand by making it a criminal offence to pay for the sexual services of a woman (child or man) who has been subjected to force. Force in this context includes coercion by threats and other psychological means, including exploitation of vulnerability.

Clause 14: A person (A) commits an offence if—
(a) A makes or promises payment for the sexual services of a prostitute (B),
(b) a third person (C) has used force, deception or threats of a kind likely to induce or encourage B to provide the sexual services for which A has made or promised payment, and
(c) C acted for or in the expectation of gain for C or another person (apart from A or B).

A person convicted of this offence would have a criminal record and may be fined.

Strict liability and human rights

Strict liability offences are often used in the UK to secure the protection of particularly vulnerable people. For example, rape of a child under 13 is a strict liability offence under section 5 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003. This means that a person who has sexual intercourse with a child who is under 13 commits the offence whether or not:
- he knew the child’s age; or,
- the child concerned purported to consent to the sexual activity.

Section 5 of the Sexual Offences Act was examined for its compatibility with the right to a fair trial by the House of Lords in case of R v G\textsuperscript{18} which concerned consensual sexual intercourse between a boy of 15 and a girl of 12. The House of Lords examined case law from the European Court of Human Rights and found that strict liability offences were compatible with the right to a fair trial.

Part of Clause 14 is strict liability as the purchaser of sexual services will commit an offence whether or not he knows that the person he is buying has been subjected to force. However, the burden of proof is still on the Prosecution, who have to show that the purchaser intended to pay, or make a promise of payment, for sexual services. Both the House of Lords and the European Court of Human Rights have made it clear that strict liability offences like this are compatible with defendant’s rights under Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights to a fair trial.\(^{19}\)

\textsuperscript{18} R v G [2008] UKHL 37

Women involved in prostitution who are exploited by a third person (whether a pimp, trafficker or boyfriend) are a vulnerable group in need of particular protection. Unlike the person who chooses to purchase sex, the exploitative conduct that the woman has experienced (defined in Clause 14 to include threats of violence, coercion or deception) results in her not having a choice about whether or not to provide sexual services. As Baroness Hale said in relation to the strict liability sexual offence analysed in R v G: “The perpetrator has to intend to penetrate. Every male has a choice about where he puts his penis.”\(^{20}\)

The strict liability element of Clause 14 is also necessary for the offence to achieve the broader social aim of causing those who purchase sex to consider the position of those that they purchase and to challenge the pervasive, but false, idea that prostitution is always a matter of choice for the woman concerned. It is this wider social function that would enable the UK to meet its obligation to modify attitudes that cause inequality and discourage demand and which has proved so effective in the countries that have criminalised the purchase of sexual services.\(^{21}\) It is also this element of the offence that makes the offence effective from a law enforcement perspective. The Crown Prosecution Service has advised that a strict liability element in an offence aimed at discouraging demand is the “most effective” way of shifting responsibility on to those that purchase sexual services.\(^{22}\)

These views are endorsed by the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission, who conclude in their analysis of Clause 13 (now Clause 14) that:

> “Arguments against criminalising any aspect of the purchase of sexual services rely on the assumption that the decisions to practice prostitution and how to practice it are usually made in an environment of equality and autonomy. This assumption is not borne out by the evidence. In fact, the entry into prostitution, and the experience of prostitution, whether legal or not, is characterised by high levels of coercion and abuse, and high levels of continuing trauma, from the earliest experience of recruitment at an age when consent is irrelevant…

> Given that the commercial sex trade is usually characterised by vulnerability to abuse, coercion, exploitation and control for gain, the Commission commends the provision for ‘strict liability’ in the provision.”\(^{23}\)

Evidential issues

The fact that a particular offence may be challenging to investigate or prosecute is not normally used as an argument for not criminalising the behaviour or harm concerned.

---

\(^{19}\) See R v G [2008] UKHL 3 and Salabiaku v France (1981) 26 DR 171
\(^{20}\) R v G [2008] UKHL 37 paras 46.
\(^{21}\) This approach has been successfully replicated in counties as diverse as Norway, Iceland, South Africa and South Korea.
\(^{23}\) Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission response to the Policing and Crime Bill, paragraphs 28 and 31. The full response can be read here:
[Link no longer operates]
However, there are those who appear to be apprehensive about the police’s ability to investigate and prosecute an offence of this nature.

It is clear that investigating sexual offences poses unique challenges, as the current conviction rate for rape indicates. Investigations and prosecutions that are supported by the person involved in prostitution should present fewer difficulties than those where the prostituted individual does not support the prosecution. However, this is the case with all sexual offences and is not a problem specific to the proposed new offence. It is important to note in this regard that:
- those giving evidence in relation to the proposed new offence would benefit from special measures under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999\(^{24}\) and would be given anonymity under Sexual Offences (Amendment) Act 1992; and,
- there have been a number of successful prosecutions for related offences, including for example, controlling prostitution for gain\(^{25}\).

There are debates to be had on the ability of legislation and the legal process to address social problems. However, it is clear that in recent years the law has successfully been used to offer protection to diverse groups of particularly vulnerable people. This shift has seen legislation on issues as challenging and complex as domestic violence, female genital mutilation and forced marriage. It is difficult to understand why an offence that criminalises those who purchase sexual services from someone who has been subjected to force is so qualitatively different from these issues as to prevent any legislative action being taken.

Conclusion

Enshrined within the UK’s current legislation is men’s right to buy vulnerable and exploited women, children and men\(^{26}\). This is contrary to the approach required by international law which recognises that prostitution and trafficking cannot meaningfully be separated from each other and requires States to discourage the demand that causes sexual exploitation.

Rights of Women supports Clause 14 because we believe that it will reframe the debate on prostitution, focussing attention on those who purchase sexual services and deterring them from doing so. A man who is not deterred, who buys sex from a woman who has been forced to sell it by a trafficker or her violent pimp will, quite rightly, risk prosecution. For the first time, the word that is so often used in relation to prostitution, “choice”, will come to mean something to all those women, children and men who are prostituted, as those who choose to purchase what they have not chosen to sell risk being held accountable for the devastating consequences of their actions.

Catherine Briddick
Senior Legal Officer at Rights of Women

\(^{24}\) Special measures are practical measures designed to make the process of giving evidence less intimidating for vulnerable witnesses. Special measures are available under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 and include: screens, a live link, exclusion from the court of the public and video recorded examination-in-chief.

\(^{25}\) See for example, the Court of Appeal case of R v Massey [2007] EWCA Crim 2664 which involved the conviction of a man who controlled the activities of a woman exploited in prostitution contrary to section 53(1) of the Sexual Offences Act 2003. The woman concerned entered into a relationship with an older man whilst she was under 18 and in the care of her Local Authority. He later exploited her through prostitution for his own financial gain.

Fawcett Society submission to the All-Party Parliamentary Group on Prostitution and the Global Sex Trade

15th September 2009

About the Fawcett Society
The Fawcett Society is the UK’s leading campaign for gender equality. When individual women are able to realise their potential, the benefits will be felt across society. The Fawcett Society makes a difference by campaigning for legislative change, influencing practice, and empowering women and men to effect change at a grassroots level. The Fawcett Society campaigns for:

- Economic rights: women’s right to fair pay and fair treatment in the workplace
- Political rights: women’s right to a powerful voice in decision making
- Social rights: women and men to break free from stereotypes
- Bodily rights: women’s freedom from violence, harassment and objectification

Fawcett’s work on the sex industry: In 2008 the Fawcett Society launched a campaign in partnership with OBJECT to reform the licencing of lap dancing clubs in recognition that lap dancing is a form of commercial sexual exploitation. In 2009 Fawcett published research into the impact of the sex industry on the contemporary workplace.

Summary
The Fawcett Society supports Clause 13 of the Policing and Crime Bill as an important and necessary means of tackling commercial sexual exploitation in the UK. The sexual commodification of women’s bodies through the sex industry is incompatible with a society in which women and men live and are treated as equal citizens. Fawcett’s research reveals that the sex industry not only has a damaging impact on the women involved, but also wider societal relations between women and men – particularly in the workplace. In order to uphold its legal responsibilities to tackle commercial sexual exploitation and promote gender equality, the UK Government should criminalise the act of paying or attempting to pay for sexual services from a person who has been subject to force – as stipulated in Clause 13 of the Policing and Crime Bill.

The sex industry in the UK
During the 1990s and 2000s there was an unprecedented expansion and normalisation of the sex industry in the UK. While the first lap dancing club in the UK opened in 1995, there are now over 300 clubs, and during the 1990s the number of men paying for sex acts in the UK doubled. In London alone there are now at least 921 brothels spread across every borough, mostly in residential settings. All the various elements of the sex industry – such as lap dancing, pornography and prostitution - are intimately linked, and they all involve someone (usually a man) paying another individual (usually a woman) to sexually stimulate him.

The impact of the sex industry on gender equality at work
In 2009 the Fawcett Society conducted research into what impact the sex industry is having on the contemporary workplace. It revealed that women’s full participation at work is being undermined by the infiltration of the workplace by the sex industry, manifested in particular in a growing trend of using lap dancing clubs and displaying pornography in a work context. Fawcett also obtained anecdotal evidence during the course of the research of prostitution being used in a corporate setting:

“At after-work drinks very senior managers asked around publically if any of us knew any good brothels because they had Russian dignitaries visiting and they just wanted a couple of nice fit mature women to give them a blow job before going out to dinner. This kind of thing was just accepted.”

"I worked at an inter-dealing brokerage firm where my male colleagues regularly entertained their trader clients with drugs and prostitutes. My line manager in particular routinely organised sexual 'extra services' for his clients at lap dancing clubs, in return for the clients providing him with substantial volumes of business… he also criticised my business-winning skills on the basis that I was female, and therefore, as he put it, not able to take clients out to prostitutes…It was sickeningly demeaning to work in this environment, but I felt I had to put up with it, to prove that I could succeed.”

Fawcett’s research also revealed that the sex industry is increasingly targeting its marketing at the corporate sector. For example, 41% of lap dancing clubs directly target employers through their websites. This includes the promotion of corporate membership options and tailored corporate hospitality packages. 86% of lap dancing clubs in London also provide ‘discrete receipts’ which don’t feature the name of the lap dancing club. These enable employees who use the clubs in a work context to claim back expenses from their employers without it being evident the money was spent in a lap dancing club.

The expansion and normalization of the sex industry – including prostitution - poses a serious threat to gender equality in the workplace. The sex industry involves women being dehumanised and treated as sex objects and, as a result, its use in a work context creates a degrading and hostile environment for female employees - in violation of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975.

In recognition of the serious harms caused by prostitution, experienced both by women involved directly in the industry and those in wider society, the Fawcett Society strongly recommends the Government tackles demand for commercial sexual exploitation. Clause 13 of the Policing and Crime bill seeks to criminalise demand for sex acts with women who have been subject to force. We believe this is a crucial step towards ending commercial sexual exploitation and tackling gender inequality more broadly within the UK.

For further information about this submission please contact Kat Banyard, Campaigns Officer: kat.banyard@fawcettsociety.org.uk; 020 7253 2598

29 Personal testimony obtained by the Fawcett Society, 2008
30 Personal testimony obtained by the Fawcett Society from a solicitors practice, 2009
31 Ibid (Corporate Sexism)
SURVIVOR TESTIMONIES

Eaves runs the POPPY Project, which was set up in 2003 to support women who have been trafficked into prostitution. Since March 2003, the project has received more than 1300 referrals of women from over 80 countries spanning five continents. Nearly 30% of our referrals come from police, typically via brothel raids, where police have actively sought out trafficked women. This suggests that the women who come to us are only the tip of the iceberg.

Through our own work and the work of our partner organisations we also come into contact with British women in prostitution. Their experiences are in many ways very similar to those of the trafficked women we work with – as you would expect common characteristics include high levels of physical and sexual abuse experienced as children, compounded by poverty and lack of opportunity, all of which serve to make these women and girls vulnerable to traffickers and pimps. Once trafficked or drawn into prostitution another common factor is the high level of serious physical and sexual violence these women experience at the hands of pimps and punters.

It is very clear to us that prostitution constitutes Violence Against Women – the daily reality of violence, degradation and despair faced by our service users and the other women in prostitution we come into contact with in the course of our work.

The following survivors testimonies both from British women in prostitution and women trafficked into prostitution say it all.

JIERA, LITHUANIA

My name is Jiera and I come from Lithuania. I am 23 years old and last year I was trafficked to a city called York in the UK, where I was forced to be a prostitute.

Before that I lived in Lithuania with my parents. When I finished my business studies course in college I got a job, but I didn’t like it. I told my friends I was looking for a new job and after about three months a woman called Ona called me, and said she could get me well paid work abroad as a cleaner in a sports complex.

I met with Ona. She seemed very nice and she wrote a contract saying I had the job, and that I would be paid £500 per month. I signed the contract. She told me the company would pay for my flight to London and they would find me accommodation.

I already had a passport and I flew on my own to London. I was very excited. At London I was met by two men, who drove me in a car to Yorkshire. They were nice to me.

When we arrived, the men took me to a house and then sold me to another man. It was a brothel. I couldn’t believe what was happening to me. My new trafficker raped me and then made me work straight away. I had to sleep with at least 12 men per day, sometimes without a condom.
There were lots of other women in the house with me, but we weren’t allowed to talk to each other. I was lucky that my customers were never violent, but I had to work all night so I was very tired all the time. My trafficker wanted sex too, so he would rape me every night. He beat me too, and shouted at me all the time, and threatened my family. I was very frightened.

I couldn’t get out because all the doors were locked, and I did not think I would ever be able to escape, but after I had been there for four months, one of my customers called the police for me.

The police came and raided the brothel and took the man away, and told me about the POPPY Project. I am receiving help now, but I still have scars from the beatings. I have headaches and I am very sad about what happened to me.

OLENA, UKRAINE

I am 23 years old. I come from a very poor area of Ukraine. I was not happy there. I lived with my father, mother and brother and my child. I was not married and my father and my brother did not like that. They beat me and called me names for not being married but having a child.

I did not have a proper job and spent a lot of time looking after my child and my sister’s. After a while I could not bear to be there any more, so I went to Moldova with a friend of my sister who said he could help me get work there in a restaurant, and help me start a new life. But when I got to Moldova he sold me to some Albanians who took me to their house. They locked me in, raped me and made me watch pornography. They beat me regularly.

I was forced to work at that house as a prostitute for two months, and then I escaped. They found me and brought me back to the house, but they decided I was trouble and they sold me again, to more Albanian men.

These men got me a false passport and took me by plane to the UK, to a massage parlour in Sheffield. There were other women there, but none of them was British.

When I was in Sheffield I was forced to see many clients per day – as many as 15. I worked every day, even during my periods; they made me put a sponge inside me to stop the blood. I got a very bad infection doing this and was very ill.

I was expected to make up to £400 per day for the men. I was not allowed to keep any of it and the other women would tell the men if they did not think I was working hard enough.

They did not let me contact my family, but they had connections in Ukraine and they visited my mother and threatened her. They told her that if I returned home they would kill me. I was able to escape when I was sold again. The maid helped me to run away before the new gang arrived to fetch me. Altogether I had been kept as a prostitute for nearly two years.

Since I escaped I have had to have a big operation inside, as a result of my infection while working during my periods. I am not really sure what the operation was for, as I did not understand what the doctors said in the hospital. I have very bad headaches now, and I am scared to go out. But mainly I am angry. I am very angry that this happened to me and I can’t control myself. And I do not trust anybody any more.
KATE, UK
“I worked as an escort and later in a brothel - I have found it almost impossible to find any validation of my absolute belief (from first hand experience) that the sex industry is not empowering or liberating for women, and that the mainstreaming of pornography and women as objects does immense damage. Talk of 'choices' for women caught in the trap is meaningless: as a sex worker one is in the unenviable position of having to defend the indefensible - clients and the people making money from you simply won't entertain the truth. All of the women I worked alongside had drug or alcohol abuse problems and or a history of sexual abuse or mental health problems.

But I have found that people are unwilling or unable to listen when I have tried to open up about the truth behind the lies of the sex industry: I have been told 'it's not illegal' (pornography), 'men just do that' and that maybe I had a bad experience but the other women involved have chosen it - I need to 'get over it' and 'accept how things are', that I can't change things. I have found myself isolated and felt utterly hopeless with it. I am still trying to get over the emotional damage that working as a prostitute has done me”.

JO, UK
“As an ex-prostitute myself, and as someone who has worked with and also studied prostitution as part of my degree/MA studies, I've looked at prostitution, and the case for legalisation is not good. The vast majority of women start working as prostitutes before the age of eighteen (in fact, the average age is just fourteen...I was thirteen, and yes, I'm British, and yes, I worked in Coventry, in the late 1980s, and no, not one punter complained or refused due to my age).

My argument against legalisation is not a moral one, it is purely functional. You cannot ensure the safety of women in sex work by making it legal, because by creating rules around it you will automatically marginalise a lot of women who have to work outside of that framework. The only way to ensure the safety of women in prostitution is to ensure men treat them as equals, not just a doll to smack about and come inside. Because trust me, no matter how fancily the trade is dressed up, no matter how legalised and expensive, the violence (whether physical or verbal) and disrespect are always there. Men regard buying a prostitute in the same way as hiring a slave that they can do with as they please, despite any laws or verbal agreements. It is that dynamic of prostitution that is so dangerous, and this dynamic will not change unless women are seen as on an equal footing with men, and not just sex objects. Legalising prostitution only compounds the problem and legitimises regarding women as sex objects - 'oh, she was a whore, she was asking for it'. The illegality of prostitution is not the problem, and it's not the reason why so many prostitutes resort to drugs, self harm, and even suicide - it's the endless violence that is. And you WILL be called a whore, b*tch, sl*t etc and treated like dirt, even in a legal brothel. No amount of health checks and security guards will make the hurt of that, day in and day out, any easier to deal with. Why legitimise it in the first place?”
Recently Eaves together with OBJECT launched the Demand Change! campaign. This campaign calls on government to tackle the demand for prostitution. At the moment the buyer of sexual acts is that shadowy figure who goes about his business of purchasing sexual acts with relative impunity and anonymity. The Demand Change! campaign seeks to ensure that the buyers of sexual acts are held responsible for their actions.

At present the law in the UK effectively gives men the right to purchase women’s bodies for sexual acts. This is totally unacceptable in the 21st century. Clause 13 (now Clause 14) of the Policing and Crime Bill which is currently passing through the House of Lords is a positive first step in terms of tackling the demand for prostitution. Clause 13 (now Clause 14) seeks to shift criminal liability from people exploited through prostitution to those who purchase sexual acts, ensuring that buyers take responsibility for their exploitative actions. This initiative signifies an important step towards gender equality and social justice. We urge you to back Clause 14, which would have the positive effects of protecting vulnerable women exploited through prostitution, deterring men who pay for sexual acts from this exploitative behaviour, halting the growth of the sex industry, and improving public awareness and understanding of the harsh realities of prostitution.

For further information on the campaign please visit the Demand Change! website - http://www.demandchange.org.uk/

For further information on facts of prostitution please visit http://www.eaves4women.co.uk/Resources/Factsheets_And_Resources.php http://www.demandchange.org.uk/index.php/resources
Voices from the streets

As Parliament considers making significant changes to the law, it is important that it listens to the voices of those who have experienced exploitation through prostitution first hand, and also to the many projects across the UK which work with people in the sex industry.

Clause 13 (now Clause 14) aims to specifically protect those who are coerced, forced, deceived or threatened into prostitution. At present there is no element in UK law which prohibits an individual from entering a brothel and paying for sex with someone who is there under duress.

The effect of exploitation through prostitution can be devastating and leave the mark of trauma for many years afterwards. Sarah* was first sold for sex in Reading when she was a young child. Sarah comments “I support clause 13 totally as I was given money for sex at 6 years old. I then began selling my body at 12-14 years old, then spent the following 29 years selling my body, as I believed this was normal. I have for the past 14 years been dealing with the reality, and devastating effects that it has had on me and my family.”

The human rights of people such as Sarah, who are being exploited in this way, need to be better protected by the law.

International trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation is currently a high profit, low risk venture for those who trade in people. It has been reported that some drug trafficking gangs have switched to people trafficking as there is more money to be made and less risk of being caught32. Similarly, coercing British women into prostitution through deception or force is a relatively risk free way to generate substantial levels of income. At present there is insufficient deterrent to gangs, traffickers, pimps and those buying sex in an off street context. The number of British men buying sexual services has more than doubled in a recent ten year period33. There is a ready made market for pimps, gangs and traffickers to exploit and make high levels of profit.

32 In 2002 at a meeting in Bangkok the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) reported that one of the main factors the trade is rising is because traffickers feel there are fewer risks involved in trading humans compared with drugs.
The demand side of the payment of sex with people under force or coercion cannot be ignored. Citylight supports women involved in prostitution and female victims of sex exploitation and sex trafficking in Brighton.

A spokesperson from Citylight notes “There are many factors that contribute to a woman’s vulnerability and ultimately to her sexual exploitation. On a macro level, global conditions such as gender inequality, economic instability, poverty, racism, migration, restrictive immigration measures and the forces of globalisation, contribute significant push factors into the sex industry. On a micro level, economic deprivation, homelessness, substance misuse, and a history of childhood sexual abuse confound global conditions and act as secondary push factors. However, without a thriving market to receive these vulnerable women, no amount of push factors alone could facilitate a woman’s sexual exploitation. Like any other economic market, the sex industry operates on basis of supply and demand. Whilst demand in the UK continues to remain unhindered, the supply of vulnerable women will continue.”

Beyond the Streets is a UK Charity led by practitioners who have over 70 years combined experience in working with people who have been sexually exploited through prostitution. Its network of over 50 grassroots outreach projects seek to offer freedom and change to those involved in prostitution.

Beyond the Streets director, Mark Wakeling, states that Clause 13 [now Clause 14] is a vital step forward “It is important that the Government takes a human rights approach to the issue and implements legislation and initiatives which protect the most vulnerable.”

He adds “The clause must be part of a holistic approach, including moves which ensure that people in prostitution receive the help they need rather than fines and imprisonment. Resources need to be made available to help women exit the industry and rebuild their lives.”

“A reduction in the grooming, coercion and trafficking of so many people must be reached. Clause 13 [now Clause 14] is an important part of the solution.”

Rachel Davies
Human Trafficking Policy Officer
CARE
53 Romney St
London, SW1P 3RF
September 2009

Sarah’s name has been changed to protect her identity
Prostitution in New Zealand

In June 2003, the New Zealand Parliament passed the Prostitution Reform Act 2003 (PRA) which decriminalises soliciting, brothel keeping, procuring and living on the earnings of prostitution. New Zealand largely decriminalised prostitution, but the PRA still has some regulatory aspects. A report was published in 2008 by the Prostitution Law Review Committee assessing the efficacy of the PRA.

There are a range of issues that require addressing with regards to New Zealand’s experience in prostitution reform. The Committee Report asserts a perceived positive impact of the PRA on the welfare of individuals involved in prostitution. These assertions, however, can be seen to be lacking in evidence or have since been questioned by other sources.

Human Trafficking

The Committee states in the Report that ‘there is no link between the sex industry and human trafficking’. However, reports from the New Zealand media express a different conclusion. In a recent case this month, a New Zealand lawyer brought light two Ukrainian women who were trafficked to an Auckland brothel and prosecuted for passport fraud rather than assisted as victims of trafficking.

The research conducted by the Department of Public Health and General Practice for the Committee fails to explore this sufficiently. The interviews conducted were all with English speaking people involved in prostitution, non-English speakers were excluded. The reasons given for their exclusion were due to the sensitive nature of the topic (interpreters may have compromised confidentiality); lack of funds to employ interpreters; and, finally, ‘foreign workers are especially vulnerable and some may not be working legally’. It is precisely this group that is the most likely to have been trafficked. This exclusion makes it hard to take definitive statements on the lack of human trafficking in New Zealand seriously, especially in light of the emerging evidence cited above.

Decriminalising brothel keeping has depleted police powers to effectively investigate and prevent cases of slavery and abuse within the sex industry. The police force must now obtain a warrant in advance of entering a brothel where they suspect cases of trafficking or underage prostitution. This acts as a barrier to discovering and rescuing victims of abuse as brothel owners are given prior warning that the police will be visiting and can remove any evidence before their arrival. More worryingly, the vocal

34 Dr. Elaine Mossman, International Approaches to Decriminalising or Legalising Prostitution, October 2007, Chapter 3
37 The research was carried out at the University of Otago, Christchurch
38 Abel et al, 2009:45.
Numbers of people involved in prostitution

Prior to the PRA, Streetreach\(^3^9\), an Auckland based project, would come into contact with an average of 35 women on a busy night. Since the introduction of the PRA, a count of 35 women indicates a quiet night. They are much more likely to meet between 65 – 100 women and girls per night. The PRA review report acknowledges the increase of women in street prostitution in 2007\(^4^0\). Due to an increase in people in prostitution since the PRA came into force, the prices have gone down and therefore the women have to work longer hours to make the money they need.

Child prostitution

Mama Tere, a woman who used to be in prostitution, commented in the New Zealand Newspaper \textit{Morning Report} that the PRA has normalised behaviour and youth gangs are now pimping their members.

The Report on the PRA states that the Act does not address the issue of underage prostitution. However, underage prostitution is a serious issue and is directly impacted by attempts to ‘normalise’ prostitution and make it acceptable. Enforcing the criminalisation of the purchase of sex exclusively from minors can be difficult. For example, the police have difficulties in proving that a sexual act has been performed by a minor for money as it is not illegal to sit in a car with a sixteen year old. Unless the police catch couples in the act of breaking the law it is difficult to protect underage people in prostitution.

Where cases of men using underage women in prostitution have been identified, often the punishments metered out are cursory and light. For example, New Zealand media reported in August this year that a brothel-owner who hired two underage girls to work in prostitution was sentenced to five months home detention.\(^4^1\) Some NGOs have observed a rise in underage girls in prostitution and have even attributed this to the passing of the PRA and the impact on policing: ‘The Act has taken police resources off the street and has therefore sent the message to pimps and gangs that there are opportunities to get away with things’.\(^4^2\)

Stigma

Despite attempts by advocates of the PRA to normalise prostitution, it remains, by its very nature, a discrete and secret practice. The PRA attempts to regulate the industry, but this is hard to do when those who are involved in prostitution wish to remain \(^{39}\) Streetreach, an Auckland based project, provides a confidential support service for those involved in prostitution, with the goal of encouraging them to exit from prostitution, and be empowered in the choices they make in their everyday life. Streetreach actually teaches their clients how to make informed decisions in regards to their personal life. They introduce courses and "life-skills" teaching which provides better choice alternatives. Streetreach currently has connection with about 500 individuals in prostitution and has regular contact from clinics, refuge centres and other agencies.

\(^{40}\) Report of the Prostitution Law Review Committee, 2008:34

\(^{42}\) Mamatere Strickland, an NGO co-founder in Auckland, quoted in ‘Older sex workers go hungry’, \textit{Manukau Courier}, 04/02/08.
anonymous due to stigmatisation. The Report states that ‘the reason for the law reform was to neither decrease, nor increase, the number of people involved in the sex industry; but to provide sex workers the same protections enjoyed by other workers in New Zealand’. However, the Report goes on to acknowledge that the industry is so secretive that it is difficult to study. The academic Melissa Farley notes a reluctance by women in prostitution to register as such, and a concern that registration would lead to a loss of anonymity. In an environment where secrecy and anonymity characterise the industry, it is hard to see how any attempts to regulate the prostitution will meet with success.

The New Zealand experience clearly shows that decriminalising the pimping, brothel keeping and purchasing of sex with regards to prostitution creates an environment where instances of force, coercion, threats and deception within the industry become hidden or ignored. In order to create a culture where abuse within the sex industry is not a taboo subject, it must be acknowledged in Parliament and addressed through legislation. Clause 13 (now Clause 14) is a positive step towards reducing commercial sexual exploitation in the UK.

Rebecca Moran & Rachel Davies
CARE
53 Romney St
London, SW1P 3RF
www.care.org.uk
September 2009

Further information can be found in the CARE report New Zealand and the Impact of the Prostitution Reform Act, 2003 which can be downloaded from the CARE website.

---

45 Farley, 2004:1094.
OBJECT

OBJECT is a human rights organisation that challenges and raises awareness of the increased sexual objectification of women and girls in the media and popular culture, in particular via mainstreaming of the sex industries. We undertake such work because of the links between the sexual objectification of women and attitudes underpinning ongoing gender-based discrimination and violence. Object facilitates grassroots lobbying and works closely with colleagues in the women’s sector, acting as an advisor to Amnesty International UK, and providing educational material to groups such as the NSPCC, WOMANKIND worldwide and Rape Crisis.

OBJECT position on prostitution

For OBJECT, tackling the demand for prostitution is a crucial part of challenging the sexual objectification of women. Prostitution is the ultimate form of objectification as it is based on the idea that it is acceptable for women to be treated like commodities to be bought and sold for sexual use. This harms women and girls in prostitution, many of whom experience violence and abuse and are unable to speak out. The facts speak for themselves:

- 75% of women involved in prostitution were drawn into prostitution when they were children. 74% of women cite poverty and the need to pay household expenses and support their children as a primary motivator for entering prostitution (Melrose 2002)
- Up to 70% of women in prostitution spent time in care, 45% report sexual abuse and 85% physical abuse within their families (Home Office 2006).
- Up to 95% of women in prostitution are problematic drug users, including around 78% heroin users and rising numbers of crack cocaine addicts (Home Office 2004a).
- More than half of UK women in prostitution have been raped and/or seriously sexually assaulted. At least three quarters have been physically assaulted (Home Office 2004b).
- 68% of women in prostitution meet the criteria for Post Traumatic Stress Disorder in the same range as torture victims and combat veterans undergoing treatment (Ramsey et al 1993).

The prostitution industry also harms women in wider society.

Normalising prostitution normalises an extreme form of sexual subordination and objectification; it legitimises the existence of an underclass of women and it reinforces male dominance over women.
It also undermines our struggle for gender equality as it undermines efforts to combat sexual harassment and male violence in the home, the workplace and the streets if men can buy the right to perpetrate these very same acts against women and girls in prostitution.

So, what do we do about this form of commercial sexual exploitation?

The last thing we want is for people in prostitution to be criminalised. We therefore call for decriminalisation for all prostituted people (who are mainly women and children) and the criminalisation of all people who choose to buy women for sexual use. This is essential to tackle the demand for prostitution which expands prostitution and fuels trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation.

Total decriminalisation of the whole industry - including pimps, traffickers and punters- does not make women safer. Why?

As the market for prostitution expands, so does the illegal sector. In New Zealand, where they have legalised the whole industry - including pimps and punters - the illegal sector has actually expanded more than the legal sector so that the illegal sector makes up 80% of the industry (Instone and Margerison 2007). This has also happened in Amsterdam where authorities have done a U turn on legalisation and are now closing down areas of the red light district. According to the Mayor of Amsterdam “it is impossible to create a safe and controllable zone for women that is not open to abuse by organised crime” (Bindel and Kelly 2004).

Furthermore, decriminalisation of the entire industry and treating prostitution like any other job doesn’t deal with the long term psychological and physical effects of having unwanted and often violent & abusive sex numerous times a day and having to act like you enjoy it and are turned on by it.

Jo, a former prostituted woman who started at the age of 13 says: "When was the last time you enjoyed being penetrated by twenty lairy, half-pissed blokes who spit all over you, call you a variety of names, and demand you act as though you are really getting off on it in an evening, every evening?"

To be able to do this many women need to ‘split off’ from this process in their head, hence why drug and alcohol dependency is such a big part of prostitution.

To make women in prostitution safer we have to offer exit strategies and support to get out of prostitution, not legitimise commercial sexual exploitation by making it legal and by giving a green light for the industry to expand.

Furthermore, we have to work towards ending the exploitative industry of prostitution to ensure that future generations of vulnerable women and children are no longer drawn into or coerced into having to sell their bodies. To do this we have to tackle the problem at its route – we have to tackle demand.
DEMAND CHANGE!

This is why OBJECT has launched Demand Change! in partnership with our sister organisation Eaves (www.eaves4women.org) to raise awareness about the reality of prostitution as a form of violence against women and to lobby for the government to adopt a human rights based approach to prostitution and to follow the ‘Nordic’ model as adopted by Sweden, Norway and Iceland – countries which consistently top the global polls in terms of gender equality.

The ‘Nordic model’ completely decriminalises those who sell sex acts whilst offering support services to exit prostitution. It further criminalises the purchase of sex acts to tackle the demand which expands prostitution and fuels trafficking for sexual exploitation.

This sends out a powerful message that it is not acceptable for women’s bodies to be bought and sold like commodities for sexual use and it overturns outdated legislation which essentially enshrines men’s right to buy women by focussing on those who sell sex acts whilst completely ignoring those who buy them.

In this way, the ‘Nordic model’ shifts criminal liability away from those who are exploited through prostitution and towards those who contribute to this exploitation by choosing to buy sex acts.

Furthermore, the ‘Nordic’ model has a broad and progressive political vision in that it actually aims to end the exploitative industry of prostitution rather than legitimise it which essentially ends up expanding it.

Laws change attitudes. Legalising or decriminalising the entire prostitution industry sends out a message that it is acceptable to buy and sell women’s bodies for sexual use. This encourages future generations of boys to grow up thinking that it is perfectly normal for men to have entitlement over women’s bodies. And for girls to grow up thinking that a man can use her body how he chooses, as long as he can pay.

Alternatively, we could call for the UK Government to take a human rights based approach to prostitution and to follow in the footsteps of the Nordic countries to send out the powerful message that no human being is for sale.

For more information about the Demand Change! campaign see the website at www.demandchange.org
PERSONAL TESTIMONIES

REBECCA*

“I am so p*ssed off with the ‘choice’ argument being used to dismiss so many women and girls. I, for one, would never deny there are some women who may choose to be in prostitution. But they are very privileged and a very tiny minority, maybe around 2-4% of prostituted women”
*Read Rebecca’s blog at http://rmott62.wordpress.com/

THE PARENTS OF MARNIE FREY,
A YOUNG GIRL MURDERED IN PROSTITUTION*:

“To think the best we can do for these women is giving them a safe place to sell their bodies is a joke. There’s no such thing as a clean safe place to be abused in. For a man to think he can buy a woman’s body is insane. And should show us the attitudes that women have to fight against in society. Marnie did not choose prostitution. Her addictions did. And any man who bought her body for their sexual pleasure should go to jail for exploiting her desperation.” (Lynn and Rick Frey 2008).

References:
Inston, Tighe and Margerison, Ruth (2007) Shadow Report for the CEDAW Committee on New Zealand, Coalition Against Trafficking in Women New Zealand (CATW NZ)
Clause 14, Policing and Crime Bill

National Association for People Abused in Childhood 42 Curtain Road, London EC2A 3NH
www.napac.org.uk

NAPAC offers the UK’s only national free phone support line for adult survivors of all forms of childhood abuse. We currently receive an average of 1000 calls to the line each week. We also receive many emails and letters, all of which receive a personal reply. At present we are only able to answer about 10% of calls but we are working hard to expand our service. We receive no statutory funding.

In the years that NAPAC has been around we have been contacted by a number of people, male and female, who, having been abused as children, have fallen into prostitution. This was never an experience any of them benefited from in any way whatsoever. In fact, I believe that research indicates a huge connection between abuse in childhood and abuse in adulthood including the descent into prostitution.

I have personally spoken to dozens of people over the years who have contacted NAPAC and have subsequently found themselves in the nasty world of what is often described as the ‘sex trade’.

If I may give one or two examples? Two years ago I visited a young man in Manchester Prison who told me his life story. After being brutalized as a child he was taken into care where he was systematically abused over many years. At 17/18 he found himself on the street, homeless and with no support. He was picked up by pimps who then exploited his vulnerability and he became a male prostitute. The accompanying drug world that he entered led to the first of many arrests and imprisonments. From age 19 to 30 he was in and out of prison like it was a conveyor belt. When I spent time with him he didn’t even remember committing the offence for which he was serving 18 months because of his drug induced state.

A week after visiting him we received a letter from this young man to say thank you for the visit and that it was going to “change his life”. He had never been asked about his past. When I last visited HMP Manchester a few months ago I was told that the young man had not re-offended during the past two years and was making a real go of getting his life together.

One of our former volunteers at NAPAC was formerly a female prostitute and she was also abused throughout childhood. As a young person growing up she felt so worthless that she was easy pray for the ‘sex trade’ to suck her in and she ended up in brothels all over London and the Midlands. She now has her life fully on track, recognizes that she didn’t really ‘choose’ to enter that seedy world but that circumstances led her into the clutches of the pimps.

The people who ‘bought’ these people’s bodies were not really buying a freely given commodity (as disgusting as it is to refer to someone's body in such cold terms) but they were both victims of exploitation and anyone considering going to a prostitute really needs to think very carefully about the world they are entering. In fact, it’s quite hard to believe, given the many films and documentaries about the subject, that ‘punters’ don’t know that they are fuelling a nasty and exploitative trade and that given real choices these people, the people they use for sex and domination, are not really consenting but are being exploited.

The thought that some people will stand up and say prostitution has been around since time immemorial and is therefore with us forever, is disturbing and wrong. Two centuries ago we put children down coal mines and up chimneys. Doubtless people opposing reforms to protect children then would have cited child slavery going back to ancient times. It doesn’t make it right and it doesn’t mean we shouldn’t act to stop it.

A significant number of calls to our free phone line mention that the caller was lured into prostitution following abuse. We even hear of parents who pimped their own children. This is now, not two hundred years ago!

The NAPAC service is completely confidential, we don’t ask for names or contact details of any callers. The only time we would break confidentiality is if a child or vulnerable person is at risk of harm and at this point we will contact and work alongside the police, social services etc.

We know for a fact that most adult survivors of child abuse find it extremely difficult to talk about the subject and for many it takes years before they can attempt to come to a place of healing. When those young survivors have also been sucked into the world of prostitution please consider just how much harder it must be for them to speak out?

The law needs to protect them and not criminalise them. The criminals are those who profit from this nasty trade and those who use other people’s bodies knowing that they are not really freely given.

This issue, along with many others around the protection of vulnerable people, is one that NAPAC feels very strongly about.

We do not have the resources to employ lawyers or media specialists so our voice is a simple one. We are all survivors of abuse at NAPAC and we know far too much about that sordid world that exists behind so many closed doors. The more we all speak out, when the opportunity arises, the better it will be for future generations. They shouldn’t have to suffer the pain and humiliation that we did.

Peter Saunders FRSA
Founder and Chief Executive
Views from the Salvation Army

The Salvation Army welcomes the opportunity to respond to the call for evidence in support of Clause 13 (now Clause 14) of the Policing and Crime Bill 2008. As a front-line service provider to the most vulnerable and marginalised of society, The Salvation Army witnesses on a daily basis the harms and suffering that enforced prostitution and trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation can have on women, some of whom, for many reasons, are not able to give voice to their distressing experiences.

The Salvation Army has committed itself to speaking out on behalf of the voiceless and marginalised of society. The Salvation Army has provided and continues to provide services to those who have been subject to control and coercion in varying senses and degrees. The Salvation Army sees the introduction of Clause 13 (now Clause 14), and particularly its strict liability element, as a most welcome move towards the protection of those who are vulnerable to ‘control’ in any sense and a significant step towards reducing the exploitation of women in the form of payment for sexual services and a corresponding reduction in violence against women.

Given the various possible routes into prostitution, combined with the clear evidence of the violent means which those who seek to control the vulnerable often employ, The Salvation Army would strongly advocate for the Government to adopt Clause 13, in its most undiluted form, both as a more effective means of reducing the demand to sexually exploit women and as a significantly more convincing step towards fulfilling the Government’s stated obligations towards addressing violence against women.

We look forward to the continued Parliamentary debate on this issue with the anticipation that clause 13 (now Clause 14) will receive overwhelming support in debate and in the votes and we look forward to it becoming law in the near future.

Gareth Wallace
Assistant Public Affairs Officer
Salvation Army
101 Newington Causeway
London SE1 6BN
I am a concerned man who believes the proposed amendment will harm sex workers. Although I do not live in Scotland, I have spent several years working in the fine city of Edinburgh where I believe there is a safe and discrete regime in place for the sex workers. Prohibition never works, the USA has tried to prohibit sex work for years, and it continues as ever. Prohibition of alcohol in the states saw the rise of the Chicago gangs.

I have taken a look at the submission by Eaves [please see Demand Change! Campaign’s submission] of why the purchase of sex should be criminalised. Their view on prostitution is not the view of the hundreds of prostitutes I communicate with. If you read the ‘facts’ presented by Eaves and follow up their references, you will see they are being rather disingenuous and using statistics from street prostitution rather than prostitution in general. They are being very selective in quoting research, and quoting it out of context to make their case. Street prostitution statistics are easier to gather from police interviews, than statistics from the far greater incidence of indoor prostitution. Street prostitution statistics are also useful for the prohibitionists as there is little to say that is positive. You must differentiate between the abuses that occur in street prostitution with what happens elsewhere in indoor sex work and escorting.

75% of women in prostitution become involved when they are under the age of eighteen.

The reference for this is from.
[Link no longer operates]

Up to 75% of women involved in prostitution began when they were under 18 years of age and most teenager prostitutes are involved in street prostitution, which is estimated to be ten times more dangerous than working from houses or flats.

Up to 70% of women in prostitution spent time in care. 45% report experiencing sexual abuse and 85% physical abuse during their childhoods.

The reference for this the UK’s Paying the price. These figures were gained from a profile of 333 prostitutes detailed in the paper by Hester & Westmarland (2004). Those interviewed would have been from a Crime Reduction program, which can only have been looking at Street Prostitution. This again is street prostitution and not main stream sex work.

74% of women in prostitution identify poverty, the need to pay household expenses and support their children, as primary motivators for being drawn into prostitution.

I won’t argue this one. I can’t though see how this justifies the criminalization of the purchase of sexual services. It looks to me the target of policy should be, the reason why women get into poverty. One plus side of prostitution for many women in poverty is the ease in which they can start and stop working. For many the cash can be made, and unlike ‘proper jobs’ they won’t lose state benefits they may be receiving.

More than half of UK women in prostitution have been raped and/or seriously sexually assaulted and at least 75% have been physically assaulted at the hands of both pimps and punters.

This figure again is taken from street prostitution, and not indoor/agency work. The title of the paper makes that plain. Other research papers show few working indoors are physically assaulted. From those who are assaulted, the minority are from clients. Most of the assaults on indoor sex workers are from criminal gangs raiding premises because they know the sex workers will not go to the police to report the crime.

Women in prostitution in London suffer from a mortality rate that is 12 times higher than the national average.

This statistic was taken from the following document.

Again this is from street markets, and taking the quote, which Eaves missed from the document
[Link no longer operates]

Up to 75% of women involved in prostitution began when they were under 18 years of age and most teenager prostitutes are involved in street prostitution, which is estimated to be ten times more dangerous than working from houses or flats.

One ends up wondering why Government policies continue to criminalise indoor prostitution with few exceptions like the licensed saunas of Edinburgh which are inspected by the police and are safe environments to work in. A good model for Scotland as a whole to follow.
9 out of 10 women surveyed would like to exit prostitution.

I do wonder how this question was phrased. If I was asked whether I wanted to stop my well paid professional job, the answer would be yes. I would love to stop if I could afford it.

This statistic is completely at odds with a large number of surveys done in the US, Holland, Australia which show that women working in prostitution are happy and have a high self esteem.

In The Netherlands, three-quarters of indoor workers report that they enjoy their work (Dalder, 2004: 34). Research on 95 call girls in Sydney, Australia found that they were generally emotionally healthy (Perkins and Lovejoy, 1996).

This is quoted in greater detail later. Please you must differentiate between these headline catching scare stories published by the anti prostitution campaigners with the actual facts of prostitution as practiced indoors, by independent escorts, by agency escorts and brothel workers.

This review of a number of research articles shows a differentiation between indoor prostitutes, call girls and street prostitutes. Reading this review of research would leave you feeling that for a majority of indoor prostitutes, the work was a benefit to their health and mental well being.

http://www.bayswan.org/New_Directions_prost.pdf

Research on streetwalkers and call girls in California and legal brothel workers in Nevada found that 97% of the call girls reported an increase in self-esteem after they began working in prostitution, compared with 50% of the brothel workers but only 8% of the streetwalkers (Prince, 1986: 454). Call girls expressed positive views of their work; brothel workers were generally satisfied with their work; but street prostitutes evaluated their work more negatively (Prince, 1986: 497). Similarly, a study of indoor prostitutes (most of whom worked in bars) in a Midwestern city in the United States found that three-quarters of them felt that their life had improved after entering prostitution (the remainder reported no change; none said it was worse than before); more than half said that they generally enjoy their work (Decker, 1979: 166, 174). In The Netherlands, three-quarters of indoor workers report that they enjoy their work (Dalder, 2004: 34). Research on 95 call girls in Sydney, Australia found that they were generally emotionally healthy (Perkins and Lovejoy, 1996). All of the escorts studied by Foltz (1979: 128) took pride in their profession and viewed themselves as morally superior to others: they consider women who are not ‘in the life’ to be throwing away woman’s major source of power and control [sexual capital], while they as prostitutes are using it to their own advantage as well as for the benefit of society. And an Australian study found that half of call girls and brothel workers felt that their work was a major source of satisfaction in their lives, while 7 out of 10 said they would definitely choose this work if they had to do over again (Woodward et al., 2004: 39). Other studies of indoor work report that the workers felt the job had at least some positive effect on their lives or believed that they were providing a valuable service (Bretns and Hausbeck, 2005; Bryant and Palmer, 1975; Chapkis, 1997; Farley and Davis, 1978; Lever and Dolnick, 2000; Lucas, 1998; Verlarde and Warlick, 1973; West, 1993).

You may want to look at a more recent research paper published by Dr. Suzanne Jenkins, from Keele University, Staffs on prostitution. BEYOND GENDER: AN EXAMINATION OF EXPLOITATION IN SEX WORK. Available at http://www.sexworker.at/phpBB2/download.php?id=479

Facts like 72% female escorts like the work for the independence, 67% for meeting people and of course 93% for the money.

When asked about client relationships 54% put the transaction as an equality, 26% that the client was vulnerable. Only 6% saw that the client had power over them.

77% of escorts felt their clients respected them, and a similar number also respected their client.

72% of escorts felt their self confidence had been increased.

56.6% of escort felt they had never been exploited by their clients, while only 3% were exploited often.

Eaves make a point of our international and domestic obligation to CEDAW. Below I have quoted from their statement

Indeed, the UK has multiple international and domestic obligations to tackle the demand for prostitution, in recognition of the harms inherent within it. The most important of these obligations is Article 6 of the Convention on the Elimination Of All Forms Of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), which calls on State Parties to: Take all appropriate measures, including legislation, to suppress all forms of traffic in women and exploitation of the prostitution of women. Other relevant international instruments in this context

This does not request you to legislate against prostitution, but to legislate to allow women to prostitute themselves without exploitation.

 Trafficking

I would like to make some general comments on trafficking. It is thought among many that the number of trafficked women for sexual purposes is 4000. I have seen this as 4000 women a year brought in, or 4000 at any one time. The figure is quoted as a UK home office estimate, but the way it was generated is a best a guess, using an assumption that 90% of women working in the Soho area of London were all trafficked. I would point you to the UK Governments link to this document, but it appears to have been removed. They were probably too embarrassed. I can only point you presently to this article from Guardian Journalist Nick Davies (Prostitution and trafficking the anatomy of a moral panic) who charts the rise and rise of the number of trafficked women in the UK.

http://www.guardian.co.uk/uk/2009/oct/20/trafficking-numbers-women-exaggerated

Trafficking women against their will into the UK for sexual purposes is a heinous crime, but it does no one any good to exaggerate and inflate the figure. The size of problem has to be understood to be able to combat it.

In the same article by Nick Davies an analysis of the numbers of trafficked women in Pentameter 2 is exposed.

The internal analysis of Pentameter Two, obtained by the Guardian, reveals that after six months of raids across the UK, 11 women were finally "made safe". This clashes with early police claims that Pentameter had rescued 351 victims. By the time that Brain held his press conference in July last year, that figure had been reduced to 167 victims who were said to have been "saved from lives of abuse, exploitation and misery".

Research published recently by Dr Nick Mai of London Metropolitan University, concludes that, contrary to public perception, the majority of migrant sex workers have chosen prostitution as a source of "dignified living conditions and to increase their opportunities for a better future while dramatically improving the living conditions of their families in the country of origin". After detailed interviews with 100 migrant sex workers in the UK, Mai found: "For the majority, working in the sex industry was a way to avoid the exploitative working conditions they had met in their previous non-sexual jobs."

http://www.londonmet.ac.uk/research-units/iset/projects/esrc-migrant-workers.cfm

Steve Jarvis
17 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Equality Now

Submission in support of amendment 8

Equality Now is an international women’s rights organisation dedicated to ending violence and discrimination against women and girls around the world. We work to end all forms of trafficking in women and girls and partner with many grassroots organisations, several of whom are survivor led, to end the commercial sexual exploitation of women and girls.

We write in strong support of amendment 8 lodged by Trish Godman insofar as it would criminalise the purchase of sex and any third-party facilitators of the purchase of sex and urge the Justice Committee to support these measures.

Equality Now considers that the commercial sale of sex constitutes an abuse arising from and perpetuating gender inequality. Consequently we believe that those who patronise and promote prostitution perpetuate sexual exploitation and gender inequality, yet they remain largely hidden and unpunished. The vast majority of people selling sex in Scotland are women and those buying sex from them are men.

The layers of discrimination and abuse in prostitution are manifold. A 2006 Home Office study found 70% of those involved in street prostitution to have a history of local authority care and 45% reported experiencing childhood sexual abuse. To allow prostitution to flourish is to consign the most vulnerable to a life of violence, despair and inequality.

By punishing the demand for prostitution, the Scottish Parliament would be sending a strong signal that sexual exploitation is neither acceptable nor will gender inequality be officially sanctioned in Scotland. At the same time we urge the Justice Committee to consider other measures that would rather promote gender equality and prevent prostitution, including support for broader educational programmes, decriminalisation of the selling of sex and provision of better funding and support for prostitution exit.

Please give your full support to criminalising the purchase of sex. Women are not for sale.

Jacqueline Hunt
Director
17 March 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2
Written submission from [name withheld]

Note: Certain details have been redacted to protect the identities of individuals referred to.

I would like this letter to be considered in the decision making of your current justice bill regarding the introduction of mandatory sentencing for those caught carrying knives.

In October of 2009 my close friend [name withheld] was stabbed to death outside his family home in a brutal, senseless and cowardly attack. On the evening of the attack I had been with [name withheld], his mother, sister, girlfriend and other family members and friends at a charity event. At the end of this event we all entered taxis to take us safely home, this was the last time I would see [name withheld] alive. The senselessness of [name withheld]’s attack has been documented and during the trial into his murder I am sure that the public will agree that his death could have been prevented.

[Name withheld] was a kind, compassionate and generous man. He always looked out for those around him and his job as [details withheld] was an extension of his personality, adventurous, intelligent and determined to live his life to the full. Having been tragically taken from those who loved him has made us all question not only details of the law, but question why people are able to commit cruel acts of violence. The unparalleled grief that has struck all of [name withheld]’s family and friends cannot be expressed as it is more than clear that this should not have happened. Currently there is no mandatory sentencing for those caught carrying knives and it is our will and determination to fight to change this. Adequate deterrents must be in place to try to combat the knife culture we currently live in. Having listened to many politicians defend the argument against the introduction of mandatory sentencing we remain entirely unconvinced. There should be no circumstances or reasoning that allow people to carry knives – protection is certainly the most flawed of them all as no-one was protected by the knife used to murder [name withheld].

It is my understanding that we live in one of the wealthiest and most democratic countries in the world, I therefore question why anyone would need knives for protection. We are not at war or fear the threat of invasion; we do not live in a dictatorship whereby people are isolated or under threat of government persecution. It is not good enough to accept excuses; it is also not acceptable for the government to make claims that prisons are too full to pass a law which could reduce the number of knives on our streets. While the current punishment for committing crimes, especially of violence, is prison, we do not accept that prison is therefore not the answer. The government has a responsibility to ensure that all of its citizens are safe. We elect our politicians on the basis that they will act on the behalf of law abiding members of communities. We do not expect politicians to make excuses for or consider the criminal who has committed these horrendous acts. We do expect politicians to take action to protect and consider the victims of these horrendous acts.

Alongside [name withheld]'s family I have helped gather signatures for the petition that requests minimum sentencing. In doing so we have met hundreds of people who agree with the petition and are surprised that such a law is not presently in place. If politicians are elected to represent their constituents by ignoring thousands of signatures, they are concretely ignoring those who have given them their jobs.

I currently work in a secondary school in [details withheld] and it is my experience and that of the more experienced staff I work with, that in school (as it appears in the rest of society) we currently make too many excuses for the actions of the minority of people who act aggressively and violently and break the law. The new Curriculum for Excellence initiative clearly states that we must try to ensure pupils leave school as ‘responsible citizens’. This is impossible if we do not continue this in wider society. If we continue to look only to the reasons why people commit crimes then we do not encourage people to take responsibility for their actions or actually deter them from committing such crimes again.

To us the facts are clear, [name withheld] died as a result of knife crime. It appears that people do not fear the repercussions of their actions and due to this we have lost a truly wonderful person in our lives. [name withheld]'s mother [name withheld] has been left devastated at the loss of her child; she was present at the time and has to cope each day with the memory of holding her dying child in her arms. [Name withheld], [name withheld]'s sister is heartbroken at knowing her brother's life was stolen from her, that she will not see him again. Being a close friend to the whole family I cannot comfort them, there is no comfort, as there is no reasoning behind this. [Name withheld] is not another knife crime statistic. [Name withheld] was a son, a brother, a friend and a [details withheld]. [Name withheld] fought for his country. He entered war zones knowing the life threatening dangers he faced and did so with true courage and bravery of which he has been rewarded. [Name withheld] died in the alleged safety of his own front doorstep. The government cannot possibly offer any excuses as to why this happened nor is it enough to offer their sympathies. We are asking the elected Scottish Parliament to attempt to make changes and prevent tragedies like this from happening again. [Name withheld]'s case is certainly not an isolated case, there are many families who are facing the same grief due to the loss of a loved one to a knife and we must recognise that tough measures have to be in place to deal with it. We wholeheartedly and fully support plans to educate young people of the dangers of carrying a knife; to try and understand the causes of why groups in society carry weapons, to alleviate poverty and tackle alcohol and drug abuse that often contribute to violent acts. However we must also act now to ensure that people are deterred now, and start by introducing a mandatory sentence for carrying a knife!
[Name withheld] and other victims of knife crime are not government statistics but are the tragedy and shame of government and society failures. Their lives, the lives of the Scottish electorate, must be valued and politicians must demonstrate that they are valued by passing this bill.

Thank you for reading my letter and please take great consideration over this.

17 March 2010
My name is [name withheld] and my brother [name withheld] was brutally murdered on the [date withheld] 2009. He was stabbed outside our family home.

Knife crime has completely destroyed my family. Our lives will never be the same again. I write this letter as a voice for my mother, family, friends AND most importantly my brother. His life was cruelly taken away as a result of knife crime; he has no voice to speak of the injustice which he suffered. As a result of [name withheld]'s murder my family and I are calling on the Scottish Government to introduce mandatory minimum custodial sentencing for those caught carrying knives or other dangerous weapons in public. This is a personal statement which shows how knives destroy lives. I therefore hope this statement will be considered as written evidence for the amendments lodged for the sentencing of knife criminals.

Myself, my mother, our family and friends lives have been shattered as a result of knife crime. We are living a life sentence since [name withheld]'s senseless murder. No-one should have to suffer the misery and trauma that we are going through.

You may have heard about my brother and possibly some of the circumstances surrounding his death. We think it is important that people know a little about [name withheld] and have a brief insight into his senseless death. It not only highlights the total tragedy of his death, but also the complete waste of a truly remarkable human being. He was a young man, who had so much of his life ahead of him. However, this was taken away from him in a totally shocking and barbaric manner.

All I can say about the night [name withheld] died was that he was a hero for the second time in his short life. My brother was stabbed for standing up for right. This was a completely random attack. [Details withheld]. It disgusts me to know that [name withheld]’s death is not an isolated case.

What happened that night still haunts my family [details withheld]. We are in complete turmoil having lost our beloved [name withheld]. The pain and misery we are suffering is unimaginable. When [name withheld] was [details withheld], my mother and I prepared ourselves, to some extent, of the possibility that he may not come home. He was [details withheld], doing a job that he loved, we were aware of the dangers that he faced. When he was home, we could all relax. He was no longer in a danger zone, he was safe … or so we thought! We now know it is wrong to have been so presumptuous. Even yards away from his own front door, [name withheld] was not safe. I will not ask you to imagine how my family and I feel. Unless you have experienced what we have, no-one could possibly understand the absolute devastation and aching we have in our hearts for the loss of our hero [name withheld]. Because of the type of society we live in it is likely that another family will be going through what we are this very weekend.

Official Government figures stated that there were fifty-seven homicide victims killed by the use of a sharp instrument in 2008-09. Thus on average, someone is dying EVERY WEEK as a result of knife crime. Of the 99 homicide victims, over a half (58 per cent) were killed by the use of a sharp instrument. Every year the number of deaths from knife crime has increased. With data like this it is clear that Scotland’s deplorable knife culture is not being dealt with adequately.

It distresses my mother and I to think that [name withheld] will be classed as another knife crime statistic. He was my mothers first born child, my only brother and a dear friend to so many people. He was a decent law abiding citizen, a kind, compassionate and generous man who lived life to the full. He, along with the many other innocent knife crime victims, was a human being, a real person, whose life was cut short at the hands of a knife criminal.

Of the 132 persons accused in homicide cases last year, 41% were reported to have been drunk and/or on drugs at the time (30% were drunk, 5% were on drugs and 6% were both drunk and on drugs). I agree wholeheartedly with Justice Secretary Mr MacAskill when he stated, “urgent action is required to deal with Scotland’s drinking culture”. However, what is to happen in the meantime? Are we meant to just accept such deaths until Scotland’s drinking culture is dealt with?! We are all responsible for our actions, we should all know right from wrong at a young age. There are no excuses for someone’s life being taken at the hands of another.

There is no doubt in my mind that a person who carries a knife has the intent to use it. Currently there is no adequate deterrent in place for people carrying a blade. I believe that mandatory minimum custodial sentences for knife carriers will make people think twice about carrying a blade in public.

According to official government figures 3,529 people were convicted of handling an offensive weapon in 2008-09, an increase of 3% from the previous year. Of those convicted only 30% were given a custodial sentence as their main penalty. Thus 70% avoided jail all together. Of this 70%, 16% were given community service and 24% were given a fine. The Justice Secretary has stated on numerous occasions that “those who use a knife should expect to go to jail.” This is quite clearly a very misguided statement. What kind of message are we sending out to people who think it is acceptable to carry knives? Clearly not a very strong and concise one! At the end of the day, people who carry a blade in a public place are committing an offence, they are carrying a dangerous and lethal weapon and they have the potential to ruin numerous lives. Why therefore are they not being adequately punished if they are caught? We must also remember that just because a person has been unlucky enough to have been caught carrying a knife, it is very unlikely it was their first time actually carrying a weapon.

I welcome the 21% increase of the average custodial sentence for handling an offensive weapon. However, the percentage of persons receiving custodial sentences has never increased beyond 30% in the last ten years. We know that currently knife carriers can receive a MAXIMUM of 4 years behind bars, but such a sentence is rarely given. Of the 1054 persons in 2008-09 who were given a custodial sentence for the handling of an offence weapon, only 39 were given more than 2 years. This equates to only 4%.

Education is a key part to tackling Scotland’s blade culture, but the “here and now” must be dealt with also. Do we need to wait 10 or 20 years down the line to see a reduction in knife crime? What about those in their 20s and 30s? Last year, 2,358 people over the age of 21 were convicted of carrying an offensive weapon, double the number who were under 21 years of age (1171). I would like to know how the Scottish government plans to educate the older generation to not carry a knife. A clear message of “zero tolerance” needs to be sent out to all those people who think it is acceptable to carry knives. Currently the government is not doing this adequately enough.

It is often stated by the SNP Government that a number of people carry knives for “protection”. I do not accept this feeble statement. My brother never carried a knife to protect himself; he never felt the need to. Where was his protection? I acknowledge gang culture exists in Scotland, but the fact of the matter is, knife crime is spilling onto the streets of innocent people. I am led to believe that for every 100 knife incidents that occur, whether it is murder, assault, slashing; 89 of the victims are not carrying a weapon. Knife crime is not just happening in the inner cities, it is also occurring in rural areas such as [details withheld]! Disturbingly the true extent of knife crime is not fully known as it is estimated only around half of all knife attacks are actually reported to the Police.

It is not acceptable for the government to make claims that prisons are too full and that introducing minimum sentences for knife carriers is “completely unaffordable”. I would like to ask what they think the cost is to the victims of knife crime. It is immeasurable. We are the ones who are living with the aftermath of knife crime everyday. It is not good enough to accept excuses from the government. The current punishment for committing crimes is prison. I do not accept that jail is not the answer. If the government thinks that prisons do not work, then they should be doing something to ensure that they do. Prison is supposed to be a place of punishment and rehabilitation! Law abiding citizens all have a right to be safe within their own communities. They have a right to be safe from those who carry knives. It is the job of the government to ensure this. happens. Politicians need to take action to protect and consider the victims, and potential victims, of knife crime.

My mother and I started a petition calling for mandatory minimum custodial sentences for knife carriers. So far, we have had overwhelming support. We started the campaign on 3 January 2010 and to date we have collected around 10,000 signatures. Such a figure shows quite clearly that people want knives and knife carriers off their streets. Politicians should be acknowledging that the people of Scotland want change; they want to feel safe when walking out of their own front door. Politicians are elected to represent their constituents’, therefore if they ignore their requests they are effectively ignoring those who have given them their jobs.

I accept that there are sometimes genuine circumstances where people need to carry a knife e.g. joiner carrying a Stanley knife. I do not think these people should be jailed. However, I do not accept that 70% of those caught carrying knives were such exceptional cases. If there is a legitimate reason to carry a blade in public, then that person should surely be able to prove this and they would have no problem in doing so.

When more people are killed by the use of a sharp instrument in comparison to being shot, why is there a minimum sentence in place for gun carriers and not knife carriers? I cannot understand the logic behind this.

[Name withheld] was [details withheld] who contributed more to this country than the average citizen. For him to come home for weekend leave and to be stabbed outside his own front door is a DISGRACE. It shames Scotland. We ALL need to stand up and make people aware that we are not going to tolerate this any longer and stop pandering to knife criminals.

I want to feel safe when I go out of my own front door; I want my family to be safe. My brother never had this opportunity or right. We want to help ensure that other families do not suffer the way we have.

Thank you for reading my letter and I hope you will take great consideration over it being used as written evidence.

16 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 2

Written submission from the Salvation Army

Offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity (and related new offences)

The Salvation Army in the United Kingdom with the Republic of Ireland welcomes the opportunity to write to the Justice Committee and overwhelmingly urge them to support Trish Godman’s amendment which would create an offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity.

Summary of our position:

• From its early days in Victorian England, The Salvation Army has been concerned about, challenged policy on and supported the victims of sexual exploitation. The first work among homeless people in London was with vulnerable street women, and early Salvationists highlighted the sale of girls for prostitution. In the UK and all over the world, The Salvation Army still works with and supports people who find themselves in the sex industry, without judgement of their situation.

• In recent years, The Salvation Army has become more aware of the connection between the sex industry, particularly prostitution, and international human trafficking. The Salvation Army’s international work on anti-human trafficking has alerted us all to the evils of this trade and in the United Kingdom The Salvation Army has begun to work closely with the victims of sexual trafficking and with the authorities, including government agencies, working to try to put an end to what is effectively the ‘modern slave trade’.

• We believe that prostitution is a form of violence, particularly against women and harmful for those who are involved and also for the communities where it exists.

• While some would claim that there is a ‘right to choice’ we believe that even for those who do ‘choose’ this lifestyle, most are desperately unhappy with that life choice. The Salvation Army’s historical and ongoing work with women who once believed that their only option for employment was to sell their bodies for a variety of sexual activities has shown us that this life choice invariably can lead not only to greater and greater depravity but also to self-loathing and a loss of self confidence and esteem which fundamentally alters their lives.

• The Salvation Army believes that people who find themselves in the sex industry invariably would welcome a way out which is financially as rewarding as paid-for sex and that as a culture we need to help people to exit with dignity including education and intensive support where appropriate. The Salvation Army wishes to be part of that answer.

- We consider that prostitution exacerbates existing gender inequality as it is predominantly women who sell sex and men who buy. It is also unsatisfactory that at the moment, within the indoor sex industry, it is largely the sellers who are charged e.g. with brothel keeping or living off immoral earnings, while the buyers – the punters - are treated with impunity.

- The Salvation Army is deeply concerned that as a culture prostitution is now so ‘normalised’ and is considered by punters as their right, and as just another ‘innocent leisure past time’ that we have forgotten that one person’s ‘fun’ can be another person’s misery. We think legislation which would make it an offence for punters to pay for sex, would challenge this normalisation of the sex industry in Scotland.

- There are now indications that there is often a clear link between prostitution, the trafficking of people for sexual purposes and organised crime. Strong legislation may go some way to prevent an influx of trafficked women into Glasgow to meet the demand during the Commonwealth Games in 2014.

- We think it is important that the law considers “facilitation” as part of the offence as this would help disrupt the organisers, pimps and traffickers who arrange the transport and accommodation for those involved in the sex trade.

- From a marketing perspective, it is clear that advertising for sexual services is widespread not only on the internet but in newspapers and magazines across the city. Although enforcing the legislation on advertising would not be without challenge, we believe that it would still be a crucial step in targeting those who profit, create and support the sex trade in Scotland.

- We believe that by putting the focus on the buyers of sex this may act as a deterrent and make men think twice before they purchase a vulnerable women. Tackling demand would send out the important message that Scotland rejects prostitution and the exploitation inherent in this industry.

We do not support amendments 8A-D (lodged by Margo Macdonald) or amendment 461 (lodged by Nigel Don).

Anne Read, Major Alan Dixon, Major
Anti-Trafficking Response Co-ordinator Assistant to the Scotland Secretary
23 March 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2
Written submission from [names withheld]

Impact statement of [name withheld]

I am [name withheld] and reside at [address withheld] with my wife [name withheld] and our six month old daughter.

Four years ago, when I was single, I met a woman and dated her for approximately 2-3 months. After this time I soon realised she wanted more from the relationship than I did. I ended the relationship and tried to stop all contact with this female.

This female has since become what we describe as my 'stalker'. She has persistently telephoned me, contacted me by email, social network sites, followed me, jumped out of doorways and attempted to attack me. She has also tried to infiltrate my circle of friends. This woman will simply not take 'no' for an answer.

Through the course of the last four years I have changed phone numbers approximately seven times.

I have blocked her email address, IP address, social internet sites and complained to police about her behaviour approximately seven times.

This female has recently been convicted of Breach of the Peace, specifically harassing me, and we currently await her sentencing.

This woman’s behaviour has significantly affected my work, my business and my state of mind, but because I'm a man, socially I'm expected to just deal with it.

This woman even targets friends and family members as she cannot contact me directly; her behaviour has been described by a friend (who is a psychologist) as a 'rejected vengeful stalker'.

Because of this female’s behaviour I try to ensure I am always accompanied by a family/friend/colleague wherever I go.

This woman's course of conduct places myself and my family in a constant state of fear as we never know what this woman will resort to next.

We will constantly live looking over our shoulder for the rest of our lives.
Impact statement of [name withheld]

I am [name withheld] and reside at [address withheld] along with my husband [name withheld], and our six month old daughter.

I have resided here permanently since January 2009. Shortly after this I also discovered I was pregnant.

For the past year and a half my husband’s stalker has placed me under a significant amount of stress, so much so that I do feel as though I am a victim of her crimes (although at times, personnel within the criminal justice process have told me I am not a victim of her crimes).

Throughout her course of conduct, whilst residing at the address with [name withheld], I have suffered the constant harassment of phone calls (silent and verbal, at all times of the day and night), and disgusting text messages, to our house phone. I have not only heard the accused verbally abuse and threaten my husband, but she has also verbally abused me.

At times this woman has stated she wants [name withheld] 'dead' and will 'do time for him'.

At 14 weeks of pregnancy I was under a significant amount of stress due to this female’s behaviour and woke one morning to find myself bleeding. At this time I worried that I would miscarry and attended at my local Maternity Unit. Thankfully I was checked over, later released and continued the pregnancy.

Because of the ongoing harassment and the fact [name withheld] works away from home (sometimes for weeks at a time), a panic alarm has been fitted to our home address. However, each time I leave my house or place of work I am constantly looking over my shoulder to check if she is following me. Because of this I also carry a personal attack alarm.

At one point this female sent an email to [name withheld] stating ‘I’m a lookin…’ three words to some people, a significant threat to us as a family.

[Name withheld] and I perceived this to be that she was in fact watching and stalking us. At this point we became even more worried she may be waiting outside our home, tampering with our cars (as she previously alluded to) or following us.

On one occasion, [name withheld] received messages on his business website and showed me these same messages, which clearly came from the accused email and IP address. On one of these emails there was an icon (emotion face – a face holding guns) named ‘guns out’. Again a funny face to some people, but a significant threat to us.

At seven months pregnant, I went on sick leave from work. I left my home address and stayed with my sister for a period of time, as I no longer felt safe in my own home. At this point I was under too much stress about the ongoing harassment and my doctor signed me off work until my maternity leave commenced.

At eight months pregnant, I attended the local procurator fiscal office for precognition in relation to the case against the ‘stalker’. Later that day I was admitted to the local maternity hospital as my baby was not moving. That weekend, due to the consultant being significantly concerned re the baby not moving, I was induced and had my baby that weekend.

Thankfully, we now have a healthy child; however I firmly believe that the stress I have been under with regards to this case is due to this female’s conduct.

It has been a form of mental torture.

My view on this is that this female ruined my pregnancy, almost causing me to miscarry, and is deliberately trying to sabotage my relationship with [name withheld].

In addition to this, I am constantly looking over my shoulder in fear she is following myself because of her obsession with my husband.

This woman has put me into this state of fear and due to this I am also deeply concerned for our child’s safety, so much so I only allow close family members and close friends look after my child when I am at work or elsewhere.

I have never even met this woman, yet she has put me in this complete state of fear due to her continued and relentless course of conduct. I feel she is a ticking time bomb waiting to go off.

Comments on amendments to the law

I, [name withheld] and I, [name withheld] fully support the two proposed amendments to the law in relation to harassment and stalking behaviour. In particular we welcome Rhoda Grant’s proposal that stalking is identified as a single offence under statute law.

We have personal experience in dealing with the police and observed how difficult it has been for police to define this female’s course of conduct in individual incidents as a crime or offence.

Only when you look at the ‘bigger picture’ in relation to this woman's course of conduct do people recognise that her behaviour is calculated, intentional and designed to take effect on her primary victim and the family.

We request that the committee, when reviewing the amendments, give consideration that non-harassment orders automatically cover immediate family and not just the stalker’s primary victim.
We respectfully request this information (including our names) be passed to the Justice Committee for their consideration in relation to the amendment to law, and further request our names are excluded from public domain, to ensure the press are not allowed to publish our names in relation to same.

19 March 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2
Written submission from [name withheld]

Proposed Anti Stalking Legislation

I have been closely following the ongoing parliamentary debate with regards to the proposed amendments for anti stalking legislation lodged by the Government and Rhoda Grant MSP.

I am a victim of an ongoing stalking campaign, which is affecting not just my life, but also my husband’s and the stress, and pressure we are experiencing is a crime within its own right.

I have submitted written evidence on the impact and history of our 4-year case, however we believe the perpetrator is now threatening to pursue our daughter.

Her contact is now by email, gathering information about us via others, leaving messages on Facebook, and so it goes on.

Whilst the police and the procurator fiscal are doing everything they can, they are experiencing extreme difficulty.

I am a wife and a mother. I also have an occupation within the criminal justice process so I appreciate the challenges the justice system currently faces. In my role, I have dealt with victims who are experiencing situations not unlike what my family and I are experiencing. I can tell you from a professional and personal angle how frustrating it can be hearing the words 'I understand and believe what you are telling me, but this conduct does not amount to a criminal offence'.

Try for a second to put yourself in the victims’ shoes, constantly living on their nerves and feel how helpless they feel. The law does not protect them.

That is how I feel on a daily basis.

I did not appreciate up until now the trauma stalking inflicts on victims and the devastating effects of this crime.

I followed the hearing at Parliament on 13 April 2010.

My interpretation is that there are two separate issues. No defined stalking legislation, and the problem the Harris case raised, that in fact Breach of the Peace no longer covers a private locus.
I write to voice my concern on the Justice Minister's view that stalking should be integrated into his 'alarm, fear and distress' amendment.

Given the seriousness of this crime, I ask myself why is Scotland not pushing forward to secure its own specific anti stalking legislation as proposed by Rhoda Grant? This is a growing crime in Britain and Rhoda Grant’s amendment appears to be a way forward to meet the challenges of this calculated and evil crime.

Is it in the public’s best interest to integrate or accept the Government’s amendment? Just the other week the law didn’t recognise that when our stalker messaged my nephew on Facebook, that it put him, myself, my immediate and extended family in a state of fear and alarm. The police and the procurator fiscal did not define this calculated act under Breach of the Peace or any other legislation, so why would they recognise it under the Government’s new amendment?

The Government amendment discusses ‘reckless’ behaviour; our stalker's behaviour, or any others I have been privy to, has never been reckless. The law, as it stands, already defines Culpable and Reckless conduct in its own specific crime.

No, never have I seen or heard of a 'reckless' act from a stalker. Stalking behaviour is evil, calculated and designed to take effect on the victim and their family.

There are other instances where areas of Breach of the Peace have been unpicked to form statute laws (i.e. Sexual Offences Act, racial crime and Protection for Emergency Workers). I agree with this entirely, but stalking is every bit as serious and dangerous, surely it deserves the same consideration and its own 'pigeon-hole'.

It deeply concerns me that at present there is nowhere to place certain incidents, given Breach of the Peace does not hold a private element. Last year our stalker phoned us throughout my pregnancy, at all times of day and night, verbally abusing me and my husband, telling us she would tamper with our cars, wanted my husband 'dead' and would 'do time' for him. However because only my husband and myself heard this, the procurator fiscal informed us it was no longer a Breach of the Peace due to the Harris case.

When I listened to the meeting yesterday, I was immediately concerned at the feedback response to the Governments amendment. As it stands, and if implemented, innocent people like my family and myself are still going to be left unprotected as we are just now.

I am urging you to consider Rhoda Grant’s legislation. It gives this terrible crime a name, helps identify it and validates that what I am experiencing in my life really does exist.

The rest of America, most of Europe and Australia have made moves towards anti stalking legislation and I hope that Parliament and Government recognise it is time to move forward and not into the past with Breach of the Peace or the tightened version of Alarm, Fear or Distress.

I am off my work with what my doctor defines as a 'stress reaction', a result of what our stalker is doing to my life and I now appreciate the true horrors of this crime.

People in Scotland need to be protected from this serious crime with serious legislation and I suggest Rhoda Grant has offered this. The non-exhaustive list provides a framework and dare I say, idiot-proof guide to examples of stalking behaviour.

I am writing to urge you to consider the importance of Rhoda Grant’s amendment and the consequences of not having it in place.

I am well aware that this legislation cannot help our family in relation to what has already happened to us, but it will help protect us and other victims in the future.

15 April 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Age Concern and Help the Aged in Scotland

Removing the age limit for jurors

Introduction
Although Age Concern and Help the Aged in Scotland welcomes the proposal to increase the age limit on jurors in criminal trials from 65 to 70, we believe there is no evidence to justify setting a rigid upper limit at 70.

In their consultation document Modern Juries in Scottish Criminal Trials, published in 2008, the Scottish Government argued that unspecified evidence showed that people above the age of 70 are strongly likely to have significant cognitive decline that would prevent them from serving as jurors. Age Concern and Help the Aged in Scotland believe this is not backed up by any of the available evidence. Instead we argue that Scotland should adopt a similar system to that used in the Republic of Ireland and allow people aged over 70 the choice of whether or not to exempt themselves from jury service.

Increasing the age limit for jurors
There are strong arguments for increasing the age limit, many of which were mentioned in the Scottish Government’s consultation document. For example, as the consultation points out, it is contradictory to talk on the one hand of the important contribution that older people can make to society whilst with the other hand denying them the opportunity to participate in jury service, one of the most important elements of civic life.

The Scottish Government refers to research showing that 70 year olds today are comparable to 65 year olds living thirty years ago and argues that the concerns of the Thompson review – that older people would not be able to cope with the mental demands of jury service – no longer have much support or evidence to back them up. But the only evidence offered to back up why 70 should be the new upper age limit is unnamed research showing most older people “maintain their level of everyday intelligence or mental achievement until around age 70”\(^1\). This seems to imply that after the age of 70 most people lose their everyday intelligence, a claim that simply does not stand up to examination.

While mental function does generally decrease with age, it does not mean that people over the age of 70 suddenly become incapable of jury service – an allegation that many older people would find deeply offensive. In fact, a recent report of the English Longitudinal Study of Ageing shows that although there is evidence that function declines with age and poverty, the decline is gradual and even in the 80+ category, three quarters show no impairment at all in key literacy and numeracy skill tests\(^2\). Those in their early 70s show little literacy impairment.

---

and only the women show any significant numeracy impairment – still only one in five of the population.

Additional evidence comes from the Seattle Longitudinal Study (SLS) which began in 1956 and focuses particularly on age related changes in cognitive ability. Analysis of their results published in 2006 showed that “even at age 81 less than half of all observed individuals experienced reliable decremental change on a particular ability over the preceding seven years\(^3\). In addition, average decrement before age 60 amounts to less than two-tenths of a standard deviation, while by age 81 average decrement rises to approximately one standard deviation for most variables.” Although this shows an increasing likelihood of cognitive decline, it is a very small average decline and the study’s authors go on to note that “the magnitude of decrement, moreover, is significantly reduced when the effects of age changes in perceptual speed are removed.”

Given other factors such as extra experience, life skills and available time, it is hard to see any justification for drawing a line at any age. We also note that there are numerous examples of people aged over 70 continuing to perform with notable mental alacrity in fields as diverse as science, art, medicine, law and even in Scottish politics itself.

Other jurisdictions

The case for removing the upper age limit is strengthened further by the situation in a number of other countries. Ireland recently removed the upper age limit for jury service – which had previously been 65 – and have moved to a system whereby anyone over the age of 65 is eligible to serve on a jury but can choose not to if they wish\(^4\). Similar systems of jury eligibility operate in New South Wales\(^5\) and Victoria\(^6\) in Australia, New York State in the USA\(^7\), and Saskatchewan in Canada\(^8\) and there are no doubt other jurisdictions where the case is the same.

Age Concern and Help the Aged in Scotland believes that such a system here would offer advantages for the court system by increasing the number of available jurors and would also send a strong signal that the Scottish Parliament is willing to eliminate age discrimination. If Scotland were to adopt a system similar to those in the jurisdictions listed above, it would most likely be desirable to also adopt the ‘optional exemption’ for people aged over 70 so as not to interfere with the original aim of Section 68 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. This would allow people over the age of 70 who did not feel capable of performing jury service to exempt themselves whilst allowing those people over the age of 70 who are willing and able to participate in jury service.

Scotland also has an ageing population as well as an increasingly active older population. Although increasing the age limit to 70 will provide an increase in the

---

\(^4\) This change was made in the Civil Law (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 2008.

\(^7\) http://www.nyjuror.gov/general-information/questions-and-answers.php [Link no longer operates]

\(^8\) http://www.sasklawcourts.ca/default.asp?pg=qb_jury_info [Link no longer operates] number of eligible jurors, the ageing demographics of Scottish society means that in the long term there would most likely be future contractions in the eligible pool of jurors. In areas of Scotland where the proportion of older people is predicted to rise more significantly than average the long-term effect will be more pronounced.

The Irish system, as well as the others listed above, explicitly recognises that a fixed age limit wastes the abilities of the many older people willing and able to perform jury service. It also recognises that older people themselves are generally the best judges of their capabilities, which is why their system allows people aged 65 or over to decline jury service if they do not feel able to do it. In the unlikely circumstance that an older person who is not capable of performing jury duty does not exempt themselves, the selection process that takes place before the trial begins would weed them out.

Allowing people over the age of 70 the choice would address the concerns of those older people who feel that they have fulfilled their civic duties by that age and should be excused on that basis, whilst still allowing people aged over 70 who wanted to be eligible for jury service to make that choice for themselves.

UK Context
The case for amending the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill is strengthened by a recent consultation launched by the UK Government’s Ministry of Justice on options for increasing the upper age limit on jurors in England and Wales. The intention of Section 68 of the Bill is to bring Scotland in line with England and Wales but it is highly likely that the goalposts will shortly be moved again in those jurisdictions. One of the options highlighted in the Ministry of Justice consultation document is to remove the upper age limit but allow people aged over 70 excusal by right on grounds of age, and we would maintain that the general thrust of the arguments contained within the document lead in that direction. The consultation document can be found online:

Conclusion
In light of the available evidence and the experiences from other jurisdictions, we see no reason to exclude members of the older population from their civic rights and responsibilities purely on the basis of their age. We would strongly support not just increasing the age limit for jurors to 70, but allowing people over the age of 70 the choice of whether they want to participate in jury service.

Age Concern and Help the Aged in Scotland believes that the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill offers the opportunity to place Scotland ahead of the rest of the UK in terms of age limits on jury service, while offering benefits for the court system by increasing the number of eligible jurors and, importantly, striking a significant blow against age discrimination in public life.

26 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Louise Scollay

I am writing to you in support of Rhoda Grant’s proposed amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

As a victim of a stalker for over 4 years I feel that is imperative that there is a new offence to classify stalking. Breach of the Peace is not a satisfactory punishment for the torment and physical and mental effects that this crime has on its victims. For too long people have suffered as victims of stalking and it is time for the offence to be recognised and for those people to be held up to a much more severe offence. The punishment must fit the crime.

Louise Scollay
7 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Hemat Gryffe Womens Aid

We at Hemat Gryffe Womens Aid fully support these amendments lodged by Rhoda Grant (402), Scottish Government (378) and Trish Godman (8) and amendments to amendment 8 (8A – 8D) lodged by Margo MacDonald.

Thank you all for supporting women’s causes.

Nusrat Raza
Outreach and Development Worker for Hemat Gryffe Womens Aid
8 April 2010
I am a stalking victim and am writing to support the amendment proposed by Rhoda Grant for specific anti stalking legislation. It is in my opinion the government’s amendment is a catch all amendment which will be adequate for all breach of the peace offences but is not tight enough nor specific enough to cover stalking.

I spent over three years of my life in a living hell and can't put into words the mixture of fear, anger, frustration and exhaustion I lived with on a daily basis. It greatly saddened and distressed me that there was little in way of law to help me against a person that was causing me constant stress. I believe we must have specific legislation to identify stalking for the crime that it is and raise awareness of what stalking is and the effects it has.

I myself didn't realise that what I was experiencing was stalking until over two years of harassment. With this in mind I think we also need to raise awareness of this crime.

Thank you for your time.

16 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from [name withheld]

I am writing to you in support of the campaign to fight for a stalking law in Scotland.

Due to the unacceptable behaviour of my ex partner I have had to move home to a new town with my daughter (not his). This has caused major stress for us both. In particular, my daughter has had to move school and make new friends at a difficult age. She went through hell for about 10 months before she accepted the situation. In total I have spent around 30k in legal fees. I now owe money to my parents, my lawyer, and the bank.

He would constantly call at my house, watch my house. Park and sit in his car round the corner, sit at my door all of the night. He even had a tracking device fitted to my car. He knew my every move.

The police were not interested. I would be told "ignore him and get on with your life", "no crime has been committed", "a crime has been committed but too difficult to prove". Each time I called the police a statement was taken and nothing done about it. I tried to get them to deal with the cases collectively but no, each case was listed on its own and not related to any of the other calls I made. So each time I called them it was treated as a "new complaint" and did not take into account that I had previously called many times before. I remember telling them that nothing would be done until they found a dead body behind the door.

He was ignoring an interdict that I was eventually given (but no power of arrest was attached therefore it meant nothing...money wasted!)

After getting nowhere with the police I eventually contacted my local MP. She had a meeting with them and at that point they started to look back at all the complaints I had made.

He was eventually charged (there were numerous charges, mainly under breach of the peace). Several years have gone by and he still leaves flowers, valentine cards, concert tickets etc at my door, even though his bail conditions are supposed to prevent him from such acts. The trial date has been put back several times. Why? Who knows? At least he is being looked after whilst no one seems to care what life is like for me and my daughter.

We need the police to understand that this is a serious issue. All interdicts should have a power of arrest attached. The whole thing has made me very ill and unable to function properly. I can't see him ever leaving me alone. He thinks he is above the police. I think he is right.

Please help us.

29 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from [name withheld]

I wanted to contact you and let you know that I am in support Rhoda Grant MSP proposed changes to the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill making stalking an offence and making the crime have a more suitable punishment than the current breach of the peace.

My sister was stalked for 4 years by another woman and the affect it had on her has been awful to watch. She was a single lady living on her own and was a prisoner in her own home until eventually she had to move home. There was no support in place for her apart from us (her family), she had to wait a long time on the NHS waiting list to see a councillor to deal with the affects it had on her. At the same time her stalker walked free with no realisation or care for what she did. 4 years on from the ordeal starting she is now making ready to move away again and continue her university course that she had to leave when she moved home. Stalkers need a proper punishment and this also helps the victims work to get through the ordeal.

I thank you for your time.

7 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Joint Faiths Advisory Board on Criminal Justice

Presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention and amendments to section 17

The Joint Faiths Advisory Board on Criminal Justice (JFABCJ) has had a long history of engaging with the criminal justice system from the perspective of the communities in which often both the offender and the victim live. Members of the JFABCJ have experience as prison chaplains and have developed relationships with offenders and their families in prison visitors centres and community based projects.

It is clear that short periods of imprisonment can destroy the lives of those who receive them and of their families. A short period of imprisonment cannot provide meaningful activity or rehabilitation. It is simply a means of removing someone from their community, potentially breaking their ties to home and employment, and then releasing them back into the environment which they left. Short sentences presume that if a person is convicted of a crime then imprisonment is the best form of punishment. This argument is without depth; it is short sighted and it ignores the real consequences for us as a society in which punishment is seen in isolation from rehabilitation and reduction of re-offending. Meaningful community sentences enable offenders to pay something back to the community in which they offended while still maintaining the links to their homes and families which can enable them to build a future without continuing to offend.

Alternatives to custody can be far more challenging for the offender than an unconditional period of detention; they also have a lasting effect. The Church of Scotland, a member of JFABCJ, reported to the General Assembly on alternatives to custody in 2007. Their report included an interview with a prisoner who said "Alternatives to custody will only work if they are sufficiently onerous on the offender, such that they can be seen as practical. In addition, it must be made clear that a term of imprisonment carries similar requirements for the offender to address their behaviour. If not, persistent offenders would prefer an unconditional period in custody to a non-custodial sentence with onerous conditions." This report is available from www.churchofscotland.org. A short period of imprisonment simply does not have the capacity to introduce conditions of this type.

The Justice Committee stated in its Stage 1 Report on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill that “Where Committee members do not agree is on how far short-term custodial sentences should continue to be regarded as an appropriate disposal (other than in exceptional circumstances), and on whether they are currently being overused, or inappropriately used.”
We challenge the Committee to ask a different question: when is it appropriate to lock up people who do not pose a threat to public safety, with huge cost to the taxpayer and without any expectation of rehabilitation?

The proposals in section 17 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill, which are based on the independent Report of the Scottish Prison Commission, represent a modernisation of the criminal justice system and a real opportunity to change the relationship between offenders and their communities. Members of the Committee are urged to retain the presumption against short periods of imprisonment and to call on the Government to ensure that adequate resources are in place to provide the number of Community Payback Orders that these provisions would require.

Rev Elaine MacRae
Convener, Joint Faiths Advisory Board on Criminal Justice
12 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Scotland's Commissioner for Children and Young People

Scottish Government's Forensic Data Working Group

I am aware that you have recently received a letter from the Cabinet Secretary for Justice that included a draft list of ‘trigger’ offences for inclusion in an order to give effect to the provision in s.59 (6) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill (Retention of samples etc from children referred to children’s hearings). The letter, and some of the appended lists of offences refer to differences of opinion within the group and particularly the inability of my representative on the group to commit my office to the inclusion of a number of offences in the draft list.

I welcomed the opportunity for my office to participate in the Forensic Data Working Group as it provided a means to make a positive contribution to the debate around how to achieve a DNA retention regime, which is proportionate and respects the rights of children and young people.

I am writing to you today to further clarify my position on this provision and the draft list of ‘trigger’ offences.

Retention of DNA from children – SCCYP’s position

My office has consistently put forward the view that it may be proportionate to retain DNA profiles of a small number of children who pose a high risk of harm to others on the Scottish DNA Database (SDNAD). We have been equally consistent in raising the points that (1) any such retention regime must be proportionate and based on the actual risk posed by the child to others; (2) appropriate safeguards need to be put into place to protect the rights of children facing retention of their DNA; and (3) retention of DNA as a result of a children’s hearing would undermine the welfare-based ethos of the system, and an application to the sheriff for retention should therefore be required in respect of each individual child, outside of the children’s hearings system.

I welcome the Scottish Government’s stated commitment to children’s rights under the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC), and its commitment to progressive implementation of the Convention through Scots Law. In my view this policy tests that commitment. A proportionate DNA retention regime would carefully balance the competing rights of a child who committed an offence with the legitimate interests of victims of such an offence and society more widely to be protected. The current proposal does not in my view reflect such a rights-based approach. I would respectfully request that the Committee ask the Scottish Government to publish the details of its assessment of the impact of the current proposal on the rights of children. Further, it would be helpful if Ministers clarified whether in their view, the policy is compatible with the European Court of Human Rights’ views.
Rights’ judgment in S & Marper v United Kingdom (2008), and how they came to that view.

Comments on the list of ‘trigger’ offences

The lists of offences distributed to Committee members by the Cabinet Secretary include a number of offences to whose inclusion my office would not commit. This position has to be considered in the context of my opposition to the policy of automatic retention contained in s.59 of the Bill. These offences, which include assault, sexual assault, fire-raising, and others, were singled out because some of the problems with the policy approach taken in the Bill are most evident in those offences. They span a very wide range of behaviours, from minor transgressions at the lower end of the scale to very serious offences at the high end.

I oppose the provision in s.59 in its current form, because it will lead to disproportionate outcomes for children. My view is that the policy will have unintended outcomes because of its interaction with the welfare-based decision-making process undertaken by Children’s Reporters. Reporters decide whether to arrange a hearing in respect of a child referred to them on the basis of a number of criteria; the key test in that decision is whether the child is in need of compulsory supervision, not merely the gravity of the offence or the risk of reoffending. What ‘tips the balance’ in the Reporter’s decision to arrange a hearing may be any matter of significant concern about the child’s welfare. Under the retention regime provided for in the Bill, this may disproportionately lead to retention of the DNA of Scotland’s most vulnerable children rather than those who pose the highest risk of harm to others.

I previously raised the example of an 8-year old child who is referred to the Reporter on the offence ground following a playground scuffle, and charged with assault. If assault is included in the list of offences without robust safeguards in place, this child’s DNA would be retained on the SDNAD if they accept the ground of referral at a children’s hearing. In my view, this would be disproportionate and discriminatory, and the more recently proposed operational safeguards to be included in guidance will in my view be insufficient to mitigate the negative effects of the policy.

Conclusion

I would respectfully request that the Committee take my position into account when considering the Government’s draft list of offences and the wider policy on this important matter. The current provision, if enacted, will fail some of Scotland’s most vulnerable children and young people and contribute to their demonisation. Given the concerns raised with the Committee at stage 1 and throughout the life of the FDWG to date, I would suggest that the Cabinet Secretary reconsider the provision in s.59 and return to Parliament at a later point with a revised proposal for a proportionate DNA retention regime, which takes proper account of the rights of children.

Tam Baillie
Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People
12 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from [names withheld]

We are writing to you to give written support of Rhoda Grant MSP for the amendment for specific anti-stalking legislation in Scotland to make stalking a specific crime to make it easier for police to tackle offenders.

Our reason for this is that we have been the victims of stalking for six years now, [name withheld] in particular, and this is still ongoing. We have had the Anti Social Task Force (ASTF) and police involved, with a stalker pleading guilty to charges. Even though [name withheld] is the main victim of stalking, this has had a huge impact on the whole family. We have had support from the ASTF support service though this service has been withdrawn.

In our situation the stalkers use a variety of methods of surveillance, damage property, give us and in particular [name withheld] unwanted attention and send us things we don't want and our problems at present are not recognised under Scottish law as a stalking campaign and there is no law in place for prosecution.

We are aware that stalking is a very difficult crime to tackle because the individual acts alone aren’t always unlawful; sending somebody a letter or card is not against the law, but it’s the course of conduct. This is not recognised under our present law in Scotland.

Therefore, we strongly support Rhoda Grant MSP for the amendment for specific anti-stalking legislation in Scotland.

12 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from [name withheld]

I am writing with regards to the current stalking law in Scotland and I feel that it is long overdue that the law is changed and also that police forces take the matter much more seriously.

I have recently moved house in an attempt to shake the unwanted attention of a male (who was not an ex partner) in an attempt to get a feeling of safety in my life again. This individual has harassed me for over three years and despite being verbally told by myself and ignoring a solicitor’s letter to stay away has really faced no consequences for his actions. The police telephoned him once, advising him to refrain from contacting me and despite my many phone calls to them that he was at my door etc, no further action has been taken by them, except to give me a crime reference number. Needless to say I gave up even telephoning them, my safety is not important to my local constabulary.

So please do give a lot of consideration to changing the law as being a victim of stalking is the most lonely, traumatic experience I (and many others) have endured.

Thank you for your time.

30 March 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2
Written submission from [name withheld]

After reading the advertisement looking for women to tell their story about stalking I decided to tell you mine as I feel a law has to be brought in to protect women from stalkers as stalking has the same effects as domestic abuse on a woman and you have to be at the receiving end to know what it feels like.

I remarried in 2006 to what I thought was a nice kind man who had done a lot of work for charity. Never having lived with the guy before marriage there was a side to him that I didn’t know. I gave up my house, my job at [details withheld] to move up to [details withheld] to be with him and also left my teenage son to finish school in [details withheld] only seeing him at weekends and living with his father during the week.

Once I moved into the flat that we bought together I then saw a different side to the guy that I married. He became very jealous and possessive over myself and also my son. Problems came in quick to the marriage and after six months I decided to move back to [details withheld] so the flat went on the market. It was sold after nine months. My husband begged myself to give the marriage another go but try it in [details withheld]. I agreed to this and we rented a flat in [details withheld]. But things went from bad to worse so I asked him to leave. This he did but both him and his family begged myself to give it one more try as he had a fright and promised to change.

Meanwhile I was looking for a flat to buy as I was back to work at the hospital and the rent was very high and I thought that I would be better off with a mortgage. This I did in my own name and told him it was the only way I would give things another go.

So this happened and we flitted to [details withheld] together and my life went from bad to worse. After a major fall a few months later I told him we need to talk so we went out in the car for a drive, parked the car and talked things over. I told him that I had given him enough chances and it was time for him to leave. We went back to [details withheld], stopped the car and he stole my car keys with the flat key on it for me and refused to give them back until I gave him yet another chance. Enough was enough so I telephoned that police. Once I proved I was the owner of the flat the police sent him on his way after making arrangements for him to come and collect his belongings.

Then the stalking began. My landline rang constantly along with my mobile. I got calls like “am outside watching you”. I changed both my landline and mobile numbers, then the letters started coming. I telephoned him, told him there was no other chance and asked him to stop annoying myself. It was over by no matter what I tried it got worse. He started sleeping in his car close to my flat and even gave up his job at [details withheld]. I kept in touch with his family. They tried to talk to him without success. The letters came every second day. Flowers were being sent to myself or being tied to the door handle. Everywhere I looked he was there driving around [details withheld] waiting for me to come out of the flat. Then he would follow me. I even saw him in lay-bys on my way to work to start at 7.00am in the morning and he would be there again at 7.30 at night. I could tell you every registration of every [details withheld] in the area. He was even in the street one day. I saw him and ran into the charity shop. He followed me round the shop. I ran out and into the close of the flat shouting at him to leave me alone. My neighbour from the flat below came out and asked him to leave or he would make him leave.

I had a word with the police. They found him about the street and asked him to leave me alone. But this never happened, it got worse. He even started going to my friends’ houses and my family, trying to destroy friendships and family ties. He even tried to grab my son and take him in his car. I took my son inside where he broke down in tears. I put my son in the car and drove straight to the police station where my son had to go and speak to a police woman. The police telephoned my husband’s mobile and verbally asked him to leave me and my son. It didn’t make a difference. Things continued and three times he was escorted out of [details withheld] as far as [details withheld].

The police asked myself to go to a lawyer. The lawyer asked myself to get witnesses where in [details withheld] I knew no-one apart from the neighbour who was back living with parents and going through a divorce himself so I didn’t like to ask him.

Meantime different nurses from the hospital were approaching me and saying I heard your request on West Sound Radio last night. As I didn’t listen to West Sound I wondered what they were talking about. So I listened in to the radio station where I heard the request. It said “To my loving wife [name withheld] from your loving husband [name withheld]”. He used my maiden name as people knew me by it rather than [name withheld], my married name. Flowers continued to be tied to my door handle. Friends’ family got fed up with him and started telling him not to come back near their homes and my best friend and I fell out over him.

This continued for 18 months in total. I had to move to [details withheld] and inform the neighbours not to give out information as to where I was. This helped and I only ever saw him the odd occasion. But my confidence was lost. I was paranoid, locking myself in at all times, taking different roads to my work in fear of meeting him on the roads. This all happened it 2006 and still to this day I lock my doors at all times. The affect it has is just as bad as domestic abuse so please bring out a new law to protect victims of stalking.

I hope this letter helps a bit. I am now a support worker in the community and if I ever come across a victim of stalking I would do all I could to help that person as it is a frightening experience which has a lasting affect in someone’s life so please help whatever way you can.

18 March 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Scottish Ballet

Amendment 516

With reference to the above noted amendment to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, I believe that the wording of the amendment may have unintended consequences on arts organisations and theatrical companies producing performances with any element of nudity.

Nudity, as defined, would rule out presentations of some of the most powerful performance work of the 20th and 21st centuries, including numerous critically and publically acclaimed productions created and/or presented in Scotland, including at the Edinburgh International Festival. It would rule out iconic works by world-renowned directors and choreographers.

I note that the amendment is very similar to recent changes in the law in England and Wales (Policing and Crime Act 2009), but without the protective clauses relating to exemptions.

The Committee may wish to consider including an exemption for plays and related entertainment as defined and outlined in the Theatres Act 1968. Furthermore, the Committee might consider exempting premises covered by either the Theatre Licence or the Public Entertainment Licence.

Cindy Sughrue
Chief Executive/Executive Producer
Scottish Ballet
16 April 2010
SCASE is a coalition of individuals throughout Scotland, working to raise awareness of the harm caused to women through prostitution and other forms of commercial sexual exploitation, including stripping, lap dancing, pornography, sex tourism, mail order brides, and trafficking for the purposes of prostitution. It campaigns for legislative change necessary to: reduce the harm caused through prostitution and other forms of sexual exploitation; remove current gender inequality in the law; challenge the behaviour of men who buy sexual services. SCASE therefore supports the amendment, lodged by Sandra White MSP, seeks to allow local authorities to apply a specific licensing regime to adult entertainment venues, including limiting the number of premises in the local authority area that are permitted to provide adult entertainment. In our view activities such as stripping, lap dancing, pole dancing, and table dancing are forms of commercial sexual exploitation. We are supporting this extremely important amendment, which would, amongst other things, empower Local Authorities to decide on a local level of provision for lap dancing clubs.

Current licensing

Current licensing regulations do not provide sufficient controls for lap dancing and related activities. For example regulations limit both who is eligible to object to licensing applications, and the grounds on which objections can be made. This effectively means that it is not possible to object to the nature of the activity itself. Since we view such activities as exploitative we are opposed to any regulation that condones or manages these activities. Local authorities should have the option of refusing to license these activities because they are exploitative. These activities are incompatible with work on gender equality and on violence against women. It makes no sense to sign up to prevention and awareness work on male violence against women, or to fight for improved protection for women from sexual assault and harassment, and then condone such behaviour under the guise of ‘entertainment’. We cannot have an equal Scotland while women are abused and exploited in this way.

Definition and use of term ‘entertainment’

Lap dancing is referred to in the amendment as a form of ‘Adult Entertainment’. There are forms of entertainment suitable for adults (as opposed to children), but we are strongly of the view that it is inappropriate to use the term ‘entertainment’ when referring to exploitation. Whilst we accept that ‘adult entertainment’ is the commonly used term, it should be made clear that this is a euphemism designed to disguise the true nature of these activities, and to normalise sexual exploitation. Activities such as lap dancing are harmful for the individual women involved and have a negative impact on the position of all women through the objectification of women's bodies. This happens irrespective of whether individual women claim success or empowerment from the activity. It is essential to separate sexual activity or 'titillation', from exploitative sexual activity. In our view a sexual activity becomes sexual exploitation if it breaches a person's human right to dignity, equality, respect, and physical and mental wellbeing. It becomes commercial sexual exploitation when another person, or group of people, achieves financial gain or advancement through the activity. The fact that there is a demand for sexually exploitative activities does not make these activities legitimate: for example there is also a demand for child pornography. On the contrary, once the idea exists there is pressure on vulnerable women to become involved. There is evidence that once involved, there is pressure on women to take part in further sexual activity. See, for example, the report 'Profitable Exploits: Lap Dancing in the UK'.

[Lap dancing as gateway to prostitution]

Scottish research with men who had bought sex in prostitution found that 31% of the men had located accessed prostitution through a lap-dancing club. 34% of the men interviewed in Edinburgh who bought sex indoors reported that they had located prostitutes in a lap-dancing club. Significantly fewer (13%) of the men interviewed in Glasgow had located prostitutes in lap dancing clubs. Edinburgh currently has seven lap dance clubs whereas Glasgow has four. Although Glasgow City Council considers lap dancing to be a form of sexual exploitation, current licensing legislation does not prohibit it.

[Impact on communities]

Women who live or work near lap dancing clubs have reported harassment and verbal abuse from men leaving / arriving at clubs. There can be no doubt that the mixture of explicit sexual ‘dances’, and the availability of alcohol creates an atmosphere, which is extremely unsafe for women, and that woman with children, and families will avoid such areas if possible. This effectively creates city centre areas which are ‘no go’ areas for women and children. Public attitudes to ‘adult entertainment’ are changing, partly due to the normalisation of prostitution and pornography in popular culture. Findings show that younger people are more likely to be in favour of clubs opening in their neighbourhood than older people, and opposition to them is greater amongst women (63% opposed) than men (48%) (MORI/AEWG research). Research carried out by Glasgow Chamber of Commerce in 2003 found that three-quarters of city centre business believed that lap-dancing clubs would damage the reputation of the city; half were concerned about the safety of their staff in the vicinity of the clubs.

[Negative impact on women ‘dancers’]

Women who have worked in clubs report assaults, attempted assaults, and verbal abuse from men in the audience, and research has shown that a worrying number of women report being stalked by customers. (See 'Strip Club Testimony' by Kelly Holsopple, http://www.uri.edu/artsci/wms/hughes/stripc1.htm
[Link no longer operates]

A report ‘Violence and Stress at Work and in the Performing Arts’, by Giga, Hoel and Cooper, University of Manchester, published by the International Labour Office, Geneva, 2004, states that “Some dancers, particularly those employed in “exotic dancing” such as stage dancing, table dancing and lap dancing report social disillusionment and increased health problems due to: costume and appearance restrictions, dirty work environments, coercion by management and customers to perform particular types of dance, sexual harassment, physical assault, forced sex and the effects of stigmatisation”. Lap dancing has increased the vulnerability of all dancers. It presents a potential for direct skin to skin, genital-to-genital, or oral to genital contact in the guise of dancing. It increases the probability that dancers may be sexually coerced or assaulted, and blurs the boundary between entertainment that relies on sexual fantasy and that which involves physical contact. Although many dancers were supportive of regulating lap dancing, regulations introduced to date have not helped in reducing the impact of lap dancing on the lives of dancers. The findings of this study suggest that there is a need for a change in policy regarding the regulation of strip clubs and their patrons. (From Erotic/exotic dancing: HIV related risk factors, Lewis & Maticka-Tyndale, University of Windsor, 1998) Whilst the sex industry promotes lap dancing as a glamorous and lucrative dance form, the experience of women dancers is almost always very different. As one woman said, “If you're masturbating someone through his trousers with your arse then that's definitely a sexual service. It's outrageous that lap-dancing clubs are offering that kind of experience when they only need the same license as a cafe ... No matter what the owners tell you, these places are 100% sex industry.” (Jenni, quoted in Libby Brooks article, The Guardian, 19th March 2009)

Numerous articles and research studies have highlighted the poor working conditions for women, as for example Nadine De Montagnac reported at a Westminster parliamentary hearing: “I have witnessed a lot of things going on and the attitude towards women by the people in charge is appalling...the women entering the industry are vulnerable people...they think they will be protected and safeguarded but are being abused and brainwashed into it...It is a celebrity lifestyle which is sold to them and they think that being sexy is empowering. You are only empowered for three minutes when you are on stage; the rest of the time you are not empowered... you have no rights; there is no sick pay; if you do not like it you can leave, that is the answer to every complaint.” (From House of Commons Minutes of Evidence taken before the Culture, Media and Sport Committee, Tues 25th Nov 2008, available at: http://www.publications.parliament.uk/pa/cm200708/cmselect/cmcumeds/uc1093-iv/uc109302.html

Many women have to resort to lap dancing out of desperation or insurmountable financial hardship – when she finds herself impoverished with children to care for but lacking viable job skill. It is not as the media commonly suggests – that these women are all supposedly involved because when presented with a wide variety of attractive options, they’ve decided the sex industry has the most to offer. These reduced economic options are exploited and the most vulnerable women - poor women, women of color, and women with few job skills are more likely to find themselves in situations in which commercial sexual exploitation are their only options. A woman might choose to become involved commercial sexual exploitation because of limited alternative options. Why should we be prepared to accept that women who are poor, vulnerable and homeless should be “made available” for sexual exploitation by men. SCASE questions why Scotland needs a “sex” industry where women’s bodies and sexuality are aggressively commodified and exploited. This is a cultural phenomenon with the demand for a never-ceasing availability of women for men to use sexually.

We believe this amendment goes some way in giving power back to local authorities and communities to oppose applications for commercial sexual exploitation venues in their areas and to highlight the fundamental problem in our culture where men’s sense of entitlement and privilege for paid for sexual activity remains unchallenged.

26 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Challenging Demand Women’s Support Project

The Women’s Support Project (WSP) is a feminist charity working to raise awareness about and improve services, to tackle violence against women and children which includes women exploited through commercial sexual exploitation (CSE). There are clear links between child abuse, childhood neglect and domestic violence to women’s involvement in CSE. These factors, along with poverty, addictions, homelessness, trauma and mental health issues create vulnerability and inequality, which is exploited through men’s payment for sexual activity.

The WSP manages the Challenging Demand project (CD), which receives monies from the Scottish Government Violence against women funding. CD has 3 broad aims:

1. To increase understanding of the myths and realities surrounding commercial sexual exploitation.
2. To increase awareness of commercial sexual exploitation as a form of violence against women
3. To lobby for approaches which focus on and target the men who make up the demand for CSE.

CD believes that focus must be on the demand - the men who assume the right to purchase others for sexual activity, commodifying and marketing their bodies. No one has the right to exploit, nor profit from the exploitation of, another person regardless of any form of exchange of money, goods or services.

We therefore support Amendment 516 (lodged by Sandra White), which seeks to allow local authorities to apply a specific licensing regime to adult entertainment venues, including limiting the number of premises in the local authority area that are permitted to provide adult entertainment.

In our view activities such as stripping, lap dancing, pole dancing, and table dancing are forms of commercial sexual exploitation. We are supporting this extremely important amendment, which would, amongst other things, empower Local Authorities to decide on a local level of provision for lap dancing clubs.

Current licensing regulations do not provide sufficient controls for lap dancing and related activities. For example regulations limit both who is eligible to object to licensing applications, and the grounds on which objections can be made. This effectively means that it is not possible to object to the nature of the activity itself. Since we view such activities as exploitative we are opposed to any regulation that condones or manages these activities. Local authorities should have the option of refusing to license these activities because they are exploitative.

We believe this amendment goes some way in giving power back to local authorities and communities to oppose applications for commercial sexual exploitation venues in their areas and to highlight the fundamental problem in our culture where men’s sense of entitlement and privilege for paid for sexual activity remains unchallenged.

In the longer term it also offers an opportunity to change conflicting attitudes in Scotland about “commercialised sex” and violence against women (VAW). The Scottish Government hope to change these attitudes as outlined in their publication “Safer Lives: Changed Lives”. Lap dancing / “adult entertainment” is clearly included as part of a wide spectrum of behaviours that constitute male violence against women.

“Activities such as pornography, prostitution, stripping, lap dancing, pole dancing and table dancing are forms of commercial sexual exploitation. These activities have been shown to be harmful for the individual women involved and have a negative impact on the position of all women through the objectification of women’s bodies.”

These activities are incompatible with work on gender equality and on violence against women. It makes no sense to sign up to prevention and awareness work on male violence against women, or to fight for improved protection for women from sexual assault and harassment, and then condone such behaviour under the guise of ‘entertainment’. We cannot have an equal Scotland while women are abused and exploited in this way.

26 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Scottish Women’s Convention

Introduction
The purpose of the Scottish Women’s Convention (SWC) is to communicate and consult with women in Scotland to influence public policy. Through the Convention’s policy work, round table and celebratory events the SWC strives to have contact with women and relevant organisations. The SWC aims to provide an effective way of consulting with a diverse range of women in Scotland.

The Scottish Women’s Convention has a network of over 300,000 women from relevant organisations throughout Scotland.

Background
This paper provides a response by the Scottish Women’s Convention to the Scottish Parliament Justice Committee’s request for written evidence for a further amendment which it considers raises a significant new issue that was not considered in detail during the Stage 1 enquiry.

Amendment 516, lodged by Sandra White MSP, seeks to allow local authorities to apply a specific licensing regime to adult entertainment venues, including limiting the number of premises in the local authority area that are permitted to provide adult entertainment.

SWC Submission
As the SWC are totally committed to condemning all violence and exploitation of women and children we welcome consideration of this amendment by the Justice Committee and fully support the amendment put forward by Sandra White MSP.

It is our view that ‘adult entertainment’ is frequently a euphemism for commercial sexual exploitation and it normalises activities which disguise more abusive, controlling and demeaning behaviour towards women. We strongly believe that there is a critical need for a comprehensive review of the powers presently available to local authorities and communities to challenge or limit licences issued to lap dancing clubs and similar venues.

Current licensing regulations do not provide sufficient controls for lap dancing and related activities. We would therefore welcome any legislation that embeds greater powers with local authorities to curtail/reduce or otherwise restrict the availability or accessibility of adult entertainment venues.

Local authorities should be provided with the power in law to respond effectively to community resistance to and public concerns about the prevalence of adult entertainment venues in their area. Women who have spoken to the SWC have expressed real concern about the potential these venues provide for other exploitative sexual activities, namely prostitution, being conducted illicitly under the guise of adult entertainment businesses.

Feedback given to the SWC also strongly suggests consideration should be given to extending power sufficiently to enable interested groups to voice their concerns to licensing authorities regarding these establishments, regardless of whether their profile is national or local. Women have told the SWC that the ability of these groups to participate in the decision making process would assist often unprepared communities to formulate and challenge the granting of licenses.

The SWC believe that through legislative intervention local authorities must be provided with the powers to grant licences on the basis of the activity itself. We believe the powers should be focused on the interpretation of ‘public entertainment’ and do not agree with these establishments being licensed in the same way as entertainment for adults as opposed to something which is not suitable for children.

Finally, the SWC think that any advertising or promotion of jobs in this ‘industry’ by Job Centres conflicts with the gender equality responsibilities required by public service providers. Local Authorities should therefore be extended the power to exclude this type of advertising in their region of governance to protect women from latent exploitation and abuse.

The effect of conflicting messages when dealing with all forms of violence and exploitation of women must not be ignored. As a society we cannot condone the unlimited licensing of these establishments while rightfully condemning violence against women in our culture.

Isabelle Lannon
Policy Officer
26 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Engender

Engender works on a feminist anti-sexist agenda to make visible the impact of sexism on women, men, children, society and our social, economic and political development. We do this by making the causes and impact of women’s inequality visible, promoting gender equality in policy and practice and increasing women’s power and influence.

We welcome this opportunity to provide a written submission to Justice Committee with regard to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2 amendment 516 on the control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues.

Views of our members

Since 2004 Engender has continually worked to raise discussion among our members and the public about the issues surrounding certain forms of so-called ‘adult entertainment’ such as lap-dancing, stripping, pole-dancing and table dancing. The outcome of our research and discussion has been clear – rather than promoting female empowerment, financial security and freedom of expression, the normalisation of lap-dancing and strip-tease instead develops the illusion of sexual availability, while actively damaging women and reinforcing gender inequality.

Annual turnover in the UK ‘Adult Entertainment’ industry is estimated to be in excess of £300 million (approximately £15 million in Scotland alone) and is one of the fastest growing elements in the UK’s “leisure services” industry. This is of great concern to our members who view this ‘industry’ as legitimized commercial sexual exploitation.

Tackling commercial sexual exploitation

Engender holds that activities such as stripping, lap dancing, pole dancing, and table dancing are forms of commercial sexual exploitation. For this reason, we support the amendment lodged by Sandra White MSP which seeks to allow local authorities to apply a specific licensing regime to ‘adult entertainment’ venues, including limiting the number of premises in the local authority area that are permitted to provide ‘adult entertainment’.

We believe that Local Authorities should be empowered to decide on a local level of provision for lap dancing clubs and that current licensing regulations do not provide sufficient controls for lap dancing and related activities. Because we view such activities as exploitative we are opposed to any regulation that condones or manages them.

There is a recognisable link to prostitution and human trafficking (Holsopple, 1998; Bindel 2004). It can be argued that the clubs should be viewed and licensed as sex establishments and subject to the same controls.

Scottish research with men who had bought sex in prostitution found that 31% of the men had located accessed prostitution through a lap-dancing club. 34% of the men interviewed in Edinburgh who bought sex indoors reported that they had located prostitutes in a lap-dancing club.

Negative impacts on local communities and society as a whole

These establishments can also have negative consequences for those not directly involved. The areas surrounding ‘adult entertainment’ clubs are subject to higher levels of crime, sexual violence and increased levels of fear amongst women travelling in the vicinity (Lilith project 2007). The mixture of explicit sexual ‘dances’, and the availability of alcohol creates an atmosphere, which is extremely unsafe for women, and we know from our members that they will avoid such areas if possible which effectively creates city centre areas which are ‘no go’ areas for women and children. During a recent survey carried out with our members, 90% of respondents asserted that they would, or already had, objected to ‘adult entertainment’ premises being located within their neighbourhood. Again this demonstrates that members have concerns about the detrimental effects of such establishments and these concerns are supported by research. It has been shown that sexual assaults have increased in the geographic area surrounding ‘adult entertainment’ venues.

Advocates of ‘adult entertainment’ clubs argue that they are purely entertainment, not prostitution and the women work of their own volition. However, there is little doubt that the way that lap-dance clubs are organised, and the conditions that the dancers operate in, reinforces gender inequality, and normalises men’s sexual objectification of women.

At Engender we fully support Sandra White’s amendment because we believe that it gives power back to local authorities and to communities to oppose applications for commercial sexual exploitation venues in their areas. It would also potentially work to highlight the fundamental problem in our culture where men’s expectation of entitlement to paid-for sexual activity remains unchallenged.

Carol Flack
Projects Officer
26 April 2010
Stirling Action for Change is a multi-agency partnership committed to building a strategic framework in the Stirling area for tackling violence against women and children. The partnership brings together key statutory and voluntary organisations throughout Stirling. These agencies support the Scottish Government’s position that violence against women and children is any action which harms or causes suffering or indignity to women and children, where those carrying out the action are mainly men and where women and children are predominantly the victims.

Stirling Action for Change also supports the Scottish Government view that a shared approach is necessary to achieve greater consistency of service provision across Scotland to improve outcomes for women, children and communities, and we are working towards progress in bringing about the changes in Scottish society that are required to eradicate violence against women.

Our position

We are supportive of the amendment 516 lodged by Sandra White MSP and urge the Justice Committee to support it. Our arguments in favour of this amendment can be summarised as follows:

- Lap dancing is a form of commercial sexual exploitation and, as such, is a form of violence against women. It sanctions the objectification of women, glamorises exploitation and harms work to achieve gender equality.
- The proliferation of lap dancing clubs is harmful to women individually, women collectively, and communities, and we support measures to prevent this.

Scotland has been innovative in its approaches to tackling forms of violence against women and is admired internationally for its progress on domestic abuse. It would be fitting if Scotland could now become as progressive in tackling the harmful effects of the sex industry. Lap dancing clubs harm communities. They make women feel uncomfortable, unsafe, and can create ‘no-go’ areas in our towns and cities.

Councils should have the power to limit the number of clubs – setting the limit at zero if they wish to – and, therefore, we support amendment 516. We urge the committee to take a stand against exploitation and stand for a safer and more equal society and to support this amendment.
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 2

Written submission from Glasgow Community and Safety Services on behalf of Glasgow City Council and Community Planning Partners

Amendment 516: control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues

Introduction

Glasgow Community and Safety Services (GCSS) welcome the opportunity to provide evidence to the Justice Committee and to strongly urge that Amendment 516 lodged by Sandra White MSP, which would allow local authorities to apply a specific licensing regime to adult entertainment venues, is supported. The City Council and GCSS have been concerned about the current licensing regime which provides little scope for Licensing Boards to consider the nature of the activities involved. In attempting to respond to the concerns raised by individual citizens, organisations and businesses the Council has submitted a number of objections to applications but the criteria for refusals are extremely limited. This new proposal would provide local authorities with greater powers to determine the number, if any, of clubs in their area.

GCSS is a charitable organisation formed by Glasgow City Council and Strathclyde Police to prevent crime, tackle anti-social behaviour and promote community safety in the city. GCSS has specific responsibility for taking forward work on violence against women on behalf of the Council including Glasgow’s commercial sexual exploitation policy. Managing support provision for women involved in prostitution and women who have been trafficked for sexual exploitation also provides a wealth of specialised knowledge on the issue of prostitution and trafficking and in particular the experience and needs of women.

There have been robust, strategic and well developed partnership arrangements in Glasgow to address the various issues of violence against women and children since 1998. Whilst this response has been drawn up by GCSS on behalf of GCC the views are shared across Community Planning partners in the city. It is also worth noting that Commercial sexual exploitation is a priority for action within the City’s Annual Strategic Safety Assessment.

Why this change is needed?

In 2009, the Scottish Government published “Safer Lives: Changed Lives” which recognises commercial sexual exploitation, including table dancing and lap dancing as forms of violence against women which has “been shown to be harmful for the individual women involved and have a negative impact on the position of all women through the objectification of women’s bodies. This happens irrespective of whether individual women claim success or empowerment from the activity”. We consider that the approach in “Safer Lives” firmly implies that the Scottish Government now have a clear duty to implement measures aimed to assist local authorities, community planning partners and the Police with tackling all forms of violence against women. Not only is commercial sexual exploitation harmful for those directly involved but the mainstreaming of the sex industry also has a broader cultural harm which normalises and condones sexual violence.

- GCSS views lap dancing as one form of commercial sexual exploitation which degrades women and encourages men to objectify women for their own gratification. This runs counter to Glasgow City Council’s aim to promote a city in which all citizens are treated with respect and dignity. The fact that there is a demand for these activities does not make them legitimate.

- Current situation unsatisfactory. There are 4 lap dancing clubs operating in Glasgow at present, all within the City Centre boundary. Intelligence would suggest that these venues are in fact linked to, and part of, the sex industry and that buying and selling of sexual services does occur in some clubs. In 2009, with the introduction of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, premises licences were refused for 2 of the clubs after inspections from Licensing Standards Officers identified several areas of non-compliance. These breaches related to advertising of low cost alcohol promotions, rules relating to nudity being broken as well as violations of the “no touching” rules. Appeals for these licences are currently pending.

- Concern about the harmful impact on women dancers. Research shows that buying and selling of sexual services occurs in some clubs and women performers face poor working conditions and high levels of harassment. (Profitable Exploits: Lap Dancing in the UK, Julie Bindel, August 2004). An interview with a performer in the Adult Entertainment Working Group Report published by the Scottish Executive in 2006 detailed that she was a “self-employed contractor and has no working rights”. Commission taken by club owners can be as much as 50% of the dancer’s earnings on a shift. It is not unusual for a performer to finish a shift in “debt” to the club, as there have been no customers willing to pay for a dance. By creating conditions where it is very difficult for dancers to make a profit, this may lead to performers offering sexual services in order to top up their earnings.

- Lap dancing can be a gateway to prostitution. Scottish research with men who had bought sex in prostitution found that 31% of the men had accessed prostitution through a lap-dancing club. 34% of the men interviewed in Edinburgh who bought sex indoors reported that they had accessed this in a lap-dancing club. This had been the case for significantly fewer (13%) of the men interviewed in Glasgow. (Challenging Men’s Demand for Prostitution in Scotland, Women’s Support Project, 2008)
• Negative impact on communities. Those living or working nearby clubs are concerned about harassment. The Adult Entertainment Working Group Report, Scottish Executive 2006, outlines a significant point raised by the Sandyford Initiative that “men who are aroused when they leave adult entertainment venues pose a threat for those walking past or residents nearby, especially if they are in groups of stag parties. Women in particular may feel more fearful in these areas.” The Report also highlights that The City of Edinburgh Council had in the years before the Report’s publication seen a vast increase in complaints from residents and workers in the Tollcross area, in relation to” incidents of harassment and intimidation of local women and men, by the users of the areas lap dance clubs”. Local businesses and residents generally agree that the presence of lap dancing clubs in the city has not only the effect of public nuisance, but a generally adverse impact on a city’s image.

• Current licensing regime is ineffective. Although Glasgow City Council has for years attempted to clamp down on the provision of these clubs the current licensing framework does not grant sufficient powers. At the moment, the licensing of such clubs is regulated as part of the leisure industry as opposed to sex industry under Section 41 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 which outlines the need for a “Public Entertainment Licence” in order to legally operate. The term “public entertainment” is inaccurate and misleading in light of the activities offered by these clubs. Portraying women as sexual objects plays a part in normalising sexual violence and contributes to the male abuse of women being acceptable, tolerated, condoned and excused. The provision of “grandfather rights” under the 2005 Act also creates another obstacle, making it very difficult for a local authority to refuse a licence, where one has been granted under previous legislation. These rights also make it difficult to impose new conditions on such clubs.

• Changes in England and Wales. In 2008, the Home Office announced its intention to introduce a number of measures in England and Wales to tackle demand and improve protection for women involved in the sex industry. These measures are now in force through the recently enacted Policing and Crime Bill which has re-categorised lap dancing venues as “sex entertainment venues”, giving local authorities the same licensing powers as apply in sex shops in order to ensure better regulation and give local people a greater say. In light of these recent changes in England and Wales, it is clear that the time is right for Scotland too, to take decisive action to ensure greater consistency throughout the UK.

Conclusion

This amendment to the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill provides the Scottish Government with the opportunity to grant local authorities the necessary powers to control and restrict the provision of lap dancing clubs within their area. Indeed it may be appropriate to set the provision of adult entertainment premises at nil. We firmly believe that local authorities must have the option to refuse to licence such establishments. There is an overwhelming contradiction in licensing such exploitative activities while at the same time trying to promote a Scotland grounded on principles of equality, dignity and human rights for all. We would hope that this amendment would also cover new applications as well as variations of existing licences in order to prevent pubs and clubs from providing adult entertainment activities on their premises.

We would urge the Justice Committee to consider legislative reform of the licensing law relating to activities such as lap dancing by supporting Amendment 516.

27 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities

Stage 2 amendment on the control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues.

Introduction

1. COSLA, as the representative organisation of all Scottish Councils, is pleased to respond to the invitation to comment on Amendment 516 lodged by Sandra White MSP seeking to allow local authorities to apply a specific licensing regime to adult entertainment venues, including by limiting the number of premises in a local authority area that are permitted to provide adult entertainment.

2. In the time available it has not proved possible to obtain responses from all our member councils, so the comments below are based on a restricted number of views. Neither has it been possible to obtain political approval of this submission but it is hoped to confirm that approval shortly until which time these comments have the status of an officer submission only.

Background

3. COSLA has identified issues around the commercial exploitation, trafficking and violence against women in relation to lap dancing. In this connection, members of the Justice Committee may already be aware that the Scottish Government and COSLA are joint signatories to Safer Lives: Changed Lives – a Shared Approach to Tackling Violence Against Women in Scotland. This includes the statement that Activities such as pornography, prostitution, stripping, lap dancing, pole dancing and table dancing are forms of commercial sexual exploitation. These activities have been shown to be harmful for the individual women involved and have a negative impact on the position of all women through the objectification of women’s bodies. This happens irrespective of whether individual women claim success or empowerment from the activity. It is essential to separate sexual activity from exploitative sexual activity. A sexual activity becomes sexual exploitation if it breaches a person’s human right to dignity, equality, respect and physical and mental wellbeing. It becomes commercial sexual exploitation when another person, or group of people, achieves financial gain or advancement through the activity.

Comments

4. It is noted that the proposal is not to ban adult entertainment but to regulate it.
5. Generally, the proposed amendment requires clarification as to its intent and consideration needs to be given to the processes that would stem from its implementation, and whether it would add to local authorities’ ability to control lap dancing/commercial sexploitation.

6. It is understood that the thinking behind the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 was that this Act and its associated regulations contained sufficient powers for Licensing Boards to regulate adult entertainment in premises with a licence under that Act. It would appear that the proposed amendment would require lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues to apply for an adult entertainment licence in the same way as a sex shop licence.

7. This skirts round the issue of the provisions of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 section 41(2)(F) as amended which exempts liquor licensed premises from the need to apply for a public entertainment licence. The new licensing requirement would apply both to adult entertainment premises with and without a liquor licence. It is felt that there can be few that fall into the second category.

8. Inviting Boards to consider premises licence applications - incorporating proposed operating plans including adult entertainment - and then inviting Councillors as Licensing Committees to consider applications for Civic Government licences for lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues would be at the very least confusing. It does not equate with the generally accepted principle of ‘light touch’ regulation and would not be helpful to businesses. The activity should be subject to one regulatory regime.

9. Clarification would be helpful as to whether the proposer is seeking to cover adult entertainment venues at which alcohol is not sold and for which premises licences are therefore not required. If this is the case, before introducing a new form of licensing, the question must be debated as to whether this is an issue.

10. On the basis of the limited views available, COSLA’s view is that the amendment is unnecessary unless the desire is for councils to take control of the regulation of adult entertainment in place of Licensing Boards. That would allow a more proactive control than has been allowed to Boards. The principle of affording discretion to regulate if so minded, is generally acceptable to COSLA, but in this instance the detail would require further consideration to avoid double regulation.

11. From the resource perspective, no particularly adverse impact is foreseen from the perspective of enforcement or resources unless there is a level of application not presently anticipated. If the amendment is passed, however, COSLA would wish an assurance that the situation will be monitored with additional resources being provided if required.

27 April 2010
Scottish Women’s Aid would like to lend their support to Amendment 516, lodged by Sandra White MSP, which seeks to allow local authorities to apply a specific licensing regime to adult entertainment venues, including by limiting the number of premises in the local authority area that are permitted to provide adult entertainment.

We echo the argument put forward by Zero Tolerance in their submission to the Committee in this matter:

- Lap dancing is a form of commercial sexual exploitation, and as such as a form of violence against women. It sanctions objectification of women, glamorises exploitation and harms work to achieve gender equality.
- The normalisation of the sex encounter ‘industry’ must be challenged.
- The proliferation of lap dancing clubs is harmful to women individually, women collectively, and communities, and we support all measures to prevent this.

Louise Johnson
National Worker, Legal Issues
28 April 2010
I refer to amendment 516 by Sandra White MSP which seeks to allow local authorities to apply a specific licensing regime to adult entertainment venues, including limiting the number of premises in the local authority area that are permitted to provide adult entertainment.

The Licensing Law Sub-Committee of the Law Society of Scotland (the Sub-Committee) has the following comments to make.

The Sub-Committee questions whether this proposed amendment is necessary given that it is the Sub-Committee’s understanding that all such venues have a premises licence under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (the “2005 Act”).

With particular reference to section 23 of the 2005 Act, the Board must, in terms of section 23(4) in considering and determining an application for a premises licence, consider where any of the grounds for refusal apply and if any of the grounds apply (section 23(4)(b)), the Board must refuse the application.

With particular reference to section 23(5) which sets out the grounds for refusal (including overprovision at section 23(5)(e)) the Sub-Committee notes in particular the terms of section 23(5)(d) being a ground of refusal namely:

23(5)(d) that, having regard to –
(i) The nature of the activities proposed to be carried on in the subject premises
(ii) The location, character and condition of the premises, and
(iii) The persons likely to frequent the premises, the Board considers that the premises are unsuitable for use for the sale of alcohol.

More generally, the Sub-Committee notes that the ground of refusal set out at section 23(5)(c) is that the Licensing Board considers that the granting of the application would be inconsistent with one or more of the licensing objectives and that in considering whether the granting of application would be inconsistent with any licensing objective (section 23(6)(b)), the Licensing Board must take into account any report made by the appropriate Chief Constable under subsection (3)(b) of section 21.

The licensing objectives in terms of section 4 of the 2005 Act are preventing crime and disorder, securing public safety, preventing public nuisance, protecting and improving public health and protecting children from harm.

This amendment could lead to a curious and anomalous situation whereby a Licensing Board grants a premises licence in respect of premises providing adult entertainment all in terms of section 23 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 yet a local authority refuses a public entertainment licence in respect of the same premises where the local authority has resolved in terms of schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 to have effect in their area in relation to adult entertainment venues.

The Sub-Committee notes that this is specifically provided for in terms of the amendment which seeks to insert paragraph 6(A) after sub paragraph (6) to schedule 2 of the 1982 Act in that “a local authority may refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a licence despite the fact that a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 is in effect in relation to the adult entertainment venue.

This becomes particularly problematic where a Licensing Board has granted a premises licence and a local authority has resolved, in terms of schedule 2(9) sub-paragraph 6 of the 1982 Act to fix "Nil" as the appropriate number of adult entertainment venues for the purposes of schedule 2(9) sub-paragraph (5)(c).

The Sub-Committee is concerned that a double licensing system will be brought into effect as a result of this amendment despite the extensive regulatory and enforcement powers available to Licensing Boards in terms of the 2005 Act.

The Sub-Committee therefore questions whether it is correct to allow the closure of licensed premises which offer this nature of activity in a well managed environment where the Licensing Board has no cause for concern simply as a result of a policy decision of a local authority.

Alan McCreadie
Deputy Director, Law Reform
27 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Lynn Anderson

Written submission in support of amendment 516

When we refer to lap dancing as “adult entertainment”, who are adults that are being entertained? It is adult men that are being entertained and at whose expense? At the expense of girls, women and communities, but also at the expense of boys and men. How do we expect young men to form healthy, fulfilling relationships with women when we license venues for them to go and objectify women, to use the power of their pound to get women to act in a way that the men want. These venues are only teaching men that they can control women, not respect them or treat them like equals or understand them as sentient beings who are entitled to define their own sexuality – not having it prescribed to them by male demands.

Even in daylight I feel uncomfortable walking by lap dancing or “gentlemen” clubs, but I can’t avoid them because they are on (or just off) our high streets. I feel uncomfortable because I know these are places where women are reduced to bodies, and the purpose of these bodies is to sexually arouse men. They serve me as a reminder of how far we have still to go to achieve equality. Women will never be seen as equal to men while they are still reduced to body parts whose purpose is to serve men’s wants. I avoid the parts of town in the evening where these clubs are, as I do not want to come across men exiting the clubs. I fear the sexual harassment I may receive from a group of men whose “entertainment” has just involved their sexual arousal. Lets be clear, these clubs are not entertaining for women.

The Scottish Government has made some acknowledgement of the harm that men cause with their demand for prostitution and has taken steps to address this demand. But what is lap dancing? Lap dancing venues involve men paying money to get women to perform sexually. The rules may state that there should be no physical contact, but the aim of the woman’s performance is the sexual gratification of the man. Lap dancing is just a version of prostitution, and a gateway to the legally defined version of prostitution. Please continue with your work in addressing the harm caused by the commercial sexual exploitation of women and girls by supporting this amendment. Please provide local councils with the tools to react to their communities’ concerns.

I fully support Sandra White’s amendment, which will let communities and local councils take back some control of the proliferation of these venues in their area.

Lynn Anderson
26 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Evelyn Tett

I am strongly in support of amendment 516 to the above Bill (lodged by Sandra White). This is because I see lap-dancing as a form of exploitation of women.

Lap dancing and other forms of so-called ‘adult entertainment’ are sexually exploitative and damaging to women’s lives and to gender equality. The Scottish Government document ‘Safer Lives: Changed Lives’ notes that commercial sexual exploitation causes harm to all women, by sanctioning objectification of women’s bodies, and further notes that this harm to women collectively happens regardless of whether individuals claim liberation or empowerment from the activity.

Lap dancing glamorises exploitation whereas the reality is that lap-dancing clubs are highly exploitative. Unlike other dance performances where the audience members pay for a ticket and the organisation staging the performance pays the performers, in ‘adult entertainment’ the women have to pay the club in order to perform (often around £80-£100 per night), and then the men pay the women directly. Women also pay for club outfits and pay fines for being late or missing shifts.

Clubs maintain a high ‘performer to punter’ ratio to offer the customer maximum choice of varieties of women – in itself an indicator of their view that women are objects for consumption and not human beings with rights and dignity – and this means there is intense competition between performers, which in turns escalates the types of performance on offer. Increasingly men expect explicit sexualised behaviour and full nudity. Even in clubs where licensing conditions are adhered to many women report a heavy psychological toll linked to dealing with, in effect, normalised sexual harassment on a nightly basis.

Lap dancing is a manifestation of gender inequality. It is not a coincidence that the performers in lap-dancing clubs in Scotland are almost all women and the customers and business owners are almost all men. This industry thrives on the systematic exploitation of women by men – and a gendered hierarchy of power. An industry like this has no place in modern Scotland.

Evelyn Tett
26 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Federation of Scottish Theatre

Thank you for the opportunity to submit evidence in relation to the above amendment to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

We are supportive of proper regulation of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues, but we are concerned that Amendment 516 as currently worded may have unintended consequences for nudity or semi-nudity within the context of theatre or live art performances.

We would like to see two additional clauses excluding, firstly, ‘plays’ as defined in the Theatres Act 1968\(^1\) and secondly, theatre and performance premises who hold a Theatre or Public Entertainment Licence.

Jon Morgan
Director
Federation of Scottish Theatre
27 April 2010

\(^1\) “Play” is defined in the 1968 Theatres Act as “any dramatic piece, whether involving improvisation or not, which is given wholly or in part by one or more persons actually present and performing and in which the whole or a major proportion of what is done by the person or persons performing, whether by way of speech, singing or action, involves the playing of a role”.
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Steven McDonald on behalf of Diamond Dolls, Glasgow and Hooters, Edinburgh

Diamond Dolls has operated since October 2000 and Hooters has operated since February 2004. My current role with the two venues are senior management and promoter.

I have had a career in the lap dancing industry in Scotland since 1997.

In 2005 I was invited to the Scottish Executive to meet with reporters for the Nicholson report and share my knowledge of the lap dancing industry in Scotland.

I submit amendment 516 is unnecessary and its true purpose unclear. It is apparent there is a desire to side step the stringent licensing laws and current legislation for lap dancing venues.

I am somewhat surprised that a call for a specific licensing regime is presented in the amendment.

The author of the amendment should be aware that licensing boards have produced and implemented for several years a code of practise relative to the provision of lap dance entertainment and licensed premises. The code of practice covers all aspects of the operation of lap dancing venues.

The code describes its expectations and compliance with its terms and any failure to do so will be taken into account in assessing the continuing suitability of any affected premises for the sale of alcoholic liquor.

A measure of the success of the implementation of the code of practise is the reality that there is NO EVIDENCE that there are significant problems of disorder, antisocial behaviour or public nuisance surrounding the operation of lap dancing clubs and indeed all the evidence points to the contrary.

The lap dancing industry as it is currently regulated is one of the most closely monitored and tightly regulated licensed activities in the country. With the additional powers given to licensing boards under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005; such boards are even more empowered than in the past to deal with any matters arising from these venues.

The licensing boards have wide-ranging powers from mere warnings through to suspension to revocation of a licence. Clearly with out a licence the premises would not be able to operate.

The utilization of Licensing Standards Officers under the new regime has provided a further layer of enforcement to licensing boards over and above the traditional involvement of the police. It has been noted on many occasions by police officers representing chief constables at the time of lap dancing licence application renewals, that these premises do not present a concern to the police.

In regard to limiting the number of premises in a local authority area an example of both Edinburgh and Glasgow can show that in fact no new lap dancing venues have been permitted to operate in either city since 2004.

Finally, it is difficult to comprehend that there is not a hidden agenda behind the proposed amendment 516 when for example one considers the guidance notes for sex shop applications in Glasgow reads:

“Be advised that applications for sex shops have been refused on the grounds that the committee felt that the number of sex shops for the locality should be NIL.”

The current licensing regime has proven to be completely effective in the control of lap dancing / adult entertainment venues

Please reject amendment 516.

Steven Macdonald
26 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Lisa Kember

I just want to send a message of support in favour of the above amendment to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. I work in the violence against women sector but on a personal level I have had to live in areas with a high percentage of lap dancing venues and it is horrible. The noise and lewd behaviour of the customers towards the general public outside of the establishments is unacceptable and frightening. I also believe that lap dancing, stripping and ‘adult’ clubs demean and objectify women and we should be doing everything we can as a society to eradicate this inequality.

Lisa Kember
27 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Allan Balsillie

My understanding of the law is not good, so I apologise if I've misunderstood any part of the latest amendment to the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill.

My main concern about this amendment is in its definition of an adult entertainment venue. Purposely intended to cover places of public adult entertainment, the definition actually appears designed to throw its net far wider. All that would be required is a business element, a degree of nudity and an audience of one.

The most obvious group to suffer would be prostitutes. I understand prostitutes are allowed to work alone from their own premises. This amendment would demand that they hold an adult entertainment licence, which they certainly would not apply for (given the cost, the public nature of the application process and the chances of being refused). Therefore the adult entertainment venue definition would turn every indoor prostitute into a criminal. The client could also be criminalised if he/she arranged for a prostitute to visit. The criminalisation of prostitution may have been intentional but I do not believe it's a desirable outcome.

There are other situations which the definition could cover inappropriately. Private adult events/parties where the business element is simply to cover costs rather than make money; does the term "used as a business" exclude such financial arrangements? Would a photographic studio require a licence if if there was nude modelling taking place? I believe the definition should be tightened.

My other concern is that the amendment is overly hostile to what is relatively tame adult entertainment. The public entertainment licence already permits adequate control of the entertainment being provided. Setting in place a presumably more expensive hurdle is unfair and panders to intolerant attitudes.

Allan Balsillie
26 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Donna Sparrow

Lap dancing is a form of commercial sexual exploitation, and as such as a form of violence against women. It sanctions objectification of women, glamorises exploitation and harms work to achieve gender equality.

Donna Sparrow
26 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Consenting Adult Action Network - Scotland

Amendment 516: Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues

Consenting Adult Action Network (CAAN) Statement:

'We believe in the right of consenting adults to make their own sexual choices, in respect of what they do, see and enjoy alone or with other consenting adults, unhindered and unfettered by government.'

'We believe that it is not the business of government to intrude into the sex lives of consenting adults.'

Introduction

CAAN wishes to register their opposition to Amendment 516 regarding the control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues.

It is with no small pleasure that we notice that the amendments regarding prostitution have been deferred, partially on the grounds that the topic requires more research than the short evidence gathering for amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill allowed. Prostitution is no doubt a complex issue, but lap dancing is equally complex with its duel commercial and social taboo implications. We would ask that Amendment 516 likewise be deferred pending further research.

1) What is the purpose behind creating this amendment?

There is no clear goal for the Justice Committee to accept this amendment as proposed by MSP Sandra White.

The first most obvious reason behind Ms White’s amendment is that lap dancing, and indeed all erotic displays, are morally reprehensible. It should come of no surprise that this amendment comes from Sandra White from Glasgow, the city which states on its application for a sex shop licence:

(www.glasgow.gov.uk/en/Business/Licences/Trading/sexshoplicensing2.htm): [Link no longer operates]

Be advised that, in the past, applications for a sex shop licence have been refused on the grounds that the committee felt that the number of sex shops for the locality (ie. Glasgow) should be nil.

Glasgow's stance on lap dancing, sex shops, and all manner of consenting sexual adult behaviour is clear, but it is not Glasgow with which this amendment is concerned – it is all of Scotland. Is Glasgow attempting to enforce its morals upon all of Scotland? Or is this Glasgow’s revenge after the failure to close the lap dancing clubs in their city? The question of whether it is appropriate for a government to enforce morality must be addressed.

A second possible reason for this amendment might be “protection of women”. Putting aside arguments about sex causing aggression (because that’s all these arguments state, is that pornography, lap dancing, even erotic short stories, all serve to make men violent by making them think about sex – and these arguments remain unproven), are not the dancers in these clubs women too? Is the Scottish Government not obliged to protect the most vulnerable members of society, such as these dancers?

If the Scottish Government believes that erotic dancers are victims, how does Ms White’s proposed amendment serve to protect them? The answer is it doesn’t. Julie Bindel’s 2003 report on lap-dancing found that “Many of the dancers were convinced that these [dress codes] are rules imposed by the licensing boards, rather than club owners. One dancer commented that “The council (sic) make us wear longer clothes that cover up more earlier in the evening.” In fact, these rules are imposed by management.” The legislation will further isolate the dancers from mainstream society and make them ripe for exploitation, a concern echoed in the 2006 Adult Entertainment Working Group report. Removing the social pariah aspect of erotic dancing would be a good step in allowing any dancer abused by staff or customers to go to the proper authorities.

There might be several reasons why the Scottish Government would decide to change the law regarding adult entertainment venues, but the reasoning behind any changes must be clear to the public.

2) Why is the Scottish Government allowing this legislation to be an amendment onto the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill?

The original consultation on adult entertainment was performed in 2006. If the matter was so pressing that it required its own research, why is the matter being treated as an afterthought? Surely this is important enough to have as its own piece of legislation, or otherwise it would have been included in the 2010 CJLB from the beginning. The public needs to know why lap dancing is being introduced at Stage 2 of this bill.

3) On what research is this amendment based?

While various debates about adult entertainment venues have raged for decades, the four pieces most likely to be referenced in this situation would be the 2003 Lilith Report on Lap Dancing and Striptease in the Borough of Camden, the 2004 Profitable Exploits: Lap Dancing in the UK (commissioned by Glasgow City Council, conducted by Julie Bindel), and the 2006 Adult Entertainment Working Group (Scottish Executive).
The first piece, most commonly quoted, is riddled with errors. A number of anti-sex activists quote the Lilith Report as saying that “Comparing the rape and indecent assault figures for 1999, before the establishment of Spearmint Rhino and Secrets Holborn, Finchley Road and Euston, and 2002...rape of women in Camden has increased by 50%, ...[and] indecent assault of women in Camden has increased by 57%.” These figures were disproven in a Guardian retraction:
(http://www.guardian.co.uk/theguardian/2009/jan/12/corrections) in January 2009: [Link no longer operates]

“The three articles cited statistics from a 2003 study which said that the number of rapes increased by 50% and indecent assaults by 57% in the London borough of Camden after four lap dancing venues opened. According to the Lilith Report on Lap Dancing and Striptease in the Borough of Camden the statistics were based on information published by the Metropolitan police relating to the financial years 1998-99 and 2001-02. The Metropolitan police have provided us with the following figures: 72 rapes and 162 indecent assaults in the borough in 1998-99, and 96 rapes and 251 indecent assaults in 2001-02, which corresponds to a 33% increase in rape and a 55% increase in indecent assault (‘I was seen as an object, not a person’, 19 March 2008, page 18, G2; Lapdancing’s naked truths, 23 April 2008, page 29). In one article it was unclear that the study focused on a limited period; the latest figures, for 2007-08, show declines in both crimes from their 1998-99 levels (‘It becomes wallpaper’, 17 November 2008, page 12, G2).”

In short, the links between sexual crime and lap dancing clubs is not as strong as people quoting the Lilith Report would have you believe. It would be wise for the Justice Committee to take any references to the Lilith Report with a grain of salt.

The other two reports are more closely related. Both Ms Bindel and the AEWG found that working conditions needed improvement in order to protect the dancers from exploitation. Ms Bindel found resistance in club owners to dancers joining the GMB (General Trade Union). Corporations are usually wary of unions, one example being Asda. Recently in Japan, hostesses are unionising to fight for better working conditions which shows that working conditions are the most important issue for women in these sorts of industries.

Both reports also mention alcohol as being a problem. Ms Bindel flat out states “drunkenness” as a problem, whereas the AEWG lists “alcohol induced rudeness from clients”. This suggests that alcohol regulation in adult entertainment establishments may be a better method of improving the dancers’ working conditions.

The AEWG’s public opinion research was more in depth than Ms Bindel’s. Ms Bindel interviewed some 20 individuals outside the clubs whereas the AEWG had a more standardized poll of 822 individuals. To be honest, I find most of the complaints listed in Ms Bindel’s research to be remarkably similar to my own personal experience living on the Grassmarket in Edinburgh – a location with no lap dancing clubs. Similar complaints about anti-social behaviour have also been documented about stag night apartments in Edinburgh\
Again, this points towards alcohol being more of a problem than sex, sex work, or lap dancing.

Among the numerous recommendations from Ms Bindel were:

- Specific licensing conditions should be introduced to address issues of employment practice and working conditions for the dancers
- Licensing, codes of conduct for dancers and club rules/conditions should be regularised
- The rules of the club and the licence should be prominently displayed in all lap dance venues, including at the entrance and on tables and bar areas
- Clubs should be subject to regular, obligatory checks by undercover police officers
- Dancers’ ‘rent’ payment to management should be abolished
- VIP suites and curtained areas should be eradicated
- CCTV coverage should be introduced throughout the performance, including in the seating areas

Among the recommendations from the AEWG were:

4.3 Performers should not touch, or be touched by, customers. In order to remove any doubts about touching, and for the safety of performers, there must be a distance of one metre between performer and any other person during entertainment activities.
4.4 There should be adequate health and safety protection for performers, including
   1. Dedicated and private changing, washing and toilet facilities, separate from public facilities. The Local Authority should determine what is adequate given the layout and circumstances of the venue.
   2. A minimum temperature of 20°C, confirmed by fixed thermometer, in all working and changing areas.
   3. Adequate lighting in all working and changing areas.
   4. All work and changing areas must be kept clean, free from obstruction and with surfaces that are fit for purpose.
   5. Adequate and hygienic facilities to make hot drinks and eat meals, and a supply of cold drinking water.
4.5 There should be adequate security to ensure compliance with the regulations and prevent illegal activity.

These are all commendable recommendations that would improve the working conditions of dancers and make it easier for councils to shut down exploitative businesses.

None of these are addressed in the current amendment.

If the points brought up in the research named above are not the ones that influenced the design of this amendment, then what is the research that did?
4) Further concerns about the reach of the legislation

CAAN approaches the topic from the view that there is a diversity of sexuality. Many of the activities involved in alternative sexualities are not specifically the aim of this legislation, yet may still fall under its regime. While the AEWG report is clear that certain loopholes of location and payment should be closed, the “closing” of the “loopholes” means that activities outside of the assumed aim of the legislation will be in danger.

We ask the Justice Committee to consider as an example: the recent Torture Garden night in Edinburgh (you can view a video review of the event on Youtube). The event has many shows, among which were burlesque acts. Burlesque is quite in vogue at the moment, and is often considered more socially acceptable than lap dancing, even though the two are essentially the same. Research conducted replacing “lap dancing” with “burlesque” may reveal different results.

Torture Garden also has fashion shows showcasing fetish fashion (think lots of rubber). Some of the outfits are quite daring, and may fall under the law. Would other fashion shows (say, a lingerie fashion show) fall under the adult entertainment description?

The Torture Garden event also had a small dungeon for sadomasochists to use. This included equipment which couples used in various ways for their own amusement whilst others watched. There is, admittedly, a slightly exhibitionist quality to such “public play” among BDSM enthusiasts, but the goal of “sexual stimulation” is mainly the sexual stimulation of the “performer”, not the “audience”. In most Scottish fetish clubs, the erotic aspect of the play would be the only aspect that would qualify the “performance” under this description, as most fetish clubs in Scotland do not allow nudity and “performers” are not paid.

There is a danger that sadomasochistic play in public space (i.e. a fetish club) might be qualified as adult entertainment under this amendment and thus be subject to the same hate campaign that prostitution and lap dancing clubs face. Further, the need to publicly announce where the club will be will result in fewer applications because of the reduced protection of anonymity. People can still lose their job for being a sadomasochist, and thus practitioners reasonably seek some measure of privacy. If fetish clubs are subject to this amendment because it is poorly written, then it will increase the climate of fear among BDSM enthusiasts in Scotland. A similar argument can also be made for swingers clubs and other clubs for consenting adults.

We also share the Scottish Ballet’s concern that banning all nudity in performances will create a deficit in culture in Scotland. It will probably also effect acts at the various festivals in Scotland, including the popular Chippendale show at last year’s Edinburgh Festival. What about singers and rappers that perform with dancers with low-cut shirts and short skirts? Would their hip-hop dancers be forced to cover up? Or would only the female dancers be forced to oblige because male dancers can bare their chests while female dancers can’t? CAAN extends their question to include the phrase “whether by verbal or other means” and asks what other businesses it may include (e.g. erotic poetry or stories, phone sex operators, professional dominatrixes, pole dancing exercise classes, strip-o-grams, etc.)

5) Conclusions

- Both the goal and timing of this amendment are questionable and must be made transparent.
- Most research suggests that working conditions are of a great concern to dancers in clubs – yet this amendment does not address those issues.
- The attempt to close loopholes means that alternative sexualities and art will be caught up in red tape and lead to general fear and mistrust of the local councils.

CAAN asks that amendment 516 be rejected because it is not fit for purpose.

25 April 2010

---

1 CAAN rejects the Scottish Government’s 2009 Safer Lives: Changed Lives on the grounds that the statement: “Activities such as pornography, prostitution, stripping, lap dancing, pole dancing and table dancing are forms of commercial sexual exploitation” runs counter to Our Statement.
2 Definition of “exploitation” used in this evidence:
“In different terms, "exploitation" refers to the use of people as a resource, with little or no consideration of their well-being. This can take the following basic forms:
- Taking something off a person or group that rightfully belongs to them
- Short-changing people in trade
- Directly or indirectly forcing somebody to work
- Using somebody against his will, or without his consent or knowledge
- Imposing an arbitrary differential treatment of people to the advantage of some and the disadvantage of others (as in ascriptive discrimination)” (http://www.answers.com/topic/exploitation)
3 “Asda under threat of prosecution for union busting” Guardian 13 June 2006 http://www.guardian.co.uk/business/2006/jun/13/politics.supermarkets
5 “Neighbours beg MSPs for crackdown on party flats” Scotsman 30 March 2009 http://edinburghnews.scotsman.com/edinburgh/Neighbours-beg--MSPs-for.5120629.jp
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from OBJECT

Why licensing reforms are needed for lap dancing clubs

About Object
OBJECT is a human rights organisation which campaigns against ‘sex object culture’ – the increased sexual objectification of women and the mainstreaming of the sex and pornography industries in the media and popular culture. These industries promote attitudes which underpin discrimination and violence based against women. OBJECT spearheaded the Stripping the Illusion campaign and worked in partnership with the Fawcett Society to lobby for the successful implementation of Section 27 of the Policing and Crime Act which enables local councils to licence lap dancing clubs as Sexual Entertainment Venues and gives local communities greater powers to control the number of lap dancing clubs in their area (please see the annexe for our legal briefing for England and Wales).

Executive Summary
In Scotland, just as was the case in England and Wales, the current licensing regime fails to offer adequate controls and regulations of lap dancing clubs, and it acts as a green light for the expansion of the industry. Regulations limit both who is eligible to object to licensing applications, and the grounds on which objections can be made. This restricts local democracy and prevents councils from considering gender equality issues in the licensing process.

OBJECT therefore supports the amendment, lodged by Sandra White MSP, which seeks to allow local authorities to apply a specific licensing regime to ‘adult entertainment’ venues, including limiting the number of premises in the local authority area that are permitted to provide ‘adult entertainment’.

Definition and use of the term ‘adult entertainment’
In the amendment the terminology ‘adult entertainment industry’ is used. OBJECT does not recognise the sex industry as a legitimate form of entertainment given that a significant proportion consists of commercial sexual exploitation. However, for the sake of consistency and clarity for all those who read this submission we have used the same terminology as the amendment. However, we have placed the term ‘adult entertainment industry’ in inverted commas to demonstrate that we recognise this phrase as a euphemism to disguise the exploitation inherent to the sex industry.

1. What are lap dancing clubs?
Lap dancing clubs are venues where customers pay female performers to dance their on their lap whilst removing most or all of their clothing. This occurs at tables, in private rooms or in private booths.
2. Current licensing of lap dancing clubs in Scotland
Current licensing regulations do not provide sufficient controls for lap dancing and related activities. For example regulations limit both who is eligible to object to licensing applications, and the grounds on which objections can be made. This effectively means that it is not possible to object to the nature of the activity itself.

3. Why is this a problem: local councils
- Local authorities may only apply regulation to lap dancing clubs which corresponds directly to four licensing objectives; preventing crime and disorder; securing public safety; preventing public nuisance; protecting and improving public health and; protecting children from harm. This prevents them from putting in place conditions relevant to lap dancing clubs such as how many licences are granted in an area or the use of private booths.
- In England and Wales, the vast majority of local authorities consulted about their powers to regulate lap dancing clubs responded saying that they felt unhappy with current licensing provisions – with at least 25 local authorities across England and Wales having experienced serious problems in the licensing of lap dancing clubs. There is no reason to believe that the situation would be any different in Scotland where local councils are effectively straight-jacketed in terms of regulating this growing part of the sex industry. This was identified as part of the Adult Entetainment Working Group report and more latterly from Glasgow City Council.

4. Why this is a problem: local people
- The Licensing (Scotland) Act introduced restrictions on who can have a say in the licensing of lap dancing clubs. This fails to take into account the impact of lap dancing clubs on people who work in or travel near the area who are unable to raise their objections.
- It is extremely difficult for residents to prove that licensing objectives will be breached and the Act places the onus on residents to provide evidence of this rather than placing the onus on club operators to justify their application.
- Prior to the Act residents could contribute to licence renewal hearings which took place every 1-3 years. However a Premises Licence runs in perpetuity unless an application for a review finds a licensing objective has been breached.

5. Why this is a problem: gender equality
- Lap dancing clubs are part of the commercial sex industry and have a different social impact from ordinary leisure venues. This is not accounted for in 'one size fits all' licensing.
- Lap dancing clubs promote seeing women as sex objects, not people. They fit into a wider culture of sexual objectification which underpins discrimination and violence based on gender – as Object’s Stripping the Illusion campaign highlights. However a local authority cannot take this into account when licensing lap dancing clubs - the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 prevents them from using policy (such as a gender equality policy) to overrule the five licensing objectives. This runs directly counter to the 2007 Gender Equality Duty which requires local authorities to promote gender equality in all they do.

6. The only viable solution: recognise and license lap dancing clubs as part of the ‘adult entertainment industry’

Local councils should be enabled to licence lap dancing clubs as part of the ‘Adult Entertainment industry’.

Lap dancing clubs are clearly part of the ‘Adult Entertainment industry’ – yet this is not legally recognised. The law should be changed so that lap dancing clubs can be required to purchase both a Premises Licence (for alcohol) and an ‘Adult Entertainment’ licence for lap dancing. This will restore democracy to the licensing process by giving local communities greater powers to decide on whether any lap dancing clubs should be operating in their area. Crucially it will allow gender equality to be considered in the licensing of lap dancing clubs.

Anna van Heeswijk
Campaigns Coordinator
27 April 2010
INTRODUCTION

1. I am instructed on behalf of Object and the Fawcett Society to advise briefly on the system for the regulation of lap dancing in England and Wales. The context is that Gerry Sutcliffe MP, a Minister in the Department of Culture, Media and Sport, has written to the Chief Executives of local authorities, inviting them to state whether they desire additional powers to control such establishments, and in the light of their response the Home Secretary has indicated that additional powers will be granted to local authorities. I understand that this advice will be shared with Members of Parliament.

THE PROBLEM

2. Under the Licensing Act 2003, licensing authorities may only impose controls on lap dancing establishments (whether by attaching conditions or outright refusal) if a) a relevant representation has been made on the application by a responsible authority (e.g. the police) or interested party (a local resident or business) and b) the authority considers it "necessary" in order to promote one of the licensing objectives. These are the prevention of crime and disorder, public safety, prevention of public nuisance and the protection of children from harm.

3. The experience of licensing authorities is largely that the Act provides an ineffective tool to control the proliferation of such establishments or to prevent fully nude dancing or the maintenance of distance between dancers and customers. The reasons for this are at least threefold. First, objecting residents have to live in the vicinity. It is not enough if they just visit there to shop or enjoy leisure. Second, it is very difficult for residents to prove that a particular harm will arise from the licence. This problem has recently been exacerbated by the decision of the High Court in Thwaites v Wirral Borough Magistrates Court [2008] EWHC 838 (Admin) which emphasised that findings as to future harm need to be based on evidence. Of course, it is very difficult to prove harm to the licensing objectives prospectively. Third, the ambit of the licensing objectives is inapt to reflect wider community objectives, e.g. tourism or regeneration policies; or the kind of concerns to which lap dancing establishments may give rise, regarding the character of the area and the fears of those, particularly women, who have to pass by such establishments.
4. A further difficulty facing authorities is provided by the Secretary of State’s Guidance under section 182 of the Licensing Act 2003, to which authorities are obliged to have regard. This provides:

   2.17 The Indecent Displays Act 1981 prohibits the public display of indecent matter, subject to certain exceptions. It should not therefore be necessary for any conditions to be attached to licences or certificates concerning such displays in or outside the premises involved. For example, the display of advertising material on or immediately outside such premises is regulated by this legislation. Similarly, while conditions relating to public safety in respect of dancing may be necessary in certain circumstances, the laws governing indecency and obscenity are adequate to control adult entertainment involving striptease and lap-dancing which goes beyond what is lawful. Accordingly, conditions relating to the content of such entertainment which have no relevance to crime and disorder, public safety, public nuisance or the protection of children from harm could not be justified. In this context, however, it should be noted that it is in order for conditions relating to the exclusion of minors or the safety of performers to be included in premises licence or club premises certificate conditions where necessary. The Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 insofar as its adoptive provisions relate to sex establishments – sex shops, sex cinemas and in London sex encounter establishments – also remains in force.

5. In fact, the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 (“LGMPA”) provides no control over the proliferation of lap dancing establishments. Object and the Fawcett Society’s argument is that it should do so. It is easy to understand the justification.

6. The LGMPA allows local authorities to licence and regulate sex establishments in their area. It is important to note that the provisions are adoptive, so that an authority which does not wish to have these powers may simply refrain from adopting the legislation.

7. The benefit of the LGMPA is that it provides a much wider list of grounds for refusal of a licence than is provided for under the Licensing Act 2003. These include that the number of sex establishments in the locality is equal to or exceeds the number which the authority consider is appropriate for that locality; and that a licence would be inappropriate, having regard to the character of the relevant locality, or the use to which any premises in the vicinity are put, or the layout, character or condition of the premises themselves. Indeed, if the licence is refused on those particular grounds, there is no appeal to the magistrates court.

---

1 LGMPA 1982, Sch 3 para 12.
2 LGMPA 1982, Sch 3 para 27(3).
8. However, the LGMPA cannot currently be used to regulate lap dancing. This is because of the definition of "sex establishment."

9. Outside London, a sex establishment is defined as a sex cinema or a sex shop. Therefore, outside London, while the LGMPA regulates sex on celluloid or on the page, it does not regulate live sex. The reason for the lacuna is principally historic rather than logical.

10. In London, the definition of "sex establishment" goes wider than merely a sex cinema or a sex shop. It includes "sex encounter establishments." These are premises supplying (inter alia) performances “which wholly or mainly comprise the sexual stimulation of persons admitted to the premises”, services provided by persons “who are without clothes or who expose their breasts or genital, urinary or excretory organs while they are providing the service” (e.g. topless bars), and entertainments by persons “who are without clothes or who expose their breasts or genital, urinary or excretory organs during the entertainment” (striptease). Thus, the definition in London is plainly wide enough to encompass lap dancing. However, any premises which have and use a licence under the Licensing Act 2003 for regulated entertainment or late night refreshment are taken out of the definition of sex encounter establishments. Thus, in London a live sex show is regulated under the LGMPA, but not if customers can buy a pizza with the show. Again, the logic is hard to discern.

THE SOLUTION

11. Object and the Fawcett Society therefore argue for a simple amendment to the LGMPA:

   a. to give authorities outside London the same power to regulate sex encounter establishments as are enjoyed by London authorities;

   b. to remove the exemption for premises with licences for regulated entertainment or late night refreshment.

12. This is the thrust of the Ten Minute Rule Bill presented to Parliament by Roberta Blackman Woods MP on 18th June of this year, which obtained cross-party support.

13. In short the benefit for local authorities would be that they could obtain wider powers to control the proliferation of lap dancing establishments than they currently enjoy under the Licensing Act 2003, with less risk of appeal (and therefore costs). Those authorities who do not wish to have the powers need not adopt the legislation. It is important to note that an amendment to the LGMPA would not require authorities to refuse licences. It would simply give authorities wider powers than they

---

3 LGMPA Sch 3 para 2.
4 LGMPA Sch 3 para 3A.
5 LGMPA Sch 3 para 3A.
currently have to regulate whether, where and on what terms lap dancing premises may be established, to reflect the priorities and wishes of the wider community.

14. In his letter, the Minister requested views as to whether planning law might assist in the control of lap dancing establishments. The answer is that planning plays at best a marginal role. Any premises currently enjoying a D2 (assembly and leisure) use would not need planning consent to introduce stripping. Even if they enjoyed a different planning use, such as A4 (pubs), they might be able to argue that stripping was merely incidental to the primary use and did not involve a change of use requiring planning permission. Even if this argument did not avail them, it is fair to say that national and local planning policy is largely silent on stripping as a species of entertainment, and it would be hard to use planning powers effectively to protect against such proliferation. I am far from saying that planning is entirely toothless, for the character of the area and legitimate fears of crime among local people are material planning considerations. But for practical purposes, planning does not provide a significant hurdle for those wishing to establish lap dancing venues. The benefit of the licensing regime is that it is far more sensitive to the precise content of the “entertainment” being offered, and any variations in the nature of such entertainment over time.

LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS

15. The legislative amendments required are brief. A suggested Bill is attached at Appendix 1.

16. One other matter worthy of consideration is how to ensure that nudity as part of a dramatic work is not accidentally picked up by the definition. I do not believe that the definition of sex encounter set out above could seriously be held to encompass nudity incidental in a play. However, should it be considered necessary, the definition may be followed by a new section: “For the avoidance of doubt nudity incidental to a dramatic work shall not require a licence under this Act.”

17. I also understand that the Home Office is considering whether pubs which have a weekly striptease would be made to seek a sex encounter licence. It does not seem to me that this raises any issue of principle. The definition of sex cinema and sex shop in Schedule 3 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 both include the test of “significant degree”. That leaves the matter as one of sensible judgment by the licensing authority. There is no reason for a different approach in the case of sex encounter. The authority would have to consider a) whether the entertainment or service provided meets the definition of sex encounter, and b) whether this is occurring to a significant degree. These are pre-eminently licensing judgments for the licensing authority, of a kind which authorities are well-used to making.
ARGUMENTS OF THE LAP DANCING ASSOCIATION

18. The Lap Dancing Association has published certain arguments against tighter restriction, and it is right that I deal with them here.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Argument</th>
<th>Response</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lap dancing is entertainment, not sex encounter.</td>
<td>The fundamental nature of the transaction is that a man pays a woman to take her clothes off and place her sexual organs near his face. The notion that this is not part of the commercial sex industry is not seriously sustainable.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Performances are ancillary to alcohol</td>
<td>No customer believes that he goes into a lap dancing club primarily to drink. The clue is in the title.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anyone can object to a lap dancing club</td>
<td>This is untrue. Under the Licensing Act 2003 objections from local people have to come from those living or working in the vicinity. “Vicinity” is usually taken by licensing authorities to mean 200 metres or less. There is no scope for a local resident to object to a lap dancing club on their local high street unless they happen to live or work within that radius.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Councils have sufficient powers to impose restrictions on premises licences.</td>
<td>This is simply untrue, as the councils who have taken on the lap dancing industry and lost will testify. The problem is that the Licensing Act 2003 does not provide sufficient tools for any control over the quantum, location or operating conditions of establishments, because the licensing objectives are not directed at the real concerns to which these premises give rise.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lap dancing clubs are not sexist establishments because many are owned and run by women. Performers are self-employed so choose when, where and for whom to perform.</td>
<td>The viewing of young women as objects whose nudity can be procured for a sum of money is of course inherently sexist. But in any event this argument does not begin to address the real point, which is that communities are entitled to some choice as to the quantity and location of such establishments.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>To licence premises as sex encounter establishments</td>
<td>“Red tape” is simply a derogatory synonym for a licence. There are many establishments that require more than one consent, e.g. casinos and bingo clubs with bars. This is no different. Should there be an issue regarding fees, the</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| will add red tape. | Secretary of State can issue Guidance that fees should be limited to cost recovery. |
| The industry will go underground.\(^6\) | That is an argument against regulation of anything. If it does, it will be the duty of the enforcement authorities to prosecute. Furthermore, it is revealing that the Lap Dancing Association argues that if an attempt is made to regulate its members they will conduct their business criminally. This is an argument for more, not less, regulation. |
| Regulation will do nothing about prostitution and drugs. | The argument for greater regulation is not principally concerned with prostitution and drugs. The Chairman of the Lap Dance Association is reported as saying: “Like Object we are concerned about the practises of irresponsible operators and potential links with prostitution and drugs.”\(^7\) If prostitution and drugs are linked with lap dancing establishments, that again is an argument for greater regulation. |
| It would be sufficient to ensure that the introduction of adult entertainment is treated as a major variation of a premises licence under the Licensing Act 2003. | That does not address the problem, because the licensing objectives provide insufficient criteria for the control of the quantity, location and operating conditions of such premises. |
| An obligatory code of practice would suffice. | Even were such a code of practice to be introduced and observed, that could only control the operational practises of the clubs, not whether and where they should be permitted in particular local authority areas. |

CONCLUSION

19. It seems to me that to bring lap dancing into the same category as sex cinemas and sex shops and to licence them as such is a modest and sensible response to the recent proliferation in such venues, enabling authorities to exercise greater control if they want to.

Philip Kolvin

---

\(^6\) This claim was made by Simon Warr, President of Lap Dancing Association, reported in the Morning Advertiser of 22.4.08 and the Independent of 26.4.08.

\(^7\) Morning Advertiser, ibid.
APPENDIX 1
PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT
(MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) ACT 1982

A Bill to extend the law regarding the licensing of sex establishments from London to the rest of England and Wales and for other purposes.

2. In Schedule 2 paragraph 3A of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions Act) 1982, sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) shall cease to have effect.

3. Schedule 1 (which makes minor and consequential amendments) shall have effect.

Schedule 1

Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982

1. In section 12, after the words "borough council" insert the words “in England and Wales.”

2. In Schedule 2 paragraph 3A omit sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii).

3. In Schedule 2 paragraph 3A omit the notation “(iii).”
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2
Written submission from the Festival Fringe Society

Amendment 516

With reference to the above noted amendment to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, we believe that the wording of the amendment as currently lodged may unintentionally prevent the staging of theatrical and other cultural performances that contain elements of nudity.

The definition of nudity could rule out plays such as Trilogy written by Nic Green and staged by Glasgow’s The Arches Theatre at the 2009 Edinburgh Fringe to much critical acclaim. The play went on to win a Herald Angel award and a clutch of five-star reviews and has now embarked on a UK national tour. Described by the author as a feminist work, Trilogy includes at one point an invitation to female audience members to shed their clothes and join the performance on stage.

This is just one example of the numerous plays, musicals and operas which over the years have included nudity as an integral part of their story. As the largest arts festival in the world, the Edinburgh Festival Fringe is a vital launch pad for innovative artistic development, encompassing a wide variety of art forms and we would not wish to see any performances restricted. We do not believe that it is the intention of the Member who has lodged this amendment to ban such performances but this could be an unintended consequence of passing the amendment in its current form.

If the Committee decides that it wishes to support this amendment in principle then Members might want to consider including an exemption for plays and related entertainment as defined and outlined in the Theatres Act 1968. Furthermore, the Committee might consider exempting premises covered by either a Theatre Licence or a Public Entertainment Licence.

Neil Mackinnon
Head of External Affairs
28 April 2010
I am aware the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill is currently going through the Scottish Parliament. A new amendment to the Bill has been lodged, on the control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues. Amendment 516, lodged by Sandra White MSP, seeks to allow local authorities to apply a specific licensing regime to adult entertainment venues, including by limiting the number of premises in the local authority area that are permitted to provide adult entertainment, potentially with a zero limit.

I strongly support this amendment.

- Lap dancing clubs objectify and demean women and their existence harms our work for a society free of violence in which women have full equality.

- Lap dancing is a form of commercial sexual exploitation, and as such is a form of violence against women. It sanctions objectification of women, glamorises exploitation and harms work to achieve gender equality.

- Lap dancing does not have to be seen as a normal part of society. We believe it is realistic to aspire to a society where they do not exist. It is a matter of political will. Iceland has just banned all strip clubs and any employer profiting from the nudity of its employees.

- Lap dancing clubs routinely breach their licenses, for example by enabling prostitution. Scottish research with 110 men who had bought sex in prostitution found that 31% of the men had accessed prostitution through a lap dancing club.

- Lap dancing is a manifestation of gender inequality. It is not a coincidence that the performers in lap dancing clubs in Scotland are almost all women and the customers and business owners are almost all men. This industry thrives on the systematic exploitation of women by men. An industry like this has no place in modern Scotland.

- The Fawcett Society’s ‘Corporate Sexism’ report noted the commonness of firms holding business meetings, entertaining clients and celebrating deals at lap dancing venues, with some establishments offering unmarked receipts for expenses. They identify this as a major new threat to women’s equality at work.

- Lap dancing clubs also harm communities. They make women feel uncomfortable and unsafe, and create no-go areas in our towns and cities. In 2001, the female rape rate in the London Borough of Camden, which then had seven clubs sited mainly in residential areas, was three times the national average; researchers at the Lilith Project say that since 1999, rape of women in Camden has increased by 50 per cent and indecent assault by 57 per cent.

Lesley Walker
26 April 2010
Justice Committee
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2
Written submission from Zero Tolerance

About Zero Tolerance

Zero Tolerance is a small national charity promoting innovative policy and practice to address the root causes of male violence against women and children. We pioneered the 3 P’s approach to tackling male violence – protection, provision and prevention. Of these, we believe that the prevention of violence through changing attitudes, structures and values is the key to changing the culture of endemic violence in which we live.

Summary of our position

We are strongly supportive of amendment 516 lodged by Sandra White MSP and urge the Justice Committee to support it. Our arguments in favour of this amendment can be summarised as follows:

- We see lap-dancing as a form of commercial sexual exploitation, and as such as a form of violence against women. It sanctions objectification of women, glamorises exploitation and harms work to achieve gender equality.
- We challenge the normalisation of the sex encounter ‘industry’: we aspire to a world without these forms of so-called ‘entertainment’ and believe it is realistic to aspire to a society where they do not exist.
- We regard the proliferation of lap-dancing clubs as harmful to women individually, women collectively, and communities, and support all measures to prevent this.

Lap-dancing is a form of exploitation of women

We see lap-dancing and other forms of so-called ‘adult entertainment’ as sexually exploitative and damaging to women’s lives and to gender equality. Ultimately, we see it as part of the spectrum of male violence against women. The Scottish Government document ‘Safer Lives: Changed Lives’ notes that commercial sexual exploitation causes harm to all women, by sanctioning objectification of women’s bodies, and further notes that this harm to women collectively happens regardless of whether individuals claim liberation or empowerment from the activity.

Lap-dancing glamorises exploitation. The sex industry has pushed to glamorise lap dancing, and promotes it as exciting and lucrative ‘work’ for women. The reality is that lap-dancing clubs are highly exploitative. Unlike other dance performances where the audience members pay for a ticket and the organisation staging the performance pays the performers, in ‘adult entertainment’ the women have to pay the club in order to perform (often around £80-£100 per night), and then the men pay the women directly. Women also pay for club outfits and pay fines for being late or missing shifts.

Clubs maintain a high ‘performer to punter’ ratio to offer the customer maximum choice of varieties of women – in itself an indicator of their view that women are objects for consumption and not human beings with rights and dignity – and this means there is intense competition between performers, which in turns escalates the types of performance on offer. Increasingly men expect explicit sexualised behaviour and full nudity. It is in this context that the buying and selling of sex acts occurs in some clubs. Scottish research with 110 men who had bought sex in prostitution found that 31% of the men had accessed prostitution through a lap dancing club.¹

Even in clubs where licensing conditions are adhered to many women report a heavy psychological toll linked to dealing with, in effect, normalised sexual harassment on a nightly basis. Testimonies from women who have worked in lap-dancing clubs confirm that they are harmful places to ‘work’; for example, ‘Alexandra’ says “The management in all the clubs treated the girls very badly, they were discriminatory, frequently derogatory in their comments to and about the girls...The customers’ attitudes varied between politeness to downright hostility and abuse.”² Other testimony indicates that being a performer in a lap-dancing club is harmful to performers’ personal relationships, self-esteem, health, substance use, and financial situation.³

Lap-dancing is a manifestation of gender inequality. It is not a coincidence that the performers in lap-dancing clubs in Scotland are almost all women and the customers and business owners are almost all men. This industry thrives on the systematic exploitation of women by men – and a gendered hierarchy of power. An industry like this has no place in modern Scotland.

The sex industry should not be normalised

Over the past ten years, lap-dancing has entered the mainstream. It has increasingly featured in the media, with story lines in soap operas, newspapers, documentaries and films. A 2007 Lilith Project report stated that, “When East Enders ran a storyline featuring a lap dancer in 1998, the actor was sent ‘sackfuls’ of mail from men asking her to do private dancing for them and requests from Sunday tabloid newspapers asking her to do ‘glamour’ modelling.”

Clubs are not discreet or hidden venues. They are advertised on flyers, in magazines, on local taxis and on larger billboards, and promotional staff (often dressed in lingerie) hand out flyers in shopping areas, high streets and in pubs / clubs. The clubs themselves are very apparent on the high street, many with shop-style frontage which makes it very clear what is on offer

² Testimony to OBJECT campaign -
³ http://www.object.org.uk/index.php/lapdancing-testimonies inside. Some clubs offer lessons to women marketed for those who want to dance for their partner, and some leisure and fitness centres now offer ‘pole fitness’ classes to teach the skills for pole-dancing. This increasing presence of the sex industry in mainstream culture normalises activities that are based on gender inequality, exploitation and objectification.

It is an illustration of how mainstream the sex industry has become that in 2006 Comic Relief, which funds projects for young people affected by sexual violence, included a show called ‘Strictly Come Pole Dancing’ in its plans for fundraising – this was later dropped due to the volume of protests.

In February 2010, the Home Office published a review of Sexualisation of Young People. This review examined culture and society in the UK and found that jobs in brothels and lap-dancing clubs are advertised by Job Centre Plus and that “we are seeing the normalisation of [sex work] as viable career choices” which “sends out a powerful message to young people about what is of value” (para 29). The review also concludes that popular culture lends “credence to the idea that women are there to be used and that men are there to use them” (para 30).

In this climate, it is easy for young people to be groomed for involvement in the sex industry – and for escalation to occur. Many young women who work in lap-dancing clubs do not intend initially to become involved in prostitution but soon find that is the norm in these clubs and become prostituted women, not the high-earning dancers they set out to be.

To call a halt to this culture of exploitative ‘sex-work’ as mainstream it is vital to curb the proliferation of adult entertainment venues and give control back to the local authorities which have to license these clubs. This would also send out a message that lap-dancing clubs are not a normal, legitimate form of entertainment and that Scotland rejects this exploitative industry and those who create and support it.

It is not unrealistic to aspire to a society with no lap-dancing clubs. It is a matter of political will. Iceland recently legislated to ban all strip clubs. The law was passed with no votes against and only two abstentions. It makes it illegal for any business in Iceland to profit from the nudity of its employees.

At a UK level, the Westminster Parliament has not gone as far as this, but has still passed important and hopefully culture-changing legislation to change the licensing of lap-dancing clubs, so they will in future be licensed as ‘sex encounter establishments’ – currently they are licensed in the same way as a coffee shop or bar offering karaoke or comedy. The ‘Stripping the Illusion’ campaign led by OBJECT and the Fawcett Society convinced the Parliament that clubs should face much more stringent licensing conditions, due to their social impact.

Scotland has led the way in tackling other forms of violence against women and is rightly admired for its progress on, for example, domestic abuse. It would be very fitting if we now became as progressive in tackling the harms of the sex industry.

Lap-dancing clubs harm women and communities

There are myriad other ways in which lap-dancing and strip clubs harm women, in addition to sanctioning their objectification.

Their presence in society also harms women in the workplace. Large companies and financial institutions such as the National Westminster Bank have had corporate accounts with a lap dance club, as do other city firms in London, with a corresponding negative impact on women’s equality in the workplace.

The Fawcett Society’s ‘Corporate Sexism’ report noted the commonness of firms holding business meetings, entertaining clients and celebrating deals at lap-dancing venues, with some establishments offering unmarked receipts for expenses. They identify this as a major new threat to women’s equality at work. In a society with a large gender pay gap and working women still clustered in low-pay and low-status jobs, any factors feeding this that are preventable should be tackled.

At an individual level, these clubs do not offer legitimate ‘work’. As Sarah, who worked in a lap-dancing club, puts it: “There’s no hierarchy. You can’t be promoted. It’s for quick money. There’s no holiday or sickness pay. Shifts are booked on a weekly basis. If you’re ill you can’t work. There’s no pension!”

These clubs also harm communities. They make women feel uncomfortable and unsafe, and create no-go areas in our towns and cities. The presence of strip clubs in a neighbourhood draws potentially violent men and unlicensed minicabs, putting women at risk of sexual violence. In 2001, the female rape rate in the London Borough of Camden, which then had seven clubs sited mainly in residential areas, was three times the national average; researchers at the Lilith Project say that since 1999, rape of women in Camden has increased by 50 per cent and indecent assault by 57 per cent.

In 2002, a report from the council’s environmental health department recorded that some streets had turned into “a no-go area for female shoppers and male passers-by who are often accosted by pimps and other strip clubs offering sexual services and favours”.

Councils should have the power to limit the number of clubs, setting the limit at zero if they wish to, and we strongly support amendment 516. We urge the Committee to stand against exploitation and stand for a safer, more just and equal society and to support this amendment.

---

Jenny Kemp
Prevention Network Officer
26 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from the Argyll and Bute Rape Crisis Centre

Lap-dancing clubs objectify and demean women and their existence harms our work for a society free of violence in which women have full equality. Please do not allow them!

Dee Hancock
Education/Support Worker
27 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from Margaret Paul

I would like to offer my support for the Amendment 516 to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. I have experience of working with women affected by domestic violence and women involved in the criminal justice system. Through this experience it is my belief that the women involved in the lap dancing industry are vulnerable women with very limited life choices. This type of work exploits their already fragile status and can lead to more involvement in substance misuse and criminal activity as well as increased exposure to verbal and sexual abuse.

It is important that the loophole which allows lap dancing clubs to operate under a cafe or bar license is closed and local authorities are allowed to control the set up of these premises. It is only by making Local Authorities accountable for these types of licenses that some kind of accountability can be held over their existence and day to day running.

27 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from NHS Grampian Gender Based Violence Programme

We strongly support limiting, preferably to zero, the areas permitted to provide so called adult entertainment. These clubs are degrading, promoting women as objects for consumption and not human beings with rights and dignity. Our society can never be free of violence against women while this kind of gender exploitation exists.

Ann Sutherland and Margaret Stafford
Operational Leads for Gender Based Violence Programme
NHS Grampian
27 April 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Written submission from SAY Women

About Us

SAY Women is a voluntary sector charity supporting young women survivors of childhood sexual abuse who are homeless, at risk of homelessness or in unsafe accommodation.

Our services comprise of an Accommodation Project for 7 young women with a Follow On service and a Resource Service providing emotional support to young women and men who are living in other homeless projects or temporary accommodation, eg. Hospital psychiatry units, prison, etc.

Experience

High numbers of our service users have addictions, mental health issues and involvement in prostitution ranges from 12% to 45% across our services. Therefore the young people we support are at the most severe end of the spectrum of sexual violence/abuse and exploitation.

Comments

Services such as ours and related services, i.e. addiction teams, mental health services, sexual health services deal with the everyday harm caused by men’s exploitation and abuse of women and children. The phenomenon of male violence is rooted in women’s inequality and the issue of lap dancing must be placed in this context and the committee basing their deliberations on this as a staring point.

UNICEF – “In to-day’s world to be born female is to be born high risk.”

UN – “Violence against women is the world’s most pervasive form of human rights abuse.”

A very simple question has to be asked – why are all forms of objectification, commercial sexual exploitation exclusively aimed at women?

Whilst the young people we support have not been involved with lap dancing directly and more likely to be involved in prostitution, they are clear that such activities are part and parcel of men’s exploitation of women and children and reinforce their expectations that they will face such abuse throughout their lives.

A few of the young women are attending lap dancing fitness classes and pole dancing kits are now available through catalogues as a fitness regime. Both these new developments normalise lap dancing and are wholly aimed at women. The normalisation of sexual exploitation is a worrying trend, for example Playboy bunny is now part of mainstream accessories and design; celebrities such as David and Victoria Beckham gain media attention by visiting a lapdancing/strip club\(^1\) and yet David Beckham is a UNICEF Ambassador.

Lap dancing clubs are usually part of a chain network such as Stringfellows, Playboy that have links with wider pornography distribution. There is also a competitive culture of the more sexually explicit the act the more money is earned. Research by the Women’s Support Project highlighted that 31% of Scottish men interviewed about prostitution were introduced to prostitution through a lap dancing club.

There are numerous reports on the harm caused by ‘exotic’ dancing and any legislation to end this situation should be supported\(^2\).

Lap dancing is only available to young women who have pre-conceived ‘beautiful/desirable’ bodies. This contributes to any general lack of confidence and low self esteem for young women who don’t meet the ‘desirable’ body image of lap dancers and linked to consumer pressure on women to achieve levels of beauty, slimness, sexual attraction.

Meanwhile we should be encouraging girls and young women to be confident in themselves, in their own skin, and to identify their aspirations and help them meet those.

Generally the existence of lap dancing clubs increases women’s fears and undermines their safety around the areas where they exist. Ask any women and she will admit that she avoids areas where there is lap dancing clubs if she is on her own or with friends in the city centre at night. Research by Glasgow Chamber of Commerce (2003) found that three-quarters of city centre businesses believed that lap dancing clubs would damage the reputation of the city and half were concerned about the safety of their staff in the vicinity of the clubs.

The fact that there is a demand for such clubs is not a reason to justify their existence. There is a demand for prostitution, child and women trafficking, pornography, paedophile networks and we accept that these are not indicators of a healthy and safe society for all our citizens.

Support for this amendment would add to the campaign to deal with the increased sexualisation of girls and young women which is raising widespread concerns and to the overall measures necessary across various government departments in order to deal with the exploitation of women and girls.

\(^1\) Showbiz Spy 12/12/07 and Marie Claire 13/12/07
\(^2\) Strip Club Testimony – Kelly Holsopple
Violence and Stress At Work and in the Performing Arts – Giga, Hoel and Cooper, Manchester University.
We view this amendment as an important signal that there is now a fightback to highlight the exploitative nature of such activities and their role in the continuation of the subordination and objectification of women and girls.

The Scottish Parliament has a better record than Westminster on the issue of violence against women and had introduced some of the most progressive legislation and support in the UK. Support for this amendment would continue the reputation of the Parliament as a champion of women’s rights in the context of overall human rights.

Rosina McCrae
Director
26 April 2010
Written submission from the Law Society of Scotland Licensing Law Sub-Committee

I write to you in my capacity as the Secretary to the Law Society of Scotland’s Licensing Law Sub-Committee.

I have received some comments from the Society’s Licensing Law Sub-Committee with regard to a number of amendments to Part 9 of the Bill which I understand are to be considered at the next meeting of the Justice Committee to be held on 11 May 2010. I note that there are a large number of amendments and that some of these reflect the Sub-Committee’s previously stated position to the Committee eg. transfer of premises licence, site only applications and appeals procedures. I would therefore, not propose to comment on all the amendments, but just provide a number of comments on those amendments on which the Sub-Committee has raised some concerns.

These comments are as follows:

Amendment 516, Sandra White, Control of Lap Dancing and other Adult Entertainment Venues

The Sub-Committee has already responded to a call for written evidence from the Justice Committee under separate cover.¹

Amendment 542, George Foulkes, Premises Licence Applications: Disability Compliance Statements

The Sub-Committee questions the necessity for this amendment, as it duplicates building control provisions and seems at odds with section 27(7)(c) of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.

All new premises capable of compliance will be required to comply with the terms of Part 3 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 in any event.

Reasons for non-compliance where changes cannot be made due to an inability to obtain either planning or other statutory consents require to be made to the appropriate authorities.

The Sub-Committee makes particular reference to section 50(1)(b) of the 2005 Act, whereby premises licence applications require, in any event, to be accompanied by a building standards certificate.

Amendment 694, Kenny MacAskill, Liability for Offences

The Sub-Committee questions the requirement for this amendment given the separation within the 2005 Act of premises and personal licences and is concerned about its implications.

From a practical point of view, this amendment will discourage operators from holding premises licences if they can be held vicariously liable for the actions of the tenants.

This issue becomes particularly problematic given that most owners/landlords/pension funds and such like would choose to hold the premises licence as opposed to the tenant in occupation of the premises on the basis that the premises licence holder is in a position to surrender the licence in terms of section 28(6)(b) of the 2005 Act.

The Sub-Committee notes the terms of the Nicholson Report at Paragraph 7.18 which stated that it would be inappropriate to hold a premises licence holder vicariously liable, albeit a licensing board should be entitled to hold a premises licence holder to account as well as considering the position of the personal licence holder. To depart from this view should be fully consulted on and considered in depth.

The practical difficulties with this amendment are considerable.

This amendment would, of necessity, discourage large companies who at present hold premises licences (and in most cases being far removed from the day-to-day activities carried on within the licensed premises) in respect of a large number of licensed premises and indeed independent landlords from holding a premises licence. There would also be serious issues as regards administrators, receivers and trustees in bankruptcy who would be very unlikely to hold premises licences if there was vicarious liability. It should also be noted that such an application to transfer by administrators, etc. has to be made within 28 days all in terms of section 34 of the 2005 Act. The effect would be that those licences would be lost to the severe detriment of jobs, owners and creditors. This is not in the public interest.

Amendment 699, Kenny MacAskill, Powers of Licensing Standards Officers

The Sub-Committee is of the view that this amendment, which seeks to augment the powers of Licensing Standards Officers (LSOs) in terms of section 15 of the 2005 Act is perhaps too widely drafted. With particular reference to the proposed new section 15(4A), the Sub-Committee is concerned that this would allow Licensing Standards Officers to take e.g. computer disks and hard drives, etc. in order to obtain the documents in an electronic form. This particular example would make it next to impossible to operate the business concerned and would certainly remove the licence holders’ ability to monitor what was going on.

The Society, however, welcomes the provisions contained within this amendment with regard to confidentiality and the requirement for the LSO to leave notices stating what was seized and why it was seized.
I trust that this information is of some assistance to you.

Alan McCreadie
Deputy Director, Law Reform
7 May 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Letter from the Cabinet Secretary for Justice to the Convener

Part 6 – Disclosure in Criminal Proceedings

I am writing to follow up on some of the points that were raised at the Committee’s informal session on disclosure on 27 April. The disclosure provisions are clearly a major element of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill and I wanted to put on record a number of issues that I would ask the Committee to consider before it comes to formally consider these on 4 May. I have enclosed, also, at Annexe A, a draft “marked up” version of Part 6 of the Bill and, at Annexe B, a summary of the principal amendments, to assist members in understanding the effect on the Bill of the Government amendments proposed.

The central issue that was raised by the Committee in the informal session was the complexity and length of the provisions. It is beyond doubt that this is a complex and highly technical part of the Bill, but I want to impress on you the reasons why this is the case.

Firstly, I think it is important to put the length and complexity of these provisions in context. The current Crown Office guidance on disclosure runs to some 300 pages. This gives a sense of the detailed nature of work on disclosure and of the intricate nature of what we are trying to distil into legislation. The other comparison I would draw your attention to is the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 and supporting legislation in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, where the disclosure provisions are of a similar length to those we are proposing. In this context, I believe the level of detail we are proposing is reasonable.

The second area I want to explain is why the provisions are now longer than at Stage 1. That is because, although we have simplified some areas in response to the Committee’s Stage 1 report – by seeking to remove provisions on schedules in sections 85 to 88, by simplifying the duty of disclosure in section 89 and 90, by revising the provisions in sections 102 to 106 concerning non-disclosure of information to simplify the tests which apply and by seeking to delete sections 100 and 101 – there are also areas that were not covered at introduction that we are now adding in.

These include provisions on disclosure in appeals and ensuring that there is a means of representing reserved interests in decisions about the non-disclosure of information on public interest grounds. The need for provisions on disclosure in appeals arose from the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (functions of which have since transferred to the Supreme Court) in McDonald v HMA, which did not issue until October 2008 and it was not possible, therefore, to develop provisions on this prior to introduction. Similarly, the need for a mechanism for a Secretary of State to be able to... make applications to the court for information to be withheld to protect the public interest only became clear during discussions with officials of the United Kingdom government following introduction. Therefore, while we have responded to the Stage 1 report, the overall effect in reaching a fully rounded set of proposals for Stage 2 has been to lengthen the provisions.

Finally, I want to stress the importance of certainty in creating a statutory disclosure scheme. One of the key motivations for creating a statutory scheme is to make sure that the duties and responsibilities within the scheme are as clear as possible, and to get away from the moving target of constantly evolving substantive common law in this area. Unless we make clear all of the significant rights and duties in legislation, the risk is that those gaps will be filled in through case law which will undermine the certainty for police and prosecutors which is one of the most important benefits, and is the main driver, of the scheme. While many of the interests that responded at Stage 1 would not be adversely affected by continuing evolution of the law, COPFS and police most certainly would. I would therefore ask you to give appropriate weight to the evidence of the bodies that play the central role in operating the whole scheme.

Given that our proposed disclosure statutory regime is of a similar size to that which operates in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, and for the reasons noted above, I am convinced of the need to ensure we have appropriate statutory provision in Scotland which does, I accept, result in complex and technical provisions.

I remain willing to keep the provisions under review and to continue searching for means of simplifying the provisions ahead of Stage 3. While I have to say I believe such opportunities may be limited for the reasons set out above, I will look positively on any suggestions that come forward from any source.

I stand ready to engage with you further ahead of the session on Tuesday if that would be helpful.

Kenny MacAskill MSP
Cabinet Secretary for Justice
28 April 2010
Annexe A

MARKED UP VERSION: 27 APRIL 2010

PART 1

DISCLOSURE

Meaning of “information”

(1) In this Part “information”, in relation to criminal proceedings relating to a person, means material of any kind given to or obtained by the prosecutor in connection with the proceedings.

(3) In sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)) “information”, in relation to appellate proceedings, includes material of any kind given to or obtained by the prosecutor in connection with the appellate proceedings or the earlier proceedings.

(4) In subsection (3)—

“appellate proceedings” has the meaning given by section (Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation),

“earlier proceedings” has the meaning given in section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5).

Solemn cases: schedules of information

Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases

(1) This section applies where in a prosecution—

(a) an accused appears for the first time on petition, or

(b) an accused appears for the first time on indictment (not having appeared on petition in relation to the same matter).

(2) As soon as practicable after the appearance, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with details of all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused that the agency is aware of that was obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the matter to which the appearance relates.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

(4) In this section, “investigating agency” means—

(a) a police force, or

(b) such other person who—

(i) engages (to any extent) in the investigation of crime or sudden deaths, and
(ii) submits reports relating to those investigations to the procurator fiscal,
as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe by regulations.

87 Continuing duty to provide schedules of information

(1) This section applies where—

(a) an investigating agency has complied with (Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases)(2) in relation to an accused, and

(b) during the relevant period the investigating agency becomes aware that further information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused has been obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the accused’s case.

( ) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the further information, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with details of it.

( ) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that further information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

(3) In this section—

“relevant period” means the period—

(a) beginning with the investigating agency’s compliance with (Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases)(2) in relation to the accused, and

(b) ending with the agency’s receiving notice from the prosecutor of the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (3), proceedings against an accused are to be taken to be concluded if—

(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,

(b) the accused is acquitted,

(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,

(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,

(e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or

(f) the indictment falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases

(1) This section applies where a plea of not guilty is recorded against an accused charged on summary complaint.
(2) As soon as practicable after the recording of the plea, the investigating agency must inform the prosecutor of the existence of the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused that the agency is aware of that was obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the matter to which the plea relates.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

Continuing duty of investigating agency: summary cases

(1) This section applies where—

(a) an investigating agency has complied with section (Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases)(2) in relation to an accused, and

b) during the relevant period the investigating agency becomes aware that further information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused has been obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the accused’s case.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the further information, the investigating agency must inform the prosecutor of the existence of the information.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that further information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

(4) In this section “relevant period” means the period—

(a) beginning with the investigating agency’s compliance with section (Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases)(2) in relation to the accused, and

(b) ending with the agency’s receiving notice from the prosecutor of the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4), proceedings against an accused are to be taken to be concluded if—

(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,

(b) the accused is acquitted,

(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,

(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,

(e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or

(f) the complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.
Duties

Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information

(1) This section applies where in a prosecution—

(a) an accused appears for the first time on petition,
(b) an accused appears for the first time on indictment (not having appeared on petition in relation to the same matter), or
(c) a plea of not guilty is recorded against an accused charged on summary complaint.

(2) As soon as practicable after the appearance or the recording of the plea, the prosecutor must—

(a) review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and
(b) disclose to the accused the information to which subsection (3) applies.

(3) This subsection applies to information if—

(a) the information would materially weaken or undermine the evidence that is likely to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused,
(b) the information would materially strengthen the accused’s case, or the information is likely to form part of the evidence to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused.

(7) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2)(b) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed in relation to the same matter (whether because the same matter has been the subject of an earlier petition, indictment or complaint or otherwise).

Disclosure of other information: solemn cases

(1) This section applies where by virtue of subsection (2)(b) of section 89 the prosecutor is required to disclose information to an accused who falls within paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (1) of that section.

(2) As soon as practicable after complying with the requirement, the prosecutor must disclose to the accused details of any information which the prosecutor is not required to disclose under section 89(2)(b) but which may be relevant to the case for or against the accused.

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) details of sensitive information.

(4) In subsection (3), “sensitive”, in relation to an item of information, means that if it were to be disclosed there would be a risk of—

(a) causing serious injury, or death, to any person,
(b) obstructing or preventing the prevention, detection, investigation or prosecution of crime, or
(c) causing serious prejudice to the public interest.
Continuing duty of prosecutor

(1) This section applies where the prosecutor has complied with sections 89(2)(b) in relation to an accused.

(2) During the relevant period, the prosecutor must—

(a) from time to time review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and

( ) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.

(2A) As soon as practicable after complying with subsection (2), the prosecutor must disclose to the accused details of any other information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware.

(2B) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2A) details of sensitive information.

(2C) In subsection (2)

“relevant period” means the period—

(a) beginning with the prosecutor’s compliance with section 89(2)(b) in relation to an accused, and

(b) ending with the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.

“sensitive” has the meaning given by section (Disclosure of other information: solemn cases)(4).

(4) For the purposes of subsection (2C), proceedings against an accused are to be taken to be concluded if—

(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,

(b) the accused is acquitted,

(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,

(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,

(e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or

(f) the indictment or complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

Defence statements

Defence statements: solemn proceedings

() This section applies where the accused lodges a defence statement under section 70A of the 1995 Act.

() As soon as practicable after the prosecutor receives a copy of the defence statement, the prosecutor must—

(a) review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and
(2) After section 70 of the 1995 Act insert—

70A Defence statements

(1) This section applies where an indictment is served on an accused.

(2) The accused must lodge a defence statement at least 14 days before the first diet.

(3) The accused must lodge a defence statement at least 14 days before the preliminary hearing.

(4) At least 7 days before the trial diet the accused must—

(a) where there has been no material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the last defence statement was lodged, lodge a statement stating that fact,

(b) where there has been a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the last defence statement was lodged, lodge a defence statement.

(4A) If after lodging a statement under subsection (2), (3) or (4) there is a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence, the accused must lodge a defence statement.

(4B) Where subsection (4A) requires a defence statement to be lodged, it must be lodged before the trial diet begins unless on cause shown the court allows it to be lodged during the trial diet.

(5) The accused may lodge a defence statement—

( ) at any time before the trial diet or

( ) during the trial diet if the court on cause shown allows it.

( ) As soon as practicable after lodging a defence statement or a statement under subsection (4)(a), the accused must send a copy of the statement to the prosecutor and any co-accused.

(6) In this section “defence statement” means a statement setting out—

(a) the nature of the accused’s defence, including any particular defences on which the accused intends to rely,

(b) any matters of fact on which the accused takes issue with the prosecution and the reason for doing so,

( ) particulars of the matters of fact on which the accused intends to rely for the purposes of the accused’s defence,

(c) any point of law which the accused wishes to take and any authority on which the accused intends to rely for that purpose,
(d) by reference to the accused’s defence, the nature of any information that the accused requires the prosecutor to disclose, and

(e) the reasons why the accused considers that disclosure by the prosecutor of any such information is necessary.”.

( ) In section 78 of the 1995 Act (special defences, incrimination, notice of witnesses etc.), after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) Subsection (1) does not apply where—

(a) the accused lodges a defence statement under section 70A, and

(b) the accused’s defence consists of or includes a special defence.”.

95 Defence statements: summary proceedings

(1) This section applies where—

(a) a plea of not guilty is recorded against an accused charged on summary complaint, and

(b) during the relevant period the accused lodges a defence statement.

(2) A defence statement must set out—

(a) the nature of the accused’s defence, including any particular defences on which the accused intends to rely,

(b) any matters of fact on which the accused takes issue with the prosecution and the reason for doing so,

(c) particulars of the matters of fact on which the accused intends to rely for the purposes of the accused’s defence,

(d) any point of law which the accused wishes to take and any authority on which the accused intends to rely for that purpose,

(e) by reference to the accused’s defence, the nature of any information that the accused wishes the prosecutor to disclose, and

(f) the reasons why the accused considers that disclosure by the prosecutor of any such information is necessary.

( ) As soon as practicable after lodging a defence statement, the accused must send a copy of the statement to the prosecutor and any co-accused.

(3) As soon as practicable after receiving a copy of the defence statement the prosecutor must—

(a) review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and

( ) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies

(4) In this section “the relevant period”, in relation to the accused, is the period—

(a) beginning with the recording of the accused’s plea of not guilty, and
(b) ending with the conclusion of the proceedings to which the plea relates.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4), proceedings are to be taken to be concluded if—

(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,
(b) the accused is acquitted,
(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,
(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,
(e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or
(f) the complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

(6) In section 149B of the 1995 Act (notice of defences), after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Subsection (1) does not apply where—

(a) the accused lodges a defence statement under section 95 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00),

(b) the statement is lodged—

(i) where an intermediate diet is to be held, at or before the diet, or

(ii) where such a diet is not to be held, no later than 10 clear days before the trial diet, and

(c) the accused’s defence consists of or includes a defence to which that subsection applies.”.

Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings

(1) This section applies where the accused lodges a defence statement under section 95 at least 14 days before the trial diet.

(2) At least 7 days before the trial diet the accused must—

(a) where there has been no material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the defence statement was lodged, lodge a statement stating that fact,

(b) where there has been a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the defence statement was lodged, lodge a defence statement.

(3) If after lodging a statement under subsection (2) there is a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence, the accused must lodge a defence statement.

(4) Where subsection (3) requires a defence statement to be lodged, it must be lodged before the trial diet begins unless on cause shown the court allows it to be lodged during the trial diet.
(5) As soon as practicable after lodging a statement under subsection (2)(a) or a defence statement under subsection (2)(b) or (3), the accused must send a copy of the statement concerned to the prosecutor and any co-accused.

(6) As soon as practicable after receiving a copy of a defence statement lodged under subsection (2)(b) or (3) the prosecutor must—
   (a) review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and
   (b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.

(7) In this section, “defence statement” is to be construed in accordance with section 95(2).

Court rulings on disclosure

Application by accused for ruling on disclosure

(1) This section applies where the accused—
   (a) has lodged a defence statement under section 70A of the 1995 Act or section 95 or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings) of this Act, and
   (b) considers that the prosecutor has failed, in responding to the statement, to disclose to the accused an item of information to which section 89(3) applies (the “information in question”).

(2) The accused may apply to the court for a ruling on whether section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—
   (a) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,
   (b) a description of the information in question, and
   (c) the accused’s grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—
   (a) comply with subsection (3), or
   (b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the accused an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court must—
(a) make a ruling on whether section 89(3) applies to the information in question or to any part of the information in question, and

(b) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the justice of the peace, sheriff or judge who is presiding, or is to preside, at the accused’s trial.

Review of ruling under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure)

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court has made a ruling under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) that section 89(3) does not apply to an item of information (the “information in question”), and

(b) during the relevant period—

(i) the accused becomes aware of information (the “secondary information”) that was unavailable to the court at the time it made its ruling, and

(ii) the accused considers that, had the secondary information been available to the court at that time, it would have made a ruling that section 89(3) does apply to the information in question.

(2) The accused may apply to the court which made the ruling for a review of the ruling.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question and the secondary information, and

(c) the accused’s grounds for believing that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or

(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the accused an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court may—
(a) affirm the ruling being reviewed, or
(b) recall that ruling and—
   (i) make a ruling that section 89(3) applies to the information in question or to a part of the information in question, and
   (ii) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the justice of the peace, sheriff or judge who dealt with the application for the ruling that is being reviewed.

(9) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the ruling being reviewed.

(10) In this section, “the relevant period”, in relation to an accused, means the period—
   (a) beginning with the making of the ruling being reviewed, and
   (b) ending with the conclusion of proceedings against the accused.

(11) For the purposes of subsection (10), proceedings against the accused are taken to be concluded if—
   (a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,
   (b) the accused is acquitted,
   (c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,
   (d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,
   (e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or
   (f) the indictment or complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

Appeals against rulings under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure)

(1) The prosecutor or the accused may, within the period of 7 days beginning with the day on which a ruling is made under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure), appeal to the High Court against the ruling.

(2) Where an appeal is brought under subsection (1), the court of first instance or the High Court may—
   (a) postpone any trial diet that has been appointed for such period as it thinks appropriate,
   (b) adjourn or further adjourn any hearing for such period as it thinks appropriate,
(c) direct that any period of postponement or adjournment under paragraph (a) or (b) or any part of such period is not to count toward any time limit applying in the case.

(3) In disposing of an appeal under subsection (1), the High Court may—

(a) affirm the ruling, or

(b) remit the case back to the court of first instance with such directions as Court thinks appropriate.

(4) This section does not affect any other right of appeal which any party may have in relation to a ruling under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure).

Effect of guilty plea

96 Effect of guilty plea

(1) This section applies where—

(a) by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b) or 95(3)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose information to an accused, but

(b) before the prosecutor does so, a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused.

(2) The prosecutor need not comply with the requirement in so far as it relates to the disclosure of information which but for that plea would have been likely to have formed part of the evidence to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused.

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) cease to apply if the accused withdraws the plea of guilty.

Redaction of non-disclosable information by prosecutor

(1) Subsection (2) applies where—

(a) by virtue of this Part the prosecutor is required to disclose an item of information (the “disclosable information”), and

(b) the disclosable information forms part of, or contains, other information (the “non-disclosable information”) which the prosecutor is not required to disclose by virtue of any of those sections.

(2) Before disclosing the disclosable information, the prosecutor may (whether by redaction or otherwise) remove or obscure the non-disclosable information.

Disclosure after conclusion of proceedings at first instance

Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation

In sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure))—
“appellant”, in relation to appellate proceedings, includes a person authorised by an order under section 303A(4) of the 1995 Act to institute or continue the proceedings.

“appellate proceedings” means—

(a) an appeal under section 106(1)(a) or (f) of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(b) an appeal under paragraph (b), (ba), (bb), (c), (d), (db) or (dc) of subsection (1) of section 106 of the 1995 Act which brings under review in accordance with subsection (3)(a) of that section an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(c) an appeal under section 175(2)(a) or (d) of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(d) an appeal under paragraph (b), (c) or (cb) of subsection (2) of section 175 of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice which is based on the type of miscarriage described in subsection (5) of that section,

(e) an appeal to the Supreme Court against a determination by the High Court of Justiciary of a devolution issue,

(f) an appeal against conviction by bill of suspension under section 191(1) of the 1995 Act,

(g) an appeal against conviction by bill of advocation,

(h) a petition to the nobile officium in respect of a matter arising out of criminal proceedings which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice which is based on the existence and significance of new evidence,

(i) an appeal under section 62(1)(b) of the 1995 Act against a finding under section 55(2) of that Act,

(j) the referral to the High Court of Justiciary under section 194B of the 1995 Act of—

(i) a conviction, or

(ii) a finding under section 55(2) of that Act.

Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance

(1) This section applies where appellate proceedings are instituted in relation to an appellant.

(2) As soon as practicable after the relevant act the prosecutor must—

(a) review all information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the grounds of appeal in the appellate proceedings, and

(b) disclose to the appellant any information that falls within subsection (3).

(3) Information falls within this subsection if it is—
(a) information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose,

(b) information to which, during the earlier proceedings, the prosecutor considered paragraph (a) or (b) of section 89(3) did not apply but to which the prosecutor now considers one or both of those paragraphs would apply, or

(c) information of which the prosecutor has become aware since the disposal of the earlier proceedings that, had the prosecutor been aware of it during those proceedings, the prosecutor would have been required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b).

(4) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the appellant.

(5) In this section—

“earlier proceedings”, in relation to appellate proceedings, means the proceedings to which the appellate proceedings relate,

“relevant act” means—

(a) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) of the relevant definition, the granting under section 107(1)(a) of the 1995 Act of leave to appeal,

(b) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (c) or (d) of the relevant definition, the granting under section 180(1)(a) or, as the case may be, 187(1)(a) of that Act of leave to appeal,

(c) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (e) of the relevant definition, the granting of leave to appeal by the High Court of Justiciary or, as the case may be, the Supreme Court,

(d) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (f) of the relevant definition—

(i) if leave to appeal is required, the granting under section 191(2) of that Act of leave to appeal,

(ii) if leave to appeal is not required, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the bill of suspension and the interlocutor granting first order for service,

(e) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (g) of the relevant definition, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the bill of advocation and the interlocutor granting first order for service,

(f) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (h) of the relevant definition, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the petition and the interlocutor granting first order for service,
(g) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (i) of the relevant definition, the lodging of the appeal,

(h) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (j) of the relevant definition, the lodging of the grounds of appeal by the person to whom the referral relates,

“relevant definition” means the definition of appellate proceedings in section (Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation),

Continuing duty of prosecutor

(1) This section applies where the prosecutor has complied with section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(2) in relation to an appellant.

(2) During the relevant period, the prosecutor must—

(a) from time to time review all information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the grounds of appeal in the appellate proceedings which relate to the appellant, and

(b) disclose to the appellant any information that falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the appellant.

(4) In subsection (2), “relevant period” means the period—

(a) beginning with the prosecutor’s compliance with section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(2), and

(b) ending with the relevant conclusion.

(5) In subsection (4), “relevant conclusion” means—

(a) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) of the relevant definition—

(i) the lodging under section 116(1) of the 1995 Act of a notice of abandonment, or

(ii) the disposal of the appeal under section 118 of that Act,

(b) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (c) or (d) of the relevant definition—

(i) the disposal of the appeal under section 183(1)(b) to (d) of that Act,

(ii) the abandonment of the appeal under section 184(1) of that Act,
(iii) the setting aside of the conviction or sentence or, as the case may be, conviction and sentence under section 188(1) of that Act, or

(iv) the disposal of the appeal under section 190(1) of that Act,

(c) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (e), (f), (g) or (h) of the relevant definition, the disposal or abandonment of the appeal,

(d) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (i) of the relevant definition, the disposal of the appeal under section 62(6) of that Act or the abandonment of the appeal,

(e) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (j) of the relevant definition—

(i) if the referral or finding is being treated as if it were an appeal under Part 8 of that Act, the conclusion mentioned in paragraph (a) above,

(ii) if the referral or finding is being treated as if it were an appeal under Part 10 of that Act, the conclusion mentioned in paragraph (b) above or, where the referral or finding proceeds by way of bill of suspension, bill of advocation or petition to the nobile officium, paragraph (c) above.

(6) In this section, “relevant definition” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5).

Application to prosecutor for further disclosure

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the prosecutor has complied with section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(2) in relation to an appellant, and

(b) the appellant lodges a further disclosure request—

(i) during the preliminary period, or

(ii) if the court on cause shown allows it, after the preliminary period but before the relevant conclusion.

(2) A further disclosure request must set out—

(a) by reference to the grounds of appeal, the nature of the information that the appellant wishes the prosecutor to disclose, and

(b) the reasons why the appellant considers that disclosure by the prosecutor of any such information is necessary.

(3) As soon as practicable after receiving a copy of the further disclosure request the prosecutor must—

(a) review any information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the request, and
(b) disclose to the appellant any of that information that falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(4) In this section—

“preliminary period”, in relation to the appellate proceedings concerned, means the period beginning with the relevant act and ending with the beginning of the hearing of the appellate proceedings,

“relevant act” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5),

“relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section (Continuing duty of prosecutor)(5).

Further duty of prosecutor: conviction upheld on appeal

(1) This section applies where—

(a) in an appeal to the High Court of Justiciary, the High Court upholds the conviction of a person, and

(b) after the conclusion of the appeal the prosecutor becomes aware of—

(i) information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose, or

(ii) information that falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3) which would have related to the grounds of appeal but was not disclosed.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(4) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.

(5) In this section, “earlier proceedings” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5).

Further duty of prosecutor: convicted persons

(1) This section applies where—

(a) a person has been convicted,

(b) after conviction the prosecutor becomes aware of information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose, and

(c) section (Further duty of prosecutor: conviction upheld on appeal) does not apply.
(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) If the person institutes appellate proceedings in relation to the conviction, the prosecutor need not comply with the duty imposed by subsection (2) during the appropriate period.

(4) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(5) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.

(6) In this section—

“appropriate period”, in relation to appellate proceedings, means the period beginning with the relevant act and ending with the relevant conclusion,

“earlier proceedings” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5),

“relevant act” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5),

“relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section (Continuing duty of prosecutor)(5).

Further duty of prosecutor: appeal against acquittal

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the prosecutor appeals against the acquittal of a person, and

(b) after lodging the appeal the prosecutor becomes aware of information which relates to the appeal and falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(4) The prosecutor ceases to be subject to the duty imposed by subsection (2) on the disposal of the appeal by the High Court of Justiciary.

(5) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.

Court rulings on disclosure: appellate proceedings

Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure

(1) This section applies where the appellant—

(a) has made a further disclosure request under section (Application to prosecutor for further disclosure), and
(b) considers that the prosecutor has failed, in responding to the request, to disclose to the appellant an item of information falling within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) (3) (the “information in question”).

(2) The appellant may apply to the court for a ruling on whether the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) (3).

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question, and

(c) the appellant’s grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) (3).

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or

(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) (3).

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the appellant an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court must—

(a) make a ruling on whether the information in question, or any part of the information in question, falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) (3), and

(b) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) In this section, “the court” means the court before which the appellant’s appeal is brought.

(9) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the judges who are to hear the appellant’s appeal.

Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court has made a ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure) that an item of information (the “information in question”) does not fall within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) (3), and
(b) during the relevant period—

(i) the appellant becomes aware of information ("secondary information") that was unavailable to the court at the time it made its ruling, and

(ii) the appellant considers that, had the secondary information been available to the court at that time, it would have made a ruling that the information in question does fall within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(2) The appellant may apply to the court which made the ruling for a review of the ruling.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question and the secondary information, and

(c) the appellant’s grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or

(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the appellant an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court may—

(a) affirm the ruling being reviewed, or

(b) recall that ruling and—

(i) make a ruling that the information in question, or any part of the information in question, falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3), and

(ii) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the judges who dealt with the application for the ruling that is being reviewed.
(9) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the ruling being reviewed.

(10) In this section, “relevant period”, in relation to an appellant, means the period—
(a) beginning with the making of the ruling being reviewed, and
(b) ending with the relevant conclusion.

(11) In subsection (10), “relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section (Continuing duty of prosecutor)(5).

Means of disclosure

(1) This section applies where by virtue of this Part the prosecutor is required to disclose information to an accused.

(2) The prosecutor may disclose the information by any means.

(3) In particular, the prosecutor may disclose the information by enabling the accused to inspect it at a reasonable time and in a reasonable place.

(4) Subsection (5) applies if the information is contained in—
(a) a precognition,
(b) a victim statement,
(c) a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor does not intend to call to give evidence in the proceedings, or
(d) where the proceedings relating to the accused are summary proceedings, a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor intends to call to give evidence in the proceedings.

(5) In complying with the requirement, the prosecutor need not disclose the precognition or, as the case may be, statement.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where the proceedings relating to the accused are solemn proceedings and—
(a) the information is contained in a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor intends to call to give evidence in the proceedings, or
(b) the information is contained in a statement and the prosecutor intends to apply under section 259 of the 1995 Act to have evidence of the statement admitted in the proceedings.

(7) In complying with the requirement, the prosecutor must disclose the statement.

Confidentiality

Confidentiality of disclosed information

(1) This section applies where by virtue of this Part the prosecutor discloses information to an accused.
(2) The accused must not use or disclose the information or anything recorded in it other than in accordance with subsection (3).

(3) The accused may use or disclose the information—

(a) for the purposes of the proper preparation and presentation of the accused’s case in the proceedings in relation to which the information was disclosed (“the original proceedings”),

(b) with a view to the taking of an appeal in relation to the matter giving rise to the original proceedings,

(c) for the purposes of the proper preparation and presentation of the accused’s case in any such appeal.

(4) A person to whom information is disclosed by virtue of subsection (3) must not use or disclose the information or anything recorded in it other than for the purpose for which it was disclosed.

(4A) If despite subsection (2) the accused discloses the information or anything recorded in it other than in accordance with subsection (3), a person to whom information is disclosed must not use or disclose the information or anything recorded in it.

(4B) Subsections (2), (4) and (4A) do not apply in relation to the use or disclosure of information which is in the public domain at the time of the use or disclosure.

(5) In subsection (3) “appeal” includes the reference of a case to the High Court of Justiciary by the Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission under section 194B of the 1995 Act.

(a) a petition to the nobile officium,

(b) proceedings in the European Court of Human Rights.

(6) Nothing in this section affects any other restriction or prohibition on the use or disclosure of information, whether the restriction or prohibition arises by virtue of an enactment (whenever passed or made) or otherwise.

99 Contravention of section 98

(1) A person who knowingly uses or discloses information in contravention of section 98 commits an offence.

(2) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—

(a) on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both,

(b) on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years or to a fine or to both.

Exemptions from disclosure

Information must not be disclosed by virtue of this Part to the extent that it is material the disclosure of which is prohibited by section 17 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 (c.23).
Applications to court: orders restricting disclosure

102 Application for non-disclosure order

(1) This section applies where—

(a) by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose an item of information to an accused,

(b) section 89(3)(a) or (b) applies to the information, and

(c) the prosecutor considers that subsection (2) applies.

(2) This subsection applies if disclosure of the item of information—

(a) would be likely to cause serious injury, or death, to any person,

(b) would be likely to obstruct or prevent the prevention, detection, investigation or prosecution of crime, or

(c) would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest.

(3) The prosecutor must apply to the court for an order under section 106 (a “section 106 order”).

103 Application for non-notification order or exclusion order

(1) This section applies where the prosecutor is required by section 102(3) to apply to the court for a section 106 order.

(2) If the application for a section 106 order relates to solemn proceedings, the prosecutor may also apply to the court for—

(a) a non-notification order and an exclusion order, or

(b) an exclusion order (but not a non-notification order).

(3) If the application for a section 106 order relates to summary proceedings, the prosecutor may also apply to the court for an exclusion order.

(4) A non-notification order is an order under section 104 prohibiting notice being given to the accused of—

(a) the making of an application for—

(i) the section 106 order to which the non-notification order relates,

(ii) the non-notification order, and

(iii) an exclusion order, and

(b) the determination of those applications.

(5) An exclusion order is an order under section 104 or 105 prohibiting the accused from attending or making representations in proceedings for the determination of the application for a section 106 order to which the exclusion order relates.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where the prosecutor applies—
(a) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) for a non-notification order and an exclusion order, or
(b) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) or (b) for an exclusion order.

(7) Before determining in accordance with section 106 the application for the section 106 order, the court must—
   (a) in accordance with section 104, determine any applications for a non-notification order and an exclusion order,
   (b) in accordance with section 105, determine any application for an exclusion order.

104 Application for non-notification order and exclusion order

(1) This section applies where the prosecutor applies for a section 106 order and an exclusion order.

(2) On receiving the application, the court must appoint a hearing to determine whether a non-notification order should be made.

(3) The accused is not to be notified of—
   (a) the applications for the non-disclosure order, non-notification order and exclusion order, or
   (b) the hearing appointed under subsection (2).

(4) The accused is not to be given the opportunity to be heard or be represented at the hearing.

(5) If, after giving the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (6) are met, the court may make a non-notification order.

(6) Those conditions are—
   (a) that disclosure to the accused of the making of the application for the section 106 order would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and
   (b) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of a non-notification order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(7) If the court makes a non-notification order, it must also make an exclusion order.

(8) If the court refuses to make a non-notification order—
   the court must appoint a hearing to determine the application for an exclusion order,

(9) If after giving the prosecutor and, subject to subsection (10), the accused an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (4) of section 105 are met, the court may make an exclusion order under subsection (3) of that section.

(10) On the application of the prosecutor the court may exclude the accused from the hearing appointed under subsection (8).
Application for exclusion order

(1) This section applies where by virtue of section 103(2)(b) or (3) the prosecutor applies for an exclusion order (but not a non-notification order).

(2) On receiving the application the court must appoint a hearing.

(2A) On the application of the prosecutor the court may exclude the accused from the hearing.

(3) If after giving the prosecutor and, subject to subsection (2A), the accused an opportunity to be heard on the applications for the exclusion order and the section 106 order to which it relates the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (4) are met, the court may make an exclusion order.

(4) Those conditions are—

(a) that disclosure to the accused of the nature of the information to which the application for the section 106 order relates would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and

(b) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of an exclusion order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

Application for non-disclosure order: determination

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the prosecutor applies for a section 106 order, and

(b) any application for a non-notification order or an exclusion order has been determined by the court.

(2) The court must—

(a) consider the item of information to which the application for a section 106 order relates,

(b) give the prosecutor and (if the court has not made an exclusion order) the accused the opportunity to be heard, and

(c) determine—

(i) whether the conditions in subsection (3) apply, and

(ii) if so, whether subsection (4) applies.

(3) The conditions are—

(a) that by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose the item of information,

(b) that section 89(3)(a) or (b) applies to the information,

(c) that if the item of information were to be disclosed there would be a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest,

(d) that withholding the item of information would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial, and
(d) that the public interest would be protected only if a section 106 order were to be made.

(4) This subsection applies if the court considers that the item of information could be disclosed or partly disclosed in such a way that—

(a) the condition in paragraph (b) of subsection (3) would not be met, and

(b) the disclosure (or partial disclosure) would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(4A) If the court considers that subsection (3) (but not subsection (4)) applies, it may make a section 106 order requiring the information to be withheld.

(4B) If the court considers that subsection (4) applies, it may make a section 106 order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the manner specified in the order.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4) the ways in which the item of information might be disclosed or partly disclosed include in particular—

(a) providing the information after (whether by redaction or otherwise) removing or obscuring parts of it,

(b) providing extracts or summaries of the information or part of it.

Orders preventing or restricting disclosure: Secretary of State

Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State

(1) The Secretary of State may apply to the relevant court for an order under this section (a “section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order”) in relation to the proposed disclosure by the prosecutor to the accused in relevant criminal proceedings of information which the prosecutor—

(a) is required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b), or

(b) intends to disclose otherwise than by virtue of this Part.

(2) If the Secretary of State also makes an application in accordance with subsection (2) or (3) of section (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State), the relevant court must comply with subsections (6) and (7) of that section.

(3) Where an application is made under subsection (1), the relevant court must—

(a) consider the item of information to which the application relates,

(b) give the Secretary of State and the prosecutor the opportunity to be heard,
(c) if the application relates to information which the prosecutor is required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings) (6)(b) and a non-attendance order has not been made, give the accused the opportunity to be heard, and

(d) determine—

(i) whether the conditions in subsection (4) apply, and

(ii) if so, whether subsection (5) applies.

(4) The conditions are—

(a) that if the item of information were to be disclosed there would be a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest,

(b) that withholding the item of information would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial, and

(c) that the public interest would be protected only if a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order of the type mentioned in subsection (6) were to be made.

(5) This subsection applies if the court considers that the item of information could be disclosed or partly disclosed in such a way that—

(a) the condition in paragraph (a) of subsection (4) would not be met, and

(b) the disclosure (or partial disclosure) would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(6) If the court considers that subsection (4) (but not subsection (5)) applies, it may make a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order preventing disclosure of the information.

(7) If the court considers that subsection (5) applies, it may make a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the manner specified in the order.

(8) For the purposes of subsection (7) the order may in particular specify that—

(a) the item of information be disclosed after removing or obscuring parts of it (whether by redaction or otherwise),

(b) extracts or summaries of the item of information (or part of it) be disclosed instead of the item of information.

(9) If an application is made under this section the relevant criminal proceedings must be adjourned until the application is disposed of or withdrawn.

(10) In this section and sections (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State) to (Application for non-attendance order)—
“relevant court” means the court before which relevant criminal proceedings are taking place,

“relevant criminal proceedings” means criminal proceedings relating to the item of information to which the application under this section relates.

Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State

(1) This section applies where the Secretary of State applies for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order.

(2) If the application under section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) relates to solemn proceedings, the Secretary of State may also apply to the relevant court for—

(a) a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order, or

(b) a non-attendance order (but not a restricted notification order).

(3) If the application under section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) relates to summary proceedings, the Secretary of State may also apply to the court for a non-attendance order.

(4) A restricted notification order is an order under section (Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order) prohibiting notice being given to the accused of—

- the making of an application for—
  (i) the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order to which the restricted notification order relates,
  (ii) the restricted notification order, and
  (iii) a non-attendance order, and

(b) the determination of those applications.

(5) A non-attendance order is an order under section (Application for non-attendance order) prohibiting the accused from attending or making representations in proceedings for the determination of the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order to which the non-attendance order relates.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where the Secretary of State applies—

(a) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order, or

(b) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) or (b) for a non-attendance order.

(7) Before determining the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, the court must—
(a) in accordance with section (Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order), determine any application for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order,

(b) in accordance with section (Application for non-attendance order), determine any application for a non-attendance order.

Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order

(1) This section applies where by virtue of section (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State)(2) the Secretary of State applies for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order.

(2) On receiving the application, the relevant court must appoint a hearing to determine whether a restricted notification order should be made.

(3) The accused is not to be notified of—

(a) the applications for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, the restricted notification order and the non-attendance order, or

(b) the hearing appointed under subsection (2).

(4) The accused is not to be given the opportunity to be heard or be represented at the hearing.

(5) If, after giving the Secretary of State and the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (6) are met, the court may make a restricted notification order.

(6) Those conditions are—

(a) that disclosure to the accused of the making of the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and

(b) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of a restricted notification order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(7) If the court makes a restricted notification order, it must also make a non-attendance order.

(8) If the court refuses to make a restricted notification order, the court must appoint a hearing to determine the application for a non-attendance order.

(9) If after giving the Secretary of State, the prosecutor and, subject to subsection (10), the accused an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (5) of section (Application for non-attendance order) are met, the court may make a non-attendance order under subsection (4) of that section.

(10) On the application of the Secretary of State the court may exclude the accused from the hearing appointed under subsection (8).
Application for non-attendance order

(1) This section applies where by virtue of section (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State)(2)(b) the Secretary of State applies for a non-attendance order (but not a restricted notification order).

(2) On receiving the application, the relevant court must appoint a hearing.

(3) On the application of the Secretary of State the court may exclude the accused from the hearing.

(4) If after giving the Secretary of State, the prosecutor and, if not excluded under subsection (3), the accused an opportunity to be heard the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (5) are met, the court may make a non-attendance order.

(5) Those conditions are—

(a) that disclosure to the accused of the nature of the information to which the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order relates would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and

(b) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of a non-attendance order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

Special counsel

107 Special counsel

(1) This section applies where the court is determining—

(a) an application for—

   (i) a non-notification order,

   ( ) an application for an exclusion order,

   ( ) an application for a section 106 order,

   ( ) an application for a restricted notification order,

   ( ) an application for a non-attendance order,

   ( ) an application for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order,

(b) an application for review of the grant or refusal of any of those orders,

(c) an appeal relating to any of those orders.

(2) If the condition in subsection (3) is met, the court may appoint a person (“special counsel”) to represent the interests of the accused in relation to the determination of the application, review or appeal.

(3) The condition is that the court considers that the appointment of special counsel is necessary to ensure that the accused receives a fair trial.

( ) Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in a non-notification case, the court—

(a) must give the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard, but
(b) must not give the accused an opportunity to be heard.

Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in a restricted notification case, the court—

(a) must give the prosecutor and the Secretary of State an opportunity to be heard,

(b) must not give the accused an opportunity to be heard.

Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case, the court must give all the parties an opportunity to be heard.

The prosecutor may appeal to the High Court against a decision of the court not to appoint special counsel in any case.

The Secretary of State may appeal to the High Court against a decision of the court not to appoint special counsel in a restricted notification case.

The accused may appeal to the High Court against a decision not to appoint special counsel in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case.

In this section and section (Role of special counsel)—

“non-notification case” means a case where the court is determining—

(a) an application for a non-notification order,

(b) an application for review of the grant or refusal of a non-notification order,

(c) an appeal relating to such an order,

“restricted notification case” means a case where the court is determining—

(a) an application for a restricted notification order,

(b) an application for review of the grant or refusal of a restricted notification order,

(c) an appeal relating to such an order.

Persons eligible for appointment as special counsel

The court may appoint a person as special counsel under section 107(2) only if the person is a solicitor or advocate.

Role of special counsel

(1) Special counsel’s duty is, in relation to the determination of the relevant application or appeal, to act in the best interests of the accused with a view only to ensuring that the accused receives a fair trial.

(2) Special counsel—

(a) is entitled to see the confidential information, but
(b) must not disclose any of the confidential information to the accused or the accused’s representative (if any).

(3) Special counsel appointed in a non-notification case or a restricted notification case must not—

(a) disclose to the accused or the accused’s representative (if any) the making of the relevant application or appeal, or

(b) otherwise communicate with the accused or the accused’s representative (if any) about the relevant application or appeal.

(4) Special counsel appointed in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case must not communicate with the accused about the relevant application or appeal except—

(a) with the permission of the court, and

(b) where permission is given, in accordance with such conditions as the court may impose.

(5) Before deciding whether to grant permission, the court must give—

(a) the prosecutor, and

(b) in the case of an application for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order or a non-attendance order, the Secretary of State,

an opportunity to be heard.

(6) In this section—

“the confidential information” means—

(a) the information to which the relevant application or appeal relates, and

(b) a copy of the relevant application or appeal,

“relevant application or appeal” means the application or appeal referred to in section 107(1) in respect of which special counsel is appointed.

Appeals

(1) The prosecutor may appeal to the High Court against—

(a) the making of a section 106 order under section 106(4B),

(b) the making of a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order,

(c) the making of a restricted notification order,

(d) the making of a non-attendance order,

(e) the refusal of an application for a non-notification order,

(f) the refusal of an application for an exclusion order, or

(g) the refusal of an application for a section 106 order.

(2) The accused may appeal to the High Court against the making of—
(a) an exclusion order under section 105(3),
(b) a section 106 order,
(c) a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, or
(d) a non-attendance order.

(3) The Secretary of State may appeal to the High Court against—
(a) the making of a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order under section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State)(7),
(b) the refusal of an application for a restricted notification order,
(c) the refusal of an application for a non-attendance order, or
(d) the refusal of an application for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order.

(4) If special counsel was appointed in relation to an application for a non-notification order, special counsel may appeal to the High Court against the making of—
(a) the non-notification order, or
(b) a section 106 order in relation to the same item of information.

(5) If special counsel was appointed in relation to an application for a restricted notification order, special counsel may appeal to the High Court against the making of—
(a) the restricted notification order, or
(b) a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order in relation to the same item of information.

(6) An appeal must be lodged not later than 7 days after the decision appealed against.

(7) The prosecutor is entitled to be heard in any appeal under this section.

(8) The accused is entitled to be heard in an appeal under—
(a) subsection (1)(a) or (g) or (2)(b) unless—
   (i) a non-notification order has been made, or
   (ii) an exclusion order has been made,
(b) subsection (1)(b), (2)(c) or (3)(a) or (d) unless—
   (i) a restricted notification order has been made, or
   (ii) a non-attendance order has been made,
(c) subsection (1)(d), (2)(d) or (3)(c) unless the court, on the application of the Secretary of State, excludes the accused from the hearing,
(d) subsection (1)(f) or (2)(a) unless the court, on the application of the prosecutor excludes the accused from the hearing.
(9) The Secretary of State is entitled to be heard in an appeal under subsection (1)(b), (c) or (d), (2)(c) or (d) or (5).

Reviews

111 Review of grant of non-disclosure order

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court makes a section 106 order, and

(b) during the relevant period—

(i) the prosecutor or the accused becomes aware of information that was unavailable to the court at the time when the order was made.

(2) The prosecutor or, as the case may be, special counsel or the accused may apply to the court to review the section 106 order.

(3) Except in the case mentioned in subsection (4), the same persons are entitled to be heard on the application for review as were entitled to be heard on the application for the section 106 order.

(4) If—

(a) a non-notification order was granted in relation to the section 106 order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section 104(6) are met,

the court may, where the prosecutor or, as the case may be, special counsel applies for the review, make an order prohibiting notification being given to the accused of the application for review.

(5) If—

(a) an exclusion order was granted in relation to the section 106 order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section 105(4) are met,

the court may, where the prosecutor or, as the case may be, special counsel or the accused applies for the review, exclude the accused from the review.

(6) If the court is not satisfied that the conditions mentioned in section 106(3) are met, the court may—

(a) recall the section 106 order, or

(b) recall the section 106 order and make an order requiring disclosure to the specified extent.

(7) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the section 106 order.

(8) In this section—

“specified” means specified in the order of the court,

“the relevant period”, in relation to an accused, means the period—

(a) beginning with the making of the section 106 order, and

(b) ending with the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.
For the purposes of this section, proceedings against an accused are to be taken to be concluded if—

(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,
(b) the accused is acquitted,
(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted \textit{simpliciter},
(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal.
(e) any appeal by the prosecutor is determined or abandoned, or
(f) the accused is convicted and any appeal is determined or abandoned.

\textbf{Review of section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order}

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court makes a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, and

(b) during the relevant period the Secretary of State, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused becomes aware of information that was unavailable to the court at the time when the order was made.

(2) The Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused may apply to the court to review the order.

(3) Except in the case mentioned in subsection (4), the same persons are entitled to be heard on the application for review as were entitled to be heard on the application for the order.

(4) If—

(a) a restricted notification order was granted in relation to the order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section (Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order)(6) are met,

the court may, where the Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor or special counsel applies for the review, make an order prohibiting notification of the application for review being given to the accused.

(5) If—

(a) a non-attendance order was granted in relation to the order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section (Application for non-attendance order)(5) are met,

the court may, where the Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused applies for the review, exclude the accused from the review.
(6) If the court is not satisfied that the conditions mentioned in section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State)(4) are met, the court may—

(a) recall the order which is under review, or

(b) recall the order which is under review and make an order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the specified manner.

(7) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the order which is under review.

(8) In this section—

“specified” means specified in the order of the court,

“the relevant period”, in relation to an accused, means the period—

(a) beginning with the making of the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, and

(b) ending with the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.

112 Review by court of non-disclosure order

(1) This section applies where the court makes a section 106 order or a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order.

(2) During the relevant period, the court must from time to time consider in relation to each order whether, having regard to the information of which the court is aware, the order concerned continues to be appropriate.

(3) If the court considers that the order concerned might no longer be appropriate, the court must appoint a hearing to review the matter.

(4) In this section “the relevant period” has the same meaning as in section 111(8).

Applications and reviews: general provisions

113 Applications and reviews: general provisions

(1) This section applies in relation to—

(a) an application for an order mentioned in subsection (2), and

(b) a review relating to such an order.

(2) The orders are—

(a) a non-notification order.

(b) an exclusion order,

(c) a section 106 order.
Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application or review is to be assigned to the same justice of the peace, sheriff or, as the case may be, judge as has been (or is to be assigned) to the trial diet in the proceedings against the accused to which the application relates.

The accused is not entitled to see or be made aware of the contents of an application for—

(a) a non-notification order,
(b) an exclusion order,
(c) a section 106 order,
(d) a review made by the prosecutor.

Code of practice

114 Code of practice

(1) The Lord Advocate—

(a) must issue a code of practice providing guidance about this Part, and
(b) may from time to time revise the code for the time being in force.

(2) The persons mentioned in subsection (3) must have regard to the code of practice for the time being in force in carrying out their functions in relation to the investigation and reporting of crime and sudden deaths.

(3) Those persons are—

(a) police forces,
(b) prosecutors,
(c) such other persons who—

(i) engage (to any extent) in the investigation of crime or sudden deaths, and

(ii) submit reports relating to those investigations to the procurator fiscal,

as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe by regulations.

(4) The Lord Advocate must lay before the Scottish Parliament any code or revised code issued under this section.

Acts of Adjournal

115 Acts of Adjournal

The High Court may by Act of Adjournal make such rules as it considers necessary or expedient for the purposes of, in consequence of, or for giving full effect to, any provision of this Part.

Abolition of common law rules about disclosure

(1) The provisions of this Part replace any equivalent common law rules about disclosure of information by the prosecutor in connection with criminal proceedings.
The common law rules about disclosure of information by the prosecutor in connection with criminal proceedings are abolished in so far as they are replaced by or are inconsistent with the provisions of this Part.

Sections (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) and (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure) do not affect any right under the common law of an accused or appellant to seek disclosure or recovery of information by or from the prosecutor by means of a procedure other than an application under one or other of those sections.

Subsection (5) applies where, following an application (the “earlier disclosure application”) by the accused or the appellant under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) or section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure), the court has made a ruling that (as the case may be)—

(a) section 89(3) does not apply to information, or

(b) information does not fall within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

The accused or, as the case may be, the appellant, is not entitled to seek the disclosure or recovery of the same information by or from the prosecutor by means of any other procedure at common law on grounds that are substantially the same as any of those on which the earlier disclosure application was made.

Subsection (7) applies where, following an application (the “earlier common law application”) by the accused under a procedure other than an application under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) or (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure), the court has decided not to make an order for the recovery or disclosure of information by or from the prosecutor.

The accused or, as the case may be, the appellant is not entitled to make an application under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) or (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure) in relation to the same information on grounds that are substantially the same as any of those on which the earlier common law application was made.

In this section, “appellant” has the meaning given by section (Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation).

116 Interpretation of Part 6

In this Part—

“investigating agency” has the meaning given by section (Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases)(4), “procurator fiscal” and “prosecutor” have the meanings given by section 307(1) of the 1995 Act.

References in the following sections to the accused include references to a solicitor or advocate acting on behalf of the accused—
(a) 89(2)(b),
(b) section 90(1),
(c) section 95(1)(b),
(d) section 97,
(e) section 98(1), and (2) and (where it first occurs) (3),
(f) section 102,
(g) section 103,
(h) section 104,
(i) section 105,
(j) section 106(2), and
(k) section 111(1), (2), (4) and (5).
Annexe B

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill – Stage 2

Summary of Amendments

Amendments 552 to 556 are proposed in response to concerns expressed at stage 1 at the complexity of the provisions in section 85 of the Bill and aim to simplify what “information” is for the purposes of part 6 and make clearer how witness statements, precognitions and victim statements are to be handled by prosecutors.

Amendments 557 to 565 simplify the arrangement proposed in sections 86 to 88 which set out a system of schedules in solemn cases, removing all reference to “schedules” and the administrative processes for their being handled. In its place, they insert duties on investigating agencies to provide information, and details of information, to prosecutors and thereafter duties on prosecutors to provide the accused with details of information that may be relevant to the case, but which is not sensitive in nature.

These amendments also address comments in the Justice Committee’s report at stage 1 questioning the need for provisions distinguishing “sensitive” information and “highly sensitive” information by removing the reference to “highly sensitive” information. That was concerned only with the administrative handling of the information by prosecutors and investigating agencies and, after reflection, it is considered that this level of detail is not needed in primary legislation.

Amendments 566 to 583, 617, 619 and 690 to 691 simplify the provisions which define the duty to disclose information by removing both detailed examples of information which would fall under the duty and procedural steps which, on reflection, would be better to be included in the Code of Practice, or in other guidance. Amendments 606 and 607 also clarify what the trigger point is for the commencement of the duty to disclose information in solemn cases.

Amendments 584 to 602 make a number of technical amendments to the scheme for defence statements designed to simplify and clarify these provisions and their interaction with provisions on the duty of disclosure and new provisions providing for court rulings on materiality.

Amendments 620 to 623 make amendments to the provisions in sections 98 to 101 in relation to the confidentiality of disclosed information to clarify what accused persons and persons to whom he passes that information can, and cannot do, with it. They also seek to remove sections 100 and 101 from the Bill which we consider now on reflection are not necessary as there are existing statutory and other mechanisms to enable accused persons to obtain information for uses other than the preparation or presentation of his case.

Amendments 625 to 645 and various subsequent amendments are aimed at simplifying the provisions relating to orders under section 104 to 106 for non-disclosure of information on public interest grounds and adjusting the tests to be applied by the Court in such cases to simplify and clarify what the court must do.

Amendments 660 and 661 seek to clarify that only solicitors and advocates may be appointed as special counsel and set out the role of special counsel and regulate their communication with the accused and his representatives.

We also propose a number of new provisions.

Amendments 653 to 656 and 681 to 684 establish a system to enable a Secretary of State to apply to the court for an order prohibiting disclosure of information which the prosecutor is otherwise required to disclose and for other orders ancillary to that order where, if the information were to be disclosed there would be a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest. The scheme broadly mirrors the scheme set out in sections 102 to 106 of the Bill which enables applications to be made by the prosecutor. These amendments are necessary to recognise that there may be public interest issues which arise in criminal proceedings in which Secretaries of State may have an interest.

Amendments 603 to 605 and amendments 615 to 616 establish a system for court rulings on disclosure, offering the accused/appellant a remedy in cases where the prosecutor decides that an item of information does not require to be disclosed and the accused/appellant considers that the information should be disclosed on account of it meeting the duty. This is in response to concerns expressed by the legal profession, and the Glasgow Bar Association, in particular, that the Bill, at introduction, provided no such remedy.

Amendment 688 will ensure that the existing common law rules on disclosure are displaced by the provisions in Part 6 only insofar as the common law is replaced by, or is inconsistent with, the Bill. Provision is also made here detailing how the scheme under the new legislation will, in due course, operate in relation to the new provisions which set up court rulings on materiality and with the existing common law remedies available regarding the recovery of information.

The case of McDonald v HMA was reported after Lord Coulsfield concluded his review. In it, the High Court affirmed that the duty of disclosure is a continuing one, and one which continues even after an accused person is convicted - although the nature of the duty after conviction and during appeals is different to the duty at first instance. Amendments 608 to 610 and 612 to 614 are necessary to define the different nature of the duty after the conclusion of the proceedings at 1st instance.
CONTENTS

Section

PART 1
SENTENCING

The Scottish Sentencing Council

3 The Scottish Sentencing Council
4 The Council’s objectives
5 Sentencing guidelines
6 Consultation on proposed sentencing guidelines
6A Approval of sentencing guidelines by High Court
7 Effect of sentencing guidelines
8 Ministers’ power to request that sentencing guidelines be prepared or reviewed
9 High Court’s power to require preparation or review of sentencing guidelines
9A Publication of High Court guideline judgements
10 Scottish Court Service to provide sentencing information to the Council
11 The Council’s power to provide information, advice etc.
12 Business plan
13 Annual report

Community payback orders

14 Community payback orders

Non-harassment orders

15 Non-harassment orders

Short sentences

16 Short periods of detention
18 Amendments of Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007
19 Early removal of certain short-term prisoners from the United Kingdom

Other sentencing measures

20 Reports about supervised persons
20A Pre-sentencing reports about organisations
21 Extended sentences for certain sexual offences
22 Effect of probation and absolute discharge
23 Offences aggravated by racial or religious prejudice
24A Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions
24B Minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point
PART 2
CRIMINAL LAW

Serious organised crime
25 Involvement in serious organised crime
26 Offences aggravated by connection with serious organised crime
27 Directing serious organised crime
28 Failure to report serious organised crime

Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes
28A Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: UK residents
28B Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: retrospective application

Articles banned in prison
29 Articles banned in prison

Crossbows, knives etc.
30 Sale and hire of crossbows to persons under 18
31 Sale and hire of knives and certain other articles to persons under 18

Offensive weapons etc.
31A Offensive weapons etc.

Stalking
31B Offence of stalking

Sexual offences
32 Certain sexual offences by non-natural persons
33 Indecent images of children
34 Extreme pornography
34A Voyeurism: additional forms of conduct
34B Sexual offences: defences in relation to offences against older children
34C Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution

People trafficking
35 People trafficking

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour
35A Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour

Fraud and embezzlement
36 Alternative charges for fraud and embezzlement
36A Articles for use in fraud

Conspiracy
37 Conspiracy to commit offences outwith Scotland

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
37A Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
PART 3
CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

Children

38 Prosecution of children

Offences: liability of partners

39 Offences: liability of partners

Witness statements

40 Witness statements

Police liberation

41 Breach of undertaking

Grant of warrants

41A Grant of warrants for execution by constables and police members of SCDEA

Bail

42 Bail review applications
43 Bail condition for identification procedures etc.
43A Bail conditions: remote monitoring requirements

Prosecution on indictment

44 Prosecution on indictment: Scottish Law Officers

Transfer of justice of the peace court cases

45 Transfer of justice of the peace court cases

Additions to complaint

46 Additional charge where bail etc. breached

Dockets and charges in sex cases

46A Dockets and charges in sex cases

Remand and committal of children

47 Remand and committal of children and young persons

Prosecution of organisations

48 Meaning of “organisation”
49 Proceedings on indictment against organisations
50 Prosecution of organisations by summary procedure
51 Manner of citation of organisations in summary proceedings

Personal conduct of case by accused

51A Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused in certain proceedings

Disclosure of convictions etc.

52 Disclosure of convictions and non-court disposals
52A Convictions by courts in other EU member States
Appeals: time limits

53 Time limits for lodging certain appeals

Crown appeals

54 Submissions as to sufficiency of evidence
55 Prosecutor’s right of appeal
56 Power of High Court in appeal under section 107A of 1995 Act
57 Further amendment of 1995 Act

Retention and use of samples etc.

58 Retention of samples etc.
58A Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA accepted
58B Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences
59 Retention of samples etc. from children referred to children’s hearings
59A Extension of section 19A of 1995 Act
60 Use of samples etc.

Referrals from the Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission

61 Referrals from Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission: grounds for appeal

PART 4

Evidence

61A Admissibility of prior statements of witnesses: abolition of competence test
62 Witness statements: use during trial
63 Spouse or civil partner of accused a compellable witness
64 Special measures for child witnesses and other vulnerable witnesses
64A Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences
65 Amendment of Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003
66 Witness anonymity orders
67 Television link evidence
67A European evidence warrants

PART 5

Criminal Justice

Jury service

67B Lists of jurors
68 Upper age limit for jurors
68A Excusal from jury service
69 Persons excusable from jury service

Data matching for detection of fraud etc.

70 Data matching for detection of fraud etc.

Sharing information with anti-fraud organisations

71 Sharing information with anti-fraud organisations

Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc.

72 Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc.
Sexual offences prevention orders
73 Sexual offences prevention orders

Foreign travel orders
74 Foreign travel orders

Sex offender notification requirements
74A Sex offender notification requirements

Risk of sexual harm orders
75 Risk of sexual harm orders
75A Risk of sexual harm orders: spent convictions

Obtaining information from outwith United Kingdom
76 Obtaining information from outwith United Kingdom

Surveillance
77 Grant of authorisations for surveillance

Interference with property
78 Authorisations to interfere with property etc.

Amendments of Part 5 of Police Act 1997
79 Amendments of Part 5 of Police Act 1997

Rehabilitation of offenders
79A Spent alternatives to prosecution: Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974

Medical services in prisons
79B Medical services in prisons

Miscellaneous
80 Assistance for victim support
81 Public defence solicitors
82 Compensation for miscarriages of justice
83 Financial reporting orders
84 Compensation orders

PART 6
DISCLOSURE

Meaning of “information”
85 Meaning of “information”

Provision of information to prosecutor
86 Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases
87 Continuing duty to provide information: solemn cases
88A Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases
88B Continuing duty of investigating agency: summary cases
Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information

89 Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information
89A Disclosure of other information: solemn cases
90 Continuing duty of prosecutor

Defence statements

94 Defence statements: solemn proceedings
95 Defence statements: summary proceedings
95A Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings

Court rulings on disclosure

95B Application by accused for ruling on disclosure
95C Review of ruling under section 95B
95D Appeals against rulings under section 95B

Effect of guilty plea

Disclosure after conclusion of proceedings at first instance

96 Effect of guilty plea

96A Sections 96B to 96I: interpretation
96B Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance
96C Continuing duty of prosecutor
96D Application to prosecutor for further disclosure
96E Further duty of prosecutor: conviction upheld on appeal
96F Further duty of prosecutor: convicted persons
96G Further duty of prosecutor: appeal against acquittal

Court rulings on disclosure: appellate proceedings

96H Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure
96I Review of ruling under section 96H

Redaction

92 Redaction of non-disclosable information by prosecutor

Means of disclosure

97 Means of disclosure

Confidentiality

98 Confidentiality of disclosed information
99 Contravention of section 98

Exemptions from disclosure

Applications to court: orders preventing or restricting disclosure

102 Application for section 106 order
103 Application for non-notification order or exclusion order
104 Application for non-notification order and exclusion order
105 Application for exclusion order
106 Application for section 106 order: determination
Orders preventing or restricting disclosure: Secretary of State
106A Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State
106B Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State
106C Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order
106D Application for non-attendance order

Special counsel
107 Special counsel
107A Persons eligible for appointment as special counsel
107B Role of special counsel

Appeals
107C Appeals

Review of section 106 and 106A orders
111 Review of section 106 order
111A Review of section 106A order
112 Review by court of section 106 order and section 106A order

Applications and reviews: general
113 Applications and reviews: general provisions

Code of practice
114 Code of practice

Acts of adjournal
115 Acts of adjournal

Abolition of common law
115A Abolition of common law rules about disclosure

Interpretation of Part 6
116 Interpretation of Part 6

PART 7
MENTAL DISORDER AND UNFITNESS FOR TRIAL
117 Criminal responsibility of persons with mental disorder
118 Acquittal involving mental disorder: procedure
119 Unfitness for trial
120 Abolition of common law rules

PART 8
LICENSING UNDER CIVIC GOVERNMENT (SCOTLAND) ACT 1982
121 Conditions to which licences under 1982 Act are to be subject
122 Licensing: powers of entry and inspection for civilian employees
124 Licensing of taxis and private hire cars
124A Licensing of street trading: food hygiene certificates
126 Licensing of public entertainment
127 Licensing of late night catering
128 Applications for licences

PART 9

ALCOHOL LICENSING

130 Premises licence applications: notification requirements
131 Premises licence applications: modification of layout plans
131A Reviews of premises licences: notification of determinations
132 Premises licence applications: antisocial behaviour reports
132A Premises licenses: connected persons and interested parties
132B Premises licence applications: food hygiene certificates
133 Sale of alcohol to trade
134 Occasional licences
134A Extended hours applications: notification period
135 Extended hours applications: variation of conditions
136 Personal licences
137 Emergency closure orders
137A Appeals
137B Liability for offences
138 False statements in applications: offence
138A Powers of Licensing Standards Officers
139 Further modifications of 2005 Act

PART 10

MISCELLANEOUS

141 Annual report on Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998

PART 11

GENERAL

143 Orders and regulations
144 Interpretation
145 Modification of enactments
146 Ancillary provision
147 Transitional provision etc.
148 Short title and commencement

Schedule 1—The Scottish Sentencing Council
Schedule 1A—Community payback orders: consequential modifications
   Part 1—The 1995 Act
   Part 2—Other enactments
Schedule 2—Short-term custody and community sentences: consequential amendments
Schedule 2A—Convictions by courts in other EU member States: modifications of enactments
   Part 1—The 1995 Act
   Part 2—Other enactments
Schedule 3—Witness anonymity orders: transitional
Schedule 4—Further modifications of 2005 Act
Schedule 5—Modifications of enactments
Amendments to the Bill since the previous version are indicated by sidelining in the right margin. Wherever possible, provisions that were in the Bill as introduced retain the original numbering.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision about sentencing, offenders and defaulters; to make provision about criminal law, procedure and evidence; to make provision about criminal justice and the investigation of crime (including police functions); to amend the law relating to the licensing of certain activities by local authorities; to amend the law relating to the sale of alcohol; and for connected purposes.

PART 1
SENTENCING

The Scottish Sentencing Council

3 The Scottish Sentencing Council

(1) There is established a body corporate to be known as the “Scottish Sentencing Council” (referred to in this Part as the “Council”).

(2) Schedule 1 makes further provision about the Council.

4 The Council’s objectives

The Council must, in carrying out its functions, seek to—

(a) promote consistency in sentencing practice,

(b) assist the development of policy in relation to sentencing,

(c) promote greater awareness and understanding of sentencing policy and practice.

5 Sentencing guidelines

(1) The Council is from time to time to prepare, for the approval of the High Court of Justiciary, guidelines relating to the sentencing of offenders.

(2) Such guidelines are to be known as “sentencing guidelines”.

(3) Sentencing guidelines may in particular relate to—

(a) the principles and purposes of sentencing,

(b) sentencing levels,

SP Bill 24A
(c) the particular types of sentence that are appropriate for particular types of offence or offender,
(d) the circumstances in which the guidelines may be departed from.

(4) Sentencing guidelines may be general in nature or may relate to a particular category of offence or offender or a particular matter relating to sentencing.

(5) The Council must, on preparing any sentencing guidelines, also prepare—
   (a) an assessment of the costs and benefits to which the implementation of the guidelines would be likely to give rise,
   (b) an assessment of the likely effect of the guidelines on the criminal justice system generally.

(8) The Council—
   (a) must from time to time review any sentencing guidelines published by it, and
   (b) may prepare, for the approval of the High Court of Justiciary, revised guidelines.

(9) In this section and sections 6 to 13, references to sentencing guidelines include references to revised sentencing guidelines.

6 Consultation on proposed sentencing guidelines

(1) The Council must, before submitting any sentencing guidelines to the High Court of Justiciary for approval—
   (a) publish a draft of the proposed guidelines together with a draft of the assessments referred to in section 5(5), and
   (b) consult the following persons about the drafts—
      (i) the Scottish Ministers,
      (ii) the Lord Advocate,
      (iii) such other persons as the Council considers appropriate.

(3) The Council must, in finalising the guidelines and assessments for submission to the High Court of Justiciary, have regard to any comments made on the drafts following publication and consultation under subsection (1).

6A Approval of sentencing guidelines by High Court

(1) Sentencing guidelines have no effect unless approved by the High Court of Justiciary.
(2) On submitting sentencing guidelines to the High Court for approval, the Council must also provide the High Court with the assessments referred to in section 5(5).
(3) Where the Council submits sentencing guidelines to the High Court for approval, the Court may—
   (a) approve the proposed guidelines—
      (i) in whole or in part,
      (ii) with or without modifications, or
   (b) reject the proposed guidelines, in whole or in part.
(4) Where the High Court—
(a) rejects any of the proposed guidelines, or
(b) modifies any of them,
the Court must state its reasons for doing so.

(5) Sentencing guidelines approved by the High Court take effect on such date as the Court may determine.

(6) Different dates may be determined in relation to—
(a) different provisions of the guidelines, or
(b) different purposes.

(7) As soon as possible after the approval of sentencing guidelines by the High Court, the Council must publish—
(a) the guidelines as approved (including the date on which they take effect), and
(b) the assessments referred to in section 5(5) (revised as necessary to take account of any modifications of the guidelines prior to their approval).

(8) The guidelines and assessments are to be published in such manner as the Council considers appropriate.

7 Effect of sentencing guidelines

(1) A court (whether at first instance or on appeal) must—
(a) in sentencing an offender in respect of an offence, have regard to any sentencing guidelines which are applicable in relation to the case,
(b) in carrying out any other function relating to the sentencing of offenders, have regard to any sentencing guidelines applicable to the carrying out of the function.

(2) If the court decides not to follow the guidelines, or to depart from them in accordance with provision contained in them under section 5(3)(d), it must state the reasons for its decision.

(3) The sentencing guidelines to which the court must have regard under subsection (1) are those applicable to the case at the time the court is sentencing the offender or, as the case may be, carrying out the function.

(4) Subsection (5) applies where, on appeal in any case, the High Court of Justiciary passes another sentence under one of the following provisions of the 1995 Act—
(a) section 118(3),
(b) section 118(4)(b),
(c) section 118(4A)(b),
(d) section 118(4A)(c)(ii),
(e) section 189(1)(b).

(5) The sentencing guidelines which the High Court must have regard to under subsection (1) in passing that other sentence are those applicable to the case at the time it is passed.

(6) A revision of the sentencing guidelines after an offender is sentenced in respect of an offence is not a ground for the referral of the case to the High Court of Justiciary under section 194B of the 1995 Act (references to the High Court of cases dealt with on indictment).
(7) In section 108 of the 1995 Act (Lord Advocate’s right of appeal against disposal where conviction on indictment), after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) In deciding whether to appeal under subsection (1) in any case, the Lord Advocate must have regard to any sentencing guidelines which are applicable in relation to the case.”.

(8) In section 175 of the 1995 Act (prosecutor’s right of appeal against disposal in summary proceedings), after subsection (4B) insert—

“(4C) In deciding whether to appeal under subsection (4) in any case, the prosecutor must have regard to any sentencing guidelines which are applicable in relation to the case.”.

8 Ministers’ power to request that sentencing guidelines be prepared or reviewed

(1) The Scottish Ministers may request that the Council consider—

(a) preparing, for the approval of the High Court of Justiciary, sentencing guidelines on any matter, or

(b) reviewing any sentencing guidelines published by the Council.

(2) The Council must have regard to any request made by the Scottish Ministers.

(3) If the Council decides not to comply with a request made by the Scottish Ministers, it must provide the Scottish Ministers with reasons for its decision.

9 High Court’s power to require preparation or review of sentencing guidelines

(1) Where the High Court of Justiciary pronounces an opinion under section 118(7) or 189(7) of the 1995 Act, the Court may require the Council to—

(a) prepare, for the Court’s approval, sentencing guidelines on any matter, or

(b) review any sentencing guidelines published by the Council on any matter.

(2) On making a requirement under subsection (1), the High Court must state its reasons for doing so.

(3) The Council must comply with a requirement made under subsection (1) and, in doing so, must have regard to the High Court’s reasons for making the requirement.

9A Publication of High Court guideline judgments

(1) The Council must publish the opinions of the High Court of Justiciary pronounced under section 118(7) or 189(7) of the 1995 Act.

(2) As soon as possible after the High Court pronounces such an opinion, the Scottish Court Service must provide the Council with a copy of the opinion.

(3) The copy opinion is to be provided in such form and by such means as the Council may require.

(4) The opinions are to be published in such manner, and at such times, as the Council considers appropriate.

(5) This section does not affect any power or responsibility of the Scottish Court Service in relation to the publication of opinions of the High Court.
Scottish Court Service to provide sentencing information to the Council

(1) The Scottish Court Service must provide the Council with such information relating to the sentences imposed by courts as the Council may reasonably require for the purposes of its functions.

(2) The information must be provided in such form and by such means as the Council may require.

(3) The Council must from time to time publish information about the sentences imposed by courts.

The Council’s power to provide information, advice etc.

(1) The Council may—
   (a) publish or otherwise disseminate information about sentencing matters,
   (b) provide advice or guidance of a general nature about such matters,
   (c) conduct research into such matters.

(4) In this section, “sentencing matters” means—
   (a) sentencing guidelines,
   (b) the practice of the courts in relation to sentencing, and
   (c) any other matter relating to sentencing.

Business plan

(1) The Council must, before the submission day for each period of 3 years, prepare and submit to the Scottish Ministers a plan (a “business plan”) describing how the Council proposes to carry out its functions during the period.

(2) The “submission day” is—
   (a) for the period of 3 years beginning on the day on which this section comes into force, the day specified by order made by the Scottish Ministers,
   (b) for each succeeding period of 3 years, the first day of the period.

(3) A business plan must—
   (a) be prepared in such form as the Scottish Ministers may direct,
   (b) contain the information specified in subsection (4) and such other information as they may direct, and
   (c) be submitted by such time as they may direct.

(4) The information referred to in subsection (3)(b) is details of the matters in relation to which the Council proposes to prepare sentencing guidelines.

(5) The Council may include in a business plan such other information as it considers appropriate.

(6) In preparing a business plan, the Council must consult—
   (a) the Scottish Ministers,
   (b) the Lord Advocate, and
   (c) such other persons as it considers appropriate.
The Scottish Ministers must lay before the Scottish Parliament each business plan submitted to them.

The Council must, as soon as practicable after a business plan has been laid before the Parliament, publish it in such manner as it considers appropriate.

The Council may at any time during a period covered by a business plan review the plan for the period and submit to the Scottish Ministers a revised plan.

Subsections (3) to (8) apply to a revised plan as they apply to a business plan.

13 Annual report

The Council must, as soon as practicable after the end of each financial year, prepare and submit to the Scottish Ministers a report on the carrying out of its functions during the year.

The report must—

(a) be prepared in such form as the Scottish Ministers may direct,

(b) contain the information specified in subsection (3) and such other information as they may direct, and

(c) be submitted by such time as they may direct.

The information referred to in subsection (2)(b) is details of—

(a) the sentencing guidelines published or revised during the year (if any),

(aa) any sentencing guidelines submitted during the year to the High Court of Justiciary for approval and of the Court’s response to them,

(b) any draft sentencing guidelines being consulted upon,

(c) requests made by the Scottish Ministers under section 8 and of the Council’s response to them, and

(d) requirements made by the High Court of Justiciary under section 9 and of the Council’s response to them.

The Council may include in the report such other information as it considers appropriate.

The Scottish Ministers must lay before the Scottish Parliament each report submitted to them.

The Council must, as soon as practicable after the report has been laid before the Parliament, publish it in such manner as it considers appropriate.

Community payback orders

After section 227 of the 1995 Act insert—

“Community payback orders

227A Community payback orders

Where a person (the “offender”) is convicted of an offence punishable by imprisonment, the court may, instead of imposing a sentence of imprisonment, impose a community payback order on the offender.
(2) A community payback order is an order imposing one or more of the following requirements—

(a) an offender supervision requirement,

(aa) a compensation requirement,

(b) an unpaid work or other activity requirement,

(c) a programme requirement,

(d) a residence requirement,

(e) a mental health treatment requirement,

(f) a drug treatment requirement,

(g) an alcohol treatment requirement,

(h) a conduct requirement.

(3) A court must not impose a community payback order on an offender unless it is of the opinion that the offence, or the combination of the offence and one or more offences associated with it, was serious enough to warrant the imposition of such an order.

(4) Where an offender is convicted of an offence other than one punishable by imprisonment, the court may impose a community payback order on the offender imposing—

(za) a supervision requirement,

(a) a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement,

(c) a conduct requirement.

(5) A justice of the peace court may only impose a community payback order imposing one or more of the following requirements—

(a) an offender supervision requirement,

(aa) a compensation requirement,

(b) an unpaid work or other activity requirement,

(c) a residence requirement,

(d) a conduct requirement.

(6) Subsection (5)(b) is subject to section 227J(3).

(7) Before imposing a community payback order imposing two or more requirements falling within subsection (2), the court must consider whether, in the circumstances of the case, the requirements are compatible with each other.

(8) The Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument amend subsection (5) so as to add to or omit requirements that may be imposed by a community payback order imposed by a justice of the peace court.

(9) An order is not to be made under subsection (8) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

(10) In this section and sections 227B to 227ZI, except where the context requires otherwise—
“court” means the High Court, the sheriff or a justice of the peace court, “imprisonment” includes detention.

227B Community payback order: procedure prior to imposition

(1) This section applies where a court is considering imposing a community payback order on an offender.

(2) The court must not impose the order unless it has obtained, and taken account of, a report from an officer of a local authority containing information about the offender and the offender’s circumstances.

(2A) An Act of Adjournal may prescribe—

   (a) the form of a report under subsection (2), and
   (b) the particular information to be contained in it.

(2B) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering imposing a community payback order—

   (a) imposing only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, or
   (b) under section 227M(2).

(3) The clerk of the court must give a copy of any report obtained under subsection (2) to—

   (a) the offender,
   (b) the offender’s solicitor (if any), and
   (c) the prosecutor.

(4) Before imposing the order, the court must explain to the offender in ordinary language—

   (a) the purpose and effect of each of the requirements to be imposed by the order,
   (b) the consequences which may follow if the offender fails to comply with any of the requirements imposed by the order, and
   (c) where the court proposes to include in the order provision under section 227W for it to be reviewed, the arrangements for such a review.

(5) The court must not impose the order unless the offender has, after the court has explained those matters, confirmed that the offender—

   (a) understands those matters, and
   (b) is willing to comply with each of the requirements to be imposed by the order.

(6) Subsection (5) does not apply where the court is considering imposing a community payback order under section 227M(2).

227C Community payback order: responsible officer

(1) This section applies where a court imposes a community payback order on an offender.

(2) The court must, in imposing the order—
(a) specify the locality in which the offender resides or will reside for the duration of the order,

(b) require the local authority within whose area that locality is situated to nominate, within two days of its receiving a copy of the order, an officer of the authority as the responsible officer for the purposes of the order,

(c) require the offender to comply with any instructions given by the responsible officer—
   (i) about keeping in touch with the responsible officer, or
   (ii) for the purposes of subsection (3),

(e) require the offender to report to the responsible officer in accordance with instructions given by that officer,

(f) require the offender to notify the responsible officer without delay of—
   (i) any change of the offender’s address, and
   (ii) the times, if any, at which the offender usually works (or carries out voluntary work) or attends school or any other educational establishment, and

(g) where the order imposes an unpaid work or other activity requirement, require the offender to undertake for the number of hours specified in the requirement such work or activity as the responsible officer may instruct, and at such times as may be so instructed.

(3) The responsible officer is responsible for—
   (a) making any arrangements necessary to enable the offender to comply with each of the requirements imposed by the order,
   (b) promoting compliance with those requirements by the offender,
   (c) taking such steps as may be necessary to enforce compliance with the requirements of the order or to vary, revoke or discharge the order.

(4) References in this Act to the responsible officer are, in relation to an offender on whom a community payback order has been imposed, the officer for the time being nominated in pursuance of subsection (2)(b).

(5) In reckoning the period of two days for the purposes of subsection (2)(b), no account is to be taken of a Saturday or Sunday or any day which is a local or public holiday.

227E Community payback order: further provision

(1) Where a community payback order is imposed on an offender, the order is to be taken for all purposes to be a sentence imposed on the offender.

(2) On imposing a community payback order, the court must state in open court the reasons for imposing the order.

(3) The imposition by a court of a community payback order on an offender does not prevent the court imposing a fine or any other sentence (other than imprisonment), or making any other order, that it would be entitled to impose or make in respect of the offence.
(4) Where a court imposes a community payback order on an offender, the clerk of the court must ensure that—

(a) a copy of the order is given to—

(i) the offender, and

(ii) the local authority within whose area the offender resides or will reside, and

(b) a copy of the order and such other documents and information relating to the case as may be useful are given to the clerk of the appropriate court (unless the court imposing the order is that court).

(5) A copy of the order may be given to the offender—

(a) by being delivered personally to the offender, or

(b) by being sent—

(i) by a registered post service (as defined in section 125(1) of the Postal Services Act 2000 (c.26)), or

(ii) by a postal service which provides for the delivery of the document to be recorded.

(6) A community payback order is to be in such form, or as nearly as may be in such form, as may be prescribed by Act of Adjournal.

227F Requirement to avoid conflict with religious beliefs, work etc.

(1) In imposing a community payback order on an offender, the court must ensure, so far as practicable, that any requirement imposed by the order avoids—

(a) a conflict with the offender’s religious beliefs,

(b) interference with the times, if any, at which the offender normally works (or carries out voluntary work) or attends school or any other educational establishment.

(2) The responsible officer must ensure, so far as practicable, that any instruction given to the offender avoids such a conflict or interference.

227FA Payment of offenders’ travelling and other expenses

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument provide for the payment to offenders of travelling or other expenses in connection with their compliance with requirements imposed on them by community payback orders.

(2) An order under subsection (1) may—

(a) specify expenses or provide for them to be determined under the order,

(b) provide for the payments to be made by or on behalf of local authorities,

(c) make different provision for different purposes.

(3) An order under subsection (1) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.
Offender supervision requirement

227G Offender supervision requirement
(1) In this Act, an “offender supervision requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that, during the specified period, the offender must attend appointments with the responsible officer or another person determined by the responsible officer, at such time and place as may be determined by the responsible officer, for the purpose of promoting the offender’s rehabilitation.

(2) On imposing a community payback order, the court must impose an offender supervision requirement if—
(a) the offender is under 18 years of age at the time the order is imposed, or
(b) the court, in the order, imposes—
(z) a compensation requirement,
(i) a programme requirement,
(ii) a residence requirement,
(iii) a mental health requirement,
(iv) a drug treatment requirement,
(v) an alcohol treatment requirement, or
(vi) a conduct requirement.

(3) The specified period must be at least 6 months and not more than 3 years.

(3A) Subsection (3) is subject to subsection (3B) and section 227ZB(7B).

(3B) In the case of a supervision requirement imposed on a person aged 16 or 17 along with only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, the specified period must be no more than whichever is the greater of—
(a) the specified period under section 227L in relation to the level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, and
(b) 3 months.

(4) In this section, “specified”, in relation to a supervision requirement, means specified in the requirement.

Compensation requirement

227H Compensation requirement
(1) In this Act, a “compensation requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must pay compensation for any relevant matter in favour of a relevant person.

(2) In subsection (1)—
“relevant matter” means any personal injury, loss, damage or other matter in respect of which a compensation order could be made against the offender under section 249 of this Act, and “relevant person” means a person in whose favour the compensation could be awarded by such a compensation order.
(3) A compensation requirement may require the compensation to be paid in a lump sum or in instalments.

(4) The offender must complete payment of the compensation before the earlier of the following—

(a) the end of the period of 18 months beginning with the day on which the compensation requirement is imposed,

(b) the beginning of the period of 2 months ending with the day on which the supervision requirement imposed under section 227G(2) ends.

(5) The following provisions of this Act apply in relation to a compensation requirement as they apply in relation to a compensation order, and as if the references in them to a compensation order included a compensation requirement—

(a) section 249(3), (4), (5) and (8) to (10),

(b) section 250(2),

(c) section 251(1), (1A) and (2)(b), and

(d) section 253.

227I Unpaid work or other activity requirement

(1) In this Act, an “unpaid work or other activity requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must, for the specified number of hours, undertake—

(a) unpaid work, or

(b) unpaid work and other activity.

(1A) Whether the offender must undertake other activity as well as unpaid work is for the responsible officer to determine.

(2) The nature of the unpaid work and any other activity to be undertaken by the offender is to be determined by the responsible officer.

(3) The number of hours that may be specified in the requirement must be (in total)—

(a) at least 20 hours, and

(b) not more than 300 hours.

(4) An unpaid work or other activity requirement which requires the work or activity to be undertaken for a number of hours totalling no more than 100 is referred to in this Act as a “level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement”.

(5) An unpaid work or other activity requirement which requires the work or activity to be undertaken for a number of hours totalling more than 100 is referred to in this Act as a “level 2 unpaid work or other activity requirement”.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument substitute another number of hours for any of the numbers of hours for the time being specified in subsections (3) to (5).
(6A) An order under subsection (6) may only substitute for the number of hours for the time being specified in a provision mentioned in the first column of the following table a number of hours falling within the range set out in the corresponding entry in the second column.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Provision</th>
<th>Range</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>No fewer than</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subsection (3)(a)</td>
<td>10 hours</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subsection (3)(b)</td>
<td>250 hours</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subsections (4) and (5)</td>
<td>70 hours</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(7) An order under subsection (6) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

(8) In this section, “specified”, in relation to an unpaid work or other activity requirement, means specified in the requirement.

227J Unpaid work or other activity requirement: further provision

(1) A court may not impose an unpaid work or other activity requirement on an offender who is under 16 years of age.

(2) A court may impose such a requirement on an offender only if the court is satisfied, after considering the report mentioned in section 227B(2), that the offender is a suitable person to undertake unpaid work in pursuance of the requirement.

(2A) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering imposing a community payback order—

   (a) imposing only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, or
   (b) under section 227M(2).

(3) A justice of the peace court may impose a level 2 unpaid work or other activity requirement only if—

   (a) the Scottish Ministers by regulations made by statutory instrument so provide, and
   (b) the requirement is imposed in such circumstances and subject to such conditions as may be specified in the regulations.

(4) Regulations are not to be made under subsection (3) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing them has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

227K Allocation of hours between unpaid work and other activity

(1) Subject to subsection (2), it is for the responsible officer to determine how many out of the number of hours specified in an unpaid work or other activity requirement are to be allocated to undertaking, respectively—

   (a) unpaid work, and
   (b) any other activity to be undertaken.
(2) The number of hours allocated to undertaking an activity other than unpaid work must not exceed whichever is the lower of—
   (a) 30% of the number of hours specified in the requirement, and
   (b) 30 hours.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument—
   (a) substitute another percentage for the percentage for the time being specified in subsection (2)(a),
   (b) substitute another number of hours for the number of hours for the time being specified in subsection (2)(b).

(4) An order is not to be made under subsection (3) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

---

227L  Time limit for completion of unpaid work or other activity

(1) The number of hours of unpaid work and any other activity that the offender is required to undertake in pursuance of an unpaid work or other activity requirement must be completed by the offender before the end of the specified period beginning with the imposition of the requirement.

(2) The “specified period” is—
   (a) in relation to a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, 3 months or such longer period as the court may specify in the requirement,
   (b) in relation to a level 2 unpaid work or other activity requirement, 6 months or such longer period as the court may specify in the requirement.

227M  Fine defaulters

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) a fine has been imposed on an offender in respect of an offence,
   (b) the offender fails to pay the fine or an instalment of the fine,
   (c) the amount of the fine or the instalment does not exceed level 2 on the standard scale, and
   (d) apart from this section, the court would have imposed a period of imprisonment on the offender under section 219(1) of this Act in respect of the failure to pay the fine or instalment.

(2) The court must, instead of imposing a period of imprisonment under section 219(1) of this Act, impose a community payback order on the offender imposing a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement.

(2A) The court, in imposing a community payback order under subsection (2) on a person aged 16 or 17, must also impose a supervision requirement.

(3) Where the amount of the fine or the instalment does not exceed level 1 on the standard scale, the number of hours specified in the requirement must not exceed 50.
(4) On completion of the hours of unpaid work and any other activity specified in an unpaid work or other activity requirement imposed under this section, the fine in respect of which the requirement was imposed is discharged (or, as the case may be, the outstanding instalments of the fine are discharged).

(5) If, after a community payback order is imposed on an offender under this section, the offender pays the fine or the full amount of any outstanding instalments, the appropriate court must discharge the order.

(7) A level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement may be imposed on an offender under this section whether or not the offender indicates a willingness to comply with the requirement.

(9) Subsection (2) is subject to sections 227J(1) and 227N(2), (3) and (6).

(10) In this section, “court” does not include the High Court.

227N Offenders subject to more than one unpaid work or other activity requirement

(1) This section applies where—

(a) a court is considering imposing an unpaid work or other activity requirement on an offender (referred to as the “new requirement”), and

(b) at the time the court is considering imposing the requirement, there is already in effect one or more community payback orders imposing such a requirement on the same offender (each referred to as an “existing requirement”).

(2) The court may, in imposing the new requirement, direct that it is to be concurrent with any existing requirement.

(3) Where the court makes a direction under subsection (2), hours of unpaid work or other activity undertaken after the new requirement is imposed count for the purposes of compliance with that requirement and the existing requirement.

(4) Subsection (5) applies where the court does not make a direction under subsection (2).

(5) The maximum number of hours which may be specified in the new requirement is the number of hours specified in section 227I(3)(b) less the aggregate of the number of hours of unpaid work or activity still to be completed under each existing requirement at the time the new requirement is imposed.

(5A) In calculating that aggregate, if any existing requirement is concurrent with another (by virtue of a direction under subsection (2)), hours that count for the purposes of compliance with both (or, as the case may be, all) are to be counted only once.

(6) Where that maximum number is less than the minimum number of hours that can be specified by virtue of section 227I(3)(a), the court must not impose the new requirement.
227O Rules about unpaid work and other activity

(1) The Scottish Ministers may make rules by statutory instrument for or in connection with the undertaking of unpaid work and other activities in pursuance of unpaid work or other activity requirements.

(2) Rules under subsection (1) may in particular make provision for—

(a) limiting the number of hours of work or other activity that an offender may be required to undertake in any one day,

(b) reckoning the time spent undertaking unpaid work or other activity,

(d) the keeping of records of unpaid work and any other activity undertaken.

(2A) Rules under subsection (1) may—

(a) confer functions on responsible officers,

(b) contain rules about the way responsible officers are to exercise functions under this Act.

(3) Rules under subsection (1) are subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

Programme requirement

227P Programme requirement

(1) In this Act, a “programme requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must participate in a specified programme, at the specified place and on the specified number of days.

(2) In this section, “programme” means a course or other planned set of activities, taking place over a period of time, and provided to individuals or groups of individuals for the purpose of addressing offending behavioural needs.

(3) A court may impose a programme requirement on an offender only if the specified programme is one which has been recommended by an officer of a local authority as being suitable for the offender to participate in.

(4) If an offender’s compliance with a proposed programme requirement would involve the co-operation of a person other than the offender, the court may impose the requirement only if the other person consents.

(5) A court may not impose a programme requirement that would require an offender to participate in a specified programme after the expiry of the period specified in the offender supervision requirement to be imposed at the same time as the programme requirement (by virtue of section 227G(2)(b)).

(6) Where the court imposes a programme requirement on an offender, the requirement is to be taken to include a requirement that the offender, while attending the specified programme, complies with any instructions given by or on behalf of the person in charge of the programme.

(7) In this section, “specified”, in relation to a programme requirement, means specified in the requirement.
Residence requirement

227Q Residence requirement

(1) In this Act, a “residence requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that, during the specified period, the offender must reside at a specified place.

(2) The court may, in a residence requirement, require an offender to reside at a hostel or other institution only if the hostel or institution has been recommended as a suitable place for the offender to reside in by an officer of a local authority.

(3) The specified period must not be longer than the period specified in the offender supervision requirement to be imposed at the same time as the residence requirement (by virtue of section 227G(2)(b)).

(4) In this section, “specified”, in relation to a residence requirement, means specified in the requirement.

Mental health treatment requirement

227R Mental health treatment requirement

(1) In this Act, a “mental health treatment requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must submit, during the specified period, to treatment by or under the direction of a registered medical practitioner or a registered psychologist (or both) with a view to improving the offender’s mental condition.

(2) The treatment to which an offender may be required to submit under a mental health treatment requirement is such of the kinds of treatment described in subsection (3) as is specified; but otherwise the nature of the treatment is not to be specified.

(3) Those kinds of treatment are—

   (a) treatment as a resident patient in a hospital (other than a State hospital) within the meaning of the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13) (“the 2003 Act”),

   (b) treatment as a non-resident patient at such institution or other place as may be specified, or

   (c) treatment by or under the direction of such registered medical practitioner or registered psychologist as may be specified.

(4) A court may impose a mental health treatment requirement on an offender only if the court is satisfied—

   (a) on the evidence of an approved medical practitioner (within the meaning of the 2003 Act), that Condition A is met,

   (b) on the written or oral evidence of the registered medical practitioner or registered psychologist by whom or under whose direction the treatment is to be provided, that Condition B is met, and

   (c) that Condition C is met.

(5) Condition A is that—
(a) the offender suffers from a mental condition,
(b) the condition requires, and may be susceptible to, treatment, and
(c) the condition is not such as to warrant the offender’s being subject to—
   (i) a compulsory treatment order under section 64 of the 2003 Act, or
   (ii) a compulsion order under section 57A of this Act.

(6) Condition B is that the treatment proposed to be specified is appropriate for the offender.

(7) Condition C is that arrangements have been made for the proposed treatment including, where the treatment is to be of the kind mentioned in subsection (3)(a), arrangements for the offender’s reception in the hospital proposed to be specified in the requirement.

(8) The specified period must not be longer than the period specified in the offender supervision requirement to be imposed at the same time as the mental health treatment requirement (by virtue of section 227G(2)(b)).

(9) In this section, “specified”, in relation to a mental health treatment requirement, means specified in the requirement.

227S Mental health treatment requirements: medical evidence

(1) For the purpose of making a finding under section 227R(4)(a) or (b), a written report purporting to be signed by an approved medical practitioner (within the meaning of the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13)) may be received in evidence without the need for proof of the signature or qualifications of the practitioner.

(2) Where such a report is lodged in evidence otherwise than by or on behalf of the offender, a copy of the report must be given to—
   (a) the offender, and
   (b) the offender’s solicitor (if any).

(3) The court may adjourn the case if it considers it necessary to do so to give the offender further time to consider the report.

(4) Subsection (5) applies where the offender is—
   (a) detained in a hospital under this Act, or
   (b) remanded in custody.

(5) For the purpose of calling evidence to rebut any evidence contained in a report lodged as mentioned in subsection (2), arrangements may be made by or on behalf of the offender for an examination of the offender by a registered medical practitioner.

(6) Such an examination is to be carried out in private.

227T Power to change treatment

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) a mental health treatment requirement has been imposed on an offender, and
(b) the registered medical practitioner or registered psychologist by whom or under whose direction the offender is receiving the treatment to which the offender is required to submit in pursuance of the requirement is of the opinion mentioned in subsection (2).

5

(2) That opinion is—

(a) that the offender requires, or that it would be appropriate for the offender to receive, a different kind of treatment (whether in whole or in part) from that which the offender has been receiving, or

(b) that the treatment (whether in whole or in part) can be more appropriately given in or at a different hospital or other institution or place from that where the offender has been receiving treatment.

10

(3) The practitioner or, as the case may be, psychologist may make arrangements for the offender to be treated accordingly.

15

(4) Subject to subsection (5), the treatment provided under the arrangements must be of a kind which could have been specified in the mental health treatment requirement.

(5) The arrangements may provide for the offender to receive treatment (in whole or in part) as a resident patient in an institution or place even though it is one that could not have been specified for that purpose in the mental health treatment requirement.

20

(6) Arrangements may be made under subsection (3) only if—

(a) the offender and the responsible officer agree to the arrangements,

(b) the treatment will be given by or under the direction of a registered medical practitioner or registered psychologist who has agreed to accept the offender as a patient, and

(c) where the treatment requires the offender to be a resident patient, the offender will be received as such.

25

(7) Where arrangements are made under subsection (3)—

(a) the responsible officer must notify the court of the arrangements, and

(b) the treatment provided under the arrangements is to be taken to be treatment to which the offender is required to submit under the mental health treatment requirement.

Drug treatment requirement

227U Drug treatment requirement

35

(1) In this Act, a “drug treatment requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must submit, during the specified period, to treatment by or under the direction of a specified person with a view to reducing or eliminating the offender’s dependency on, or propensity to misuse, drugs.

40

(2) The treatment to which an offender may be required to submit under a drug treatment requirement is such of the kinds of treatment described in subsection (3) as is specified (but otherwise the nature of the treatment is not to be specified).
(3) Those kinds of treatment are—
   (a) treatment as a resident in such institution or other place as is specified,
   (b) treatment as a non-resident at such institution or other place, and at such intervals, as is specified.

(4) The specified person must be a person who has the necessary qualifications or experience in relation to the treatment to be provided.

(5) The specified period must not be longer than the period specified in the offender supervision requirement to be imposed at the same time as the drug treatment requirement (by virtue of section 227G(2)(b)).

(6) A court may impose a drug treatment requirement on an offender only if the court is satisfied that—
   (a) the offender is dependent on, or has a propensity to misuse, any controlled drug (as defined in section 2(1)(a) of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 (c.38)),
   (b) the dependency or propensity requires, and may be susceptible to, treatment, and
   (c) arrangements have been, or can be, made for the proposed treatment including, where the treatment is to be of the kind mentioned in subsection (3)(a), arrangements for the offender’s reception in the institution or other place to be specified.

(7) In this section, “specified”, in relation to a drug treatment requirement, means specified in the requirement.

Alcohol treatment requirement

227V Alcohol treatment requirement

(1) In this Act, an “alcohol treatment requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must submit, during the specified period, to treatment by or under the direction of a specified person with a view to the reduction or elimination of the offender’s dependency on alcohol.

(2) The treatment to which an offender may be required to submit under an alcohol treatment requirement is such of the kinds of treatment described in subsection (3) as is specified (but otherwise the nature of the treatment is not to be specified).

(3) Those kinds of treatment are—
   (a) treatment as a resident in such institution or other place as is specified,
   (b) treatment as a non-resident at such institution or other place, and at such intervals, as is specified,
   (c) treatment by or under the direction of such person as is specified.

(4) The person specified under subsection (1) or (3)(c) must be a person who has the necessary qualifications or experience in relation to the treatment to be provided.
(5) The specified period must not be longer than the period specified in the offender supervision requirement to be imposed at the same time as the alcohol treatment requirement (by virtue of section 227G(2)(b)).

(6) A court may impose an alcohol treatment requirement on an offender only if the court is satisfied that—

(a) the offender is dependent on alcohol,
(b) the dependency requires, and may be susceptible to, treatment, and
(c) arrangements have been, or can be, made for the proposed treatment, including, where the treatment is to be of the kind mentioned in subsection (3)(a), arrangements for the offender’s reception in the institution or other place to be specified.

(7) In this section, “specified”, in relation to an alcohol treatment requirement, means specified in the requirement.

Conduct requirement

227VA Conduct requirement

(1) In this Act, a “conduct requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must, during the specified period, do or refrain from doing specified things.

(2) A court may impose a conduct requirement on an offender only if the court is satisfied that the requirement is necessary with a view to—

(a) securing or promoting good behaviour by the offender, or
(b) preventing further offending by the offender.

(3) The specified period must be not more than 3 years.

(4) The specified things must not include anything that—

(a) could be required by imposing one of the other requirements listed in section 227A(2), or
(b) would be inconsistent with the provisions of this Act relating to such other requirements.

(5) In this section, “specified”, in relation to a conduct requirement, means specified in the requirement.

Community payback orders: review, variation etc.

227W Periodic review of community payback orders

(1) On imposing a community payback order on an offender, the court may include in the order provision for the order to be reviewed at such time or times as may be specified in the order.

(2) A review carried out in pursuance of such provision is referred to in this section as a “progress review”.
(3) A progress review may be carried out by the court which imposed the community payback order or (if different) the appropriate court, and, where those courts are different, the court must specify in the order which of those courts is to carry out the reviews.

(4) A progress review is to be carried out in such manner as the court carrying out the review may determine.

(5) Before each progress review, the responsible officer must give the court a written report on the offender’s compliance with the requirements imposed by the community payback order in the period to which the review relates.

(6) The offender must attend each progress review.

(7) If the offender fails to attend a progress review, the court may—

(a) issue a citation requiring the offender’s attendance, or

(b) issue a warrant for the offender’s arrest.

(8) The unified citation provisions apply in relation to a citation under subsection (7)(a) as they apply in relation to a citation under section 216(3)(a) of this Act.

(8A) Subsections (8B) and (8C) apply where, in the course of carrying out a progress review in respect of a community payback order, it appears to the court that the offender has failed to comply with a requirement imposed by the order.

(8B) The court must—

(a) provide the offender with written details of the alleged failure,

(b) inform the offender that the offender is entitled to be legally represented, and

(c) inform the offender that no answer need be given to the allegation before the offender—

(i) has been given an opportunity to take legal advice, or

(ii) has indicated that the offender does not wish to take legal advice.

(8C) The court must then—

(a) if it is the appropriate court, appoint another hearing for consideration of the alleged failure in accordance with section 227ZB, or

(b) if it is not the appropriate court, refer the alleged failure to that court for consideration in accordance with that section.

(9) On conclusion of a progress review in respect of a community payback order, the court may vary, revoke or discharge the order in accordance with section 227Y.

227X Applications to vary, revoke and discharge community payback orders

(1) The appropriate court may, on the application of either of the persons mentioned in subsection (2), vary, revoke or discharge a community payback order in accordance with section 227Y.

(2) Those persons are—

(a) the offender on whom the order was imposed,
(b) the responsible officer in relation to the offender.

227Y Variation, revocation and discharge: court’s powers

(1) This section applies where a court is considering varying, revoking or discharging a community payback order imposed on an offender.

(2) The court may vary, revoke or discharge the order only if satisfied that it is in the interests of justice to do so having regard to circumstances which have arisen since the order was imposed.

(2A) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering varying the order under section 227ZB(5)(c).

(3) In varying an order, the court may, in particular—

(a) add to the requirements imposed by the order,

(b) revoke or discharge any requirement imposed by the order,

(c) vary any requirement imposed by the order,

(d) include provision for progress reviews under section 227W,

(e) where the order already includes such provision, vary that provision.

(4) In varying a requirement imposed by the order, the court may, in particular—

(a) extend or shorten any period or other time limit specified in the requirement,

(b) in the case of an unpaid work or other activity requirement, increase or decrease the number of hours specified in the requirement,

(c) in the case of an offender compensation requirement, vary the amount of compensation or any instalment.

(6) The court may not, under subsection (4)(b), increase the number of hours beyond the appropriate maximum.

(6A) The appropriate maximum is the number of hours specified in section 227I(3)(b) at the time the unpaid work or other activity requirement being varied was imposed less the aggregate of the number of hours of unpaid work or other activity still to be completed under each other unpaid work or other activity requirement (if any) in effect in respect of the offender at the time of the variation (a “current requirement”).

(6B) In calculating that aggregate, if any current requirement is concurrent with another (by virtue of a direction under section 227N(2)), hours that count for the purposes of compliance with both (or, as the case may be, all) are to be counted only once.

(6C) The court may not, under subsection (4)(c), increase the amount of compensation beyond the maximum that could have been awarded at the time the requirement was imposed.

(7) Where the court varies a restricted movement requirement imposed by a community payback order, the court must give a copy of the order making the variation to the person responsible for monitoring the offender’s compliance with the requirement.
(8) Where the court revokes a community payback order, the court may deal with the offender in respect of the offence in relation to which the order was imposed as it could have dealt with the offender had the order not been imposed.

(8A) Subsection (8) applies in relation to a community payback order imposed under section 227M(2) as if the reference to the offence in relation to which the order was imposed were a reference to the failure to pay in respect of which the order was imposed.

(9) Where the court is considering varying, revoking or discharging the order otherwise than on the application of the offender, the court must issue a citation to the offender requiring the offender to appear before the court (except where the offender is required to appear by section 227W(6)) or 227ZB(2)(b).

(10) If the offender fails to appear as required by the citation, the court may issue a warrant for the arrest of the offender.

(11) The unified citation provisions apply in relation to a citation under subsection (9) as they apply in relation to a citation under section 216(3)(a) of this Act.

227Z. Variation of community payback orders: further provision

(1) This section applies where a court is considering varying a community payback order imposed on an offender.

(2) The court must not make the variation unless it has obtained, and taken account of, a report from the responsible officer containing information about the offender and the offender’s circumstances.

(2A) An Act of Adjournal may prescribe—

(a) the form of a report under subsection (2), and

(b) the particular information to be contained in it.

(2B) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering varying a community payback order—

(a) which imposes only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, or

(b) imposed under section 227M(2).

(3) The clerk of the court must give a copy of any report obtained under subsection (2) to—

(a) the offender,

(b) the offender’s solicitor (if any).

(4) Before making the variation, the court must explain to the offender in ordinary language—

(a) the purpose and effect of each of the requirements to be imposed by the order as proposed to be varied,

(b) the consequences which may follow if the offender fails to comply with any of the requirements imposed by the order as proposed to be varied, and
(c) where the court proposes to include in the order as proposed to be varied provision for a progress review under section 227W, or to vary any such provision already included in the order, the arrangements for such a review.

5 (5) The court must not make the variation unless the offender has, after the court has explained those matters, confirmed that the offender—

(a) understands those matters, and

(b) is willing to comply with each of the requirements to be imposed by the order as proposed to be amended.

(6) Where the variation would impose a new requirement—

(a) the court must not make the variation if the new requirement is not a requirement that could have been imposed by the order when it was imposed,

(b) if the new requirement is one which could have been so imposed, the court must, before making the variation take whatever steps the court would have been required to take before imposing the requirement had it been imposed by the order when it was imposed.

(6A) Subsection (6)(a) does not prevent the imposition of a restricted movement requirement under section 227ZB(5)(c).

(6B) In determining for the purpose of subsection (6)(a) whether an unpaid work or other activity requirement is a requirement that could have been imposed by the order when the order was imposed, the effect of section 227N(6) is to be ignored.

(7) Where the variation would vary any requirement imposed by the order, the court must not make the variation if the requirement as proposed to be varied could not have been imposed, or imposed in that way, by the order when it was imposed.

(8) Subsections (4) and (5) of section 227E apply, with the necessary modifications, where a community payback order is varied as they apply where such an order is imposed.

227ZA Change of offender’s residence to new local authority area

(1) The section applies where—

(a) the offender on whom a community payback order has been imposed proposes to change, or has changed, residence to a locality (“the new locality”) situated in the area of a different local authority from that in which the locality currently specified in the order is situated, and

(b) the court is considering varying the order so as to specify the new local authority area in which the offender resides or will reside.

(2) The court may vary the order only if satisfied that arrangements have been, or can be, made in the local authority area in which the new locality is situated for the offender to comply with the requirements of the order.
(3) Where the court varies the order, the court must also vary the order so as to require the local authority for the area in which the new locality is situated to nominate an officer of the authority to be the responsible officer for the purposes of the order.

Breach of community payback order

227ZB Breach of community payback order

(1) This section applies where it appears to the appropriate court that an offender on whom a community payback order has been imposed has failed to comply with a requirement imposed by the order.

(2) The court may—

(a) issue a warrant for the offender’s arrest, or

(b) issue a citation to the offender requiring the offender to appear before the court.

(3) If the offender fails to appear as required by a citation issued under subsection (2)(b), the court may issue a warrant for the arrest of the offender.

(4) The unified citation provisions apply in relation to a citation under subsection (2)(b) as they apply in relation to a citation under section 216(3)(a) of this Act.

(4A) The court must, before considering the alleged failure—

(a) provide the offender with written details of the alleged failure,

(b) inform the offender that the offender is entitled to be legally represented, and

(c) inform the offender that no answer need be given to the allegation before the offender—

(i) has been given an opportunity to take legal advice, or

(ii) has indicated that the offender does not wish to take legal advice.

(4B) Subsection (4A) does not apply if the offender has previously been provided with those details and informed about those matters under section 227W(8B) of this Act.

(5) If the court is satisfied that the offender has failed without reasonable excuse to comply with a requirement imposed by the order, the court may—

(a) impose on the offender a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale,

(b) where the order was imposed under section 227A(1), revoke the order and deal with the offender in respect of the offence in relation to which the order was imposed as it could have dealt with the offender had the order not been imposed,

(ba) where the order was imposed under section 227A(4), revoke the order and impose on the offender a sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding—

(i) where the court is a justice of the peace court, 60 days,

(ii) in any other case, 3 months,
(bb) where the order was imposed under section 227M(2), revoke the order and impose on the offender a period of imprisonment for a term not exceeding—

(i) where the court is a justice of the peace court, 60 days,

(ii) in any other case, 3 months,

c) vary the order so as to impose a new requirement, vary any requirement imposed by the order or revoke or discharge any requirement imposed by the order, or

d) both impose a fine under paragraph (a) and vary the order under paragraph (c).

(5A) Where the court revokes a community payback order under subsection (5)(b) or (ba) and the offender is, in respect of the same offence, also subject to—

(a) a drug treatment and testing order, by virtue of section 234J, or

(b) a restriction of liberty order, by virtue of section 245D(3),

the court must, before dealing with the offender under subsection (5)(b) or (ba), revoke the drug treatment and testing order or, as the case may be, restriction of liberty order.

(5B) If the court is satisfied that the offender has failed to comply with a requirement imposed by the order but had a reasonable excuse for the failure, the court may, subject to section 227Y(2), vary the order so as to impose a new requirement, vary any requirement imposed by the order or revoke or discharge any requirement imposed by the order.

(6) The requirements which the court may impose under subsection (5)(c) include a restricted movement requirement.

(7) If the court varies the order so as to impose a restricted movement requirement, the court must also vary the order so as to impose an offender supervision requirement, unless an offender supervision requirement is already imposed by the order.

(7A) The court must ensure that the specified period under section 227G in relation to the supervision requirement is at least as long as the period for which the restricted movement requirement has effect and, where the community payback order already imposes a supervision requirement, must vary it accordingly, if necessary.

(7B) The minimum period of 6 months in section 227G(3) does not apply in relation to a supervision requirement imposed under subsection (7).

(8) Where the court varies the order so as to impose a restricted movement requirement, the court must give a copy of the order making the variation to the person responsible for monitoring the offender’s compliance with the requirement.

(10) If during the period for which the restricted movement requirement is in effect it appears to the person responsible for monitoring the offender’s compliance with the requirement that the offender has failed to comply with the requirement, the person must report the matter to the offender’s responsible officer.
(11) On receiving a report under subsection (10), the responsible officer must report the matter to the court.

(14) Subsections (5)(b) and (ba) and (5A) are subject to section 42(9) of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (powers of drugs courts to deal with breach of community payback orders).

227ZC Breach of community payback order: further provision

(3) Evidence of one witness is sufficient for the purpose of establishing that an offender has failed without reasonable excuse to comply with a requirement imposed by a community payback order.

(4) Subsection (5) applies in relation to a community payback order imposing an offender compensation requirement.

(5) A document bearing to be a certificate signed by the clerk of the appropriate court and stating that the compensation, or an instalment of the compensation, has not been paid as required by the requirement is sufficient evidence that the offender has failed to comply with the requirement.

(6) The appropriate court may, for the purpose of considering whether an offender has failed to comply with a requirement imposed by a community payback order, require the responsible officer to provide a report on the offender’s compliance with the requirement.

227ZD Restricted movement requirement

(1) In this Act, a “restricted movement requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement restricting the offender’s movements to such extent as is specified.

(2) A restricted movement requirement may in particular require the offender—

(a) to be in a specified place at a specified time or during specified periods, or

(b) not to be in a specified place, or a specified class of place, at a specified time or during specified periods.

(3) In imposing a restricted movement requirement containing provision under subsection (2)(a), the court must ensure that the offender is not required, either by the requirement alone or the requirement taken together with any other relevant requirement or order, to be at any place for periods totalling more than 12 hours in any one day.

(3A) In subsection (3), “other relevant requirement or order” means—

(a) any other restricted movement requirement in effect in respect of the offender at the time the court is imposing the requirement referred to in subsection (3), and

(b) any restriction of liberty order under section 245A in effect in respect of the offender at that time.

(4) A restricted movement requirement—

(a) takes effect from the specified day, and

(b) has effect for such period as is specified.
(4A) The period specified under subsection (4)(b) must be—
   (a) not less than 14 days, and
   (b) subject to subsections (4B) and (4C), not more than 12 months.

(4B) Subsection (4C) applies in the case of a restricted movement requirement imposed for failure to comply with a requirement of a community payback order—
   (a) where the offender was under 18 years of age at the time the order was imposed, or
   (b) where the only requirement imposed by the order is a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement.

(4C) The period specified under subsection (4)(b) must be not more than—
   (a) where the order was imposed by a justice of the peace court, 60 days, or
   (b) in any other case, 3 months.

(5) A court imposing a restricted movement requirement must specify in it—
   (a) the method by which the offender’s compliance with the requirement is to be monitored, and
   (b) the person who is to be responsible for monitoring that compliance.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations made by statutory instrument substitute—
   (a) for the number of hours for the time being specified in subsection (3) another number of hours,
   (b) for the number of months for the time being specified in subsection (4A)(b) another number of months.

(7) Regulations are not to be made under subsection (6) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the regulations has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

(8) In this section, “specified”, in relation to a restricted movement requirement, means specified in the requirement.

227ZE Restricted movement requirements: further provision

(1) A court may not impose a restricted movement requirement requiring the offender to be, or not to be, in a specified place unless it is satisfied that the offender’s compliance with the requirement can be monitored by the method specified in the requirement.

(2) Before imposing a restricted movement requirement requiring the offender to be in a specified place, the appropriate court must obtain and consider a report by an officer of the local authority in whose area the place is situated on—
   (a) the place, and
   (b) the attitude of any person (other than the offender) likely to be affected by the enforced presence of the offender at the place.

(3) The court may, before imposing the requirement, hear the officer who prepared the report.
227ZF Variation of restricted movement requirement

(1) This section applies where—

(a) a community payback order which is in force in respect of an offender imposes a restricted movement requirement requiring the offender to be at a particular place specified in the requirement for any period, and

(b) the court is considering varying the requirement so as to require the offender to be at a different place ("the new place").

(2) Before making the variation, the appropriate court must obtain and consider a report by an officer of the local authority in whose area the new place is situated on—

(a) the new place, and

(b) the attitude of any person (other than the offender) likely to be affected by the enforced presence of the offender at the new place.

(3) The court may, before making the variation, hear the officer who prepared the report.

227ZG Remote monitoring

Section 245C of this Act, and regulations made under that section, apply in relation to the imposition of, and compliance with, restricted movement requirements as they apply in relation to the imposition of, and compliance with, restriction of liberty orders.

227ZH Restricted movement requirements: Scottish Ministers’ functions

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations made by statutory instrument prescribe—

(a) which courts, or class or classes of courts, may impose restricted movement requirements,

(b) the method or methods of monitoring compliance with a restricted movement requirement which may be specified in such a requirement,

(c) the class or classes of offender on whom such a requirement may be imposed.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may make different provision about the matters mentioned in paragraphs (b) and (c) of that subsection in relation to different courts or classes of court.

(3) Regulations under subsection (1) are subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

(4) The Scottish Ministers must determine the person, or class or description of person, who may be specified in a restricted movement requirement as the person to be responsible for monitoring the offender’s compliance with the requirement (referred to in this section as the “monitor”).

(5) The Scottish Ministers may determine different persons, or different classes or descriptions of person, in relation to different methods of monitoring.
(6) The Scottish Ministers must notify each court having power to impose a restricted movement requirement of their determination.

(7) Subsection (8) applies where—

(a) the Scottish Ministers make a determination under subsection (4) changing a previous determination made by them, and

(b) a person specified in a restricted movement requirement in effect at the date the determination takes effect as the monitor is not a person, or is not of a class or description of person, mentioned in the determination as changed.

(8) The appropriate court must—

(a) vary the restricted movement requirement so as to specify a different person as the monitor,

(b) send a copy of the requirement as varied to that person and to the responsible officer, and

(c) notify the offender of the variation.

227ZI Documentary evidence in proceedings for breach of restricted movement requirement

(1) This section applies for the purposes of establishing in any proceedings whether an offender on whom a restricted movement requirement has been imposed has complied with the requirement.

(2) Evidence of the presence or absence of the offender at a particular place at a particular time may be given by the production of a document or documents bearing to be—

(a) a statement automatically produced by a device specified in regulations made under section 245C of this Act, by which the offender’s whereabouts were remotely monitored, and

(b) a certificate signed by a person nominated for the purposes of this paragraph by the Scottish Ministers that the statement relates to the whereabouts of the offender at the dates and times shown in the statement.

(3) The statement and certificate are, when produced in evidence, sufficient evidence of the facts stated in them.

(4) The statement and certificate are not admissible in evidence at any hearing unless a copy of them has been served on the offender before the hearing.

(5) Where it appears to any court before which the hearing is taking place that the offender has not had sufficient notice of the statement or certificate, the court may adjourn the hearing or make any order that it considers appropriate.
Local authorities: annual consultation about unpaid work

227ZJ Local authorities: annual consultations about unpaid work

(1) Each local authority must, for each year, consult prescribed persons about the nature of unpaid work and other activities to be undertaken by offenders residing in the local authority’s area on whom community payback orders are imposed.

(2) In subsection (1), “prescribed persons” means such persons, or class or classes of person, as may be prescribed by the Scottish Ministers by regulations made by statutory instrument.

(3) A statutory instrument containing regulations under subsection (2) is to be subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

Community payback order: meaning of “the appropriate court”

227ZK Meaning of “the appropriate court”

(1) In sections 227A to 227ZI, “the appropriate court” means, in relation to a community payback order—

(a) where the order was imposed by the High Court of Justiciary, that Court,

(b) where the order was imposed by a sheriff, a sheriff having jurisdiction in the locality mentioned in subsection (2),

(c) where the order was imposed by a justice of the peace court—

(i) the justice of the peace court having jurisdiction in that locality, or

(ii) if there is no justice of the peace court having jurisdiction in that locality, a sheriff having such jurisdiction.

(2) The locality referred to in subsection (1) is the locality for the time being specified in the community payback order under section 227C(2)(a).”.

Non-harassment orders

In section 234A of the 1995 Act (non-harassment orders)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “harassment of” substitute “misconduct towards”,

(b) in subsection (2), for “further harassment” substitute “harassment (or further harassment)”;

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) The court may, for the purpose of subsection (2) above, have regard to any information given to it for that purpose by the prosecutor—

(a) about any other offence involving misconduct towards the victim—

(i) of which the offender has been convicted, or as regards which the offender has accepted (or has been deemed to have accepted) a fixed penalty or compensation offer under section 302(1) or 302A(1) or as regards which a work order has been made under section 303ZA(6),

(b) in particular, by way of—

(i) an extract of the conviction along with a copy of the complaint or indictment containing the charge to which the conviction relates, or

(ii) a note of the terms of the charge to which the fixed penalty offer, compensation offer or work order relates.

(2B) But the court may do so only if the court may, under section 101 or 101A (in a solemn case) or section 166 or 166A (in a summary case), have regard to the conviction or the offer or order.

(2C) The court must give the offender an opportunity to make representations in response to the application.

(d) for subsection (7) substitute—

“(7) For the purposes of this section—

“harassment” and “conduct” are to be construed in accordance with section 8 of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 (c.40), “misconduct” includes conduct that causes alarm or distress.”.

16 Short periods of detention

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) Section 169 (detention in precincts of court) is repealed.

(3) In section 206 (minimum periods of detention)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “five” substitute “15”, and

(b) subsections (2) to (6) are repealed.

18 Amendments of Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007

(1) The Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 (asp 17) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 4 (basic definitions)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) the definitions of “custody-only prisoner” and “custody-only sentence” are repealed,

(ii) in the definition of “custody and community sentence” for “15 days or more” substitute “at least the prescribed period”,

(iii) after the definition of “Parole Board” insert—

““prescribed period” means such period as the Scottish Ministers may by order specify,”, and
(iv) after the definition of “punishment part” insert—

““short-term custody and community prisoner” means a person serving a short-term custody and community sentence, “short-term custody and community sentence” means a sentence of imprisonment for an offence for a term of less than the prescribed period”, and

(b) subsection (2) is repealed.

(3) For section 5 (release of custody-only prisoners on completion of sentence) substitute—

“Short-term custody and community prisoners

5 Release of short-term custody and community prisoners

As soon as a short-term custody and community prisoner has served one-half of the prisoner’s short-term custody and community sentence the Scottish Ministers must release the prisoner on short-term community licence.”.

(4) In Chapter 3 of Part 2, in the chapter title, for “Community” substitute “Short-term community, community”.

(5) In section 29 (release on licence of certain prisoners: the supervision conditions), in subsection (2)(a)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (ii), the words from “serving” to the end are repealed,
(b) sub-paragraph (iii) is repealed,
(c) in sub-paragraphs (iv) and (v), for “person” substitute “short-term custody and community prisoner”,
(d) in sub-paragraph (vi), for “person” substitute “short-term custody and community prisoner serving a sentence of imprisonment of 6 months or more and”, and
(e) in sub-paragraph (vii), at the beginning insert “a short-term custody and community prisoner who is”.

(6) After section 29 insert—

“Short-term community licences

29A Release on short-term community licence: conditions

(1) This section applies where, by virtue of section 5, the Scottish Ministers release a prisoner on short-term community licence.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must include in the prisoner’s short-term community licence—

(a) the standard conditions, and
(b) where the prisoner falls within section 29(2), the supervision conditions.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may include in the prisoner’s short-term community licence—

(a) where the prisoner does not fall within section 29(2), any of the supervision conditions,
(b) such other conditions as they consider appropriate.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may—
(a) vary any condition mentioned in subsection (2) or (3),
(c) cancel any condition mentioned in subsection (3),
(b) include any further conditions in the licence.

(5) The Scottish Ministers may not cancel any condition mentioned in subsection (2).

(6) Before exercising any of the powers conferred by subsection (3) or (4), the Scottish Ministers must, in pursuance of arrangements established under section 46A(1), co-operate with the appropriate local authority.

(7) In this section, “appropriate local authority”, in relation to a short-term custody and community prisoner, means the local authority for the area in which the prisoner—
(a) resided immediately before the imposition of the short-term custody and community sentence, or
(b) intends to reside on release on short-term community licence.

(8) If, by virtue of subsection (7), two or more local authorities are the appropriate local authority in relation to a short-term custody and community prisoner, those authorities may agree that the functions conferred on them by subsection (5) and section 46A(2) may be carried out by only one of them.”.

(7) After section 46 insert—

“Assessment of conditions for short-term community licences

46A Joint arrangements between Scottish Ministers and local authorities

(1) The Scottish Ministers and each local authority must jointly establish arrangements for the assessment and management of the risk posed in the local authority’s area by short-term custody and community prisoners released on licence subject to the supervision conditions.

(2) For the purposes of assisting the Scottish Ministers in deciding whether, under section 29A(3)(a), to include any of the supervision conditions in a prisoner’s short-term community licence, the Scottish Ministers and the appropriate local authority must, during the first half of a short-term custody and community prisoner’s sentence, assess, in accordance with arrangements established under subsection (1), whether any of those conditions are appropriate.

(3) In this section, “appropriate local authority” is to be construed in accordance with section 29A(7) and (8).”.

(8) In section 47 (curfew licences)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “to” insert “a short-term custody and community prisoner or”,
(b) in subsection (2) for “the custody part of the prisoner’s sentence” substitute—
“(a) in the case of a short-term custody and community prisoner, the first half of the prisoner’s sentence,
(b) in the case of a custody and community prisoner, the custody part of the prisoner’s sentence”,
(c) after subsection (3) insert—
“(3A) The Scottish Ministers may release a short-term custody and community prisoner on curfew licence only—

(a) after the later of—

(i) the day on which the prisoner has served the greater of one-quarter or four weeks of the prisoner’s sentence, or

(ii) the day falling 166 days before the expiry of one-half of the prisoner’s sentence, and

(b) before the day falling 14 days before the expiry of one-half of the prisoner’s sentence.”,

(d) in subsection (4)—

(i) after “a” insert “custody and community”, and

(ii) in paragraph (a)(ii), for “135” substitute “166”, and

(e) in subsection (8), for “the custody part of the prisoner’s sentence” substitute—

“(a) in the case of a short-term custody and community prisoner, the first half of the prisoner’s sentence,

(b) in the case of a custody and community prisoner, the custody part of the prisoner’s sentence”.

(9) Schedule 2 amends the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act (asp 17) and the 1995 Act in consequence of amendments made by this section.

19 Early removal of certain short-term prisoners from the United Kingdom

For schedule 6 to the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 (asp 17) (transitory amendments of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993) substitute—

“SCHEDULE 6
(introduced by section 66(3))

TRANSITORY AMENDMENTS

1 Until the coming into force of the repeal by this Act of Part 1 of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 (c.9), that Part has effect in accordance with paragraphs 2 to 4.

2 In section 1 (release of short-term and long-term prisoners), subsection (3) has effect as if for paragraphs (a) and (b) there were substituted “must,”.

3 Section 9 (persons liable to removal from the United Kingdom) has effect as if—

(a) subsection (1) were repealed, and

(b) in subsection (3), after “section”, where it first occurs, there were inserted “and sections 9A and 9B”.

4 That Part has effect as if after section 9 there were inserted—

“9A Persons eligible for removal from the United Kingdom

(1) For the purposes of this Part, to be “eligible for removal from the United Kingdom” a person must show, to the satisfaction of the Scottish Ministers, that the condition in subsection (2) is met.
(2) The condition is that the person has the settled intention of residing permanently outside the United Kingdom if removed from prison under section 9B.

(3) The person must not be one who is liable to removal from the United Kingdom.

9B Early removal of certain short-term prisoners from the United Kingdom

(1) Subject to subsection (2), where a short-term prisoner is liable to, or eligible for, removal from the United Kingdom, the Scottish Ministers may remove the prisoner from prison under this section at any time during the period of 180 days ending with the day on which the prisoner will have served one-half of the prisoner’s sentence.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply in relation to a prisoner unless the prisoner has served one-quarter of the sentence.

(3) A prisoner removed from prison under this section—

(a) if liable to removal from the United Kingdom, is so removed only for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of State to remove the prisoner from the United Kingdom under powers conferred by—

(i) Schedule 2 or 3 to the Immigration Act 1971 (c.77), or

(ii) section 10 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (c.33),

(b) if eligible for removal from the United Kingdom, is so removed only for the purpose of enabling the prisoner to leave the United Kingdom in order to reside permanently outside the United Kingdom, and

(c) in either case, so long as remaining in the United Kingdom, remains liable to be detained in pursuance of the prisoner’s sentence until the prisoner has served one-half of the sentence.

(4) So long as a prisoner removed from prison under this section remains in the United Kingdom but has not been returned to prison, any duty or power of the Scottish Ministers under section 1(1), 1AA or 3 is exercisable in relation to the prisoner as if the prisoner were in prison.

(5) The Scottish Ministers may by order amend the number of days for the time being specified in subsection (1).

(6) A statutory instrument containing an order under subsection (5) may not be made unless a draft of the instrument has been laid before, and approved by resolution of, the Scottish Parliament.
9C Re-entry into United Kingdom of prisoner removed from prison early

(1) This section applies in relation to a person (referred to in this section as “the removed person”) who, after being removed from prison under section 9B, has been removed from the United Kingdom before serving one-half of the sentence.

(2) Where the removed person re-enters the United Kingdom at any time before the date on which the person would have served the person’s sentence in full (but for the person’s removal from prison under section 9B), the person is liable to be detained in pursuance of the person’s sentence until the earlier of the following—

(a) the date of the expiry of the outstanding custodial period,

(b) the date on which the person would have served the person’s sentence in full (but for the person’s removal from prison under section 9B).

(3) In the case of a person liable to be detained under subsection (2), the duty to release the person under section 1(1) or 1AA(1) applies only after the expiry of the outstanding custodial period.

(4) A person who is liable to be detained by virtue of subsection (2) is, if at large, to be taken for the purposes of section 40 of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 (c.45) (persons unlawfully at large) to be unlawfully at large.

(5) Subsection (2) does not prevent—

(a) the further removal from prison under section 9B(1) of a person falling within that subsection, or

(b) the further removal from the United Kingdom of such a person.

(6) In this section, the “outstanding custodial period” means, in relation to a removed person, a period of time equal to the period beginning with the date of removal from the United Kingdom and ending with the date on which the person would, but for the removal, have served one-half of the sentence.”.

Until the coming into force of the repeal by this Act of Part 1 of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 (c.9), paragraph (c) of section 24 of the International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) (limited disapplication of certain provisions relating to sentences) has effect as if—

(a) after “9” there were inserted “, 9A, 9B, 9C”, and

(b) after “transfer” there were inserted “, removal”.”.

Other sentencing measures

Reports about supervised persons

(1) Section 203 of the 1995 Act (reports) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (3), for the words from “the offender” to the end substitute—

“(a) the offender,
(b) the offender’s solicitor (if any), and
(c) the prosecutor.”.

20A Pre-sentencing reports about organisations

After section 203 of the 1995 Act (reports), insert—

“203A Reports about organisations

(1) This section applies where an organisation is convicted of an offence.

(2) Before dealing with the organisation in respect of the offence, the court may obtain a report into the organisation’s financial affairs and structural arrangements.

(3) The report is to be prepared by a person appointed by the court.

(4) The person appointed to prepare the report is referred to in this section as the “reporter”.

(5) The court may issue directions to the reporter about—

(a) the information to be contained in the report,

(b) the particular matters to be covered by the report,

(c) the time by which the report is to be submitted to the court.

(6) The court may order the organisation to give the reporter and any person acting on the reporter’s behalf—

(a) access at all reasonable times to the organisation’s books, documents and other records,

(b) such information or explanation as the reporter thinks necessary.

(7) The reporter’s costs in preparing the report are to be paid by the clerk of court, but the court may order the organisation to reimburse to the clerk all or a part of those costs.

(8) An order under subsection (7) may be enforced by civil diligence as if it were a fine.

(9) On submission of the report to the court, the clerk of court must provide a copy of the report to—

(a) the organisation,

(b) the organisation’s solicitor (if any), and

(c) the prosecutor.

(10) The court must have regard to the report in deciding how to deal with the organisation in respect of the offence.

(11) If the court decides to impose a fine, the court must, in determining the amount of the fine, have regard to—

(a) the report, and

(b) if the court makes an order under subsection (7), the amount of costs that the organisation is required to reimburse under the order.

(12) Where the court—
(a) makes an order under subsection (7), and
(b) imposes a fine on the organisation, any payment by the organisation is first to be applied in satisfaction of the order under subsection (7).

(13) Where the court also makes a compensation order in respect of the offence, any payment by the organisation is first to be applied in satisfaction of the compensation order before being applied in accordance with subsection (12).”.

21 Extended sentences for certain sexual offences

In section 210A of the 1995 Act (extended sentences for sex and violent offenders)—

(a) in subsection (10), at the end of the definition of “sexual offence” add—

“(xxviii) an offence (other than one mentioned in the preceding paragraphs) where the court determines for the purposes of this paragraph that there was a significant sexual aspect to the offender’s behaviour in committing the offence;”, and

(b) after subsection (11) add—

“(12) An extended sentence may be passed by reference to paragraph (xxviii) only if the offender is or is to become, by virtue of Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42), subject to the notification requirements of Part 2 of that Act.”.

22 Effect of probation and absolute discharge

(1) In section 1(4) of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) (construction of references in Act to “conviction”), for “section 9 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1949” substitute “section 247 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46)”.

(2) In section 49(6) of the 1982 Act (offences relating to dangerous and annoying creatures: power to order disposal of creature), the words “or makes a probation order in relation to him” are repealed.

(3) In section 58(3) of the 1982 Act (convicted thief in possession: power to order forfeiture of tools etc.)—

(a) the words “or makes a probation order in relation to him” are repealed, and
(b) for the words from “discharged absolutely” to the end substitute “, as the case may be, discharged absolutely.”.

(4) In section 96 of the 2005 Act (exclusion orders: supplementary provision), after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) For the purposes of section 94, section 247(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (convictions deemed not be convictions where offender placed on probation or discharged absolutely) does not apply to a conviction for a violent offence within the meaning of section 94.”.

(5) In section 129 of the 2005 Act (relevant and foreign offences), after subsection (4) add—
“(5) For the purposes of the provisions of this Act specified in subsection (6), section 247(1) and (2) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (convictions deemed not to be convictions where offender placed on probation or discharged absolutely) does not apply to a conviction for a relevant offence.

(6) Those provisions are—
(a) section 21(4),
(b) section 23(6),
(c) section 24,
(d) section 33(6),
(e) sections 41 to 44,
(f) section 73(3),
(g) section 75,
(h) sections 80 to 83,
(i) section 89(4) and (5),
(j) subsection (3) of this section, and
(k) section 130.”.

23 Offences aggravated by racial or religious prejudice

(1) In section 96 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 (c.37) (racially aggravated offences), for subsection (5) substitute—

“(5) The court must—
(a) state on conviction that the offence was racially aggravated,
(b) record the conviction in a way that shows that the offence was so aggravated,
(c) take the aggravation into account in determining the appropriate sentence, and
(d) state—
(i) where the sentence in respect of the offence is different from that which the court would have imposed if the offence were not so aggravated, the extent of and the reasons for that difference, or
(ii) otherwise, the reasons for there being no such difference.”.

(2) In section 74 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (offences aggravated by religious prejudice)—

(a) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) It is immaterial whether or not the offender’s malice and ill-will is also based (to any extent) on any other factor.”,

(b) subsections (3) and (4) are repealed, and
(c) after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) The court must—
(a) state on conviction that the offence was aggravated by religious prejudice,
(b) record the conviction in a way that shows that the offence was so aggravated,
(c) take the aggravation into account in determining the appropriate sentence, and
(d) state—
   (i) where the sentence in respect of the offence is different from that which the court would have imposed if the offence were not so aggravated, the extent of and the reasons for that difference, or
   (ii) otherwise, the reasons for there being no such difference.”.

24A Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing any obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—
   (a) on the Scottish Ministers,
   (b) on other persons.

(3) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment.

(4) In this section, the “Framework Decision” means Council Framework Decision 2008/947/JHA of 27 November 2008 on the application of the principle of mutual recognition to judgments and probation decisions with a view to the supervision of probation measures and alternative sanctions.

24B Minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point

(1) In section 49 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) (offence of having in a public place an article with a blade or point), after subsection (5) insert—
   “(5A) Subsection (5B) applies where—
      (a) a person is convicted of an offence under subsection (1),
      (b) the offence was committed after the commencement of this subsection, and
      (c) when the offence was committed, the person was aged 16 or over.

(5B) Where this subsection applies, the court must impose a sentence of imprisonment of at least 6 months (with or without a fine) unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify not doing so.”.

(2) In section 207(3A) of the 1995 Act (detention of young offenders: minimum sentences), after paragraph (a) insert—
“(aa) section 49(5B) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point);”.

PART 2

CRIMINAL LAW

25 Involvement in serious organised crime

(1) A person who agrees with at least one other person to become involved in serious organised crime commits an offence.

(1A) Without limiting the generality of subsection (1), a person agrees to become involved in serious organised crime if the person—

(a) agrees to do something (whether or not the doing of that thing would itself constitute an offence), and

(b) knows or suspects, or ought reasonably to have known or suspected, that the doing of that thing will enable or further the commission of serious organised crime.

(2) For the purposes of this section and sections 26 to 28—

“serious organised crime” means crime involving two or more persons acting together for the principal purpose of committing or conspiring to commit a serious offence or a series of serious offences,

“serious offence” means an indictable offence—

(a) committed with the intention of obtaining a material benefit for any person, or

(b) which is an act of violence committed or a threat made with the intention of obtaining such a benefit in the future, and “material benefit” means a right or interest of any description in any property, whether heritable or moveable and whether corporeal or incorporeal.

(3) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 10 years or to a fine or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both.

26 Offences aggravated by connection with serious organised crime

(1) This subsection applies where it is—

(a) libelled in an indictment or specified in a complaint that an offence is aggravated by a connection with serious organised crime, and

(b) proved that the offence is so aggravated.

(2) An offence is aggravated by a connection with serious organised crime if the person committing the offence is motivated (wholly or partly) by the objective of committing or conspiring to commit serious organised crime.
(3) It is immaterial whether or not in committing the offence the person in fact enables the person or another person to commit serious organised crime.

(4) Evidence from a single source is sufficient to prove that an offence is aggravated by a connection with serious organised crime.

(5) Where subsection (1) applies, the court must—
   (a) state on conviction that the offence is aggravated by a connection with serious organised crime,
   (b) record the conviction in a way that shows that the offence was so aggravated,
   (c) take the aggravation into account in determining the appropriate sentence, and
   (d) state—
      (i) where the sentence in respect of the offence is different from that which the court would have imposed if the offence were not so aggravated, the extent of and the reasons for that difference, or
      (ii) otherwise, the reasons for there being no such difference.

27 Directing serious organised crime

(1) A person commits an offence by directing another person—
   (a) to commit a serious offence,
   (b) to commit an offence aggravated by a connection with serious organised crime under section 26.

(2) A person commits an offence by directing another person to direct a further person to commit an offence mentioned in subsection (1).

(3) For the purposes of subsections (1) and (2), a person directs another person to commit an offence if the person—
   (a) does something, or a series of things, to direct the person to commit the offence,
   (b) intends that the thing or things done will persuade the person to commit the offence, and
   (c) intends that the thing or things done will—
      (i) result in a person committing serious organised crime, or
      (ii) enable a person to commit serious organised crime.

(5) The person directing the other person commits an offence under subsection (1) whether or not the other person in fact commits—
   (a) a serious offence, or
   (b) an offence aggravated by a connection with serious organised crime under section 26.

(7) In this section “directing” a person to commit an offence includes inciting the person to commit the offence.

(8) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) or (2) is liable—
   (a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years or to a fine or to both,
(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both.

28 Failure to report serious organised crime

(1) This section applies where—

(a) a person (“the person”) knows or suspects that another person (“the other person”) has committed—

(i) an offence under section 25 or 27, or

(ii) an offence which is aggravated by a connection with serious organised crime under section 26, and

(b) that knowledge or suspicion originates from information obtained—

(i) in the course of the person’s trade, profession, business or employment, or

(ii) as a result of a close personal relationship between the person and the other person.

(2) In the case of knowledge or suspicion originating from information obtained by the person as a result of a close personal relationship between the person and the other person, this section applies only where the person has obtained a material benefit as a result of the commission of serious organised crime by the other person.

(3) The person commits an offence if the person does not disclose to a constable—

(a) the person’s knowledge or suspicion, and

(b) the information on which that knowledge or suspicion is based.

(4) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (3) to prove that the person had a reasonable excuse for not making the disclosure.

(5) Subsection (3) does not require disclosure by a person who is a professional legal adviser (an “adviser”) of—

(a) information which the adviser obtains in privileged circumstances, or

(b) knowledge or a suspicion based on information obtained in privileged circumstances.

(6) For the purpose of subsection (5), information is obtained by an adviser in privileged circumstances if it comes to the adviser, otherwise than for the purposes of committing serious organised crime—

(a) from a client (or from a client’s representative) in connection with the provision of legal advice by the adviser to that person,

(b) from a person seeking legal advice from the adviser (or from that person’s representative), or

(c) from a person, for the purpose of actual or contemplated legal proceedings.

(7) The reference in subsection (3) to a constable includes a reference to a police member of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency.

(8) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or to a fine or to both,
(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both.

Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes

28A Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: UK residents

1. The International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) is amended as follows.
2. After section 8, insert—

   “8A Meaning of “United Kingdom national” and “United Kingdom resident”

1. In this Part—

   “United Kingdom national” means—

   (a) a British citizen, a British Overseas Territories citizen, a British National (Overseas) or a British Overseas citizen,

   (b) a person who under the British Nationality Act 1981 (c.61) is a British subject, or

   (c) a British protected person within the meaning of that Act,

   “United Kingdom resident” means a person who is resident in the United Kingdom.

2. To the extent that it would not otherwise be the case, the following individuals are to be treated for the purposes of this Part as being resident in the United Kingdom—

   (a) an individual who has indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom,

   (b) any other individual who has made an application for such leave (whether or not it has been determined) and who is in the United Kingdom,

   (c) an individual who has leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom for the purposes of work or study and who is in the United Kingdom,

   (d) an individual who has made an asylum claim, or a human rights claim, which has been granted,

   (e) any other individual who has made an asylum claim or a human rights claim (whether or not the claim has been determined) and who is in the United Kingdom,

   (f) an individual named in an application for indefinite leave to remain, an asylum claim or a human rights claim as a dependant of the individual making the application or claim if—

      (i) the application or claim has been granted, or

      (ii) the named individual is in the United Kingdom (whether or not the application or claim has been determined),

   (g) an individual who would be liable to removal or deportation from the United Kingdom but cannot be removed or deported because of section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 (c.42) or for practical reasons,

   (h) an individual—.
against whom a decision to make a deportation order under section 5(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 (c.77) by virtue of section 3(5)(a) of that Act (deportation conducive to the public good) has been made,

(ii) who has appealed against the decision to make the order (whether or not the appeal has been determined), and

(iii) who is in the United Kingdom,

(i) an individual who is an illegal entrant within the meaning of section 33(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 or who is liable to removal under section 10 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (c.33),

(j) an individual who is detained in lawful custody in the United Kingdom.

(3) When determining for the purposes of this Part whether any other individual is resident in the United Kingdom regard is to be had to all relevant considerations including—

(a) the periods during which the individual is, has been or intends to be in the United Kingdom,

(b) the purposes for which the individual is, has been or intends to be in the United Kingdom,

(c) whether the individual has family or other connections to the United Kingdom and the nature of those connections, and

(d) whether the individual has an interest in residential property located in the United Kingdom.

(4) In this section—

“asylum claim” means—

(a) a claim that it would be contrary to the United Kingdom’s obligations under the Refugee Convention for the claimant to be removed from, or required to leave, the United Kingdom,

(b) a claim that the claimant would face a real risk of serious harm if removed from the United Kingdom,

“Convention rights” means the rights identified as Convention rights by section 1 of the Human Rights Act 1998,

“detained in lawful custody” means—

(a) detained in pursuance of a sentence of imprisonment or detention, a sentence of custody for life or a detention and training order,

(b) remanded in or committed to custody by an order of a court,

(c) detained pursuant to an order under section 2 of the Colonial Prisoners Removal Act 1884 (c.31) or a warrant under section 1 or 4A of the Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984 (c.47),

(d) detained under Part 3 of the Mental Health Act 1983 (c.20) or by virtue of an order under section 5 of the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 (c.84) or section 6 or 14 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 (c.19) (hospital orders etc.),
(e) detained by virtue of an order under Part 6 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (other than an order under section 60C) or a hospital direction under section 59A of that Act, and includes detention by virtue of the special restrictions set out in Part 10 of the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13) to which a person is subject by virtue of an order under section 59 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995;

(f) detained under Part 3 of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 (SI 1986/595) or by virtue of an order under section 11 or 13(5A) of the Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act 1980 (c. 47),

“human rights claim” means a claim that to remove the claimant from, or to require the claimant to leave, the United Kingdom would be unlawful under section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 (public authority not to act contrary to Convention) as being incompatible with the person’s Convention rights,

“the Refugee Convention” means the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees done at Geneva on 28 July 1951 and the Protocol to the Convention,

“serious harm” has the meaning given by article 15 of Council Directive 2004/83/EC on minimum standards for the qualification and status of third country nationals or stateless persons as refugees or as persons who otherwise need international protection and the content of the protection granted.

(5) In this section, a reference to having leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom is to be construed in accordance with the Immigration Act 1971.

(6) This section applies in relation to any offence under this Part (whether committed before or after the coming into force of this section).”.

(3) In section 28(1) (interpretation), the definitions of “United Kingdom national” and “United Kingdom resident” are repealed.

28B Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: retrospective application

After section 9 of the International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) insert—

“9A Retrospective application of certain offences

(1) Section 1 of this Act applies to acts committed on or after 1 January 1991.

(2) But that section does not apply to an act committed before 17 December 2001 which constitutes a crime against humanity or a war crime within article 8.2(b) or (e) unless, at the time the act was committed, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(3) Section 2 of this Act applies to conduct engaged in on or after 1 January 1991.

(4) The references in subsections (1), (3) and (5) of that section to an offence include an act or conduct that would not constitute an offence but for this section.
(5) Any enactment or rule of law relating to an offence ancillary to a relevant offence applies—
   (a) to conduct engaged in on or after 1 January 1991, and
   (b) even if the act or conduct constituting the relevant offence would not constitute such an offence but for this section.

(6) But section 2 of this Act, and any enactment or rule of law relating to an offence ancillary to a relevant offence, do not apply to—
   (a) conduct engaged in before 17 December 2001, or
   (b) conduct engaged in on or after that date which was ancillary to an act or conduct that—
      (i) was committed or engaged in before that date, and
      (ii) would not constitute a relevant offence but for this section, unless, at the time the conduct was engaged in, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(7) Section 5 of this Act, so far as it has effect in relation to relevant offences, applies—
   (a) to failures to exercise control of the kind mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) of that section which occurred on or after 1 January 1991, and
   (b) even if the act or conduct constituting the relevant offence would not constitute an offence but for this section.

(8) But section 5 of this Act, so far as it has effect in relation to relevant offences, does not apply to a failure to exercise control of the kind mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) of that section which occurred before 17 December 2001 unless, at the time it occurred, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(9) In this section, “relevant offence” means an offence under section 1 or 2 of this Act or an offence ancillary to such an offence.

9B Provision supplemental to section 9A: modification of penalties

(1) This section applies in relation to—
   (a) an offence under section 1 of this Act on account of an act committed before 17 December 2001 constituting genocide, if at the time the act was committed it also amounted to an offence under section 1 of the Genocide Act 1969,
   (b) an offence under section 1 of this Act on account of an act committed before 1 September 2001 constituting a war crime, if at the time the act was committed it also amounted to an offence under section 1 of the Geneva Conventions Act 1957 (c.52) (grave breaches of the Conventions),
   (c) an offence ancillary to an offence within paragraph (a) or (b) above.

(2) Section 3(5) of this Act has effect in relation to such an offence as if for “30 years” there were substituted “14 years”.”.
Articles banned in prison

29  Articles banned in prison

(1) In section 41 of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 (c.45) (unlawful introduction of tobacco etc. into prison)—

(a) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) A person commits an offence if without reasonable excuse the person—

(a) brings or otherwise introduces into a prison a proscribed article (or attempts to do so),

(b) takes out of or otherwise removes from a prison a proscribed article (or attempts to do so).

(1A) A person who commits an offence under this section—

(a) where the proscribed article falls within paragraphs (b) to (f) of subsection (9A), is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a period not exceeding 30 days or to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale (or to both),

(b) where the proscribed article falls within paragraph (a) of subsection (9A) (whether or not also within paragraph (f) of that subsection), is liable to the penalties set out in section 41ZA(5).”,

(b) in subsection (2), for “the foregoing subsection” substitute “subsection (1)(a),”,

(c) in subsection (2A)—

(i) for “article mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (e) of subsection (1) above” substitute “proscribed article”, and

(ii) for “article mentioned in those paragraphs” substitute “proscribed article”,

(d) in subsection (2B)(c), for the words from “mentioned” to “that subsection)” substitute “that is a proscribed article falling within paragraph (d) to (f) of subsection (9A) (but not also within paragraph (b) or (c) of that subsection), or falling within paragraph (a) of that subsection”,

(e) in subsection (3), for “subsection (1) above” substitute “this section or section 41ZA”,

(f) after subsection (9) insert—

“(9A) In this section, a “proscribed article” is—

(a) any personal communication device,

(b) any drug,

(c) any firearm or ammunition,

(d) any offensive weapon,

(e) any article which has a blade or is sharply pointed,

(f) any article (or other article) which is a prohibited article within the meaning of rules made under section 39.

(9B) In this section, a “personal communication device” includes—

(a) a mobile telephone,
(b) any other portable electronic device that is capable of transmitting or receiving a communication of any kind,

e) any—
   (i) component part of a device mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b),
   (ii) article that is designed or adapted for use with such a device.”., and

(g) in subsection (10), in the definition of “offensive weapon”, for “the Prevention of Crime Act 1953” substitute “section 47 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39)”.

(2) After section 41 of that Act insert—

“41ZA Further provision for communication devices

(1) A person commits an offence if, knowing another person to be a prisoner, the person gives a personal communication device to the prisoner while the prisoner is inside a prison.

(2) A person commits an offence if, by means of a personal communication device, the person—
   (a) transmits, from inside a prison, a communication of any kind, or
   (b) intentionally receives, when inside a prison, a communication of any kind.

(3) A person commits an offence if, while inside a prison, the person is in possession of a personal communication device.

(4) A person who commits an offence under subsections (1) to (3) is liable to the penalties set out in subsection (5).

(5) The penalties are—
   (a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding 2 years or to a fine (or to both),
   (b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum (or to both).

(6) In this section, “personal communication device” is to be construed in accordance with section 41(9B).

41ZB Exceptions as to communication devices

(1) No offence—
   (a) under section 41, where the proscribed article falls within paragraph (a) of subsection (9A) (whether or not also within paragraph (f) of that subsection), or
   (b) under section 41ZA(1) to (3), is committed by a person where subsection (2) applies.

(2) This subsection applies—
   (a) if (and in so far as) the act which constitutes the offence is done by the person at or in relation to a designated area at the prison, or
(b) if (and in so far as) the person is acting in circumstances to which an authorisation under subsection (8) applies.

(3) No offence—

(a) under section 41, where the proscribed article falls within paragraph (a) of subsection (9A) (whether or not also within paragraph (f) of that subsection), or

(b) under section 41ZA(2) or (3), is committed by a prison officer (or other prison official) where subsection (4) applies.

(4) This subsection applies—

(a) if the device is one supplied to the person specifically for use in the course of the person’s official duties at the prison, or

(b) if (and in so far as) the person is acting in accordance with those duties.

(5) No offence under section 41ZA(3) is committed by a person other than a prisoner if in the circumstances there is a reasonable excuse for the possession.

(6) The defences mentioned in subsection (7) apply in any proceedings for an offence under—

(a) section 41(1), where the proscribed article falls within paragraph (a) of subsection (9A) (whether or not also within paragraph (f) of that subsection), or

(b) section 41ZA(1) to (3).

(7) In relation to such an offence, it is a defence for the accused person to show that—

(a) the person reasonably believed that the person was acting in circumstances to which an authorisation under subsection (8) applied (even though no such authorisation did apply), or

(b) in the circumstances there was an overriding public interest which justified the person’s actions.

(8) An authorisation under this subsection is a written authorisation that is given—

(a) in favour of any person specified in the authorisation (or person of a specified description),

(b) for a specified purpose, and

(c) by—

(i) the governor or director of a prison in relation to activities at that prison, or

(ii) the Scottish Ministers in relation to activities at any specified prison.

(9) A designated area referred to in subsection (2)(a) is any part of the prison, used solely or principally for an administrative or similar purpose, that is specified as such by a written designation given under this paragraph by the governor or director of the prison.
(10) Prison officers (or other prison officials) who are Crown servants or agents do not benefit from Crown immunity in relation to an offence under—

(a) section 41, where the proscribed article falls within paragraph (a) of subsection (9A) of that section (whether or not also within paragraph (f) of that subsection), or

(b) section 41ZA.”.

Crossbows, knives etc.

30 Sale and hire of crossbows to persons under 18

(1) The Crossbows Act 1987 (c.32) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 1 (sale and letting on hire), the words from “unless” to the end are repealed.

(3) After that section insert—

“1A Defences

(1) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under section 1 (referred to in this section as “the accused”) to show that—

(a) the accused believed the person to whom the crossbow or part was sold or let on hire (referred to in this section as “the purchaser or hirer”) to be aged 18 or over, and

(b) either—

(i) the accused had taken reasonable steps to establish the purchaser or hirer’s age, or

(ii) no reasonable person could have suspected from the purchaser or hirer’s appearance that the purchaser or hirer was under the age of 18.

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1)(b)(i), the accused is to be treated as having taken reasonable steps to establish the purchaser or hirer’s age if and only if—

(a) the accused was shown any of the documents mentioned in subsection (3), and

(b) the document would have convinced a reasonable person.

(3) Those documents are any document bearing to be—

(a) a passport,

(b) a European Union photocard driving licence, or

(c) such other document, or a document of such other description, as the Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument prescribe.

(4) A statutory instrument containing an order under subsection (3)(c) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.”.

(4) After section 3 insert—

“3A Test purchasing

(1) A person under the age of 18 who buys or hires, or attempts to buy or hire, a crossbow or a part of a crossbow does not commit an offence under section 2 or 3 if the person is authorised to do so by the chief constable for the purpose of determining whether an offence is being committed under section 1.

(2) A chief constable may authorise a person under the age of 18 to buy or hire, or attempt to buy or hire, a crossbow or a part of a crossbow only if satisfied that all reasonable steps have been or will be taken to—

(a) ensure the person’s safety, and
(b) avoid any risk to the person’s welfare.

31 Sale and hire of knives and certain other articles to persons under 18

(1) Section 141A of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 (c.33) (sale of knives and certain articles with blade or point to persons under eighteen) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1), after “sells” insert “or lets on hire”.

(3) In subsection (3A), after “sell” insert “or let on hire”.

(4) For subsection (4) substitute—

“(4) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) (referred to in this section as “the accused”) to show that—

(a) the accused believed the person to whom the article was sold or let on hire (referred to in this section as “the purchaser or hirer”) to be of or above the relevant age, and
(b) either—

(i) the accused had taken reasonable steps to establish the purchaser or hirer’s age, or
(ii) no reasonable person could have suspected from the purchaser or hirer’s appearance that the purchaser or hirer was aged under the relevant age.

(4A) For the purposes of subsection (4)(b)(i), the accused is to be treated as having taken reasonable steps to establish the purchaser or hirer’s age if and only if—

(a) the accused was shown any of the documents mentioned in subsection (4B), and
(b) the document would have convinced a reasonable person.

(4B) Those documents are any document bearing to be—

(a) a passport,
(b) a European Union photocard driving licence, or
(c) such other document, or a document of such other description, as the Scottish Ministers may by order prescribe.

(4C) In subsection (4), “the relevant age” is—

(a) in the case where the article is a knife or knife blade designed for domestic use, 16 years, and
(b) in any other case, 18 years.”.
31A Offensive weapons etc.

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 47 (prohibition of the carrying of offensive weapons)—

(a) in subsection (1), the words from “without” to “him,” are repealed,

(b) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) to show that the person had a reasonable excuse or lawful authority for having the weapon with the person in the public place.”, and

(c) for subsection (4), substitute—

“(4) In this section—

“offensive weapon” means any article—

(a) made or adapted for use for causing injury to a person, or

(b) intended, by the person having the article, for use for causing injury to a person by—

(i) the person having it, or

(ii) some other person,

“public place” means any place other than—

(a) domestic premises,

(b) school premises (within the meaning of section 49A(6)),

(c) a prison (within the meaning of section 49C(7)),

“domestic premises” means premises occupied as a private dwelling (including any stair, passage, garden, yard, garage, outhouse or other appurtenance of such premises which is not used in common by the occupants of more than one such dwelling).”.

(3) In section 49 (offence of having in public place article with blade or point)—

(a) in subsection (4), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”,

(b) in subsection (5), for “prove” substitute “show”, and

(c) for subsection (7), substitute—

“(7) In this section, “public place” has the same meaning as in section 47(4).”.

(4) In section 49A (offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on school premises)—

(a) in subsection (3), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”, and

(b) in subsection (4), for “prove” substitute “show”.

(5) In section 49C(2) (offence of having offensive weapon etc. in prison), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”.

Offensive weapons etc.
(6) In section 50(4) (extension of constable’s power to stop, search and arrest without warrant), for “3” substitute “4”.

Stalking

31B Offence of stalking

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of stalking, where A stalks another person (“B”).

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), A stalks B where—

(a) A engages in a course of conduct,
(b) subsection (3) or (4) applies, and
(c) A’s course of conduct causes B to suffer—

(i) physical or psychological harm, or
(ii) apprehension or fear for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person.

(3) This subsection applies where A engages in the course of conduct with the intention of causing such harm to B or of arousing such apprehension or fear in B.

(4) This subsection applies where A knows, or ought in all the circumstances to have known, that engaging in the course of conduct would be likely to cause such harm or arouse such apprehension or fear.

(5) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under this section to show that the course of action—

(a) was authorised by virtue of any enactment or rule of law,
(b) was engaged in for the purpose of preventing or detecting crime, or
(c) was, in the particular circumstances, reasonable.

(6) In this section—

“conduct” includes (but is not limited to)—

(a) following B or any other person,
(b) contacting B or any other person by post, telephone, email, text message or any other method,
(c) publishing any statement or other material—

(i) relating or purporting to relate to B or to any other person,
(ii) purporting to originate from B or from any other person,
(d) tracing the use by B or by any other person of the internet, email or any other form of electronic communication,
(e) entering or loitering in the vicinity of—

(i) the place of residence of B or of any other person,
(ii) the place of work or business of B or of any other person,
(iii) any place frequented by B or of any other person,
(f) interfering with any property in the possession of B or of any other person,
(g) giving offensive material to B or to any other person or leaving such material where it may be found by, given to or brought to the attention of B or any other person,

(h) keeping B or any other person under surveillance,

(i) acting in any other way that a reasonable person would expect would arouse apprehension or fear in B for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person, and

“course of conduct” involves conduct on at least two occasions.

(7) A person convicted of the offence of stalking is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years or to a fine or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both.

Sexual offences

32 Certain sexual offences by non-natural persons

(1) The Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) At the end of each of the following provisions insert “or a fine or both”—

(a) subsections (4)(b) and (5)(b) of section 9 (paying for sexual services of a child),

(b) subsection (2)(b) of section 10 (causing or inciting provision by child of sexual services or child pornography),

(c) subsection (2)(b) of section 11 (controlling a child providing sexual services or involved in pornography),

(d) subsection (2)(b) of section 12 (arranging or facilitating provision by child of sexual services or child pornography).

(3) After section 14 insert—

“14A Offences by bodies corporate etc.

(1) Subsection (2) applies where an offence under sections 10 to 12 committed—

(a) by a body corporate, is committed with the consent or connivance of, or is attributable to any neglect on the part of, a person who—

(i) is a director, manager, secretary or other similar officer of the body corporate, or

(ii) purports to act in any such capacity,

(b) by a Scottish partnership, is committed with the consent or connivance of, or is attributable to any neglect on the part of, a person who—

(i) is a partner, or

(ii) purports to act in that capacity,

(c) by an unincorporated association other than a Scottish partnership, is committed with the consent or connivance of, or is attributable to any neglect on the part of, a person who—
(i) is concerned in the management or control of the association, or
(ii) purports to act in the capacity of a person so concerned.

(2) The individual (as well as the body corporate, Scottish partnership or, as the case may be, unincorporated association) commits the offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(3) Where the affairs of a body corporate are managed by its members, this section applies in relation to acts and defaults of a member in connection with the member’s function of management as if the member were a director of the body corporate.”.

33 Indecent images of children

(1) In the 1982 Act—
   (a) in section 52 (indecent photographs etc. of children)—
      (i) in subsection (2C)(b), for “a pseudo-photograph” substitute “an indecent pseudo-photograph”,
      (ii) after subsection (8) add—
         “(9) In this section, references to a photograph also include a tracing or other image, whether made by electronic or other means (of whatever nature), which is not itself a photograph or pseudo-photograph but which is derived from the whole or part of a photograph or pseudo-photograph (or a combination of either or both).
   (10) And subsection (2B) applies in relation to such an image as it applies in relation to a pseudo-photograph.”, and
   (b) in section 52A (possession of indecent photographs of children), in subsection (4), for “and (8)” substitute “and (8) to (10)”.

(2) In Schedule 1 to the 1995 Act (offences against children under the age of 17 years to which special provisions apply), in paragraph 2B, after “photograph” insert “or pseudo-photograph”.

(3) In Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) (list of sexual offences for the purposes of Part 2)—
   (a) in paragraph 44, for the words from “the” where it third occurs to the end substitute—
      “(a) the prohibited goods included indecent photographs or pseudo-photographs of persons under 16 and the offender—
         (i) was 18 or over, or
         (ii) is or has been sentenced in respect of the offence to imprisonment for a term of at least 12 months, or
      (b) in imposing sentence or otherwise disposing of the case, the court determines that it is appropriate that the offender be regarded, for the purposes of Part 2 of this Act, as a person who has committed an offence under this paragraph.”.
   (b) in paragraph 97(b), for “and (8)” substitute “and (8) to (10)”.

2880
34 Extreme pornography

(1) In section 51 of the 1982 Act (obscene material)—

   (a) for subsection (3) substitute—

   “(3) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable—

   (a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both, or

   (b) on conviction on indictment—

       (i) in a case where the obscene material is or includes an extreme pornographic image, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding 5 years or to a fine or to both, or

       (ii) in any other case, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding 3 years or to a fine or to both.”, and

   (b) in subsection (8)—

       (i) before the definition of “material” insert—

         “‘extreme pornographic image’ is to be construed in accordance with section 51A;”’, and

       (ii) the definition of “prescribed sum” is repealed.

(2) After section 51 of that Act insert—

“51A Extreme pornography

(1) A person who is in possession of an extreme pornographic image is guilty of an offence under this section.

(2) An extreme pornographic image is an image which is all of the following—

     (a) obscene,

     (b) pornographic,

     (c) extreme.

(3) An image is pornographic if it is of such a nature that it must reasonably be assumed to have been made solely or principally for the purpose of sexual arousal.

(4) Where (as found in the person’s possession) an image forms part of a series of images, the question of whether the image is pornographic is to be determined by reference to—

     (a) the image itself, and

     (b) where the series of images is such as to be capable of providing a context for the image, its context within the series of images, and reference may also be had to any sounds accompanying the image or the series of images.

(5) So, for example, where—

     (a) an image forms an integral part of a narrative constituted by a series of images, and
(b) having regard to those images as a whole, they are not of such a nature that they must reasonably be assumed to have been made solely or principally for the purpose of sexual arousal, the image may, by virtue of being part of that narrative, be found not to be pornographic (even if it may have been found to be pornographic where taken by itself).

(6) An image is extreme if it depicts, in an explicit and realistic way any of the following—

(a) an act which takes or threatens a person’s life,

(b) an act which results, or is likely to result, in a person’s severe injury,

(c) rape or other non-consensual penetrative sexual activity,

(d) sexual activity involving (directly or indirectly) a human corpse,

(e) an act which involves sexual activity between a person and an animal (or the carcase of an animal).

(7) In determining whether (as found in the person’s possession) an image depicts an act mentioned in subsection (6), reference may be had to—

(a) how the image is or was described (whether the description is part of the image itself or otherwise),

(b) any sounds accompanying the image,

(c) where the image forms an integral part of a narrative constituted by a series of images—

(i) any sounds accompanying the series of images,

(ii) the context provided by that narrative.

(8) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable—

(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both,

(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a period not exceeding 3 years or to a fine or to both.

(9) In this section, an “image” is—

(a) a moving or still image (made by any means), or

(b) data (stored by any means) which is capable of conversion into such an image.

51B Extreme pornography: excluded images

(1) An offence is not committed under section 51A if the image is an excluded image.

(2) An “excluded image” is an image which is all or part of a classified work.

(3) An image is not an excluded image where—

(a) it has been extracted from a classified work, and
(b) it must be reasonably be assumed to have been extracted (whether with or without other images) from the work solely or principally for the purpose of sexual arousal.

(4) In determining whether (as found in the person’s possession) the image was extracted from the work for the purpose mentioned in subsection (3)(b), reference may be had to—

(a) how the image was stored,
(b) how the image is or was described (whether the description is part of the image itself or otherwise),
(c) any sounds accompanying the image,
(d) where the image forms an integral part of a narrative constituted by a series of images—
   (i) any sounds accompanying the series of images,
   (ii) the context provided by that narrative.

(5) In this section—

“classified work” means a video work in respect of which a classification certificate has been issued by a designated authority,

“classification certificate” and “video work” have the same meanings as in the Video Recordings Act 1984 (c.39),

“designated authority” means an authority which has been designated by the Secretary of State under section 4 of that Act,

“extract” includes an extract of a single image,

“image” is to be construed in accordance with section 51A.

51C Extreme pornography: defences

(1) Where a person (“A”) is charged with an offence under section 51A, it is a defence for A to prove one or more of the matters mentioned in subsection (2).

(2) The matters are—

(a) that A had a legitimate reason for being in possession of the image concerned,
(b) that A had not seen the image concerned and did not know, nor had any cause to suspect, it to be an extreme pornographic image,
(c) that A—
   (i) was sent the image concerned without any prior request having been made by or on behalf of A, and
   (ii) did not keep it for an unreasonable time.

(3) Where A is charged with an offence under section 51A, it is a defence for A to prove that—

(a) A directly participated in the act depicted, and
(b) subsection (4) applies.

(4) This subsection applies—
(a) in the case of an image which depicts an act described in subsection (6)(a) of that section, if the act depicted did not actually take or threaten a person’s life,

(b) in the case of an image which depicts an act described in subsection (6)(b) of that section, if the act depicted did not actually result in (nor was it actually likely to result in) a person’s severe injury,

(c) in the case of an image which depicts an act described in subsection (6)(c) of that section, if the act depicted did not actually involve non-consensual activity,

(d) in the case of an image which depicts an act described in subsection (6)(d) of that section, if what is depicted as a human corpse was not in fact a corpse,

(e) in the case of an image which depicts an act described in subsection (6)(e) of that section, if what is depicted as an animal (or the carcase of an animal) was not in fact an animal (or a carcase).

(5) The defence under subsection (3) is not available if A shows, gives or offers for sale the image to any person who was not also a direct participant in the act depicted.

(6) In this section “image” and “extreme pornographic image” are to be construed in accordance with section 51A.

(3) In Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) (sexual offences for the purposes of Part 2 of that Act), after paragraph 44 insert—

“44A An offence under section 51A of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45) (possession of extreme pornography) if—

(a) the offender—

(i) was 18 or over, and

(ii) is or has been sentenced in respect of the offence to imprisonment for a term of more than 12 months, and

(b) in imposing sentence, the court determines that it is appropriate that Part 2 of this Act should apply in relation to the offender.”.

34A Voyeurism: additional forms of conduct

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 9 (voyeurism)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A—

(a) without another person (“B”) consenting, and

(b) without any reasonable belief that B consents, operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear) or the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks, in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A—

(a) without another person (“B”) consenting, and

(b) without any reasonable belief that B consents, records an image beneath B’s clothing of B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear) or the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks, in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and

(ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—

“(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”, and

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”.

(3) In section 10(2) (interpretation of section 9), after “section 9(3)” insert “and (4A)”.

(4) In section 26 (voyeurism towards a young child)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A records an image beneath B’s clothing of—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and

(ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—

“(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”,

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”,
(d) in subsection (8)—
   (i) after “section 9(3)” insert “, (4A)”, and
   (ii) after “subsections (3)” insert “, (4A)”.

(5) In section 36 (voyeurism towards an older child)—
   (a) after subsection (4), insert—
      “(4A) The fourth thing is that A operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe—
      (a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or
      (b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,
      in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A records an image beneath B’s clothing of—
   (a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or
   (b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,
   in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—
   (i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and
   (ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—
      “(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”,

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”, and

(d) in subsection (8)—
   (i) after “section 9(3)” insert “, (4A)”, and
   (ii) after “subsections (3)” insert “, (4A)”.

34B Sexual offences: defences in relation to offences against older children
In section 39 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) (defences in relation to offences against older children), in subsection (4)(c), after “section 30(2)(d)” insert “or (e)”.

34C Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution
(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.
(2) In section 11 (trading in prostitution and brothel-keeping)—
(a) in subsection (1), for the words from “liable” to the end substitute “guilty of an offence and liable to the penalties set out in subsection (1A)”,

(b) after that subsection insert—

“(1A) A person—

(a) guilty of the offence set out in subsection (1)(a) is liable—

(i) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(ii) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,

(b) guilty of the offence set out in subsection (1)(b) is liable—

(i) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years,

(ii) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months.”.

(c) in subsection (4), for “subsection (1)” substitute “subsection (1A)(a)”, and

(d) for subsection (6) substitute—

“(6) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (5) is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.”.

(3) In section 13(9) (living on earnings of another from male prostitution), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—

“(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.”.

People trafficking

(1) In section 22 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (traffic in prostitution etc.)—

(a) in subsection (1)(a)—

(i) after “arrival in” insert “or the entry into”,

(ii) after “such arrival” insert “or entry”,

(aa) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) A person to whom subsection (6) applies commits an offence if the person arranges or facilitates—

People trafficking
(a) the arrival in or the entry into a country (other than the United Kingdom), or travel there (whether or not following such arrival or entry) by, an individual and—

   (i) intends to exercise control over prostitution by the individual or to involve the individual in the making or production of obscene or indecent material; or

   (ii) believes that another person is likely to exercise such control or so to involve the individual, there or elsewhere; or

(b) the departure from a country (other than the United Kingdom) of an individual and—

   (i) intends to exercise such control or so to involve the individual; or

   (ii) believes that another person is likely to exercise such control or so to involve the individual, outwith the country.”,

(ab) in subsection (2), for “subsection (1)” substitute “subsections (1) and (1A)”,

(b) for subsection (4) substitute—

“(4) Subsections (1) and (1A) apply to anything done in or outwith the United Kingdom.”,

(c) for subsection (5) substitute—

“(5) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence to which this section applies—

   (a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or

   (b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine,

as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).”, and

(d) in subsection (6)—

   (i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (e) is repealed, and

   (ii) after paragraph (f) insert—

   “(g) a person who at the time of the offence was habitually resident in Scotland, and

   (h) a body incorporated under the law of a part of the United Kingdom.”.

(2) In section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation)—

   (a) in subsection (1), after “arrival in” insert “or the entry into”,

   (b) in subsection (2), the words from “in” where it first occurs to “committed” are repealed,

   (c) after subsection (3) insert—

   “(3A) A person to whom section 5(2) applies commits an offence if—
Part 2—Criminal law

(a) in relation to an individual (the “passenger”), he arranges or facilitates—
   (i) the arrival in or the entry into a country other than the United Kingdom of the passenger,
   (ii) travel by the passenger within a country other than the United Kingdom,
   (iii) the departure of the passenger from a country other than the United Kingdom, and

(b) he—
   (i) intends to exploit the passenger, or
   (ii) believes that another person is likely to exploit the passenger,
   (wherever the exploitation is to occur).”,

(d) in subsection (4)—
   (i) in paragraph (b), the words from “as a result” to “Act 2004,” become sub-paragraph (i),
   (ii) immediately following that sub-paragraph insert “or
   (ii) which, were it done in Scotland, would constitute an offence mentioned in sub-paragraph (i),”,
   (iii) after paragraph (b) insert—“(ba) he is encouraged, required or expected to do anything in connection with the removal of any part of a human body—
   (i) as a result of which he or another person would commit an offence under the law of Scotland (other than an offence mentioned in paragraph (b)(i)), or (ii) which, were it done in Scotland, would constitute such an offence,”, and

   (iv) for paragraph (d) substitute—
   “(d) another person uses or attempts to use him for any purpose within sub-paragraph (i), (ii) or (iii) of paragraph (c), having chosen him for that purpose on the grounds that—
   (i) he is mentally or physically ill or disabled, he is young, or he has a family relationship with a person, and
   (ii) a person without the illness, disability, youth or family relationship would be likely to refuse to be used for that purpose.”.

(3) In section 5 of that Act—

(a) in subsection (1), for the words from “(3)” to the end substitute “(3A) of section 4 apply to anything done in or outwith the United Kingdom.”,

(b) in subsection (2)—
   (i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (e) is repealed, and
   (ii) after paragraph (f) insert—
   “(g) a person who at the time of the offence was habitually resident in Scotland, and
(h) a body incorporated under the law of a part of the United Kingdom.

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence to which section 4 applies—

(a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or

(b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine, as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).

(2B) In subsection (2A), “sheriff court district” is to be construed in accordance with section 307(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (interpretation).”.

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour

35A Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if—

(a) A holds another person in slavery or servitude and the circumstances are such that A knows or ought to know that the person is so held, or

(b) A requires another person to perform forced or compulsory labour and the circumstances are such that A knows or ought to know that the person is being required to perform such labour.

(2) In subsection (1) the references to holding a person in slavery or servitude or requiring a person to perform forced or compulsory labour are to be construed in accordance with Article 4 of the Human Rights Convention (which prohibits a person from being held in slavery or servitude or being required to perform forced or compulsory labour).

(3) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years, or to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.

(4) In this section “Human Rights Convention” means the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms agreed by the Council of Europe at Rome on 4 November 1950.

Fraud and embezzlement

36 Alternative charges for fraud and embezzlement

In Schedule 3 to the 1995 Act (indictments and complaints), after paragraph 8(3) insert—

“(3A) Under an indictment or a complaint for breach of trust and embezzlement, an accused may be convicted of falsehood, fraud and wilful imposition."
(3B) Under an indictment or a complaint for falsehood, fraud and wilful imposition, an accused may be convicted of breach of trust and embezzlement.

36A Articles for use in fraud

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if A has in A’s possession or under A’s control an article for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.

(2) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—
   (a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,
   (b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years or to a fine, or to both.

(3) A person commits an offence if the person makes, adapts, supplies or offers to supply an article—
   (a) knowing that the article is designed or adapted for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud, or
   (b) intending the article to be used in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.

(4) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable—
   (a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,
   (b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 10 years or to a fine, or to both.

(5) In this section, “article” includes a program or data held in electronic form.

Conspiracy

37 Conspiracy to commit offences outwith Scotland

(1) The title of section 11A of the 1995 Act becomes “Conspiracy to commit offences outwith Scotland”.

(2) In that section—
   (a) in subsection (1), for “in a country or territory outside the United Kingdom” substitute “outwith Scotland”,
   (b) in subsection (3)—
      (i) for “the law in force in the country or territory where the act or other event was intended to take place” substitute “the relevant law”, and
      (ii) for “the law in force in the country or territory” where it second occurs substitute “that law”, and
   (c) after subsection (3) insert—
      “(3A) In subsection (3) above, “the relevant law” is—
      (a) if the act or event was intended to take place in another part of the United Kingdom, the law in force in that part,
(b) if the act or event was intended to take place in a country or territory outwith the United Kingdom, the law in force in that country or territory.”.

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making

37A Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making

The following offences under the common law of Scotland are abolished—

(a) the offence of sedition,

(b) the offence of leasing-making.

PART 3

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

Children

38 Prosecution of children

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 41 insert—

“41A Prosecution of children under 12

(1) A child under the age of 12 years may not be prosecuted for an offence.

(2) A person aged 12 years or more may not be prosecuted for an offence which was committed at a time when the person was under the age of 12 years.”.

(3) In section 42 (prosecution of children), in subsection (1)—

(a) for “No child under the age of 16 years shall” substitute “A child aged 12 years or more but under 16 years may not”,

(b) for “his instance” substitute “the instance of the Lord Advocate”, and

(c) for “a child under the age of 16 years” substitute “such a child”.

(4) In section 234AA (antisocial behaviour order), in subsection (2), paragraph (b) is repealed.

Offences: liability of partners

39 Offences: liability of partners

(1) A partner of a partnership (other than a limited liability partnership) is guilty of a corporate offence where—

(a) the partnership is guilty of the corporate offence, and

(b) it is proved that the corporate offence committed by the partnership—

(i) was committed with the consent or connivance of the partner (whether alone or among others), or

(ii) was attributable to the neglect of the partner (whether alone or among others).
(2) In subsection (1), a “corporate offence” is an offence in relation to which an enactment has the effect that where—
   (a) a body corporate is guilty of the offence, and
   (b) it is proved that the offence—
      (i) was committed with the consent or connivance of a director (whether alone or among others), or
      (ii) was attributable to the neglect of a director (whether alone or among others), the director (as well as the body corporate) is guilty of the offence.

(2A) In subsection (1), the references to a partner of a partnership include references to a person purporting to act as a partner of the partnership.

(3) Subsection (1) does not apply in relation to a corporate offence if an enactment (other than subsection (1)) makes provision in relation to the offence having the same effect as that subsection.

Witness statements

40 Witness statements

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) in the course of a criminal investigation, a witness makes a statement in relation to the matter to which the investigation relates,
   (b) the statement is contained in a document, and
   (c) the witness is likely to be cited to give evidence in criminal proceedings arising from the matter.

(2) Before the witness gives evidence in the criminal proceedings, the prosecutor may—
   (a) give the witness a copy of the statement, or
   (b) make the statement available for inspection by the witness at a reasonable time and in a reasonable place.

(3) Section 262 of the 1995 Act (interpretation of certain expressions for purposes of sections 259 to 261A of that Act) applies for the purposes of this section as it applies for the purposes of section 261A of that Act except that for the purposes of this section “statement” does not include a victim statement.

Police liberation

41 Breach of undertaking

After section 22 of the 1995 Act insert—

“22ZA Offences where undertaking breached

(1) A person who without reasonable excuse breaches an undertaking given by the person under section 22—
   (a) by reason of failing to appear at court as required under subsection (1C)(a) of section 22, or
(b) by reason of failing to comply with a condition imposed under subsection (1D) of that section, is guilty of an offence.

(2) A person who is guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to—

(a) a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale, and

(b) imprisonment for a period—

(i) where conviction is in the JP court, not exceeding 60 days,

(ii) where conviction is in the sheriff court, not exceeding 12 months.

(3) Despite subsection (1)(b), where (and to the extent that) the person breaches the undertaking by reason of committing an offence while subject to the undertaking—

(a) the person is not guilty of an offence under that subsection, and

(b) subsection (4) applies instead.

(4) The court, in determining the sentence for the subsequent offence, must have regard to—

(a) the fact that the subsequent offence was committed in breach of the undertaking,

(b) the number of undertakings to which the person was subject when that offence was committed,

(c) any previous conviction of the person of an offence under subsection (1)(b),

(d) the extent to which the sentence or disposal in respect of any previous conviction differed, by virtue of this subsection, from that which the court would have imposed but for this subsection.

(4A) The reference in subsection (4)(c) to any previous conviction of an offence under subsection (1)(b) includes any previous conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to an offence under subsection (1)(b).

(4B) The references in subsection (4)(d) to subsection (4) are to be read, in relation to a previous conviction by a court referred to in subsection (4A), as references to any provision that is equivalent to subsection (4).

(4C) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (4A) or (4B) is for the court to determine.

(5) Subsections (3)(b) and (4) apply only if the fact that the subsequent offence was committed while the person was subject to an undertaking is specified in the complaint or indictment.

(6) In this section and section 22ZB, “the subsequent offence” is the offence committed by a person while the person is subject to an undertaking.
22ZB  Evidential and procedural provision

(1) In any proceedings in relation to an offence under section 22ZA(1), the fact that a person—

(a) breached an undertaking given by the person under section 22 by reason of failing to appear at court as required under subsection (1C)(a) of that section, or

(b) was subject to any particular condition imposed under subsection (1D) of that section, is, unless challenged by preliminary objection before the person’s plea is recorded, to be held as admitted.

(2) In any proceedings in relation to an offence under section 22ZA(1) or (as the case may be) the subsequent offence—

(a) something in writing, purporting to be an undertaking given by a person under section 22 (and bearing to be signed and certified), is sufficient evidence of the terms of the undertaking so given,

(b) a document purporting to be a notice (or copy of a notice) effected under subsection (1F) of that section is sufficient evidence of the terms of the notice,

(c) an undertaking whose terms are modified under paragraph (b) of that subsection is to be regarded as if given in the terms as so modified.

(3) The fact that the subsequent offence was committed while the person was subject to an undertaking is to be held as admitted, unless challenged—

(a) in summary proceedings, by preliminary objection before the person’s plea is recorded, or

(b) in the case of proceedings on indictment, by giving notice of a preliminary objection in accordance with section 71(2) or 72(6)(b)(i) of this Act.

(4) Where the maximum penalty in respect of the subsequent offence is specified by (or by virtue of) any enactment, that maximum penalty is, for the purposes of the court’s determination of the appropriate sentence or disposal in respect of that offence, increased—

(a) where it is a fine, by the amount equivalent to level 3 on the standard scale, and

(b) where it is a period of imprisonment—

(i) as respects conviction in the JP court, by 60 days,

(ii) as respects conviction in the sheriff court or the High Court, by 6 months, even if the maximum penalty as so increased exceeds the penalty which it would otherwise be competent for the court to impose.

(5) A penalty under section 22ZA(2) may be imposed in addition to any other penalty which it is competent for the court to impose even if the total of penalties imposed may exceed the maximum penalty which it is competent to impose in respect of the original offence.
(6) The reference in subsection (5) to a penalty being imposed in addition to another penalty means, in the case of sentences of imprisonment or detention—

(a) where the sentences are imposed at the same time (whether or not in relation to the same complaint), framing the sentences so that they have effect consecutively,

(b) where the sentences are imposed at different times, framing the sentence imposed later so that (if the earlier sentence has not been served) the later sentence has effect consecutive to the earlier sentence.

(7) Subsection (6)(b) is subject to section 204A of this Act.

(8) The court must state—

(a) where the sentence or disposal in respect of the subsequent offence is different from that which the court would have imposed but for section 22ZA(4), the extent of and the reasons for that difference, or

(b) otherwise, the reasons for there being no such difference.

(9) A court which finds a person guilty of an offence under section 22ZA(1) may remit that person for sentence in respect of that offence to any court which is considering the original offence.

(10) At any time before the trial of an accused in summary proceedings for the original offence, it is competent to amend the complaint to include an additional charge of an offence under section 22ZA(1).

(11) In this section, “the original offence” is the offence in relation to which an undertaking is given.”.

Grant of warrants

41A Grant of warrants for execution by constables and police members of SCDEA

(1) A sheriff or justice of the peace does not lack power or jurisdiction to grant a warrant for execution by a person mentioned in subsection (2) solely because the person is not a constable of a police force for a police area lying wholly or partly in the sheriff’s or justice’s sheriffdom.

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—

(a) a constable,

(b) a police member of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency.

Bail

42 Bail review applications

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 30 (bail review)—

(a) for subsection (2A) substitute—

“(2A) On receipt of an application under subsection (2), the court must—

(a) intimate the application to the prosecutor, and
(b) before determining the application, give the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard.

(2AA) Despite subsection (2A)(b), the court may grant the application without having heard the prosecutor if the prosecutor consents.”; and

(b) in subsection (2C), in paragraph (b), for “heard” substitute “determined”.

(3) In section 31 (bail review on prosecutor’s application)—

(a) after subsection (2), insert—

“(2ZA) Despite subsection (2)(b), the court may grant the application without fixing a hearing if the person granted bail consents.”; and

(b) in subsection (3), the word “hearing” is repealed.

43 Bail condition for identification procedures etc.

In section 24 of the 1995 Act (bail and bail conditions)—

(a) in paragraph (b) of subsection (4), sub-paragraph (ii) and the word “and” immediately preceding it are repealed,

(b) in subsection (5), after paragraph (ca) insert—

“(cb) whenever reasonably instructed by a constable to do so—

(i) participates in an identification parade or other identification procedure; and

(ii) allows any print, impression or sample to be taken from the accused;”.

43A Bail conditions: remote monitoring requirements

Sections 24A to 24E of the 1995 Act (bail conditions: remote monitoring) are repealed.

Prosecution on indictment

44 Prosecution on indictment: Scottish Law Officers

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 64 (prosecution on indictment), in subsection (1), for “in name” substitute “at the instance”.

(2A) The title of section 287 becomes “Demission from office of Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland”.

(3) In that section—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) for “by a Lord Advocate” substitute “at the instance of Her Majesty’s Advocate”,

(ii) for “his” where it first occurs substitute “the holder of the office of Lord Advocate”, and

(iii) after “successor” insert “or the Solicitor General”,

(b) in subsection (2)—
(i) for “in name of” substitute “at the instance of Her Majesty’s Advocate or”, and
(ii) the words “then in office” are repealed,
(c) after subsection (2), insert—
“(2A) Any such indictments in proceedings at the instance of the Solicitor General may be signed by the Solicitor General.

(2AA) All indictments which have been raised at the instance of the Solicitor General shall remain effective notwithstanding the holder of the office of Solicitor General subsequently having died or demitted office and may be taken up and proceeded with by his successor or the Lord Advocate.

(2B) Subsection (2C) applies during any period when the offices of Lord Advocate and Solicitor General are both vacant.

(2C) It is lawful to indict accused persons at the instance of Her Majesty’s Advocate.”, and
(d) in subsection (4)—
(i) after “Advocate” insert “or Solicitor General”,
(ii) in paragraph (a), after “subsection (1)” insert “or (2AA)”,
(iii) after that paragraph, insert—
“(c) by virtue of subsection (2C) above, is raised at the instance of Her Majesty’s Advocate”.

(4) In Schedule 2, the words “A.F.R. (name of Lord Advocate),” are repealed.

Transfer of justice of the peace court cases

After section 137C of the 1995 Act insert—

“137CA Transfer of JP court proceedings within sheriffdom

(1) Subsection (2) applies—

(a) where the accused person has been cited in summary proceedings to attend a diet of a JP court, or
(b) if the accused person has not been cited to such a diet, where summary proceedings against the accused have been commenced in a JP court.

(2) The prosecutor may apply to a justice for an order for the transfer of the proceedings to another JP court in the sheriffdom (and for adjournment to a diet of that court).

(3) On an application under subsection (2), the justice may make the order sought.

(4) In this section and sections 137CB and 137CC, “justice” does not include the sheriff.
137CB Transfer of JP court proceedings outwith sheriffdom

(1) Subsection (2) applies where the clerk of a JP court informs the prosecutor that, because of exceptional circumstances which could not reasonably have been foreseen, it is not practicable for the JP court or any other JP court in the sheriffdom to proceed with some or all of the summary cases due to call at a diet.

(2) The prosecutor shall as soon as practicable apply to the sheriff principal for an order for the transfer of the proceedings to a JP court in another sheriffdom (and for adjournment to a diet of that court).

(3) Subsection (4) applies where—

(a) either—

(i) the accused person has been cited in summary proceedings to attend a diet of a JP court, or

(ii) if the accused person has not been cited to such a diet, summary proceedings against the accused have been commenced in a JP court, and

(b) there are also summary proceedings against the accused person in a JP court in another sheriffdom.

(4) The prosecutor may apply to a justice for an order for the transfer of the proceedings to a JP court in the other sheriffdom (and for adjournment to a diet of that court).

(5) Subsection (6) applies where—

(a) the prosecutor intends to take summary proceedings against an accused person in a JP court, and

(b) there are also summary proceedings against the accused person in a JP court in another sheriffdom.

(6) The prosecutor may apply to a justice for an order for authority for the proceedings to be taken at a JP court in the other sheriffdom.

(7) On an application under subsection (2), the sheriff principal may make the order sought with the consent of the sheriff principal of the other sheriffdom.

(8) On an application under subsection (4) or (6), the justice is to make the order sought if—

(a) the justice considers that it would be expedient for the different cases involved to be dealt with by the same court, and

(b) a justice of the other sheriffdom consents.

(9) On the application of the prosecutor, the sheriff principal who has made an order under subsection (7) may, with the consent of the sheriff principal of the other sheriffdom—

(a) revoke the order, or

(b) vary it so as to restrict its effect.

(10) On the application of the prosecutor, the justice who has made an order under subsection (8) (or another justice of the same sheriffdom) may, with the consent of a justice of the other sheriffdom—
(a) revoke the order, or
(b) vary it so as to restrict its effect.

137CC Custody cases: initiating JP court proceedings outwith sheriffdom

(1) Subsection (2) applies where the prosecutor believes—

(a) that, because of exceptional circumstances (and without an order under subsection (3)), it is likely that there would be an unusually high number of accused persons appearing from custody for the first calling of cases in summary prosecutions in the JP courts in the sheriffdom, and
(b) that it would not be practicable for those courts to deal with all the cases involved.

(2) The prosecutor may apply to the sheriff principal for an order authorising summary proceedings against some or all of the accused persons to be—

(a) taken at a JP court in another sheriffdom, and
(b) maintained—

(i) at that JP court, or
(ii) at any of the JP courts referred to in subsection (1) as may at the first calling of the case be appointed for further proceedings.

(3) On an application under subsection (2), the sheriff principal may make the order sought with the consent of the sheriff principal of the other sheriffdom.

(4) An order under subsection (3) may be made by reference to a particular period or particular circumstances.”.

Additions to complaint

46 Additional charge where bail etc. breached

(1) In section 27 of the 1995 Act (breach of bail conditions: offences), after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) At any time before the trial of an accused in summary proceedings for the original offence, it is competent to amend the complaint to include an additional charge of an offence under this section.”.

(2) In section 150 of that Act (failure of accused to appear), for subsection (10) substitute—

“(10) At any time before the trial in the prosecution in which the failure to appear occurred, it is competent to amend the complaint to include an additional charge of an offence under subsection (8).”.

Dockets and charges in sex cases

46A Dockets and charges in sex cases

After section 288B of the 1995 Act insert—
“Dockets and charges in sex cases

288BA Dockets for charges of sexual offences

(1) An indictment or a complaint may include a docket which specifies any act or omission that is connected with a sexual offence charged in the indictment or complaint.

(2) Here, an act or omission is connected with such an offence charged if it—

(a) is specifiable by way of reference to a sexual offence, and

(b) relates to—

(i) the same event as the offence charged, or

(ii) a series of events of which that offence is also part.

(3) The docket is to be in the form of a note apart from the offence charged.

(4) It does not matter whether the act or omission, if it were instead charged as an offence, could not competently be dealt with by the court (including as particularly constituted) in which the indictment or complaint is proceeding.

(5) Where under subsection (1) a docket is included in an indictment or a complaint, it is to be presumed that—

(a) the accused person has been given fair notice of the prosecutor’s intention to lead evidence of the act or omission specified in the docket, and

(b) evidence of the act or omission is admissible as relevant.

(6) The references in this section to a sexual offence are to—

(a) an offence under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009,

(b) any other offence involving a significant sexual element.

288BB Mixed charges for sexual offences

(1) An indictment or a complaint may include a charge that is framed as mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) (or both).

(2) That is, framed so as to comprise (in a combined form) the specification of more than one sexual offence.

(3) That is, framed so as to—

(a) specify, in addition to a sexual offence, any other act or omission, and

(b) do so in any manner except by way of reference to a statutory offence.

(4) Where a charge in an indictment or a complaint is framed as mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) (or both), the charge is to be regarded as being a single yet cumulative charge.

(5) The references in this section to a sexual offence are to an offence under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009.”.
Remand and committal of children

47 Remand and committal of children and young persons

(1) Section 51 of the 1995 Act (remand and committal of children and young persons) is amended in accordance with subsections (2) and (3).

(2) The following provisions are repealed—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) in paragraph (a) the words from “but” to “applies”, and

(ii) paragraph (bb),

(b) in subsection (2A), the words “Subject to subsection (4) below”,

(c) subsections (3) and (4), and

(d) in subsection (4A), the words “or subsection (4) above”.

(3) In subsection (5), for “(1)(aa), (b)(ii), (bb)(ii) or (3)(b)” substitute “(1)(aa) or (b)(ii)”.

(4) In section 23 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (remand and committal of children and young persons), subsections (6) and (7) are repealed.

Prosecution of organisations

48 Meaning of “organisation”

In section 307(1) of the 1995 Act (interpretation), after the definition of “order for lifelong restriction”, insert—

““organisation” means—

(a) a body corporate;

(b) an unincorporated association;

(c) a partnership;

(d) a body of trustees;

(e) a government department;

(f) a part of the Scottish Administration;

(g) any other entity which is not an individual;”.

49 Proceedings on indictment against organisations

(1) The title of section 70 of the 1995 Act (proceedings against bodies corporate) is amended by substituting “organisations” for “bodies corporate”.

(2) Section 70 of that Act is amended as follows.

(3) In subsection (1), for “a body corporate” substitute “an organisation”.

(4) For subsection (2) substitute—

“(2) The indictment may be served by delivery of a copy of the indictment together with notice to appear at—

(a) in the case of a body of trustees—

(i) the dwelling-house or place of business of any of the trustees, or
(ii) if the solicitor of the body of trustees is known, the place of business of the solicitor,

(b) in the case of any other organisation, the registered office or, if there is no registered office or the registered office is not in the United Kingdom, at the principal place of business in the United Kingdom of the organisation.”.

(5) In subsection (3)—

(a) for “the registered office or principal place of business of the body corporate” substitute “any place”, and

(b) for “the registered office or place of business” substitute “that place”.

(6) In subsection (4)—

(a) for “A body corporate” substitute “An organisation”, and

(b) the words “of the body corporate” are repealed.

(7) In subsection (5), for “body corporate” in both places that expression occurs substitute “organisation”.

(8) In subsection (5A)(a), for “body corporate” substitute “organisation”. and

(9) In subsection (6)—

(a) for “a body corporate” substitute “an organisation”, and

(b) for “the body corporate” substitute “the organisation”.

(10) In subsection (7), for “a body corporate” substitute “an organisation”.

(11) In subsection (8), for paragraph (c) substitute—

“(ba) in the case of a partnership (other than a limited liability partnership), a partner or other person in charge, or locally in charge, of the partnership’s affairs;

(bb) in the case of an unincorporated association, the secretary or other person in charge, or locally in charge, of the association’s affairs;

(c) in the case of any other organisation, an employee, officer or official of the organisation duly appointed by it for the purposes of the proceedings.”.

(12) In subsection (9), after paragraph (b) insert—

“(c) in the case of a partnership (other than a limited liability partnership), purporting to be signed by a partner;

(d) in the case of an unincorporated association, purporting to be signed by an officer of the association;

(e) in the case of a government department or a part of the Scottish Administration, purporting to be signed by a senior officer in the department or part.”.

Prosecution of organisations by summary procedure

(1) Section 143 of 1995 Act (prosecution of companies etc.) is amended as follows.
(2) In subsection (1), for “a partnership, association, body corporate or body of trustees” substitute “an organisation”.

(3) In subsection (2), for “partnership, association, body corporate or body of trustees in their” substitute “organisation in its”.

(4) In subsection (4), for “A partnership, association, body corporate or body of trustees” substitute “An organisation”.

(5) In subsection (5)(b), for “of the partnership, association, body corporate or body of trustees” substitute “, officer or official of the organisation”.

(6) In subsection (6), after paragraph (d) insert—

“(c) in the case of a government department or part of the Scottish Administration, purporting to be signed by a senior officer in the department or part,.”.

(7) In subsection (7)—

(a) for “a partnership, association, body corporate or body of trustees” substitute “an organisation”,

(b) for “partnership, association, body corporate or (as the case may be) body of trustees” substitute “organisation”.

51 Manner of citation of organisations in summary proceedings

In section 141 of the 1995 Act (manner of citation), in subsection (2)(b), for “a partnership, association or body corporate” substitute “an organisation other than a body of trustees”.

51A Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused in certain proceedings

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 288C (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in cases of certain sexual offences)—

(a) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) An accused charged with a sexual offence to which this section applies is prohibited from conducting his case in person at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing in the course of proceedings (other than proceedings in a JP court) in respect of the offence.

(1A) In subsection (1), “relevant hearing” means a hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence.”, and

(b) subsection (8) is repealed.

(3) In section 288D (appointment of solicitor by court in cases to which section 288C applies)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “proceedings” insert “(other than proceedings in a JP court)”,

(b) in subsection (2)(a), for sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) substitute—
“(i) the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the proceedings; or”, and

(c) in subsection (6), for the words from “of the accused’s defence” to the end substitute “referred to in subsection (2)(a) above.”.

(4) In section 288E (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in certain cases involving child witness under the age of 12)—

(a) subsection (1) is repealed,

(b) in subsection (2)(b), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) The accused is prohibited from conducting his case in person at, or for the purposes of, any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which the child witness is to give evidence.”,

(d) in subsection (4), at the end insert “and as if references to a relevant hearing were references to a hearing referred to in subsection (2A) above”,

(e) in subsection (6)—

(i) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any hearing in the course of the proceedings at, or for the purposes of, which the child witness is to give evidence may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(ii) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”, and

(f) subsection (8) is repealed.

(5) In section 288F (power to prohibit personal conduct of defence in other cases involving vulnerable witnesses)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(b) in subsection (2), for the words from “defence” to the end substitute “case in person at any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which the vulnerable witness is to give evidence.”,

(c) in subsection (3)(a), for “trial” substitute “hearing”,

(d) in subsection (4), for the words from “after” to the end substitute “in relation to a hearing after, as well as before, the hearing has commenced.”,

(e) subsection (4A) is repealed,

(f) in subsection (5), at the end insert “and as if references to a relevant hearing were references to any hearing in respect of which an order is made under this section”, and

(g) subsection (6) is repealed.
Disclosure of convictions etc.

52 Disclosure of convictions and non-court disposals

(1) After section 101 of the 1995 Act insert—

"101A Post-offence convictions etc.

(1) This section applies where an accused person is convicted of an offence ("offence O") on indictment.

(2) The court may, in deciding on the disposal of the case, have regard to—

(a) any conviction in respect of the accused which occurred on or after the date of offence O but before the date of conviction in respect of that offence,

(b) any of the alternative disposals in respect of the accused that are mentioned in subsection (3).

(3) Those alternative disposals are—

(a) a—

(i) fixed penalty under section 302(1) of this Act, or

(ii) compensation offer under section 302A(1) of this Act, that has been accepted (or deemed to have been accepted) on or after the date of offence O but before the date of conviction in respect of that offence,

(b) a work order under section 303ZA(6) of this Act that has been completed on or after the date of offence O but before the date of conviction in respect of that offence.

(4) The court may have regard to any such conviction or alternative disposal only if it is—

(a) specified in a notice laid before the court by the prosecutor, and

(b) admitted by the accused or proved by the prosecutor (on evidence adduced then or at another diet).

(5) A reference in this section to a conviction which occurred on or after the date of offence O is a reference to such a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union.”.

(2) For section 166A of that Act substitute—

"166A Post-offence convictions etc.

(1) This section applies where an accused person is convicted of an offence ("offence O") on summary complaint.

(2) The court may, in deciding on the disposal of the case, have regard to—

(a) any conviction in respect of the accused which occurred on or after the date of offence O but before the date of conviction in respect of that offence,

(b) any of the alternative disposals in respect of the accused that are mentioned in subsection (3).

(3) Those alternative disposals are—
Part 3—Criminal procedure

(a) a—

(i) fixed penalty under section 302(1) of this Act, or

(ii) compensation offer under section 302A(1) of this Act, that has been accepted (or deemed to have been accepted) on or after the date of offence O but before the date of conviction in respect of that offence,

(b) a work order under section 303ZA(6) of this Act that has been completed on or after the date of offence O but before the date of conviction in respect of that offence.

(4) The court may have regard to any such conviction or alternative disposal only if it is—

(a) specified in a notice laid before the court by the prosecutor, and

(b) admitted by the accused or proved by the prosecutor (on evidence adduced then or at another diet).

(5) A reference in this section to a conviction which occurred on or after the date of offence O is a reference to such a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union.”.

(3) In section 302 of that Act (fixed penalty: conditional offer by procurator fiscal), in subsection (2), after sub-paragraph (ii) of paragraph (e) insert—

“(iia) that the fact may be disclosed to the court also in any proceedings for an offence to which the alleged offender is, or is liable to become, subject at such time as the offer is accepted;”.

(4) In section 302A of that Act (compensation offer by procurator fiscal), in subsection (2), after sub-paragraph (ii) of paragraph (f) insert—

“(iia) that the fact may be disclosed to the court also in any proceedings for an offence to which the alleged offender is, or is liable to become, subject at such time as the offer is accepted;”.

(5) In section 303ZA of that Act (work orders), in subsection (3)—

(a) after sub-paragraph (i) of paragraph (e) insert—

“(ia) that if a work offer is not accepted, that fact may be disclosed to the court in any proceedings for the offence to which the offer relates;”,

(b) in sub-paragraph (ii) of that paragraph, for “the offer has been accepted” substitute “a resultant work order has been completed”,

(c) after sub-paragraph (ii) of that paragraph insert—

“(iia) that the fact may be disclosed to the court also in any proceedings for an offence to which the alleged offender is, or is liable to become, subject at such time as the offer is accepted;”, and

(d) in sub-paragraph (iii) of that paragraph, for “work order under subsection (6) below” substitute “resultant work order”.

2907
52A Convictions by courts in other EU member States

(1) Schedule 2A makes modifications of the 1995 Act and other enactments for the purposes of and in connection with implementing obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by order make further provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing those obligations.

(3) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—
   (a) on the Scottish Ministers,
   (b) on other persons.

(4) An order under subsection (2) may modify any enactment.

(5) In this section, the “Framework Decision” means Council Framework Decision 2008/675/JHA of 24 July 2008 on taking account of convictions in the Member States of the European Union in the course of new criminal proceedings.

Appeals: time limits

53 Time limits for lodging certain appeals

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 74 (appeals in connection with preliminary diets), in subsection (2)(b), for “2” substitute “seven”.

(3) In section 174 (appeals relating to preliminary pleas), in subsection (1), for “two” substitute “seven”.

Crown appeals

54 Submissions as to sufficiency of evidence

After section 97 of the 1995 Act insert—

“97A Submissions as to sufficiency of evidence

(1) Immediately after one or other (but not both) of the appropriate events, the accused may make either or both of the submissions mentioned in subsection (2) in relation to an offence libelled in an indictment (the “indicted offence”).

(2) The submissions are—
   (a) that the evidence is insufficient in law to justify the accused’s being convicted of the indicted offence or any other offence of which the accused could be convicted under the indictment (a “related offence”),
   (b) that there is no evidence to support some part of the circumstances set out in the indictment.

(2A) For the purposes of subsection (1), “the appropriate events” are—
   (a) the close of the whole of the evidence,
   (b) the conclusion of the prosecutor’s address to the jury on the evidence.

(4) A submission made under this section must be heard by the judge in the absence of the jury.
97B  Acquittals etc. on section 97A(2)(a) submissions

(1) This section applies where the accused makes a submission of the kind mentioned in section 97A(2)(a).

(2) If the judge is satisfied that the evidence is insufficient in law to justify the accused’s being convicted of the indicted offence, then—

(a) where the judge is satisfied that the evidence is also insufficient in law to justify the accused’s being convicted of a related offence—

(i) the judge must acquit the accused of the indicted offence, and

(ii) the trial is to proceed only in respect of any other offence libelled in the indictment,

(b) where the judge is satisfied that the evidence is sufficient in law to justify the accused’s being convicted of a related offence, the judge must direct that the indictment be amended accordingly.

(3) If the judge is not satisfied as is mentioned in subsection (2)—

(a) the judge must reject the submission, and

(b) the trial is to proceed as if the submission had not been made.

(4) The judge may make a decision under this section only after hearing both (or all) parties.

(5) An amendment made by virtue of this section must be sufficiently authenticated by the initials of the judge or the clerk of court.

(6) In this section, “indicted offence” and “related offence” have the same meanings as in section 97A.

97C  Directions etc. on section 97A(2)(b) submissions

(1) This section applies where the accused makes a submission of the kind mentioned in section 97A(2)(b).

(2) If the judge is satisfied that there is no evidence to support some part of the circumstances set out in the indictment, the judge must direct that the indictment be amended accordingly.

(3) If the judge is not satisfied as is mentioned in subsection (2)—

(a) the judge must reject the submission, and

(b) the trial is to proceed as if the submission had not been made.

(4) The judge may make a decision under this section only after hearing both (or all) parties.

(5) An amendment made by virtue of this section must be sufficiently authenticated by the initials of the judge or the clerk of court.

97D  No acquittal on “no reasonable jury” grounds

(1) A judge has no power to direct the jury to return a not guilty verdict on any charge on the ground that no reasonable jury, properly directed on the evidence, could convict on the charge.
Accordingly, no submission based on that ground or any ground of like effect is to be allowed.”.

Prosecutor’s right of appeal

After section 107 of the 1995 Act insert—

“107A Prosecutor’s right of appeal: decisions on section 97 and 97A submissions

(1) The prosecutor may appeal to the High Court against—

(a) an acquittal under section 97 or 97B(2)(a), or
(b) a direction under section 97B(2)(b) or 97C(2).

(1A) If, immediately after an acquittal under section 97 or 97B(2)(a), the prosecutor moves for the trial diet to be adjourned for no more than 2 days in order to consider whether to appeal against the acquittal under subsection (1), the court of first instance must grant the motion unless the court considers that there are no arguable grounds of appeal.

(1B) If, immediately after the giving of a direction under section 97B(2)(b) or 97C(2), the prosecutor moves for the trial diet to be adjourned for no more than 2 days in order to consider whether to appeal against the direction under subsection (1), the court of first instance must grant the motion unless the court considers that it would not be in the interests of justice to do so.

(1C) In considering whether it would be in the interests of justice to grant a motion for adjournment under subsection (1B), the court must have regard, amongst other things, to—

(a) whether, if an appeal were to be made and to be successful, continuing with the diet would have any impact on any subsequent or continued prosecution,
(b) whether there are any arguable grounds of appeal.

(1D) An appeal may not be brought under subsection (1) unless the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal—

(a) immediately after the acquittal or, as the case may be, the giving of the direction,
(b) if a motion to adjourn the trial diet under subsection (1A) or (1B) is granted, immediately upon resumption of the diet, or
(c) if such a motion is refused, immediately after the refusal.

(1E) Subsection (2) applies if—

(a) the prosecutor intimates an intention to appeal under subsection (1)(a), or
(b) the trial diet is adjourned under subsection (1A).

(2) Where this subsection applies, the court of first instance must suspend the effect of the acquittal and may—

(a) make an order under section 4(2) of the Contempt of Court Act 1981 (c.49) (which gives a court power, in some circumstances, to order that publication of certain reports be postponed) as if proceedings for the offence of which the person was acquitted were pending or imminent,
Part 3—Criminal procedure

(b) after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, order the detention of the person in custody or admit him to bail.

(3) The court may, under subsection (2)(b), order the detention of the person in custody only if the court considers that there are arguable grounds of appeal.

107B Prosecutor’s right of appeal: decisions on admissibility of evidence

(1) The prosecutor may appeal to the High Court against a finding, made after the jury is empanelled and before the close of the evidence for the prosecution, that evidence that the prosecution seeks to lead is inadmissible.

(2) The appeal may be made only with the leave of the court of first instance, granted—

(a) on the motion of the prosecutor, or

(b) on that court’s initiative.

(3) Any motion for leave to appeal must be made before the close of the case for the prosecution.

(4) In determining whether to grant leave to appeal the court must consider—

(a) whether there are arguable grounds of appeal, and

(b) what effect the finding has on the strength of the prosecutor’s case.

107C Appeals under section 107A and 107B: general provisions

(1) In an appeal brought under section 107A or 107B the High Court may review not only the acquittal, direction or finding appealed against but also any direction, finding, decision, determination or ruling in the proceedings at first instance if it has a bearing on the acquittal, direction or finding appealed against.

(2) The test to be applied by the High Court in reviewing the acquittal, direction or finding appealed against is whether it was wrong in law.

107D Expedited appeals

(1) Subsection (2) applies where—

(a) the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal under section 107A or leave to appeal is granted by the court under section 107B, and

(b) the court is able to obtain confirmation from the Keeper of the Rolls that it would be practicable for the appeal to be heard and determined during an adjournment of the trial diet.

(2) The court must inform both parties of that fact and, after hearing them, must decide whether or not the appeal is to be heard and determined during such an adjournment.

(3) An appeal brought under section 107A or 107B which is heard and determined during such an adjournment is referred to in this Act as an “expedited appeal”.

(4) If the court decides that the appeal is to be an expedited appeal the court must, pending the outcome of the appeal—
(a) adjourn the trial diet, and
(b) where the appeal is against an acquittal, suspend the effect of the acquittal.

(5) Where the court cannot obtain from the Keeper of the Rolls confirmation of the kind mentioned in subsection (1)(b), the court must inform the parties of that fact.

(6) Where the High Court in an expedited appeal determines that an acquittal of an offence libelled in the indictment was wrong in law it must quash the acquittal and direct that the trial is to proceed in respect of the offence.

107E Other appeals under section 107A: appeal against acquittal

(1) This section applies where—
(a) an appeal brought under section 107A is not an expedited appeal,
(b) the appeal is against an acquittal, and
(c) the High Court determines that the acquittal was wrong in law.

(2) The court must quash the acquittal.

(3) If the prosecutor seeks leave to bring a new prosecution charging the accused with the same offence as that libelled in the indictment, or a similar offence arising out of the same facts as the offence libelled in the indictment, the High Court must grant the prosecutor authority to do so in accordance with section 119, unless the court considers that it would be contrary to the interests of justice to do so.

(4) If—
(a) no motion is made under subsection (3), or
(b) the High Court does not grant a motion made under that subsection, the High Court must in disposing of the appeal acquit the accused of the offence libelled in the indictment.

107F Other appeals under section 107A or 107B: appeal against directions etc.

(1) This section applies where—
(a) an appeal brought under section 107A or 107B is not an expedited appeal, and
(b) the appeal is not against an acquittal.

(2) The court of first instance must desert the diet pro loco et tempore in relation to any offence to which the appeal relates.

(3) The trial is to proceed only if another offence of which the accused has not been acquitted and to which the appeal does not relate is libelled in the indictment.

(3A) However, if the prosecutor moves for the diet to be deserted pro loco et tempore in relation to such other offence, the court must grant the motion.
(4) If the prosecutor seeks leave to bring a new prosecution charging the accused with the same offence as that libelled in the indictment, or a similar offence arising out of the same facts as the offence libelled in the indictment, the High Court must grant the prosecutor authority to do so in accordance with section 119, unless the court considers that it would be contrary to the interests of justice to do so.”.

56 Power of High Court in appeal under section 107A of 1995 Act

In section 104(1) of the 1995 Act (which makes provision as regards the power of the High Court in appeals under section 106(1) or 108 of that Act), after “106(1)” insert “, 107A, 107B”.

57 Further amendment of 1995 Act

(1) In section 110(1) of the 1995 Act (note of appeal), after paragraph (b), add—

“(c) where the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal under section 107A(1), within 7 days after the acquittal or direction appealed against, the prosecutor may, except in the case of an expedited appeal, lodge such a note with the Clerk of Justiciary, who must send a copy to the judge and to the accused or to the accused’s solicitor,

(d) within 7 days after leave to appeal under section 107B(1) is granted, the prosecutor may, except in the case of an expedited appeal, lodge such a note with the Clerk of Justiciary, who must send a copy to the judge and to the accused or to the accused’s solicitor,

(e) in the case of an expedited appeal, as soon as practicable after the decision as to hearing and determining the case is made under section 107D(2), the prosecutor may—

(i) lodge such a note with the Clerk of Justiciary, and

(ii) provide a copy to the judge and to the accused or to the accused’s solicitor.”.

(2) In section 113(1) of that Act (judge’s report), after “under” insert “any of paragraphs (a) to (d) of”.

(3) After section 113 of that Act insert—

“113A Judge’s observations in expedited appeal

(1) On receiving a note of appeal given under section 110(1)(e), the judge who presided at the trial may give the Clerk of Justiciary any written observations that the judge thinks fit on—

(a) the case generally,

(b) the grounds contained in the note of appeal.

(2) The High Court may hear and determine the appeal without any such written observations.

(3) If written observations are given under subsection (1), the Clerk of Justiciary must give a copy of them to—

(a) the accused or the accused’s solicitor, and
(b) the prosecutor.

(4) The written observations of the judge are available only to—

(a) the High Court,

(b) the parties, and

(c) any other person or classes of person prescribed by Act of Adjournal, in accordance with any conditions prescribed by Act of Adjournal.”.

(4) In section 119 of that Act (provision where High Court authorises new prosecution)—

(a) in each of subsections (1) and (10), after “118(1)(c)” insert “or 107E(3) or 107F(4)”,

(b) for subsection (2), substitute—

“(2) In a new prosecution under this section—

(a) where authority for the prosecution is granted under section 118(1)(c), the accused must not be charged with an offence more serious than that of which the accused was convicted in the earlier proceedings,

(b) where authority for the prosecution is granted under section 107E(3), the accused must not be charged with an offence more serious than that of which the accused was acquitted in the earlier proceedings,

(c) where authority for the prosecution is granted under section 107F(4), the accused must not be charged with an offence more serious than that originally libelled in the indictment in the earlier proceedings.”,

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) In a new prosecution under this section brought by virtue of section 107F(4), the circumstances set out in the indictment are not to be inconsistent with any direction given under section 97B(2)(b) or 97C(2) in the proceedings which gave rise to the appeal in question unless the High Court, in disposing of that appeal, determined that the direction was wrong in law.”, and

(d) in subsection (9), after “setting aside the verdict” insert “or under section 107E(3) or 107F(4) granting authority to bring a new prosecution”.

Retention and use of samples etc.

58 Retention of samples etc.

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 18 (prints, samples etc. in criminal investigations)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “section 18A” substitute “sections 18A to 18C”,

(b) in subsection (7A), for “sections 19 to 20” substitute “, subject to the modification in subsection (7AA), sections 18A to 19C”, and

(c) after subsection (7A) insert—

“(7AA) The modification is that for the purposes of section 19C as it applies in relation to relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person outwith Scotland, subsection (7A) is to be read as if in paragraph (d) the words from “created” to the end were omitted.”.
(3) In section 18A (retention of samples)—

(a) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken or provided under section 18(2), and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the condition in subsection (2) is satisfied.”,

(b) in subsection (2), after “whom” insert “the relevant physical data was taken or by whom it was provided or, as the case may be, from whom”,

(c) in subsection (3), for “sample or information” substitute “relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample”,

(c(a) after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (5), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(8B) An order under subsection (8A) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.”,

(d) in subsection (10), for “sample or information” substitute “relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample”,

(e) in subsection (11)—

(i) in paragraph (a) of the definition of “the relevant chief constable”, after “who” insert “took the relevant physical data or to whom it was provided or who”, and

(ii) in the definition of “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence”, after “have” insert “, subject to the modification in subsection (12),” , and

(f) after subsection (11) insert—

“(12) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the offence as charged in the indictment or complaint that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the person charged;”.”.

58A Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA accepted

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18AA Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA accepted

(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person under section 18(2), and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a person under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the condition in subsection (2) is satisfied.”,
where the conditions in subsection (2) are satisfied.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person while the person was under arrest or being detained in connection with the offence or offences in relation to which a relevant offer is issued to the person, and

(b) the person—

(i) accepts a relevant offer, or

(ii) in the case of a relevant offer other than one of the type mentioned in paragraph (d) of subsection (3), is deemed to accept a relevant offer.

(3) In this section “relevant offer” means—

(a) a conditional offer under section 302,

(b) a compensation offer under section 302A,

(c) a combined offer under section 302B, or

(d) a work offer under section 303ZA.

(4) Subject to subsections (6) and (7) and section 18AB(9) and (10), the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

(5) In subsection (4), “destruction date” means—

(a) in relation to a relevant offer that relates only to—

(i) a relevant sexual offence,

(ii) a relevant violent offence, or

(iii) both a relevant sexual offence and a relevant violent offence,

the date of expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued or such later date as an order under section 18AB(2) or (6) may specify,

(b) in relation to a relevant offer that relates to—

(i) an offence or offences falling within paragraph (a), and

(ii) any other offence,

the date of expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued or such later date as an order under section 18AB(2) or (6) may specify,

(c) in relation to a relevant offer that does not relate to an offence falling within paragraph (a), the date of expiry of the period of 2 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued.

(6) If a relevant offer is recalled by virtue of section 302C(5) or a decision to uphold it is quashed under section 302C(7)(a), all record of the relevant physical data, sample and information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after—

(a) the prosecutor decides not to issue a further relevant offer to the person,
(b) the prosecutor decides not to institute criminal proceedings against the person, or

c) the prosecutor institutes criminal proceedings against the person and those proceedings conclude otherwise than with a conviction or an order under section 246(3).

(7) If a relevant offer is set aside by virtue of section 303ZB, all record of the relevant physical data, sample and information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the setting aside.

(8) In this section, “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” have, subject to the modification in subsection (9), the same meanings as in section 19A(6) and include any attempt, conspiracy or incitement to commit such an offence.

(9) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the relevant offer (as defined in section 18AA(3)) relating to the offence that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the person to whom the relevant offer is issued;”.

18AB Section 18AA: extension of retention period where relevant offer relates to certain sexual or violent offences

(1) This section applies where the destruction date for relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample falls within section 18AA(5)(a) or (b).

(2) On a summary application made by the relevant chief constable within the period of 3 months before the destruction date, the sheriff may, if satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for doing so, make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(3) An application under subsection (2) may be made to any sheriff—

(a) in whose sheriffdom the appropriate person resides,

(b) in whose sheriffdom that person is believed by the applicant to be, or

(c) to whose sheriffdom the person is believed by the applicant to be intending to come.

(4) An order under subsection (2) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(5) The decision of the sheriff on an application under subsection (2) may be appealed to the sheriff principal within 21 days of the decision.

(6) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (2), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(7) An order under subsection (6) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(8) The sheriff principal’s decision on an appeal under subsection (5) is final.

(9) Section 18AA(4) does not apply where—
(a) an application under subsection (2) has been made but has not been determined,
(b) the period within which an appeal may be brought under subsection (5) against a decision to refuse an application has not elapsed, or
(c) such an appeal has been brought but has not been withdrawn or finally determined.

(10) Where—
(a) the period within which an appeal referred to in subsection (9)(b) may be brought has elapsed without such an appeal being brought,
(b) such an appeal is brought and is withdrawn or finally determined against the appellant, or
(c) an appeal brought under subsection (5) against a decision to grant an application is determined in favour of the appellant,
the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the period has elapsed, or, as the case may be, the appeal is withdrawn or determined.

(11) In this section—
“appropriate person” means the person from whom the relevant physical data was taken or by whom it was provided or from whom the sample was taken,
“destruction date” has the meaning given by section 18AA(5),
“the relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in subsection (11) of section 18A, with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the appropriate person.”.

58B Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18AC Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences

(1) This section applies to—
(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person under section 18(2), and
(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a person under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the conditions in subsection (2) are satisfied.

(2) The conditions are—
(a) the person was arrested or detained in connection with a fixed penalty offence,
(b) the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person while the person was under arrest or being detained in connection with that offence,

c) after the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person, a constable gave the person under section 129(1) of the 2004 Act—

(i) a fixed penalty notice in respect of that offence (the “main FPN”), or

(ii) the main FPN and one or more other fixed penalty notices in respect of fixed penalty offences arising out of the same circumstances as the offence to which the main FPN relates, and

d) the person, in relation to the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice of the type mentioned in paragraph (c)(ii)—

(i) pays the fixed penalty, or

(ii) pays any sum that the person is liable to pay by virtue of section 131(5) of the 2004 Act.

(3) Subject to subsections (4) and (5), the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed before the end of the period of 2 years beginning with—

(a) where subsection (2)(c)(i) applies, the day on which the main FPN is given to the person,

(b) where subsection (2)(c)(ii) applies and—

(i) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice are given to the person on the same day, that day,

(ii) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice are given to the person on different days, the later day.

(4) Where—

(a) subsection (2)(c)(i) applies, and

(b) the main FPN is revoked under section 133(1) of the 2004 Act, the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the revocation.

(5) Where—

(a) subsection (2)(c)(ii) applies, and

(b) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notices are revoked under section 133(1) of the 2004 Act, the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the revocations.

(6) In this section—

“the 2004 Act” means the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

“fixed penalty notice” has the meaning given by section 129(2) of the 2004 Act, “fixed penalty offence” has the meaning given by section 128(1) of the 2004 Act.”.

59 Retention of samples etc. from children referred to children’s hearings

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18B Retention of samples etc.: children referred to children’s hearings

(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a child under section 18(2); and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a child under section 18(6) or (6A), where the first condition, and the second, third or fourth condition, are satisfied.

(2) The first condition is that the child’s case has been referred to a children’s hearing under section 65(1) of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.36) (the “Children Act”).

(3) The second condition is that—

(a) a ground of the referral is that the child has committed an offence mentioned in subsection (6) (a “relevant offence”);

(b) both the child and the relevant person in relation to the child accept, under section 65(5) or (6) of the Children Act, the ground of referral; and

(c) no application to the sheriff under section 65(7) or (9) of that Act is made in relation to that ground.

(4) The third condition is that—

(a) a ground of the referral is that the child has committed a relevant offence;

(b) the sheriff, on an application under section 65(7) or (9) of the Children Act—

(i) deems, under section 68(8) of the Children Act; or

(ii) finds, under section 68(10) of that Act, the ground of referral to be established; and

(c) no application to the sheriff under section 85(1) of that Act is made in relation to that ground.

(5) The fourth condition is that the sheriff, on an application under section 85(1) of the Children Act—

(a) is satisfied, under section 85(6)(b) of that Act, that a ground of referral which constitutes a relevant offence is established; or

(b) finds, under section 85(7)(b) of that Act, that—

(i) a ground of referral, which was not stated in the original application under section 65(7) or (9) of that Act, is established; and
(ii) that ground constitutes a relevant offence.

(6) A relevant offence is such relevant sexual offence or relevant violent offence as the Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument prescribe.

(7) Subject to section 18C(6) and (7), the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

(8) The destruction date is—

(a) the date of expiry of the period of 3 years following—

(i) where the second condition is satisfied, the date on which the ground of referral was accepted as mentioned in that condition;

(ii) where the third condition is satisfied, the date on which the ground of referral was established as mentioned in that condition;

(iii) where the ground of referral is established as mentioned in paragraph (a) of the fourth condition, the date on which that ground was established under section 68(8) or, as the case may be, (10) of the Children Act; or

(iv) where the ground of referral is established as mentioned in paragraph (b) of the fourth condition, the date on which that ground was established as mentioned in that paragraph; or

(b) such later date as an order under section 18C(1) may specify.

(9) No statutory instrument containing an order under subsection (6) may be made unless a draft of the instrument has been laid before, and approved by resolution of, the Scottish Parliament.

(10) In this section—

“relevant person” has the same meaning as in section 93(2) of the Children Act;

“relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” have, subject to the modification in subsection (11), the same meanings as in section 19A(6) and include any attempt, conspiracy or incitement to commit such an offence.

(11) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the ground of referral relating to the offence that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the child;”.

18C Retention of samples etc. relating to children: appeals

(1) On a summary application made by the relevant chief constable within the period of 3 months before the destruction date the sheriff may, if satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for doing so, make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(2) An application under subsection (1) may be made to any sheriff—

(a) in whose sheriffdom the child mentioned in section 18B(1) resides;

(b) in whose sheriffdom that child is believed by the applicant to be; or
(c) to whose sheriffdom that child is believed by the applicant to be intending to come.

(3) An order under subsection (1) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(4) The decision of the sheriff on an application under subsection (1) may be appealed to the sheriff principal within 21 days of the decision.

(4A) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (1), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(4B) An order under subsection (4A) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(5) The sheriff principal’s decision on an appeal under subsection (4) is final.

(6) Section 18B(7) does not apply where—

(a) an application under subsection (1) has been made but has not been determined;

(b) the period within which an appeal may be brought under subsection (4) against a decision to refuse an application has not elapsed; or

(c) such an appeal has been brought but has not been withdrawn or finally determined.

(7) Where—

(a) the period within which an appeal referred to in subsection (6)(b) may be brought has elapsed without such an appeal being brought;

(b) such an appeal is brought and is withdrawn or finally determined against the appellant; or

(c) an appeal brought under subsection (4) against a decision to grant an application is determined in favour of the appellant, the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the period has elapsed or, as the case may be, the appeal is withdrawn or determined.

(8) In this section—

“destruction date” has the meaning given by section 18B(8); and “relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in subsection (11) of section 18A, with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the child referred to in section 18B(1).”.

59A Extension of section 19A of 1995 Act

In section 19A(6) of the 1995 Act (definitions of certain expressions for purposes of section 19A)—

(a) in the definition of “relevant sexual offence”, for paragraph (g) substitute—
“(g) public indecency if the court, in imposing sentence or otherwise disposing of the case, determined for the purposes of paragraph 60 of Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) that there was a significant sexual aspect to the offender’s behaviour in committing the offence;”, and

(b) in paragraph (h) of the definition of “relevant violent offence”, after subparagraph (iv), insert—

“(v) section 47(1) (possession of offensive weapon in public place), 49(1) (possession of article with blade or point in public place), 49A(1) or (2) (possession of article with blade or point or offensive weapon on school premises) or 49C(1) (possession of offensive weapon or article with blade or point in prison) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39);”.

60 Use of samples etc.

(1) After section 19B of the 1995 Act insert—

“19C Sections 18 and 19 to 19AA: use of samples etc.

(1) Subsection (2) applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken or provided under section 18(2), 19(2)(a), 19A(2)(a) or 19AA(3)(a),

(b) a sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken under section 18(6) or (6A), 19(2)(b) or (c), 19A(2)(b) or (c) or 19AA(3)(b) or (c),

(c) relevant physical data or a sample taken from a person—

(i) by virtue of any power of search,

(ii) by virtue of any power to take possession of evidence where there is immediate danger of its being lost or destroyed, or

(iii) under the authority of a warrant,

(d) information derived from a sample falling within paragraph (c), and

(e) relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample taken from, or provided by, a person outwith Scotland which is given by any person to—

(i) a police force,

(ii) the Scottish Police Services Authority, or

(iii) a person acting on behalf of a police force.

(2) The relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample may be used—

(a) for the prevention or detection of crime, the investigation of an offence or the conduct of a prosecution, or

(b) for the identification of a deceased person or a person from whom the relevant physical data or sample came.
(2A) Subsections (2B) and (2C) apply to relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample falling within any of paragraphs (a) to (d) of subsection (1) (“relevant material”).

(2B) If the relevant material is held by a police force, the Scottish Police Services Authority or a person acting on behalf of a police force, the police force or, as the case may be, the Authority or person may give the relevant material to another person for use by that person in accordance with subsection (2).

(2C) A police force, the Scottish Police Services Authority or a person acting on behalf of a police force, may, in using the relevant material in accordance with subsection (2), check it against other relevant physical data, samples and information derived from samples received from another person.

(3) In subsection (2)—

(a) the reference to crime includes a reference to—

(i) conduct which constitutes a criminal offence or two or more criminal offences (whether under the law of a part of the United Kingdom or a country or territory outside the United Kingdom), or

(ii) conduct which is, or corresponds to, conduct which, if it all took place in any one part of the United Kingdom would constitute a criminal offence or two or more criminal offences,

(b) the reference to an investigation includes a reference to an investigation outside Scotland of a crime or suspected crime, and

(c) the reference to a prosecution includes a reference to a prosecution brought in respect of a crime in a country or territory outside Scotland.

(4) This section is without prejudice to any other power relating to the use of relevant physical data, samples or information derived from a sample.”.

(2) In section 56 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (use of samples etc. voluntarily given)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “from,” insert “or provided by”,

(b) in subsection (2), for the words from “may” where it first occurs to the end substitute “, or information derived from that sample may be held and used—

(a) for the prevention or detection of crime, the investigation of an offence or the conduct of a prosecution, or

(b) for the identification of a deceased person or a person from whom the sample or relevant physical data came.”,

(c) in subsection (3), after “information” insert “derived from a sample”,

(ca) in subsection (5)(b), the words “with all information derived from them” are repealed,

(f) in subsection (6)(a), for “it or them” substitute “the sample”,

(h) in subsection (7)(a), the words “or relevant physical data”, in the second place where they occur, are repealed, and

(i) after subsection (7) insert—

“(7A) In subsection (2)—
(a) the reference to crime includes a reference to—

(i) conduct which constitutes a criminal offence or two or more criminal offences (whether under the law of a part of the United Kingdom or a country or territory outside the United Kingdom), or

(ii) conduct which is, or corresponds to, conduct which, if it all took place in any one part of the United Kingdom would constitute a criminal offence or two or more criminal offences,

(b) the reference to an investigation includes a reference to an investigation outside the United Kingdom of a crime or suspected crime, and

(c) the reference to a prosecution includes a reference to a prosecution brought in respect of a crime in a country or territory outside the United Kingdom.”.

Referrals from the Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission

61 Referrals from Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission: grounds for appeal

In section 194D of the 1995 Act (further provisions as to references to the High Court by the Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission), after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) The grounds for an appeal arising from a reference to the High Court under section 194B of this Act must relate to one or more of the reasons for making the reference contained in the Commission’s statement of reasons.

(4B) Despite subsection (4A), the High Court may, if it considers it is in the interests of justice to do so, grant leave for the appellant to found the appeal on additional grounds.

(4C) An application by the appellant for leave under subsection (4B) must be made and intimated to the Crown Agent within 21 days after the date on which a copy of the Commission’s statement of reasons is sent under subsection (4)(b).

(4D) The High Court may, on cause shown, extend the period of 21 days mentioned in subsection (4C).

(4E) The Clerk of Justiciary must intimate to the persons mentioned in subsection (4F)—

(a) a decision under subsection (4B), and

(b) in the case of a refusal to grant leave for the appeal to be founded on additional grounds, the reasons for the decision.

(4F) Those persons are—

(a) the appellant or the appellant’s solicitor, and

(b) the Crown Agent.”.
61A Admissibility of prior statements of witnesses: abolition of competence test

(1) This section applies in relation to a prior statement made by a witness before the commencement of section 24 of the Vulnerable Witnesses (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 3) (“the 2004 Act”) (which abolishes the competence test for witnesses in criminal and civil proceedings).

(2) For the purpose of the application of subsection (2)(c) of section 260 of the 1995 Act (admissibility of prior statement depends on competence of the witness at the time of the statement) in relation to the statement, section 24 of the 2004 Act is taken to have been in force at the time the statement was made.

(3) In this section, “prior statement” has the meaning it has in section 260 of the 1995 Act.

62 Witness statements: use during trial

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 261 insert—

“Witness statements

261A Witness statements: use during trial

(1) Subsection (2) applies where—

(a) a witness is giving evidence in criminal proceedings,

(b) the witness has made a prior statement,

(c) the prosecutor has seen or has been given an opportunity to see the statement, and

(d) the accused (or a solicitor or advocate acting on behalf of the accused in the proceedings) has seen or has been given an opportunity to see the statement.

(2) The court may allow the witness to refer to the statement while the witness is giving evidence.”.

(3) In section 262 (construction of sections 259 to 261 of Act)—

(a) in the title, for “261” substitute “261A”,

(b) in each of subsections (1) to (4), for “261” substitute “261A”, and

(c) in subsection (3)—

(i) in the definition of “criminal proceedings”, after “include” insert “(other than in section 261A)”; and

(ii) in the definition of “made”, after “includes” insert “(other than in section 261A)”.

63 Spouse or civil partner of accused a compellable witness

(1) For section 264 of the 1995 Act (spouse of accused a competent witness) substitute—
264 Spouse or civil partner of accused a compellable witness

(1) The spouse or civil partner of an accused is a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution, the accused or any co-accused in the proceedings against the accused.

(2) Subsection (1) is, if the spouse or civil partner is a co-accused in the proceedings, subject to any enactment or rule of law by virtue of which an accused need not (by reason of being an accused) give evidence in the proceedings.

(3) Subsection (1) displaces any other rule of law that would (but for that subsection) prevent or restrict, by reference to the relationship, the giving of evidence by the spouse or civil partner of an accused.”.

(2) Section 130 of the Civil Partnership Act 2004 (c.33) (civil partner of accused a competent witness) is repealed.

64 Special measures for child witnesses and other vulnerable witnesses

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 271 (vulnerable witnesses: main definitions)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) for “a trial” substitute “a hearing in relevant criminal proceedings”, and

(ii) for “the trial”, wherever it occurs, substitute “the hearing”, and

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) the definition of “trial” is repealed, and

(ii) after the definition of “court” insert—

““hearing in relevant criminal proceedings” means any hearing in the course of any criminal proceedings in the High Court or the sheriff court.”.

(3) In section 271A (child witnesses)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “a trial” substitute “a hearing in relevant criminal proceedings”,

(b) in subsection (5A)(c), for “the trial diet” substitute “the hearing at which the evidence is to be given”,

(c) in subsection (6)(a), for “the trial” substitute “a hearing in relevant criminal proceedings”,

(d) in subsection (7)(b)(ii), for “the trial” substitute “the hearing at which the evidence is to be given”,

(e) in subsection (8), for “the trial diet” substitute “the hearing at which the evidence is to be given”,

(f) in subsection (10)(b)(i), for “the trial diet” substitute “the hearing at which the evidence is to be given”,

(g) in subsection (12), for “the trial diet in the case” substitute “the hearing at which the evidence is to be given”, and
(h) in subsection (13A)(c), for “the trial diet” substitute “the hearing at which the evidence is to be given”.

(4) In section 271B (further special provision for child witnesses under the age of 12)—

(a) in subsection (1)(a), for “a trial” substitute “a hearing in relevant criminal proceedings”,

(b) in subsection (1)(b), for “the trial” substitute “the hearing”, and

(c) in subsection (3)(b)(i), for “the trial” substitute “the hearing”.

(5) In section 271C (vulnerable witnesses other than child witnesses)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “a trial” substitute “a hearing in relevant criminal proceedings”,

(b) in subsection (5A)(c), for “the trial diet” substitute “the hearing at which the evidence is to be given”,

(c) in subsection (6), for “the trial diet” substitute “the hearing at which the evidence is to be given”,

(d) in subsection (10), for “the trial diet in the case” substitute “the hearing at which the evidence is to be given”, and

(e) in subsection (12)(c), for “the trial diet” substitute “the hearing at which the evidence is to be given”.

(6) In section 271D (review of arrangements for vulnerable witnesses)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) for “the trial”, where it first occurs, substitute “a hearing in relevant criminal proceedings”, and

(ii) for “the trial”, where it second occurs, substitute “the hearing”, and

(b) in subsection (4)(b)(i), for “the trial” substitute “the hearing”.

(7) In section 271F (the accused)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) for “the trial”, where it first occurs, substitute “a hearing in relevant criminal proceedings”, and

(ii) for “the trial”, where it second occurs (in subsection (1)(a)), substitute “the hearing”,

(b) in subsection (2)—

(i) for “the trial”, where it first occurs, substitute “the hearing”,

(ii) for “the trial”, where it second occurs (in subsection (2)(a)(iii)), substitute “a hearing in relevant criminal proceedings”, and

(iii) for “the trial”, where it third occurs (in subsection (2)(b)(i)), substitute “a hearing in relevant criminal proceedings”,

(c) in subsection (3), for “the trial” substitute “a hearing in relevant criminal proceedings”, and

(d) in subsection (5), for “the trial” substitute “the hearing”.

(8) In section 271J (live television link)—
(a) in subsection (1), for “the trial” substitute “the hearing”;
(b) in subsection (2)(b), for “the trial” substitute “the hearing”, and
(c) in subsection (5)(a), for “the trial” substitute “the hearing”.

(9) In section 271L (supporters), in subsection (2), for “the trial” substitute “that or any other hearing in the proceedings”.

(10) In section 288E (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in certain cases involving child witnesses under the age of 12), in subsection (5), for “a child witness referred to in subsection (2)(b) above” substitute “the trial”.

64A Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences
In section 271 of the 1995 Act (vulnerable witnesses: main definitions)—
(a) in subsection (1)(a), for “age of 16” substitute “relevant age”, and
(b) after subsection (1), insert—
“(1A) In subsection (1)(a), “the relevant age” means—
(a) in the case of a person who is giving or is to give evidence in proceedings for an offence under section 22 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (trafficking in prostitution etc.) or section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation), the age of 18, and
(b) in any other case, the age of 16.”.

65 Amendment of Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003
Section 15A of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (application of certain vulnerable witness provisions in proofs) is repealed.

66 Witness anonymity orders
(1) After section 271M of the 1995 Act insert—

“Witness anonymity orders

271N Witness anonymity orders
(1) A court may make an order requiring such specified measures to be taken in relation to a witness in criminal proceedings as the court considers appropriate to ensure that the identity of the witness is not disclosed in or in connection with the proceedings.

(2) The court may make such an order only on an application made in accordance with section 271P, if satisfied of the conditions set out in section 271Q having considered the matters set out in section 271R.

(3) The kinds of measures that may be required to be taken in relation to a witness include in particular measures for securing one or more of the matters mentioned in subsection (4).

(4) Those matters are—
(a) that the witness’s name and other identifying details may be—
(i) withheld,
(ii) removed from materials disclosed to any party to the proceedings,
(b) that the witness may use a pseudonym,
(c) that the witness is not asked questions of any specified description that might lead to the identification of the witness,
(d) that the witness is screened to any specified extent,
(e) that the witness’s voice is subjected to modulation to any specified extent.

(5) Nothing in this section authorises the court to require—
(a) the witness to be screened to such an extent that the witness cannot be seen by the judge or the jury,
(b) the witness’s voice to be modulated to such an extent that the witness’s natural voice cannot be heard by the judge or the jury.

(6) An order made under this section is referred to in this Act as a “witness anonymity order”.

(7) In this section “specified” means specified in the order concerned.

271P Applications

(1) An application for a witness anonymity order to be made in relation to a witness in criminal proceedings may be made to the court by the prosecutor or the accused.

(2) Where an application is made by the prosecutor, the prosecutor—
(a) must (unless the court directs otherwise) inform the court of the identity of the witness, but
(b) is not required to disclose in connection with the application—
(i) the identity of the witness, or
(ii) any information that might enable the witness to be identified, to any other party to the proceedings (or to the legal representatives of any other party to the proceedings).

(3) Where an application is made by the accused, the accused—
(a) must inform the court and the prosecutor of the identity of the witness, but
(b) if there is more than one accused, is not required to disclose in connection with the application—
(i) the identity of the witness, or
(ii) any information that might enable the witness to be identified, to any other accused (or to the legal representatives of any other accused).

(4) Accordingly, where the prosecutor or the accused proposes to make an application under this section in respect of a witness, any relevant information which is disclosed by or on behalf of that party before the determination of the application must be disclosed in such a way as to prevent—
(a) the identity of the witness, or
(b) any information that might enable the witness to be identified, from being disclosed except as required by subsection (2)(a) or (3)(a).

(5) “Relevant information” means any document or other material which falls to be disclosed, or is sought to be relied on, by or on behalf of the party concerned in connection with the proceedings or proceedings preliminary to them.

(6) The court must give every party to the proceedings the opportunity to be heard on an application under this section.

(7) Subsection (6) does not prevent the court from hearing one or more of the parties to the proceedings in the absence of an accused and the accused’s legal representatives, if it appears to the court to be appropriate to do so in the circumstances of the case.

(8) Nothing in this section is to be taken as restricting any power to make rules of court.

271Q Conditions for making orders

(1) This section applies where an application is made for a witness anonymity order to be made in relation to a witness in criminal proceedings.

(2) The court may make the order only if it is satisfied that Conditions A to D below are met.

(3) Condition A is that the proposed order is necessary—
(a) in order to protect the safety of the witness or another person or to prevent any serious damage to property, or
(b) in order to prevent real harm to the public interest (whether affecting the carrying on of any activities in the public interest or the safety of a person involved in carrying on such activities or otherwise).

(4) Condition B is that, having regard to all the circumstances, the effect of the proposed order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(5) Condition C is that the importance of the witness’s testimony is such that in the interests of justice the witness ought to testify.

(6) Condition D is that—
(a) the witness would not testify if the proposed order were not made, or
(b) there would be real harm to the public interest if the witness were to testify without the proposed order being made.

(7) In determining whether the measures to be specified in the order are necessary for the purpose mentioned in subsection (3)(a), the court must have regard in particular to any reasonable fear on the part of the witness—
(a) that the witness or another person would suffer death or injury, or
(b) that there would be serious damage to property, if the witness were to be identified.
271R Relevant considerations

(1) When deciding whether Conditions A to D in section 271Q are met in the case of an application for a witness anonymity order, the court must have regard to—

(a) the considerations mentioned in subsection (2), and

(b) such other matters as the court considers relevant.

(2) The considerations are—

(a) the general right of an accused in criminal proceedings to know the identity of a witness in the proceedings,

(b) the extent to which the credibility of the witness concerned would be a relevant factor when the witness’s evidence comes to be assessed,

(c) whether evidence given by the witness might be material in implicating the accused,

(d) whether the witness’s evidence could be properly tested (whether on grounds of credibility or otherwise) without the witness’s identity being disclosed,

(e) whether there is any reason to believe that the witness—

   (i) has a tendency to be dishonest, or

   (ii) has any motive to be dishonest in the circumstances of the case, having regard in particular to any previous convictions of the witness and to any relationship between the witness and the accused or any associates of the accused,

(f) whether it would be reasonably practicable to protect the witness’s identity by any means other than by making a witness anonymity order specifying the measures that are under consideration by the court.

271S Direction to jury

(1) Subsection (2) applies where, in a trial on indictment, any evidence has been given by a witness at a time when a witness anonymity order applied to the witness.

(2) The judge must give the jury such direction as the judge considers appropriate to ensure that the fact that the order was made in relation to the witness does not prejudice the accused.

271T Discharge and variation of order

(1) This section applies where a court has made a witness anonymity order in relation to any criminal proceedings.

(2) The court may discharge or vary (or further vary) the order if it appears to the court to be appropriate to do so in view of the provisions of sections 271Q and 271R that applied to the making of the order.

(3) The court may do so—
(a) on an application made by a party to the proceedings if there has been a material change of circumstances since the relevant time, or
(b) on its own initiative.

(4) The court must give every party to the proceedings the opportunity to be heard—
(a) before determining an application made to it under subsection (3)(a), and
(b) before discharging or varying the order on its own initiative.

(5) Subsection (4) does not prevent the court from hearing one or more of the parties to the proceedings in the absence of an accused and the accused’s legal representatives, if it appears to the court to be appropriate to do so in the circumstances of the case.

(6) In subsection (3)(a) “the relevant time” means—
(a) the time when the order was made, or
(b) if a previous application has been made under that subsection, the time when the application (or the last application) was made.

271U Appeals

(1) The prosecutor or the accused may appeal to the High Court against—
(a) the making of a witness anonymity order under section 271N,
(b) the kinds of measures that are required to be taken in relation to a witness under a witness anonymity order made under that section,
(c) the refusal to make a witness anonymity order under that section,
(d) the discharge of a witness anonymity order under section 271T,
(e) the variation of a witness anonymity order under that section, or
(f) the refusal to discharge or vary a witness anonymity order under that section.

(3) The procedure in relation to the appeal is to be prescribed by Act of Adjournal.

(4) If an appeal is brought under this section, the High Court may—
(a) postpone the trial diet for any period that appears to it to be appropriate, and
(b) direct that the period, or some part of it, is not to count towards any time limit applying in respect of the case.

(5) An appeal under this section does not affect any right of appeal in relation to any other decision of any court in the criminal proceedings.

271V Appeal against the making of a witness anonymity order

(1) This section applies where—
(a) an appeal is brought under section 271U(1)(a) against the making of a witness anonymity order, and
(b) the High Court determines that the decision of the judge at first instance was wrong in law.
(2) The High Court must discharge the order and the trial is to proceed as if the order had not been made.

271W Appeal against the refusal to make a witness anonymity order

(1) This section applies where—

(a) an appeal is brought under section 271U(1)(c) against the refusal to make a witness anonymity order in relation to a witness in criminal proceedings, and

(b) the High Court determines that the decision of the judge at first instance was wrong in law.

(2) The High Court must make an order requiring such specified measures to be taken in relation to the witness in the proceedings as the court considers appropriate to ensure that the identity of the witness is not disclosed in or in connection with the proceedings.

271X Appeal against a variation of a witness anonymity order

(1) This section applies where—

(a) an appeal is brought under section 271U(1)(e) against a variation of a witness anonymity order, and

(b) the High Court determines that the decision of the judge at first instance was wrong in law.

(2) The High Court must discharge the variation.

(3) If the High Court determines that it is appropriate to make an additional variation in view of the provisions of sections 271Q and 271R, the court may do so.

271Y Appeal against a refusal to vary or discharge a witness anonymity order

(1) This section applies where—

(a) an appeal is brought under section 271U(1)(f) against a refusal to discharge or vary a witness anonymity order, and

(b) the High Court determines that the decision of the judge at first instance was wrong in law.

(2) The High Court must discharge the order, or make the variation, as the case requires.

(3) If, in the case of a variation, the High Court determines that it is appropriate to make an additional variation in view of the provisions of sections 271Q and 271R, the court may do so.”.

(2) Sections 271N to 271Y of the 1995 Act apply to proceedings in cases where the trial or hearing begins on or after the day on which this section comes into force.
(3) Nothing in this section or sections 271N to 271Y of the 1995 Act affects the power of a court under any rule of law to make an order for securing that the identity of a witness in a trial or hearing in criminal proceedings is withheld from the accused (or, on a defence application, from other accused), where the trial or hearing begins before the day on which this section comes into force.

(4) Schedule 3 makes provision about certain appeals.

67 Television link evidence

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 273 (television link evidence from abroad), in subsection (1), for “solemn” substitute “criminal”.

(3) After that section insert—

“Evidence from other parts of the United Kingdom

273A Television link evidence from other parts of the United Kingdom

(1) In any criminal proceedings in the High Court or the sheriff court a person other than the accused may give evidence through a live television link if—

(a) the witness is within the United Kingdom but outside Scotland,

(b) an application under this section for the issue of a letter of request has been granted, and

(c) the court is satisfied as to the arrangements for the giving of evidence in that manner by that witness.

(2) The prosecutor or the defence in any proceedings referred to in subsection (1) may apply for the issue of a letter of request.

(3) The application must be made to a judge of the court in which the trial is to take place or, if that court is not yet known, to a judge of the High Court.

(4) The judge may, on an application under this section, issue a letter to a court or tribunal exercising jurisdiction in the place where the witness is ordinarily resident requesting assistance in facilitating the giving of evidence by that witness through a live television link, if the judge is satisfied of the matters set out in subsection (5).

(5) Those matters are—

(a) that the evidence which it is averred the witness is able to give is necessary for the proper adjudication of the trial,

(b) that the granting of the application—

(i) is in the interests of justice, and

(ii) in the case of an application by the prosecutor, is not unfair to the accused.”.
67A European evidence warrants

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing any obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—

(a) on the Scottish Ministers,

(b) on the Lord Advocate,

(c) on other persons.

(3) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment.

(4) An order under subsection (1) may contain provision creating offences and a person who commits such an offence is liable to such penalties, not exceeding those mentioned in subsection (5), as are provided for in the order.

(5) Those penalties are—

(a) on conviction on indictment, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 2 years, or a fine, or both,

(b) on summary conviction, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 12 months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both.

Part 5—Criminal justice

Jury service

67B Lists of jurors

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 84 (juries: returns of jurors and preparation of lists)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “list” substitute “lists”,

(b) for subsection (4) substitute—

“(4) For the purpose of a trial in the sheriff court, the sheriff principal must furnish the clerk of court with a list of names, containing the number of persons required, from lists of potential jurors of—

(a) the sheriff court district in which the trial is to be held (the “local district”), and

(b) if the sheriff principal considers it appropriate, any other sheriff court district or districts in the sheriffdom in which the trial is to be held (“other districts”).

(4A) Where the sheriff principal furnishes a list containing names of potential jurors of other districts, the sheriff principal may determine the proportion as between the local district and the other districts in which jurors are to be summoned.”,
(c) in subsection (5), for “list”, in both places where it occurs, substitute “lists”, and
(d) subsection (7) is repealed.

(3) In section 85(4) (juries: citation and attendance of jurors)—

(a) for the words from the beginning to “shall”, in the first place where it occurs, substitute “The sheriff clerk of—

(a) the sheriffdom in which the High Court is to sit, or
(b) the sheriff court district in which a trial in the sheriff court is to be held, shall”, and

(b) the word “such”, in the first place where it occurs, is repealed.

68 Upper age limit for jurors

(1) Section 1 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980 (c.55) (qualification of jurors) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1)—

(a) in paragraph (b), at beginning insert “subject to subsection (1A),”, and

(b) the words “, civil or criminal” are repealed.

(3) After subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) In relation to criminal proceedings, a person is qualified and liable to serve as a juror despite being over 65 years of age.”.

68A Excusal from jury service

(1) The Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 1 (qualification of jurors)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “below” insert “and to section 1A”,

(b) in subsection (2), after “service” in the second place where it occurs insert “in relation to civil proceedings”,

(c) in subsection (3), after “service” in the first place where it occurs insert “in relation to civil proceedings”,

(d) in subsection (5), after “above” insert “or under section 1A”, and

(e) in subsection (6), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) section 1A;”.

(3) After section 1 insert—

“1A Excusal of jurors in relation to criminal proceedings

(1) A person who is qualified under section 1(1) but is among the persons listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to this Act (being persons excusable as of right from jury service) is to be excused from jury service in relation to criminal proceedings on any occasion where the person—

(a) has been required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825 (c.22); and
(b) gives written notice to the sheriff principal that the person wishes to be excused, before the end of the period of 7 days beginning with the day on which the person receives the requirement.

(2) A person who is qualified under section 1(1) but is among the persons listed in Group C of Part III of Schedule 1 to this Act is to be excused from jury service in relation to criminal proceedings on any occasion where—

(a) the person has been required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825; and

(b) the person’s commanding officer certifies to the sheriff principal that it would be prejudicial to the efficiency of the force of which the person is a member were the person required to be absent from duty.”.

(4) In section 3(1)(a) (offences in connection with jury service), after “been” insert “required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825 or”.

69 Persons excusable from jury service

In the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980 (c.55), in Schedule 1 (ineligibility for and disqualification and excusal from jury service), Part 3, Group F, for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) where citation for jury service would result in a person’s serving as a juror in relation to criminal proceedings—

(i) persons who have served as a juror in the period of 5 years ending with the date on which the person is cited first to attend;

(ii) persons who have attended for jury service in relation to criminal proceedings, but have not served as a juror, in the period of 2 years ending with the date on which the person is cited first to attend; and

(iii) persons who have attained the age of 71;

(aa) where citation for jury service would result in a person’s serving as a juror in relation to civil proceedings, persons who have served, or duly attended for service, as a juror in the period of 5 years ending with the date on which the person is cited first to attend;”.

70 Data matching for detection of fraud etc.

(1) The Public Finance and Accountability (Scotland) Act 2000 (asp 1) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 11 (Audit Scotland: financial provisions)—

(a) after subsection (1)(c) insert—

“(ca) carrying out a data matching exercise under section 26A,”, and

(b) after subsection (5) insert—

“(5A) Charges under subsection (1)(ca) may be imposed on (either or both)—

(a) persons who disclose data for a data matching exercise,
(b) persons who receive the results of such an exercise.”.

(3) After section 26 insert—

“PART 2A

DATA MATCHING

26A Power to carry out data matching exercises

(1) Audit Scotland may carry out data matching exercises or arrange for them to be carried out on its behalf.

(2) A data matching exercise is an exercise involving the comparison of sets of data to determine how far they match (including the identification of any patterns and trends).

(3) The power in subsection (1) may be exercised for one or more of the following purposes—

(a) assisting in the prevention and detection of fraud,

(b) assisting in the prevention and detection of crime (other than fraud),

(c) assisting in the apprehension and prosecution of offenders.

(4) A data matching exercise may not be used for the sole purpose of identifying patterns and trends in a person’s characteristics or behaviour which suggest the person is likely to commit fraud in the future.

26B Voluntary disclosure of data to Audit Scotland

(1) For the purposes of a data matching exercise, any person may disclose data to Audit Scotland (or a person acting on its behalf).

(2) Such disclosure does not breach—

(a) any duty of confidentiality owed by the person making the disclosure, or

(b) any other restriction on the disclosure of data.

(3) Nothing in this section authorises a disclosure—

(a) which contravenes the Data Protection Act 1998 (c.29),

(b) which is prohibited by Part 1 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 (c.23) (interception, acquisition and disclosure of communications data), or

(c) of data comprising or including patient data.

(4) “Patient data” means data relating to an individual which is held for medical purposes and from which the individual can be identified.

(5) “Medical purposes” are the purposes of—

(a) preventative medicine,

(b) medical diagnosis,

(c) medical research,

(d) the provision of care and treatment,

(e) the management of health and social care services, and
(f) informing individuals about their physical or mental health or condition, the diagnosis of their condition or their care and treatment.

(6) Nothing in this section prevents disclosure of data under any other provision of this Act, another enactment or any rule of law.

(7) Data matching exercises may include data disclosed by a person outside Scotland.

26C Power to require disclosure of data

(1) Audit Scotland may require the persons mentioned in subsection (2) to disclose to it (or a person acting on its behalf) such data as it (or the person acting on its behalf) may reasonably require for the purpose of carrying out data matching exercises in such form as it (or such person) may so require.

(2) Those persons are—

   (a) a body or an office holder any of whose accounts is an account in relation to which sections 21 and 22 apply,

   (b) a body whose accounts must be audited under Part 7 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 (c.65) (finance),

   (c) a Licensing Board continued in existence by or established under section 5 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16), or

   (d) an officer or a member of a body, office holder or board mentioned in paragraph (a), (b) or (c).

(3) Audit Scotland must not require a person to disclose data if—

   (a) the disclosure would contravene the Data Protection Act 1998 (c.29),

   (b) the disclosure is prohibited by Part 1 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 (c.23) (interception, acquisition and disclosure of communications data).

(4) A disclosure made in response to a requirement imposed under subsection (1) does not breach—

   (a) any duty of confidentiality owed by the person making the disclosure, or

   (b) any other restriction on the disclosure of data.

(5) A person mentioned in subsection (2) who without reasonable excuse fails to comply with a requirement made in accordance with this section is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

26D Disclosure of results of data matching

(1) This section applies to the following data—

   (a) data relating to a particular person obtained by or on behalf of Audit Scotland for the purpose of carrying out a data matching exercise, and

   (b) the results of such an exercise.

(2) Data to which this section applies may be disclosed by or on behalf of Audit Scotland if the disclosure is—
(a) for, or in connection with, a purpose for which a data matching exercise is carried out,

(b) to a Scottish audit agency, or a related party, for, or in connection with a function of that audit agency under—

(1) Part 2 of this Act, or

(2) Part 7 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 (c.65) (finance),

(c) to a United Kingdom audit agency, or a related party, for, or in connection with, a function of that audit agency corresponding or similar to—

(i) the functions of a Scottish audit agency, or

(ii) the functions of Audit Scotland under this Part, or

(d) in pursuance of a duty imposed by or under an enactment.

(3) “Scottish audit agency”, for the purpose of subsections (2)(b) and (c)(i), means—

(a) the Auditor General, or

(b) the Accounts Commission.

(4) “United Kingdom audit agency”, for the purposes of subsection (2)(c), means—

(a) the National Audit Office,

(b) the Audit Commission for Local Authorities and the National Health Service in England,

(c) the Auditor General for Wales,

(d) the Comptroller and Auditor General for Northern Ireland, or

(e) a person designated as a local government auditor under article 4 of the Local Government (Northern Ireland) Order 2005 (S.I. 2005/1968 (NI.18)).

(5) “Related party”, in relation to a Scottish or United Kingdom audit agency means—

(a) a person acting on its behalf,

(b) a body or office holder whose accounts are required to be audited by it or by a person appointed by it, or

(c) a person appointed by it to audit those accounts.

(6) If the data used for a data matching exercise includes patient data—

(a) subsection (2)(a) applies only so far as the purpose for which the disclosure is made relates to a relevant NHS body, and

(b) subsection (2)(b) or (c) applies only so far as the function for, or in connection with, which the disclosure is made relates to such a body.

(7) In subsection (6)—

“patient data” has the same meaning as section 26B(4), and “relevant NHS body” means—

(a) an NHS body as defined in section 22(1) of the Community Care and Health (Scotland) Act 2002 (asp 5),

(b) a health service body as defined in section 53(1) of the Audit Commission Act 1998 (c.18),

(c) a Welsh NHS body as defined in section 60 of the Public Audit (Wales) Act 2004 (c.23),

(d) a health and social care body mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (e) of section 1(5) of the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (Northern Ireland) 2009 (c.1).

(8) Data disclosed under subsection (2) may not be further disclosed except—

(a) for, or in connection with—

(i) the purpose for which it was disclosed under subsection (2)(a), or

(ii) the function for which it was disclosed under subsection (2)(b) or (c),

(b) otherwise for the investigation or prosecution of an offence, or

(c) in pursuance of a duty imposed by or under an enactment.

(9) Except as authorised by subsections (2) and (8), a person who discloses data to which this section applies is guilty of an offence and liable—

(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine or to both, or

(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, to a fine or to both.

26E Publication of reports on data matching

(1) Audit Scotland may publish a report on a data matching exercise (including a report on the results of an exercise).

(2) Such a report must not include data relating to a particular person if—

(a) the person is the subject of any data included in the data matching exercise,

(b) the person can be identified from the data, and

(c) the data is not otherwise in the public domain.

(3) A report published under subsection (1) is to be published in such manner as Audit Scotland considers appropriate for the purposes of bringing it to the attention of those members of the public who may be interested.

(4) Nothing in section 26D prevents publication under this section.

(5) This section does not affect any powers of an auditor where the data matching exercise in question forms part of an audit under—

(a) Part 2 of this Act, or

(b) Part 7 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 (c.65) (finance).
26F  Data matching code of practice

(1) Audit Scotland must prepare, and keep under review, a code of practice with respect to data matching exercises.

(2) Regard must be had to the code in carrying out and participating in any such exercise.

(3) Audit Scotland must consult the following persons before preparing or altering the code of practice—
   (a) the Information Commissioner,
   (b) the persons mentioned in section 26C(2), and
   (c) any other person Audit Scotland thinks fit.

(4) Audit Scotland must, from time to time, publish the code.

26G  Powers of the Scottish Ministers

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order amend this Part—
   (a) to add a public body to the persons mentioned in section 26C(2),
   (b) to modify the application of this Part in relation to a public body so added, or
   (c) to remove a person from the persons mentioned in section 26C(2).

(2) An order under this section may include such incidental, consequential, supplementary or transitional provision as the Scottish Ministers think fit.

(3) In this section, “public body” means a person whose functions—
   (a) are functions of a public nature, or
   (b) include functions of a public nature.

(4) A person referred to in subsection (3)(b) is a public body to the extent only of the functions referred to in that subsection.”.

71  Sharing information with anti-fraud organisations

In the Serious Crime Act 2007 (c.27), the following provisions are repealed—
   (a) in section 68 (disclosure of information to prevent fraud), subsections (5) and (6),
   (b) in section 69 (offence for certain further disclosures of information), subsection (3), and
   (c) in section 71 (code of practice for disclosure of information to prevent fraud)—
      (i) subsection (4), and
      (ii) in subsection (6), the definition of “relevant public authority”.
Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc.

72 Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc.

(1) In section 26 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8) (authorisation of closure notice)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “and (3)” substitute “to (3B)”,

(b) in subsection (3), after “may” insert “, in a case involving antisocial behaviour,”, and

(c) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A senior police officer may, in a case involving an exploitation offence, authorise the service of a closure notice only where the senior police officer—

(a) has reasonable grounds for believing that—

(i) such an offence is being (or, at any time in the immediately preceding 3 months, was) committed in the premises, or

(ii) the premises are being (or, at any time in the immediately preceding 3 months, have been) used for or in connection with the commission of such an offence, and

(b) is satisfied that—

(i) the local authority for the area in which the premises are situated has been consulted, and

(ii) reasonable steps have been taken to establish the identity of any person who lives on, has control of, has responsibility for or has an interest in the premises.

(3B) Subsection (3A) is without prejudice to subsection (3) (including in so far as subsection (3) is applicable in relation to a brothel or other place where prostitution may occur).”.

(2) In section 27 of that Act (service etc.), in subsection (2)—

(a) in paragraph (b)(i), after “section 26(3)(b)(ii)” insert “or (as the case may be) (3A)(b)(ii)”, and

(b) in paragraph (b)(ii), for “in that subsection” substitute “there”.

(3) In section 30 of that Act (application: determination)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “subsection (2)” insert “or (2A)”,

(b) in subsection (2), for “Those” substitute “Where the application is in a case involving antisocial behaviour, the”,

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Where the application is in a case involving an exploitation offence, the conditions are—

(a) that it appears that—

(i) such an offence is being (or was recently) committed in the premises, or

(ii) the premises continue to be (or recently have been) used for or in connection with the commission of such an offence, and
(b) that the making of the order is necessary to prevent the commission of such an offence for the period specified in the order.”,

(d) in subsection (3)(b), for the words from “engaged” to the end substitute “(as the case may be)—

(i) engaged in antisocial behaviour which has occurred in the premises, or

(ii) involved in the commission of an exploitation offence in or connected with the premises.”, and

(c) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) For the purpose of paragraph (b)(ii) of subsection (3), a person such as is mentioned in paragraph (a) of that subsection is not involved in the commission of an exploitation offence where that person is the victim of the offence.”.

(4) In section 32 of that Act (extension)—

(a) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The sheriff may, on the application of a senior police officer and if satisfied that it is necessary to do so to prevent the commission of an exploitation offence, make an order extending the period for which a closure order has effect for a period not exceeding the maximum period.”,

(b) in subsection (2), for “subsection (1)” substitute “subsections (1) and (1A)”,

(c) in subsection (3)—

(i) after “may” insert “, in a case involving antisocial behaviour,”, and

(ii) for “this section” substitute “subsection (1)”, and

(d) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A senior police officer may, in a case involving an exploitation offence, make an application under subsection (1A) only if—

(a) it is made while the closure order has effect, and

(b) the senior police officer—

(i) has reasonable grounds for believing that it is necessary to extend the period for which the closure order has effect for the purpose of preventing the commission of an exploitation offence, and

(ii) is satisfied that the appropriate local authority has been consulted about the intention to make the application.”.

(5) In section 33 of that Act (revocation), in subsection (1), for the words from “the occurrence” to the end substitute “(as the case may be)—

(a) the occurrence of relevant harm, or

(b) the commission of an exploitation offence, revoke the order.”.

(6) In section 36 of that Act (appeals), in subsection (5), after “section 32(1)” insert “or (1A)”.

(7) After section 40 of that Act insert—
“40A Exploitation offences

(1) In this Part, an “exploitation offence” is any of the following offences—

(a) so far as concerning travel or identity documentation for enabling the trafficking of people (including passports, visas and work permits)—

(i) fraud, or

(ii) uttering a forged document,

(b) so far as concerning the trafficking of people, an offence under section 26(1)(d) of the Immigration Act 1971 (c.77) (falsification of documentation),

(c) an offence under section 52 or 52A of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45) (possession, taking or distribution of indecent images of children),

(d) an offence under sections 7 to 12 or 13(9) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) (offences relating to prostitution and brothels),

(e) an offence under section 22 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (traffic in prostitution etc.),

(f) an offence under section 1 of the Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 9) (meeting a child following certain preliminary contact),

(g) an offence under sections 9 to 12 of that Act (offences relating to provision by child of sexual services or child pornography),

(h) an offence under section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation),

(i) an offence under Part 1 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) (rape etc.),

(j) an offence under Part 4 of that Act (sexual offences involving children) other than an offence under section 37 (older children engaging in sexual conduct with each other),

(k) an offence under section 42 of that Act (sexual abuse of trust),

(l) an offence under section 46 of that Act (sexual abuse of trust of a mentally disordered person),

(m) an offence under section 35A (slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00).

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1)(a) and (b), a reference to trafficking of people is a reference to a person intentionally doing something in respect of at least one other person which involves the commission of an offence mentioned in subsection (1)(c) or (h).

(3) For the purposes of subsection (1), a reference to an offence includes a reference to—

(a) an attempt to commit an offence,

(b) incitement to commit an offence,
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Part 5—Criminal justice

(c) counselling or procuring the commission of an offence,
(d) involvement art and part in an offence, and
(e) an offence as modified by section 54 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) (incitement to commit certain sexual acts outside the United Kingdom).

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by order add to or otherwise modify the specification of offences listed in subsection (1).”.

Sexual offences prevention orders

(1) In section 141 of the Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 (c.4) (sexual offences prevention orders: relevant sexual offences), subsection (2) is repealed.

(2) In the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42)—
(a) in section 106 (applications and grounds for sexual offences prevention orders: supplemental), in subsection (13), the words from “in their” to the end are repealed,
(b) in section 109 (interim SOPOs), in subsection (5), for “107(3)” substitute “107(2)”,
(c) after section 111 insert—

“111A SOPO and interim SOPO requirements: Scotland

(1) This section applies in relation to a sexual offences prevention order or an interim sexual offences prevention order made, or to be made, by a court in Scotland.

(2) Such an order, in addition to or instead of prohibiting the defendant from doing anything described in the order, may require the defendant to do anything described in the order.

(3) Accordingly, in relation to such an order—
(a) the references in sections 107(2) and 108(5) to a prohibition include a reference to a requirement, and
(b) the reference in section 113(1) to a person’s doing anything which he is prohibited from doing includes a reference to his failing to do anything which he is required to do.”, and
(d) in section 112 (provisions relating to sexual offences prevention orders in Scotland), in subsection (1), after paragraph (d) insert—

“(da) a court may make an order under section 104(1)—

(i) at its own instance, or

(ii) on the motion of the prosecutor;”.

Foreign travel orders

(1) The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) is amended as follows.
(2) In section 115 (definition of “protecting children generally or any child from serious sexual harm from the defendant outside the United Kingdom”), in subsection (2), for “16” in both places it occurs substitute “18”.

(3) In section 116 (qualifying offenders: offences), in subsection (2)(d), for “16” substitute “18”.

(4) In section 117(1) (foreign travel orders: effect), for “6 months” substitute “5 years”.

(5) Before section 118, insert—

“117B Surrender of passports: Scotland

(1) This section applies in relation to a foreign travel order which contains a prohibition within section 117(2)(c).

(2) The order must require the person in respect of whom the order has effect to surrender all of the person’s passports, at a police station in Scotland specified in the order—

(a) on or before the date when the prohibition takes effect, or

(b) within a period specified in the order.

(3) Any passports surrendered must be returned as soon as reasonably practicable after the person ceases to be subject to a foreign travel order containing a prohibition within section 117(2)(c).

(4) Subsection (3) does not apply in relation to—

(a) a passport issued by or on behalf of the authorities of a country outside the United Kingdom if the passport has been returned to those authorities;

(b) a passport issued by or on behalf of an international organisation if the passport has been returned to that organisation.

(5) In this section “passport” means—

(a) a United Kingdom passport within the meaning of the Immigration Act 1971 (c.77);

(b) a passport issued by or on behalf of the authorities of a country outside the United Kingdom, or by or on behalf of an international organisation;

(c) a document that can be used (in some or all circumstances) instead of a passport.”.

(6) In section 122 (breach of foreign travel order), before subsection (2) insert—

“(1B) A person commits an offence if, without reasonable excuse, the person fails to comply with—

(a) a requirement under section 117A(2) (surrender of passports: England and Wales and Northern Ireland), or

(b) a requirement under section 117B(2) (surrender of passports: Scotland).

(1C) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence under subsection (1B)—

(a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or

(b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine,
as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).”.

Sex offender notification requirements

5 74A Sex offender notification requirements

(1) The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 85 (notification requirements: periodic notification)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “period of one year” substitute “applicable period”,

(b) in subsection (3), for “period referred to in subsection (1)” substitute “applicable period”, and

(c) after subsection (4) insert—

“(5) In this section, the “applicable period” means—

(a) in any case where subsection (6) applies to the relevant offender, such period not exceeding one year as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe in regulations, and

(b) in any other case, the period of one year.

(6) This subsection applies to the relevant offender if the last home address notified by the offender under section 83(1) or 84(1) or subsection (1) was the address or location of such a place as is mentioned in section 83(7)(b).”.

(3) In section 86 (notification requirements: travel outside the United Kingdom), subsection (4) is repealed.

(4) In section 87 (method of notification and related matters), subsection (6) is repealed.

(5) In section 96 (information about release or transfer), subsection (6) is repealed.

(6) In section 138 (orders and regulations)—

(a) in subsection (2), after “84,” insert “85,”, and

(b) after subsection (3) insert—

“(4) Orders or regulations made by the Scottish Ministers under this Act may—

(a) make different provision for different purposes,

(b) include supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provisions.”.

Risk of sexual harm orders

75 Risk of sexual harm orders

(1) The Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 2 (risk of sexual harm orders: applications, grounds and effect)—

(a) in subsection (7)(a), after “doing” insert “, or requires that person to do,”, and

(b) in subsection (8), after “prohibitions” insert “or requirements”.

(3) In section 86 (notification requirements: travel outside the United Kingdom), subsection (4) is repealed.

(4) In section 87 (method of notification and related matters), subsection (6) is repealed.

(5) In section 96 (information about release or transfer), subsection (6) is repealed.

(6) In section 138 (orders and regulations)—

(a) in subsection (2), after “84,” insert “85,”, and

(b) after subsection (3) insert—

“(4) Orders or regulations made by the Scottish Ministers under this Act may—

(a) make different provision for different purposes,

(b) include supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provisions.”.
(3) In section 4 (risk of sexual harm orders: variations, renewals and discharges), in subsection (4), after “prohibitions” in both places where it occurs insert “or requirements”.

(4) In section 5 (interim risk of sexual harm orders), in subsection (3), after “doing” insert “, or requiring that person to do,”.

(5) In section 7 (offence: breach of risk of sexual harm order or interim risk of sexual harm order), in subsection (1), after “doing” insert “, or fails to do anything which the person is required to do,”.

75A Risk of sexual harm orders: spent convictions

In section 7 of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) (limitations on rehabilitation under the Act), in subsection (2), after paragraph (bb) insert—

“(bc) in any proceedings on an application under section 2, 4 or 5 of the Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 9) or in any appeal under section 6 of that Act;”.

Obtaining information from outwith United Kingdom

After section 194I of the 1995 Act insert—

“194IA Power to request assistance in obtaining information abroad

(1) Where it appears to the Commission that there may be information which they require for the purposes of carrying out their functions, and the information is outside the United Kingdom, they may apply to the High Court to request assistance.

(2) On an application made by the Commission under subsection (1), the High Court may request assistance if satisfied that it is reasonable in the circumstances.

(3) In this section, “request assistance” means request assistance in obtaining outside the United Kingdom any information specified in the request for use by the Commission for the purposes of carrying out their functions.

(4) Section 8 of the Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 (c.32) (sending requests for assistance) applies to requests for assistance under this section as it applies to requests for assistance under section 7 of that Act.

(5) Subsections (2), (3) and (6) of section 9 of that Act (use of evidence obtained) apply to information obtained pursuant to a request for assistance under this section as they apply under subsection (1) of that section to evidence obtained pursuant to a request for assistance under section 7 of that Act.”.

Surveillance

77 Grant of authorisations for surveillance

(1) The Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Scotland) Act 2000 (asp 11) is amended as follows.

(3) In section 10 (authorisation of intrusive surveillance)—
(a) in subsection (1), for the words from “the” where it second occurs to the end substitute “any of the persons mentioned in subsection (1A) may grant authorisations for the carrying out of intrusive surveillance.”, and

(b) after that subsection insert—

“(1A) Those persons are—

(a) the chief constable of every police force,

(b) the Director General of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency,

(c) the Deputy Director General of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency.”.

(3A) After that section insert—

“10A Authorisation of surveillance: joint surveillance operations

In the case of a joint surveillance operation, where authorisation is sought for the carrying out of any form of conduct to which this Act applies, authorisation may be granted by any one of the persons having power to grant authorisation for the carrying out of that conduct.”.

(4) In section 11 (rules for grant of authorisations), in subsection (3), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”.

(5) In section 12A (grant of authorisations in cases of urgency: Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency), in subsection (1), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”.

(5A) In section 14 (approval required for authorisations to take effect)—

(a) in subsection (5)(b), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”, and

(b) subsection (7) is repealed.

(5B) In section 16 (appeals against decisions by Surveillance Commissioners), in subsection (1), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”.

(6) In section 31 (interpretation), in subsection (1), after the definitions of “directed” and “intrusive” insert—

““joint surveillance operation” means a case involving—

(a) at least two police forces in Scotland working together; or

(b) at least one police force in Scotland and the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency working together;”.

Interference with property

Authorisations to interfere with property etc.

(1) The Police Act 1997 (c.50) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 93 (authorisations to interfere with property etc.)—

(a) after subsection (3A) insert—

“(3AA)In the case of a joint operation, an authorising officer mentioned in subsection (3B) may authorise a person mentioned in subsection (3C) to take such action as is referred to in subsection (1).
(3B) Those authorising officers are—
   (a) the chief constable of a police force—
      (i) maintained under or by virtue of section 1 of the Police (Scotland) Act 1967, and
      (ii) involved in the joint operation,
   (b) where the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency is involved in the joint operation, the Director General or Deputy Director General of that Agency.

(3C) The persons who may be authorised under subsection (1) are—
   (a) a constable of any of the police forces involved in the joint operation (whether or not the authorised action is to be carried out in the area of operation of the constable’s police force),
   (b) where the joint operation falls within paragraph (b) of subsection (3B), a police member of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency.

(3D) In subsection (3AA), “joint operation” means a case involving—
   (a) at least two police forces in Scotland working together, or
   (b) at least one police force in Scotland and the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency working together.”,

(b) in paragraph (j) of subsection (5), after “General” insert “, or Deputy Director General,”, and

(c) in paragraph (cc) of subsection (6), after “General” insert “, or Deputy Director General.”.

(3) In section 94 (authorisations given in absence of authorising officer)—
   (a) in subsection (2)(h), after “(5)” insert “or, as the case may be, subsection (6),”,
   (b) in subsection (5), at the beginning insert “Where the case is not a joint operation,”, and
   (c) after subsection (5), add—
      “(6) Where the case is a joint operation, the person referred to in subsection (2)(h) is the chief constable of a police force involved in the joint operation in the relevant area.

(7) In subsections (5) and (6)—
      “joint operation” has the meaning given by section 93(3D), and “relevant area” means the area—
      (a) for which the police forces involved in the joint operation are maintained, and
      (b) to which the application for authorisation relates.”.

Amendments of Part 5 of Police Act 1997

Amendments of Part 5 of Police Act 1997

(1) The Police Act 1997 (c.50) is amended as follows.
(1A) In section 113B (enhanced criminal record certificates), in subsection (3), for the words from “or” immediately following paragraph (a) to the end of paragraph (b), substitute “(or states that there is no such matter or information), and

(b) if the applicant is subject to notification requirements under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42), states that fact.”.

(2) After that section insert—

“113BA Information held outside the United Kingdom

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument amend the definition of—

(a) “criminal conviction certificate” in section 112(2),
(b) “central records” in sections 112(3) and 113A(6),
(c) “criminal record certificate” in section 113A(3),
(d) “relevant matter” in section 113A(6),
(e) “enhanced criminal record certificate” in section 113B(3).

(2) An order under subsection (1) may be made only for the purposes of, or in connection with, enabling certificates issued under this Part to include details of information held outside the United Kingdom.

(3) No order may be made under subsection (1) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before, and approved by resolution of, the Scottish Parliament.”.

(3) In section 120ZB (regulations about registration), after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) The provision which may be made by virtue of subsection (2)(a) includes in particular provision for—

(a) the payment of fees in respect of applications to be listed in the register,
(b) the payment of different fees in different circumstances,
(c) annual or other recurring fees to be paid in respect of registration, and
(d) such annual or other recurring fees to be paid in advance or in arrears.

(2B) Where provision is made under subsection (2)(a) for a fee to be charged in respect of an application to be listed in the register, the Scottish Ministers need not consider the application unless the fee is paid.”.

Rehabilitation of offenders

79A Spent alternatives to prosecution: Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974

(1) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 8A (protection afforded to spent cautions), insert—

“8B Protection afforded to spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) For the purposes of this Act, a person has been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence if the person (whether before or after the commencement of this section)—

(a) has been given a warning in respect of the offence by—
Part 5—Criminal justice

(i) a constable in Scotland, or
(ii) a procurator fiscal,

(b) has accepted, or is deemed to have accepted—

(i) a conditional offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), or

(ii) a compensation offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302A of that Act,

(c) has had a work order made against the person in respect of the offence under section 303ZA of that Act,

(d) has been given a fixed penalty notice in respect of the offence under section 129 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

(e) has accepted an offer made by a procurator fiscal in respect of the offence to undertake an activity or treatment or to receive services or do any other thing as an alternative to prosecution, or

(f) in respect of an offence under the law of a country or territory outside Scotland, has been given, or has accepted or is deemed to have accepted, anything corresponding to a warning, offer, order or notice falling within paragraphs (a) to (e) under the law of that country or territory.

(2) In this Act, references to an “alternative to prosecution” are to be read in accordance with subsection (1).

(3) Schedule 3 to this Act (protection for spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland) has effect.”.

(3) After section 9A (unauthorised disclosure of spent cautions), insert—

“9B Unauthorised disclosure of spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) In this section—

(a) “official record” means a record that—

(i) contains information about persons given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence, and

(ii) is kept for the purposes of its functions by a court, police force, Government department, part of the Scottish Administration or other local or public authority in Scotland,

(b) “relevant information” means information imputing that a named or otherwise identifiable living person has committed, been charged with, prosecuted for or given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence which is the subject of an alternative to prosecution which has become spent,

(c) “subject of the information”, in relation to relevant information, means the named or otherwise identifiable living person to whom the information relates.

(2) Subsection (3) applies to a person who, in the course of the person’s official duties (anywhere in the United Kingdom), has or has had custody of or access to an official record or the information contained in an official record.

(3) The person commits an offence if the person—
(a) obtains relevant information in the course of the person’s official duties,
(b) knows or has reasonable cause to suspect that the information is relevant information, and
(c) discloses the information to another person otherwise than in the course of the person’s official duties.

(4) Subsection (3) is subject to the terms of an order under subsection (6).

(5) In proceedings for an offence under subsection (3), it is a defence for the accused to show that the disclosure was made—
(a) to the subject of the information or to a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information, or
(b) to another person at the express request of the subject of the information or of a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for the disclosure of relevant information derived from an official record to be excepted from the provisions of subsection (3) in cases or classes of cases specified in the order.

(7) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 4 on the standard scale.

(8) A person commits an offence if the person obtains relevant information from an official record by means of fraud, dishonesty or bribery.

(9) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (8) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, or to both.”.

(4) After Schedule 2 (protection for spent convictions) insert—

“SCHEDULE 3

PROTECTION FOR SPENT ALTERNATIVES TO PROSECUTION: SCOTLAND

Preliminary

1 (1) For the purposes of this Act, an alternative to prosecution given to any person
(whether before or after the commencement of this Schedule) becomes spent—

(a) in the case of—

(i) a warning referred to in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 8B, or
(ii) a fixed penalty notice referred to in paragraph (d) of that subsection,

at the time the warning or notice is given,

(b) in any other case, at the end of the relevant period.

(2) The relevant period in relation to an alternative to prosecution is the period of 3 months beginning on the day on which the alternative to prosecution is given.

(3) Sub-paragraph (1)(a) is subject to sub-paragraph (5).

(4) Sub-paragraph (2) is subject to sub-paragraph (6).
(5) If a person who is given a fixed penalty notice referred to in section 8B(1)(d) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence, the notice—

(a) becomes spent at the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence, and

(b) is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of that rehabilitation period.

(6) If a person who is given an alternative to prosecution (other than one to which sub-paragraph (1)(a) applies) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence—

(a) the relevant period in relation to the alternative to prosecution ends at the same time as the rehabilitation period for the offence ends, and

(b) if the conviction occurs after the end of the period referred to sub-paragraph (2), the alternative to prosecution is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence.

2 (1) In this Schedule, “ancillary circumstances”, in relation to an alternative to prosecution, means any circumstances of the following—

(a) the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given or the conduct constituting the offence,

(b) any process preliminary to the alternative to prosecution being given (including consideration by any person of how to deal with the offence and the procedure for giving the alternative to prosecution),

(c) any proceedings for the offence which took place before the alternative to prosecution was given (including anything that happens after that time for the purpose of bringing the proceedings to an end),

(d) any judicial review proceedings relating to the alternative to prosecution,

(e) in the case of an offer referred to in paragraph (e) of subsection (1) of section 8B, anything done or undergone in pursuance of the terms of the offer.

(2) Where an alternative to prosecution is given in respect of two or more offences, references in sub-paragraph (1) to the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given includes a reference to each of the offences.

(3) In this Schedule, “proceedings before a judicial authority” has the same meaning as in section 4.

Protection for spent alternatives to prosecution and ancillary circumstances

3 (1) A person who is given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence is, from the time the alternative to prosecution becomes spent, to be treated for all purposes in law as a person who has not committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence.

(2) Despite any enactment or rule of law to the contrary—
Part 5—Criminal justice

(a) where an alternative to prosecution given to a person in respect of an offence has become spent, evidence is not admissible in any proceedings before a judicial authority exercising its jurisdiction or functions in Scotland to prove that the person has committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence,

(b) a person must not, in any such proceedings, be asked any question relating to the person’s past which cannot be answered without acknowledging or referring to an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, and

(c) if a person is asked such a question in any such proceedings, the person is not required to answer it.

(3) Sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply in relation to any proceedings—

(a) for the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution was given, and

(b) which are not part of the ancillary circumstances.

4 (1) This paragraph applies where a person (“A”) is asked a question, otherwise than in proceedings before a judicial authority, seeking information about—

(a) A’s or another person’s previous conduct or circumstances,

(b) offences previously committed by A or the other person, or

(c) alternatives to prosecution previously given to A or the other person.

(2) The question is to be treated as not relating to alternatives to prosecution that have become spent or to any ancillary circumstances and may be answered accordingly.

(3) A is not to be subjected to any liability or otherwise prejudiced in law because of a failure to acknowledge or disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances in answering the question.

5 (1) An obligation imposed on a person (“A”) by a rule of law or by the provisions of an agreement or arrangement to disclose any matter to another person does not extend to requiring A to disclose an alternative to prosecution (whether one given to A or another person) that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances.

(2) An alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, or any failure to disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, is not a ground for dismissing or excluding a person from any office, profession, occupation or employment, or for prejudicing the person in any way in any occupation or employment.

6 The Scottish Ministers may by order—

(a) exclude or modify the application of any of paragraphs (a) to (c) of paragraph 3(2) in relation to questions put in such circumstances as may be specified in the order,

(b) provide for exceptions from any of the provisions of paragraphs 4 and 5 in such cases or classes of case, or in relation to alternatives to prosecution of such descriptions, as may be specified in the order.
7 Paragraphs 3 to 5 do not affect—

(a) the operation of an alternative to prosecution, or

(b) the operation of an enactment by virtue of which, because of an alternative to prosecution, a person is subject to a disqualification, disability, prohibition or other restriction or effect for a period extending beyond the time at which the alternative to prosecution becomes spent.

8 (1) Section 7(2), (3) and (4) apply for the purpose of this Schedule as follows.

(2) Subsection (2), apart from paragraphs (b) and (d), applies to the determination of any issue, and the admission or requirement of evidence, relating to alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and to ancillary circumstances as it applies to matters relating to a person’s previous convictions and circumstances ancillary thereto.

(3) Subsection (3) applies to evidence of alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and ancillary circumstances as it applies to evidence of a person’s previous convictions and the circumstances ancillary thereto.

(4) For that purpose, subsection (3) has effect as if—

(a) a reference to subsection (2) or (4) of section 7 were a reference to that subsection as applied by this paragraph, and

(b) the words “or proceedings to which section 8 below applies” were omitted.

(5) Subsection (4) applies for the purpose of excluding the application of paragraph 3.

(6) For that purpose, subsection (4) has effect as if the words “(other than proceedings to which section 8 below applies)” were omitted.

(7) References in the provisions applied by this paragraph to section 4(1) are to be read as references to paragraph 3.”.

79B Medical services in prisons

(1) For section 3A of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 (c.45) (medical services in prisons) substitute—

“3A Medical officers for prisons

(1) The Scottish Ministers must designate one or more medical officers for each prison.

(2) A person may be designated as a medical officer for a prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).

(3) A medical officer has the functions that are conferred on a medical officer for a prison by or under this Act or any other enactment.

(4) A medical officer is not an officer of the prison for the purposes of this Act.”
(5) Rules under section 39 of this Act may provide for the governor of a prison to authorise the carrying out by officers of the prison of a search of any person who is in, or is seeking to enter, the prison for the purpose of providing medical services for any prisoner at the prison.

(6) Nothing in rules made by virtue of subsection (5) allows the governor to authorise an officer of a prison to require a person to remove any of the person’s clothing other than an outer coat, jacket, headgear, gloves and footwear.

(2) In section 41D of that Act (unlawful disclosure of information by medical officers), for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) This section applies to—

(a) a medical officer for a prison, and

(b) any person acting under the supervision of such a medical officer.”.

(3) In section 107 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 (c.33) (officers of contracted out prisons), for subsections (6) to (8) substitute—

“(6) The director must designate one or more medical officers for the prison.

(7) A person may be designated as a medical officer for the prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).”.

(4) In section 110 of that Act (consequential modifications of the 1989 Act etc.)—

(a) in each of subsections (3) and (4), for “3A(6)” substitute “3A(5) and (6)”,

(b) subsection (4A) is repealed, and

(c) in subsection (6), for “3A(1) to (5) (medical services)” substitute “3A(1) and (2) (medical officers)”.

(5) In section 111(3) of that Act (intervention by the Scottish Ministers), in paragraph (e), after “prison” insert “and the medical officer or officers for the prison”.

Miscellaneous

80 Assistance for victim support

(1) The Scottish Ministers may make grants for the purposes of or in connection with the provision of assistance to victims, witnesses or other persons affected by an offence.

(2) Grants under subsection (1) may be made—

(a) to such bodies, and

(b) subject to such conditions, as the Scottish Ministers consider appropriate.

81 Public defence solicitors

(1) In section 28A of the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986 (c.47) (power of Board to employ solicitors to provide criminal assistance)—
(a) in subsection (1), the words from “may” where it first occurs to “accordingly,” are repealed, and
(b) subsection (9A) is repealed.

(2) In section 73 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (public defence), paragraph (b) is repealed.

82 Compensation for miscarriages of justice

(1) In section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 (c.33) (compensation for miscarriages of justice)—

(a) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for—

(a) further circumstances in respect of which a person (or, if dead, the person’s representatives) may be paid compensation for a miscarriage of justice,

(b) circumstances in respect of which a person (or, if dead, the person’s representatives) may be paid compensation for wrongful detention prior to acquittal or a decision by the prosecutor to take no proceedings (or to discontinue proceedings).”,

(b) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2AA) Such an application requires to be made within the period of 3 years starting with—

(a) in the case of compensation under subsection (1), the date on which the conviction is reversed or (as the case may be) the person is pardoned,

(b) in the case of compensation under subsection (1A), whichever is relevant of—

(i) that date, or

(ii) the date on which the person is acquitted or the relevant decision is made known to the person.

(2AB) The Scottish Ministers may accept such an application outwith that time limit if they think it is appropriate in exceptional circumstances to do so.”,

(c) in subsection (4A), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) the seriousness of the offence with which the person was charged or detained (but in respect of which offence the person was not convicted);”,

(d) after subsection (4A) insert—

“(4B) The assessor must also have particular regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers for the purposes of this section.”,

(c) in subsection (5)—

(i) after “quashed” insert “(or set aside)”,

(ii) the word “or” where it occurs immediately after each of paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) is repealed,

(iii) after paragraph (d) add “; or
(e) under section 188(1)(b) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995.”,

(f) after subsection (6) insert—

“(6A) For the purposes of this section, a person suffers punishment as a result of conviction also where (in relation to the conviction) the court imposes some other disposal including by way of—

(a) making a probation order, or

(b) discharging the person absolutely.”,

(g) after subsection (7) insert—

“(8) The power to make an order under subsection (1A) is exercisable by statutory instrument.

(9) A statutory instrument containing such an order is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.”.

(2) In Schedule 12 to that Act (assessors of compensation for miscarriages of justice), in paragraph 1—

(a) immediately after sub-paragraph (c), insert “or”, and

(b) sub-paragraph (e) and the word “or” immediately preceding it are repealed.

83 Financial reporting orders

In section 77 of the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005 (c.15) (financial reporting orders: making in Scotland), after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) A financial reporting order may be made—

(a) on the prosecutor’s motion, or

(b) at the court’s own instance.”.

84 Compensation orders

(1) In section 249 of the 1995 Act (compensation order against convicted person)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) for “Subject to subsections (2) and (4) below, where” substitute “Where”,

(ii) after “compensation” where it second occurs insert “in favour of the victim”,

(b) after subsection (1A) insert—

“(1B) Where a person is convicted of an offence, the court may (instead of or in addition to dealing with the person in any other way), in accordance with subsections (3A) to (3C), make a compensation order requiring the convicted person to pay compensation in favour of—

(a) the victim, or

(b) a person who is liable for funeral expenses in respect of which subsection (3C)(b) allows a compensation order to be made.

(1C) For the purposes of subsection (1B)(a), “victim” means—
(a) a person who has suffered personal injury, loss or damage in respect of which a compensation order may be made by virtue of subsection (3A), or

(b) a relative (as defined in Schedule 1 to the Damages (Scotland) Act 1976 (c.13)) who has suffered bereavement in respect of which subsection (3C)(a) allows a compensation order to be made.”,

(c) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A compensation order may be made in respect of personal injury, loss or damage (apart from loss suffered by a person’s dependents in consequence of a person’s death) that was caused directly or indirectly by an accident arising out of the presence of a motor vehicle on a road if—

(a) it was being used in contravention of section 143(1) of the Road Traffic Act 1988 (c.52), and

(b) no compensation is payable under arrangements to which the Secretary of State is a party.

(3B) Where a compensation order is made by virtue of subsection (3) or (3A), the order may include an amount representing the whole or part of any loss of (including reduction in) preferential rates of insurance if the loss is attributable to the accident.

(3C) A compensation order may be made—

(a) for bereavement in connection with a person’s death resulting from the acts which constituted the offence,

(b) for funeral expenses in connection with such a death, except where the death was due to an accident arising out of the presence of a motor vehicle on a road.”,

(d) in subsection (4)—

(i) for “No” substitute “Unless (and to the extent that) subsections (3) to (3C) allow a compensation order to be made, no”,

(ii) in paragraph (b), the words from “, except” to the end are repealed,

(e) subsection (6) is repealed, and

(f) after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) In summary proceedings before the sheriff, where the fine or maximum fine to which a person is liable on summary conviction of an offence exceeds the prescribed sum, the sheriff may make a compensation order awarding in respect of the offence an amount not exceeding the amount of the fine to which the person is so liable.”.

(2) In section 251 of that Act (review of compensation order)—

(a) paragraph (a) of subsection (1) is repealed, and

(b) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) On the application of the prosecutor at any time before a compensation order has been complied with (or fully complied with), the court may increase the amount payable under the compensation order if it is satisfied that the person against whom it was made—
(a) because of the availability of materially different information about financial circumstances, has more means than were made known to the court when the order was made, or

(b) because of a material change of financial circumstances, has more means than the person had then.”.

PART 6
DISCLOSURE

Meaning of “information”

85  Meaning of “information”
10  (1) In this Part, “information”, in relation to criminal proceedings relating to a person, means material of any kind given to or obtained by the prosecutor in connection with the proceedings.

(3) In sections 96B to 96I, “information”, in relation to appellate proceedings, includes material of any kind given to or obtained by the prosecutor in connection with the appellate proceedings or the earlier proceedings.

(4) In subsection (3)—

“appellate proceedings” has the meaning given by section 96A,
“earlier proceedings” has the meaning given in section 96B(5).

Provision of information to prosecutor

86  Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases
20  (1) This section applies where in a prosecution—

(a) an accused appears for the first time on petition, or

(b) an accused appears for the first time on indictment (not having appeared on petition in relation to the same matter).

(2) As soon as practicable after the appearance, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with details of all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused that the agency is aware of that was obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the matter to which the appearance relates.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

(4) In this section, “investigating agency” means—

(a) a police force, or

(b) such other person who—

(i) engages (to any extent) in the investigation of crime or sudden deaths, and

(ii) submits reports relating to those investigations to the procurator fiscal, as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe by regulations.
87 Continuing duty to provide information: solemn cases

(1) This section applies where—

(a) an investigating agency has complied with section 86(2) in relation to an accused, and

(b) during the relevant period the investigating agency becomes aware that further information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused has been obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the accused’s case.

(2A) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the further information, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with details of it.

(2B) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that further information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

(3) In this section “relevant period” means the period—

(a) beginning with the investigating agency’s compliance with section 86(2) in relation to the accused, and

(b) ending with the agency’s receiving notice from the prosecutor of the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (3), proceedings against an accused are to be taken to be concluded if—

(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,

(b) the accused is acquitted,

(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,

(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,

(e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or

(f) the indictment falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

88A Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases

(1) This section applies where a plea of not guilty is recorded against an accused charged on summary complaint.

(2) As soon as practicable after the recording of the plea, the investigating agency must inform the prosecutor of the existence of all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused that the agency is aware of that was obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the matter to which the plea relates.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.
Continuing duty of investigating agency: summary cases

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) an investigating agency has complied with section 88A(2) in relation to an accused, and
   (b) during the relevant period the investigating agency becomes aware that further information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused has been obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the accused’s case.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the further information, the investigating agency must inform the prosecutor of the existence of the information.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that further information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

(4) In this section, “relevant period” means the period—
   (a) beginning with the investigating agency’s compliance with section 88A(2) in relation to the accused, and
   (b) ending with the agency’s receiving notice from the prosecutor of the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4), proceedings against an accused are to be taken to be concluded if—
   (a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,
   (b) the accused is acquitted,
   (c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,
   (d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,
   (e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or
   (f) the complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information

(1) This section applies where in a prosecution—
   (a) an accused appears for the first time on petition,
   (b) an accused appears for the first time on indictment (not having appeared on petition in relation to the same matter), or
   (c) a plea of not guilty is recorded against an accused charged on summary complaint.

(2) As soon as practicable after the appearance or the recording of the plea, the prosecutor must—
(a) review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and
(b) disclose to the accused the information to which subsection (3) applies.

(3) This subsection applies to information if—

(a) the information would materially weaken or undermine the evidence that is likely to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused,
(b) the information would materially strengthen the accused’s case, or
(c) the information is likely to form part of the evidence to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused.

(7) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2)(b) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed in relation to the same matter (whether because the same matter has been the subject of an earlier petition, indictment or complaint or otherwise).

89A Disclosure of other information: solemn cases

(1) This section applies where by virtue of subsection (2)(b) of section 89 the prosecutor is required to disclose information to an accused who falls within paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (1) of that section.

(2) As soon as practicable after complying with the requirement, the prosecutor must disclose to the accused details of any information which the prosecutor is not required to disclose under section 89(2)(b) but which may be relevant to the case for or against the accused.

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) details of sensitive information.

(4) In subsection (3), “sensitive”, in relation to an item of information, means that if it were to be disclosed there would be a risk of—

(a) causing serious injury, or death, to any person,
(b) obstructing or preventing the prevention, detection, investigation or prosecution of crime, or
(c) causing serious prejudice to the public interest.

90 Continuing duty of prosecutor

(1) This section applies where the prosecutor has complied with section 89(2)(b) in relation to an accused.

(2) During the relevant period, the prosecutor must—

(a) from time to time review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and
(b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.

(2A) As soon as practicable after complying with subsection (2), the prosecutor must disclose to the accused details of any other information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware.

(2B) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2A) details of sensitive information.

(2C) In subsection (2)—

“relevant period” means the period—
(a) beginning with the prosecutor’s compliance with section 89(2)(b) in relation to an accused, and
(b) ending with the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused, “sensitive” has the meaning given by section 89A(4).

(4) For the purposes of subsection (2C), proceedings against an accused are to be taken to be concluded if—

(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,
(b) the accused is acquitted,
(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,
(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,
(e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or
(f) the indictment or complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

Defence statements

94 Defence statements: solemn proceedings

(1) This section applies where the accused lodges a defence statement under section 70A of the 1995 Act.

(1A) As soon as practicable after the prosecutor receives a copy of the defence statement, the prosecutor must—

(a) review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and

(b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.

(2) After section 70 of the 1995 Act insert—

“70A Defence statements

(1) This section applies where an indictment is served on an accused.

(2) The accused must lodge a defence statement at least 14 days before the first diet.

(3) The accused must lodge a defence statement at least 14 days before the preliminary hearing.

(4) At least 7 days before the trial diet the accused must—

(a) where there has been no material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the last defence statement was lodged, lodge a statement stating that fact,

(b) where there has been a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the last defence statement was lodged, lodge a defence statement.
(4A) If after lodging a statement under subsection (2), (3) or (4) there is a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence, the accused must lodge a defence statement.

(4B) Where subsection (4A) requires a defence statement to be lodged, it must be lodged before the trial diet begins unless on cause shown the court allows it to be lodged during the trial diet.

(5) The accused may lodge a defence statement—
(a) at any time before the trial diet, or
(b) during the trial diet if the court on cause shown allows it.

(5A) As soon as practicable after lodging a defence statement or a statement under subsection (4)(a), the accused must send a copy of the statement to the prosecutor and any co-accused.

(6) In this section “defence statement” means a statement setting out—
(a) the nature of the accused’s defence, including any particular defences on which the accused intends to rely,
(b) any matters of fact on which the accused takes issue with the prosecution and the reason for doing so,
(ba) particulars of the matters of fact on which the accused intends to rely for the purposes of the accused’s defence,
(c) any point of law which the accused wishes to take and any authority on which the accused intends to rely for that purpose,
(d) by reference to the accused’s defence, the nature of any information that the accused requires the prosecutor to disclose, and
(e) the reasons why the accused considers that disclosure by the prosecutor of any such information is necessary.”.

(3) In section 78 of the 1995 Act (special defences, incrimination, notice of witnesses etc.), after subsection (1) insert—
“(1A) Subsection (1) does not apply where—
(a) the accused lodges a defence statement under section 70A, and
(b) the accused’s defence consists of or includes a special defence.”.

Defence statements: summary proceedings

(1) This section applies where—
(a) a plea of not guilty is recorded against an accused charged on summary complaint, and
(b) during the relevant period the accused lodges a defence statement.

(2) A defence statement must set out—
(a) the nature of the accused’s defence, including any particular defences on which the accused intends to rely,
(b) any matters of fact on which the accused takes issue with the prosecution and the reason for doing so,
(ba) particulars of the matters of fact on which the accused intends to rely for the purposes of the accused’s defence,
(c) any point of law which the accused wishes to take and any authority on which the accused intends to rely for that purpose,
(d) by reference to the accused’s defence, the nature of any information that the accused wishes the prosecutor to disclose, and
(e) the reasons why the accused considers that disclosure by the prosecutor of any such information is necessary.

(2A) As soon as practicable after lodging a defence statement, the accused must send a copy of the statement to the prosecutor and any co-accused.

(3) As soon as practicable after receiving a copy of the defence statement the prosecutor must—
(a) review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and
(b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.

(4) In this section, the “relevant period”, in relation to the accused, is the period—
(a) beginning with the recording of the accused’s plea of not guilty, and
(b) ending with the conclusion of the proceedings to which the plea relates.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4), proceedings are to be taken to be concluded if—
(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,
(b) the accused is acquitted,
(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,
(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,
(e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or
(f) the complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

(6) In section 149B of the 1995 Act (notice of defences), after subsection (2) insert—
“(2A) Subsection (1) does not apply where—
(a) the accused lodges a defence statement under section 95 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00),
(b) the statement is lodged—
(i) where an intermediate diet is to be held, at or before the diet, or
(ii) where such a diet is not to be held, no later than 10 clear days before the trial diet, and
(c) the accused’s defence consists of or includes a defence to which that subsection applies.”.
95A Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings

(1) This section applies where the accused lodges a defence statement under section 95 at least 14 days before the trial diet.

(2) At least 7 days before the trial diet the accused must—
   (a) where there has been no material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the defence statement was lodged, lodge a statement stating that fact,
   (b) where there has been a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the defence statement was lodged, lodge a defence statement.

(3) If after lodging a statement under subsection (2) there is a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence, the accused must lodge a defence statement.

(4) Where subsection (3) requires a defence statement to be lodged, it must be lodged before the trial diet begins unless on cause shown the court allows it to be lodged during the trial diet.

(5) As soon as practicable after lodging a statement under subsection (2)(a) or a defence statement under subsection (2)(b) or (3), the accused must send a copy of the statement concerned to the prosecutor and any co-accused.

(6) As soon as practicable after receiving a copy of a defence statement lodged under subsection (2)(b) or (3) the prosecutor must—
   (a) review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and
   (b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.

(7) In this section, “defence statement” is to be construed in accordance with section 95(2).

95B Application by accused for ruling on disclosure

(1) This section applies where the accused—
   (a) has lodged a defence statement under section 70A of the 1995 Act or section 95 or 95A of this Act, and
   (b) considers that the prosecutor has failed, in responding to the statement, to disclose to the accused an item of information to which section 89(3) applies (the “information in question”).

(2) The accused may apply to the court for a ruling on whether section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—
   (a) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,
   (b) a description of the information in question, and
(c) the accused’s grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or

(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the accused an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court must—

(a) make a ruling on whether section 89(3) applies to the information in question or to any part of the information in question, and

(b) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the justice of the peace, sheriff or judge who is presiding, or is to preside, at the accused’s trial.

95C Review of ruling under section 95B

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court has made a ruling under section 95B that section 89(3) does not apply to an item of information (the “information in question”), and

(b) during the relevant period—

(i) the accused becomes aware of information (the “secondary information”) that was unavailable to the court at the time it made its ruling, and

(ii) the accused considers that, had the secondary information been available to the court at that time, it would have made a ruling that section 89(3) does apply to the information in question.

(2) The accused may apply to the court which made the ruling for a review of the ruling.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question and the secondary information, and

(c) the accused’s grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or
(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the accused an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court may—

(a) affirm the ruling being reviewed, or

(b) recall that ruling and—

(i) make a ruling that section 89(3) applies to the information in question or to any part of the information in question, and

(ii) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the justice of the peace, sheriff or judge who dealt with the application for the ruling that is being reviewed.

(9) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the ruling being reviewed.

(10) In this section, “relevant period”, in relation to an accused, means the period—

(a) beginning with the making of the ruling being reviewed, and

(b) ending with the conclusion of proceedings against the accused.

(11) For the purposes of subsection (10), proceedings against the accused are taken to be concluded if—

(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,

(b) the accused is acquitted,

(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,

(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,

(e) the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or

(f) the indictment or complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

95D Appeals against rulings under section 95B

(1) The prosecutor or the accused may, within the period of 7 days beginning with the day on which a ruling is made under section 95B, appeal to the High Court against the ruling.

(2) Where an appeal is brought under subsection (1), the court of first instance or the High Court may—

(a) postpone any trial diet that has been appointed for such period as it thinks appropriate,

(b) adjourn or further adjourn any hearing for such period as it thinks appropriate,
(c) direct that any period of postponement or adjournment under paragraph (a) or (b) or any part of such period is not to count toward any time limit applying in the case.

(3) In disposing of an appeal under subsection (1), the High Court may—

(a) affirm the ruling, or

(b) remit the case back to the court of first instance with such directions as the High Court thinks appropriate.

(4) This section does not affect any other right of appeal which any party may have in relation to a ruling under section 95B.

Effect of guilty plea

96 Effect of guilty plea

(1) This section applies where—

(a) by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b) or 95(3)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose information to an accused, but

(b) before the prosecutor does so, a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused.

(2) The prosecutor need not comply with the requirement in so far as it relates to the disclosure of information which but for that plea would have been likely to have formed part of the evidence to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused.

(3) Subsections (1) and (2) cease to apply if the accused withdraws the plea of guilty.

Disclosure after conclusion of proceedings at first instance

96A Sections 96B to 96I: interpretation

In sections 96B to 96I—

“appellant”, in relation to appellate proceedings, includes a person authorised by an order under section 303A(4) of the 1995 Act to institute or continue the proceedings,

“appellate proceedings” means—

(a) an appeal under section 106(1)(a) or (f) of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(b) an appeal under paragraph (b), (ba), (bb), (c), (d), (db) or (dc) of subsection (1) of section 106 of the 1995 Act which brings under review in accordance with subsection (3)(a) of that section an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(c) an appeal under section 175(2)(a) or (d) of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(d) an appeal under paragraph (b), (c) or (cb) of subsection (2) of section 175 of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice which is based on the type of miscarriage described in subsection (5) of that section,

(e) an appeal to the Supreme Court against a determination by the High Court of Justiciary of a devolution issue,
(f) an appeal against conviction by bill of suspension under section 191(1) of the 1995 Act,

(g) an appeal against conviction by bill of advocation,

(h) a petition to the nobile officium in respect of a matter arising out of criminal proceedings which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice which is based on the existence and significance of new evidence,

(i) an appeal under section 62(1)(b) of the 1995 Act against a finding under section 55(2) of that Act,

(j) the referral to the High Court of Justiciary under section 194B of the 1995 Act of—

(i) a conviction, or

(ii) a finding under section 55(2) of that Act.

96B Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance

(1) This section applies where appellate proceedings are instituted in relation to an appellant.

(2) As soon as practicable after the relevant act the prosecutor must—

(a) review all information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the grounds of appeal in the appellate proceedings, and

(b) disclose to the appellant any information that falls within subsection (3).

(3) Information falls within this subsection if it is—

(a) information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose,

(b) information to which, during the earlier proceedings, the prosecutor considered paragraph (a) or (b) of section 89(3) did not apply but to which the prosecutor now considers one or both of those paragraphs would apply, or

(c) information of which the prosecutor has become aware since the disposal of the earlier proceedings that, had the prosecutor been aware of it during those proceedings, the prosecutor would have been required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b).

(4) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the appellant.

(5) In this section—

“earlier proceedings”, in relation to appellate proceedings, means the proceedings to which the appellate proceedings relate,

“relevant act” means—

(a) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) of the relevant definition, the granting under section 107(1)(a) of the 1995 Act of leave to appeal,

(b) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (c) or (d) of the relevant definition, the granting under section 180(1)(a) or, as the case may be, 187(1)(a) of that Act of leave to appeal,
(c) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (e) of the relevant definition, the granting of leave to appeal by the High Court of Justiciary or, as the case may be, the Supreme Court,

(d) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (f) of the relevant definition—

(i) if leave to appeal is required, the granting under section 191(2) of that Act of leave to appeal,

(ii) if leave to appeal is not required, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the bill of suspension and the interlocutor granting first order for service,

(e) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (g) of the relevant definition, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the bill of advocation and the interlocutor granting first order for service,

(f) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (h) of the relevant definition, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the petition and the interlocutor granting first order for service,

(g) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (i) of the relevant definition, the lodging of the appeal,

(h) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (j) of the relevant definition, the lodging of the grounds of appeal by the person to whom the referral relates,

“relevant definition” means the definition of appellate proceedings in section 96A,

96C Continuing duty of prosecutor

(1) This section applies where the prosecutor has complied with section 96B(2) in relation to an appellant.

(2) During the relevant period, the prosecutor must—

(a) from time to time review all information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the grounds of appeal in the appellate proceedings which relate to the appellant, and

(b) disclose to the appellant any information that falls within section 96B(3).

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the appellant.

(4) In subsection (2), “relevant period” means the period—

(a) beginning with the prosecutor’s compliance with section 96B(2), and

(b) ending with the relevant conclusion.

(5) In subsection (4), “relevant conclusion” means—

(a) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) of the relevant definition—
(i) the lodging under section 116(1) of the 1995 Act of a notice of abandonment, or
(ii) the disposal of the appeal under section 118 of that Act,
(b) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (c) or (d) of the relevant definition—
(i) the disposal of the appeal under section 183(1)(b) to (d) of that Act,
(ii) the abandonment of the appeal under section 184(1) of that Act,
(iii) the setting aside of the conviction or sentence or, as the case may be, conviction and sentence under section 188(1) of that Act, or
(iv) the disposal of the appeal under section 190(1) of that Act,
(c) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (e), (f), (g) or (h) of the relevant definition, the disposal or abandonment of the appeal,
(d) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (i) of the relevant definition, the disposal of the appeal under section 62(6) of that Act or the abandonment of the appeal,
(e) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (j) of the relevant definition—
(i) if the referral or finding is being treated as if it were an appeal under Part 8 of that Act, the conclusion mentioned in paragraph (a) above,
(ii) if the referral or finding is being treated as if it were an appeal under Part 10 of that Act, the conclusion mentioned in paragraph (b) above or, where the referral or finding proceeds by way of bill of suspension, bill of advocation or petition to the nobile officium, paragraph (c) above.

(6) In this section, “relevant definition” has the meaning given by section 96B(5).

96D Application to prosecutor for further disclosure

(1) This section applies where—
(a) the prosecutor has complied with section 96B(2) in relation to an appellant, and
(b) the appellant lodges a further disclosure request—
(i) during the preliminary period, or
(ii) if the court on cause shown allows it, after the preliminary period but before the relevant conclusion.
(2) A further disclosure request must set out—
(a) by reference to the grounds of appeal, the nature of the information that the appellant wishes the prosecutor to disclose, and
(b) the reasons why the appellant considers that disclosure by the prosecutor of any such information is necessary.
(3) As soon as practicable after receiving a copy of the further disclosure request the prosecutor must—
(a) review any information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the request, and
(b) disclose to the appellant any of that information that falls within section 96B(3).

(4) In this section—

“preliminary period”, in relation to the appellate proceedings concerned, means the period beginning with the relevant act and ending with the beginning of the hearing of the appellate proceedings,

“relevant act” has the meaning given by section 96B(5),

“relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section 96C(5).

96E Further duty of prosecutor: conviction upheld on appeal

(1) This section applies where—

(a) in an appeal to the High Court of Justiciary, the High Court upholds the conviction of a person, and

(b) after the conclusion of the appeal the prosecutor becomes aware of—

(i) information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose, or

(ii) information that falls within section 96B(3) which would have related to the grounds of appeal but was not disclosed.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(4) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.

(5) In this section, “earlier proceedings” has the meaning given by section 96B(5).

96F Further duty of prosecutor: convicted persons

(1) This section applies where—

(a) a person has been convicted,

(b) after conviction the prosecutor becomes aware of information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose, and

(c) section 96E does not apply.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) If the person institutes appellate proceedings in relation to the conviction, the prosecutor need not comply with the duty imposed by subsection (2) during the appropriate period.

(4) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(5) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.

(6) In this section—
“appropriate period”, in relation to appellate proceedings, means the period beginning with the relevant act and ending with the relevant conclusion,

“earlier proceedings” has the meaning given by section 96B(5),

“relevant act” has the meaning given by section 96B(5),

“relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section 96C(5).

96G Further duty of prosecutor: appeal against acquittal

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the prosecutor appeals against the acquittal of a person, and

(b) after lodging the appeal the prosecutor becomes aware of information which relates to the appeal and falls within section 96B(3).

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(4) The prosecutor ceases to be subject to the duty imposed by subsection (2) on the disposal of the appeal by the High Court of Justiciary.

(5) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.

Court rulings on disclosure: appellate proceedings

96H Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure

(1) This section applies where the appellant—

(a) has made a further disclosure request under section 96D, and

(b) considers that the prosecutor has failed, in responding to the request, to disclose to the appellant an item of information falling within section 96B(3) (the “information in question”).

(2) The appellant may apply to the court for a ruling on whether the information in question falls within section 96B(3).

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question, and

(c) the appellant’s grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section 96B(3).

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or
(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section 96B(3).

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the appellant an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court must—

(a) make a ruling on whether the information in question, or any part of the information in question, falls within section 96B(3), and

(b) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) In this section, “the court” means the court before which the appellant’s appeal is brought.

(9) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the judges who are to hear the appellant’s appeal.

96I Review of ruling under section 96H

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court has made a ruling under section 96H that an item of information (the “information in question”) does not fall within section 96B(3), and

(b) during the relevant period—

(i) the appellant becomes aware of information (“secondary information”) that was unavailable to the court at the time it made its ruling, and

(ii) the appellant considers that, had the secondary information been available to the court at that time, it would have made a ruling that the information in question does fall within section 96B(3).

(2) The appellant may apply to the court which made the ruling for a review of the ruling.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question and the secondary information, and

(c) the appellant’s grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section 96B(3).

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or

(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section 96B(3).

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the appellant an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court may—
(a) affirm the ruling being reviewed, or
(b) recall that ruling and—
   (i) make a ruling that the information in question, or any part of the information in question, falls within section 96B(3), and
   (ii) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the judges who dealt with the application for the ruling that is being reviewed.

(9) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the ruling being reviewed.

(10) In this section, “relevant period”, in relation to an appellant, means the period—
   (a) beginning with the making of the ruling being reviewed, and
   (b) ending with the relevant conclusion.

(11) In subsection (10), “relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section 96C(5).

Redaction

92 Redaction of non-disclosable information by prosecutor

(1) Subsection (2) applies where—
   (a) by virtue of this Part the prosecutor is required to disclose an item of information
       (the “disclosable information”), and
   (b) the disclosable information forms part of, or contains, other information (the “non-disclosable information”) which the prosecutor is not required to disclose by virtue of any of those sections.

(2) Before disclosing the disclosable information, the prosecutor may (whether by redaction or otherwise) remove or obscure the non-disclosable information.

Means of disclosure

97 Means of disclosure

(1) This section applies where by virtue of this Part the prosecutor is required to disclose information to an accused.

(2) The prosecutor may disclose the information by any means.

(3) In particular, the prosecutor may disclose the information by enabling the accused to inspect it at a reasonable time and in a reasonable place.

(4) Subsection (5) applies if the information is contained in—
   (a) a precognition,
   (b) a victim statement,
   (c) a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor does not intend to call to give evidence in the proceedings, or
(d) where the proceedings relating to the accused are summary proceedings, a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor intends to call to give evidence in the proceedings.

(5) In complying with the requirement, the prosecutor need not disclose the precognition or, as the case may be, statement.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where the proceedings relating to the accused are solemn proceedings and—

(a) the information is contained in a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor intends to call to give evidence in the proceedings, or

(b) the information is contained in a statement and the prosecutor intends to apply under section 259 of the 1995 Act to have evidence of the statement admitted in the proceedings.

(7) In complying with the requirement, the prosecutor must disclose the statement.

Confidentiality

Confidentiality of disclosed information

(1) This section applies where by virtue of this Part the prosecutor discloses information to an accused.

(2) The accused must not use or disclose the information or anything recorded in it other than in accordance with subsection (3).

(3) The accused may use or disclose the information—

(a) for the purposes of the proper preparation and presentation of the accused’s case in the proceedings in relation to which the information was disclosed (“the original proceedings”),

(b) with a view to the taking of an appeal in relation to the matter giving rise to the original proceedings,

(c) for the purposes of the proper preparation and presentation of the accused’s case in any such appeal.

(4) A person to whom information is disclosed by virtue of subsection (3) must not use or disclose the information or anything recorded in it other than for the purpose for which it was disclosed.

(4A) If despite subsection (2) the accused discloses the information or anything recorded in it other than in accordance with subsection (3), a person to whom information is disclosed must not use or disclose the information or anything recorded in it.

(4B) Subsections (2), (4) and (4A) do not apply in relation to the use or disclosure of information which is in the public domain at the time of the use or disclosure.

(5) In subsection (3) “appeal” includes—

(a) the reference of a case to the High Court of Justiciary by the Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission under section 194B of the 1995 Act,

(b) a petition to the nobile officium,

(c) proceedings in the European Court of Human Rights.
(6) Nothing in this section affects any other restriction or prohibition on the use or disclosure of information, whether the restriction or prohibition arises by virtue of an enactment (whenever passed or made) or otherwise.

99 Contravention of section 98

(1) A person who knowingly uses or discloses information in contravention of section 98 commits an offence.

(2) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—
   (a) on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both,
   (b) on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years or to a fine or to both.

Exemptions from disclosure

91 Exemptions from disclosure

Information must not be disclosed by virtue of this Part to the extent that it is material the disclosure of which is prohibited by section 17 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 (c.23).

Applications to court: orders preventing or restricting disclosure

102 Application for section 106 order

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or 95A(6)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose an item of information to an accused,
   (b) section 89(3)(a) or (b) applies to the information, and
   (c) the prosecutor considers that subsection (2) applies.

(2) This subsection applies if disclosure of the item of information would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest.

(3) The prosecutor must apply to the court for an order under section 106 (a “section 106 order”).

103 Application for non-notification order or exclusion order

(1) This section applies where the prosecutor is required by section 102(3) to apply to the court for a section 106 order.

(2) If the application for a section 106 order relates to solemn proceedings, the prosecutor may also apply to the court for—
   (a) a non-notification order and an exclusion order, or
   (b) an exclusion order (but not a non-notification order).

(3) If the application for a section 106 order relates to summary proceedings, the prosecutor may also apply to the court for an exclusion order.
A non-notification order is an order under section 104 prohibiting notice being given to the accused of—

(a) the making of an application for—

(i) the section 106 order to which the non-notification order relates,

(ii) the non-notification order, and

(iii) an exclusion order, and

(b) the determination of those applications.

An exclusion order is an order under section 104 or 105 prohibiting the accused from attending or making representations in proceedings for the determination of the application for a section 106 order to which the exclusion order relates.

Subsection (7) applies where the prosecutor applies—

(a) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) for a non-notification order and an exclusion order, or

(b) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) or (b) for an exclusion order.

Before determining in accordance with section 106 the application for the section 106 order, the court must—

(a) in accordance with section 104, determine any applications for a non-notification order and an exclusion order, and

(b) in accordance with section 105, determine any application for an exclusion order.

This section applies where the prosecutor applies for a non-notification order and an exclusion order.

On receiving the application, the court must appoint a hearing to determine whether a non-notification order should be made.

The accused is not to be notified of—

(a) the applications for the section 106 order, non-notification order and exclusion order, or

(b) the hearing appointed under subsection (2).

The accused is not to be given the opportunity to be heard or be represented at the hearing.

If, after giving the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (6) are met, the court may make a non-notification order.

Those conditions are—

(a) that disclosure to the accused of the making of the application for the section 106 order would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and

(c) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of a non-notification order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

If the court makes a non-notification order it must also make an exclusion order.
(8) If the court refuses to make a non-notification order the court must appoint a hearing to determine the application for an exclusion order.

(9) If after giving the prosecutor and, subject to subsection (10), the accused an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (4) of section 105 are met, the court may make an exclusion order under subsection (3) of that section.

(10) On the application of the prosecutor the court may exclude the accused from the hearing appointed under subsection (8).

105 Application for exclusion order

(1) This section applies where by virtue of section 103(2)(b) or (3) the prosecutor applies for an exclusion order (but not a non-notification order).

(2) On receiving the application the court must appoint a hearing.

(2A) On the application of the prosecutor the court may exclude the accused from the hearing.

(3) If after giving the prosecutor and, subject to subsection (2A), the accused an opportunity to be heard on the applications for the exclusion order and the section 106 order to which it relates the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (4) are met, the court may make an exclusion order.

(4) Those conditions are—

(a) that disclosure to the accused of the nature of the information to which the application for the section 106 order relates would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and

(c) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of an exclusion order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

106 Application for section 106 order: determination

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the prosecutor applies for a section 106 order, and

(b) any application for a non-notification order or an exclusion order has been determined by the court.

(2) The court must—

(a) consider the item of information to which the application for a section 106 order relates,

(b) give the prosecutor and (if the court has not made an exclusion order) the accused the opportunity to be heard, and

(c) determine—

(i) whether the conditions in subsection (3) apply, and

(ii) if so, whether subsection (4) applies.

(3) The conditions are—

(a) that by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or 95A(6)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose the item of information,

(aa) that section 89(3)(a) or (b) applies to the information,
(b) that if the item of information were to be disclosed there would be a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest,
(c) that withholding the item of information would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial, and
(d) that the public interest would be protected only if a section 106 order were to be made.

(4) This subsection applies if the court considers that the item of information could be disclosed or partly disclosed in such a way that—
(a) the condition in paragraph (b) of subsection (3) would not be met, and
(b) the disclosure (or partial disclosure) would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(4A) If the court considers that subsection (3) (but not subsection (4)) applies, it may make a section 106 order preventing disclosure of the information.

(4B) If the court considers that subsection (4) applies, it may make a section 106 order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the manner specified in the order.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4) the ways in which the item of information might be disclosed or partly disclosed include in particular—
(a) providing the information after (whether by redaction or otherwise) removing or obscuring parts of it,
(b) providing extracts or summaries of the information or part of it.

Orders preventing or restricting disclosure: Secretary of State

106A Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State

(1) The Secretary of State may apply to the relevant court for an order under this section (a “section 106A order”) in relation to the proposed disclosure by the prosecutor to the accused in relevant criminal proceedings of information which the prosecutor—
(a) is required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or 95A(6)(b), or
(b) intends to disclose otherwise than by virtue of this Part.

(2) If the Secretary of State also makes an application in accordance with subsection (2) or (3) of section 106B, the relevant court must comply with subsections (6) and (7) of that section.

(3) Where an application is made under subsection (1), the relevant court must—
(a) consider the item of information to which the application relates,
(b) give the Secretary of State and the prosecutor the opportunity to be heard,
(c) if the application relates to information which the prosecutor is required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or 95A(6)(b) and a non-attendance order has not been made, give the accused the opportunity to be heard, and
(d) determine—
(i) whether the conditions in subsection (4) apply, and
(ii) if so, whether subsection (5) applies.

(4) The conditions are—

(a) that if the item of information were to be disclosed there would be a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest,

(b) that withholding the item of information would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial, and

(c) that the public interest would be protected only if a section 106A order of the type mentioned in subsection (6) were to be made.

(5) This subsection applies if the court considers that the item of information could be disclosed or partly disclosed in such a way that—

(a) the condition in paragraph (a) of subsection (4) would not be met, and

(b) the disclosure (or partial disclosure) would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(6) If the court considers that subsection (4) (but not subsection (5)) applies, it may make a section 106A order preventing disclosure of the information.

(7) If the court considers that subsection (5) applies, it may make a section 106A order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the manner specified in the order.

(8) For the purposes of subsection (7) the order may in particular specify that—

(a) the item of information be disclosed after removing or obscuring parts of it (whether by redaction or otherwise),

(b) extracts or summaries of the item of information (or part of it) be disclosed instead of the item of information.

(9) If an application is made under this section the relevant criminal proceedings must be adjourned until the application is disposed of or withdrawn.

(10) In this section and sections 106B to 106D—

“relevant court” means the court before which relevant criminal proceedings are taking place,

“relevant criminal proceedings” means criminal proceedings relating to the item of information to which the application under this section relates.

106B Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State

(1) This section applies where the Secretary of State applies for a section 106A order.

(2) If the application under section 106A relates to solemn proceedings, the Secretary of State may also apply to the relevant court for—

(a) a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order, or

(b) a non-attendance order (but not a restricted notification order).

(3) If the application under section 106A relates to summary proceedings, the Secretary of State may also apply to the court for a non-attendance order.

(4) A restricted notification order is an order under section 106C prohibiting notice being given to the accused of—
(a) the making of an application for—
   (i) the section 106A order to which the restricted notification order relates,
   (ii) the restricted notification order, and
   (iii) a non-attendance order, and
(b) the determination of those applications.

(5) A non-attendance order is an order under section 106D prohibiting the accused from attending or making representations in proceedings for the determination of the application for the section 106A order to which the non-attendance order relates.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where the Secretary of State applies—
   (a) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order, or
   (b) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) or (b) for a non-attendance order.

(7) Before determining the application for the section 106A order, the court must—
   (a) in accordance with section 106C, determine any application for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order,
   (b) in accordance with section 106D, determine any application for a non-attendance order.

106C Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order

(1) This section applies where by virtue of section 106B(2)(a) the Secretary of State applies for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order.

(2) On receiving the application, the relevant court must appoint a hearing to determine whether a restricted notification order should be made.

(3) The accused is not to be notified of—
   (a) the applications for the section 106A order, the restricted notification order and the non-attendance order, or
   (b) the hearing appointed under subsection (2).

(4) The accused is not to be given the opportunity to be heard or be represented at the hearing.

(5) If, after giving the Secretary of State and the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (6) are met, the court may make a restricted notification order.

(6) Those conditions are—
   (a) that disclosure to the accused of the making of the application for the section 106A order would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and
   (b) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of a restricted notification order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(7) If the court makes a restricted notification order, it must also make a non-attendance order.
(8) If the court refuses to make a restricted notification order, the court must appoint a hearing to determine the application for a non-attendance order.

(9) If after giving the Secretary of State, the prosecutor and, subject to subsection (10), the accused an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (5) of section 106D are met, the court may make a non-attendance order under subsection (4) of that section.

(10) On the application of the Secretary of State the court may exclude the accused from the hearing appointed under subsection (8).

106D Application for non-attendance order

(1) This section applies where by virtue of section 106B(2)(b) the Secretary of State applies for a non-attendance order (but not a restricted notification order).

(2) On receiving the application, the relevant court must appoint a hearing.

(3) On the application of the Secretary of State the court may exclude the accused from the hearing.

(4) If after giving the Secretary of State, the prosecutor and, if not excluded under subsection (3), the accused an opportunity to be heard the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (5) are met, the court may make a non-attendance order.

(5) Those conditions are—

(a) that disclosure to the accused of the nature of the information to which the application for the section 106A order relates would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and

(b) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of a non-attendance order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

Special counsel

107 Special counsel

(1) This section applies where the court is determining—

(a) an application for a non-notification order,

(aa) an application for an exclusion order,

(ab) an application for a section 106 order,

(ac) an application for a restricted notification order,

(ad) an application for a non-attendance order,

(ae) an application for a section 106A order,

(b) an application for review of the grant or refusal of any of those orders,

(c) an appeal relating to any of those orders.

(2) If the condition in subsection (3) is met, the court may appoint a person (“special counsel”) to represent the interests of the accused in relation to the determination of the application, review or appeal.

(3) The condition is that the court considers that the appointment of special counsel is necessary to ensure that the accused receives a fair trial.
(4) Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in a non-notification case, the court—
   (a) must give the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard, but
   (b) must not give the accused an opportunity to be heard.

(5) Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in a restricted notification case, the court—
   (a) must give the prosecutor and the Secretary of State an opportunity to be heard,
   (b) must not give the accused an opportunity to be heard.

(6) Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case, the court must give all the parties an opportunity to be heard.

(7) The prosecutor may appeal to the High Court against a decision of the court not to appoint special counsel in any case.

(8) The Secretary of State may appeal to the High Court against a decision of the court not to appoint special counsel in a restricted notification case.

(9) The accused may appeal to the High Court against a decision not to appoint special counsel in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case.

(10) In this section and section 107B—
    “non-notification case” means a case where the court is determining—
    (a) an application for a non-notification order,
    (b) an application for review of the grant or refusal of a non-notification order,
    (c) an appeal relating to such an order,
    “restricted notification case” means a case where the court is determining—
    (a) an application for a restricted notification order,
    (b) an application for review of the grant or refusal of a restricted notification order,
    (c) an appeal relating to such an order.

107A Persons eligible for appointment as special counsel

The court may appoint a person as special counsel under section 107(2) only if the person is a solicitor or advocate.

107B Role of special counsel

(1) Special counsel’s duty is, in relation to the determination of the relevant application or appeal, to act in the best interests of the accused with a view only to ensuring that the accused receives a fair trial.

(2) Special counsel—
    (a) is entitled to see the confidential information, but
    (b) must not disclose any of the confidential information to the accused or the accused’s representative (if any).
(3) Special counsel appointed in a non-notification case or a restricted notification case must not—
(a) disclose to the accused or the accused’s representative (if any) the making of the relevant application or appeal, or
(b) otherwise communicate with the accused or the accused’s representative (if any) about the relevant application or appeal.

(4) Special counsel appointed in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case must not communicate with the accused about the relevant application or appeal except—
(a) with the permission of the court, and
(b) where permission is given, in accordance with such conditions as the court may impose.

(5) Before deciding whether to grant permission, the court must give—
(a) the prosecutor, and
(b) in the case of an application for a section 106A order or a non-attendance order, the Secretary of State, an opportunity to be heard.

(6) In this section—
“the confidential information” means—
(a) the information to which the relevant application or appeal relates, and
(b) a copy of the relevant application or appeal,
“relevant application or appeal” means the application or appeal referred to in section 107(1) in respect of which special counsel is appointed.

Appeals

107C Appeals

(1) The prosecutor may appeal to the High Court against—
(a) the making of a section 106 order under section 106(4B),
(b) the making of a section 106A order,
(c) the making of a restricted notification order,
(d) the making of a non-attendance order,
(e) the refusal of an application for a non-notification order,
(f) the refusal of an application for an exclusion order, or
(g) the refusal of an application for a section 106 order.

(2) The accused may appeal to the High Court against the making of—
(a) an exclusion order under section 105(3),
(b) a section 106 order,
(c) a section 106A order, or
(d) a non-attendance order.
(3) The Secretary of State may appeal to the High Court against—
   (a) the making of a section 106A order under section 106A(7),
   (b) the refusal of an application for a restricted notification order,
   (c) the refusal of an application for a non-attendance order, or
   (d) the refusal of an application for a section 106A order.

(4) If special counsel was appointed in relation to an application for a non-notification order, special counsel may appeal to the High Court against the making of—
   (a) the non-notification order, or
   (b) a section 106 order in relation to the same item of information.

(5) If special counsel was appointed in relation to an application for a restricted notification order, special counsel may appeal to the High Court against the making of—
   (a) the restricted notification order, or
   (b) a section 106A order in relation to the same item of information.

(6) An appeal must be lodged not later than 7 days after the decision appealed against.

(7) The prosecutor is entitled to be heard in any appeal under this section.

(8) The accused is entitled to be heard in an appeal under—
   (a) subsection (1)(a) or (g) or (2)(b) unless—
      (i) a non-notification order has been made, or
      (ii) an exclusion order has been made,
   (b) subsection (1)(b), (2)(c) or (3)(a) or (d) unless—
      (i) a restricted notification order has been made, or
      (ii) a non-attendance order has been made,
   (c) subsection (1)(d), (2)(d) or (3)(c) unless the court, on the application of the Secretary of State, excludes the accused from the hearing,
   (d) subsection (1)(f) or (2)(a) unless the court, on the application of the prosecutor excludes the accused from the hearing.

(9) The Secretary of State is entitled to be heard in an appeal under subsection (1)(b), (c) or (d), (2)(c) or (d) or (5).

Review of section 106 and 106A orders

(1) Review of section 106 order
   This section applies where—
   (a) the court makes a section 106 order, and
   (b) during the relevant period the prosecutor or the accused becomes aware of information that was unavailable to the court at the time when the order was made.

(2) The prosecutor or, as the case may be, special counsel or the accused may apply to the court to review the section 106 order.
(3) Except in the case mentioned in subsection (4), the same persons are entitled to be heard on the application for review as were entitled to be heard on the application for the section 106 order.

(4) If—

(a) a non-notification order was granted in relation to the section 106 order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section 104(6) are met,

the court may, where the prosecutor or, as the case may be, special counsel applies for the review, make an order prohibiting notification being given to the accused of the application for review.

(5) If—

(a) an exclusion order was granted in relation to the section 106 order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section 105(4) are met,

the court may, where the prosecutor or, as the case may be, special counsel or the accused applies for the review, exclude the accused from the review.

(6) If the court is not satisfied that the conditions mentioned in section 106(3) are met, the court may—

(a) recall the section 106 order, or

(b) recall the section 106 order and make an order requiring disclosure to the specified extent.

(7) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the section 106 order.

(8) In this section—

“specified” means specified in the order of the court,

“the relevant period”, in relation to an accused, means the period—

(a) beginning with the making of the section 106 order, and

(b) ending with the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.

(9) For the purposes of this section, proceedings against an accused are to be taken to be concluded if—

(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,

(b) the accused is acquitted,

(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,

(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,

(e) any appeal by the prosecutor is determined or abandoned, or

(f) the accused is convicted and any appeal is determined or abandoned.

111A Review of section 106A order

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court makes a section 106A order, and
(b) during the relevant period the Secretary of State, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused becomes aware of information that was unavailable to the court at the time when the order was made.

(2) The Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused may apply to the court to review the order.

(3) Except in the case mentioned in subsection (4), the same persons are entitled to be heard on the application for review as were entitled to be heard on the application for the order.

(4) If—

(a) a restricted notification order was granted in relation to the order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section 106C(6) are met, the court may, where the Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor or special counsel applies for the review, make an order prohibiting notification of the application for review being given to the accused.

(5) If—

(a) a non-attendance order was granted in relation to the order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section 106D(5) are met,

the court may, where the Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused applies for the review, exclude the accused from the review.

(6) If the court is not satisfied that the conditions mentioned in section 106A(4) are met, the court may—

(a) recall the order which is under review, or

(b) recall the order which is under review and make an order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the specified manner.

(7) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the order which is under review.

(8) In this section—

“specified” means specified in the order of the court,

“the relevant period”, in relation to an accused, means the period—

(a) beginning with the making of the section 106A order, and

(b) ending with the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.

112 Review by court of section 106 order and section 106A order

(1) This section applies where the court makes a section 106 order or a section 106A order.

(2) During the relevant period, the court must from time to time consider in relation to each order whether, having regard to the information of which the court is aware, the order concerned continues to be appropriate.
(3) If the court considers that the order concerned might no longer be appropriate, the court must appoint a hearing to review the matter.

(4) In this section “the relevant period” has the same meaning as in section 111(8).

Applications and reviews: general

5 113 Applications and reviews: general provisions

(1) This section applies in relation to—
   (a) an application for an order mentioned in subsection (2), and
   (b) a review relating to such an order.

(2) The orders are—
   (a) a non-notification order,
   (b) an exclusion order,
   (c) a section 106 order.

(3) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application or review is to be assigned to the same justice of the peace, sheriff or, as the case may be, judge as has been (or is to be assigned) to the trial diet in the proceedings against the accused to which the application relates.

(4) The accused is not entitled to see or be made aware of the contents of an application for—
   (a) a non-notification order,
   (b) an exclusion order,
   (c) a section 106 order,
   (d) a review made by the prosecutor.

Code of practice

5 114 Code of practice

(1) The Lord Advocate—
   (a) must issue a code of practice providing guidance about this Part, and
   (b) may from time to time revise the code for the time being in force.

(2) The persons mentioned in subsection (3) must have regard to the code of practice for the time being in force in carrying out their functions in relation to the investigation and reporting of crime and sudden deaths.

(3) Those persons are—
   (a) police forces,
   (b) prosecutors,
   (c) such other persons who—
      (i) engage (to any extent) in the investigation of crime or sudden deaths, and
      (ii) submit reports relating to those investigations to the procurator fiscal, as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe by regulations.
(4) The Lord Advocate must lay before the Scottish Parliament any code or revised code issued under this section.

Acts of adjournal

115 Acts of adjournal

The High Court may by act of adjournal make such rules as it considers necessary or expedient for the purposes of, in consequence of, or for giving full effect to, any provision of this Part.

Abolition of common law

115A Abolition of common law rules about disclosure

(1) The provisions of this Part replace any equivalent common law rules about disclosure of information by the prosecutor in connection with criminal proceedings.

(2) The common law rules about disclosure of information by the prosecutor in connection with criminal proceedings are abolished in so far as they are replaced by or are inconsistent with the provisions of this Part.

(3) Sections 95B and 96H do not affect any right under the common law of an accused or appellant to seek disclosure or recovery of information by or from the prosecutor by means of a procedure other than an application under one or other of those sections.

(4) Subsection (5) applies where, following an application (the “earlier disclosure application”) by the accused or the appellant under section 95B or section 96H, the court has made a ruling that (as the case may be)—

(a) section 89(3) does not apply to information, or

(b) information does not fall within section 96B(3).

(5) The accused or, as the case may be, the appellant, is not entitled to seek the disclosure or recovery of the same information by or from the prosecutor by means of any other procedure at common law on grounds that are substantially the same as any of those on which the earlier disclosure application was made.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where, following an application (the “earlier common law application”) by the accused under a procedure other than an application under section 95B or 96H, the court has decided not to make an order for the recovery or disclosure of information by or from the prosecutor.

(7) The accused or, as the case may be, the appellant is not entitled to make an application under section 95B or 96H in relation to the same information on grounds that are substantially the same as any of those on which the earlier common law application was made.

(8) In this section, “appellant” has the meaning given by section 96A.

Interpretation of Part 6

116 Interpretation of Part 6

(1) In this Part—

“investigating agency” has the meaning given by section 86(4),
“procurator fiscal” and “prosecutor” have the meanings given by section 307(1) of the 1995 Act.

(2) References in the following sections to the accused include references to a solicitor or advocate acting on behalf of the accused—

(a) section 89(2)(b),

(aa) section 89A(2),

(b) section 90(1),

(d) section 95(1)(b),

(e) section 97,

(f) section 98(1), and (2) and (where it first occurs) (3),

(h) section 102,

(i) section 103,

(j) section 104,

(k) section 105,

(l) section 106(2), and

(m) section 111(1), (2), (4) and (5).

PART 7
MENTAL DISORDER AND UNFITNESS FOR TRIAL

Criminal responsibility of persons with mental disorder

Before section 52 of the 1995 Act insert—

“Criminal responsibility of mentally disordered persons

51A Criminal responsibility of persons with mental disorder

(1) A person is not criminally responsible for conduct constituting an offence, and is to be acquitted of the offence, if the person was at the time of the conduct unable by reason of mental disorder to appreciate the nature or wrongfulness of the conduct.

(2) But a person does not lack criminal responsibility for such conduct if the mental disorder in question consists only of a personality disorder which is characterised solely or principally by abnormally aggressive or seriously irresponsible conduct.

(3) The defence set out in subsection (1) is a special defence.

(4) The special defence may be stated only by the person charged with the offence and it is for that person to establish it on the balance of probabilities.

(5) In this section, “conduct” includes acts and omissions.
Diminished responsibility

51B Diminished responsibility

(1) A person who would otherwise be convicted of murder is instead to be convicted of culpable homicide on grounds of diminished responsibility if the person’s ability to determine or control conduct for which the person would otherwise be convicted of murder was, at the time of the conduct, substantially impaired by reason of abnormality of mind.

(2) For the avoidance of doubt, the reference in subsection (1) to abnormality of mind includes mental disorder.

(3) The fact that a person was under the influence of alcohol, drugs or any other substance at the time of the conduct in question does not of itself—

(a) constitute abnormality of mind for the purposes of subsection (1), or

(b) prevent such abnormality from being established for those purposes.

(4) It is for the person charged with murder to establish, on the balance of probabilities, that the condition set out in subsection (1) is satisfied.

(5) In this section, “conduct” includes acts and omissions.”.

118 Acquittal involving mental disorder: procedure

Before section 54 of the 1995 Act insert—

“Acquittal involving mental disorder

53E Acquittal involving mental disorder

(1) Where the prosecutor accepts a plea (by the person charged with the commission of an offence) of the special defence set out in section 51A of this Act, the court must declare that the person is acquitted by reason of the special defence.

(2) Subsection (3) below applies where—

(a) the prosecutor does not accept such a plea, and

(b) evidence tending to establish the special defence set out in section 51A of this Act is brought before the court.

(3) Where this subsection applies the court is to—

(a) in proceedings on indictment, direct the jury to find whether the special defence has been established and, if they find that it has, to declare whether the person is acquitted on that ground,

(b) in summary proceedings, state whether the special defence has been established and, if it states that it has, declare whether the person is acquitted on that ground.”.

119 Unfitness for trial

(1) In the 1995 Act, after section 53E (inserted by section 118), insert—
Unfitness for trial

(1) A person is unfit for trial if it is established on the balance of probabilities that the person is incapable, by reason of a mental or physical condition, of participating effectively in a trial.

(2) In determining whether a person is unfit for trial the court is to have regard to—

(a) the ability of the person to—

(i) understand the nature of the charge,

(ii) understand the requirement to tender a plea to the charge and the effect of such a plea,

(iii) understand the purpose of, and follow the course of, the trial,

(iv) understand the evidence that may be given against the person,

(v) instruct and otherwise communicate with the person’s legal representative, and

(b) any other factor which the court considers relevant.

(3) The court is not to find that a person is unfit for trial by reason only of the person being unable to recall whether the event which forms the basis of the charge occurred in the manner described in the charge.

(4) In this section “the court” means—

(a) as regards a person charged on indictment, the High Court or the sheriff court,

(b) as regards a person charged summarily, the sheriff court.

The title of section 54 of the 1995 Act (insanity in bar of trial) is replaced by “Unfitness for trial: further provision”, the cross-heading which precedes it is omitted and the section is amended as follows—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) the words “, on the written or oral evidence of two medical practitioners,” are repealed, and

(ii) for “insane” substitute “unfit for trial”,

(b) in subsection (3)—

(i) for “the insanity of a person” substitute “whether a person is unfit for trial”, and

(ii) after “mental” insert “or physical”, and

(c) in subsection (5), for “insane” substitute “unfit for trial”.

(3) Subsections (6) and (7) are repealed.

Abolition of common law rules

Any rule of law providing for—

(a) the special defence of insanity,
(b) the plea of diminished responsibility, or
(c) insanity in bar of trial, does not have effect.

PART 8

LICENSING UNDER CIVIC GOVERNMENT (SCOTLAND) ACT 1982

121 Conditions to which licences under 1982 Act are to be subject

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 3(4) (automatic grant or renewal of licence where application not determined within specified period), the word “unconditionally” is repealed.

(3) After section 3 insert—

3A Mandatory licence conditions

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument prescribe conditions to which licences granted by licensing authorities under this Act are to be subject.

(2) Different conditions may be prescribed under subsection (1)—

(a) in respect of different licences, or different types of licence,

(b) otherwise for different purposes, circumstances or cases.

(3A) No order may be made under subsection (1) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

(4) Subsection (1) does not affect any other power of the Scottish Ministers under this Act or any other enactment to prescribe conditions—

(a) to which licences granted by licensing authorities under this Act are to be subject, or

(b) to be imposed by licensing authorities in granting or renewing licences under this Act.

(5) The following conditions are referred to in this Part and Part 2 of this Act as “mandatory conditions”—

(a) conditions prescribed under subsection (1),

(b) conditions prescribed under any power referred to in subsection (4), and

(c) conditions imposed, or required to be imposed, by any provision of this Part or Part 2 of this Act.

(6) In this section and section 3B, references to licences granted by licensing authorities include references to—

(a) licences renewed by licensing authorities, and

(b) licences deemed by virtue of section 3(4) to be granted or renewed by licensing authorities.
3B Standard licence conditions

(1) A licensing authority may determine conditions to which licences granted by them under this Act are to be subject.

(2) Conditions determined under subsection (1) are referred to in this Part and Part 2 as “standard conditions”.

(3) Different conditions may be determined under subsection (1)—
   (a) in respect of different licences, or different types of licence,
   (b) otherwise for different purposes, circumstances or cases.

(4) A licensing authority must publish, in such manner as they think appropriate, any standard conditions determined by them.

(5) Standard conditions have no effect—
   (a) unless they are published, and
   (b) so far as they are inconsistent with any mandatory conditions.

(6) Subsection (1) is subject to paragraph 5(1A)(a) of Schedule 1 to this Act.”.

(4) In section 27C (conditions in respect of knife dealers’ licences)—
   (a) in subsection (1)—
      (i) in paragraph (b), after “prejudice to” insert “section 3B and”, and
      (ii) in paragraph (c), after “that” insert “section and”, and
   (b) subsection (2) is repealed.

(5) In section 41(3) (power to attach conditions to public entertainment licences), after “prejudice to” insert “section 3B of and”.

(6) In Schedule 1 (further provisions as to the general licensing system), in paragraph 5—
   (a) in sub-paragraph (1)—
      (i) in paragraph (a), the word “unconditionally” is repealed, and
      (ii) paragraph (b) is repealed,
   (b) after that sub-paragraph insert—
      “(1A) In granting or renewing a licence under sub-paragraph (1)(a), a licensing authority may (either or both)—
         (a) disapply or vary any standard conditions so far as applicable to the licence,
         (b) impose conditions in addition to any mandatory or standard conditions to which the licence is subject.”,
   (c) in sub-paragraph (2), for “(1)(b)” substitute “(1A)(b)”, and
   (d) after that sub-paragraph insert—
      “(2A) A variation made under sub-paragraph (1A)(a) or condition imposed under sub-paragraph (1A)(b) has no effect so far as it is inconsistent with any mandatory condition to which the licence is subject.”.
122 Licensing: powers of entry and inspection for civilian employees

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 5 (rights of entry and inspection)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “licensing authority” insert “, an authorised civilian employee”,

(b) in subsection (3)(a) and (b)—

(i) after “constable” where it first occurs insert “, an authorised civilian employee”, and

(ii) after “such an” insert “employee or”,

(c) in subsection (3)(c), after “constable” insert “, an authorised civilian employee”,

(d) in subsection (4)—

(i) after “licensing authority” insert “, an authorised civilian employee”, and

(ii) after “the officer” insert “, employee”, and

(e) in subsection (6), after “licensing authority” insert “or authorised civilian employee”.

(3) In section 8 (interpretation of Parts 1 and 2), after the definition of “appropriate relevant authority” insert—

““authorised civilian employee” means a person—

(a) employed by a police authority under section 9(1)(a) of the Police (Scotland) Act 1967 (c.77), and

(b) authorised by the chief constable for the purposes of sections 5 and 11 of this Act;”.

(4) In section 11 (inspection and testing of vehicles), in subsection (2)—

(a) after “the authority)” insert “, an authorised civilian employee”,

(b) in paragraph (b), after “licensing authority” insert “, an authorised civilian employee”, and

(c) after “authorised officer” where it last occurs, insert “, employee”.

(5) In paragraph 3 (miscellaneous definitions) of Schedule 2 (control of sex shops), after the definition of “appropriate relevant authority” insert—

““authorised civilian employee” means a person—

(a) employed by a police authority under section 9(1)(a) of the Police (Scotland) Act 1967 (c.77), and

(b) authorised by the chief constable for the purposes of paragraph 20 of this Schedule;”.

(6) In paragraph 20 of that Schedule (rights of entry and inspection)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (1), after “local authority” insert “, an authorised civilian employee”,

(b) in sub-paragraph (3), after “local authority” insert “or an authorised civilian employee”, and

(c) in sub-paragraph (5)—
(i) after “constable” where it first occurs insert “, an authorised civilian employee”, and
(ii) after “such” insert “employee or”.

124 Licensing of taxis and private hire cars

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 13 (taxi and private hire car licences), in subsection (3), for “during any continuous period of 12 months” substitute “throughout the period of 12 months immediately”.

(3) In section 17 (taxi fares)—

(a) for subsections (2) to (4) substitute—

“(2) The licensing authority must fix scales for the fares and other charges mentioned in subsection (1) within 18 months beginning with the date on which the scales came into effect.

(3) In fixing scales under subsection (2), the licensing authority may—

(a) alter fares or other charges,

(b) fix fares or other charges at the same rates.

(4) Before fixing scales under subsection (2), the licensing authority must review the scales in accordance with subsection (4A).

(4A) In carrying out a review, the licensing authority must—

(a) consult with persons or organisations appearing to it to be, or to be representative of, the operators of taxis operating within its area,

(b) following such consultation—

(i) review the existing scales, and

(ii) propose new scales (whether at altered rates or the same rates),

(c) publish those proposed scales in a newspaper circulating in its area—

(i) setting out the proposed scales,

(ii) explaining the effect of the proposed scales,

(iii) proposing a date on which the proposed scales are to come into effect, and

(iv) stating that any person may make representations in writing until the relevant date, and

(d) consider any such representations.

(4B) In subsection (4A)(c)(iv) “the relevant date” is a date specified by the licensing authority falling at least one month after the first publication by the authority of the proposed scales.

(4C) After fixing scales under subsection (2), the licensing authority must give notice in accordance with subsection (4D).

(4D) The licensing authority must—

(a) set out, and explain the effect of, the scales as fixed,
(b) notify the persons mentioned in subsection (4E) of—
   (i) the date on which the scales as fixed are to come into effect, and
   (ii) the rights of appeal under section 18.

(4E) Those persons are—

(a) all operators of taxis operating within their area, and

(b) the persons and organisations consulted under subsection (4A)(a).”, and

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “(4)” where it first occurs substitute “(4D)(b)”,

(ii) in paragraph (a)—

(A) for “(4)” where it first occurs substitute “(4E)”,

(B) for “five days after the decision referred to in subsection (4)” substitute “seven days after the scales are fixed under subsection (2)”.

(4) In section 18 (appeals in respect of taxi fares)—

(a) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) Any person mentioned in subsection (1A) may, within 14 days of notice being given under section 17(4C), appeal against those scales to the traffic commissioner for the Scottish Traffic Area as constituted for the purpose of the Public Passenger Vehicles Act 1981.”,

(b) after that subsection insert—

“(1A) Those persons are—

(a) any person who operates a taxi in an area for which scales have been fixed under section 17(2), and

(b) any person or organisation appearing to the traffic commissioner to be representative of such taxi operators.”,

(c) in subsection (3)—

(i) the words “to them” are repealed,

(ii) in paragraph (b) the word “may” is repealed, and

(iii) in paragraph (b)(i), for “on the grounds that” substitute “if”, and

(d) subsection (9) is repealed.

(5) After section 18 insert—

“18A Publication and coming into effect of taxi fares

(1) Following the fixing of scales by a licensing authority under section 17(2), the licensing authority must—

(a) determine the date on which the scales are to come into effect, and

(b) publish the scales in accordance with subsections (3) to (5).

(2) The scales may come into effect no earlier than seven days after the date on which they are published.

(3) The licensing authority must—
(a) give notice of the scales by advertisement in a newspaper circulating in its area, and
(b) specify in that advertisement the date on which the scales are to come into effect.

(4) The authority must give notice of the scales—

(a) where no appeal has been lodged under subsection (1) of section 18, as soon as practicable after the expiry of the period of 14 days mentioned in that subsection,
(b) where such an appeal has been lodged, as soon as practicable after the determination of the appeal.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4), an appeal is determined on the date on which the appeal is abandoned or notice is given to the appellant of its disposal.”.

124A Licensing of street trading: food hygiene certificates

(1) Section 39 of the 1982 Act (street traders’ licences) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (4), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument specify”.

(3) After subsection (4), insert—

“(5) An order under subsection (4) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.

(6) A statutory instrument containing an order made under subsection (4) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.”.

126 Licensing of public entertainment

(1) Section 41 of the 1982 Act (public entertainment licences) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2)—

(a) the words “, on payment of money or money’s worth,” are repealed,
(b) in paragraph (d), for “, section 1 of the Cinemas Act 1985 or Part II of the Gaming Act 1968” substitute “or section 1 of the Cinemas Act 1985”,
(c) for paragraph (e), substitute—

“(e) premises in respect of which there is a club gaming permit (within the meaning of section 271 of the Gambling Act 2005 (c.19)) or a prize gaming permit (within the meaning of section 289 of that Act of 2005);”

(d) the word “or” immediately preceding paragraph (g) is repealed, and
(c) after paragraph (g), add “, or

(h) such other premises as the Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument specify.”.

(3) After subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) A statutory instrument containing an order made under subsection (2)(h) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.”.
127 Licensing of late night catering

(1) Section 42 of the 1982 Act (late hours catering) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsections (1) and (2), for “meals or refreshment” in each place where those words occur substitute “food”.

(3) In subsection (2), for “they are” substitute “it is”.

(4) In subsection (3), for “meals or refreshments” in both places where those words occur substitute “food”.

(5) After subsection (6), add—

“(7) In this section “food” has the meaning given in section 1 of the Food Safety Act 1990 (c.16).”.

128 Applications for licences

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In Schedule 1 (further provisions as to the general licensing system)—

(a) in paragraph 1(2)(b), for “and address” in both places where those words occur substitute “, address and date and place of birth”,

(b) in paragraph 1(2)(c)—

(i) in sub-paragraph (iii), for “and private addresses” substitute “, private addresses and dates and places of birth”, and

(ii) in sub-paragraph (iv), for “and address” substitute “, address and date and place of birth”,

(ba) in paragraph 2(3)(b), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”,

(bb) in paragraph 2(8)(a), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”,

(c) in paragraph 3(1)(e), for “21” substitute “28”,

(d) in paragraph 4(2), for “7” substitute “14”,

(e) in paragraph 8, after sub-paragraph (5) insert—

“(5A) On good cause being shown, a licensing authority may, for the purposes of sub-paragraph (5), deem an application for renewal of a licence made up to 28 days after the expiry of the licence to be an application made before the expiry.”,

(f) in paragraph 11(8), for “21” substitute “14”, and

(g) in paragraph 17(2), for “28” substitute “21”.

(3) In Schedule 2 (control of sex shops)—

(a) in paragraph 6(2), for paragraph (b) substitute—

“(b) the date and place of birth of the applicant;”,

(b) in paragraph 6(2)(c), for “age” substitute “date and place of birth”,

(c) in paragraph 6(3)—
(i) in paragraph (c), for “and private addresses” substitute “, private addresses and dates and places of birth”,

(ii) in paragraph (d), for “age” substitute “date and place of birth”,

(d) in paragraph 8(7), after “them” insert “and, where they propose to do so, must, within such reasonable period (not being less than 14 days) of the date of the hearing, notify the applicant and each such person of that date”.

(e) in paragraph 9(3), in both paragraphs (e) and (f), for “the United Kingdom” substitute “a member state of the European Union”,

(f) in paragraph 12, after sub-paragraph (3) insert—

“(3A) On good cause being shown, a local authority may, for the purposes of sub-paragraph (3), deem an application for renewal of a licence made up to 28 days after the expiry of the licence to be an application made before the expiry.”,

(g) in paragraph 13(6), for “21” substitute “14”, and

(h) in paragraph 23(2), for “28” substitute “21”.

PART 9

ALCOHOL LICENSING

130 Premises licence applications: notification requirements

(1) Section 21 of the 2005 Act (notification of premises licence application) is amended as follows.

(2) For subsection (2), substitute—

“(2) On giving notice of an application under subsection (1), the Licensing Board—

(a) must provide the appropriate chief constable with a copy of the application, and

(b) may provide any other person to whom notice is given with a copy of the application.”.

(3) In subsection (3), the following are repealed—

(a) the word “and” after paragraph (a), and

(b) paragraph (b).

(4) In subsection (6), the following are repealed—

(a) the definition of “antisocial behaviour”,

(b) the word “and” following the definition of “neighbouring land”, and

(c) the definition of “relevant period”.

131 Premises licence applications: modification of layout plans

In section 23 of the 2005 Act (determination of premises licence application), in subsection (7)(b), after “plan” insert “or layout plan (or both)”.
131A Reviews of premises licences: notification of determinations

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 39 (Licensing Board’s powers on review), insert—

“39A Notification of determinations

(1) Where a Licensing Board, at a review hearing—

(a) decides to take one of the steps mentioned in section 39(2), or
(b) decides not to take one of those steps,

the Board must give notice of the decision to each of the persons mentioned in subsection (2).

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—

(a) the holder of the premises licence, and
(b) where the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application, the applicant.

(3) Where subsection (1)(a) applies, the holder of the premises licence may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(4) Where—

(a) subsection (1)(a) or (b) applies, and
(b) the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application,

the applicant may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(5) Where the clerk of a Board receives a notice under subsection (3) or (4), the Board must issue a statement of the reasons for the decision to—

(a) the person giving the notice, and
(b) any other person to whom the Board gave notice under subsection (1).

(6) A statement of reasons under subsection (5) must be issued—

(a) by such time, and
(b) in such form and manner,

as may be prescribed.”.

132 Premises licence applications: antisocial behaviour reports

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 22 (objections and representations), after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) The appropriate chief constable may, under subsection (1)(b), make representations concerning a premises licence application by giving to the Licensing Board a report detailing—

(a) any cases of antisocial behaviour identified by constables as having taken place on, or in the vicinity of, the premises,
(b) any complaints or other representations made to constables concerning antisocial behaviour on, or in the vicinity of, the premises.”.

(3) After section 24 insert—

“24A Power to request antisocial behaviour report

(1) A Licensing Board may, at any time before determining a premises licence application, request the appropriate chief constable to give the Board a report detailing—

(a) all cases of antisocial behaviour identified within the relevant period by constables as having taken place on, or in the vicinity of, the premises,

(b) all complaints or other representations made within the relevant period to constables concerning antisocial behaviour on, or in the vicinity of, the premises.

(2) The appropriate chief constable must give the report within 21 days of the request.

(3) Where the Licensing Board requests a report under subsection (1), the Board must suspend consideration of the application until it receives the report.

(4) On receipt of the chief constable’s report under subsection (2), the Licensing Board must—

(a) give a copy of the report to the applicant in such manner and by such time as may be prescribed by regulations, and

(b) resume consideration of the application and determine it in accordance with section 23.

(5) In this section—

“antisocial behaviour” has the same meaning as in section 143 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8), and “relevant period” means the period of one year ending with the date of the request.”.

(a) the name and address of the person, and
(b) if the person is an individual, the person’s date of birth.

(3) Where a Licensing Board receives a notice under subsection (1), the Board must give a copy of the notice to the appropriate chief constable.

(4) A premises licence holder who fails, without reasonable excuse, to comply with subsection (1) commits an offence.

(5) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (4) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 2 on the standard scale.”.

(3) In section 48 (notification of change of name or address)—

(a) in subsection (1)—
(i) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and
(ii) after paragraph (b) insert “, or
(c) the name or address of any person who is—
(i) a connected person in relation to the licence holder, or
(ii) an interested party in relation to the licensed premises,”,

(b) after subsection (2) insert—
“(2A) Where a Licensing Board receives a notice under subsection (1), the Board must give a copy of the notice to the appropriate chief constable.”.

(4) In section 147 (interpretation), after subsection (4) insert—
“(5) For the purposes of this Act, a person is an interested party in relation to licensed premises if the person is not the holder of the premises licence nor the premises manager in respect of the premises but—
(a) has an interest in the premises as an owner or tenant, or
(b) has management and control over the premises or the business carried on on the premises.”.

(5) In section 148 (index of defined expressions), in the table, insert at the appropriate place—
“interested party section 147(5).”.

132B Premises licence applications: food hygiene certificates
(1) Section 50 of the 2005 Act (certificates as to planning, building standards and food hygiene) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (7), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may, by order, specify.”.

(3) After subsection (7), insert—
“(7A) An order under subsection (7) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.”.

(4) In subsection (8)(c), for “the 1990 Act” substitute “section 5 of the Food Safety Act 1990 (c.16)”.

133 Sale of alcohol to trade

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 63 (prohibition of sale, consumption and taking away of alcohol outwith licensed hours), in subsection (2)(f), after “on” where it first occurs insert “or taken from”.

(3) In section 117 (offence relating to sale of alcohol to trade), in subsection (1), after “from” insert “licensed premises or”.

134 Occasional licences

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 57 (notification of application to chief constable and Licensing Standards Officer), after subsection (3), add—

“(4) Subsection (5) applies where the Licensing Board is satisfied that the application requires to be dealt with quickly.

(5) Subsections (2) and (3) have effect in relation to the application as if the references to the period of 21 days were references to such shorter period of not less than 24 hours as the Board may determine.”.

(3) In paragraph 10 of schedule 1 (delegation of functions of Licensing Boards), in subparagraph (4), after “Board” in the second place where it appears insert “or to a member of staff provided under paragraph 8(1)(b)”.

134A Extended hours applications: notification period

(1) Section 69 of the 2005 Act (notification of extended hours application) is amended as follows.

(2) After subsection (3), add—

“(4) Subsections (5) and (6) apply where the Licensing Board is satisfied that the application requires to be dealt with quickly.

(5) Subsections (2) and (3) have effect in relation to the application as if the references to the period of 10 days were references to such shorter period of not less than 24 hours as the Board may determine.

(6) Subsection (3) has effect in relation to the application as if for the word “must” there were substituted “may”.”.

135 Extended hours applications: variation of conditions

After section 70 of the 2005 Act insert—

“70A Extended hours applications: variation of conditions

(1) On granting an extended hours application under section 68(1) in respect of a premises licence, the Licensing Board may make such variation of the conditions to which the licence is subject as the Board considers necessary or expedient for the purposes of any of the licensing objectives.

(2) A variation made under subsection (1)—
(a) may have effect only in relation to a period of licensed hours which is extended under section 68(1), and
(b) ceases to have effect at the end of the period for which the extension of the licensed hours has effect under section 68(2).

(3) In subsection (1), “variation” includes addition, deletion or other modification.”.

136  Personal licences

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 74 (determination of personal licence application)—

(a) in subsection (2)—

(i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and
(ii) after paragraph (b) add—

“(ba) the notice does not include a recommendation under section 73(4),
(c) the applicant has signed the application, and
(d) subsection (8) does not apply.”.

(b) in subsection (3)—

(i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (b) is repealed, and
(ii) after paragraph (b) insert—

“(ba) the applicant does not already hold a personal licence, and”, and

(c) after subsection (6) insert—

“(7) Subsection (8) applies if—

(a) all of the conditions specified in subsection (3) are met in relation to the applicant,
(b) the Board has received from the appropriate chief constable a notice under section 73(3)(a), and
(c) the applicant has held a personal licence which—

(i) expired within the period of 3 years ending on the day on which the application was received, or
(ii) was surrendered by the applicant by notice under section 77(6) received within that period.

(8) The Licensing Board may—

(a) hold a hearing for the purposes of considering and determining the application, and
(b) after having regard to the circumstances in which the personal licence previously held expired or, as the case may be, was surrendered—

(i) refuse the application, or
(ii) grant the application.”.

(3) In section 76 (issue of licence), after subsection (3) add—
“(4) A person who holds a void personal licence must surrender it to the Licensing Board.

(5) A person who, without reasonable excuse, fails to comply with subsection (4) commits an offence.

(6) A person who passes off a void personal licence as a valid personal licence knowing that the licence is void commits an offence.

(7) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (5) or (6) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.”.

(4) In section 92 (theft, loss etc. of personal licence), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A replacement personal licence is void if at the time it is issued the personal licence in respect of which it was issued is not lost, stolen, damaged or destroyed.

(3B) Where a replacement personal licence is issued in respect of a personal licence which has been lost or stolen, the replacement personal licence becomes void if the personal licence is subsequently found or recovered.

(3C) A person who holds a void replacement personal licence must surrender it to the Licensing Board.

(3D) A person who, without reasonable excuse, fails to comply with subsection (3C) commits an offence.

(3E) A person who passes off a void replacement personal licence as a valid licence, knowing that the licence is void, commits an offence.

(3F) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3D) or (3E) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.”.

137 Emergency closure orders

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 97 (closure orders)—

   (a) in subsection (2), for “senior police officer may, if the officer” substitute “constable of or above the rank of inspector may, if the constable”, and

   (b) in subsection (4), the words “by a senior police officer” are repealed.

(3) In section 98 (termination of closure orders)—

   (a) in subsection (1)—

      (i) for “senior police officer” substitute “constable of or above the rank of inspector”, and

      (ii) for “the officer” substitute “the constable”,

   (b) in subsection (2)—

      (i) for “senior police office” substitute “constable”, and

      (ii) for “the officer” substitute “the constable”.

(4) In section 99 (extension of emergency closure order), in subsection (1)—

   (a) for “senior police officer” substitute “constable of or above the rank of inspector”, and
(b) in paragraph (b), for “officer” substitute “constable”.

137A Appeals
In section 131(2) of the 2005 Act (appeals), the words “by way of stated case, at the instance of the appellant,” are repealed.

137B Liability for offences
(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.
(2) In each of the following provisions, the word “knowingly” is repealed—
(a) section 1(3)(b),
(b) section 103(1),
(c) section 106(2),
(d) section 107(1),
(e) section 118(1),
(f) section 120(2) and (3),
(g) section 121(1),
(h) section 127(4), and
(i) section 128(5).
(3) After section 141 (offences by bodies corporate etc.) insert—
“141A Defence of due diligence for certain offences
(1) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence to which this section applies to prove that the person—
(a) did not know that the offence was being committed, and
(b) exercised all due diligence to prevent the offence being committed.
(2) This section applies to an offence under any of the following provisions of this Act—
section 1(3)(b),
section 103(1),
section 106(2),
section 107(1),
section 118(1),
section 120(2) or (3),
section 121(1),
section 127(4),
section 128(5).
141B Vicarious liability of premises licence holders and interested parties

(1) Subsection (2) applies where, on or in relation to any licensed premises, a person commits an offence to which this section applies while acting as the employee or agent of—

(a) the holder of the premises licence, or
(b) an interested party.

(2) The holder of the premises licence or, as the case may be, the interested party is also guilty of the offence and liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(3) It is a defence for a holder of a premises licence or an interested party charged with an offence to which this section applies by virtue of subsection (2) to prove that the holder of the licence or, as the case may be, the interested party—

(a) did not know that the offence was being committed by the employee or agent, and
(b) exercised all due diligence to prevent the offence being committed.

(4) Proceedings may be taken against the holder of the premises licence or the interested party in respect of the offence whether or not proceedings are also taken against the employee or agent who committed the offence.

(5) This section applies to an offence under any of the following provisions of this Act—

section 1(3),
section 15(5),
section 63(1),
section 97(7),
section 102(1),
section 103(1),
section 106(2),
section 107(1),
section 108(2) or (3),
section 113(1),
section 114,
section 115(2),
section 118(1),
section 119(1),
section 120(2),
section 121(1),
section 138(5).".
False statements in applications: offence

After section 134 of the 2005 Act insert—

“134A Offence of knowingly making a false statement in an application

(1) A person who knowingly makes a false statement in an application under this Act commits an offence.

(2) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.”.

Powers of Licensing Standards Officers

(1) Section 15 of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) The section title becomes “Powers of entry, inspection and seizure”.

(3) In subsection (2)—

(a) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (b) is repealed, and

(b) after that paragraph insert—

“(c) power to take copies of, or of an entry in, any document found on the premises, and

(d) power to seize and remove any substances, articles or documents found on the premises.”.

(4) In subsection (3)—

(a) for “either” substitute “any”, and

(b) in paragraph (b), after “information” insert “or explanation”.

(5) After subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) Subsection (3)(c) includes power to require any document which is stored in electronic form and which is accessible from the premises to be produced in a form—

(a) in which it is legible, and

(b) in which it can be removed from the premises.

(4B) Nothing in subsection (3) requires a person to produce any document if the person would be entitled to refuse to produce that document in any proceedings in any court on the grounds of confidentiality of communications.

(4C) Nothing in subsection (3) requires a person to provide any information or explanation or produce any document if to do so would incriminate that person or that person’s spouse or civil partner.”.

(6) After subsection (6) insert—

“(7) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision about the procedure to be followed in the exercise of a power under this section.

(8) Where a Licensing Standards Officer seizes any substance, article or document under subsection (2)(d), the Officer must leave on the premises a notice—

(a) stating what was seized, and

(b) explaining why it was seized.
(9) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision about the treatment of substances, articles or documents seized under subsection (2)(d).

(10) Regulations under subsection (9) may, in particular, make provision—

(a) about the retention, use, return, disposal or destruction of anything seized,

(b) about compensation for anything seized.”.

139 Further modifications of 2005 Act

Schedule 4 makes further modifications of the 2005 Act (including extending police powers to object).

PART 10

MISCELLANEOUS

141 Annual report on Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998

Section 8 of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 (c.40) (requirement for annual report on working of the Act) is repealed.

PART 11

GENERAL

143 Orders and regulations

(1) Any power of the Scottish Ministers to make regulations or an order under this Act is exercisable by statutory instrument.

(2) Any such power includes power to make—

(a) such incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision as the Scottish Ministers think necessary or expedient,

(b) different provision for different purposes or different areas.

(3) Subject to subsection (4), a statutory instrument containing regulations or an order under this Act (except an order under section 148(1)) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

(4) A statutory instrument containing—

(xa) an order under section 24A(1),

(ya) an order under section 52A(2),

(za) an order under section 67A(1),

(aa) an order under section 146(1) containing provisions which modify any enactment (including this Act), or

(b) an order under section 147(1) containing provisions which add to, replace or omit any part of the text of an Act, is not to be made unless a draft of the instrument containing the regulations or order has been laid before, and approved by resolution of, the Parliament.

144 Interpretation

In this Act—

“the 1982 Act” means the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45),
“the 1995 Act” means the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), and

“the 2005 Act” means the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16).

145 Modification of enactments

Schedule 5 modifies enactments.

146 Ancillary provision

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make such supplementary, incidental or consequential provision as they consider appropriate for the purposes of, in consequence of or for giving full effect to any provision of this Act.

(2) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment (including this Act).

147 Transitional provision etc.

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make such provision as they consider necessary or expedient for transitory, transitional or saving purposes in connection with the coming into force of any provision of this Act.

(2) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment (including this Act).

148 Short title and commencement

(1) The provisions of this Act, other than this section and sections 143 to 147, come into force in accordance with provision made by order by the Scottish Ministers.

(2) This Act may be cited as the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2009.
SCHEDULE 1
(introduced by section 3(2))

THE SCOTTISH SENTENCING COUNCIL

Membership

1 (1) The Council consists of a chairing member, other judicial members, legal members and lay members.

(2) The chairing member is the Lord Justice Clerk.

(3) The other judicial members comprise—
   (a) one other person holding the office of judge who normally sits as a judge of the Outer House of the Court of Session or the High Court of Justiciary,
   (b) one person holding the office of sheriff (other than a sheriff principal),
   (c) two persons holding the office of justice of the peace or stipendiary magistrate, and
   (d) one other person holding—
      (i) any of the offices mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (c), or
      (ii) the office of sheriff principal.

(4) The legal members comprise—
   (a) one prosecutor within the meaning of section 307 of the 1995 Act,
   (c) one advocate practising as such in Scotland (other than one who is a prosecutor), and
   (d) one solicitor practising as such in Scotland (other than one who is a prosecutor).

(5) The lay members comprise—
   (za) one constable,
   (a) one person appearing to the Scottish Ministers to have knowledge of the issues faced by victims of crime, and
   (b) one other person who is not qualified for appointment as a judicial or legal member.

Procedure for appointment of members

2 (1) It is for the Lord Justice General, after consulting the Scottish Ministers, to appoint the members of the Council other than the Lord Justice Clerk and the lay members.

(2) It is for the Scottish Ministers, with the approval of the Lord Justice General, to appoint the lay members.

(3) The Lord Justice General may appoint a person to be a member only if the person has been nominated, or otherwise selected for appointment, in accordance with such procedures as the Scottish Ministers may by regulations prescribe.

(4) The regulations may—
(a) in particular, make provision for or in connection with enabling a person to nominate or select persons suitable for appointment,

(b) prescribe different procedures for different categories of membership.

(5) The Scottish Ministers must consult the Lord Justice General before making the regulations.

Persons disqualified from membership

3 A person is disqualified from appointment, and from holding office, as a member of the Council if the person is or becomes—

(a) a member of the House of Commons,

(b) a member of the Scottish Parliament,

(c) a member of the European Parliament,

(d) a councillor of any council constituted under section 2 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 (c.39),

(e) a Minister of the Crown, or

(f) a member of the Scottish Executive.

Term of office

4 (1) A member holds office for such period not exceeding 5 years as the Lord Justice General or, as the case may be, the Scottish Ministers may, at the time of appointment, determine.

(2) A member ceases to hold office—

(a) on becoming disqualified from holding office as a member, or

(b) on ceasing to fall within the category of membership under which the member was appointed.

(3) A person who has previously been a member may not be re-appointed.

(4) In this paragraph, “a member” means a member appointed by the Lord Justice General or the Scottish Ministers.

Resignation and removal of members

5 (1) A member appointed by the Lord Justice General may resign office by giving notice in writing to the Lord Justice General.

(2) A member appointed by the Scottish Ministers may resign office by giving notice in writing to the Scottish Ministers.

(3) The Lord Justice General may, by notice in writing, remove a judicial or legal member if satisfied that the member is unfit to be a member by reason of inability, neglect of duty or misbehaviour.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may, by notice in writing, remove a lay member if satisfied that the member is unfit to be a member by reason of inability, neglect of duty or misbehaviour.
Suspension of judicial members

6 A judicial member is suspended from acting as such during any period in which the member is suspended from the judicial office which the member holds.

Chairing of the Council

5 (1) The Lord Justice Clerk is to chair meetings of the Council.

(2) If the Lord Justice Clerk is for any reason unable to chair a meeting, the meeting may be chaired by another judicial member nominated—

(a) by the Lord Justice Clerk, or

(b) if the Lord Justice Clerk is unable to make such a nomination, by the Council.

10 (3) The Lord Justice Clerk may nominate another judicial member to chair meetings of the Council for a temporary period.

Committees

8 The Council may establish committees comprising members of the Council.

Proceedings

15 (a) the procedure (including the number of members required to constitute a quorum), and

(b) the procedure (including the number of members required to constitute a quorum) of any committees established by it.

Validity of acts

10 (a) any vacancy in the membership of the Council,

(b) any defect in the appointment of a member of the Council, or

(c) disqualification of any person from holding office as a member of the Council.

Ancillary powers

11 The Council may do anything which it considers necessary or expedient for the purposes of or in connection with its functions.

Delegation

12 (1) Any function of the Council, other than the function of submitting sentencing guidelines to the High Court of Justiciary for approval, may be carried out on its behalf by—

(a) a member of the Council,

(b) a committee, or

(c) any other person,
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Schedule 1A—Community payback orders: consequential modifications

Part 1—The 1995 Act

authorised (whether specially or generally) by it for the purpose.

(2) Nothing in sub-paragraph (1) prevents the Council from exercising any function delegated under that sub-paragraph.

Maladministration

In the Scottish Public Services Ombudsman Act 2002 (asp 11), in schedule 2 (which lists the authorities subject to investigation under that Act), in Part 2 (entries amendable by Order in Council), after paragraph 50 insert—

“50A The Scottish Sentencing Council.”.

Freedom of information

In the Freedom of Information (Scotland) Act 2002 (asp 13), in schedule 1 (which lists the Scottish public authorities subject to that Act), in Part 7 (other authorities), after paragraph 98 insert—

“98A The Scottish Sentencing Council.”.

SCHEDULE 1A
(introduced by section 14(2))

COMMUNITY PAYBACK ORDERS: CONSEQUENTIAL MODIFICATIONS

PART 1

THE 1995 ACT

The 1995 Act

The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

1 In section 52H(3) (early termination of assessment order), the following are repealed—

(a) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (e), and

(b) paragraph (f).

2 In section 52R(3) (termination of treatment order), the following are repealed—

(a) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (e), and

(b) paragraph (f).

3 In section 53(12)(a) (interim compulsion orders), for sub-paragraphs (vi) and (vii) substitute—

“(vi) impose a community payback order;

(vii) make a drug treatment and testing order; or

(viii) make a restriction of liberty order,”.

4 In section 57A(15)(a) (compulsion order), for sub-paragraphs (vi) and (vii) substitute—

“(vi) impose a community payback order;

(vii) make a drug treatment and testing order; or

(viii) make a restriction of liberty order,”.
6  In section 58(8) (order for hospital admission or guardianship), for “make a probation order or a community service order” substitute “impose a community payback order or make a drug treatment and testing order”.

7  In section 106(1) (right of appeal), for paragraph (d) substitute—
(d) against any drug treatment and testing order;”.

8  In section 108 (Lord Advocate’s right of appeal against disposal)—
(a) in subsection (1), paragraphs (d) and (e) are repealed, and
(b) in subsection (2)(b)(iii), for “(d) to (e)” substitute “(dd)”.

9  In section 121A(4) (suspension of certain sentences pending determination of appeal), for paragraphs (a) to (c) substitute—
“(aa) a community payback order;”.

10 In section 175 (right of appeal)—
(a) in subsection (2)(c), for “probation order, drug treatment and testing order or any community service order” substitute “drug treatment and testing order”,
(b) in subsection (4), paragraphs (d) and (e) are repealed, and
(c) in subsection (4A)(b)(iii), for “(d) to (e)” substitute “(dd)”.

11 In section 193A(4) (suspension of certain sentences pending determination of appeal)—
(a) for paragraphs (a) to (c) substitute—“(aa) a community payback order;”, and
(b) paragraph (e) is repealed.

12 Sections 228 to 234 (probation) are repealed.

13 In section 234H (disposal on revocation of drug treatment and testing order)—
(a) in subsection (1), for “drugs” substitute “drug”, and
(b) in subsection (3), for the words from “subject to” where they first occur to the end substitute “, in respect of the same offence, also subject to a community payback order, by virtue of section 234J, or a restriction of liberty order, by virtue of section 245D, the court shall, before disposing of the offender under subsection (1) above, revoke the community payback order or restriction of liberty order (as the case may be).”.

14 (1) Section 234J (concurrent drug treatment and testing and probation orders) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1)—
(a) for “sections 228(1) and” substitute “section”, and
(b) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”.

(3) In subsection (3)—
(a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
(b) for paragraphs (b) and (c) substitute—
“(ba) the local authority within whose area the offender will reside for the duration of each order.”.
(4) In subsection (4)—

(a) in paragraph (a), for “probation order and is dealt with under section 232(2)(c)” substitute “community payback order and is dealt with under section 227ZB(5)(c)”, and

(b) in paragraph (b), for “232(2)(c) of this Act in relation to the probation order” substitute “227ZB(5)(c) of this Act in relation to the community payback order”.

(5) In subsection (5)—

(a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and

(b) for “232(2)” substitute “227ZB(5)”.

15 Sections 235 to 245 (supervised attendance orders and community service orders) are repealed.

16 (1) Section 245A (restriction of liberty orders) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2), the words from “but” to the end are repealed.

(3) After subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) In making a restriction of liberty order containing provision under subsection (2)(a), the court must ensure that the offender is not required, either by the order alone or the order taken together with any other relevant order or requirement, to be in any place or places for a period or periods totalling more than 12 hours in any one day.

(2B) In subsection (2A), “other relevant order or requirement” means—

(a) any other restriction of liberty order in effect in respect of the offender at the time the court is making the order referred to in subsection (2A), and

(b) any restricted movement requirement under section 227ZD in effect in respect of the offender at that time.”.

(4) In subsection (12)(a), for “subsection (2)” substitute “subsection (2A)”.

17 (1) Section 245D (combination of restriction of liberty orders with other orders) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1)(b)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (i), for “probation order made under section 228(1)” substitute “community payback order imposed under section 227A(1)”, and

(b) in sub-paragraph (ii)—

(i) for “probation order made under section 228(1) of this Act,” substitute “community payback order imposed under section 227A(1) of this Act or”, and

(ii) the words “or both such orders” are repealed.

(3) In subsection (2), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”.

(4) In subsection (3)—

(a) the word “228(1),” is repealed,

(b) in paragraph (a), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
(c) in paragraph (b), for “either or both of a probation order and” substitute “either a community payback order or”.

(5) In subsection (4)—
(a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
(b) for paragraph (b) substitute—
“(b) the local authority within whose area the offender will reside for the duration of each order.”.

(6) Subsection (6) is repealed.

(7) In subsection (7)—
(a) in paragraph (a)—
(i) for “contained in a probation order and is dealt with under section 232(2)(c)” substitute “imposed by a community payback order and is dealt with under section 227ZB(5)(c)”, and
(ii) the words from “234G(2)(b)” to “section” where it third occurs are repealed,

(b) in paragraph (b), the words from “232(2)(c)” to “section” where it third occurs are repealed, and

(c) in paragraph (c), for “232(2)(c) of this Act in relation to a probation order” substitute “227ZB(5)(c) of this Act in relation to a community payback order”.

(8) In subsection (8), for “232(2)” substitute “227ZB”.

(9) In subsection (9)—
(a) in paragraph (a), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
(b) paragraph (c) is repealed.

(1) Section 245G (disposal on revocation of restriction of liberty order) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2), for the words from “by virtue” to the end substitute “in respect of the same offence, also subject to a community payback order or a drug treatment and testing order, by virtue of section 245D(3), it shall before disposing of the offender under subsection (1) above, revoke the community payback order or drug treatment and testing order.”.

(3) In subsection (3), for “probation order discharged” substitute “community payback order”.

(4) Subsection (4) is repealed.

(1) In section 245J (breach of certain orders: adjourning hearing and remanding in custody etc.)—
(a) in subsection (1)—
(i) for “a probationer or” substitute “an”,
(ii) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
(iii) the words “supervised attendance order, community service order” are repealed,
(b) in subsection (2), the words “probationer or” are repealed, and
(c) in subsection (4), for “A probationer or” substitute “An”.

Sections 245K to 245Q (community reparation orders) are repealed.

In section 246 (admonition and absolute discharge), in each of subsections (2) and (3), the words “and that a probation order is not appropriate” are repealed.

In section 249(2) (compensation order against convicted person), for paragraph (b) substitute—

“(ab) where, under section 227A of this Act, it imposes a community payback order;”.

In section 307 (interpretation)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) insert at the appropriate places—

““alcohol treatment requirement” has the meaning given in section 227V(1);”

““community payback order” means a community payback order (within the meaning of section 227A(2)) imposed under section 227A(1) or (4) or 227M(2);”

““compensation requirement” has the meaning given in section 227H(1);”

““conduct requirement” has the meaning given in section 227VA(1);”

““drug treatment requirement” has the meaning given in section 227U(1);”

““mental health treatment requirement” has the meaning given in section 227R(1);”

““programme requirement” has the meaning given in section 227P(1);”

““residence requirement” has the meaning given in section 227Q(1);”

““responsible officer”, in relation to a community payback order, is to be construed in accordance with section 227C;”

““restricted movement requirement” has the meaning given in section 227ZD(1);”

